

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

May 24, 2018

Dear Requester,

This letter is in response to previous requests pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law received by this Office, seeking generally

Correspondence between the Office of the Mayor and Jonathan Rosen or BerlinRosen.

Due to the number of FOIL requests the Mayor's Office has received for similar communications, as a courtesy the documents being disclosed to you today include materials that are outside the scope of your requests.

The responsive records comprise four volumes of material:

- A. Pages 3-729: Material previously withheld in full or in part pursuant to the inter-agency exemption §87(2)(g) within the time range. This volume also includes 73 pages of material previously withheld in full pursuant to §87(2)(b).
  - Range: January 1, 2014 to April 3, 2015.
- B. Pages 730-2844: Material previously produced in full or in part, or withheld in full.
  - Range: April 4, 2015 to Dec 31, 2016.
- C. Pages 2845-4016: Material responsive to requests not yet fulfilled, and thus not produced previously.
  - Range: January 1, 2017 to Dec 31, 2017.
- D. Pages 4017-4247: Material sent to a large number of recipients.
  - Range: April 4, 2015 to Dec 31, 2016

Please note that some responsive material is redacted in part pursuant to Public Officers Law §87(2)(b). Some schedules have been redacted pursuant to Public Officers Law §87(2)(b); these redactions consist of personal appointments or private information. Please also note that some responsive material has been redacted in part pursuant to §87(2)(f).

Additionally, attached at the end of the materials provided, you will find a table containing the identities of those whose personal email addresses were redacted pursuant to Public Officers Law §87(2)(b), effectively concealing the identities of the senders and/or recipients. Please note that the Mayor's Office is not aware of all identities of email recipients and senders. Those email senders and recipients who could not be identified are marked as "Unknown" on the attached table.

You may appeal the determination with regard to this production in writing within thirty days by addressing such an appeal to foilappeal@cityhall.nyc.gov.

Sincerely,

Kanas Says De Blasio's Higher Taxes Won't Damage NYC

BLOOMBERG - Elizabeth Dexheimer

<http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2014-01-09/kanas-says-de-blasio-s-higher-taxes-won-t-damage-nyc.html>

New York City's richest residents may have to meet Mayor Bill De Blasio's demand for higher taxes to fund early-childhood education programs, said BankUnited (BKU) Inc. Chief Executive Officer John Kanas.

"If wealthy New Yorkers have to kick in a little bit of money so that young people can go to school early, so that their parents can go to work -- not so bad, right?" Kanas said today in an interview with Betty Liu on Bloomberg Television.

The new mayor has vowed to raise taxes on the wealthy to finance pre-kindergarten care, and Kanas said De Blasio, 52, will reach his goal in ways that don't "kill the golden goose" of the city's business community. "He will find his way to satisfy both sides," Kanas said.

De Blasio's five-year plan would generate $530 million annually by raising taxes on income above $500,000 a year to 4.4 percent from almost 3.9 percent. For the 27,300 city taxpayers earning $500,000 to $1 million, the average increase would be $973 a year, according to the Independent Budget Office, a municipal agency.

Kanas, 67, has run lenders in the New York region before including North Fork Bancorp and has opened branches of Florida-based BankUnited in Manhattan. Kanas, who received $3 million in salary and bonus for 2012, said his primary home is on Long Island. Residents of the suburban community aren't subject to the city's income tax.

Billionaire Backers

BankUnited is backed by billionaire investor Wilbur Ross and private-equity firm Blackstone Group LP, whose chairman, Steve Schwarzman, is also a billionaire.

The bank was among U.S. lenders that failed under previous managers during the housing-market collapse, prompting regulators to seize its operations and sell most of them in 2009 to a group of private-equity investors.

Kanas has been expanding Miami Lakes-based BankUnited after attempts to sell the firm failed to draw any bids that met the board's expectations. While the company is looking at takeovers of other firms, Kanas said he hasn't done any deals because of "lofty" valuations.

"We are interviewing and discussing with people every week, every day, any acquisition opportunity that might make sense for us," he said. "But so far our own performance outstrips anything that we could see."

Rejecting NYC's pre-K tax proposal could lead to statewide feud over taxes

DAILY NEWS - Kenneth Lovett

<http://www.nydailynews.com/new-york/rejecting-nyc-pre-k-tax-proposal-lead-tax-feud-article-1.1577330>

ALBANY — The co-leader of the state Senate is hinting that dozens of requests from municipalities could be in jeopardy if the Legislature rejects Mayor de Blasio's push to raise the city income tax on the wealthy to pay for a pre-K expansion.

Under what is known as a home rule process, a municipality requests permission from the state to raise certain local taxes or take other actions. Typically, lawmakers acquiesce to the locals and the requests sail through.

Over the past three years, 314 home rule bills were passed by the Legislature and signed into law by the governor, aides to Jeffrey Klein (D-Bronx) say.

"We cannot and must not have a double standard when it comes to home rule legislation like Mayor de Blasio's universal pre-K plan," Klein told the Daily News. "Either we empower cities and counties to set their own destiny, or we rethink this entire process."

Klein made his comments after Senate Republican Leader Dean Skelos said last week that de Blasio hasn't yet made a compelling case for a city income tax hike.

As co-leaders of the Senate, Klein and Skelos (R-Nassau County) each have the power to block legislation from coming to the floor for a vote.

The Senate passed 138 home rule messages last year alone. Rejecting de Blasio's plan — assuming as expected the City Council officially asks for it to be passed — could cause city lawmakers to retaliate by voting against other home rule actions sought by suburban and upstate communities — if they are allowed to reach the floor for a vote at all, insiders say.

In supporting de Blasio's plan, Klein said hiking the city income tax on those earning at least $500,000 will ensure a future funding stream for city prekindergarten programs and "will guarantee 50,000 4-year-olds the opportunity to enroll in this life changing program."

Told of Klein's comments, a Skelos spokesman said only that "we look forward to working with our partner, Jeff Klein, on this issue.”

Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver and his Democratic conference support the mayor’s request for a tax hike, but Skelos and Gov. Cuomo have been cool to the idea.

Subject: CRAIN'S: Mayor vs. Governor

Mayor vs. Governor

CRAIN'S NY - Andrew J. Hawkins

<http://www.craainsnewyork.com/article/20140112/POLITICS/301129994>

Mayor Bill de Blasio wants to tax the rich. Gov. Andrew Cuomo wants to give them a tax cut. The mayor just won a landslide victory and has political capital to spend, while the governor enjoys broad popular support and is aiming for a historic re-election in November.

With the elements for a classic political fight in place, the two Democrats will need to reach a compromise on taxes between now and the April 1 state budget deadline. And Mr. Cuomo appears to have the upper hand:

The city depends on Albany for billions in state aid each year, as well as to set income-tax rates. With that leverage, Mr. Cuomo can pressure Mr. de Blasio to ease off his populist message and accept whatever can be squeezed out of the budget for universal prekindergarten, the mayor's signature campaign proposal.

"Mayor de Blasio won't be able to unilaterally raise taxes in New York City on high-income earners," said Heather Briccetti, president and CEO of the Business Council of New York State, which supports tax cuts proposed by Mr. Cuomo. "He'll need the agreement of the Legislature and the governor, which means he'll need some kind of deal if he wants to get that done. And I just don't see it happening."

But Mr. de Blasio has cards to play. Both Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver and state Senate co-leader Jeffrey Klein support the tax hike for pre-K, and the governor needs the votes they control to get his own agenda passed. Moreover, polls show pre-K is a hit with voters; the governor himself now wants it statewide.

Mr. de Blasio does have to fight the perception among the governor's inner circle that he wants to tax the rich not to fund pre-K but to free up city money to give unionized workers retroactive raises.

Contributing to this impression is the alignment of most of the city's unions behind Mr. de Blasio. Last Monday in Harlem, union chiefs representing teachers, hotel employees, health care aides and construction workers, among others, stood with the mayor to voice support for his tax plan. There was no mention of the pay raises that municipal unions expect from Mr. de Blasio.

Open for negotiation

Nor were details given on how the campaign for a pre-K tax would proceed, but Vincent Alvarez, president of the New York City Central Labor Council and the New York chapter of the AFL-CIO, didn't discount the possibility of withholding union endorsements from officials who oppose the tax hike, including Mr. Cuomo.

Two days later, the governor embraced universal pre-K in his State of the State speech but said nothing of the mayor's tax-the-rich scheme, nor of Mr. de Blasio himself. Mr. Cuomo's office said that protocol was followed, and Mr. de Blasio said he wasn't offended.

By voicing support for universal pre-K, Mr. Cuomo left daylight for negotiation with Mr. de Blasio and his legislative allies. A resolution would preserve the governor's reputation as a competent manager who ended Albany's dysfunction, an image important for his re-election bid and potential presidential campaign in 2016.

Mr. de Blasio may have even more at stake. Taxing the rich was a focus of his campaign, and it reinvigorated liberals, who have since made him their national poster child. Universal pre-K without the tax increase would mean average New Yorkers would pay for it, dimming the de Blasio star.

"If Cuomo stiffes him," said former Assemblyman Richard Brodsky, "I don't know how he gets through year one."

Mr. Brodsky, a senior fellow at public-policy institute Demos, said the fight on taxes will define the legislative session in Albany this spring.

"It looks like de Blasio has the Legislature with him," he said. "If that's the case, there are votes in both houses to do what he wants. Is Cuomo going to declare, 'I did my best'? It's possible. But it's not likely."

The governor has wriggled out of political boxes before. Two years ago, having pledged no tax increases but facing a budget deficit, Mr. Cuomo deftly passed off a $2 billion tax increase as a reduction by extending a "millionaire's tax" just before it expired while cutting middle-class tax rates. Last year, he and the Legislature quietly extended the surcharge on high earners through 2017. The governor has since been vocal about not revisiting income taxes, arguing that increases on the wealthy will send them fleeing to low-tax states.

Two-front battle

The tax debate will play out on two fronts. City and state officials will start hashing out their differences behind closed doors, with Mr. de Blasio likely to deploy his new budget director, Dean Fuleihan, who for years was Mr. Silver's chief policy adviser and knows Albany intimately.

Meanwhile, Mr. de Blasio, organized labor and the Working Families Party will take their tax-the-rich message to the public in districts of key state lawmakers to build momentum for their cause. The playbook will be familiar: rallies, door-knocking, phone-banking and possibly TV and radio ads.

The WFP recently joined with other left-leaning groups to create People for New York, modeled in part on a past adversary, the Committee to Save New York, a former business alliance that advertised in support of the governor's fiscally conservative agenda.

As one source who has worked on past campaigns with the Democratic-operative-turned-mayor put it, Mr. de Blasio "is a big believer in the outside game."

NYS Minority Lawmakers Seek Support For Mayor de Blasio's Universal Pre-Kindergarten Tax Plan

NY DAILY NEWS - Ken Lovett

<http://www.nydailynews.com/blogs/dailypolitics/2014/01/minority-lawmakers-seek-support-for-gov-de-blasios-prekindergarten-tax-plan>

Members of the influential Black, Hispanic and Puerto Rican caucus this morning sought to up pressure on state leaders to approve Mayor de Blasio's push for state permission for the city to increase the city's income tax on the wealthy to cover expanded prekindergarten programs.

Caucus Chairman Karim Camara (D-Brooklyn), different members of the caucus, and several other legislators--including a number of non-New York City lawmakers--held a press conference this morning on the issue in advance of an education rally in which organizers said more than 1,000 people will travel to Albany to call not only for de Blasio's plan, but an additional $1.9 billion more in statewide education aid.

"The purpose was to announce we have this coalition that includes members outside of New York City and we're asking the Senate to not block a home rule message that would allow New York City to raise the income tax on people making $500,000 to pay for prekindergarten programs, Camara told the Daily News afterward.

Camara said there was no discussion at this point of blocking home rule messages from other communities if the city's is rejected.

"We didn't get to the strategic questions," Camara said. "We just want it known that this is one of the highest priorities during this legislative session."

I reported yesterday that Senate co-Leader Jeffrey Klein (D-Bronx) hinted that other local requests could be blocked if the Senate doesn't act on the city's plan.

Senate GOP Leader Dean Skelos, who along with Klein can single-handedly block legislation from coming to the floor for a vote--said last week that de Blasio has not made an adequate case for a local tax hike. Skelos said Gov. Cuomo plans to call for a phase-in of a statewide prekindergarten expansion in the 2014-15 budget proposal he will unveil next week.

Here's part of the release announcing the press conference:

"New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio has proposed a plan to extend and make available full-day Pre-kindergarten to all children in New York City. The new plan would close a gap of nearly 50,000 children who currently receive inadequate part-time Pre-kindergarten or no Pre-kindergarten at all. These high-quality education programs are proven to increase cognition, boost scores and build fundamental skills that put children on an upward educational path.

The Mayor has proposed funding the new plan by implementing a five-year increase in New York City income tax on earners over $500,000 from 3.876% to 4.41%. The increase would yield approximately 530 million dollars in new revenue for the City and make Universal Pre-kindergarten a reality for all of New York's families. The tax portion of the plan is critical to its success because funding commitments for these types of educational programs have not materialized in past years, leaving tens of thousands of New York City children behind.

Not only do full-day Pre-kindergarten and afterschool programs a help to improve graduation rates and to reduce the achievement gap, but they also make it 20% more likely that a child will graduate high school and will be able to work their way out of poverty. According to a recent study by the National Bureau of Economic Research, Pre-kindergarten programs can reduce the achievement gap by up to as much as 40%."

Hi Jen – wanted to offer you an exclusive on the next phase of the UPK NYC campaign to pass Mayor de Blasio’s pre-k and after-school plan.

Starting tomorrow, the UPK NYC campaign will launch extensive online and grassroots campaign to recruit tens of thousands of UPK activists to mobilize as budget discussions heat up in Albany.

Tomorrow morning, hundreds of volunteers will be at subway stops in all five boroughs, handing out literature and signing up supporters. And dozens of organizations will email hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers, urging them to become UPK activists.

The campaign will include talking to New Yorkers at subway stops, at their doors, at house parties and at town halls throughout the City. Additionally, the campaign will rely on online organizing methods perfected on BDB's campaign for Mayor.

As budget discussion heat up, organizers will mobilize activists to reach out to elected officials throughout the state via in-district and Albany lobby visits, letters and phone calls. The goal is to make sure elected officials see that 70 percent of New Yorkers want to get this done now.

Let me know if you want this piece exclusively for a story to run tomorrow AM, and what you’d need to make it happen.

Thanks,

Emma

+ PR. My rec on background:

UPK NYC is an independent effort organized by civic, business, non-profit, labor leaders and prominent New Yorkers to support the Mayor's plan for pre-k and afterschool.

Similar to past Mayor's involvement in campaigns like Mayor's Against Illegal Guns, he is supportive of it and involved in helping to recruit supporters to the issue.

Re: her q on city hall point person – I think fine to say Emma as we have repeatedly said in public space she is point on pre-k.

Subject: Exclusive for you on UPK campaign

Hi Jen – wanted to offer you an exclusive on the next phase of the UPK NYC campaign to pass Mayor de Blasio's pre-k and after-school plan.

Starting tomorrow, the UPK NYC campaign will launch extensive online and grassroots campaign to recruit tens of thousands of UPK activists to mobilize as budget discussions heat up in Albany.

Tomorrow morning, hundreds of volunteers will be at subway stops in all five boroughs, handing out literature and signing up supporters. And dozens of organizations will email hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers, urging them to become UPK activists.

The campaign will include talking to New Yorkers at subway stops, at their doors, at house parties and at town halls throughout the City. Additionally, the campaign will rely on online organizing methods perfected on BDB's campaign for Mayor.

As budget discussion heat up, organizers will mobilize activists to reach out to elected officials throughout the state via in-district and Albany lobby visits, letters and phone calls. The goal is to make sure elected officials see that 70 percent of New Yorkers want to get this done now.

Let me know if you want this piece exclusively for a story to run tomorrow AM, and what you'd need to make it happen.

Thanks,

Emma

Quotes

"We applaud Governor Cuomo for making statewide universal pre-k a priority in his executive budget. But the money he is proposing is not enough for truly universal, full-day pre-k and the afterschool program Mayor de Blasio has proposed, and does not guarantee a dedicated funding stream at the level needed. In New York City, we need the tax plan that Mayor de Blasio has laid out in order to generate dedicated resources for a full and secure investment in both universal pre-k and after-school programs – and our city should have the authority to raise its own taxes to pay for the Mayor's critical expansion of these programs. We urge Governor Cuomo and the Legislature to pass Mayor de Blasio's plan to raise taxes on the wealthiest New Yorkers to expand pre-k and after-school programs," said the Campaign for Children (not approved)

"The Governor is right to recognize that pre-k and after school are an essential investment in New York's future. But unfortunately the budget he's presented makes it more clear than ever that without new dedicated revenue from a tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers, there is simply no way to make sure these programs reach all of our children," said Javier H. Valdes, Co-Executive Director of Make the Road New York.

"We're very encouraged to see that the Governor has prioritized pre-k and after-school programs in his budget, as we know that these programs are essential for the success of our children and working families. However, the funding he has presented is not enough to expand these programs to serve all children. We need the tax plan Mayor de Blasio has laid out in order to truly invest in our children's futures," said Melanie Hartzog, Executive Director of Children's Defense Fund New York. (not approved)

"We applaud Gov. Cuomo for putting Pre-K and after school front and center in the budget. Now, we must work together to make sure these programs truly reach all our children. To fulfill that promise, we need to find sufficient and stable resources – which we can achieve by giving NYC the ability raise revenue from the wealthiest New Yorkers as a stable funding mechanism for UPK," said Hector Figueroa, President of 32BJ SEIU.

"Governor Cuomo is right to make Pre-K and after school a central part of his budget, but the resources he has put forward are simply not enough to call his proposal 'universal.' Giving every four-year-old the high-quality early education that studies show to be so effective means finding new revenue, and the fairest way to do that is to give Mayor de Blasio the authority to ask the wealthiest New Yorkers to pay just a little more in taxes," said Camille Rivera, Executive Director of United NY.

"I applaud Governor Cuomo for recognizing the critical importance of universal pre-K and after-school programs for educational opportunity. He is right: we need the programs in NYC and statewide. But the statewide money he is proposing doesn't even meet the needs of New York City alone, much less the whole state. Therefore it's obvious that the Legislature and Governor should give New York City the leeway to raise its own taxes to ensure universal pre-K and after-school programs for all of New York's children. The importance and feasibility of such an agreement are now in clear view thanks to the Governor's commitment to these crucial programs," said Jeffrey Sachs, Director of the Earth Institute at Columbia University and Special Advisor to the UN Secretary-General.

"The Governor has made a first step, but what he has proposed will not come even close to true universal pre-k and after school for all New Yorkers. Albany has talked about fully funding pre-k again and again for 15 years, but without new tax revenue as Mayor de Blasio has proposed, there is simply no way to give our children the quality education they deserve," said Jonathan Westin, Executive Director of New York Communities for Change.

I think we should respond and subtly draw a line between supporting AIPAC and supporting Israel. Something like this, and I think we should also consult Rosen.

"Mayor de Blasio is committed to preserving and strengthening New York City's relationship with Israel because of our shared values and the threat of terrorism that we both face. His commitment to this goal transcends any particular organization and is rooted in the people of New York City and their values."

An Open Letter to Mayor Bill de Blasio:

We are Jewish residents of New York who read, in the leaked transcript of your private speech to a meeting of AIPAC leaders, the following:

"City Hall will always be open to AIPAC. When you need me to stand by you in Washington or anywhere, I will answer the call and I'll answer it happily 'cause that's my job."

We understand that the job of mayor of New York is a complex one that often calls for your participation on the international stage, and we would not presume to define your job for you. But we do know that the needs and concerns of many of your constituents--U.S. Jews like us among them--are not aligned with those of AIPAC, and that no, your job is not to do AIPAC's bidding when they call you to do so. AIPAC speaks for Israel's hard-line government and its right-wing supporters, and for them alone; it does not speak for us.

The daunting logistics of de Blasio's pre-K plan

By Eliza Shapiro

5:00 a.m. | Feb. 6, 2014

Getting Bill de Blasio's ambitious, politically tricky universal pre-kindergarten plan through Albany may turn out to be the easy part.

Because if and when it passes, the city will have to contend urgently with some questions it doesn't currently have the answers to, beginning with where all the newly eligible children will go, and how they'll get there.

De Blasio has said the city will have the space to house 53,604 pre-K students by this September and all 73,250 eligible children by the following school year if the city identifies 2,000 more classrooms.

“Make no mistake, we are ready to hit the ground running and launch a major expansion of quality pre-K for the coming school year,” de Blasio said in a statement. “The real obstacle isn't space or personnel, it's the sustainable funding needed to serve every child.”

But if the funding is secured, the space issue will pose a logistical challenge of historic proportions. The mayor's figures rely on a number of optimistic assumptions, beginning with the idea that the city will be able to identify and convert adequate space not just in school buildings, but in community-based organizations (CBOs) and libraries, all in time to accommodate the first phase of expanded pre-K in September. There are hundreds of city regulations to make classroom space useable for young children.

Another potential headache: School busing is not provided for most four-year-olds.

"I'm worried about it," said Pedro Noguera, a professor of education at NYU's Steinhardt School of Culture, Education and Human Development, about executing de Blasio's pre-K plan. "I just think if you try to do this too quickly you're not going to do it well."

"This could easily blow up in the mayor and chancellor's face," he added.

De Blasio and his allies are currently engaged in a political battle with Governor Andrew Cuomo, who has no intention of allowing a tax hike in his re-election year, and has effectively tried to preempt the de Blasio plan by proposing some statewide funding for pre-K that wouldn't require additional taxes.

That's left de Blasio to convince lawmakers and the public that Cuomo's proposal is insufficient to the needs of the city's children, even as he reassures them that his own plan is a workable one.

De Blasio offered some new details about his potentially transformative (and highly popular) plan in a report released on Jan. 27, which found the Department of Education has already identified about 4,000 classrooms that could house pre-K programs, with more space available in community-based organizations and public libraries.

The D.O.E. currently provides pre-K for about 59,000 children, according to the department's figures, with about 60 percent of the programs housed in C.B.O.s, and the remaining 40 percent in D.O.E. schools.

But many city schools are already overcrowded, meaning, presumably, there would be no room for new pre-K classes. (In Brooklyn's District 15, for example, where de Blasio's children attended school, 24 out of 36 schools are already over-utilized, according to a D.O.E report from the 2012-2013 school year.)

So accomodating the newly eligible children, at the very least, will require more resources and capability than the education department can muster on its own.

"There's hardly any community you go in that doesn't have a big need for pre-K," said Nancy Wackstein, the executive director of United Neighborhood Houses, a coalition of 38 community organizations, many of which currently provide pre-K and are willing to increase their capacity under the mayor's plan. "What it will require is all the city agencies pulling together to make it happen, and to expand in many cases. We in the nonprofit sector are sometimes the victim of slow city processes."

There is plenty of precedent for housing pre-K programs outside traditional schools: 500 C.B.O.s currently offer pre-K through D.O.E. contracts. But expanding them under strict city regulations won't be easy.

According to Department of Health regulations, C.B.O.s housing pre-K space must have, among other things, child-sized sinks with water temperature not exceeding 115 degrees Fahrenheit, 30 square feet of wall-to-wall space for each child, protective barriers installed in all stairways, and low banisters or handrails installed for small children, among many other regulations for construction.

C.B.O.s will also have to ensure that all rooms housing pre-K programs have the appropriate radiator covers and correct liquid soap dispensers for children, along with hundreds of other regulations for building and renovating pre-K space.

D.O.E. officials have asked principals and school leaders to tell them whether their schools have space for pre-K and if they are willing to host the program. Schools are also subject to regulations for pre-K: classrooms cannot be above the third floor, must provide at least 35 square feet of space per child, and have child-size bathrooms easily accessible from the classrooms.

If there are schools with pre-K space available, commutes may prove difficult due to a state law preventing children under four from riding a bus without a car seat. While special-education students will continue to receive busing from the D.O.E., busing for general education students is not yet on the table. De Blasio has also proposed looking into additional space in public library branches and New York City Housing Authority buildings.

Wackstein said that while some NYCHA buildings' community spaces are underutilized, some would require costly renovations in order to bring the rooms up to code for housing young children. As for the libraries, there could be space crunch: Pre-K children could end up using branches where schools chancellor Carmen Fariña already has designs to create "teen rooms" for her new middle school improvement initiative.

Officials from the city's cash-strapped library system say they're up to the task of housing pre-K activity.

"We've been in the business of pre-K and children's literacy work for decades," said Anthony Marx, president and CEO of the New York Public Library.

The NYPL has 88 branches and most of them have floors or rooms for children, Marx added.

The Queens Public Library has submitted proposals to provide pre-K at several of its sites, a spokeswoman said.

Still, the details of whether pre-K programs would actually move into the libraries in large numbers or whether those programs would just use the libraries' resources have not yet been hammered out, sources say.

Specifics for space utilization in school buildings are still to be determined, D.O.E. spokesman Devon Puglia said.

"In terms of our classroom estimates, they are initial," said Puglia.

He said the city would find accommodations, without compromising on standards.

“We want kids in suitable spaces with high-quality programs, whether C.B.O. or public school, and they will be,” he said.

Hope all is well with you, and you are enjoying a respite from the relentless snow!

Are you involved at City Hall at all, or are you staying exclusively on the political side? If you have any involvement these days, I wanted to bring something to your attention.

I know that the Mayor values manufacturing jobs, as per campaign and other stated priorities, but I see that the only program that provides services to industrial businesses (Industrial Business Zone Program) has been cut completely out of the preliminary administrative budget. 0$ allocation. It's my guess that this is what the agencies themselves proposed to fund, but I think that defunding this program does not align well with his stated goal of using city resources to retain and grow manufacturing. Last year $1.1 million was allocated city wide after the Council stepped in to fund it. In contrast, NYC and Company was allocated $12 million for FY15. (Not that they don't deserve it—they do!)

Is there anyone at city hall that you think I should speak with to point this out? It is a funding decision that is misaligned with the Mayor's stated policy goals.

NYS Leaders Set To Give Mayor de Blasio $300M For Pre-K, Sources Say

BY KEN LOVETT

Gov. Cuomo and state lawmakers are zeroing in on a deal that would set aside $300 million for a full-day prekindergarten in New York City, the Daily News has learned.

Sources close to the talks say additional money would also be given to the city that can be used for after-school programs, though it wouldn't be specifically earmarked for that purpose.

All told, the sources said, the emerging budget deal would likely provide a total package close to what Mayor de Blasio has been seeking--though without the increase in the city income tax the mayor had been seeking to fund the expansion.

But, as with anything in the flow of budget talks, the sources warn no deal is set until the final budget is agreed upon.

Gov. Cuomo during an appearance Syracuse denied a final deal on pre-K has been reached, but said "we are getting closer to a number."

But he also referenced the $300 million figure for the city.

"New York City has been very aggressive in saying they want to move quickly and they would need about $300 million to bring it online," he said. "We'll have the money available, but the actual result is going to be up to the local governments."

He said how much the state sets aside won't matter if the localities can't get their programs up and running. Rather than hand over the money, a district will first have to spend it and then seek reimbursement from the state.

"I want to be in a position as a state that we can move as quickly as the local government can move--and then we'll find out how quickly the local governments can move," he said.

The emerging budget deal will also set aside additional money for full-day pre-K programs outside the city. But, sources said, that money will have more flexibility so districts can also use it to beef up full-day kindergarten programs.

In addition, it's expected that an education bond act that will go before voters will set aside money for pre-kindergarten classroom construction as well as additional space so the city can close down the trailers that house some classes.

Legislative leaders reported progress on the budget talks. Sources said a deal to delay the implementation of the Common Core education standards for two years has been agreed to.

One source said the major outstanding issues involve charter schools, an anti-corruption package, campaign finance reform and the DREAM Act.

Dear Jonathan,

This is [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]
[REDACTED] I want to congratulate you on your terrific work this year for the de Blasio campaign, though I am sure I am not the first. [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

I am writing to submit a cover letter and resume to serve as a board member of the CCRB. [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

It is a heady time for police oversight in New York, and the CCRB is going to play a significant role over the next four years in coordination with the federal monitor and the inspector general. As I describe in the attached letter, I believe that my [REDACTED] [REDACTED] combined with my deep understanding of the legal framework governing policing, would make me an excellent board member. [REDACTED] [REDACTED], which I also think would mark a significant milestone in the agency's progress.

I have attached a letter addressed to Laura Santucci. I want to thank you in advance for your help, and congratulate you again on a job well done.

Best

[REDACTED]

November 11, 2013

Laura Santucci
Executive Director
Transition Team
Bill de Blasio 2013

Dear Ms. Santucci,

I am writing to ask that you consider me to serve as a board member of the Civilian Complaint Review Board. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] and believe that the CCRB can be a powerful tool for implementing Mayor-elect de Blasio's vision of a police department that respects the rights of all New Yorkers. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] would make me an excellent member of the Civilian Complaint Review Board.

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

I also understand the mechanics of the agency and would implement needed internal reforms. The CCRB, for example, has seen a dramatic increase in its truncation rate—the rate at which cases are closed without an investigation. In 2001 this rate was 37.5%. It is now over 65%. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

Although over the next four years the NYPD will be overseen by a federal monitor, the CCRB will play a critical role in police reforms. Once the monitor begins his work, he will be responsible for crafting a policy to end racial profiling. The CCRB will be responsible for enforcing that policy. People will know that the NYPD no longer tolerates racial profiling not when it circulates a new Interim Order, but when it takes corrective action against officers who stop people based on race. It will only be able to do so if the CCRB conducts detailed investigations that are thoroughly vetted by board members who are deeply versed in the legal framework governing law enforcement.

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] I remain deeply committed to issues regarding civil rights and racial justice.

[REDACTED] I would see serving on the CCRB as an a duty towards those who have been mistreated by law enforcement, and an opportunity to implement long-needed reforms. I believe that [REDACTED] [REDACTED], and my passion for civil justice would make me an outstanding member of the Civilian Complaint Review Board.

Sincerely,

[REDACTED]

Dear Jonathan,

This is [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] I want to congratulate you on your terrific work this year for the de Blasio campaign, though I am sure I am not the first. [REDACTED]

I am writing to submit a cover letter and resume to serve as a board member of the CCRB. [REDACTED]

It is a heady time for police oversight in New York, and the CCRB is going to play a significant role over the next four years in coordination with the federal monitor and the inspector general. As I describe in the attached letter, I believe that my [REDACTED] combined with my deep understanding of the legal framework governing policing, would make me an excellent board member. [REDACTED], which I also think would mark a significant milestone in the agency's progress.

I have attached a letter addressed to Laura Santucci. I want to thank you in advance for your help, and congratulate you again on a job well done.

Best

Ny post has a "dem insider" saying the mayor is spending too much time on calls soliciting advice from folks like Sharpton, Val Berlin, Rosen and others (some related to Garner, some other issues too) and not enough time focusing on priorities (visiting Staten Island, helping low wage workers).

Lindsay,

Hey! I was asking Jonathan Rosen who was handling the Mayor's scheduling and your name came across my desk. Hilarious – such a small world. I left Podesta in Feb and have been with BerlinRosen since May. Caitlin Offinger is also going to be working here as of September. How are you?

Hi Dan.

Thanks for your call. Here is the location for the press event on Friday:

Union Johnson Early Learning Center

1829 Lexington Avenue (at 113th Street)

New York, New York 10029

The center is in the NYCHA Johnson Houses, which are between 112th and 115th Streets. The child care center is on the east side of Lexington Avenue, about a block north of the corner of 112th and Lexington. There are glass doors facing north, and a Union Settlement Association sign facing Lexington Avenue. You can't miss it.

As discussed, we'll expect to see you or one of your colleagues at the center on Thursday, January 2 at 3:00 p.m. to do a walk-through of the site.

My contact information is below, and you can also reach me on my cell phone at [REDACTED] if there are any changes.

I have cc'd Michell

10:25AM - 10:45AM	Alvarez closes and manages Q + A. YOU take Q+A re implementation, working group, and other policy issues. HE takes Q + A about labor.

TALKING POINTS

TALKING POINTS:

I want to thank the Union Settlement Association and its Executive Director, Dave Nocenti for hosting us.

And I want to thank the leaders of these unions representing millions of New Yorkers for joining this movement.

As I have said multiple times, the centerpiece of my campaign, and the centerpiece of my administration's agenda, is achieving a tax increase on the wealthiest New Yorkers to provide truly Universal Pre-K and after-school programs for every middle-schooler.

The people are on our side.

And the facts are on our side.

We are here today in an example of a high-quality educational facility that could open a new pre-K classroom tomorrow if we had the funding. Right down the hall, they have an empty classroom ready to go.

What's missing is the funding. Well, we're working to change that.

A few weeks ago, 10 leaders from business, civil rights, academia, advocacy and the arts launched UPK NYC. They were joined by the leaders of 25 organizations with deep roots across the 5 boroughs, who will reach their members, their elected officials to press for passage of our plan.

Now they are being joined by leaders of the New York City labor movements.

14 labor unions, including the Central Labor Council, have signed on to join this campaign. These unions, who represent millions of New Yorkers, know how to make an issue resonate in Albany.

For the working men and women of New York, quality pre-K and afterschool is not just about educational opportunity.

It's also an economic justice issue.

We are asking a little more of the wealthy because we know a strong economy is dependent on a thriving school system. Giving every kid a chance to get their education off on the right foot, from the earliest age, has been shown to lead to greater economic success, healthier lives, and a better chance of breaking the cycle of poverty.

And we are asking a little more of the wealthy because we know that too many working parents don't have somewhere safe and educational for their kids to be when they are at work.

Or they only have access to informal care.

Or they can barely afford the options that are out there.

Well, passing this plan will give peace of mind to working parents, who suffer the anxiety of not knowing whether their child is safe and supervised during those critical hours after the school day ends, but before the workday is done.

I am thankful that today, the men and women of New York's labor movement are committing to educate their members, talk to their elected officials and help make a small tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to pay for universal pre-K and afterschool for middle schoolers a reality.

And now for our friends in the Spanish-speaking press:

- <Insert Spanish summation>

[Turn the event back over to Vinny Alvarez, President of the New York City Central Labor Council, who will handle questions about labor support. YOU will take questions about policy, implementation, etc]

Q&A

Q. When do you expect to begin negotiations in Albany?

A. We look forward to beginning negotiations immediately. As I have said before, this plan can't wait.

Q. What if Cuomo offers revenue straight from the State budget—would you turn it down?

A. The dedicated tax we've called for is the way to do this. General budget revenue can be cut, or it can come from other worthy programs. A dedicated tax is the only

Q. Given that you can't likely scale up to 100% by September 2014, do you really need the full $530 million this year? Would you take less?

A. Yes. We absolutely need the full amount in year one. Our goal is to begin to mount a massive expansion in both pre-k and after-school that begins in September. As I mentioned, this facility, and many others, have empty classrooms that can be put to work. And other sites will be available. Our working group is mapping out details – but we know a significant number of expansion slots will be converting half day to full day. Many of those already have staff and space. We will also focus on restoring the 30,000 afterschool seats we lost and adding more - so we will use a lot of the funds for ongoing operations right away.

We also know there will be significant one time costs we will occur as we expand the system. Examples may include:

--Expenses to retrofit space

--Expenses on prepaid leases that we would make if they would save taxpayer money down the road

--Expenses to modernize data systems for enrollment and outcomes measurement (technology in programs to allow assessment of progress).

Our working group is mapping out a precise implementation plan but I can say to you confidently if our plan passes we will rapidly bring capacity online in year one and need the full funding to do it.

Q. Will these leaders you named be actively lobbying in Albany?

A. They'll use their sway in Albany. They'll use their sway in the public debate.

Q. Have you spoken to Governor Cuomo about your plan? What has he indicated?

A. I know he shares the goal. He's declared an openness to discuss our funding plan.

Q. Doesn't this tax hike run counter to Cuomo's tax commission proposals to reduce taxes?

A. NYC taxes are different from the State's tax burden. They are two different discussions.

Q. Will you be running any ads or buying airtime?

A. We're focused on the grassroots, and our first push will be through these organizations' memberships and reach and growing our coalition.

Q. Would you consider waiting a year to pass your plan after the elections in Albany?

A. No. Priorities like this cannot wait.

Q. If the State doesn't support you, will you fund this out of the City budget?

A. We are fighting to pass this with NYC tax revenue. We're not trying to infringe on the State budget.

Q. How will you overcome skepticism in the State Senate?

A. Jeff Klein has declared himself an ally. We will mobilize our NYC delegation. And we will reach out to Republicans—including those upstate who in the past have supported NYC's right to tax itself.

BACKGROUND

Union Settlement Association

Union Settlement Association began in 1895 on East 104th Street in East Harlem.

The 350 employees and the 10,000 residents who participate in its programs work to make East Harlem a strong, supportive and proud community where dreams are born and achieved every day. They're working side-by-side with community members to tackle the issues that are important to the vitality of the neighborhood, and to advocate with them on behalf of all East Harlem residents, and underserved communities across the city, state and nation.

Union Settlement serves 500 children and their families in seven childcare and Head Start centers. Teachers in its pre-school program assist children ages two to five in a stimulating social and educational environment. They operate a Universal Pre-Kindergarten program with Community School District 4/Region 9.

Union Settlement Child Care programs operate from 8AM to 6PM and the Head Start programs operate from 8AM to 4:30PM. Both programs are open year round.

All child care centers and home care providers are licensed by the Department of Health.

They also offer youth programs for 2,000 children and teens.

Youth Services programs include: homework assistance, tutoring, computer instruction, visual and performing arts projects, recreational activities and a summer day camp, employment and educational opportunities for in-school youth, including, tutoring, internships and job skills development.

The centerpiece of Youth at Union is its Education Center. Open weekdays from three to nine p.m. and on Saturdays for special events and activities, the Center serves as a "neighborhood sanctuary" where parents can be sure their children are engaged in constructive, enriching activities.

They also offer adult education, college readiness, HIV, mental health and senior services.

BIOS

Comment [MR2]: Do we need bios of the labor leaders?

David Nocenti, Executive Director, Union Settlement Association: David became the Executive Director of Union Settlement in January 2009. He has served as a top advisor to three Governors, including as Counsel to Governors David Paterson and Eliot Spitzer from January 2007 through June 2008, as well as Assistant Counsel and First Assistant Counsel to Governor Mario Cuomo from 1990 to 1994. He also served as Counsel to the New York Attorney General and the Queens Borough President and as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in Brooklyn.

As discussed, we'll expect to see you or one of your colleagues at the center on Thursday, January 2 at 3:00 p.m. to do a walk-through of the site.

My contact information is below, and you can also reach me on my cell phone at 917-902-3578 if there are any changes.

I have cc'd Michelle Paige, our Director of Early Childhood Education, and Sara Stuart, our Director of Development and Communication, both of whom should be able to join us for the walk-through. I presume that you are also working on a press release, so let us know if you need any information about Union Settlement Association and/or the Union Johnson Early Learning Center.

Have a great New Year's holiday, and I look forward to seeing you on Thursday at 3 p.m.

Dave

Hi Michael – A few things regarding the briefing below.

- 1) How many total attendees?
- 2) List of key participants – I know Vincent Alvarez, Mike Mulgrew will be present. Will Dave Nocenti also be present (I see he mentions him in the speech)? Any other key folks the Mayor should know are present?
- 3) Yes, we do need very short bios (4-5 lines) for key participants.

Thank you,

V. REMARKS

I want to thank the Union Settlement Association and its Executive Director, Dave Nocenti for hosting us.

Since opening its doors in 1895, Union Settlement has brought education, wellness and community-building programs to the people of East Harlem

It serves the community – from the youngest to the oldest – from Head Start to Meals on Wheels

I appreciate your graciousness in hosting us here

And I want to thank the leaders of these unions representing millions-over 1.3 million ~~of~~ New Yorkers for joining this movement for universal pre-K and afterschool.

As I have said multiple times, the centerpiece of my campaign — and the centerpiece of my administration’s agenda — is achieving a tax increase on the wealthiest New Yorkers to provide truly Universal Pre-K and after-school programs for every middle-schooler.

The people are on our side.

And the facts are on our side.

We are here today in an example of a high-quality educational facility that could open a new pre-K classroom tomorrow if we had the funding.

This state of the art facility opened last year and serves over 40 children in three Head Start classrooms

But they could serve more

Right down the hall, they have ~~an~~ two empty classrooms ready to go.

What’s missing is the funding. Well, we’re working to change that.

A few weeks ago, 10 leaders from business, civil rights, academia, advocacy and the arts launched UPK NYC.

They were joined by the leaders of 25 organizations with deep roots across the 5 boroughs, who will reach their members, their elected officials to press for passage of our plan.

Now they are being joined by leaders of the New York City labor movement – which represents more than 1.3 million working peoples.

~~14 labor unions, including the~~ These unions, including the Central Labor Council and the Working Families Party, have signed on to join this campaign.

~~These unions, who represent millions of New Yorkers,~~ know how to make an issue resonate in Albany.

For the working men and women of New York, quality pre-K and afterschool is not just about educational opportunity.

It's also an economic justice issue.

We are asking a little more of the wealthy because we know a strong economy is dependent on a thriving school system.

Giving every kid a chance to get their education off on the right foot — from the earliest age — has been shown to lead to greater economic success, healthier lives, and a better chance of breaking the cycle of poverty.

And we are asking a little more of the wealthy because we know that too many working parents don't have somewhere safe and educational for their kids to be when they are at work.

Or they only have access to informal care.

Or they can barely afford the options that are out there.

Well, passing this plan will give peace of mind to working parents — who suffer the anxiety of not knowing whether their child is safe and supervised during those critical hours after the school day ends, but before the workday is done.

I am thankful that today, the men and women of New York's labor movement are committing to:

- educate their members
- talk to their elected officials
- and help make a small tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to pay for universal pre-K and afterschool for middle schoolers a reality.

And now for our friends in the Spanish-speaking press:

- <Insert Spanish summation>

Q&A

Q. When do you expect to begin negotiations in Albany?

A. We look forward to beginning negotiations immediately. As I have said before, this plan can't wait.

Q. What if Cuomo offers revenue straight from the State budget—would you turn it down?

A. The dedicated tax we've called for is the way to do this. General budget revenue can be cut, or it can come from other worthy programs. A dedicated tax is the only way to do it.

Q. Given that you can't likely scale up to 100% by September 2014, do you really need the full $530 million this year? Would you take less?

A. Yes. We absolutely need the full amount in year one. Our goal is to begin to mount a massive expansion in both pre-k and after-school that begins in September. As I mentioned, this facility, and many others, have empty classrooms that can be put to work. And other sites will be available. Our working group is mapping out details – but we know a significant number of expansion slots will be converting half day to full day. Many of those already have staff and space. We will also focus on restoring the 30,000 afterschool seats we lost and adding more - so we will use a lot of the funds for ongoing operations right away.

We also know there will be significant one time costs we will occur as we expand the system. Examples may include:

- Expenses to retrofit space
- Expenses on prepaid leases that we would make if they would save taxpayer money down the road
- Expenses to modernize data systems for enrollment and outcomes measurement (technology in programs to allow assessment of progress).

Our working group is mapping out a precise implementation plan but I can say to you confidently if our plan passes we will rapidly bring capacity online in year one and need the full funding to do it.

Q. Will these leaders you named be actively lobbying in Albany?

A. They'll use their sway in Albany. They'll use their sway in the public debate.

Q. Have you spoken to Governor Cuomo about your plan? What has he indicated?

A. I know he shares the goal. He's declared an openness to discuss our funding plan.

Q. Doesn't this tax hike run counter to Cuomo's tax commission proposals to reduce taxes?

A. NYC taxes are different from the State's tax burden. They are two different discussions.

Q. Will you be running any ads or buying airtime?

A. We're focused on the grassroots, and our first push will be through these organizations' memberships and reach and growing our coalition.

Q. Would you consider waiting a year to pass your plan after the elections in Albany?

A. No. Priorities like this cannot wait.

Q. If the State doesn't support you, will you fund this out of the City budget?

A. We are fighting to pass this with NYC tax revenue. We're not trying to infringe on the State budget.

Q. How will you overcome skepticism in the State Senate?

A. Jeff Klein has declared himself an ally. We will mobilize our NYC delegation. And we will reach out to Republicans—including those upstate who in the past have supported NYC's right to tax itself.

VI. ATTACHMENTS

Union Settlement Association

Union Settlement Association began in 1895 on East 104th Street in East Harlem.

The 350 employees and the 10,000 residents who participate in its programs work to make East Harlem a strong, supportive and proud community where dreams are born and achieved every day. They're working side-by-side with community members to tackle the issues that are important to the vitality of the neighborhood, and to advocate with them on behalf of all East Harlem residents, and underserved communities across the city, state and nation.

Union Settlement serves 500 children and their families in seven childcare and Head Start centers. Teachers in its pre-school program assist children ages two to five in a stimulating social and educational environment. They operate a Universal Pre-Kindergarten program with Community School District 4/Region 9.

Union Settlement Child Care programs operate from 8AM to 6PM and the Head Start programs operate from 8AM to 4:30PM. Both programs are open year round.

All child care centers and home care providers are licensed by the Department of Health.

They also offer youth programs for 2,000 children and teens.

Youth Services programs include: homework assistance, tutoring, computer instruction, visual and performing arts projects, recreational activities and a summer day camp, employment and educational opportunities for in-school youth, including, tutoring, internships and job skills development.

The centerpiece of Youth at Union is its Education Center. Open weekdays from three to nine p.m. and on Saturdays for special events and activities, the Center serves as a "neighborhood sanctuary" where parents can be sure their children are engaged in constructive, enriching activities.

They also offer adult education, college readiness, HIV, mental health and senior services.

David Nocenti, Executive Director, Union Settlement Association: David became the Executive Director of Union Settlement in January 2009. He has served as a top advisor to three Governors, including as Counsel to Governors David Paterson and Eliot Spitzer from January 2007 through June 2008, as well as Assistant Counsel and First Assistant Counsel to Governor Mario Cuomo from 1990 to 1994. He also served as Counsel to the New York Attorney General and the Queens Borough President and as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in Brooklyn.

A. We are fighting to pass this with NYC tax revenue. We're not trying to infringe on the State budget.

Q. How will you overcome skepticism in the State Senate?

A. Jeff Klein has declared himself an ally. We will mobilize our NYC delegation. And we will reach out to Republicans—including those upstate who in the past have supported NYC's right to tax itself.

Union Settlement Association

Union Settlement Association began in 1895 on East 104th Street in East Harlem.

The 350 employees and the 10,000 residents who participate in its programs work to make East Harlem a strong, supportive and proud community where dreams are born and achieved every day. They're working side-by-side with community members to tackle the issues that are important to the vitality of the neighborhood, and to advocate with them on behalf of all East Harlem residents, and underserved communities across the city, state and nation.

Union Settlement serves 500 children and their families in seven childcare and Head Start centers. Teachers in its pre-school program assist children ages two to five in a stimulating social and educational environment. They operate a Universal Pre-Kindergarten program with Community School District 4/Region 9.

Union Settlement Child Care programs operate from 8AM to 6PM and the Head Start programs operate from 8AM to 4:30PM. Both programs are open year round.

All child care centers and home care providers are licensed by the Department of Health.

They also offer youth programs for 2,000 children and teens.

Youth Services programs include: homework assistance, tutoring, computer instruction, visual and performing arts projects, recreational activities and a summer day camp, employment and educational opportunities for in-school youth, including, tutoring, internships and job skills development.

The centerpiece of Youth at Union is its Education Center. Open weekdays from three to nine p.m. and on Saturdays for special events and activities, the Center serves as a "neighborhood sanctuary" where parents can be sure their children are engaged in constructive, enriching activities.

They also offer adult education, college readiness, HIV, mental health and senior services.

David Nocenti, Executive Director, Union Settlement Association: David became the Executive Director of Union Settlement in January 2009. He has served as a top advisor to three Governors, including as Counsel to Governors David Paterson and Eliot Spitzer from January 2007 through June 2008, as well as Assistant Counsel and First Assistant Counsel to Governor Mario Cuomo from 1990 to 1994. He also served as Counsel to the New York Attorney General and the Queens Borough President and as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in Brooklyn.

Q. Capital NY last night reported that Governor Cuomo will propose his own statewide plan to achieve universal pre-k. In light of this do you still need your tax plan?

A. Albany committed to universal pre-k fifteen years ago, yet 15 years later more than fifty thousand NYC kids have no access to full day pre-k and even more are denied access to after school because the funding has never been there to get it done.

To close this gap will cost 550 million per year in NYC on a sustained ongoing basis. It's not going to get done with one shots or limited grant programs. That's why I've proposed a dedicated way to pay for it that locks in the funding to finally get this done.

We're heartened that the governor is committed to working with us to address this issue but the bottom line is for it to work we need a dedicated locked in multi-year funding stream that reaches every child and ensures no child is left behind.

Talking Points

Thank you everyone for coming.

The New York City Labor Movement and its 1.3 million members is proud to join UPK NYC.

New York City's unions will spend the next few months educating our state legislators about why New York City needs to be able to raise taxes on the wealthiest New Yorkers to pay for universal pre-K and afterschool programs.

Nobody disputes the benefits of universal pre-K and afterschool.

According to the National Bureau of Economic Research: Pre-K can reduce the achievement gap by up to 40%.

And the Ounce of Prevention Fund tell us that without a high-quality early childhood intervention, an at-risk child is:

- 25% more likely to drop out of school
- 50% more likely to be placed in special education
- 70% more likely to be arrested for a violent crime

As all-too-many working parents know, the time between when school ends and when parents get home is a time when many parents worry.

According to the Afterschool Alliance: 1 in 4 children is left alone and unsupervised after-school in NYC

- Teenagers left to spend after-school hours—peak window for juvenile crime & violence—out on the streets.

This is not just an educational issue. It's an economic justice issue.

Investing in our children ensures that they have the opportunity to succeed later in life.

And it helps ensure that parents have a safe, affordable, educational environment for their children when they are at work.

This is critical for tens of thousands of working parents.

And that's why we will be making sure our elected officials support this tax.

New York State has promised universal pre-K for 15 years.

But it's never provided the funding needed.

It's critical this funding be a dedicated tax, not money from the general budget.

It's the only way to ensure these programs won't be cut, or take funding from other worthy cause

Well, Mayor de Blasio has provided a stable funding source – a small tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers.

For the cost of a soy latte a day, people making over $500,000 a year can help invest in our children.

Several weeks ago, leaders from the business, philanthropic and nonprofit communities came together and launched UPK NYC.

We're proud to join them to making sure that elected officials in Albany hear us loud and clear and pass this plan.

We can't wait.

Q & A

For any questions about policy or implementation, turn it over to the Mayor. Only answer questions about what labor will do to make this a reality.

Q: Capital NY is reporting that the Governor is going to pay for statewide pre-K. Doesn't that mean this tax is unnecessary?

A: Albany committed to universal pre-k fifteen years ago, yet 15 years later more than fifty thousand NYC kids have no access to full day pre-k and even more are denied access to after school because the funding has never been there to get it done.

Our kids can't rely, year after year, on good budgetary conditions and the right political headwinds in Albany - NYC has a plan that works for NYC, a dedicated funding stream to finally fulfill the decades long Albany promise of UPK. The people of New York want it and Albany should let us get it done.

Q: Isn't this tax dead on arrival in Albany?

A: We are going to make the case that New York should be able to raise its own taxes for this important program. We will make our case to the Governor and the Legislature, in Albany and in the district. We won't stop until it's passed.

Q: Will you be running TV ads?

A: It's a little early to make that decision, isn't it? We're committed to do everything we need to to make this plan a reality. Right now, we're starting with educating our members, the public and our elected officials.

Q: Will you be lobbying in Albany on this?

A: Most emphatically yes.

Q: Why is the labor movement taking such an active position on this?

A: This is an issue that impacts our city as a whole and working men and women in particular. We need to invest in our children. And working parents need to be assured that their children are in a safe, educational and affordable environment while they are working.

Q: Does the labor movement plan to give money to this campaign? (Others will defer this question to you)

A: We fully expect to contribute to the campaign, because we feel so passionately about this issue.

V.      REMARKS

I want to thank the Union Settlement Association and its Executive Director, Dave Nocenti for hosting us.

Since opening its doors in 1895, Union Settlement has brought education, wellness and community-building programs to the people of East Harlem

It serves the community – from the youngest to the oldest – from Head Start to Meals on Wheels

I appreciate your graciousness in hosting us here

And I want to thank the leaders of these unions representing over 1.3 million New Yorkers for joining this movement for universal pre-K and afterschool.

As I have said multiple times, the centerpiece of my campaign — and the centerpiece of my administration’s agenda — is achieving a tax increase on the wealthiest New Yorkers to provide truly Universal Pre-K and after-school programs for every middle-schooler.

The people are on our side.

And the facts are on our side.

We are here today in an example of a high-quality educational facility that could open a new pre-K classroom tomorrow if we had the funding.

This state of the art facility opened last year and serves over 40 children in three Head Start classrooms

But they could serve more

Right down the hall, they have two empty classrooms ready to go.

What’s missing is the funding. Well, we’re working to change that.

A few weeks ago, leaders from business, civil rights, academia, advocacy and the arts launched UPKNYC.

They were joined by the leaders of 25 organizations with deep roots across the 5 boroughs, who will reach their members, their elected officials to press for passage of our plan.

Now they are being joined by leaders of the New York City labor movement – which represents more than 1.3 million working people.

These unions, including the Central Labor Council and the Working Families Party, have signed on to join this campaign.

These unions know how to make an issue resonate in Albany.

For the working men and women of New York, quality pre-K and afterschool is not just about educational opportunity.

It's also an economic justice issue.

We are asking a little more of the wealthy because we know a strong economy is dependent on a thriving school system.

Giving every kid a chance to get their education off on the right foot — from the earliest age — has been shown to lead to greater economic success, healthier lives, and a better chance of breaking the cycle of poverty.

And we are asking a little more of the wealthy because we know that too many working parents don't have somewhere safe and educational for their kids to be when they are at work.

Or they only have access to informal care.

Or they can barely afford the options that are out there.

Well, passing this plan will give peace of mind to working parents — who suffer the anxiety of not knowing whether their child is safe and supervised during those critical hours after the school day ends, but before the workday is done.

I am thankful that today, the men and women of New York's labor movement are committing to:

- educate their members
- talk to their elected officials
- and help make a small tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to pay for universal pre-K and afterschool for middle schoolers a reality.

And now for our friends in the Spanish-speaking press:

Para los hombres y mujeres de Nueva York que trabajan, los programas de pre-kindergarten y extracurriculares de buena calidad no son solo un asunto de oportunidades en la educación.

Son también un asunto de justicia económica.

Doy gracias porque hoy los hombres y mujeres del movimiento laboral de Nueva York están comprometiéndose para ayudar a conseguir un pequeño impuesto a los neoyorquinos más acomodados para hacer realidad el pre-K universal y programas extracurriculares para los estudiantes de intermedia.

VINCENT ALVAREZ TALKING POINTS

Thank you everyone for coming.

The New York City Labor Movement and its 1.3 million members is proud to join UPK NYC.

New York City's unions will spend the next few months educating our state legislators about why New York City needs to be able to raise taxes on the wealthiest New Yorkers to pay for universal pre-K and afterschool programs.

Nobody disputes the benefits of universal pre-K and afterschool.

According to the National Bureau of Economic Research: Pre-K can reduce the achievement gap by up to 40%.

And the Ounce of Prevention Fund tell us that without a high-quality early childhood intervention, an at-risk child is:

- 25% more likely to drop out of school
- 50% more likely to be placed in special education
- 70% more likely to be arrested for a violent crime

As all-too-many working parents know, the time between when school ends and when parents get home is a time when many parents worry.

According to the Afterschool Alliance: 1 in 4 children is left alone and unsupervised after-school in NYC

- Teenagers left to spend after-school hours—peak window for juvenile crime & violence—out on the streets.

This is not just an educational issue. It's an economic justice issue.

Investing in our children ensures that they have the opportunity to succeed later in life.

And it helps ensure that parents have a safe, affordable, educational environment for their children when they are at work.

This is critical for tens of thousands of working parents.

And that's why we will be making sure our elected officials support this tax.

New York State has promised universal pre-K for 15 years.

But it's never provided the funding needed.

It's critical this funding be a dedicated tax, not money from the general budget.

It's the only way to ensure these programs won't be cut, or take funding from other worthy cause

Well, Mayor de Blasio has provided a stable funding source – a small tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers.

For the cost of a soy latte a day, people making over $500,000 a year can help invest in our children.

Several weeks ago, leaders from the business, philanthropic and nonprofit communities came together and launched UPKNYC.

We're proud to join them to making sure that elected officials in Albany hear us loud and clear and pass this plan.

We can't wait.

DE BLASIO Q&A

Q. When do you expect to begin negotiations in Albany?

A. We look forward to beginning negotiations immediately. As I have said before, this plan can't wait.

Q. What if Cuomo offers revenue straight from the State budget—would you turn it down?

A. The dedicated tax we've called for is the way to do this. General budget revenue can be cut, or it can come from other worthy programs. A dedicated tax is the only way to do it.

Q. Given that you can't likely scale up to 100% by September 2014, do you really need the full $530 million this year? Would you take less?

A. Yes. We absolutely need the full amount in year one. Our goal is to begin to mount a massive expansion in both pre-k and after-school that begins in September. As I mentioned, this facility, and many others, have empty classrooms that can be put to work. And other sites will be available. Our working group is mapping out details – but we know a significant number of expansion slots will be converting half day to full day. Many of those already have staff and space. We will also focus on restoring the 30,000 afterschool seats we lost and adding more - so we will use a lot of the funds for ongoing operations right away.

We also know there will be significant one time costs we will occur as we expand the system. Examples may include:

--Expenses to retrofit space

--Expenses on prepaid leases that we would make if they would save taxpayer money down the road

--Expenses to modernize data systems for enrollment and outcomes measurement (technology in programs to allow assessment of progress).

Our working group is mapping out a precise implementation plan but I can say to you confidently if our plan passes we will rapidly bring capacity online in year one and need the full funding to do it.

Q. Will these leaders you named be actively lobbying in Albany?

A. They'll use their sway in Albany. They'll use their sway in the public debate.

Q. Have you spoken to Governor Cuomo about your plan? What has he indicated?

A. I know he shares the goal. He's declared an openness to discuss our funding plan.

Q. Doesn't this tax hike run counter to Cuomo's tax commission proposals to reduce taxes?

A. NYC taxes are different from the State's tax burden. They are two different discussions.

Q. Will you be running any ads or buying airtime?

A. We're focused on the grassroots, and our first push will be through these organizations' memberships and reach and growing our coalition.

Q. Would you consider waiting a year to pass your plan after the elections in Albany?

A. No. Priorities like this cannot wait.

Q. If the State doesn't support you, will you fund this out of the City budget?

A. We are fighting to pass this with NYC tax revenue. We're not trying to infringe on the State budget.

Q. How will you overcome skepticism in the State Senate?

A. Jeff Klein has declared himself an ally. We will mobilize our NYC delegation. And we will reach out to Republicans—including those upstate who in the past have supported NYC's right to tax itself.

Q. Capital NY last night reported that Governor Cuomo will propose his own statewide plan to achieve universal pre-k. In light of this do you still need your tax plan?

A. Albany committed to universal pre-k fifteen years ago, yet 15 years later more than fifty thousand NYC kids have no access to full day pre-k and even more are denied access to after school because the funding has never been there to get it done.

To close this gap will cost 550 million per year in NYC on a sustained ongoing basis. It's not going to get done with one shots or limited grant programs. That's why I've proposed a dedicated way to pay for it that locks in the funding to finally get this done.

We look forward to working with Governor Cuomo and our legislators in Albany to work to achieve this but the bottom line is for it to work we need a dedicated locked in multi-year funding stream that reaches every child and ensures no child is left behind.

Q: Can you get this plan passed when Senator Schumer is objecting to it?

As I understand it sen Schumer declined to weigh in one way or the other and I respect that. I think we're here today showing yet again the tremendous depth of support here in the city for this plan and that support is continuing to grow with more organizations and individuals joining our coalition every day.

ALVAREZ Q&A

For any questions about policy or implementation, turn it over to the Mayor. Only answer questions about what labor will do to make this a reality.

Q: Capital NY is reporting that the Governor is going to pay for statewide pre-K. Doesn't that mean this tax is unnecessary?

A: Albany committed to universal pre-k fifteen years ago, yet 15 years later more than fifty thousand NYC kids have no access to full day pre-k and even more are denied access to after school because the funding has never been there to get it done.

Our kids can't rely, year after year, on good budgetary conditions and the right political headwinds in Albany - NYC has a plan that works for NYC, a dedicated funding stream to finally fulfill the decades-long Albany promise of UPK. It has the overwhelming support of people in NYC and we will work with the Mayor to achieve it in Albany.

Q: Isn't this tax dead on arrival in Albany?

A: We are going to make the case that New York should be able to raise its own taxes for this important program. We will make our case to the Governor and the Legislature, in Albany and in the district. We won't stop until it's passed.

Q: Will you be running TV ads?

A: It's a little early to make that decision, isn't it? We're committed to do everything we need to to make this plan a reality. Right now, we're starting with educating our members, the public and our elected officials.

Q: Will you be lobbying in Albany on this?

A: Most emphatically yes.

Q: Why is the labor movement taking such an active position on this?

A: This is an issue that impacts our city as a whole and working men and women in particular. We need to invest in our children. And working parents need to be assured that their children are in a safe, educational and affordable environment while they are working.

Q: Does the labor movement plan to give money to this campaign? (Others will defer this question to you)

A: We fully expect to contribute to the campaign, because we feel so passionately about this issue.

VI. ATTACHMENTS

Union Settlement Association

Union Settlement Association began in 1895 on East 104th Street in East Harlem.

The 350 employees and the 10,000 residents who participate in its programs work to make East Harlem a strong, supportive and proud community where dreams are born and achieved every day. They're working side-by-side with community members to tackle the issues that are important to the vitality of the neighborhood, and to advocate with them on behalf of all East Harlem residents, and underserved communities across the city, state and nation.

Union Settlement serves 500 children and their families in seven childcare and Head Start centers. Teachers in its pre-school program assist children ages two to five in a stimulating social and educational environment. They operate a Universal Pre-Kindergarten program with Community School District 4/Region 9.

Union Settlement Child Care programs operate from 8AM to 6PM and the Head Start programs operate from 8AM to 4:30PM. Both programs are open year round.

All child care centers and home care providers are licensed by the Department of Health.

They also offer youth programs for 2,000 children and teens.

Youth Services programs include: homework assistance, tutoring, computer instruction, visual and performing arts projects, recreational activities and a summer day camp, employment and educational opportunities for in-school youth, including, tutoring, internships and job skills development.

The centerpiece of Youth at Union is its Education Center. Open weekdays from three to nine p.m. and on Saturdays for special events and activities, the Center serves as a "neighborhood sanctuary" where parents can be sure their children are engaged in constructive, enriching activities.

They also offer adult education, college readiness, HIV, mental health and senior services.

David Nocenti, Executive Director, Union Settlement Association: David became the Executive Director of Union Settlement in January 2009. He has served as a top advisor to three Governors, including as Counsel to Governors David Paterson and Eliot Spitzer from January 2007 through June 2008, as well as Assistant Counsel and First Assistant Counsel to Governor Mario Cuomo from 1990 to 1994. He also served as Counsel to the New York Attorney General and the Queens Borough President and as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in Brooklyn.

-Wanted to call his attention to debate in NY happening now over my pre-k and afterschool plan. As you (Kristof) noted, early education single best tool we have to address inequality, poverty and crime.

-Discuss YOUR plan and the tax debate.

-Very clear choice - $3 per day for wealthy or continuing to lag behind Kansas and allowing tale of two cities to grow.

-Debate is getting national attention – NYC achieving this could have national ramifications.

-Hope he will consider weighing in at some point and taking a close look at our plan.

Offer to put him in touch with JR to follow-up.

Hey -- BdB wants to know if he should reach out to Kristof re: today's "Progress in the War on Poverty" NYT op-ed, since last time he didn't do it. If so could you send over phone or email of Kristof, if you have -- however you think best for BdB to reach him -- and Bdb wants to know what he should say?

"Our children only get one real shot at a great education and it's imperative that they get off to the right start," said Rep. Joe Crowley (D-Queens, the Bronx). "Universal pre-k is a necessary investment for every New York City student to reach their full potential and we owe it to them to make sure there is dedicated, sustainable funding for the program moving forward."

Study after study have shown that high-quality early education and afterschool can make an enormous difference in the lives of young New Yorkers. We owe it to them, and to our future, to pass Mayor de Blasio's plan without delay." - Meng

"Giving our children the education they deserve takes resources, and Mayor de Blasio's plan is the fairest way to do it. Through a small surcharge on the wealthiest New Yorkers, we can finally fund universal high-quality Pre-K and afterschool programs that are proven to help students succeed." - Nadler

"We have known for years about the benefits of high-quality early education and afterschool programming, and for years we have not been able to find the resources to make them a reality for all New York's children. FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: January 30, 2014

CONTACT: press@upkny.org

CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS JOIN UPKNYC, CALL FOR FULL IMPLEMENTATION OF MAYOR DE BLASIO'S TAX AND PRE-K PLAN

Reps. Nydia Velazquez, Grace Meng, Jerrold Nadler, Jose Serrano, Eliot Engel, Joe Crowley & Charlie Rangel Call on State to Pass Plan

Momentum Grows as Progressive Members of Congress Join Business Leaders, National Experts, Labor, Philanthropic, Civic, Non-Profit, Clergy and Academic Leaders

New York, NY – Seven progressive Congressional leaders announced today their support for UPKNYC and called for the full implementation of Mayor de Blasio's universal Pre-K and afterschool proposal, adding more momentum to the campaign to make critical, proven investments in New York's children. Support from the Congressional leaders comes days after the City released a full implementation plan that the New York Times says "makes a persuasive case" and "shows that [de Blasio's] pre-K team has thought this through."

"Mayor de Blasio's proposal is the only way we can afford to make the critical investments in our children that have been promised for so long. We don't need another IOU, or another 'someday' – the Mayor's plan would provide a stable and sufficient source of funding for pre-K and afterschool that can be used right now," said Rep. Jose Serrano (D-Bronx).

"Without the small tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers that Mayor de Blasio has proposed, there is no way to fully fund a true universal Pre-K and afterschool program. Study after study have shown that high-quality early education and afterschool can make an enormous difference in the lives of young New Yorkers. We owe it to them, and to our future, to pass Mayor de Blasio's plan without delay," said Rep. Grace Meng (D-Queens).

"Giving our children the education they deserve will take a real and dedicated revenue stream, as has been proposed by Mayor de Blasio. Through a small surcharge on the wealthiest New York City residents, we can finally fund universal, high-quality Pre-K and afterschool programs that are proven to help students succeed. It is simply the right thing to do, and that's why I've been a supporter of his plan from the outset," said Rep. Jerrold Nadler (D-Manhattan, Brooklyn).

“We have known for years about the benefits of high-quality early education and afterschool programming, and for years we have not been able to find the resources to make them a reality for all New York’s children. Mayor de Blasio’s plan will end that historic injustice through a small, dedicated tax on the most fortunate New Yorkers that will allow us to finally provide these programs to all our students.”

– UNASSIGNED

“Our children only get one real shot at a great education and it’s imperative that they get off to the right start. Universal pre-k is a necessary investment for every New York City student to reach their full potential and we owe it to them to make sure there is dedicated, sustainable funding for the program moving forward,” said Rep.

Joe Crowley (D-Queens, Bronx).

“Studies consistently demonstrate that pre-K education pays long term dividends, helping children succeed later in life. By making free, high-quality, full-day universal pre-kindergarten a priority for New York now, we can ensure all our city’s children – regardless of their background – have the opportunity to flourish, grow and pursue their dreams.” – Rep. Nydia Velazquez (Brooklyn, Queens, Manhattan).

"I applaud Mayor de Blasio's commitment to expanding pre-K and after school programs, which are vital to preparing our youngest children to reach their full potential in life. Education is key to lifting people out of poverty and opening doors for success. I'm proud that Mayor de Blasio has been fighting hard to advance economic opportunities for everyone in New York City; he can count on my support in Congress where I'll continue to help reclaim an America where everyone has a fair shot at achieving a better future." – Rep. Charlie Rangel (D-Manhattan).

“As an early and strong supporter of Universal Pre-K, I recognize the need for a reliable and steady funding mechanism. Universal Pre-K will ensure New York City’s children will have the necessary start to meet tomorrow’s challenges.” – Rep. Eliot Engel (D-Bronx).

Economists and early childhood education experts agree that investments in pre-k and after-school programs provide major economic benefits in the short and long term. A study by the Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank found that early education investments far exceed the return on investment of other economic development projects. Austan Goolsbee, a professor of economics at the University of Chicago's Booth School of Business and former chairman of President Obama's Council of Economic Advisers, argued in the Wall Street Journal that the long-term benefits of investing in early education far exceed the money spent. Investing in children early avoids costly outcomes like incarceration, special education, teen pregnancy, and future low earnings.

In recent weeks, a broad coalition of more than 45 organizations and prominent New Yorkers including business, civic, non-profit, clergy, labor and academic leaders launched UPKNYC: The Campaign for Universal Pre-K and After-School, and released a video showing growing national attention and support for Mayor de Blasio’s plan to raise the income tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to fund high-quality pre-kindergarten for all four-year-olds and after-school programs for all middle school students in New York City who need them.

A recent poll conducted by Quinnipiac University found that a significant majority of New Yorkers support the Mayor's plan. 63% of New York State voters are in favor of raising the income tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to fund early education for all children, including 68% of New York City voters, 55% of voters in the suburbs and 64% of those who live in upstate New York. A recent New York Times/Siena poll of New York City residents found that 72% are supportive of the Mayor's plan.

Austan Goolsbee, a professor of economics at the University of Chicago's Booth School of Business and former chairman of President Obama's Council of Economic Advisers, argued in the Wall Street Journal that the long-term benefits of investing in early education far exceed the money spent. Investing in children early avoids costly outcomes like incarceration, special education, teen pregnancy, and future low earnings.

In recent weeks, a broad coalition of more than 45 organizations and prominent New Yorkers including business, civic, non-profit, clergy, labor and academic leaders launched UPKNYC: The Campaign for Universal Pre-K and After-School, and released a video showing growing national attention and support for Mayor de Blasio's plan to raise the income tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to fund high-quality pre-kindergarten for all four-year-olds and after-school programs for all middle school students in New York City who need them.

A recent poll conducted by Quinnipiac University found that a significant majority of New York City voters – 74% – support the Mayor's plan. A previous Q poll found that 63% statewide voters are in favor of raising the income tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to fund early education for all children, including 68% of New York City voters, 55% of voters in the suburbs and 64% of those who live in upstate New York. A recent New York Times/Siena poll of New York City residents found that 72% are supportive of the Mayor's plan.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: January 30, 2014

CONTACT: press@upknyc.org

CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS JOIN UPKNYC, CALL FOR FULL IMPLEMENTATION OF MAYOR DE BLASIO'S TAX AND PRE-K PLAN

Reps. Nydia Velazquez, Grace Meng, Jerrold Nadler, Jose Serrano, Eliot Engel, Joe Crowley & Charlie Rangel Call on State to Pass Plan

Momentum Grows as Progressive Members of Congress Join Business Leaders, National Experts, Labor, Philanthropic, Civic, Non-Profit, Clergy and Academic Leaders

New York, NY – Seven progressive Congressional leaders announced today their support for UPKNYC and called for the full implementation of Mayor de Blasio's universal Pre-K and afterschool proposal, adding more momentum to the campaign to make critical, proven investments in New York's children. Support from the Congressional leaders comes days after the City released a full implementation plan that the New York Times says "makes a persuasive case" and "shows that [de Blasio's] pre-K team has thought this through."

"Mayor de Blasio's proposal is the only way we can afford to make the critical investments in our children that have been promised for so long. We don't need another IOU, or another 'someday' – the Mayor's plan would provide a stable and sufficient source of funding for pre-K and afterschool that can be used right now," said Rep. Jose Serrano (D-Bronx).

"Without the small tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers that Mayor de Blasio has proposed, there is no way to fully fund a true universal Pre-K and afterschool program. Study after study have shown that high-quality early education and afterschool can make an enormous difference in the lives of young New Yorkers. We owe it to them, and to our future, to pass Mayor de Blasio's plan without delay," said Rep. Grace Meng (D-Queens).

“Giving our children the education they deserve will take a real and dedicated revenue stream, as has been proposed by Mayor de Blasio.

Through a small surcharge on the wealthiest New York City residents, we can finally fund universal, high-quality Pre-K and afterschool programs that are proven to help students succeed. It is simply the right thing to do, and that's why I've been a supporter of his plan from the outset,” said Rep. Jerrold Nadler (D-Manhattan, Brooklyn).

“We have known for years about the benefits of high-quality early education and afterschool programming, and for years we have not been able to find the resources to make them a reality for all New York's children. Mayor de Blasio's plan will end that historic injustice through a small, dedicated tax on the most fortunate New Yorkers that will allow us to finally provide these programs to all our students.” – UNASSIGNED

“Our children only get one real shot at a great education and it's imperative that they get off to the right start. Universal pre-k is a necessary investment for every New York City student to reach their full potential and we owe it to them to make sure there is dedicated, sustainable funding for the program moving forward,” said Rep. Joe Crowley (D-Queens, Bronx).

“Studies consistently demonstrate that pre-K education pays long term dividends, helping children succeed later in life. By making free, high-quality, full-day universal pre-kindergarten a priority for New York now, we can ensure all our city's children – regardless of their background – have the opportunity to flourish, grow and pursue their dreams.” – Rep. Nydia Velazquez (Brooklyn, Queens, Manhattan).

“I applaud Mayor de Blasio's commitment to expanding pre-K and afterschool programs, which are vital to preparing our youngest children to reach their full potential in life. Education is key to lifting people out of poverty and opening doors for success. I'm proud that Mayor de Blasio has been fighting hard to advance economic opportunities for everyone in New York City; he can count on my support in Congress where I'll continue to help reclaim an America where everyone has a fair shot at achieving a better future.” – Rep. Charlie Rangel (D-Manhattan).

“As an early and strong supporter of Universal Pre-K, I recognize the need for a reliable and steady funding mechanism. Universal Pre-K will ensure New York City's children will have the necessary start to meet tomorrow's challenges.” – Rep. Eliot Engel (D-Bronx).

Economists and early childhood education experts agree that investments in pre-k and after-school programs provide major economic benefits in the short and long term. A study by the Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank found that early education investments far exceed the return on investment of other economic development projects. Austan Goolsbee, a professor of economics at the University of Chicago's Booth School of Business and former chairman of President Obama's Council of Economic Advisers, argued in the Wall Street Journal that the long-term benefits of investing in early education far exceed the money spent. Investing in children early avoids costly outcomes like incarceration, special education, teen pregnancy, and future low earnings.

In sorry I wasn't clearer -

1) the only two people speaking against were doing it for personal vendettas against the mayor and everyone knows it. They conferenced education yesterday and only two meaningless members had concerns - I'm not worried about that.

2) defer to Sheriff - not sure we want our own people speaking up now. AMC has his own spies, and we would just be creating targets.

3) the spedulveda thing is more worrying because:

A) no one likes him - and the Latino members dislike him

B) if he is giving the impression this is our bill, it needs to have support

Do you know if the Mayor's clergy breakfast with Sharpton next week is going to be open to press?

I know it's lightyears away, but we are figuring out our UPK press plan on it and it would be useful to know if you had already decided.

Thanks.

Hi all,

Possible to reschedule this call for tomorrow?

Jonathan could do 10-12 or 2:30 then.

Thank you,

+ PR. My rec on background:

UPK NYC is an independent effort organized by civic, business, non-profit, labor leaders and prominent New Yorkers to support the Mayor's plan for pre-k and afterschool.

Similar to past Mayor's involvement in campaigns like Mayor's Against Illegal Guns, he is supportive of it and involved in helping to recruit supporters to the issue.

Re: her q on city hall point person – I think fine to say Emma as we have repeatedly said in public space she is point on pre-k.

Hi Jen – wanted to offer you an exclusive on the next phase of the UPK NYC campaign to pass Mayor de Blasio's pre-k and after-school plan.

Starting tomorrow, the UPK NYC campaign will launch extensive online and grassroots campaign to recruit tens of thousands of UPK activists to mobilize as budget discussions heat up in Albany.

Tomorrow morning, hundreds of volunteers will be at subway stops in all five boroughs, handing out literature and signing up supporters. And dozens of organizations will email hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers, urging them to become UPK activists.

The campaign will include talking to New Yorkers at subway stops, at their doors, at house parties and at town halls throughout the City. Additionally, the campaign will rely on online organizing methods perfected on BDB's campaign for Mayor.

As budget discussion heat up, organizers will mobilize activists to reach out to elected officials throughout the state via in-district and Albany lobby visits, letters and phone calls. The goal is to make sure elected officials see that 70 percent of New Yorkers want to get this done now.

Let me know if you want this piece exclusively for a story to run tomorrow AM, and what you'd need to make it happen.

Thanks,

Emma

CONFIDENTIAL ATTORNEY WORK PRODUCT ATTORNEY-CLIENT COMMUNICATION

TO: BILL HYERS
FROM: LAURENCE LAUFER
DATE: DECEMBER 6, 2013
RE: 501(C)(4) ORGANIZATION

Question Presented

May a IRC 501(c)(4) social welfare organization be established to engage in certain lobbying activities on behalf of the City of New York?

Brief Answer

Yes. As discussed below, the Mayor may play a role in fundraising for such an organization. This memorandum also addresses issues concerning the organization's expenditures under New York City campaign finance law.

Factual and Legal Analysis

You have asked whether a IRS 501(c)(4) social welfare organization may be organized to engage in grassroots lobbying to persuade the State Legislature to adopt taxes to fund universal pre-K education in the City of New York, as advocated by Mayor-Elect de Blasio. This memorandum assumes that Mayor de Blasio will have a leadership role in the organization, including by assisting in raising funds for the organization. The organization would be formed in January 2014, or earlier, and would remain active throughout the 2014 State legislative session, at least until its goals are achieved. The issue advertising may or may not include references to and communications by Mayor de Blasio.<sup>1</sup>

IRC 501(c)(4) Organizations

Under Internal Revenue Code §501(c)(4), a non-for-profit corporation may be established to promote social welfare and engage in unlimited lobbying activities for that purpose. A 501(c)(4) organization may not engage in political campaign activity as its primary activity.<sup>2</sup> See 26 C.F.R. 1.501(c)(4)-1(a)(2)(ii).

New York Lobbying Law

Under the State Lobbying Law (Legislative Law §§1, et seq.), the Mayor is exempt from treatment as a lobbyist and the City of New York files lobbying reports with the Joint Commission on Public Ethics (JCOPE) as a public corporation. Legislative Law §§1-c(a); 1-e; 1-i. If it hires or retains lobbyists whose lobbying activities<sup>3</sup> meet the relevant financial thresholds, the 501(c)(4), as a separate not-for-profit organization, must also register and file

<sup>1</sup> Please note that this initial analysis does not address hypotheticals in which the organization engages in grass roots lobbying on additional issues or at other levels of government, or after calendar year 2014.

<sup>2</sup> Please note that on November 26, 2013, the IRS and Treasury issued proposed guidance that would limit the permissible political activities of 501(c)(4) groups. The proposed guidance is available at <http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2013-11-29/pdf/2013-28492.pdf>.

reports as a lobbyist, lobbying-client, or both. See Legislative Law §§1-e; 1-h; 1-j. In all likelihood, the 501(c)(4) would be subject to JCOPE's source of funding disclosure requirements. See Legislative Law §1-h(c)(4).

The Bloomberg Precedent

Mayor Bloomberg serves as co-chairman of Mayors Against Illegal Guns. Its lobbying wing, the Mayors Against Illegal Guns Action Fund is a Delaware corporation exempt from taxation under IRC 501(c)(4). In 2010 this 501(c)(4) reported grassroots lobbying activities to JCOPE on two state bills which coincided with reported lobbying activities by the City of New York on the same two bills.

Fundraising by Mayor

Pursuant to standards set forth in Conflicts of Interest Board Advisory Opinion No. 2008-6 (Dec. 29, 2008) (copy enclosed), elected officials and their designees may solicit and otherwise encourage private contributions to not-for-profit organizations in their official capacity, after a personal determination by the elected official that the not-for-profit's work supports the mission of his City office.<sup>4</sup> Among the relevant restrictions is that the elected official may not raise funds in his official capacity if he has a personal "association" with the recipient organization or its staff. COIB AO 2008-6 at p. 8. Charter §2601(5) defines those associated with the public servant to include:

a spouse, domestic partner, child, parent or sibling; a person with whom the public servant has a business or other financial relationship.

Read broadly, Charter §2601(5) would appear to also preclude the Mayor raising funds in his official capacity for a not-for-profit organization in which he holds a position. See also Charter §2601(12), (18) (defining “position” to include “officer, director, trustee, employee, or any management position, or as an attorney, agent, broker, or consultant”). Also, again under a broad reading, preclusion of Mayoral fundraising in an official capacity may also arise if the organization retained or employed persons and entities who are also retained or employed by the Mayor’s authorized campaign committee.<sup>5</sup>

New York City Campaign Finance Board

Because the not-for-profit organization will not be a political committee within the meaning of New York State or City law, the only CFB compliance question is whether the organization’s activities could be treated as in-kind contributions to the Mayor’s re-election campaign. The following guidance is gleaned from CFB advisory opinions:

- CFB AO 1993-9 (Sept. 9, 1993): A private entity’s public service campaign materials identifying the mayor will result in an in-kind contribution to the mayor’s re-election campaign if these involve the solicitation of campaign contributions or express advocacy. Otherwise, the CFB will look at multiple factors in assessing whether the expenditures were “made in connection with” the election, including purpose, expression of the public official’s on public policy or other issues in an election campaign, timing, targeting to City electorate, and public official control over the materials.
- Numerous CFB opinions treat spending by political committees as presumptively campaign-related. See, e.g., CFB AO 1999-10 (Aug. 5, 1999). The CFB has not applied that presumption to any other kind of entity, such as a social welfare organization.

- CFB AO 2001-8 (July 11, 2008): the tax exempt status of the spending entity (in this instance the Brennan Center, a 501(c)(3) organization) is not dispositive for determining that an in-kind contribution has not been made.
- CFB AO 2007-6 (Dec. 21, 2007): candidates may not use campaign funds for public purpose advertisements “for which governmental resources may be used.” The necessary implication is that such advertisements are not proper campaign expenditures and therefore could not be in-kind contributions. For example, the Charter does not prohibit public servant-candidates appearing in public communications paid for by governmental funds prior to January 1 of the election year, so long as the communication does not include an electioneering message. See Charter §1136.1 (2)(a), (c) (enforced by the CFB).

To the extent that private funds may be donated by a 501(c)(4) organization to pay for advertisements, which may in turn be accepted as a gift to the City, CFB AO 2007-6 may be read to preclude treating this use of the governmental resources generated by the gift as an in-kind contribution. As noted above (at footnote 4), however, using private funds to underwrite the City’s grassroots lobbying campaign may raise additional legal concerns. Further, it is unclear to me that City funds have ever actually been used for grassroots lobbying.

Thus, the preferable approach may be an argument that if 501(c)(4)’s grassroots lobbying expenditures could have been paid for with governmental funds, the expenditures are nevertheless insulated from treatment as in-kind contributions under CFB AO 2007-6. A letter from JCOPE indicating that a public corporation's grassroots lobbying expenditures are reportable under the lobbying law might suffice for this purpose.

Please let us know if you have any follow up questions and if you want us to provide further information or take steps regarding the creation, operation and governmental filings of such a 501(c)(4) organization.

SUMMARY: Elected officials and agency heads, and their designees, may in their official capacities, using City time and resources, solicit and otherwise encourage private contributions to not-for-profit organizations, after a personal determination by the elected official or agency head that the not-for-profit's work supports the mission of his or her City office or agency. Such solicitations must include a statement that a decision whether or not to give will not result in official favor or disfavor. But such public servants may not target for these solicitations any person or firm with a matter pending or about to be pending before their City office or agency, and they may take no such action on behalf of any organization with which they are associated or that would benefit a person or firm with whom or which they are associated. Each City office or agency must file a public report with the Board by May 15 and November 15 of each year disclosing the identity of each not-for-profit organization for which the office or agency sought private contributions in the six-month period ending March 31 and September 30, respectively.

Advisory Opinion No. 2008-6

In Advisory Opinion No. 2003-4 the Board addressed the question of fundraising by City officials for the City itself and for not-for-profit entities closely affiliated with City offices and agencies. But the Board reserved the question of "what other kinds of not-for-profit entities might be permissible beneficiaries of officials' fundraising" (id. at 2 (emphasis added)), preferring to consider that question on a "case-by-case basis," leading to a possible future advisory opinion based on its experience with those cases. On the basis of its experience in the intervening five years, the Board now issues that anticipated opinion.

Background

In Advisory Opinions preceding No. 2003-4, the Board did give some consideration to fundraising by public officials in their official capacities for charitable entities that were not affiliated with the City.<sup>1</sup> In Advisory Opinion No. 91-10 the Board observed that

“[i]t is surely in the City's interest to encourage the voluntary financial support of community groups, educational institutions and charities, inasmuch as their good works help to sustain the life of the City and indeed are indispensable to it.” (Id. at 2.)

The Board noted, however, that official fundraising for such entities could create “an appearance of impropriety” if the official’s action is “perceived to be coercive or provides an inappropriate opportunity for access to such official.” Id. Such an appearance would implicate Charter Section 2604(b)(2), which forbids public servants from engaging in any transaction, or having any private interest, that is in conflict with the proper discharge of their official duties. In order to allay concern for the potential of coercion if elected and high-ranking appointed officials were given full rein to solicit charitable contributions, the Board in Opinion No. 91-10 adopted a distinction between “active” and “passive” fundraising, ruling 1) that elected officials could engage only in passive fundraising (e.g., serving on honorary committees for charitable events), but not in active fundraising, and 2) that high-ranking appointed officials could engage in active fundraising, but only so long as they did not direct their solicitations to those likely to have matters before their City agency.

The “coercion” concern also underlay Advisory Opinion No. 93-15, in which the Board attempted to clarify the distinction between active and passive fundraising. Observing that not all actions that might result in contributions to a charity would be deemed “active,” the Board found the relevant question to be whether “the public servant’s actions would create an appearance that he or she is using the power of public office” to pressure or coerce others to make contributions, or to afford greater access to government to those who made contributions. Id. at 8-9.

In its pre-2003 rulings on official fundraising for charitable entities not affiliated with the City, the Board also expressed a concern regarding the appearance of official “endorsement” of favored beneficiaries over other worthwhile charities competing for scarce philanthropic resources. In Advisory Opinion No. 92-15, for example, the Board determined that an agency head could not serve on the honorary committee for the annual benefit of a not-for-profit entity that had a contract with her agency, ruling that “the combination of her fundraising role with her role in approving and supervising the contract may create an appearance that the not-for-profit entity is receiving preferential treatment.” Opinion No. 92-15 at 1 (emphasis added).

In Opinion No. 2003-4, as noted above, the Board considered in considerable depth City officials’ solicitation of private support for the City itself and for not-for-profit organizations closely affiliated with City offices and agencies. In that opinion, the Board abandoned the distinction between “active” and “passive” fundraising, in favor of a bright line distinction between “targeted” and “untargeted” solicitations – the former consisting of direct appeals such as one-on-one phone calls, meetings, and personal letters to potential donors, the latter of such devices as mass mailings not directed to specific potential donors. Id. at 17. In holding that all untargeted fundraising for the City and its affiliated not-for-profits would be permitted, the Board again evinced its concern over the “coercion” factor:

Where solicitations are not targeted to specific potential donors, there is less danger that any particular person or entity will receive, or be perceived to receive, preferential treatment as a result of a donation. Since no specific individual or business is approached – i.e., all similarly situated individuals or businesses receive the same general request (e.g., through a mass mailing) and are given the same opportunity to donate or decline – the appearance is avoided that any particular individual or entity will receive preferential treatment. The distinction turns not on the “active” nature of the solicitation, but upon the potentially coercive nature of personal, direct solicitations. (Id. at 17-18.)

In addition, the Board also determined that targeted solicitations for the City and its affiliates would be permissible, provided that no official could solicit any person or firm with a matter “pending or about to be pending before the City official or his or her agency, where it is within the legal authority or the duties of the soliciting official to make, affect, or direct the outcome of the matter.” Id. at 20. In the case of both targeted and untargeted solicitations, the Board required that the solicitation must make clear that the decision whether or not to give would result in no official favor or disfavor for the person or entity solicited, and would yield no special access to the official or his or her agency. Finally, the Board required City agencies and offices to report every six months all gifts in excess of $5,000 in aggregate value from a single donor. Id. at 22.

Because Advisory Opinion No. 2003-4 addressed fundraising only for the City itself or for not-for-profits determined to be closely affiliated with the City, the concern regarding possible “endorsement” of particular charities was not present. The Board recognized, however, that when it turned to official fundraising on behalf of not-for-profit entities that are not affiliated with the City, both the coercion and the endorsement concerns would again be implicated.

As anticipated in Opinion No. 2003-4, the Board has, over the past several years, received numerous requests for advice from public servants regarding proposed official fundraising efforts on behalf of charitable entities that could not be considered to be “affiliated” with the City. A sampling of those requests is as follows:

1. An elected official with citywide responsibilities sought to become co-chair of a specific fundraising program for a national not-for-profit organization with a national agenda, and in that capacity to use his City position to solicit funds for that program. The specific program was one that, the elected official determined, would support a major initiative of the official’s City office.
2. Another elected official proposed to participate in his official capacity at a public fundraising event in the City to “kick off” a major fundraising initiative by a charity with a statewide mission. The beneficiaries of the charity’s services included many thousands of residents of the City and of the area served by the elected official.
3. An agency head who sat on the board of directors of a not-for-profit organization dedicated to finding a cure and better treatment for a particular disease – a cause not significantly related to the work of the City agency headed by the official – asked whether it was permissible to raise money for the organization so long as no vendors or contractors of the agency were solicited.

4. Another agency head asked whether he, and two of his deputies, could solicit funds for a national not-for-profit that he had been instrumental in forming, the purpose of which was to engender, on a national level, federal and state policies and funding supportive of initiatives adopted by the official's own City agency. The agency head served on the organization's board, service that he believed was part of his City job.
5. A third agency head asked whether he could consent to the request of his alma mater to begin raising funds for a campus building to be named in his honor; the request did not contemplate that the City official would himself participate in such fundraising.
6. An elected official asked whether charitable foundations could be approached by the official and urged to consider contributing to not-for-profit entities across the City whose annual funding by the City Council had recently been cut due to fiscal constraints.

Discussion

As noted, Opinion No. 2003-4 reserved for a future day the question of what charitable entities, besides City-affiliated not-for-profits, could be the beneficiaries of official fundraising by City public servants. While earlier Board opinions had directed some attention to the question of which City officials could engage in charitable fundraising and by what methods, those opinions had given little attention to the question of which charities could benefit from that activity. This opinion will address all three questions: for whom, by whom, and how.

1. Permissible Beneficiaries of Fundraising

In determining what not-for-profits not “affiliated” with the City may nevertheless be the beneficiaries of official fundraising, the Board has kept in mind both the “endorsement” concern and the fact that it was being asked about public servants’ fundraising in their official capacities – i.e., as part of their City jobs, on City time, and using City resources. Without at all denigrating the Board’s recognition in Advisory Opinion No. 91-10 that “it is in the City's interest to encourage the voluntary financial support of community groups, educational institutions and charities,” it is surely not within the scope of every public servant’s official duties to raise funds for any and every such group, institution, or charity, wherever located and whatever its mission.

Thus, the Board has concluded, first, that the not-for-profit for which funds are sought must have some nexus with the City and its residents. Thus, for example, an arts organization in California or an affordable housing provider in Buffalo will not be permissible beneficiaries of official fundraising by City public servants. This restriction is dictated by the requirement, most specifically enunciated in Board Rules Sections 1-13(a) and (b), that public servants may not use City time or resources for non-City purposes.<sup>2</sup>

Second, the mission of the beneficiary not-for-profit must have some connection with the mission or duties of the office or agency of the soliciting official. For example, while a not-for-profit organization dedicated to increasing affordable housing in the City might well be an appropriate beneficiary of fundraising by, for example, the Commissioners of Housing

<sup>2</sup> This would not preclude City officials, as noted above (footnote 1), from engaging in fundraising efforts on their own time, and without the use of City letterhead or resources, for their alma maters and other favored charities, wherever they may be located, provided that they may not direct solicitations to those who have matters before them at their City agencies.

Preservation and Development and of Homeless Services, it would not be a permissible beneficiary of official fundraising by the Cultural Affairs Commissioner – although the latter could fundraise for a local performing arts group. This restriction is again based on the notion that the activity must bear some relationship to the soliciting official's City responsibilities – and the realization, discussed below (p. 10), that it is often part of City officials' duties to award City contracts and/or to distribute scarce City funding among competing not-for-profits working within their areas of responsibility. Admittedly, this limitation will impose greater restrictions on agency heads with defined areas of responsibility than it will, for example, on the Mayor, the Public Advocate, and City Council Members, whose official responsibilities are defined quite broadly. Nevertheless, even for these elected officials, the not-for-profit in question must have some connection not only with the City itself but also with the responsibilities of the soliciting official. Thus, for example, fundraising by a Borough President for the benefit of a theatre group in another borough would probably not qualify; nor would a Councilmember's solicitation for a community group operating wholly outside his or her district.

Third, even if the not-for-profit provides services in the City and within the portfolio of a given elected official or agency head, such fundraising will not be permissible if the elected official or agency head has a personal "association" with the entity or its staff within the meaning of Charter Section 2601(5).<sup>3</sup> Pursuant to Charter Section 2604(b)(3), any use of a public servant's office to benefit such an "associated" person or entity is strictly prohibited – and fundraising is no exception. Thus, for example, and without limitation, if the soliciting official or her designee serves on the board of a not-for-profit, official fundraising for the benefit of that entity would be barred.<sup>4</sup> Likewise, if a spouse, a sibling, or a business partner of an agency head serves as a charity's executive director or other high-ranking staff member, then that agency head will also be barred from taking official actions seeking support for that charity. In short, if the elected official or agency head has a personal association with a not-for-profit, neither the official nor the agency may solicit support for the not-for-profit. Likewise, even if the elected official or agency head is not personally associated with the not-for-profit, the official may not assign fundraising responsibilities to any subordinate who is so associated.

<sup>3</sup> Charter Section 2601(5) defines those "associated" with a public servant to include "a spouse, domestic partner, child, parent, or sibling; a person with whom the public servant has a business or other financial relationship; and each firm in which the public servant has a present or potential interest."

The Board has considered but rejected imposing additional restrictions on the types of entities for which City officials may seek private funding. For example, the Board considered whether an agency head should be prevented from fundraising on behalf of entities with which his or her agency contracts or, conversely, whether such fundraising should be limited to groups with which an agency already contracts. The Board rejects both limitations. As to the latter, the Board observes that City agencies have limited budgets and priorities, but may identify excellent not-for-profit organizations that they are currently unable to fund. The Board sees no reason why an agency head may not seek private support for such organizations. On the other hand, the City may be contracting with organizations to provide vital services to New York's most needy residents but, especially in difficult economic times when these services may in fact be most needed, these organizations may be experiencing shortfalls in both public and private funding. The Board can find no basis in Chapter 68 for concluding that City officials may not seek private support for the very organizations that, as part of their official duties, they have identified as worthy of receiving public funding were it available.

With regard to the “endorsement” concern, the Board has, for similar reasons, concluded that permitting officials to seek funding for given not-for-profit organizations within their areas of responsibility does not impermissibly favor such organizations over those not so supported. In reaching this conclusion, the Board does not reject prior decisions, including Opinion No. 92-15, discussed above, that expressed such an “endorsement” concern. Those opinions were summarized in Advisory Opinion No. 2000-3, which permitted Police Commissioner Safir to author a letter that would serve as an introduction to a book being published to raise funds for the Police Museum, a not-for-profit entity not affiliated with the City. In Opinion No. 2000-3, the Board noted that its earlier decisions, though generally prohibiting official endorsement of such enterprises as books or films, nevertheless admitted of circumstances where such an endorsement would be appropriate, particularly where “the City’s interest [is] the clear determinant for the endorsement.” Advisory Opinion No. 95-2 at 4. Where such a “City interest” can be identified, permitting officials to make distinctions with regard to private fundraising does not allow for “favoritism” among competing not-for-profit entities any more than when they are required by their official duties to make such choices in designating specific not-for-profits for public budget support (see 9 Rules of the City of New York Section 1-02(e)). In addition, elected officials and agency heads regularly decide, consistent with the Board’s Valuable Gift Rule, Section 1-01, which invitations to charitable fundraising events to accept, and elected and high-ranking officials may decide to which not-for-profit organizations they will provide congratulatory letters to be included in the organization's fundraising materials (see Advisory Opinion No. 98-14).

The Board sees no merit in a rule that would require City officials to support all City charities or to support none. Indeed, the Board could enunciate no selection criteria beyond those outlined above (nexus to the official's office or agency and no disqualifying personal interest) that would be both consistent with Chapter 68 and not so general as to be ultimately meaningless. Elected and appointed officials are selected for, among other things, their good judgment, and the Board finds no basis in Chapter 68 to limit the discretion of these officials as to their official charitable fundraising if they are exercising discretion within their defined areas of responsibility, and if they are barred (as they always are) from furthering their own or their associates' personal interests. The Board is satisfied that the protections afforded by, for example, the City's comprehensive procurement regulations, as well as the ultimate protection afforded in the ballot box, are, in the language of Opinion No. 95-2, sufficient "safeguards...to protect against the appearance that some private organizations are receiving preferential treatment at the expense of other, similarly situated organizations." Id. at 4.

2. Who May Engage in Fundraising

The Board next determines that official charitable fundraising by City officials may be undertaken only by elected officials and agency heads, or by their specified designees, and only after a personal determination by the elected official or agency head of which not-for-profits will be supported. Elected officials and agency heads are in the best position to make the determinations as to which not-for-profits qualify under the criteria set forth above, and while they may delegate the actual solicitations, they themselves must make the determination that the work of the not-for-profit in question supports the mission of their City office or agency, so that it is a permissible beneficiary of its official fundraising. Unless those judgments are reposed in high-level officials, it would leave virtually any City employee free to use City time and resources for the benefit of favored private charities, with the attendant risks of misuse of that time and resources, as well as undirected judgments about which entities should receive the support of City fundraising efforts.

3. How Fundraising May Be Conducted

Finally, the Board concludes that official solicitations for “unaffiliated” not-for-profits should comply in all respects with the procedures and limitations for fundraising on behalf of the City and City-affiliated entities, as set forth in Opinion No. 2003-4. As noted above, these procedures were, in the main, designed to avoid the appearance of coercion. Thus, the Board determines that untargeted solicitations for unaffiliated not-for-profits will be permissible, as well as those targeted solicitations not made to those persons or firms with matters pending or about to be pending before the office or agency of the soliciting official. Further, as required in Opinion No. 2003-4, all such solicitations must contain an explicit statement that a decision to give or not give will have no impact on any official action and will likewise have no impact on access to City government officials.

Opinion No. 2003-4 also contained a requirement that agencies report to the Board, every six months, a list of all contributions over $5,000 from private sector sources received by the agency or its affiliated not-for-profits.<sup>5</sup> The Board believes that a similar reporting requirement with respect to fundraising for unaffiliated entities would help ensure that the restrictions set forth in this Opinion are followed. However, the Board realizes that City officials are not in a position to know what contributions may have been received by unaffiliated entities as a result of their fundraising efforts, and that it would place an unfair burden on the recipient entities to keep track of and report such contributions. Beyond that, requiring such reporting might have the undesired effect of increasing the appearance of coercion that the Board's restrictions are designed to minimize. Accordingly, in the case of unaffiliated entities, the Board will require agency heads and elected officials to report to the Board every six months only the identities of those not-for-profit organizations for which the office or agency sought private support.<sup>6</sup>

4. Dispositions of Requests for Advice

To illustrate the application of the foregoing determinations to specific cases, we now return to the six individual requests for advice described above. In response to those requests, the Board advised as follows:

1. The elected official with citywide responsibilities was permitted to become co-chair of a fundraising program of a national not-for-profit organization, and to use his City position to solicit funds for that program, because the specific program

<sup>5</sup> The Board emphasizes that the instant opinion concerning not-for-profits not affiliated with the City in no way relieves City officials from their responsibilities set forth in Opinion No. 2003-4 concerning City-affiliated entities, including, without limitation, the officials' responsibilities to pre-clear with the Board their fundraising for such entities and to make the above-referenced reports of contributions.

<sup>6</sup> The reporting cycle will be the same as provided for in Opinion No. 2003-4—no later than May 15 and November 15, for the six month periods ending March 31 and September 30, respectively. The Board will make such reports public.

was one that the elected official had determined, within the scope of his official duties, would support a major initiative of his City office.

2. Similarly, the elected official who proposed to participate in his official capacity at a public fundraising event in the City to “kick off” a major fundraising initiative by a charity was permitted to do so, because the beneficiaries of the charity’s services included many thousands of residents of the City and of the area served by the elected official.
3. An agency head, as well as two of his deputies, were permitted to solicit funds for a national not-for-profit, based on the agency head’s determination that the organization furthered, on a national level, initiatives adopted by the official’s own City agency; the agency head’s service on the organization’s board was determined to fall within the ex officio exception (see footnote 4, supra), because he served on the board as part of his City job. However, the agency head was expressly cautioned that – as required by Advisory Opinion No. 2003-4 – no solicitations could be directed to any person or firm with a matter pending or about to be pending before him or his agency.
4. In contrast, the agency head who sat on the board of directors of a not-for-profit organization dedicated to finding a cure and better treatment for a particular disease was advised that she could not fundraise for that organization in her official capacity – both because the organization’s mission was not significantly related to the work of the City agency headed by the official and because she sat on its board in her personal capacity (i.e., not ex officio). However, she was free to raise money for the organization in her personal capacity – i.e., without using City time or resources – so long as no vendors, contractors, or employees of the agency were solicited.<sup>7</sup>

5. The agency head who asked whether he could consent to his alma mater raising funds for a campus building to be named in his honor was advised that he could, so long as (a) he did not himself participate in such fundraising while he remained in office; (b) no vendors or contractors of his agency would be approached for donations; and (c) the City official would not be told who had made donations.
6. The elected official was permitted to urge charitable foundations to consider contributions to not-for-profit entities across the City whose annual funding by the City Council had recently been cut due to fiscal constraints, so long as no distinctions were made among beneficiaries falling into that category (other than sorting such entities according to fields of charitable endeavors supported by each foundation). The Board concluded that, unlike an agency head making determinations among not-for-profits within his or her area of responsibility, it was not within the elected official's City duties to make such distinctions, and doing so would thus raise the "endorsement" concern.

<sup>7</sup> A recent Board enforcement disposition reinforced this prohibition, also noted herein at footnote 1, against using one City's position for the benefit of an entity with which one has a personal association within the meaning of Charter Section 2601(5). See COIB v. Cosgrave, COIB Case No. 2007-290 (2008), where the Board issued a public warning letter to an agency head for providing a list that included the representatives of firms with present and potential business before his agency to an out-of-state not-for-profit on whose board he served in order that these individuals might be invited to a fundraising event of the not-for-profit.

Conclusion

Elected officials and agency heads, and their designees, may in their official capacities, using City time and resources, solicit and otherwise encourage private contributions to not-for-profit organizations, after a personal determination by the elected official or agency head that the not-for-profit's work supports the mission of their City office or agency. Such solicitations must include a statement that a decision whether or not to give will not result in official favor or disfavor. But they may not target for these solicitations any person or firm with a matter pending or about to be pending before their City office or agency, and they may take no such action on behalf of any organization with which they are associated or that would benefit a person or firm with whom or which they are associated. Each City office or agency must file a public report with the Board by May 15 and November 15 of each year disclosing the identity of each not-for-profit organization for which the office or agency sought private contributions in the six-month period ending March 31 and September 30.

Access to high quality early childhood education and after-school programs matters.

It lifts up all our children and starts them on the road to success. And it is a lifeline to working moms – and all parents – who are struggling to balance work and family.

Bill and I are lucky. We were able to get Dante and Chiara in good pre-k programs and good schools, and send our daughter to college.

All children, and all families, deserve the same chance at success. But that is not what we see happening today.

In our city, nearly 50,000 kids who should get full-day pre-K don't. And after-school programs have been cut aggressively over the past five years – a loss of 30,000 seats since 2008.

New York City has a plan to change that, by funding universal pre-kindergarten and expanded after-school programs with a small tax increase on the most fortunate among us.

Under New York City's UPK plan, all four-year olds would have access to truly universal pre-k for the first time in New York City's history.

These high-quality programs are proven to increase cognition, boost scores and build fundamental skills that put children on an upward educational path.

New York City's plan would also provide after-school programs for all middle school students, adding new programs between 3pm and 6pm in academics, culture and athletics.

The middle school years are a period when parents' involvement in education often declines, and kids need to be kept off the streets, in the classrooms, and out of harm's way.

To truly invest in our children, it is crucial that we have a dedicated, stable way to pay for these programs.

Albany has promised universal pre-k since 1997 BUT funding commitments haven't materialized

Our kids can't rely, year after year, on good budgetary conditions and the right political headwinds in Albany.

That's why the City of New York is calling for a five-year increase in NYC income tax on earners over $500,000.

This plan is smart, and it's fair. It has the overwhelming support of more than 70% of New Yorkers.

In fact, many of the people who would be affected by the tax believe this is a small price to pay to make these critical investments in the next generation of New Yorkers.

As all mothers know, raising kids is hard enough without having to worry about whether you can afford to provide them with the educational opportunities they deserve.

Let's give all NYC mothers, children, and hard-working families the chance to succeed. Let's pass New York City's plan.

My suggestion is that we release paper tomorrow and then do a follow-up event to announce new names as soon as we can.

I worry that Friday will still be funky snow-wise, and Monday is a holiday/Caucus weekend. Neither of which is insurmountable, but they do complicate things.

someone should reach out to Stephanie Miner and get her on board to support the de Blasio plan. We had her interested in December and also Sheehan, but we were asked to stand down so we did. These mayors could have been recruited to come out earlier in support of the Mayor's plan and still should be asked.

Hi there..we are working on a mass push to bring the wives of preachers and prominent female clergy members into the push for UPK. Rev. Elaine Flake, wife of Rev. Floyd Flake (one of biggest New York preachers) is looking to get an information packet asap. Can you help me put something together for her? She wants to help us organize other preacher's wives but first needs the intel. She will in turn help us put together a plan but we should lock in a date to have an event hosted by the First Lady at Gracie with Preacher's wives/Female clergy.
Emma Wolfe: Have any prominent female clergy members been involved during the campaign that we should be doing outreach to? Thanks

READY TO LAUNCH

The City can scale up high-quality, full-day UPK very quickly, through a combination of new seats and conversions and upgrades of existing seats.

	SEPTEMBER 2014 (2014-2015)	SEPTEMBER 2015 (2015-2016)
TOTAL FULL-DAY HIGH-QUALITY PRE-K SEATS	55,804	73,250 <sup>3</sup>
New seats	11,880	1,965
Converted and upgraded seats <sup>1</sup>	43,924	15,481
COST OF UPK NYC PLAN<sup>2</sup>	$340 million	$340 million
Start-up infrastructure, expansion and quality upgrades	$97 million	$6 million
Program costs	$243 million	$334 million

Notes:

1. Includes converting 11,760 existing half-day seats to full-day and bringing all 32,164 existing full-day seats up to quality standards.
2. Building a full-day pre-k system will cost an average of $10,239 per child. The cost per child required to build a high quality model in New York City is roughly comparable to quality programs outside of New York.
3. Includes 55,804 high-quality, full-day pre-K seats created in 2014-2015.

TOGETHER WE CAN MAKE FULL-DAY PRE-K & AFTER-SCHOOL PROGRAMS A REALITY.

IT'S TIME.

FUNDING CHOICES: TWO PLANS FOR PRE-KINDERGARTEN & AFTER-SCHOOL

PRE-K	THE UPKNYC PLAN	CURRENT STATE PROPOSAL
How much new money per year would be available for pre-K?	$341.6 million, citywide	$100 million in the 1st year statewide
How much money per student are the plans assuming?	$10,239	Not specified
How many full-day seats would the plans create?	73,250	Not specified
How would each plan be paid for?	Dedicated, stable progressive tax on wealthy NYC residents	Existing money within the budget
AFTER-SCHOOL	THE UPKNYC PLAN	CURRENT STATE PROPOSAL
How much money per year would be available for after-school?	$190 million per year for NYC	$0 for the first year, $160 million for the 2nd year, $200 million thereafter for statewide
How much money per student are the plans assuming?	$1,600 per child	Not specified
How many new after-school seats would the plans create?	Universal: 120,000 children	Not specified
How would each plan be paid for?	Dedicated, stable progressive tax on wealthy NYC residents	Projected revenue from tax on casinos that still have to be built

t @upknyc

ABOUT THE PLAN: TRULY UNIVERSAL PRE-K AND AFTER-SCHOOL

Under New York City's plan, all four-year olds would have access to truly Universal Pre-K for the first time in New York City's history. This would close a gap of 53,767 children who currently receive inadequate part-time Pre-K, or no Pre-K at all and serve more than 73,000 4-year olds at full implementation. These high-quality programs are proven to increase cognition, boost scores and build fundamental skills that put children on an upward educational path.

New York City's plan would also aggressively expand after-school learning opportunities for nearly 120,000 middle school students, adding new programs between 3pm and 6pm in academics, culture and athletics. Middle school is a critical period when parents' involvement in education declines and kids need to be kept off the streets and out of harm's way.

HOW IT'S FUNDED AND WHY

The City of New York is calling for a five-year increase in the NYC income tax on earners over $500,000 from 3.876% to 4.41%, which would yield approximately $530 million in new revenue each year. The past three New York City mayors have won approval from Albany to raise local taxes for priority issues – this tax increase would be even smaller.

Albany has promised universal pre-k since 1997, but funding commitments haven't materialized and tens of thousands of New York City children are left behind. New York City should have home rule authority to raise its own taxes, to provide a dedicated funding source guarantees program stability.

PRE-K & AFTER-SCHOOL: CRITICAL INVESTMENTS IN OUR FUTURE

Study after study shows pre-K and after-school are key to improving graduation rates and reducing the achievement gap:

- Kids who receive early education are 20% more likely to graduate high school and 20% more likely to work their way out of poverty.
- According to the National Bureau of Economic Research, pre-k can reduce the achievement gap by up to 40%.
- And the Ounce of Prevention Fund tells us that without a high-quality early childhood intervention, an at-risk child is: 25% more likely to drop out of school, 50% more likely to be placed in special education and 70% more likely to be arrested for a violent crime.

According to the Afterschool Alliance, 1 in 4 children is left alone and unsupervised after-school in NYC. That means teenagers left to spend after-school hours—the peak window for juvenile crime & violence—out on the streets.

Research on high quality after-school programs has found that children who participate have improved attendance, behavior, coursework, and test scores.

HOW TO TALK ABOUT THE UPK NYC PLAN

CORE MESSAGE:

New York City's plan to fund universal pre-kindergarten and expanded after-school programs with a small tax increase on the most fortunate New Yorkers is the right investment in our children and our future.

New York City's plan is fair, it's smart and it's the only one with the dedicated funding stream that will guarantee all children access to pre-K and after-school. We've been waiting on Albany for universal pre-k since 1997 – let New York City do it now.

WHAT ARE WE CALLING FOR?

- Under New York City's UPK plan, all four-year olds would have access to truly Universal Pre-K for the first time in New York City's history.
  - This would close a gap of 53,767 children who currently receive inadequate part-time Pre-K or no Pre-K at all, and serve more than 73,000 4-year olds at full implementation.
  - These high-quality programs are proven to increase cognition, boost scores and build fundamental skills that put children on an upward educational path.
- The plan would also provide after-school programs for nearly 120,000 middle school students.
  - This proposal would add new programs between 3pm and 6pm in academics, culture and athletics.
  - The middle school years are a period when parents' involvement in education declines and kids need to be kept off the streets and out of harm's way.

HOW IS THE PLAN FUNDED?

- The City of New York is calling for a five-year increase in NYC income tax on earners over $500,000 from 3.876% to 4.41%, which would yield approximately $530 million in new revenue each year.

- Many of the people who would be affected by the tax believe this is a small price to pay to make these critical investments in the next generation of New Yorkers.
- The past three New York City mayors have won approval from Albany to raise local taxes for priority issues. This tax increase would be even smaller.
  - A similar surcharge implemented between 2003 and 2005 raised rates on earners over $150,000 to 4.46%.
  - The 4.46% rate was also the top bracket for the surcharge implemented between 1991 and 1998 to finance the Safe Streets, Safe City initiative.

WHY DO WE NEED THE TAX?

- Albany has promised universal pre-k since 1997 BUT funding commitments haven't materialized
- More than fifty thousand NYC kids have no access to full day pre-k and even more are denied access to after-school because the funding has never been there to get it done.
- Our kids can't rely, year after year, on good budgetary conditions and the right political headwinds in Albany. NYC has a plan that works for NYC, a dedicated funding stream to finally fulfill the decades-long Albany promise of UPK
- Without a dedicated funding stream, the money might disappear the next time the budget surplus disappears.
- In New York City, we need the tax plan in order to generate dedicated resources for a full and secure investment in both universal pre-k and after-school programs.
- New York City's plan has the overwhelming support of people in NYC and we will work with the Mayor to achieve it in Albany

WHY ARE PRE-K & AFTERSCHOOL PROGRAMS SO IMPORTANT?

- New York City's graduation rate was just 60% in June 2012
- Pre-K and after-school programs are ways we can improve graduation rates and reduce the achievement gap
  - Kids who receive early education are:

- 20% more likely to graduate high school
- 20% more likely to work their way out of poverty
- According to the National Bureau of Economic Research, pre-k can reduce the achievement gap by up to 40%
- And the Ounce of Prevention Fund tells us that without a high-quality early childhood intervention, an at-risk child is:
  - 25% more likely to drop out of school
  - 50% more likely to be placed in special education
  - 70% more likely to be arrested for a violent crime
- According to the Afterschool Alliance, 1 in 4 children is left alone and unsupervised after-school in NYC.
  - That means teenagers left to spend after-school hours—the peak window for juvenile crime & violence—out on the streets
  - Research on high quality after-school programs has found that children who participate have improved attendance, behavior, coursework, and test scores.

Hi there..we are working on a mass push to bring the wives of preachers and prominent female clergy members into the push for UPK. Rev. Elaine Flake, wife of Rev. Floyd Flake (one of the biggest New York preachers) is looking to get an information packet asap. Can you help me put something together for her? She wants to help us organize other preacher's wives but first needs the intel. She will in turn help us put together a plan but we should lock in a date to have an event hosted by the First Lady at Gracie with Preacher's wives/Female clergy.
Emma Wolfe: Have any prominent female clergy members been involved during the campaign that we should be doing outreach to? Thanks pls let me know if there are any flags:

On Tuesday, more than 1,500 New Yorkers of all ages and from all five boroughs went to Albany to support New York City's plan for true universal pre-K and after-school programs for middle schools.

Next week, I'm going back to Albany with women leaders to make sure Albany knows how important early education and after-school are for our kids. And I need your help. In fact, I may need you to come with me.

Click here to send me a video, picture or letter about why you think all children deserve access to high quality pre-school and afterschool, and we'll invite one of you who write in to join me next week.

Study after study shows how important high-quality Pre-K and after-school can be for our kids. These programs give young learners the skills that help them achieve throughout their school careers and beyond.

New York City has proposed paying for these critical investments by asking the wealthiest New Yorkers to pay a little bit more in taxes. But we need Albany's approval. That's why I am going up to our capital next week, and why I want one of you to come with me.

If you want to come, click here to send me a video, picture or letter (be creative!), about what Pre-K and after-school mean to you.

I can't wait to see your responses!

Chirlane McCray
First Lady of New York City

Chirlane had concerns from first one that UPK is written in different ways. If hyphen and capitalized, keep consistent, including PS

And I thought one other edit.

And weren't we taking out women leaders line in graph 2?

Stephanie - Thank you for your help here. I know it's a challenge keeping all parts moving and we do appreciate your help here.

-Hirokazu Yoshikawa, Ph.D. Steinhardt School of Culture, Education and Human Development

-Jeffrey Sachs, Columbia University Earth Institute
-Austan Gollisbee, University of Chicago
-Matthew Daus, CUNY

Not sure I have much more for you / understand what else you want. Call me if you want to discuss.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: December 20, 2013

CONTACT: press@upkny.org

UPKNYC RELEASES NEW VIDEO: "NATIONAL EXPERTS AGREE"

Former Treasury Secretary Summers, Education Secretary Arne Duncan, Morning Joe's Mika Brzezinski Support de Blasio Tax and Pre-K Plan

New York, NY – A day after a broad coalition of more than 35 organizations and prominent New Yorkers including business, civic, non-profit, clergy, and academic leaders launched UPKNYC: The Campaign for Universal Pre-K and After-School, the campaign released a video showing growing national attention and support for Mayor-Elect de Blasio's plan to raise the income tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to fund high-quality pre-kindergarten for all four-year-olds and after-school programs for all middle school students in New York City who need them.

The video demonstrates growing momentum for the plan, featuring statements of support from former US Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers, US Secretary of Education Arne Duncan and Morning Joe's Mika Brzezinski.

In it Summers praises the plan as "a good, powerful and important idea," and Duncan calls the plan important "for the next 20 or 30 [years]" and promises that "whatever we can do to be supportive of the Mayor-elect's efforts, we want to try and do it."

Watch it here.

A recent poll conducted by Quinnipiac University found that a significant majority of New Yorkers support the Mayor-Elect's plan. 63% of New York State voters are in favor of raising the income tax on the wealthiest New Yorkers to fund early education for all children, including 68% of New York City voters, 55% of voters in the suburbs and 64% of those who live in upstate New York. A recent New York Times/Siena poll of New York City residents found that 72% are supportive of the Mayor-Elect's plan.

Hi Lindsay,

Following up on this request from the Education Alliance about the opening of the Manny Cantor Center on the Lower East Side (attached and pasted below). The center was recently featured in this NYT column as embodying BdB vision of NYC: <http://nyti.ms/NK6Kj8>.

Know it's a long shot but they're a great group, solid board:

March 19, 2014

Honorable Bill de Blasio
Mayor, City of New York
City Hall
New York, NY 10007

Dear Mayor de Blasio:

On behalf of the board, staff, and clients of the Educational Alliance, I am writing to personally invite you to play a lead role in the Ribbon Cutting for our Manny Cantor Center, the Lower East Side's new community and cultural center.

The Manny Cantor Center is a living laboratory of the universal Jewish values of inclusion, diversity, and community and your presence and participation on this important day would mean a great deal to all of us as we begin a new chapter in the 125 years we have been serving the vibrantly diverse community on the Lower East Side.

The Ribbon Cutting is set for Thursday, April 10, 2014 with the program beginning at 5:00 PM. You would be joined onstage by other elected officials, Educational Alliance Board and staff leadership, and several of the clients we serve who take part in the many innovative, high quality programs and services we provide to New Yorkers of all ages, backgrounds, and income levels. Below are more details about the event:

Thursday, April 10, 2014

197 East Broadway (at Jefferson Street), New York City

4:30 pm: Public Art Installation Opening in our Jewish Communal Fund Gallery

5:00 pm: Program to begin promptly in our 6th Floor Community Space

6:00 pm: Reception on 6th Floor

We will follow up with your scheduling office to learn more about the possibility of your participation at this important event. Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

Hey Chloe,

Sorry to bombard this week, but this one's special.

At the suggestion of Commissioner Bermudez, a former public defender and law professor named Lily Shapiro has applied to serve as a Senior Policy Adviser at Probation. I am not sure if City Hall has any role at the point a Commissioner is into someone – but in case it comes back around – wanted to offer strong rec. She went to NYU Law and graduated two years before me, was at Bronx Defenders for 6 years and is now a prof at NYU Law. She's super smart and passionate about criminal justice reform, leader, team player, creative.

Her professional experience makes her really well qualified to appreciate the challenges and opportunities presented by the sea change that is occurring in how we treat kids accused of committing crimes. She represented the diverse client populations served by the DOP for years, at the Bronx Defenders, and worked with a variety of community-based organizations around the city to provide her clients with holistic services. As a prof at NYU, Lily has researched issues related to adult prosecution of youth based in light of scientific advancements in the understanding of adolescent brain development, and engaged nationally with scholars, strategists, and policy makers about the criminal and juvenile justice systems. In short, she's a star.

Again I think the Commissioner really digs her as she asked her to apply – but if this comes up to the City Hall level – wanted to make sure she was on your radar.

Thanks. Have a great weekend.

PART CC

Section 1. The education law is amended by adding a new section 3602-ee to read as follows:

§ 3602-ee. Statewide universal full-day pre-kindergarten program. 1. The purpose of the universal full-day pre-kindergarten program is to incentivize and fund state-of-the-art innovative pre-kindergarten programs and to encourage program creativity through competition.

2. All universal full-day pre-kindergarten programs shall demonstrate quality on the following elements:

(a) curriculum;

(b) learning environment, materials and supplies;

(c) family engagement;

(d) staffing patterns;

(e) teacher education and experience;

(f) facility quality;

(g) physical well-being, health and nutrition; and

(h) partnerships with non-profit, community and educational institutions.

3. (a) The universal full-day pre-kindergarten program shall make awards to (i) consolidated applications submitted by school districts which include pre-kindergarten programs offered by schools, non-profit organizations, community-based organizations, charter schools, libraries and/or museums, which shall demonstrate geographic diversity within the area to be served as well as diversity of providers; and (ii) non-profit organizations, community-based organizations, charter schools, libraries and museums, which may apply individually to the extent allowed under paragraph (b) of this subdivision. Any consolidated application must include, but is not limited to, the names of individual locations and providers, applicable licenses, facility lease information, and intended staffing plans and certifications.

(b) Prior to submission of a consolidated application, a school district shall widely solicit non-profit organizations, community-based organizations, charter schools, libraries and museums located within the school district to be included in its application. The school district shall notify any applicant who has been denied for inclusion in the consolidated application no later than two weeks prior to submission of such application. Such eligible providers denied for inclusion may apply individually as provided in paragraph (a) of this subdivision.

(c) The department shall establish two application periods in advance of a school year.

(d) Providers awarded slots under this section that they actually utilized would continue to have such slots renewed in subsequent years provided the program meets quality standards and all applicable requirements.

4. Programs that provide more stimulation, enhance child development and demonstrate creative approaches to improve early childhood education will have a competitive advantage in the application process.

5. The department shall develop a scoring system, which it shall use to evaluate which applications shall be funded on a competitive basis based on merit and factors including but not limited to the criteria listed above and student and community need. Upon review of applications, if the program is oversubscribed in any region or regions of the state, the department shall notify the division of the budget, which shall develop a plan for distribution of available slots within any oversubscribed region. The subscription for the New York city region is three hundred million dollars. The department shall allocate full-day pre-kindergarten conversion slots and new full-day pre-kindergarten slots based on available funding and shall make payments upon documentation of eligible expenditures in the base year, which shall be limited to the actual number of slots operated and paid on a per-pupil basis pursuant to subdivision fourteen of this section.

6. The department shall develop a statewide inspection protocol, which shall provide for annual inspections of all universal full-day pre-kindergarten providers, and shall develop a quality assurance protocol and physical plant review protocol for such reviews.

7. Statewide universal full-day pre-kindergarten slots shall only be awarded to support programs that provide instruction for at least five hours per school day for the full school year and that otherwise comply with the rules and requirements pursuant to section thirty-six hundred two-e of this part except as otherwise provided in this section.

8. All teachers in the universal full-day pre-kindergarten program shall meet the same teacher certification standards applicable to public schools. Pre-kindergarten teachers providing instruction through this section shall possess:

(a) a teaching license or certificate valid for service in the early childhood grades; or

(b) a teaching license or certificate for students with disabilities valid for service in early childhood grades; or

(c) for eligible agencies as defined in paragraph b of subdivision one of section thirty-six hundred two-e of this part that are not schools, a bachelor's degree in early childhood education or a related field and a written plan to obtain a certification valid for service in the early childhood grades as follows:

(i) for teachers hired on or after the effective date of this section as the teacher for a universal full-day pre-kindergarten classroom, within three years after commencing employment, at which time such certification shall be required for employment; and

(ii) for teachers hired by such provider prior to the effective date of this section for other early childhood care and education programs, no later than June thirtieth, two thousand seventeen, at which time such certification shall be required for employment.

9. The process by which applicants submit proposals to collaborate with the school district or individually to the department, and the renewal process for such providers, shall take into account any record of violations of health and safety codes and/or licensure or registration requirements. In addition, any agency that is cited for a violation classified as an "imminent danger" by the office of children and family services or as a "public health hazard" by the New York city department of health and mental hygiene which is not immediately corrected and which is not of a life threatening or of a grave and serious nature shall be suspended from the program and, upon final determination of such violation by the regulating agency, suspended or terminated from participating in the program under this section based on the severity of the violation. Provided further, that eligible agencies with a record of other serious or critical and/or repeated violations that pose a risk to health or safety shall, upon final determination of such violations, be suspended or terminated from participating in the program under this section, and the office of children and family services shall establish statewide standards for determining such grounds for such suspension or termination based on violations issued by the applicable regulatory agency.

10. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, a universal full-day pre-kindergarten provider shall be inspected by the department, the school district with which it partners, if any, and its respective licensing, permitting, regulatory, oversight, registration or enrolling agency or entity no fewer than two times per school year, at least one inspection of which shall be performed by the eligible agency's respective licensing, permitting, regulatory, oversight, registration or enrolling agency, as applicable.

11. Facilities providing universal full-day pre-kindergarten under this section shall meet all applicable fire safety and building codes and any applicable facility requirements of a state or local licensing or registering agency and at all times shall maintain building and classroom space in a manner that ensures and protects the health and safety of students in all programs statewide, notwithstanding any changes in such applicable codes or requirements.

12. Notwithstanding paragraph (a) of subdivision one of section twenty-eight hundred fifty-four of this chapter and paragraph (c) of subdivision two of section twenty-eight hundred fifty-four of this chapter, charter schools shall be eligible to participate in universal full-day pre-kindergarten programs under this section, provided that all such monitoring, programmatic review and operational requirements under this section shall be the responsibility of the charter entity and shall be consistent with the requirements under article fifty-six of this chapter. The provisions of paragraph (b) of subdivision two of section twenty-eight hundred fifty-four of this chapter shall apply to the admission of pre-kindergarten students, except parents of pre-kindergarten children may submit applications for the two thousand fourteen--two thousand fifteen school year by a date to be determined by the charter school upon selection to participate in the universal full-day pre-kindergarten program. The limitations on the employment of uncertified teachers under paragraph (a-1) of subdivision three of section twenty-eight hundred fifty-four of this chapter shall apply to all teachers from pre-kindergarten through grade twelve.

13. Apportionments under this section shall only be used to supplement and not supplant current local expenditures of federal, state or local funds on pre-kindergarten programs and the number of slots in such programs from such sources. Current local expenditures shall include any local expenditures of federal, state or local funds used to supplement or extend services provided directly or via contract to eligible children enrolled in a universal pre-kindergarten program pursuant to section thirty-six hundred two-e of this part.

14. (a) The award per pupil for an eligible entity pursuant to subdivision three of this section shall equal: (i) for each new full-day pre-kindergarten placement the lesser of the full-day pre-kindergarten per pupil amount or the total approved expenditures per pupil and (ii) for each existing half-day pre-kindergarten placement converted into a full-day pre-kindergarten placement the lesser of (A) the positive difference of the full-day pre-kindergarten per pupil amount minus the district's selected aid per pre-kindergarten pupil pursuant to subparagraph (i) of paragraph b of subdivision ten of section thirty-six hundred two-e of this part or (B) the positive difference of the total approved expenditures per pupil minus the district's selected aid per pre-kindergarten pupil pursuant to subparagraph (i) of paragraph b of subdivision ten of section thirty-six hundred two-e of this part. Each participating eligible entity pursuant to subdivision three of this section shall provide its expenses under this provision in a format prescribed by the commissioner.

(b) For the purposes of this section, "full-day pre-kindergarten per pupil amount" shall mean (i) for pupils enrolled in programs where the teacher of record for such pupil holds a teaching certificate issued by the commissioner in an appropriate certificate title, ten thousand dollars, and (ii) for pupils enrolled in programs where the teacher of record for such pupil does not hold a teaching certificate issued by the commissioner in an appropriate certificate title, seven thousand dollars.

(c) For the purposes of this section, "teacher of record" shall mean the teacher who is primarily and directly responsible for a student's learning activities, as reported to the department in a manner prescribed by the commissioner.

15. Definitions. For the purpose of this section, the following definitions shall apply:

(a) "regions of the state" shall mean:

(i) Capital Region: Includes Albany, Columbia, Greene, Rensselaer, Saratoga, Schenectady, Warren, and Washington counties.

(ii) Central New York Region: Includes Cayuga, Cortland, Madison, Onondaga and Oswego counties.

(iii) Finger Lakes Region: Includes Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Ontario, Orleans, Seneca, Wayne, Wyoming and Yates counties.

(iv) Long Island Region: Includes Nassau and Suffolk counties.

(v) Mid-Hudson Region: Includes Dutchess, Orange, Putnam, Rockland, Sullivan, Ulster and Westchester counties.

(vi) Mohawk Valley Region: Includes Fulton, Herkimer, Montgomery, Oneida, Otsego and Schoharie counties.

(vii) New York City Region: Includes Bronx, Kings, New York, Queens and Richmond counties.

(viii) North Country Region: Includes Clinton, Essex, Franklin, Hamilton, Jefferson, Lewis and St. Lawrence counties.

(ix) Southern Tier Region: Includes Broome, Chemung, Chenango, Delaware, Schuyler, Steuben, Tioga and Tompkins counties.

(x) Western New York Region: Includes Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Erie and Niagara counties.

(b) "community-based organization" shall mean a provider of child care and early education, a day care provider, early childhood program or center, approved preschool special education program, Head Start or other such community-based organization.

16. The authority of the department to administer the universal full-day pre-kindergarten program shall expire June thirtieth, two thousand sixteen; provided that the program shall continue and remain in full effect.

§ 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

§ 2. Severability clause. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, subdivision, section or part of this act shall be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, subdivision, section or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered. It is hereby declared to be the intent of the legislature that this act would have been enacted even if such invalid provisions had not been included herein.

§ 3. This act shall take effect immediately provided, however, that the applicable effective date of Parts A through CC of this act shall be as specifically set forth in the last section of such Parts.

Need to be a little more modest in transformational section - begun to see something transformational.

Real concrete steps to combat inequality.

Jennifer Jones Austin Introduction

Good afternoon, everyone.

My name is Jennifer Jones Austin.

I'm the chief executive of New York City's Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies.

And about one hundred and fifty days ago, I received the proverbial offer that I couldn't refuse.

Our city's newly elected – and endlessly persistent and persuasive – 109th mayor asked me to co-chair his transition team.

The directions he gave me and the others on that transition committee were clear – and they were thrilling.

He wanted our help in assembling a team of managers who reflected the fresh, and refreshing, outlook he wanted to bring to City Hall.

He wanted administrators who were seasoned, capable, and who could hit the ground running.

He wanted them to be drawn from the full ethnic and racial panorama of this most wonderfully diverse of all cities.

And he wanted an Administration committed to the progressive values that he had campaigned on –

And that the voters of New York City had just unequivocally endorsed at the ballot box.

It was an honor to accept that task...

... Just as it was also a privilege to work with him toward realizing a goal once thought unattainable:

Securing State funding for free, full-day universal pre-kindergarten education in our city –

An impossible dream that will begin to become a reality this September.

And he didn't stop there.

My friends, we have witnessed something transformational happen before our eyes in just over three months.

We've seen the promise of our city grow for so many as he tackled inequality.

We've seen communities and the people who protect them exhale together in a way they had not before.

And we've witnessed a government run efficiently and effectively in the face of a serious amount of snow.

Let's thank God its Spring in New York City.

As I said, back in November the Mayor gave me a job to help him build and administration.

Today, he gave me a new job – and it's one that I gladly accepted in a heartbeat.

Because it's now my pleasure to introduce him to you, to present his progress report...

Are you at all involved with invites for tomorrow's speech at SIPA? A former Dinkins person who now works at Brooklyn Community Services and her boss reached out to me to see if they could be invited. They are both SIPA grads etc.

Names are Marla Simpson (head of Mayor's Office of Contract Services under Dinkins) and Julia Rothwax (worked in Dinkins press operation).

Is this possible? If this is not in your lane and SIPA is inviting no worries.

Hi Jonathan,

I hope that this email finds you well. We are currently conducting a search for senior-level communications positions for DCA Commissioner Menin. Chloe thought that our preliminary lists would benefit tremendously from your review and comments. I've attached our candidate lists for the following positions:

- Deputy Commissioner for External Affairs
- Assistant Commissioner for Communications

The challenge: Commissioner Menin would like to receive these names and start interviews in short order. Would you be able to provide us your comments, additional candidates by tomorrow morning at 10 am?

We greatly appreciate your help with this process. Please feel free to reach out to me by email or phone tonight or tomorrow morning – whichever is most convenient.

Many thanks,

Ken

Hey Rebecca -

Hope you're well. Quickly, I got pitched by a documentary filmmaking team who is interested in doing a "Chicagoland/Brick City" sort of thing. Jonathan mentioned you may be swimming in similar pitches; these guys asked me for someone to connect them to at City Hall.

To credential them briefly, its two producers – one, Solly, who just left 60 Minutes and produced Showtime's Years of Living Dangerously; the other Directed Dirty Wars which was nominated for an Oscar. So they're legit, and Solly has been a real champion of the firm and our work.

My case for taking the meeting is a little counter-intuitive, which is: you guys may have little to no interest in a "Chicagoland" sort of thing, but you might be able to counter propose something to them or use Solly down the road. He still produces for 60 Minutes freelance and for a handful of other nightly newscasts – so it could be a useful relationship.

In any case, is it okay for me to swing them to you ... whether you want to take the meeting or kill it?

Thanks!

Subject: Talking pts

See attached. Also, here are my thoughts on general framing:

- In the interest of supporting citywide expansion of universal full-day pre-k, City Hall investigated existing policies that may preclude or significantly limit the ability of certain communities to participate
- The guidance document describes how we will approach various issues impacting those communities
- We look forward to working with the Orthodox community and other partners to support full-day pre-k expansion.

Guidance on Administration of UPK by Religious Schools and Other Faith-Based Organizations

This document provides initial guidance on the administration of UPK programs by religious schools and other faith-based organizations. Additional policies will be developed based on this guidance in order to advance the Department of Education's programmatic goals and quality expectations.

1. Religious Symbols

- Unless it is not practicable, providers must agree to remove or cover any and all religious signs, names, identification, symbols or insignias on the exterior entrance designated to be used by students and in those parts of the interior of the building to be used by the students in connection with the UPK Program.<sup>1</sup>

2. Sunday Instruction

- Sunday instruction is permissible.
- District must provide accommodations to families who cannot attend on Sundays.

3. Professional Development on Sundays, Legal Holidays and During the Week Prior to School Opening

- According to NYSED guidelines, there can be no Superintendent's Conference Days on Saturdays, Sundays, legal holidays or in July.
- May schedule such days prior to the first day of school (though not on Saturdays, Sundays, legal holidays or in July)

4. Hiring

- Providers may, to the extent permitted by law, give preference to job applicants of the same religion or denomination.
- Services, however, must be delivered in a non-sectarian manner.

5. Cultural & Historical Instruction Using Texts from Religious Traditions

- Religious instruction is not permitted.
- Texts from religious traditions (e.g., the Bible, Torah, Qu'ran, etc.) may be used when presented objectively as part of a secular program of education using developmentally appropriate strategies in ways that advance the state pre-k learning standards. For example, instruction may focus on the characters and events in a story and cultural connections to text.
- Such texts may be used in conjunction with other, secular children's literature.

6. Blessings in the Context of Meals

- School staff may not lead, require, organize or call for prayer by students during the school day.
- Staff need not prevent students who wish to pray before meals from doing so.

7. Language of Instruction

- Programs must include an English learning component, even if some portion of instruction is conducted in a non-English language.
- As students acquire English over the course of the school year, more instruction should be conducted in English.

8. Religious Instruction in the Middle of the Day

- Not permitted

<sup>1</sup> Artifacts, such as mezuzahs, that do not on their face feature religious symbols need not be removed or covered.

Who these changes apply to:

Roughly 165,000 students receive IEPs—that’s 18% of our public school enrollment.

Most of those students are placed in public school programs that meet the needs of their IEP.

Parents sometimes find that their child has needs that they feel cannot be met in the public school setting offered to their child. Parents then place their child unilaterally and sue the DOE for reimbursement. These are called “Carter cases” after the federal case establishing the right of parents to pursue this option when they see no other option. There are approximately 5,000 such cases in NYC.

What has happened in the past:

The DOE has had a policy of litigating such cases frequently, and appealing even when a parent won the initial round. Of those cases it litigated, the DOE lost 75% of the time, but often kept on litigating anyway, at significant parent and taxpayer expense. Because so many parents were paying out of pocket for tuition during litigation—even in cases where the DOE ended up losing—there arose pressure to legislate new solutions. The agreement we have reached heads off that legislation and gives the City an opportunity to correct this problems on its own.

The changes we are putting in place:

The Action Plan announced today will implement the following changes by September 1, 2014:

- Expedite Decisions: Where settlement is appropriate, DOE will seek settlement within 15 days of receiving notice of parent intent to unilaterally place their child in a school.
- Reduce Extended Legal Battles: The DOE will refrain from re-litigating settled or decided cases unless there is a change in the IEP placement recommendation. The DOE will avoid unnecessary litigation in cases where the agency is unable to offer a placement or when a child is about to enter the final grade of a school.
- Reduce Paperwork: Instead of requiring parents to submit full documentation every single year, the DOE will only require that paperwork every three years, allowing for income eligibility updates to be made each year as needed.
- Expedite Payments: DOE will make tuition payments on a monthly basis when required by a program, and will provide a payment schedule to parents following any settlement. Once parents win a claim for tuition reimbursement, the DOE will pay the tuition while the DOE appeals that decision to a higher level of review.

Jonathan,

We're looking for a superstar for Appointments and I'd love your recommendations - you always have such great candidates. The Deputy Director is a big role and ideally the person would have a JD or masters - most importantly I need someone really smart and savvy.

Job description is below and your ideas of some good people would be so welcome.

Thanks,
Chloe

Deputy Director, Mayor's Office of Appointments

The Office of Appointments has the unique opportunity to see and contribute to nearly every facet of City government. In general, our work requires being flexible and high energy. We have a collegial and supportive office of people who are both profoundly devoted to the goals of the administration and focused on doing the necessary work each day to advance the agenda. The Deputy Director is responsible for developing a set of relationships with key leaders and advisors both within the administration and outside. Our work requires complete confidentiality, great attention to detail, collaboration with internal and external stakeholders, and the ability to learn quickly on the job.

Role of the Deputy Director,

- Management & Oversight: Serve as strategic advisor and supervisor to various teams including senior staffing and vetting. Partner with the Director on with staffing, HR, and administration for our staff of 20. This accounts for 10% of the role, and is a mix of administrative and substantive work.
- Boards: Oversee the Office of Appointment's efforts to fill positions on the City's over 200 active municipal boards. This involves engaging stakeholders inside and outside government, analyzing the role of the board and developing and validating slates of qualified candidates.
- Legal Counsel: serve as a legal advisor to the Director of Appointments and the office, coordinate as necessary with the Counsel to the Mayor's team and the Law Department.

The precise responsibilities of the position can be adapted to fit the skills and experience of the successful candidate.

Ideal qualifications would be a masters or law degree and 5-10 years varied professional experience including some government work and knowledge of NYC. Management experience strongly preferred.

The City of New York is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

The successful CCRB Executive Director candidate ought to possess the following characteristics:

Have a high energy, dynamic personality able to inspire the staff (this trait per Richard Emery)

Have management experience, and ideally possess government management experience

Be a lawyer

Possess that neat combination of efficiency and impatience which helps transform moribund workplaces

Have a demonstrated commitment to CH's values along criminal justice lines

Possess experience in investigative integrity-based case development

I totally agree, but I also think this is something we could do with public money as well. In fact, we spend millions of dollars on public service campaigns already.

What's more, I really believe that social media and non traditional media is key here. Especially for young people, their phones and streaming video is really where its at, and its cheaper.

I'm working on a very significant plan with Linder that will entail every facet of communications available to us for a presentation.

Jonathan,

My colleague Phil White (who you met in our office) is leading a session on the ARC tunnel project at a major infrastructure conference in DC at the end of the month. In light of the Mayor's comments, the group would love to have a representative from the administration present on this panel. It will be a very favorable audience and is a well attended event that I've been to in recent years. Below is a link to the sponsor of the conference as well as more details about the conference itself. Let me know what Phil and I can do to try and make this happen, would be a big deal for us if we could get someone. Thanks.

Just discussed with my team here and we'd love to make it work in December for the Mayor's first Sunday show. We are open on dates but if the Mayor can do Sunday the 21st that week George is anchoring out of NYC and we are thinking we could even aim to set up the interview location somewhere in NY/charity related since its right before the holidays and could be a good backdrop for the interview? Let me know if that week might work for the Mayor and if not we are flexible on other dates as well.

I defer to Peter on the final call, but here's my two cents:

1. I think Face the Nation, while not having the ratings of This Week, **should** be an easier interview.

Schieffer usually isn't as aggressive as others often are. (That's assuming Bob isn't on vacation or anything.)

2. Next Tuesday will be 3 weeks since the election, at which point even our national audience - hungry as they are to hear from leaders on where the party should go - will have had their fill of 2014 look-backs.

So if we checked this box on Sunday, we could close the door (for now) on national stuff & get back to New York-focused media opportunities for the rest of the year. I know we've got State of the City coming up - that must be a huge priority.

3. If we DO agree to the interview, I would conduct it from NYC. Helps avoid the Out-of-Town Brown stories* (*Former NYPD police commish Lee Brown, who became Houston mayor & developed - fairly or unfairly - a reputation for leaving his day job in Houston too often).

This is the most pertinent of the stats. And now I need the parallel national stats to what I've said so often locally:

1. We are experiencing the greatest inequality since _____ ? (In the case of nyc, it's 1929 -- true for USA as well?)

2. % of Americans living at or near the poverty line? In nyc, the 46% is based on those living under 150% of the poverty level. Example here:

poverty level is about $23,000 annual income for a family of 4 -- the 150% level is about $35,000 for a family of 4. So what % of Americans are at that level or below in terms of their local economies?

Thanks

"One Third of a Nation" was a 1938 play about housing problems in NY sponsored by the Federal Theatre Project/Works Progress Administration (WPA) as part of the New Deal. It was turned into a film in 1939 and was revived as a play in 2011 at the Metropolitan Playhouse.

It was also the title of a book published in the early 1980s chronicling oral histories from the Great Depression.

Main point is that the play, movie, and book are all referencing a line from FDR's second inaugural address: "I see one-third of a nation ill-house, ill-clad, ill-nourished." - <http://historymatters.gmu.edu/d/5105/>

Here are Emma's notes:

George: what are you saying about HRC

- *I'm hopeful that she will make this a centerpiece if she decides to run. Because I believe that the candidate that does so is going to be the next president *
- That's where the people are.

George: So, you're concerned about direction of party and next candidate. Do you think HRC will make a good president?

- *Yes, of course. Talk about her qualifications and how well you know her. She's incredibly capable and well-qualified. Like many Americans I look forward to hearing what her plans are.*
- *Extraordinarily capable person who will bring a lot to the presidency. I'm not here to talk about individual candidacies though – I'm here to talk about where we need to go as a party. President, governor's offices, senate seats – what all our candidates are going to have to do if we're going to fix the fundamental problems in our country – not to mention win elections.*
- That is also the only plausible political path forward.

George: Patrick last week said primaries are good. Do you want Hilary to have a primary?

- Primaries can be good things if positive ideas are discussed.
- Negative personal and nasty primaries can be destructive.
- I'm not here to talk about who the candidates are or how many we have. I'm here to talk about the issues we need to talk about – and we are failing right now to do this. The party needs to unite with a commitment to take on income inequality head on. Our candidates have to be the candidates talking about this issue – bluntly, clearly.
- While the primary conversation is premature it's also not the point. The convo is too often about candidates and personalities. We need to talk about ideas, what people can believe in.

George: a lot of people noted in march and april of 2008 a different Hilary who spoke much more passionately who spoke about the reality of working people. Do you see something in that example?

- Yes I was in ohio
- She spoke powerfully to people's experiences
- That's what democrats need to do this time

George: So she could have won if she'd talked about these issues more?

- I think we were only beginning to really feel these issues in 2008

- This crisis has profoundly deepened in last 8 years
- It's changed the way people think and what they need from their leaders

George: If she runs, do you endorse her?

- I've got my own policy/philosophy - I don't talk about endorsements before someone announces their candidacy, I just don't.

General rules on HRC questions:

- Praise capacity, pivot back to where we need to go as a party.
- Not about candidates, about our party and nation.
- HRC has obviously not made decision, and not productive to talk about candidacies until individuals announce. What I care about is...pivot back.
- Don't be incendiary. // Don't give it away.

George: State Republican chairman said you may run for president. Would you accept that VP nomination?

- Pure dismissal.
- Re-election of mayor of NYC
- Republican state chairman as spokesperson

George: Are there people like Eliz Warren on national stage who are picking up this torch and carrying this message?

- Go back to your op-ed. Al Franken, Jeff Merkely, look who won in this wave year.
- Lots of Dems who bucked the trend this cycle.
- Gov Molloy, Gov Brown – all of them are talking about these issues.
- The problem is, too many Democrats aren't.
- This has to become an article of faith in our party. We're going to address incoming inequality head on.

George: Would Eliz Warren be a good president?

- Praise capacity as Senator and she's doing great job, pivot back to where we need to go as a party.
- Not about candidates, about our party and nation.

George: Let's talk about the other Clinton. The things you're saying seem to be opposed to both the idea of Pres Clinton (more moderate approach) but also very consistent with liberal critique of his presidency, tilting toward Wall Street, home lenders, welfare reform, nafta, etc. One could hear a rebuke of President Clinton.

- Commend broadly, but then...
- We're in a new economic reality that doesn't have a parallel, I don't think that's an appropriate comparison
- Look at where we've come since 2008

- Top one percent has come roaring back, everybody else has been left behind, and the question confronting us is what are we going to do about it

George: HRC has gotten the memo it seems – she’s coming to the left wing of the Democratic party over the past weeks.

- I think she is thinking about these issues. But again, Democrats have to speak to them bluntly, incessantly, etc across the board.

George: everything you’re saying really comes down to taxing the rich.

- Yes quite obvious – we are a country that used to have a lot more regulation, we had more taxation for the wealthiest – it allowed us to build finest higher education, hospitals, transportations. We did all that when we had a more equitable tax structure and more forceful regulation. It yielded a more prosperous society that benefited more Americans.

George: so then let’s go back to 2008, which you keep referring to. Has POTUS failed on income inequality in your mind?

- The democratic party as a whole should’ve done more on these issues....health care reform and taking on wall street ...
- POTUS has done some important things – but we’ve needed to do more in response to the crisis and we need to do more now.

Note this passage, esp Schumer.

Some have been critical of Democrats for abandoning the populist message that once resonated with blue-collar whites. That's something they'll have to fix if they hope to turn things around in 2016.

Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) has started that conversation on the left, arguing that Democrats misallocated their resources passing the healthcare law when they had majorities in both chambers. They should have focused on the plights of the middle class after the economic meltdown, he argued.

And here's the Hill's take

- 1) collapse among white voters - Landrieu's support among black voters in Louisiana is nearly universal, but strategists in the state wondered if there were enough of them to counteract Cassidy's huge lead among white voters. They were not
- 2) Keystone vote
- 3) Republican spending compared with Dem spending
- 4) Conservatives rallied early
- 5) Doomed from start - The midterm electorate is typically more favorable to Republicans, and voters were ready to take out their frustrations with President Obama on any Democrat that had the bad fortune of running in 2014.

Sen. Mary Landrieu's (D-La.) luck ran out Saturday night. The Democrat's colleagues talk about her as a fighter who has won tough runoff elections in red Louisiana before, even if she was the underdog against Rep. Bill Cassidy (R-La.). But in 2014, a host of factors conspired to keep her from ultimately falling short for a fourth term.

Collapse among white voters

Landrieu's support among black voters in Louisiana is nearly universal, but strategists in the state wondered if there were enough of them to counteract Cassidy's huge lead among white voters. There were not.

Landrieu's percentage of the black vote was in the high 90s on Nov. 4, but Cassidy took more than 80 percent of the white vote.

Democrats, particularly those in the South, have suffered a complete collapse among white voters. Landrieu was the last white Democrat from the Deep South in the Senate, and none remain in the House.

Some have been critical of Democrats for abandoning the populist message that once resonated with blue-collar whites. That's something they'll have to fix if they hope to turn things around in 2016.

Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) has started that conversation on the left, arguing that Democrats misallocated their resources passing the healthcare law when they had majorities in both chambers. They should have focused on the plights of the middle class after the economic meltdown, he argued.

Fail Marys

Landrieu steamrolled into the lame duck session intent on passing a bill authorizing the Keystone XL pipeline.

If it worked, it would put space between herself and an unpopular president, remind voters in the energy-rich state of her seniority on a key energy committee, and would be evidence she has the clout to pull together a Democratic coalition when it mattered most.

She fell one vote shy in an embarrassing defeat, while a version of the bill sponsored by Cassidy sailed through the House.

"A Keystone bill did pass one chamber of Congress, that was the Cassidy bill," Cassidy said at a debate last week. "Sen. Landrieu could not get that passed in the Senate."

Landrieu's true last gasp was to call into question Cassidy's character. In the final weeks of the race, she turned the entire focus of her campaign to allegations that Cassidy overbilled Louisiana State University.

"He's going to be fighting more than President Obama," Landrieu said at the debate. "If he gets elected, which I doubt, he will be fighting subpoenas because this is going to be under investigation." But Cassidy called the allegations "absolutely false" and effectively beat them back. Strategists in the state say it was too late for the controversy to take hold anyway.

Assault on the airwaves

This one wasn't even close.

According to an analysis by the Center for Public Integrity, Republicans and outside conservative groups pummeled Landrieu on TV and the radio, while the Louisiana Democrat was effectively silenced during the runoff period.

The numbers are staggering – ads from outside groups attacking Landrieu at one point accounted for about 13,900 of the 14,000 TV spots that ran since the Nov. 4 jungle primary.

"I wish she had more air cover," Sen. Joe Donnelly (D-Ind.) told The Hill. "I was there [campaigning] because she's my friend, but more importantly she's done an extraordinary job for the people of Louisiana and you don't abandon your friends when times get tough."

It was a stark contrast from the run-up to the Nov. 4 election, when the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee and other liberal groups bet big, running about 19,000 TV ads.

But the Nov. 4 elections left many political watchers doubtful that Landrieu could survive another tough contest in the face of a Republican wave, and with the Senate majority no longer at stake, national Democrats and liberal groups opted to sit on their money.

Senate Democrats' campaign arm announced early in the runoff period it wouldn't spend on the race. The DSCC took out a $10 million loan in October, but spent big on races it ultimately lost on Election Day.

"The DSCC had no money, so it wasn't that they pulled it," Sen. Bill Nelson (D-Fla.) told The Hill.

Senate Democrats interviewed by The Hill said they did what they could to help Landrieu with money, but the conservative outside groups smelled blood and went all in.

Landrieu's campaign was also swamped by ads from the Cassidy campaign, which ran nearly 5,000 TV ads against Landrieu's 3,000 during the runoff period. Cassidy had more spending flexibility by virtue of out-raising Landrieu by about $500,000 during the runoff.

Cassidy rallied conservatives early

Cassidy recognized early on that he needed to target those Republicans who supported Tea Party candidate Rob Maness in the general election. Maness took 14 percent and likely kept Cassidy from winning the jungle primary outright.

Democrats argued that those conservatives would stay home for the Dec. 6 runoff, but Maness embraced his one-time rival early in the period, and a snowball effect of Republican support ensued. Conservatives like Family Research Council President Tony Perkins, former vice presidential nominee Sarah Palin, and the Tea Party Express, who backed Maness in general election, became vocal proponents of Cassidy. Other Republicans who stayed out of the race during the general election, like Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) and Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal (R), soon followed.

Paul headlined the first "unity rally" in Louisiana for Cassidy about a week after Election Day, which caught on and became must-attend events for party heavyweights.

In addition to Paul, Palin and Jindal, Sen. David Vitter (R-La.), "Duck Dynasty" star Phil Robertson, Sen.

John McCain (R-Ariz.), and Dr. Ben Carson have all participated. Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, Sen. Marco Rubio (Fla.), Texas Gov. Rick Perry and Sen. Tim Scott (S.C.) all participated. Democrats began turning out for Landrieu on the campaign trail after the Keystone gambit, but strategists say by then all the energy in the campaign was on Cassidy's side.

Doomed from the start

The deck was deeply stacked against the Louisiana Democrat. The midterm electorate is typically more favorable to Republicans, and voters were ready to take out their frustrations with President Obama on any Democrat that had the bad fortune of running in 2014. The Republican wave earned the GOP their largest majority in the House in decades, and they easily picked up a convincing majority in the Senate. Landrieu on Saturday joined her colleagues, Sens. Mark Begich (D-Alaska), Kay Hagan (D-N.C.), Mark Pryor (D-Ark), and Mark Udall (D-Colo.), as Democratic incumbents who were washed out in the wave. If Sen. David Vitter (R-La.) runs for governor, and Landrieu has the appetite for another campaign, she may find more favorable political winds in 2016.

Here's Politico's take.

Passages of interest:

Landrieu, the three-term incumbent who chairs the Senate Energy Committee, found herself cut off and left for dead by national Democrats after party strategists decided she had no realistic path to victory in Saturday's Bayou State runoff. She lost much of her clout when Democrats lost their majority, and her failure to pass legislation to move forward with the Keystone XL pipeline in the lame duck session last month made her look politically impotent.

Cassidy, a medical doctor, first elected to a Baton Rouge-area congressional seat in 2008, ran an uninspiring but mistake-free campaign that capitalized on increasing hostility to the Democratic party in Louisiana and throughout the Deep South.

....But the reputation she cultivated as a moderate was no match for the increasing toxicity of the Obama brand in the state.

Before the November election, Landrieu's campaign aggressively reached out to the African-American community, which is about one-third of the electorate. But they did so carefully to avoid linking the senator too closely with Obama.

In the final insult of a devastating 2014 election for Democrats, Sen. Mary Landrieu, the party's last remaining statewide officeholder from the Deep South, was trounced Saturday in the head-to-head Louisiana Senate runoff election.

Republican Bill Cassidy's resounding victory is the ninth Senate seat picked up by the GOP in this year's elections, three more than the party needed to take control of the chamber. With nearly all the ballots counted, Cassidy led Landrieu by 14 points, 57 percent to 43 percent.

"On November 4th, the American people sent a message that they didn't like the direction our country was heading," Cassidy said in his victory speech. "Our state is the exclamation mark on that message."

His win gives Republicans a four-seat cushion going into 2016, when the party is seeking to protect its first Senate majority since 2006. The next election cycle's Senate map is as bad for Republicans as this year's was for Democrats, with the GOP forced to defend seven seats in states President Barack Obama carried twice.

Landrieu, the three-term incumbent who chairs the Senate Energy Committee, found herself cut off and left for dead by national Democrats after party strategists decided she had no realistic path to victory in Saturday's Bayou State runoff. She lost much of her clout when Democrats lost their majority, and her failure to pass legislation to move forward with the Keystone XL pipeline in the lame duck session last month made her look politically impotent.

Cassidy, a medical doctor, first elected to a Baton Rouge-area congressional seat in 2008, ran an uninspiring but mistake-free campaign that capitalized on increasing hostility to the Democratic party in Louisiana and throughout the Deep South.

It was the final major race of a 2014 election cycle in which Republicans won nearly every battleground Senate election, gained three governorships and at least 246 House seats. Democrats' efforts to localize many of these contests fell flat, and Republicans succeeded in making the election a referendum on the unpopular president.

Cassidy, excited as he addressed a throng of supporters in Baton Rouge, wrapped up his speech by yelling "Boom!" — and then making his way off stage to celebrate.

Sen. Jerry Moran (R-Kan.), the outgoing chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, noted that Cassidy will be one of a dozen new Republican senators to take office next month and added that, with his win, "Republicans now control every Senate seat, governor's mansion and legislative body from the Texas high plains to the Atlantic coast of the Carolinas."

Obama — and his 39-percent approval rating in the November exit poll — has been an anchor on Landrieu all year. In 2008, Landrieu won a majority on election night — pulling 205,000 more votes than Obama and avoiding a runoff.

But the reputation she cultivated as a moderate was no match for the increasing toxicity of the Obama brand in the state.

During the open primary election last month, Landrieu won just 18 percent of the white vote, according to exit polls, compared to 33 percent six years ago. She got 42 percent overall; since no candidate earned a majority of the vote, the top two finishers went to a runoff.

Landrieu, delivering her concession at the Roosevelt Hotel in the Big Easy just an hour after polls closed, received some of the loudest cheers when she mentioned her vote for Obamacare.

"This is something to be proud of, and I'm glad we fought for it," she said, describing her own record as one of "courage."

Cassidy, 57, ran a low-profile campaign featuring fewer public events. He made the remarkable decision to spend Wednesday and Thursday in Washington for routine House votes, a reflection of his confidence.

The only debate of the runoff took place Monday and produced nothing close to a game-changing moment. Cassidy was awkward and stiff, while Landrieu tried to gin up controversy over him earning $20,000-a-year to practice medicine at Louisiana State University while collecting his congressional paycheck.

Landrieu found herself on the defensive for improperly billing taxpayers more than $30,000 in private charter flights to campaign events since 2002. But the debate mainly focused on the issues that have defined the contest, such as Obamacare, gun control and abortion. Landrieu is on the wrong side of the state's electorate on each.

She made two significant strategic miscalculations. First, she thought she could win outright in November and spent accordingly — burning through almost $16 million, more than double what Cassidy spent. Second, she thought control of the Senate could come down to the results in Louisiana, which would guarantee national Democrats spent millions — or maybe tens of millions — on her behalf.

Neither came to pass. Just two days after the first round of voting, the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee canceled $1.9 million of advertising reservations it had made to help in the runoff.

Landrieu publicly criticized the party for giving up on her, and she asked female colleagues to try cajoling DSCC leaders to reverse their decision.

The National Republican Senatorial Committee also scaled back its buys after the Democrats pulled out but still spent around $1 million in the runoff. Also spending around $1 million were American Crossroads, Freedom Partners and the National Rifle Association. Ending Spending, the conservative group, spent $1.7 million on TV ads and direct voter contact.

The Republican National Committee said it spent $2.9 million on the ground game, including an effort to test new tactics it wants to try during the 2016 presidential campaign.

The main outside group helping Landrieu on TV during the runoff was the Humane Society Legislative Fund, which spent a paltry $123,000.

In total, outside groups supporting Landrieu aired about 100 TV ads, compared to more than 6,000 commercials from anti-Landrieu groups.

Before the November election, Landrieu's campaign aggressively reached out to the African-American community, which is about one-third of the electorate. But they did so carefully to avoid linking the senator too closely with Obama.

During the runoff, the campaign became much less cautious. Her chief of staff was caught on hidden camera bragging to a predominantly African-American crowd that his boss votes with Obama 97 percent of the time and would continue to — a statistic already being cited in Republican attack ads.

Also believing the runoff was ultimately a base election, Cassidy focused on winning over conservatives who didn't vote for him in the first round. The Friday after the election, Cassidy took fellow Republican Rob Maness, who won 14 percent of the vote in the primary, to dinner at Ye Olde College Inn in New Orleans. Maness agreed to endorse Cassidy at a unity rally the following Monday.

The phones were ringing off the hook at Cassidy campaign headquarters with top-flight surrogates, including potential presidential candidates, trying to help so they could claim some credit for an anticipated win. Among those who campaigned on the ground were Sens. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) and Marco Rubio (R-Fla.), along with former Sen. Rick Santorum (R-Pa.), neurologist Ben Carson and Sen.-elect Joni Ernst (R-Iowa). Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) sent fundraising emails, and former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush headlined a high-dollar fundraiser in Washington this week.

Landrieu brought in a handful of lesser-known Senate colleagues. Hillary Clinton hosted a fundraiser for her at the start of this week, but it was in New York City.

Cassidy was not seen as running a strong campaign. If the majority was at stake Saturday, or polls showed the race in play, national Republicans planned to send several operatives to help right the ship. But there was really no need. Landrieu made a last-ditch bid during the lame duck to demonstrate her clout by passing the Keystone XL pipeline bill. She pushed her colleagues hard and had support from every Republican senator, but she fell short of breaking a filibuster by one vote.

The Landrieu dynasty is not over. Her brother, Mitch, is the fairly popular mayor of New Orleans and may try to run for statewide office in the future. In her concession, Landrieu said "Louisiana will always be worth fighting for" and promised that her family "will continue to do so."

Indeed, as soon as she finished her speech, Taylor Swift's hit song "Shake It Off" started blasting through the ballroom.

The Louisiana governorship is opening up next year, as outgoing Gov. Bobby Jindal plots a presidential campaign. GOP Sen. David Vitter is the frontrunner to succeed him, which could create a vacancy when his seat is up for election again in 2016.

Republicans also held onto two Louisiana House seats in runoffs on Saturday in solidly GOP districts. Ralph Abraham won the seat currently held by GOP Rep. Vance McAllister, who finished fourth in last month's primary following an adultery scandal. In the race for Cassidy's House seat, Republican Garret Graves beat former Democratic Gov. Edwin Edwards, the colorful, 87-year-old seeking political redemption after felony convictions for corruption.

Cassidy tried to strike a conciliatory tone near the end of his speech, saying he wanted to let those who opposed him know: "I don't care that you voted for Sen. Landrieu. I am here to serve you too."

But he also couldn't help cracking a joke about his outreach efforts. "I did a robocall in Spanish," he said. "It probably cost me votes."

What's out line on the LA Senate race and Landrieu getting beat last night? Did she run away from Dem principles? I don't think we followed it that closely here and I could see this being the natural follow today.

Sheldon Silver corruption probe is blow to New York City's bid to host DNC

DAILY NEWS - Celeste Katz

When New York Democrats pledged their delegate votes to President Obama at the party convention in 2012, former Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver took the mic as the Empire State's spokesman.

With the national party on the verge of picking a convention city for 2016, Silver is again in the spotlight — but this time, he's the target of a stunning corruption probe that could tarnish the Big Apple's chances of beating out Philadelphia and Columbus, Ohio.

"What is happening with Shelly just highlights corruption in New York — and is not the right message," lamented a party officer familiar with the selection process.

"It's not the image that the Democratic Party would want to cultivate."

A Democratic city lawmaker grouched, "It will be hard for the (Democratic National Committee) to plan a convention in a state where (the nominee might) have to stand on a stage with a speaker facing ethics charges."

A Silver representative declined to comment.

Although Hillary Clinton has yet to declare her intentions, Republicans are already targeting her as the Dems' presumptive 2016 nominee.

A DNC official wouldn't comment on the impact Silver's arrest would have on the bid, but said that the "decision will be based primarily on logistics, financing and security."

Celeste is about to post an expanded version of the below story online shortly with this comment from RNC: "The optics of Hillary having her coronation in a city where her former campaign manager is becoming the poster boy for failed progressive governance and where her friends are on trial for corruption would be especially bad," said Republican National Committee spokesman Mike Short.

Celeste is about to post an expanded version of the below story online shortly with this comment from RNC: "The optics of Hillary having her coronation in a city where her former campaign manager is becoming the poster boy for failed progressive governance and where her friends are on trial for corruption would be especially bad," said Republican National Committee spokesman Mike Short.

Realize this is more sensitive compared to other convention hits we've been dealing with. Want to get some guidance from you on how we should respond. Do you want to give a standard line on how our unmatched fundraising capabilities, transportation network, venues and attractions make NYC the best venue to showcase the nominee and help propel that person to the White House?

Sheldon Silver corruption probe is blow to DNC hopes

CELESTE KATZ

When New York Democrats pledged their delegate votes to President Obama at the party convention in 2012, former Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver took the mic as the Empire State's spokesman.

With the national party on the verge of picking a convention city for 2016, Silver is again in the spotlight — but this time, he's the target of a stunning corruption probe that could tarnish the Big Apple's chances of beating out Philadelphia and Columbus, Ohio.

"What is happening with Shelly just highlights corruption in New York — and is not the right message," lamented a party officer familiar with the selection process.

"It's not the image that the Democratic Party would want to cultivate."

A Democratic city lawmaker groused, "It will be hard for the (Democratic National Committee) to plan a convention in a state where (the nominee might) have to stand on a stage with a speaker facing ethics charges."

A Silver representative declined to comment.

Although Hillary Clinton has yet to declare her intentions, Republicans are already targeting her as the Dems' presumptive 2016 nominee.

A DNC official wouldn't comment on the impact Silver's arrest would have on the bid, but said that the "decision will be based primarily on logistics, financing and security."

MAYOR DE BLASIO APPOINTS JOHN ADLER AS DIRECTOR OF THE

MAYOR'S OFFICE OF PENSIONS AND INVESTMENTS AND CHIEF PENSION INVESTMENT ADVISOR

Adler brings deep experience in pension and retirement issues, will serve as administration's central advisor on pension investments

NEW YORK—Today, Mayor Bill de Blasio announced the appointment of John Adler as the Director of the Mayor's Office of Pensions and Investments and Chief Pension Investment Advisor. Adler, most recently the Director of the Retirement Security Campaign at the Service Employees International Union, brings with him extensive experience in public pension and retirement issues.

On all investment issues, the Mayor's Office of Pensions and Investments (MOPI) is the administration's full-time, central advisor to the Mayor's trustees on the five New York City retirement system boards and on the New York City Deferred Compensation Plan Board. MOPI, housed within the Department of Finance, works with the Office of the Comptroller to monitor and advise on the performance of investments and investment managers for all asset classes held by the pension systems and Deferred Compensation Plan—which hold combined assets valued at over $150 billion, covering over 350,000 active employees and 275,000 retirees and beneficiaries.

“John's deep experience in pension investments and retirement security will go a long way for City taxpayers and employees, retirees, and beneficiaries alike,” said Mayor Bill de Blasio. “John will play a crucial role as we work to tackle growing pension costs, while securing the strongest possible returns on investments and ensuring a sustainable pension system that works for all.”

“John and his long, extensive history in this business will bring invaluable leadership as the new CPIA,” said Department of Finance Commissioner Jacques Jiha. “We are excited about his appointment and look forward to working with him.”

“I am excited to put my experience to work to help the City's pension funds do the best possible job for our hard-working employees and their beneficiaries, retired participants, and the taxpayers,” said John Adler, incoming Director of the Mayor's Office of Pensions and Investments and Chief Pension Investment Advisor. “I am grateful to Mayor de Blasio for the opportunity to work together with all the trustees of the pension funds to help make them high-performing, sustainable for the long term, and an economic asset for all my fellow New Yorkers.”

The five primary pension funds for New York City employees include the New York City Employees' Retirement System; the Teachers' Retirement System of the City of New York; the New York City Police Pension Fund; the New York City Fire Department Pension Fund; and the New York City Board of Education Retirement System.

At MOPI, the Chief Pension Investment Advisor (CPIA) conducts research on all relevant investment issues that impact the portfolios, and provides the Mayor's trustees on the five boards and the NYC Deferred Compensation Plan Board with timely investment reviews, reports and presentations, so that they may make recommendations on asset allocation and investment strategy. The CPIA meets with consultants and potential investment partners in connection with prospective investment opportunities. The CPIA also works with the Comptroller's Bureau of Asset Management to ensure that all appropriate information is analyzed and integrated into the selection, termination and performance reviews of investment managers, as well as the analysis and development of investment strategies, and provided accurately to all trustees. The CPIA assists in negotiating the terms and conditions of investment contracts with investment managers and banks, and also consults regularly with the Office of Management and Budget and the Corporation Counsel regarding the potential fiscal impacts and legal liabilities of investment and policy matters coming before the Boards.

John Adler was most recently the Director of the Retirement Security Campaign at SEIU, where he managed all aspects of SEIU's retirement security program, including public pension funds, Taft-Hartley pensions, Social Security, and private sector plans. He ran state campaigns to create state-sponsored retirement plans for workers without access to plans, and co-founded the Georgetown Center for Retirement Initiatives.

Adler has spent 23 years with SEIU, first as an organizer with SEIU/1199 United Healthcare Workers East in New York, and, since 2001, working on pension and retirement issues with the international union first as the Director of the Capital Stewardship Program—where he oversaw all of the union's work on private equity—and then as the Director of the Retirement Security Campaign.

Adler worked with SEIU locals and state councils to address threats to the retirement security of its members, and to advocate for solutions to the retirement security crisis the United States faces because of the decline of pensions in the private sector.

Adler has a B.A. from Yale University, and lives with his wife and two children in Brooklyn, New York.

De Blasio: No timeline to hire director for long-term planning

By David Giambusso

As the city marked the second anniversary of Hurricane Sandy, Mayor Bill de Blasio indicated Wednesday that he has no timeline for appointing a permanent director for the Office of Long Term Planning and Sustainability, an office created by former mayor Michael Bloomberg to prepare for the effects of climate change.

"The work that office does is being handled by (mayoral advisor) Bill Goldstein and (OLTPS acting director) Dan Zarrilli ... that work is continuing intensely," de Blasio said when asked about the position during a press conference. "The team we have now is already putting that underway. We'll add additional personnel over time."

Zarrilli also heads the mayor's newly created Office of Recovery and Resiliency, and along with Goldstein recently rolled out an aggressive plan to retrofit all city buildings for energy efficiency. The retrofits are part of an overall plan to reduce carbon emissions by 80 percent by 2050.

De Blasio has faced criticism from environmental groups for not moving quickly enough to name a full-time OLTPS director, but much of the concern was mollified by the mayor's energy retrofit plan.

Michael,

I disagree. As the Mayor says to me all of the time, do what you need to do to get your job done. The invite coming from me raises my profile among the recipients, I am a senior staff member and I am responsible for the Host Committee and its commitment to the DNC. The invite clearly says the Mayor is doing the inviting and having the email come for me would simply help me do my job.

MEMO

Date: September 25, 2014

RE: Proposed Ideas for U.S. Conference of Mayors Cities of Opportunity Task Force to Support Fast-Food Workers' Movement for $15/hour and a Union

By publicly supporting the fast food workers' organizing movement for $15/hour and the right to form a union without retaliation, The U.S. Conference of Mayors' Cities of Opportunity Task Force could make a powerful statement in support of increased economic opportunity for workers and communities in cities nationwide.

Proposed public activities could include:

1. Mayors de Blasio and Johnson moderate a panel or hold a press conference with fast-food workers at the winter meeting of the U.S. Conference of Mayors (Jan. 21).
2. Mayors release a letter to McDonalds highlighting the role that the company must play in mitigating the harmful impact of record inequality today.
3. Mayors hold Economic Opportunity community roundtables featuring fast food workers and other workers.
4. Mayor participate in "walk-a-day in my shoes" events with fast food workers in their cities.
5. Mayors participate in City Hall press events/rallies with fast-food workers and community leaders.
6. Mayors together or on a coordinated day visit fast-food restaurants to tell workers they support their cause.
7. The Task Force releases a report documenting how a $15 per hour wage at the top fast-food companies would stimulate the local economy. The report could contain local data on poverty rates, demographic data, and other key details of the local fast-food workforce.

8. The U.S. Conference of Mayors, or the Cities of Opportunity Task Force, issues a public statement in support of fast-food workers when they are on strike.
9. Task Force members join workers on strike lines in their cities.
10. A national op-ed from Mayor de Blasio and another Task Force member framing the importance of the fast-food workers' movement to cities around the country.
11. A series of local op-eds from mayors in their cities on the importance of the fast-food workers' movement to the local economy.
12. Task Force members accompany workers in walking back to their jobs on the day after a strike.
13. Place a paid ad in USA Today announcing mayors' support of $15 per hour and a union for fast-food workers.

Jonathan,

So good to speak yesterday!

Thanks for everything you do for us. As I mentioned we are launching a new project to explore creating a best-in-class infrastructure for identifying and training diverse, high-potential talent within city agencies and to position that talent for future senior-level government roles.

We've created the attached plan and I wonder if you'd take a look? I'd really value your feedback. The Mayor's Fund would like to start pitching the idea to foundations and firms that might be interested partners -- your candid thoughts on framing and positioning would be so valuable.

Have a good evening,
Chloe

MAKING THE CASE FOR LEADERSHIP DIVERSITY STRATEGIES IN NEW YORK CITY GOVERNMENT

Prepared by the Mayor's Office of Appointments

Introduction

Equity as a defining characteristic of the de Blasio Administration creates an opportunity for the transformation and repositioning of leadership diversity as an essential lever of change in advancing the Mayor's agenda.

A diverse cohort of senior leaders among the city's mayoral agencies and offices is needed to execute the strategic policy shift envisioned by the Mayor.

The Mayor's 2014 State of the City address re-affirmed his strong commitment to diversity and inclusion within city government and firm belief that the future and stability of this increasingly multicultural city depends on this dynamic.

The Mayoral Vision for Government Leadership

“Our public employees represent a thread that runs through this Administration—a belief that public service is a noble calling—that part of what makes New York special is helping our neighbors navigate life’s challenges, big and small. New York’s drive and diversity are unparalleled in this country, and we have appointed a City Administration that proves it—putting our best women and men in charge of delivering city services with efficiency and integrity. This is a team that knows how to execute its core responsibilities—while never losing sight of the fact that we’re called to be part of a larger mission as well. We must lay the foundation now for the strength and stability of New York’s future... a future of greater equality and opportunity.”

Mayor Bill de Blasio

State of the City Address

February 11, 2014

The Path to Leadership Diversity and Talent Development

The path towards building a diverse leadership cohort in government begins with a vision for Equity and Inclusion

...Followed by an in-depth workforce analysis to gain a greater understanding of who is in leadership and whether that profile is consistent with principles of Diversity, Inclusion and Opportunity

...And a comprehensive assessment of workforce management protocols regarding talent recruitment, performance evaluation, and formalized training in leadership behaviors and diversity awareness, in order to develop a Plan of Action.

Relevant City Workforce Benchmarks

Statistical benchmarks highlighting certain demographic flashpoints within the municipal workforce's leadership strata provide a valuable framework for juxtaposing the Mayor's vision and equity agenda with the reality of workforce patterns that reveal:

- 1) The historical exclusion of certain racial, ethnic, and gender groups from career advancement and fluidity and;
- 2) The concentration of certain groups at specific agencies or within low-level functional segments.

New York City's Municipal Workforce Overview:

Headcount, Race, Ethnicity, and Managerial Status

The Challenge

The Mayor's vision necessitates an integrated, enterprise-wide strategy of values and practices that focus on recruiting and retaining excellent diverse talent.

The data suggests that in order for the Mayor's vision of leadership diversity to be actualized throughout mayoral agencies, a plan of action that challenges historical patterns and creates a new pathway for inclusive advancement and opportunity is imperative.

STRATEGIC LEVERS FOR CHANGE

Leveraging the Mayoral vision, credibility, relationships and networks of the Administration's senior leaders and City Hall advisors within the community and workplace to create agency buy-in and common ground on the issue of leadership diversity

Workforce analytics capacity is well-established at DCAS and in the Mayor's Office of Operations. A data-driven process for looking at leadership diversity was initiated via a survey to agencies and new indicators for senior discretionary titles represent new data points in personnel analytics

Existing institutional models for leadership development (Eg.DCAS Leadership Academy) and diversity training among different agencies

CURRENT CHALLENGES

Focusing on organizational change and the diversity dividend of improved decision-making and innovation while constrained by the limited administrative bandwidth and time pressures caused by meeting agency mission priorities and stakeholder demands.

Integrating these metrics into agency succession planning protocols and creating new ones that promote accountability and mindful, inclusive talent strategies for recruitment and promotion

Standardizing inter-agency professional development norms for identifying and cultivating high-potentials. Absence of infrastructure or programming focused on creating a cohort of leaders who can operationalize diversity and inclusion in order to execute agency mission and talent practices

Reality

Vision

- Embedded strata of incumbents narrows senior-level leadership bandwidth, limited methodical pipeline talent development, no common vernacular or rubric for leadership indicators

- Unclear understanding among managers on how to advance on the leadership ladder

Problematic structural patterns and institutional processes reinforce the role of group privilege

Limited professional development pathways for high potentials, uneven opportunities for talent visibility

Cohesive model of managerial best practices for positioning diversity talent for leadership

Metrics and data-driven processes that enforce accountability, improved objectivity and leadership diversity outcomes

- Enterprise-wide norms and talent practices that promote and encourage leadership diversity

- Integration of workforce analytics into succession planning, assessing employee engagement

Creating a Leadership Diversity Model for City Government

The race & ethnicity data for senior titles within mayoral agencies calls for a leadership diversity plan of action that must address three crucial areas of office culture and environment:

Managerial practices that support inclusive advancement

Structural limitations (based on the organization's matrix) on broader career opportunities

Programmatic changes, including formal training aimed at providing guidance and coaching

The Pillars of Change

Managerial, Structural, Programmatic

Pathway to Change

Managerial: Promote elevation of diverse groups into the senior management and executive strata; address recruitment gaps; use 360-degree performance evaluations and interview panels; enhance mindful mentoring efforts; assess staff for leadership potential; and create high-visibility assignments for career progression.

Structural: Examine job descriptions and job title duties; implement workforce planning that examines retirement and turnover trends; improve transparency in advertising open positions; increase availability of management roles tied to advancement; and increase functional duties aligned with leadership growth.

Programmatic: In collaboration with DCAS, other agencies, and external, academic, and nonprofit partners, broaden the availability of relevant training programs for high-potentials; develop cohort groups based on title or job function; and create cross-agency leadership experiences and rotation assignment opportunities.

Existing Infrastructure for Promoting Leadership Diversity

Mayor's Office of Appointments (MOA)

- Mission-driven team that collaborates with commissioners and directors to help shape leadership teams, boards, and commissions charged with executing the Mayor's equity agenda.
- Manages resume talent bank for agency senior title searches.
- Prepares candidates and facilitates retention of top talent prospects.
- Provides access to quality, diverse candidates via central resume talent bank and extensive network of external professional affinity groups and organizations.

Department of Citywide Administrative Services (DCAS)

- Mission-driven team with a range of core functions that includes providing "critical resources and support" for city agency workforce needs in recruiting, hiring and training.
- Ensures that city agencies comply with City Charter Chapter 36, § 831 by submitting annual plans to Chief Diversity Officer that address diversity hiring.
- Oversees EEO training, created "Everybody Matters" training initiative, DCAS's Management trainee program, and skills-focused programs.

Individual Mayoral Agencies and Corporations

- Internal programs coordinated by individual agencies (including: EDC's Project Management boot camp, the hiring of agency-based Chief Diversity Officers, ACS' structural analysis of their interview-to-hire chain, and recruitment efforts targeting diverse candidates at DEP, DDC, DSNY).

Creation of a Comprehensive Strategy for Developing Talent

Based on Successful Academic, Public Sector, and Industry Best Practices

- ▶ MOA proposes a leadership development approach that closely complements the DCAS Management Trainee Program and curriculum, incorporates best practices from the Federal Office of Personnel Management leadership model for its Senior Executive Service, and collaborates with public sector and workforce management thought leaders, who have identified the following key program characteristics:
  1. Senior-level panel or executive resource group: 1) Delineates a standard set of criteria or rubric for leadership qualities (eg. strategic thinking, flexibility, resilience) and assessing potential. Group establishes a nomination and screening process that targets high-potential employees from the mid, junior, and senior staff levels; and 2) Group consults w/ thought partners from the academic or private sectors with expertise in management and leadership.
  2. Formalized, interactive classroom training and work experiences for high-potential employees that will provide theoretical and practical information, along with functional guidance on leading teams, influencing others, relationship and ally development, overseeing internal process and operations.
  3. Standardized workforce planning tools and analysis that will forecast vacancies in senior-level positions by tracking retirement data, senior staff turnover rates, and the length of time for mid and entry-level high potentials to be promoted into increasingly senior roles.
  4. A defined talent pipeline and network for high-potentials, who are eligible for recognition and selection for a cross-agency leadership development pilot (the “Mayoral Leadership Institute”) in collaboration with DCAS and existing agency programs. Federal and industry models, as well as thought leadership and best practices from academics and practitioners, will influence the pilot’s skill-building exercises, assignments, curricula, and programs. KEY GOALS include cohort cohesion, executive-level mentorship, and network-building with external and internal leaders.

Recommended First Steps

Convene a short-term Cross-Agency Task Force of senior leaders who will meet 3 times to define key short and long-term goals, establish targeted pilot priorities, methods of tracking progress, and identify key ambassadors to initiate movement among their peers:

Schedule a series of focus groups among Commissioners and their Deputies to hold “courageous conversations” about unconscious bias, the importance of diverse leadership in driving decision-making excellence, organizational effectiveness, community credibility, and cultural competency. Discuss ideas for succession planning, leadership opportunities via cross-agency rotations and assignments, formalized leadership training, case study exercises, and managerial processes to identify and mentor high-potentials.

Create an advisory panel of academic thought leaders, personnel practitioners, and other influentials to advise on best practices and guide program development and formal classroom training. Also consider creation of peer-to-peer mid-level employee boards that will offer consistent feedback on program effectiveness and outcomes, help with program planning, and the creation of job title and function-based affinity groups.

In collaboration with relevant agencies, organize a series of forums and panel discussions on a range of executive-level leadership competencies, including reputation management, leading change, and team-building. Implement a 3-month cross-agency Mayoral leadership pilot and rotation program for high-potentials, who will gain experience in change and team leadership via key assignments, and formal training on a range of leadership competencies.

SAMPLE AGENCY ACTION PLAN AND DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

Goals	Issues	Deliverables and Key Milestones	Completion Dates
Designate a leadership diversity planning committee comprised of accountability stakeholders from throughout the agency	Who are the accountability stakeholders in your agency? Who will be responsible for serving as ambassadors who lead the messaging for this effort at the agency? Who will be responsible for gaining staff buy-in and creating a sense of shared values regarding this effort? On what basis are internal candidates recommended for promotions to senior positions Are panel interviews used to vet candidates for senior roles Does the agency have a practice of choosing final hires from a diverse slate of position finalists?	As part of the agency’s strategic plan, include recommendations for strengthening the agency’s recruitment process for identifying and granting serious consideration to highly–qualified diversity candidates. Consult with the Mayor’s Office of Appointments to develop these recommendations.	30 days from the initial meeting date

Final Thoughts

Leadership development represents a key lever for advancing the Mayor's equity agenda and related policy initiatives in one of the most global centers in the world.

A standard model for promoting Leadership diversity should include active recruitment practices targeting external talent, top-down messaging from leadership diversity champions in support eliminating group identity as a barrier for cultivating internal talent for career mobility and implementing best-in-class talent practices that promote everyone equally and objectively within our mayoral agencies.

The conversation is an on-going one characterized by clear short and long-term objectives, the willingness to explore new ways to evaluate performance and talent, determining what leadership can look like and why, and communicating senior-level buy-in and benchmarking to assess organization progress. The end result is a leadership team capable of handling the complex and interconnected issues that impact New York City, greater effectiveness in meeting the needs of constituents, and signaling our city's strengths.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> I. <!--[endif]-->PURPOSE

YOU will join George Stephanopoulos on This Week Sunday news hour. This is an opportunity to continue the drumbeat on the election and showcase NYC's progressive leadership. In the wake of the Ferguson and Garner grand jury decisions, it is also an opportunity to demonstrate strong progressive leadership on complex issues (police and community relations).

Topics will include:

- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Governing progressively - Community/Police Relations
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->The future of the Democratic Party
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Immigration
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->DNC and presidential election 2016

BIO

George Stephanopoulos was born to first-generation Greek-American parents on February 10, 1961 in Fall River, Massachusetts. He began his career in Washington, D.C. as an aide to an Ohio Congressman and later helped with Bill Clinton's 1991 presidential campaign, becoming a trusted advisor post-election. Stephanopoulos eventually joined the staff of ABC News, serving as anchor for This Week and co-host of Good Morning America.

SHOW SNAPSHOT

NOTE: Estimate 20 questions

Anticipated questions on Garner include:

- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Is this a national movement moment:?
- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Will these protests breakthrough and create a new discussion or will people settle into their own camps?
- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->What is the role of the president in all this?
- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Body cameras?
- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Ray Kelly/ Giuliana/PBA comments (transcript at end)

- Sample recent questions on Ferguson:
  - Everyone's waiting for the grand jury to hear, what the final word from the grand jury is. Your FBI has warned about possible violence in the wake of that decision. What is your message to the people of Ferguson and others who are looking to protest?
  - Are you worried here?
  - One of your heroes, John Lewis, has suggested that if there's no indictment in this case, it would be a miscarriage of justice, and another turning point like Selma. Do you agree with that?
  - Do you think it would make sense for you to go to Ferguson after this decision?
  - What about the broader issues of race? I was struck by a poll I saw recently that said since 2009 the number of African Americans who think that race relations are getting better has actually gone down.
- Sample recent questions on immigration:
  - What are the consequences for the President for acting on immigration on his own?
- Sample recent questions on HRC and Elections:
  - Will you coordinate? Does she have your blessing to kind of separate when she needs to?
  - You still talk pretty regularly?
  - So give me a headline sentence. What was the message the voters were sending Tuesday night?
  - What is the memo you're going to write to the Democratic candidate in 2016 to say this is how you win in XX?

PROGRESSIVE MOVEMENT MESSAGES

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->We were once known as the party that responded directly to the needs in people's lives – now many can't tell you what Democrats actually stand for. That's a problem. By defining the problem bluntly and honestly, that's when solutions open up.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->When Democrats are bold; when we run on our progressive principles rather than run from them; when we choose to tackle the tough issues that are destroying the middle class and ignoring the working poor - we not only give people a sense of who we are as Democrats, we give them hope that we can actually make the changes they can see in their own lives.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->If you can't about people's real life concerns honestly, why should anyone believe you can fix it?

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Here is a party that for the last election refused to talk about the issues that really affect people--- race, immigration, income inequality-- why is it any surprise when they failed to galvanize votes?

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Income inequality, immigration, race – these are the very real issues that people grapple with at the kitchen table and they should be the issues that define us as democrats.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Too many politicians make decisions because they fear losing an election. That's the kind of cautious approach that breeds cynicism and fosters apathy.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->What Democrats really need to fear is this:
when we shy away from talking about the tough issues; when we tell ourselves that issues of race relations, income inequality, and corporate greed are too dicey to touch - we not only risk losing elections, we risk losing people's belief that we understand their lives.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->Across the country, families are crippled by low wages, few benefits, unaffordable housing, lack of Pre-K and after-school. If the next six years mirror the last six, the gap between the wealthiest Americans and everybody else could cement us as a Gilded Nation. That's morally wrong, and it's economically unsustainable. We must address it, and do it now.

<!--[if !supportLineBreakNewLine]-->

<!--[endif]-->

[ IF asked on HRC]

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->I'm not talking about any one candidate.... I'm saying this to all Democrats.

<!--[if !supportLineBreakNewLine]-->
<!--[endif]-->

PUBLIC SAFETY

- It has been a deeply emotional week for the Garner family and all New Yorkers. His death was a terrible tragedy that no family should have to endure.
- His death has put a spotlight on police-community relations and civil rights--- some of the most critical issues our nation faces today.
- What we've seen this week is proud and powerful tradition of expressing ourselves through non-violent protest --- I'm proud of the NYPD for its response as well. In a city of more than 8 million people, we saw minimal arrests and peaceful demonstrations.
- Commissioner Bratton is taking bold steps to reform community-police relations. Together we're committed to creating mutual respect between police and community, fairness and consistency.
  - Ended overuse of stop and frisk. First 3 quarters, number of stops down 79%. But the stops that are being made are more meaningful for public safety-- fewer stops, but more of the stops resulting in the arrest for a criminal offense (increase from 6% to 16-17% of stops resulting in an arrest for some type of offense)
  - Reduced arrests for low-level marijuana possession: In 2 weeks since new policy implemented, low-level marijuana stops down more than 60%
  - Immediately committed to retraining every single officer, all 35,000, with a special focus on use of force. More tools and training for conflict resolution.
  - And beginning to test the use of body cameras on police officers.
- These reforms are having an impact: from July 1 through November 30th, complaints lodged with Civilian Complaint Review Board declined 26% [ 1,813 complaints filed compared to the same period in 2013 when 2,450 complaints filed].
- What we're talking about here are centuries-old problems of racism and injustice; clearly there is always more to be done.
  - There are still wide disparities in income, employment, housing, education, and public health in this city.
  - And despite the enormous progress, the gap between law enforcement and our communities remains too large.

Q&A

Q:

You made some very personal comments this week, showing solidarity with the Garner family and communities of color who feel besieged by police aggression. But you oversee 35,000 police officers, and in that press conference, you never once talked about the thousands of officers who do a very dangerous job – and do it well – in order to keep Black, Latino, white, and Asian New Yorkers safe. Was that a mistake?

A:

- I spoke very clearly about Commissioner Bratton and the officers he commands – and I publicly praise their skill, their courage, and their tremendous work under extraordinarily difficult pressure to keep us safe.
- Unwavering respect for and pride in our law enforcement officers. THEY are the reason that we have seen a drop in murder, robberies, and almost every other category since I became mayor.
- I have never confused the hard work of the vast majority of police officers with the misguided actions of a few.
- Protests- Thousands of people took to the streets to make their voices heard. But they did so peacefully. There were arrests, to be sure. But New Yorkers spoke out for reform without violence or vandalism.
- That's a testament to the protestors, who know that change comes through activism, not violence. And it's ALSO a testament to our police officers, who kept the city safe while also respecting the rights of many, many hurt and angry people to demonstrate.

Q:

There's been a lot of talk about the Broken Windows theory of policing – targeting those who commit smaller crimes in hopes of preventing more serious crime. Eric Garner was breaking the law, selling loose cigarettes illegally. You and your police chief have defended Broken Windows as an appropriate method for policing.

The head of the police union criticized you – essentially saying that if you want police officers to do their jobs differently, to NOT crack down on smaller crimes – then it's up to you to tell them that – that you can't tell them to police a certain way, and then criticize them for doing their jobs. Is it fair to say you're trying to have it both ways?

A:

- Under my police chief, we are not only rethinking how we police – so that we target the actual bad guys; we are already implementing it.
- We came into office saying we'd eliminate the overuse of stop and frisk, which was unfairly targeting young men of color. We did that. 533,042 stop and frisks in 2012; 191,558 in 2013; only 38,456 so far during the first three quarters of 2014.
- Now, the critics said that was crazy – that crime would SOAR as a result. But the OPPOSITE has happened. Crime is down more than 4%.
- From arming police officers with new technologies like a GPS system to more quickly pinpoint the firing of an illegal gun; to pushing forward with body cameras; to a wholesale retraining of the entire police force so that they are protecting AND respecting the people they're sworn to serve.

Q:

But Broken Windows is Commissioner Bratton's baby. He applied it during the Giuliani era. Your critics on the Left have said that if you were serious about reforming a crackdown on petty crimes, you wouldn't have picked Bratton.

• A:

- Let me tell you something about Bill Bratton. I know this man, and I know his heart.
- And there is no police chief in the country who is more committed to building a stronger relationship between police and the people they serve.
- When he was chief of the LAPD, race relations were terribly frayed.
- Mentioned the reforms we've put in place to date.
- Also the way we're communicating with residents of our city. Commissioner Bratton has spoken publicly about rooting out racist cops.
- With all due respect to previous administrations, New Yorkers have never heard a police chief confront an issue like that so directly and with such unflinching resolve. And that sends a signal to our 35,000 police officers that we have great trust in them, but we also hold them to a high standard of conduct.

Q:

You've also been criticized by the Left for your actions on policing. The NYT has questioned Broken Windows, while others on the left have denounced it. You campaigned as a progressive reformer. Are you now sort of stuck between a rock and a hard place?

A:

- I am a product of movement politics. And let me explain what that means. It means you believe that the way to bring about real, substantive change is to push and push and push – not settle for half a loaf. You need to challenge those in power to do more to address big challenges.
- Today, I'm the one in power. So I have great respect and empathy for those who want me to produce more change and to do it faster. I don't dismiss that; I embrace it. It helps keep me focused on the core mission. I signed up for this job – and I am going to work as hard to deliver change from the inside as I did when I was on the outside.

Q:

Several times this week, you've mentioned racism as it relates to policing. The polls show that many people of color agree with you. But those same polls show that most white residents disagree. By talking about racism so frequently, don't you risk dividing the city – pitting white New Yorkers against Black and Latino New Yorkers?

A:

- To pretend like racism doesn't exist in our society today is the height of irresponsibility.
- And we're never going to eliminate it if we decide that it's a topic we can't even TALK about.
- And New Yorkers don't shy away from discussing the hard topics. We're a city of 8.4 million personalities, and the greatest diversity of any city in the country. We talk things out; we're real with each other; and we work together to solve problems. That's what New York is all about.

Q:

Rudy Giuliani accused you of racism and the PBA says that you unfairly targeted cops. How do you respond?

A:

- When Rudy Giuliani was mayor, our city was as racially divided as any point in my lifetime. He saw political utility in systematically shutting out leaders in the African American and Latino communities.
- Mike Bloomberg, with whom I've disagreed on many things, made great progress in repairing some of the damage done to race relations in New York during the Giuliani years – and I applaud him for that.
- I'm not going to shy away from having tough conversations about race and injustice. That's the only way we're going to move forward and make real progress.

Q:

Several members of Congress from New York, including the two Senators, criticized the grand jury for not indicting. You very deliberately stopped short of doing that. Were they wrong to judge the grand jury's decision?

A:

- I'm not going to speak to their individual decisions. I just believe that as Mayor, it's not appropriate for me to comment specifically on what the grand jury did.
- But as a New Yorker, as a father, and particularly as part of an interracial family, I know the anger and pain and frustration of millions of New Yorkers – and countless Americans across the country – and I know it in very personal terms.
- There are those who feel that the system is broken – that it continues to fail people from certain communities over and over and over again. And that has to change. And we will do everything in our power as an administration – but also as a city of 8.4 million New Yorkers – to change that.

Progress vs. Cuomo

Q: You wrote a passionate piece for Huffington Post about the need for the Democrats to stay left, yet you enthusiastically supported Governor Andrew Cuomo, who seems to take pleasure out of disappointing liberals. How can you be for both?

A:

- I have been unapologetic about wanting to move New York City in a bold, progressive direction. Best way to help the city is to support and work with Governor Cuomo.

Ray Kelly on CNN

Chris Cuomo: Let's bring in former New York City police commissioner Raymond Kelly. It's good to have you, commissioner. As always, thank you for being here. First, let's talk about how the protests are going in New York City. Do you believe that this is happening the right way here? Are the police doing the right thing? Are the protesters doing the right thing?

Ray Kelly: The right thing – that's an interesting question. Obviously they're tying up traffic. There's a lot of concern. There's a lot of emotion involved here. I think the police are doing a good job. I think sometimes you have to prevent people from blocking traffic or taking a bridge. And you know, that's something, I hope, the leadership is looking at doing. But what we've seen is the demonstrators able to take over streets and bridges for a significant period of time. That impacts on a lot of people's lives.

Cuomo: But what can you do without escalating the situation and turning it into something that is a real disaster?

Kelly: Well, they have made 100 arrests last evening so you can make arrests. But you don't always have to make arrests. The police department in New York is the biggest in the country – 35,000 uniformed officers. You can mass officers to prevent some of these things from happening.

Cuomo: Do you think it's wrong that they're taking to the streets and protesting over what happened?

Kelly: No, absolutely not. That's what we're all about here in this country. People have very deep concerns about two decisions – the Michael Brown and Eric Garner case. We understand that.

Cuomo: When you look at this Garner tape – you've seen it – when you look at what officers do in there, where you surprised there was no indictment?

Kelly: You can't put yourselves in the place of the grand jury. We weren't there. I don't know what they saw. I don't know if they did it frame by frame. I don't know what the officer said.

Cuomo: Do you think we should know?

Kelly: I'd like to know, and obviously New York law is different from Missouri law.

Cuomo: But he hasn't even asked – the prosecutor – he hasn't even asked the judge to release it.

Kelly: Well, he's asked for a portion of it. He got some information yesterday or the day before –

Cuomo: But he's not really going the disclosure route – you think they should be?

Kelly: Well, I think a – disjuncture – I'd like to see more information, yes.

Cuomo: Because there's something about it that doesn't make sense. When you just look at the video in real-time, it does look like he's choking the guy, he goes down –

Kelly: Well, I think it's important to remember a chokehold is restricted by an internal regulation. It is not against the law. In many police departments in the country, it's no problem. So, it is a regulation.

Cuomo: Right and it was very important to you. You were very out front about it – about why you didn't want it.

Kelly: Well, I banned the regulation – I put in the regulation about 20 years ago because we had a series of cases. No question about it, it is very sensitive when you go near somebody's neck. And it's resulted in the deaths of other people in the history of this department and other departments.

Cuomo: But where it's legal or not – I feel like we're getting caught in the weeds on this. He gets behind the guy, he chokes him, the guy goes down, he's saying he can't breathe, he dies. It just screams of excessive force.

Kelly: Well, again, we don't know exactly what was presented to the grand jury.

Cuomo: So then you get why this happened, and race comes up – unarmed black man, he's selling cigarettes – maybe, maybe not. Who knows if he even had the cigarettes there? That's unclear. And he winds up dying and this is what happens because blacks don't get fair treatment by the cops. It's a cultural problem. Do you accept that?

Kelly: Do I accept that as being a – I accept that as being clearly a perception on the part of a lot of people. There is a perception in the African-American community that they don't get fair treatment in many, many encounters with the police department. I would like to point out that in 2013, there was a poll of [inaudible] of the New York City police department. 70 percent of people approved of the actions of the NYPD, and it was at 58 percent in the African American community. So the notion that there is this great schism between the African American community and the NYPD, simply was not the case in 2013. Now, if you keep talking about it, yes, it will continue to fester and become more of a problem.

Cuomo: Do you think our talking about it is creating the problem or do you think there's a problem and we're talking about it?

Kelly: No, I think some politicians – and certainly in the campaign in 2013, it was made an issue. And it continues to be an issue in the political sphere. So, yeah I think it adds to the problem.

Cuomo: But do you think it's not just highlighting a reality – that cops in high-crime districts that tend to be high-minority districts, have a rougher and less dignified relationship with the police than let's say, where I am on Carnegie Hill.

Kelly: Well I don't think that's what the issue is, [inaudible] what people are saying. Is there tension in some minority communities between the police and the people who live there? Sure.

Cuomo: Can you change it?

Kelly: You can work to change it.

Cuomo: How?

Kelly: By more communication, by having a more diversified police force. The NYPD — the police officer rank — is a majority minority now. You have police officers in 106 countries, so a lot of effort has been made. I think we've made a lot of progress. Now when you have an Eric Garner case, when you have a Michael Brown case, it certainly sets us back significantly. But, in the big picture — certainly from my vantage point having been in the business 40 years — a lot of progress has been made.

Cuomo: And — so how do we improve? And you gotta deal with culture, you gotta deal with conversation with the community, you work for them not against them — what happens when the horrible happens? Do you think prosecutors should investigate their own cops.

Kelly: Prosecutors are elected — we have five district attorneys elected in New York City. They're representing the people. Now, in certain instances, I can see where you need a special prosecutor. But in normal cases — when I say normal cases, when there's some encounter between the police and members of minority community — I think the DA's can do the job.

Cuomo: But they're making their cases with these same men and women. I mean, these are their people. I mean, the guy out in Staten Island — these are his cops that he makes cases with all the time. And so he goes before the grand jury — do you think he's as aggressive with, you know, that defendant being a cop as he would be if it were Eric Garner. They usually go in there wanting an indictment — the grand jury is a tool of theirs, you know this.

Kelly: The district attorneys that are in New York City — the ones that I know — we all hold them to the highest standards and I think they do a terrific job. In certain instances, maybe it calls for a special prosecutor. I wouldn't say at any time there's a police investigation that you needed a special prosecutor — I don't think so. I think they'd be against it quite a bit.

Cuomo: A little inside baseball, but I think people were trying to figure out how this happened because it seems like probable cause was a bar you could have hopped over pretty easily here. What would happen in trial? Who knows. Staten Island — that's where this happened. They made a movie Cop Land, that was basically about Staten Island, that there's a lot of conservative people there, that there's a lot of first responder families, and that maybe if this had happened in another borough you would have gotten an indictment — but not there. Do you think there's anything to do?

Kelly: The grand jury, as I understand it — made up of 14 whites and nine, or eight, African-Americans. So that's pretty representative. And actually — the demographics of Staten Island — a larger percentage of whites than that jury reflected. So, I mean, I think that's a pretty reasonable construct of a grand jury to look at this case.

Cuomo: So you think, going forward, changes can be made? The first thing we've heard is three-day training for 22,000 cops and that's going to be a sweeping change. That's not going to be enough — that's just going a first step, right?

Kelly: Well, as far as training is concerned, I'd like to point out that the NYPD is the only major police department accredited by the commissioner on law enforcement accreditation. It took four years to do. It was renewed in 2009 and 2012. So, the training, I think, has been well done. Now, is this new training is going to make a difference? We'll see. I don't know who devised it. I don't know who put it together. I don't know what expert input we have. We'll have to see.

Cuomo: Could be something that just sounds good.

Kelly: You could talk about training and talk about it for quite a while. It's always the answers down the road.

Cuomo: Right? You started this conversation with, kind of, adding that a lot of politicians say this and now they're saying they've got the solution and it's in training. Do you think that the police can become scapegoats in a situation like this for politicians who don't want to deal with underlying social issues.

Kelly: Sure. Absolutely. We've seen that throughout the history of modern policing. The police are easy to bash. In this city, you have record low crime rates. Last year, we had 333 murders. In 1990, we had 2,245 murders and a million fewer people living in New York than we have now. The city is as safe as its ever been, yet people want to still blame the police of a myriad of things.

Cuomo: Push back is, well how did you get it that way? Part of it's going to be the economy, right? Whether it's stop and frisk — which you had very strong feelings about — or broken windows policy — which Bratton and you guys were architects of that — that the people who you police on that level pay too high a price for too small a crime. This guy was selling cigarettes and he winds up getting rushed by a handful of officers. He winds up dying — it's not worth it. Even if it reduces crime.

Kelly: People in these communities, I think, have a pretty strong relationship with the police, contrary to what you may see in the media. They need help — they want help. The president said the other day that communities of color need strong policing. And it has absolutely transformed neighborhoods throughout New York. You know that — you've been here your whole life. You know, neighborhoods that you'd never go to 20 years ago, now have million dollar condos in them. That's because of the low-levels of crime and the feeling of public safety.

Cuomo: You do not think that this should be representative of the NYPD overall? In terms of its reputation.

Kelly: What is representative?

Cuomo: The Eric Garner situation.

Kelly: New York City Police Department does terrific work every day and it's made this city, that was crime-ridden in 1990, the safest big city in America.

Cuomo: Commissioner Kelly, you're certainly a part of that legacy and we appreciate you being on New Day.

Kelly: Thanks, Chris.

Your Op-ed:

It's a time-honored tradition.

After months of covering the midterm elections through a prism of polls and tactics, pundits will shift their focus to the defeated party's so-called season of "soul-searching."

As a Democrat, I'm disappointed in last Tuesday's results. But as a progressive, I know my party need not search for its soul – but rather, its backbone.

The truth is that the Democratic Party has core values that are very much in sync with most Americans.

We believe in taking dead aim at the income inequality that infects our communities – from big cities like New York, to small towns and rural areas across the United States.

We believe that the wealthy should pay their fair share so we can lift people out of poverty and grow our middle class.

And we believe in rules that prevent big corporations and Wall Street banks from unraveling workers' pensions, suppressing employees' wages and benefits, and rigging the system to reward wealth instead of work.

This year, too many Democratic candidates lost sight of those core principles – opting instead to clip their progressive wings in deference to a conventional wisdom that says bold ideas aren't politically practical.

To working people, it showed Democratic weakness – a weak commitment to the change desperately sought by struggling families, and a weak alternative to a Republican philosophy that has held America back.

Bold, progressive ideas win elections.

Just ask Senator Al Franken, who has fought fearlessly to rein in Wall Street, and won by a larger margin on Tuesday than President Obama did in Minnesota in 2012.

Or Senator Jeff Merkley, who never backed away from his support for Obamacare – a federal program that is already working to reduce income inequality, and promises to do more to address the inequality crisis than anything out of Washington in generations. Merkley won re-election in Oregon by six points more than Obama won that state in 2012.

Then there's Governor Jerry Brown, who cruised to re-election after championing – and winning – a millionaire's tax that dedicated funding to California's public schools.

And don't forget Governor Dan Malloy – who was written off by so many in his re-election bid in Connecticut. Malloy raised taxes so he could invest more in education each year (at a time when other Governors were slashing education to close yawning budget gaps). Malloy passed earned sick time and a minimum wage hike. And in his re-election bid, he proudly stood alongside President Obama.

Malloy not only lived to tell about it on Tuesday, he increased his margin of victory in a rematch with his 2010 Republican opponent.

Critics will point to competitive Senate races in Kentucky, Arkansas, and North Carolina as places where such progressive policies would all but ensure Democrats' defeat.

Our question is: how would they know?

In those states, Democratic candidates didn't say much about progressive taxation, expanding health and retirement benefits, or implementing anti-poverty efforts like universal pre-k or affordable housing.

In Kentucky, more than 413,000 residents have signed up for Obamacare – making it one of the program's most notable success stories. Arkansas had the nation's fourth highest poverty rate last year, at 19.7%. In North Carolina – nearly 60% of three-and-four-year olds are not enrolled in pre-k. What were the Democratic candidates offering voters there?

We saw photo-ops with candidates firing their rifles of choice; witnessed rhetorical gymnastics about how different they were from Obama; and watched televised debates dominated by empty attacks on the Koch Brothers' influence on campaigns, rather than policies requiring billionaires like the Kochs to pay their fair share in taxes to fund programs benefiting working people.

I'm not blaming the individual candidates here. The strategies they employed are largely the making of Washington insiders who force-feed message points on candidates under threat of being written off by their national party infrastructure.

But we've tried it the Washington way time and time again – and seen the result. It's time for a bold, new approach – with campaign messages that are rooted in local concerns and core party principles; ideas that are morally just, intellectually honest, and sound public policy. In other words, a campaign plan that gives voters some credit, and has a real chance of success at the polls.

Acknowledging the need to address income inequality helps win elections. Want proof? Look at the Republicans. In several contests where the GOP prevailed last Tuesday, candidates spoke directly to voters' concerns on issues like poverty, wage equality, and underemployment.

And tackling inequality is not only good politics; it's good government.

In New York, progressive Democrats joined me in passing universal pre-k and an expansion of after-school programs. We are pursuing bold plans for building affordable housing. And we've taken decisive action to offer more people paid sick leave and living wages.

In Washington, Senator Elizabeth Warren and progressive Democrats have fought to better regulate the complex financial instruments at the heart of the 2008 fiscal meltdown, and have battled the big banks to allow students to refinance their college loans at current lower rates.

And the fight against inequality isn't limited to blue states. Right now, there's a fierce battle being waged on behalf of pre-k in dark-red Indiana. In Kentucky, Governor Beshear maintains wide support and popularity after publicly championing the benefits of Obamacare to the state. Last week, voters in Arkansas, Alaska, Nebraska, and South Dakota approved ballot measures to increase the minimum wage.

So where do Democrats go from here?

The 2016 presidential election is two years off, but will have a huge impact on the lives of America's middle-class and poor. Democrats simply cannot rely on shifting demographics and a badly damaged Republican brand to hold the White House and help countless Americans who are struggling.

We must demonstrate, from coast to coast, that we are a party dedicated to lifting people out of poverty; one committed to building a bigger and more durable middle-class; one that is unafraid to ask a little more from those at the very top – the wealthy individuals and big corporations who have not only rebounded from the depths of the Great Recession, but who've accumulated record new wealth.

This is a blueprint to revitalize the Democratic Party; to reenergize the everyday people whom we have always championed and stand up tall – with a backbone of steel – in what is sure to be a hard-fought contest for the direction our nation in 2016 and beyond

Mayor Bill de Blasio Delivers Remarks at the Labour Party Conference September 24, 2014

Remarks as Prepared for Delivery

It's such an honor to be here with Mr. Miliband and ALL the people who make this Labour Party what it is. From he and the other rising stars who will lead Labour to victory next year... to the everyday activists whose unflinching passion and energy will fuel the campaign.

Though I've seen your efforts mostly from afar, it's clear to me, even across five time zones and an ocean, that this group is working towards something special.... something important.

It's fitting that we find ourselves in Manchester. This city was at the forefront of the innovation and ingenuity that drove the Industrial Revolution, helping shape the contours of the modern economy that we know today.

It shares a special status in history with the city I love and am so honored to lead. Both are places where big ideas and raw grit have been honored and rewarded like few others in the world.

It is also among the first places in the world to foster a modern working class... and among the first where working people empowered themselves to take part in the political process. It's no wonder then that Manchester is a place where hard truths are deeply understood and spoken out.

I cannot imagine a more appropriate backdrop for this gathering because yours is a party BORN out of working people attaining the right to vote... a party that EXISTS to fight for working families and forcefully address their needs.

Labour has inclusiveness and progressiveness coded in its DNA... Yours is a party grounded in the idea that everyone's voice matters.... And that no one should be left behind.

THIS Labour Party is led by a new generation of progressive leaders and defined by bold ideas. You stand ready to ACT with a plan for a fairer, more prosperous United Kingdom.... And to FIGHT for an economy... a country... that works for working people.

THIS Labour Party hears the voices of the millions who feel like they are treading water... Working harder and harder but feeling less and less secure about the future.

And your party refuses to accept the politics of inertia... That resigned mindset that says the next generation is destined to do worse than this one.

By virtue of being in this room, you recognize that we owe it to our children to do better ... to live up to the most basic promise we make to the people we serve.

I say that as someone charged with the duty of overseeing New York's school system, where over one million children 18 and under learn and grow.

I also say it as a father of two beautiful children of my own, Dante and Chiara, who have attended those schools for most of their young lives.

There is NO duty more sacred than parenthood.

Nothing gives me more comfort... more joy... than watching my children grow, knowing they can be WHATEVER they want to be. The boundaries of their future are determined only by how hard they work and how big they dream.

If we accept a future – or a present – where parents can't look their kids in the eyes and tell them they have a shot at something better, then we break the promise of civilized society.... We deprive our children – AND their parents -- of so much.

Now, I've said that growing inequality is THE crisis of our time in New York City. It's true here as well.

The numbers speak for themselves.

In the UK, in 2011, the average income of an adult in the top 0.1 % (point one percent) was more than 70 times that of someone in the bottom 90%. [2011, World Income Database].

The Guardian recently reported that the five richest families in the UK have more wealth than the entire bottom 20% of the country.

And, as is the case in New York City, the trend has been moving sharply in the wrong direction. According to a study published by Oxfam, since the 1990s, incomes of the top 0.1% (point one percent) of Britons have grown four times faster than those of the bottom 90%.

Now, there's nothing wrong with attaining wealth. I'm happy to celebrate the success of those who've earned it. But this crisis is keeping so many from writing their OWN success stories.

This status quo offers only the narrowest path to opportunity. Instead, it leaves everyday working people caught in a cost-of-living crisis.

And let's be clear what we mean when we talk about a cost of living crisis. It's not a reference to the astonishingly high price of penthouse flats, Bentleys or five-star holidays.

The people who can afford THOSE luxuries, are in fact, doing quite well under this Conservative government.

But feeding a family, keeping a modest home that's lit and heated, securing a safe place for children to be while parents are hard at work... THESE things are becoming more and more costly. We're not talking about luxuries, or even conveniences, but the ESSENTIALS that people need to live.

LIVING itself is getting harder and harder for working families to afford. Not living WELL... just LIVING; just getting by.

And the price people pay isn't merely monetary.

You can see it in the tired eyes of the waitress whose SECOND job is preceded by a second SHIFT at her FIRST job....

In the shaky hand of the bus driver signing the paperwork for a payday loan....

In the clenched jaws and stiff lips of working parents mustering brave faces in front of their son and daughter... in the STRAIN that goes into just hiding the fear that they won't be able to attain a better life.

As wealth becomes more concentrated at the top, stories like these are becoming all too common.

If unaddressed, the crisis will become THE defining characteristic of our societies... It won't be prosperity or opportunity... tragically, it will be inequality and the cost-of-living crisis.

I know this Labour Party understands what's at stake.

I also know the weight of this moment can feel like a burden: the exasperation that comes from knowing the gravity of this threat – a generation at risk of being forsaken – at a time when so many seem unwilling to act in response.

The right side of history can feel like a lonely place. But it isn't. It never has been.

Rather, history itself tells us that people gravitate towards decency, inclusion and progress.

And you don't have to look back thousands of years to see that – go walk around the streets of Manchester... Go to a school, a church, a mosque... You can see the trust people put in one another every day; the value people place in simple moral action.

So why then is COLLECTIVE moral action often so difficult?

In the case of the inequality and cost-of-living crisis, part of the issue is scope: the problem seems so difficult, so deeply embedded, that good people can be tempted to throw their hands up and declare that nothing can be done about it.

But there's something else going on as well. As is the case with many injustices, there are people – small in number but oversized in power – who benefit from the status quo, and they work to maintain it. Their voices seem louder... more confident and authoritative... and those of everyday people get drowned out.

In this way, people are made to feel powerless... made to feel that their voice doesn't matter at all.

So at the same time that inequality is skyrocketing and the cost of living is overwhelming – something people can see and feel every day – we're told that just speaking of this problem is unconstructive, divisive... harmful, even.

You know that it isn't. So do the people of your country.

Part of your job then is to help them find their voice to say – together – that Britons deserve something better.

Sometimes people – good, hardworking people – need to hear the truth spoken before they feel comfortable speaking it themselves.

And there's so much power that comes from speaking the truth... especially from speaking HARD truths.

That's because the status quo gets perpetuated through a series of falsehoods...false CHOICES that assign mutual exclusivity to ideas that should be complementary.

We're told that prosperity can't be both great, and shared....

That you can't lift the floor for those struggling in a tough economy, and still balance a budget....

That those of us who serve can't expect to achieve anything at all if we dare to advance policies that are bold and morally right.

In the lead-up to the election for New York City Mayor last year, the voices of the status quo gave voters another false choice: support MY candidacy ... OR vote for someone with a real shot at winning.

Well, I am here before you today because the people of New York City rejected the lazy logic of false-choice politics.

I want to tell you how it happened.

I announced my candidacy for Mayor from the front steps of my home in Brooklyn in January 2013. A few hundred people were there with me... the earliest believers in our campaign.

We were brought together by a deep concern: that New York had become a Tale of Two Cities; a place where a few were doing very well, but millions of working people were struggling.

It threatened to degrade New York's status in the world.

The beacon of opportunity that for generations shone so brightly across-our-five-boroughs-and-out-into-the -world was dimming.

We saw it, we FELT it in our city.... Even if it was unspoken, we saw on our neighbors' faces: the weight of worry about a future of diminished possibilities.

And we knew the policies of the status quo were exacerbating the problem rather than addressing it.

But though our mission was in many ways somber, our mood that day was not. It was a grey, frigid afternoon, but the event had an aura of excitement and joy one would expect at a summer street party. It was no doubt a strange sight to those passing by.

There was a feeling that something special was happening that made the chill tolerable. It came from having found in one another a group of people who spoke the same truth about our Tale of Two Cities...the harm it was doing.... the threat it posed.

There was a sense of relief that came from learning we weren't alone in our beliefs... a lifting of lonely burdens.

There was a powerful sense of MISSION that came from accepting a mutual responsibility to act, together, against this scourge... and a heartfelt faith that victory was achievable, no matter the odds.

Now, the odds did appear quite long, at first. It felt like the total number of those in the city who had HEARD of me was limited to those standing in front of my home that day... And my house is not very big.

And not only were other candidates for mayor better known, they espoused ideas that were seen as more politically practical, hewing to the familiarity of the status quo.

But it was never my intention to nibble around the edges with policies of timid maintenance; I ran to take dead aim at the crisis of our time. And I became Mayor because everyday New Yorkers, too, were hungry for a clean break from the status quo.

Our campaign was powered by people of every race, every age, every income bracket. And yes, even many New Yorkers who had enjoyed great success joined our fight against rising inequality. They wanted the next generation of New Yorkers to have the same opportunities the city had given them.

We were a small group, at first, but as New Yorkers learned that we were fighting for a government that would represent THEIR values -- fairness, justice, real opportunity for all -- our campaign grew. And grew... And grew.

We worked -- together -- as activists, to spread the word.

And so, in living rooms and parks... on Twitter and Facebook... people were hearing from one another for the first time things they already knew in their own hearts to be true... and they were learning the POWER that could come when they themselves spoke out.

THAT is how in a matter of months we went from a few hundred souls gathered on that blustery Brooklyn day, to not just winning, but winning BIG on ELECTION day.

And our shared resolve to remake our city didn't end when the votes were tallied.

The same tenets that defined our campaign now drive our Administration: a constant push for bold action; a willingness to hear and speak hard truths; an agenda set by listening to the PEOPLE.

With regard to my absolute highest priority, that's meant working aggressively to secure unprecedented access to free, full day – FULL DAY – early education programs for 4-year-olds.

We did this because study after study shows the great equalizing effect of early education. But you don't need to read an academic journal to get that: we all know access to quality education does so much to determine a person's economic destiny... and as with most matters of destiny, timing is everything.

Now, to give you some context on the politics we faced when trying to expand full day early education for all families, I'd like to read you two assessments from New York newspapers, published almost exactly one year apart.

In September 2013, a few months before I was elected Mayor... the New York Daily News wrote QUOTE “[The] promise to create 48,000 educational slots for four-year-olds...has little chance of becoming a reality.”

Then, in September 2014, in The New York Times QUOTE “51,000 Answer de Blasio's Bell for New Pre-K.”

Now, the 51,000 there refers to the number of kids who have been signed up for these programs. That's three thousand MORE than the number said to be impossible just one year ago.

It also means that 51,000 beautiful children are on a better path to success... And all of their mothers and fathers... grandparents and guardians... they get to experience the comfort... the joy... that comes from seeing the shine of brighter futures.

It's hard to express how much that means for the working people of our city. But it's also not all we've done in our first few months in office.

We've launched a plan to secure affordable housing for 500,000 New Yorkers over the next decade. That's more than the total population of Bristol... Or of Miami, for anyone watching back home.

We ended what had been one of the saddest manifestations of inequality by reforming racially biased police practices so that ALL law-abiding New Yorkers are granted the basic right of walking down the street without fear of being hassled by authorities.

And we've done all of this while reaching agreement on a contract with our city teachers – educators who had gone without a contract for nearly five years. In all that time, the good men and women charged with safeguarding the futures of our children had enjoyed little security when it came to their own futures.

We made a deal grounded in partnership and mutual respect, because RESPECT for working men and women is a core principle that all GOOD governments live by. It was a fair deal for teachers – offering increased pay that they greatly deserved. But it also generated important savings that labor was a partner in achieving. Put simply: it was a good deal for the people of New York.

So if anyone tells you that a balanced budget and an agenda of economic fairness can't go hand-in-hand, tell them to come visit New York City.

Really, it's beautiful this time of year.

I notice so many similarities between the UK I see today and the New York where I stood on that cold afternoon and announced my candidacy.

It comes through so clearly, even across great physical distance: the people of the UK are ready for bold, progressive change.

And if we can make the strides that we've made in New York City from a campaign so humble in its origins, imagine the feats that can come from this great hall!

The work you have in front of you is so important. Here's the evidence of that: the other side is trying to talk you into underestimating the reach of the good you can do.

There is little basis for glib assertion from the Conservatives that a progressive agenda is narrow in terms of whose lives it would improve.

The opposite is true. Mounting inequality creates ripple effects that undermine our whole societies. Here's just one example of how:

The Financial Times recently concluded that the income gap between America's richest and poorest metropolitan regions is not only the widest it has ever been, but that this phenomenon was QUOTE "shaping an uneven housing recovery that threatens to hold back the broader revival of the world's largest economy."

In an increasingly interconnected world, a system grounded in exclusivity is not sustainable for ANYONE, including those at the very top.

But that also means a progressive agenda has the power to help EVERYONE, whether your opponents acknowledge it or not.

Don't hold your breath waiting for this conservative government to do that. Their top-down policies are making things harder for working people every day.

Among the many ways they've aggravated the wounds of this crisis, the most painful might be their tax policy.

Instead of giving working families the leg-up they deserve, they gave huge tax cuts to the wealthiest with the vague hope that money would magically trickle down to everyone else. In my country, that's an approach we call voodoo economics.

I have no doubt the word "voodoo" sounds more elegant in a British accent than an American one, but in any intonation, we know it's a policy that doesn't work.

So let me tell you about what does work. And you don't have to look far to see it. In fact, you heard it at your own conference last evening.

Ed Miliband has so clearly articulated both the challenges, and the opportunities this moment in history creates for the British people.

He knows that a cautious approach won't do when it comes to addressing the crisis of our time. He has a BOLD vision for big change. As he said last evening: "I'm not talking about changing a policy or simply a different programme, but something that is bigger: transforming the idea and ethic of how our country is run."

And he knows well what needs to be done. As he told this conference LAST YEAR: "We have to rebuild anew One Nation. An economy built on your success, a society based on your values, a politics that hears your voice – rich and poor alike – accepting their responsibilities to each other."

Ed Miliband will be a Prime Minister for Britons with second jobs, not just those with second homes.

Ed Miliband understands -- this Labour Party understands – the true cost of a status quo that puts a barrier between working people and prosperity.

And this Labour Party not only has the right values, it has an agenda that translates values into action. Not political talk, but a real plan that reforms the crux of the economy.

Labour has a plan for a tax policy that rewards hard work over existing wealth and power. A plan to end the current government's tax cut for the wealthiest and instead give tax relief to 24 million middle and working class people....

A plan that protects and STRENGTHENS – not curtails – the NHS so that quality healthcare remains a right and not a privilege...

A plan that puts working people ahead of big corporations by controlling energy costs, and taking unprecedented steps to make housing more affordable.

And a plan that significantly increases – to 25 hours a week – free child care to working parents of 3- and 4-year olds, so that ALL kids can get on a path to success and opportunity early.

I speak from personal experience when I say that this initiative in particular has the power to lift lives like few others that governments can implement. And it will make such a difference for so many children, and for their parents.

Your agenda is a blueprint of what a fairer, more prosperous, STRONGER United Kingdom will look like.

That is not only why you MUST win, it is why you WILL win!

The upcoming election represents a choice for the people of your country: build a United Kingdom that rewards hard work and ensures the next generation does better... Or continue down a path of growing inequality and rising cost of living.

To me, that choice is very clear, as I know it is to the people in this room... and as I know it will become to everyday people across this country.

But to those on the other side, who argue things work BETTER when opportunity is scarce and exclusive, I offer this thought: not even DARWIN was a social Darwinist.

Indeed, Charles Darwin, one of the greatest minds that yours or any country ever produced, put it this way: "If the misery of the poor be caused not by the laws of nature, but by our institutions, great is our sin."

Among the cruelest false choices we are given is one that says we can only move forward if some are left behind. You don't need to accept that. No one should.

The work ahead of you will be anything but easy... I can assure you of that. That distinct histories written on opposite ends of an ocean leave us, at this moment, facing essentially the same crisis – underscores its profound scale.

But you have the power to overcome it.

If you reject the cold complacency of the status quo, its power will erode.

If you speak hard truths, others will listen.

If you empower the people of your great country to speak THEIR truths, to stand up and TO ACT in the face of this crisis, then there is so much good that you can achieve, together.

And I believe you will.

Thank you!

Jonathan,

Attached is an updated agenda and set of notes for tomorrow. It gets significantly more specific/content heavy than our last iteration. Please let us know if you have any questions and we will see you in the morning.

I'm looking forward to meeting you tomorrow.

Thanks so much,

Jackie

FLONYC Planning and Strategy Meeting #2

Friday, December 19, 2014

Notes from FLONYC Planning and Strategy Meeting #1

Four Areas of Focus

- Mental Health/Substance Abuse
  - Change the way we talk about mental health.
  - Help people identify culturally competent treatment.
  - Leverage the Duchess' visit to establish mental health as a signature issue.
- Domestic Violence Reduction
- Early Childhood Education (ages zero to three)
- Arts
  - Make Gracie Mansion a showcase for under-represented artists.

Strategies for making an impact in these areas

- More neighborhood events
- Stay focused
- Work in close coordination with relevant City agencies
- Be more selective when choosing events
- Push event organizers to be more creative
- Do a better job engaging clergy

Meeting #2, Planning for 2015

Goals for the meeting:

1. Workshop specific programs and goals within each focus area.
2. Clearly identify next steps by focus area.
3. Sketch 2015 Q1 plan.

Meeting Agenda:

9:30 AM	Welcome, Goals for the Meeting	CMC
9:35 AM	Introductions	Jonathan
9:40 AM	"Homework" Report Out	Around the Room
9:50 AM	Propose specific programs within each focus area	Roxanne/Jackie
10:00 AM	Breakout Groups	Jonathan
Breakouts will identify: (1) pros and cons of proposals, (2) critical omissions, (3) challenges and mitigations, (4) immediate next steps to flesh out each area.
10:30 AM	Report Out	Jonathan
10:45 AM	Q1 Planning	Jonathan/Jackie
11:15 AM	Next Steps/Action Items	Jonathan

Notes:

1. Workshop specific programs and goals within each focus area.

- Early Childhood Education:
- PRIMARY
  - What is she fighting for? Insuring all children show up to Pre-K with an equal chance. Giving every mother new mother in NY the information they need.
    - NYC Too Small To Fail pilot
      - CMC as ambassador/face of that pilot
      - Wrap “Talk/Speak/Sing” into broader joint pilot w/Clinton Foundation
      - Work with City agencies to add to the public affairs campaign a tool kit distribution and hospital education component.
- ADDITIONAL POTENTIAL OPTIONS
  - Engagement with Nurse-Family Partnership or other intervention service provider
  - Is there a way to structure/partner on a small pilot that can collect metrics and create evidence based practices?

- Domestic Violence:
- PRIMARY
  - What is she fighting for? Insuring survivors of Domestic Violence have access to the services they need. Expanding city services/increasing access to services for survivors of Domestic Violence.
    - Amplify and advocate for the Mayor’s Office to Combat Domestic Violence’s (OCDV) 2015 expansion priorities:
      - State Island Family Justice Center
      - Two Satellite Family Justice Centers
      - NYCHA Domestic Violence Response Team
      - Continued public facing outreach efforts
    - Leadership at Beijing +20 and UN Safe Cities Campaign
- ADDITIONAL POTENTIAL OPTIONS:
  - Facilitating additional resources for Community Based Organizations to increase their management/financial skills and infrastructure.
  - Addressing the need for additional Community Based Organizations working in target areas (ie: lack of a CBO serving DV survivors in the Caribbean community in BK).

- Mental Health:
- PRIMARY

- What is she fighting for? Setting a city wide agenda/galvanizing force for the right ways to integrate mental health services and awareness into the lives of New Yorkers. AND Promoting a rethinking of who is a mental health provider – increasing community based approach to provision of mental health.
  - Setting An Agenda
    - Strategic plan to align goals and vision (ie: London and Quebec plans)
    - Board of the Regional Planning Consortium (Medicaid Managed Behavior Health)
  - Expanding Access in the Community
    - Promoting Children Cabinet' initiative of parent coaching for 0-3 year olds.
    - School-based impulse and emotional self-care program by building a smarter mental health model in schools: prevention project in Bronx, HHC and Southern BK.
    - Train Cure Violence staff in psychotherapy methods (motivational interviewing)

2. Clearly identify next steps by focus area

For example:

- Finalize FLONYC focus to specific programmatic initiatives and goals by focus area.
- Develop messaging to be used immediately by FLONYC on each focus area – in advance of specific programmatic goals.
- Develop specific programmatic oriented short, mid and long term goals.
- Identify key Q1 2015 events and public opportunities.
- Identify key non agency partners and build relationships.
- Draft implementation plans around specific goals (well coordinated with relevant City agencies) by focus areas that include input from communications, scheduling, IGA and international affairs.
- Kick off Mental Health Report work
- Additional research into programmatic specifics in focus areas
- Craft Gracie Arts plan

3. 2015 Q1 CMC plan.

- January and February:
  - Increase CMC comfort level with and grounding in these issues with a focus on giving CMC opportunities to hear other people's personal stories and building familiarity with the work of community based organizations working on these issues.

- Increase CMC presence in outer boroughs and specific communities in Manhattan.
    - CMC “listening tour” type activities (some open, some closed press)
      - Roundtables, walk-throughs, visits with New Yorkers who are confronting challenges with/using city services around domestic violence, early childhood education and mental health/substance abuse.
      - Roundtables/facility tours with frontline service providers.
      - Meetings/Roundtables with City leaders and experts in each focus area.
      - Meeting w/bloggers and social media leaders focused on these areas.
  - Develop framing messaging for CMC to use immediately.
  - Develop specific programmatic/initiative goals.
  - Develop specific/content heavy messaging for each focus area.
  - Draft implementation plans.
  - Plan CMC engagement in Beijing +20.
  - Plan ways to showcase Women of the de Blasio Administration during Women’s History Month (March).
- March:
    - Leverage Women’s History month to showcase women of the de Blasio administration and the diversity of this administration’s appointments.
    - Ramp up CMC public events.
    - Launch some CMC branded initiatives in the focus areas (maybe not in each focus area, use January to determine right pacing).
- Open Q1 schedule related questions:
    - Needs for CMC time from Mayor’s Office.
    - Timing of announcements around new initiatives from the Mayor’s Fund aligned with CMC focus areas.
    - Timing of Children’s Cabinet initiatives.
    - Important “one off” events for CMC to attend.
    - Outside organizations’ events relevant to CMC focus areas that CMC should attend.

And yes, we are planning to assign groups. It is a small team today but we worried that in half an hour it would be a real challenge to discuss all three and we wanted substantive feedback on each of them. We also wanted it to feel like the whole team was getting some work done today which we thought happened more if you had some piece be small group work. If you feel strongly we could always combine the breakout group and report out time and do all three in the larger setting.

Am a little worried about that model but will roll with it if that's what you guys want to do. It's a relatively small group - feel like we could just talk through each one and make assignments for potentially offline breakouts. Just let me know a little more how you're thinking about this part.

Hello Everyone,

I wanted to follow up from our conversation on Thursday evening to put together the entire months of January and February. Can you please send to me directly your full time requests, mapped out week-by-week. As an example:

Week of January 11th – 10 Hours of Call Time
Week of January 11th – 5-7 Hours of Albany Relationship Building
Week of January 18th – 10 Hours of Workout

Please submit your plan by noon on Sunday. We will be doing a follow up call with the Mayor on Monday or Tuesday per his request.

I have Dean's requests already – so he gets an A+.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Best,

Michael

On a routine basis, I only need my half hour with him each week. More generally, I would like to hold an hour or two each week for substantive issue meetings that have some time sensitivity (i.e., we have to decide MTA strategy before the fare vote, he wants to discuss our CUNY options, we need to discuss upcoming labor issues, etc.). Hard to imagine government policy matters will not consume an hour a week or two a week of his time – we can't just do these on the fly. I will work to keep things within the limited timeframe allocated.

In the midst of a holiday season we look to with joy, New Yorkers from all walks of life are sharing in grief.

The tragic, senseless killings of NYPD officers Wenjian Liu and Rafael Ramos have shaken our city to its core. These proud and courageous public servants wanted nothing more than to honor their vow to protect and to serve. They wanted to keep their community safe from harm, and to continue the nearly unimaginable success that New York's Finest have achieved in driving crime in our city to a record low -- a five percent reduction in serious crime from last year, with the lowest number of homicides since the City began keeping records.

We are a city that mourns the loss of life. A city that expresses the raw emotion that we feel -- the anger, the sadness, the sense of injustice -- in different ways -- some constructive, some destructive.

But at this moment, we remember New York City is one family -- a family that will come together in common cause in light of the long view -- dedicated to building bridges of understanding that can and must prevent future tragedies from tearing us apart again.

Our police officers do a dangerous and essential, but often thankless job. And striking the right balance between rigorously protecting public safety and respecting individuals is part of what makes the job so challenging. It must be done with extraordinary care and restraint. In turn, our police deserve our gratitude and our respect.

It is also true that many times, young men of color are considered suspect simply because of how they look, and sometimes that leads to tragedies like the ones we've seen. That sense of distrust doesn't make policing any easier. It makes it more difficult.

The question we must ask ourselves is this: how do we keep EVERY New Yorker safe – whether black, white, Latino, or Asian; whether they wear a uniform, or a hoodie with baggy jeans; whether they are the targets of overaggressive policing, subjects of ugly, hate-filled taunts or despicable violent protests; or victims of a deranged individual who shamefully uses peaceful protests as a cover for his acts of unthinkable evil.

This tug between public safety and civil rights are not mutually exclusive. In fact, the opposite is true.

Building a partnership between police and the communities they serve is actually a strategy for driving crime down even further, and protecting both residents and officers alike.

When police see residents of their precincts as dedicated to the same mission – targeting violence and lawlessness – they are better able to serve the neighborhoods with the professionalism they exemplify. When neighbors see officers as respectful and restrained, they can assist law enforcement in the effort to lock up the criminals and avoid bad contacts with innocent individuals.

Our goal is tackling crime together, and building mutual trust. And that is the goal to which we as city must work.

We've made some early progress – reducing the number of stop-and-frisks from 700,000 two years ago to less than 50,000 today (CHECK). We've begun a thorough retraining of our police officers, from top to bottom. We've worked to free our cops from cumbersome and counterproductive ticket-writing quotas, and equip them instead with the tools they need to target dangerous crime – like using GPS to pinpoint gunshots, fitting police with body cameras, and tapping other technologies made possible by a XXX increase in the police budget. And we will be proposing measures to literally bring officers in closer regular contact with those they serve, offering subsidies to cops who choose to live in the city, and – like so many other New

Yorkers – struggle with the soaring cost of housing.

As a city, we must also rethink what we are asking our police department to do to keep us safe.

The old model has its roots in a New York City beset by thousands of murders a year; a crack cocaine epidemic; street corners that even our cops found too dangerous to enter.

We will never, ever return to those days. But neither will we let our memories of a bygone era predetermine the right way to police our streets in the modern era.

Today's NYPD is more diverse than ever before. Our most recent tragedy shined a light on that fact, with our Latino and Asian communities mourning the loss of officers who shared their ethnicity.

So we look to the city we hope to build – a new model, based upon the long view – a model centered on trust instead of fear. To that end, we will recognize and celebrate and promote police officers not simply by studying statistics and arrest numbers, but by gauging how the residents of a precinct view those that patrol their precinct. Is there a mutual respect between an officer and the neighborhood? Is law enforcement targeting those that present a real danger, while protecting the rights of those who present little or none?

At the same time, we will ask ourselves, as a city, whether we are doing everything in our power to protect our police – against disrespect, against hateful words and actions, against threats of violence.

That new model – one that promotes constructive dialogue, respectful policing, and the security of those we entrust to keep all of us safe – is the path to a stronger and more secure city.

This renewal of police-community relations will not happen overnight. After decades of distrust – the product of both disorder and disrespect – it will take years for us to get where we, as one city, need to go.

But we will get there -- not through vitriolic words or vicious scapegoating or violent protest – but through conversation and collaboration and a long view commitment to safety and justice for every New Yorker.

And we will get there together.

New Era of Policing Will Dawn
By Bill de Blasio
DRAFT

In the midst of a New Year that we look to with joy, New Yorkers from all walks of life are sharing in grief.

The tragic, senseless killings of NYPD officers Wenjian Liu and Rafael Ramos have shaken our city to its core. These proud and courageous public servants wanted nothing more than to honor their vow to protect and to serve with respect for New Yorkers.

They wanted to keep their community safe from harm, and to continue the nearly unimaginable success that New Yorkers and New York's Finest have achieved in driving crime in our city to a record low -- a nearly five percent reduction in serious crime from last year, with the lowest number of homicides since the City began keeping records.

We are a city that mourns the loss of life. A city that expresses the raw emotion that we feel -- the anger, the sadness, the sense of injustice -- in different ways -- some constructive, some destructive.

But at this moment, we remember New York City is one family -- a family that will come together in common cause in light of the new era we have forged together -- dedicated to building bridges of understanding that can and must prevent future tragedies from tearing us apart again.

Our police officers do a dangerous and essential, but often thankless job. And striking the right balance between rigorously protecting public safety and respecting individuals is part of what makes the job so challenging. It must be done with extraordinary care and restraint. In turn, our police deserve our gratitude and our respect.

It is also true that at times, people of color have felt suspect simply because of how they look. That sense of distrust doesn't make policing any easier. It makes it more difficult.

The question we must ask ourselves is this: how do we keep EVERY New Yorker safe -- whether they wear a suit and tie, a uniform, or a hoodie; whether they were the targets of stop and frisk policing, subjects of ugly, hate-filled taunts or despicable violent protests; or victims of a deranged individual who shamefully uses peaceful protests as a cover for his acts of unthinkable evil.

This tug between public safety and civil rights are not new nor are they mutually exclusive. In fact, the opposite is true.

Building a partnership between police and the communities they serve is actually a strategy for driving crime down even further, and protecting both residents and officers alike.

When police see residents of their precincts as dedicated to the same mission – targeting violence and lawlessness – they are better able to serve the neighborhoods with the professionalism they exemplify. When neighbors see officers as their partners in safety, they can assist law enforcement in the effort to lock up the criminals and avoid unnecessary contacts with innocent individuals.

Our goal is tackling crime together, and building mutual trust. And that is the goal to which we as city must work.

Together with America's finest cop, Commissioner Bill Bratton, we've made some early progress – reducing the number of stop-and-frisks from 700,000 two years ago to less than 50,000 today (CHECK). We've begun a thorough retraining of our police officers, from top to bottom. We've worked to free our cops from cumbersome and counterproductive ticket-writing quotas, and equip them instead with the tools they need to target dangerous crime – like using GPS to pinpoint gunshots, fitting police with body cameras, and tapping other technologies made possible by a XXX increase in the police budget.

And we will be proposing other measures this year to literally bring officers in closer regular contact with those they serve.

As a city, we must also rethink what we are asking our police department to do to keep us safe.

The old model has its roots in a New York City beset by thousands of murders a year; a crack cocaine epidemic; street corners that even our cops found too dangerous to enter.

We will never, ever return to those days. But neither will we let our memories of a bygone era predetermine the right way to police our streets in this new era.

Today's NYPD is more diverse than ever before. Our most recent tragedy shined a light on that fact, with our Latino and Asian communities mourning the loss of officers who shared their ethnicity.

So we look to the city we hope to build – a new model for a new era– a model centered on trust instead of fear. To that end, we will recognize and celebrate and promote police officers not simply by studying statistics and arrest numbers, but by gauging how the residents of a precinct view those that patrol their precinct. There will be mutual respect between an officer and the neighborhood. Law enforcement will target those that present a real danger, while protecting the rights of those who present little or none.

That new era model – one that promotes constructive dialogue, respectful policing, and the security of those we entrust to keep all of us safe – is the path to a stronger and more secure city.

This renewal of police-community relations will not happen overnight. And history has taught us that change can be difficult and painful. But we know, as this great city always has, that we advance only as one New York.

We will not fear this new era of policing. We will embrace it and discover a new dawn -- not through vitriolic words or vicious scapegoating or violent protest -- but through conversation and collaboration and a commitment to safety and justice for every New Yorker.

And we will get there together.

And striking the right balance between rigorously protecting public safety and respecting individuals is part of what makes the job so challenging. It must be done with extraordinary care and restraint. In turn, our police deserve our gratitude and our respect.

It is also true that many times, young men of color are considered suspect simply because of how they look, and sometimes that leads to tragedies like the ones we've seen. That sense of distrust doesn't make policing any easier. It makes it more difficult.

The question we must ask ourselves is this: how do we keep EVERY New Yorker safe – whether black, white, Latino, or Asian; whether they wear a uniform, or a hoodie with baggy jeans; whether they are the targets of overaggressive policing, subjects of ugly, hate-filled taunts or despicable violent protests; or victims of a deranged individual who shamefully uses peaceful protests as a cover for his acts of unthinkable evil.

This tug between public safety and civil rights are not mutually exclusive. In fact, the opposite is true.

Building a partnership between police and the communities they serve is actually a strategy for driving crime down even further, and protecting both residents and officers alike.

When police see residents of their precincts as dedicated to the same mission – targeting violence and lawlessness – they are better able to serve the neighborhoods with the professionalism they exemplify. When neighbors see officers as respectful and restrained, they can assist law enforcement in the effort to lock up the criminals and avoid bad contacts with innocent individuals.

Our goal is tackling crime together, and building mutual trust. And that is the goal to which we as city must work.

We've made some early progress – reducing the number of stop-and-frisks from 700,000 two years ago to less than 50,000 today (CHECK). We've begun a thorough retraining of our police officers, from top to bottom. We've worked to free our cops from cumbersome and counterproductive ticket-writing quotas, and equip them instead with the tools they need to target dangerous crime – like using GPS to pinpoint gunshots, fitting police with body cameras, and tapping other technologies made possible by a XXX increase in the police budget. And we will be proposing measures to literally bring officers in closer regular contact with those they serve, offering subsidies to cops who choose to live in the city, and – like so many other New Yorkers – struggle with the soaring cost of housing.

As a city, we must also rethink what we are asking our police department to do to keep us safe.

The old model has its roots in a New York City beset by thousands of murders a year; a crack cocaine epidemic; street corners that even our cops found too dangerous to enter.

We will never, ever return to those days. But neither will we let our memories of a bygone era predetermine the right way to police our streets in the modern era.

Today's NYPD is more diverse than ever before. Our most recent tragedy shined a light on that fact, with our Latino and Asian communities mourning the loss of officers who shared their ethnicity.

So we look to the city we hope to build – a new model, based upon the long view – a model centered on trust instead of fear. To that end, we will recognize and celebrate and promote police officers not simply by studying statistics and arrest numbers, but by gauging how the residents of a precinct view those that patrol their precinct. Is there a mutual respect between an officer and the neighborhood? Is law enforcement targeting those that present a real danger, while protecting the rights of those who present little or none?

At the same time, we will ask ourselves, as a city, whether we are doing everything in our power to protect our police – against disrespect, against hateful words and actions, against threats of violence.

That new model – one that promotes constructive dialogue, respectful policing, and the security of those we entrust to keep all of us safe – is the path to a stronger and more secure city.

This renewal of police-community relations will not happen overnight. After decades of distrust – the product of both disorder and disrespect – it will take years for us to get where we, as one city, need to go.

But we will get there -- not through vitriolic words or vicious scapegoating or violent protest – but through conversation and collaboration and a long view commitment to safety and justice for every New Yorker.

And we will get there together.

We have a iceberg ahead in receivership that we need to make sure we defeat or mitigate.

Mayor wants a briefing on receivership. Would like to go in with not just policy but also some set of action items.

Would like to gather folks before we meet with bdb to discuss:

- Policy ramifications: history in other places and in nys
- Contemplate worst case scenario - if passes, what can we do to prevent, mitigate
- Gov + Legislature: inside strategy
- Comms and organizing strategy which I know ptw has been thinking on

Karin + tony can u decide who from doe to pull in (maybe urs and josh?)

And if kosher wd like to pull jonathan in for meeting too.

Pls pull in whoever from your respective lines you'd also like, but I think most folks on this thread shd be in the convo.

Gabriel will herd cats. Thanks.

Subject: RE: Receivership/State takeover of Struggling schools

Options NYC Could Propose as Softeners:

NYC Exemptions

- Recreate District 85 (Renewal District) as “receivership district”—give Chancellor power to unilaterally move schools across district configurations; include language allowing DOE to partner with non-profit entities or universities
- Designate specific districts within NYC that could serve as takeover district for a low-performing district (e.g., District 2 takes over District 7, or schools within)
- NYC creates entity controlled by Mayor but independent of DOE to act as receiver
- Allow NYC to appoint receivers
  - Mayor, Chancellor, CUNY Chancellor (?) appoint receivers together
  - Mayor, Chancellor, SED Commissioner appoint receivers together
- Go big or go home: Seek language that does not allow state to carve out CSDs, so the state would either have to take over the entire NYC school system or leave it alone
  - Does not address individual school takeover issue
- Buy time for Renewal Schools: extend timeframe to mirror Massachusetts—five years before “turnaround” clauses take effect

Schools:

- Require parent vote for charter conversion
- State must take over whole campus, not individual schools on a campus

- o Can only take over a campus if all schools meet criteria

Receivership Criteria:

- Soften so improving schools not eligible for takeover (weak), count Quality Review

Consultative Process for Determining Receivership Status

- Require community input/vote on receivership status or on choice of receiver (unlikely)

State Takeover of Failing Schools

Exec Budget Proposal:

Districts in lowest 2.5% statewide and schools in lowest achieving 5%* can be designated for receivership by SED.

SED Commissioner can appoint person, another district, or a non-profit entity to take over the school/district.

Receiver has power to unilaterally change:

- budget
- curriculum
- collective bargaining agreements
- school schedules
- staffing
- school program offerings

Receiver will convert school to community school

Receiver may implement CTE, pre-K and K, other popular education programs

Schools in receivership will have priority for state grants

Receiver can convert school to charter status without vote of parents

* Defined by state tests, graduation rates, other performance data defined in regulations

Background:

State took over one district (Roosevelt, LI) in 2002 to resolve financial crisis. Relinquished state receivership in 2013 after $330M extra in state money, countless lawsuits and over a decade of contentious debates. Some improvement in outcomes (along with drastic drop in FRPL% among students).

MA turnaround model for failing schools touted as model—after 5 years of accountability status, district or school can be in “Turnaround,” with receiver appointed.

Currently, 31 states have takeover statutes (including NY based on Roosevelt) with mixed results; no clear effect on achievement.

Many small rural districts are fundamentally insolvent financially and educationally—cannot support school configurations they have but can’t bring selves to regionalize or close schools despite lower enrollment.

East Ramapo an embarrassment to state.

Upshot: In addition to political pressures and agendas, state takeover has policy appeal at state level

Full NYC exemption/carve out from law will not work bc 91 of 178 “failing schools” are in NYC

SED will likely interpret CSDs as districts for purposes of the statute.

Options NYC Could Propose as Softeners:

Districts

- Recreate District 85 (Renewal District) as “receivership district”—give Chancellor power to unilaterally move schools across district configurations; include language allowing DOE to partner with non-profit entities or universities
- Designate specific districts within NYC that could serve as takeover district for a low-performing district (e.g., District 2 takes over District 7, or schools within)
- Buy time for Renewal Schools: extend timeframe to mirror Massachusetts—five years before “turnaround”
- Allow NYC to appoint receivers
  - Mayor, Chancellor, CUNY Chancellor (?) appoint receivers together
  - Mayor, Chancellor, SED Commissioner appoint receivers together (less appetizing)
- Go big or go home: Seek language that does not allow state to carve out CSDs, so the state would either have to take over the entire NYC school system or leave it alone
  - Does not address individual school takeover issue

Schools:

By the Numbers:

178 “failing” schools listed by Gov’s office

91 are in NYC

48 of the NYC schools have been designated as failing (“Priority” or “Focus”) for 10+ years

11 of those are phasing out

23 are Renewal Schools

14 are improving rapidly and/or just missed the cutoff for Renewal Schools

NYC Renewal Schools

All 94 schools will receive the following support:

- Community Schools Model ($16.5M)
  - Full-time Resource Coordinator (hiring Spring 2015)
  - Local CBO engagement
  - Health services
  - Mental Health services
  - Specific supports and services tailored to school and community needs
- Extended Day
  - Additional hour of instructional time per day
    - Subject matter will be tailored to student needs
  - After-school offered to all students in the school
- Extended Year
  - Summer school offered to all students (five weeks)
- Principal Support
  - Mentor (half-time retired principal)
- Additional Professional Development
- Support to Strengthen Family Engagement

Schools in the School Renewal Plan are eligible for the following supports; the precise mix of supports will depend on the school's specific needs:

- Additional guidance counselors
- AIS (Academic Intervention Services) paraprofessionals
  - A new role for paras—providing individual and small group academic support
  - On background, this is quite a shift for UFT to allow paraprofessionals to do instructional work
- Curriculum review and realignment
- School Safety support if needed
- Additional PD for Staff: what is different here?
- Family Engagement and Support
- Ambassador Teams: Principal, 2 APs, Master Teachers come in as a team in cases where new leadership and expert teachers are needed

I'm bringing printouts of below

We have printouts of press plan and policy background materials?

Albany and Organizing

Status of current situation - The Governor is trying to cut a deal on education reforms - seeking handshake imminently
- Assembly will not include in one house budget resolution - it is unclear if the Senate will include in one house budget resolution - Need to stall; must prevent Assembly from cutting a deal - Every day is a gift/opportunity - mount strong opposition to receivership by 1) showing lawmakers and influencers that our plan and vision for fixing failing schools is excellent, and 2) by mobilizing opposition to receivership and showing why it would be a disaster for NYC. 3) organizing and empowering the city's Albany allies and influencers to take leadership roles in the fight.

Elected Engagement and Outside Mobilizing

- Target champions of public education - Cathy Nolan to lead coalition of senior and new members in Assembly - Use coalition to push back on proposal in legislative deliberations and in public events - Target Golden, Lanza, Felder on issue (failing schools in district?); exploit SED efficiency problems with special Ed and other issues they care about - Keep Senate Democratic Conference engaged and include in all activity - retail lobbying - brief anyone and everyone on why receivership doesn't work for NYC; widely distribute fact sheets - work with allies to mobilize upstate and suburban grassroots and local governments
- maximize teachers union potential to impact this issue
Week of March 9 - Circulate sign on statement for coalition and release to public
- line up members to speak on the floor during one house budget resolution passage on Thursday the 12th indicating glad receivership was rejected - Council/State Legislators Press Conf on City Hall Steps - Assembly presser w AQE in Albany with champions of public education - AQE presser with Bronx delegation scheduled for Friday March 13 - invite key electeds to round table on the 13th - introduce local council and local legislature resolutions
Week of March 16 - line up members on the education budget conference committee to speak out against receivership during deliberations
- arm legislative and fiscal committee staff with facts on why receivership does not work and educate them on the Mayor's school renewal plan
- bring doe and/or schools leaders to legislators to discuss our plan and its early successes
- electeds to your schools with SWAT team leaders facilitate elected involvement in hands off our schools local rallies at schools where possible - led by parents - Albany presser with superintendents and principals

Material needs for execution:
Fact sheet: how we are fixing our failing schools
Renewal czar and war room members to educate lawmakers
Fact sheet: failures of receivership
Fact sheet: schools on the takeover block: snapshots
School community members of turnaround schools that are a success to educate lawmakers

We have a iceberg ahead in receivership that we need to make sure we defeat or mitigate.

Mayor wants a briefing on receivership. Would like to go in with not just policy but also some set of action items.

Would like to gather folks before we meet with bdb to discuss:

- Policy ramifications: history in other places and in nys
- Contemplate worst case scenario - if passes, what can we do to prevent, mitigate
- Gov + Legislature: inside strategy
- Comms and organizing strategy which I know ptw has been thinking on

Karin + tony can u decide who from doe to pull in (maybe urs and josh?)

And if kosher wd like to pull jonathan in for meeting too.

Pls pull in whoever from your respective lines you'd also like, but I think most folks on this thread shd be in the convo.

Gabriel will herd cats. Thanks.

A New Challenge for Mayor Bill de Blasio: Paying for 2 Children in College

By MATT FLEGENHEIMER
and MICHAEL M. GRYNBAUM
APRIL 7, 2015

He lives rent-free in an Upper East Side mansion, owns two homes in a prime Brooklyn neighborhood and earns a six-figure salary supervising hundreds of thousands of employees.

But Mayor Bill de Blasio is now facing a hurdle familiar to many of his constituents: paying for his children's college educations.

Mr. de Blasio's son, Dante, a senior at Brooklyn Technical High School, is currently mulling offers from a short list of exclusive schools, with Yale and Brown among the front-runners, according to people familiar with his options.

And with Mr. de Blasio's daughter, Chiara, still attending college in California, not even the mayor of New York is immune, it seems, to seeking relief from the high cost of higher education.

"There's going to be a big challenge in figuring out financial aid and visits and all sorts of stuff," Mr. de Blasio said, when asked about Dante's plans at the end of an unrelated interview in his office last week.

Mr. de Blasio said he did not expect his son to decide on a school until later this month. Aides to the mayor declined to elaborate further on Dante's intentions or the family's financial considerations, saying they were private matters.

The soaring cost of college is often seized upon by Mr. de Blasio's fellow liberals, who call it both a symptom and a cause of the nation's rising inequality.

But the college process has cast Mayor de Blasio as a curious test case: His family is now affluent by most standards. Mr. de Blasio is paid $225,000 as mayor and the family receives tens of thousands of dollars in rental income from two properties in Park Slope, Brooklyn.

And yet, the de Blasio family's argument for aid would not be unreasonable, according to financial aid experts — a striking testament to the increasingly extreme costs of higher education.

The mayor's daughter, Chiara, attends Santa Clara University, a private Jesuit institution where tuition, room and board is roughly \$55,000 a year. If Dante were to attend Yale, for example, tuition, room and board would come to about \$60,000 a year.

Particularly with two children in college, the six-figure income "is not going to disqualify him from demonstrating need," said Kalman A. Chany, president of Campus Consultants, a firm based in Manhattan that advises families on financial aid.

And sky-high tuition has squeezed even upper middle-class families, said Mark Kantrowitz, the publisher of advisors.com, a financial aid website.

“When you have colleges that are charging 50, 60, $70,000 a year, everybody is going to struggle to pay for college,” he said.

But, Mr. Kantrowitz added of the mayor, “We’re still talking about someone whose income is pretty close to the top 1 percent.”

In 2013, the mayor and his wife, Chirlane McCray, earned $52,200 in rent from a modest duplex they own in Park Slope, a home once occupied by Mr. de Blasio’s mother. And the family rowhouse down the street, which the de Blasios left for Gracie Mansion in Manhattan, was rented last year at $4,975 a month. The combined value of the homes will reach an estimated $2.8 million in the upcoming tax year, according to the New York City Department of Finance.

That additional income, however, might be offset: On his tax return last year, for instance, Mr. de Blasio declared a $6,493 loss on one house after accounting for mortgage costs, depreciation and other expenses. Ms. McCray draws no salary as chairwoman of the city’s nonprofit arm.

Whatever his parents’ circumstances, Dante would appear an impressive applicant.

Dante, 17, a champion debater with a fondness for political philosophy, is by many accounts a dedicated student. During a family vacation in Rome last summer, he was spotted perusing a paperback by the contemporary Italian political theorist Giorgio Agamben.

If Dante decides on Brown, the mayor might find himself at visiting weekends with another notable New York politician.

Michaela Kennedy Cuomo, the 17-year-old daughter of Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo, plans to attend the Ivy League school this fall, joining her sister Mariah at the alma mater of their mother, Kerry Kennedy, and their cousin John F. Kennedy Jr.

The political progeny would join a long line of scions attracted to Brown’s brand of campus life. William H. Mondale took time off from classes there to help his father, Walter F. Mondale, campaign for president in 1984. Amy Carter, daughter of former President Jimmy Carter, was asked to leave Brown in 1987 for academic reasons; she later graduated from the Memphis College of Art.

Malia Obama, President Obama's daughter, was seen visiting Brown last month, part of an extensive tour that has also included Columbia, Harvard and Wesleyan University.

It remains unclear whether Dante will join their ranks. His father joked last week that he wanted "smoke, all sorts of stuff" to accompany the announcement of his son's choice.

"Let's get the staging going," Mr. de Blasio said in his office, smiling at a nearby aide. "I want heavy production values on this thing."

He likened the impending moment to LeBron James' famed television special, "The Decision," to announce his move from the Cleveland Cavaliers to the Miami Heat in 2010.

"Dante de Blasio wants to take his talents to ..." the mayor said, paraphrasing Mr. James's punch line.

In fact, the mystery has resonated even in the upper ranks of the political world.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, after an event with Ms. McCray in Brooklyn last week, was preparing to say goodbye when she paused for a final query, according to a person who witnessed their exchange.

Where, Mrs. Clinton asked, is Dante going to college?

The combined value of the homes will reach an estimated $2.8 million in the upcoming tax year, according to the New York City Department of Finance.

That additional income, however, might be offset: On his tax return last year, for instance, Mr. de Blasio declared a $6,493 loss on one house after accounting for mortgage costs, depreciation and other expenses. Ms. McCray draws no salary as chairwoman of the city's nonprofit arm.

Whatever his parents' circumstances, Dante would appear an impressive applicant.

Dante, 17, a champion debater with a fondness for political philosophy, is by many accounts a dedicated student. During a family vacation in Rome last summer, he was spotted perusing a paperback by the contemporary Italian political theorist Giorgio Agamben.

If Dante decides on Brown, the mayor might find himself at visiting weekends with another notable New York politician.

Michaela Kennedy Cuomo, the 17-year-old daughter of Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo, plans to attend the Ivy League school this fall, joining her sister Mariah at the alma mater of their mother, Kerry Kennedy, and their cousin John F. Kennedy Jr.

The political progeny would join a long line of scions attracted to Brown's brand of campus life. William H. Mondale took time off from classes there to help his father, Walter F. Mondale, campaign for president in 1984. Amy Carter, daughter of former President Jimmy Carter, was asked to leave Brown in 1987 for academic reasons; she later graduated from the Memphis College of Art.

Malia Obama, President Obama's daughter, was seen visiting Brown last month, part of an extensive tour that has also included Columbia, Harvard and Wesleyan University.

It remains unclear whether Dante will join their ranks. His father joked last week that he wanted "smoke, all sorts of stuff" to accompany the announcement of his son's choice.

"Let's get the staging going," Mr. de Blasio said in his office, smiling at a nearby aide. "I want heavy production values on this thing."

He likened the impending moment to LeBron James' famed television special, "The Decision," to announce his move from the Cleveland Cavaliers to the Miami Heat in 2010.

"Dante de Blasio wants to take his talents to ..." the mayor said, paraphrasing Mr. James's punch line.

In fact, the mystery has resonated even in the upper ranks of the political world.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, after an event with Ms. McCray in Brooklyn last week, was preparing to say goodbye when she paused for a final query, according to a person who witnessed their exchange.

Where, Mrs. Clinton asked, is Dante going to college?

It just dawned on me how totally fucked up it is that the Times has turned down the only 2 op-eds I've offered in 16 months, both on very weighty topics. I feel like challenging that to Arthur or to whoever makes sense. It's not cool that they won't allow the mayor of their city to ever have a chance to speak in his own voice. Pls advise. And separately, we should go do the editorial board in the third week of may. It's strange that we've only been in once

Sir,

Had Mahen's team run a search on Bloomberg op-eds in NYT when he was in office. Interestingly, of the ones they found, the op-eds were focused on national politics, not NYC announcements or changes. While that may be because that's where he chose to focus his op-ed time, it could also be an indication that they are looking for more national themes. Think the Warren/MBdB op-ed may be the test for us

Best,
Andrea

Kate: Good talking to you yesterday. I've reattached the invite letter, which includes details on the project and broad thinking on messaging. In terms of a potential event, here's what we were thinking:

Timing: A May or June groundbreaking would be timely, with two affordable buildings underway and a third ready to break ground.

Location: The affordable building ready to break ground (site F) has remarkable views of the water and skyline, and is adjacent to the park and the first affordable building, which broke ground 10 months ago and is close to topping out.

Speaking program: The more the merrier, but would think speakers would come from among this list:

City

- Mayor
- Deputy Mayor Glen
- Commissioner Been
- Commissioner Rodney
- Commissioner Silver

Developers

- George Klein
- Ron Moelis

Local electeds

- CM Levin
- AM Lentol
- Sen. Dilan
- BP Adams
- Cong. Maloney

Community

- Open Space Alliance
- Others TBD

March 6, 2015

The Honorable Bill de Blasio
Mayor of the City of New York
City Hall
New York, New York 10007

Dear Mayor de Blasio:

I would like to invite you to the groundbreaking of the first two affordable buildings at Greenpoint Landing, a new 5,500 unit, 22-acre development that will transform an underutilized half-mile section of the northernmost Brooklyn waterfront in Greenpoint into a vibrant mixed-income community.

Greenpoint Landing delivers on longstanding promises to the neighborhood, leveraging City investments in parks and schools and exemplifying your Administration's approach to integrating affordable housing into a comprehensive community plan:

- Affordable housing: Greenpoint Landing will include a total of 1,400 affordable units. By kicking off the project with two 100% permanently affordable buildings in partnership with L+M Development Partners, we are prioritizing 200 low- and moderate-income units in this community. We anticipate beginning construction on another 103-unit 100% affordable building by June of 2015, also in partnership with L+M.
- Open space and waterfront access: Greenpoint Landing will develop a total of four acres of new public open space, designed by James Corner Field Operations. Their innovative and resilient design blends a 40' wide promenade with larger-scale amenity areas, such as a great lawn, picnic area and a pier. Greenpoint Landing has committed $5.5 million to the construction of Newtown Barge Park – a 2.5 acre City park in the northernmost section of Greenpoint that will begin construction in 2015.
- Infrastructure: The open space will complement DOT's upcoming reconstruction of West Street as a greenway with bicycle lanes, completely overhauling an area in need of improved public infrastructure.

- A new public school: Greenpoint Landing is donating land to the City for a new 640-seat pre-k through 8th grade District 14 public school.
- High-quality contextual architecture: This first phase of development – both affordable and market-rate – is being designed by Gary Handel of Handel Architects and will reflect a modern Brooklyn industrial aesthetic.
- New opportunities for small neighborhood retailers: The retail on site will bring new opportunities for local community retailers.

This is a moment to celebrate years of planning as several projects get underway. Greenpoint Landing, in partnership with L+M Development (led by Ron Moelis), plans to hold the affordable housing groundbreaking in this spring, and can be flexible on the date based on your schedule. We hope you will join us for this important milestone for the Greenpoint community.

That's up to Phil. The only promise I made to the still somewhat Times-deferential Warren Team is that we wouldn't raise holy hell over the Warren/de Blasio oped alone. (Unlike us, they are still hoping to cultivate a relationship there the More Flies with Honey way - at least that's my guess.)

Flashback: May 2003. Quinnipiac. Job performance: 32% for MRB.

BUDGETS IN CRISIS: CITY HALL MEMO

BUDGETS IN CRISIS: CITY HALL MEMO; No Politician? The Polls Agree With the Mayor

By JENNIFER STEINHAUER

Correction Appended

The prevailing political theory at City Hall goes something like this: Politics do not matter. If Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg remains true to his convictions, resists the taint of special interest groups and makes tough choices that keep the city sound, New Yorkers will appreciate and reward him.

But that theory is being severely tested as Mr. Bloomberg finds himself in what appears to be the lowest point in his 16-month mayoralty, based on a chorus of critics and the latest Quinnipiac University poll.

Last week, the mayor was rebuffed in his months-long effort to extract a commuter tax from leaders in Albany, and was forced to impose tax increases on his own constituents in its stead.

Mr. Bloomberg's relationship with the labor unions is so tense that labor experts struggle for a comparison. The strain was underscored this week by a threat from the head of the teachers' union to withdraw support for the mayor's sweeping changes to the public education system. His reorganization of the school system is also the subject of a lawsuit filed by some state legislators who originally supported him.

Advocates for the poor, who were thrilled to have an open reception from Mr. Bloomberg after years of being snubbed by Rudolph W. Giuliani's administration, are now bitterly denouncing the current mayor for excluding them from any role in key policy decisions.

Business leaders, essentially Mr. Bloomberg's peers, are now privately grumbling that they detest the mayor's latest tax policies.

Yesterday, the cloud over City Hall darkened when the Quinnipiac poll was released showing that only 32 percent of New York City voters polled approve of the mayor's job performance.

The poll, coming in the wake of a six-month whirlwind of increases in taxes and transit fares and higher prices on regulated rental apartments, is Mr. Bloomberg's worst showing yet. The polls have fallen almost steadily since February 2002, when 65 percent of New Yorkers approved of the job he was doing.

In the insult-to-injury category, while 89 percent of polled New Yorkers said that Mr. Bloomberg is intelligent, only 40 percent would savor a dinner invitation with the mayor, a man who is feverishly social and sought out by a broad swath of New York society.

While 61 percent of those questioned said that the mayor had "strong leadership qualities," only 33 percent agreed that he "cares about the needs and problems of people like you," which may speak to Mr. Bloomberg's inability to communicate his broader mayoral goals.

Quinnipiac surveyed 757 registered voters in the city from April 29 to May 5. On May 2, the outlines of a plan to raise sales and income taxes became known. The margin of sampling error for the poll is plus or minus 4 percentage points.

If any of this ruffles the feathers of Mr. Bloomberg -- who came into office with the stated goal of "making a difference" absent any deeper political ambitions -- he seems not to show it. Yesterday, during a news conference at City Hall, he sniped at a reporter who asked about the cost of a new mobile emergency command center, but let questions about the poll roll off him like a spritz of Evian at the beach.

"You got to do what's right," Mr. Bloomberg said. "And when I go home at night I can look in the mirror and say, 'I stood up and I made the right decisions.' "

Mr. Bloomberg, who has said he intends to run for another term, added: "The public in the end will take a look and say, 'There was somebody that made the right decision, the city's better.' And whether they want to have dinner with me or not, I don't know."

Mr. Bloomberg added that he would like to break bread with Bono, whom he met at the TriBeCa Film Festival the night before, and said he assumed that the singer shared that desire.

The fact that Mr. Bloomberg grabbed for Bono's name underscores a paradox of his tenure that has haunted him since the first day he began to make budget cuts.

The mayor's vast personal fortune led him to take the ultimate leap into public service, working for a dollar a year at one of the hardest political jobs in America. By his own account, it was another leg of his broader philanthropic vision.

His billions enabled him to run successfully for mayor and even support city programs out of his own pocket. (He has contributed millions of dollars to cultural and other city institutions.)

But his wealth has also created an intractable chasm between himself and the majority of the eight million people he serves who are now sitting by as their taxes rise, their services are cut and they are given little reason to expect an economic recovery any time soon.

"I just don't feel the mayor understands poor people," said Christine Cutchin, 75, who founded the Roundtable for Seniors, a recreational center in Bushwick, Brooklyn, that is scheduled for closing in the budget cuts. When it was pointed out that every imaginable constituent was being hit in the current budget plans, she shook her head emphatically and said, "These seniors have already paid their dues."

Aides to the mayor uphold his conviction that voters will get over their angst over increased rent, property, water, cigarette and income tax bills. "He's also been at this long enough to know that polls don't measure your accomplishments," said Edward Skyler, the mayor's press secretary. "They measure moods. It's not personal because the people who are being polled don't know him."

But it is clear that some New Yorkers who have gotten to know the mayor, at least professionally, are also less than enamored with him. Union officials and their members are battling with the mayor over budget issues, and many of them are deeply offended that Mr. Bloomberg, in their view, has written them off as a costly distraction.

"There has been a real change of heart among the union leaders toward the mayor," said Randi Weingarten, who is head of the Municipal Labor Council and the teachers' union. "He trashes us and trashes the work force."

Advocates for the poor and downtrodden, who have been welcomed into City Hall, are now crying bait and switch. They say they are often left out of the loop or even duped regarding the administration's plans for homeless families, AIDS services and other policy matters.

"On a certain level the Giuliani administration had more integrity than the Bloomberg administration," said Charles King, the co-president of Housing Works, an AIDS advocacy group. "The Giuliani administration was pretty straightforward that they were going to do it their way without consultation with the community."

Mr. Skyler dismissed this talk. "We always welcome and solicit input, but ultimately the mayor is the one who needs to make the decisions," he said.

The press secretary was not terribly concerned with the fact that so few wanted to eat with the newly lithe mayor. "It's understandable," Mr. Skyler deadpanned. "Nobody likes to eat with somebody on a diet."

Sarah and Kara,

Many thanks for the terrific call this morning. Below are the requests we discussed pertaining to communications. As always, let me know of any questions or concerns. I very much look forward to working with you.

- Review the below text for our website and let us know of any concerns by May 15
- Provide the names of spokespeople you have in mind and their disciplines
- Provide the completed template press release from the communications toolkit to your Site Coordinators and me by May 22
- Feel free to send any ideas you would like to stress to media or stories/angles you believe would be of interest to them

New York, NY

New York City operates one of the nation's largest jail complexes, on Rikers Island in the East River.

New York City has seen a steep and sustained decline in serious crime since the early 1990s, accompanied by a dramatic drop in local jail incarceration, with jail populations declining

---

55% from 21,688 in 1991 to under 10,000 on the last day of 2014. City leaders are actively ways to further drive down both crime and the jail population, as well as improvements in the way the jail is run. Pretrial supervised release slots are being expanded, along with a shift to a risk-based system for identifying defendants who can be safely supervised to the community while waiting for trial. Funding has been announced for new jail programming, improved staff ratios and training, crisis intervention teams, enhanced mental health services, and more effective reentry planning to connect individuals leaving jail to long-term support and services in the community. As one example of this work, in 2014, the Mayor's Task Force on Behavioral Health and the Criminal Justice System brought together over 400 leaders and stakeholders from the justice and health sectors to develop a comprehensive roadmap to reduce the number of people with behavioral health needs cycling through the criminal justice system and connect this population with treatment and services at every point in the criminal justice process.

Hi Mark,

Sorry about Reuven. That's too bad. I think Erin is a good option. You may also consider Celeste Katz, who covers City Hall. I'd suggest stressing how this grant is another way Mayor de Blasio is seeking to join a national conversation on criminal justice reform – that might pique her interest. Let me know if I can help!

Unfortunately, Reuven is going to pass on covering the announcement. Wanted to see what your thoughts are on an alternative target to pitch at the Daily News. Reuven was the obvious top target, but Erin Durkin was one possibility we were considering as back up. Any thoughts on her or other reporters there you'd suggest instead?

Ended up reaching out to Reuven and Lee this afternoon after hearing back from you and Reuven has already responded.

I let him know that you're the main press contact for NYC re: this grant and can discuss the city's plans and that we can facilitate some interviews for him. If he reaches out to you directly, could you keep me cc-ed in communications. Sorry for the annoyance; the Foundation just wants us to keep them up to date on how things are moving with media across all of the sites.

This is Mark from BerlinRosen—we were on the phone Friday with Meredith from MacArthur.

We're beginning embargoed media outreach tomorrow morning, and I wanted to follow up and keep you in the loop. As I mentioned, we're planning to reach out with embargoed information to a top print and radio contact in each grantee's media market.

For New York, we're already in conversation with Timothy Williams@NYT, who covered the announcement of the SJC, so the Times is covered. In addition, we're planning to reach out to Reuven Blau at the Daily News and Lee Hernandez, a producer with WNYC's "Morning Edition." Let me know if you have thoughts on either Reuven or Lee and/or think there is a stronger print or radio contact we should prioritize over them.

Thanks much!

(you requested info on Finkelstein, who is considering purchasing the Daily News)

Finkelstein has been CEO and President of News Communications Inc. since June 2001.

He also serves as the Chief President of News Communications' subsidiaries, which owns Capitol Hill Publishing, the publisher of The Hill.

His father was Democratic powerbroker Jerry Finkelstein and his brother is former Manhattan Borough President Andrew Stein.

Finkelstein made a fortune when News Communications sold the New York Law Journal, National Law Journal and other publications to Steve Brill, who had started American Lawyer.

In 2009, Finkelstein put together a group of media powerhouses to join Guggenheim Partners in the acquisition of The Hollywood Reporter, Adweek and Billboard for about $70 million. The Finkelstein-led partners exited in 2013 and sold their shares to Guggenheim.

Finkelstein was a past owner of various weekly newspapers in Manhattan, as well as Dan's Papers in the Hamptons.

De Blasio Is Not Insulting Enough to Be Popular
NEW YORK TIMES - Ginia Bellafante - May 22, 2015

In 1981, unless you were living in a cocaine-fueled delusion cultivated at Maxwell's Plum, there were plenty of reasons to find fault with the governance of New York City, by then under the direction of Mayor Edward Irving Koch for three years.

The mass transit system was a mess; streets and parks were famously filthy. While the mayor had a hand in rescuing the city from fiscal crisis, crime was soaring, making the year one of the most violent New York had experienced. Released in 1981, John Carpenter's cult film "Escape From New York" was steeped in the assumption that things were sure to get worse, imagining a not-too-distant future in which all of Manhattan had become a maximum-security prison.

Congenitally unable to assume the role of nursemaid administering consolation, Mr. Koch barreled through with a customary orneriness that left him offending one important constituency after another. Appearing at a synagogue late in his first term, he was asked to name a living statesman he greatly admired and responded by naming the Egyptian president, Anwar el-Sadat. When audience members booed him, the mayor told them to "shut up."

And yet, given all that, early in 1981 Mr. Koch's approval rating stood at 62 percent, making him one of the most popular politicians in the country. As Neil Barsky, who documented the mayor's career in the film "Koch," put it, he practiced street politics as virtually no one had or has. By the end of the year, Mr. Koch had won re-election in a landslide, taking all five boroughs.

Historically, New Yorkers have had a very high threshold for leaders who are blunt, theatrical, arrogant, intermittently or even consistently jerky — in possession of any combination of qualities that easily lend themselves to the shorthand "larger than life." Earnestness has played less successfully, in part because it is alienating, and doesn't inspire the kind of rage or impassioned disbelief that, directed at political figures, can be its own source of entertainment and pleasure. (There's no downside to the fun you can have complaining about a mayor who believes that people who like ferrets require psychotherapeutic treatment.) As happens so often in romantic life, craziness can keep you hooked while sanctimony just makes you stop paying attention.

Occasioning this reflection is the matter of Mayor Bill de Blasio's declining approval ratings. A Quinnipiac University poll released this month found that only 44 percent of voters approved of the job he was doing, a five-point drop since the beginning of the year and a nine-point drop since he took office in January 2014.

This is in spite of the facts that the city's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate fell in March, to 6.6 percent from 7.8 percent at the same point last year, and that the number of homeless families is shrinking for the first time in years. According to a March report from the advocacy group Coalition for the Homeless, the number of homeless families with children had declined by more than 300 since December. Last week, the mayor announced an ambitious plan to preserve and improve the city's public housing, so long ignored, which contains a population larger than Las Vegas's in deteriorating buildings, 60 percent of them more than 50 years old.

And yet still it is common to hear, among the educated liberals who helped elect him, that Mr. de Blasio hasn't lived up to his campaign rhetoric, that he hasn't done much, that he has been a disappointment, that inequality is still very much alive. Of course, if inequality could be rectified in a year, the mayor would be well positioned to run for Moses. The complaints are typically vague, but running through them are problems with style and affect: He's preachy; he's late; he lacks charisma; he's not around.

Among those who disapprove, there are certainly those who do so with greater intensity — preservationists who believe Mr. de Blasio's affordable-housing initiative will lead to overdevelopment; neighborhood people who believe there has been inadequate planning to support all the proposed construction; black civic leaders concerned that Mr. de Blasio's interest in criminal-justice reform is waning; rich people who feel offended that he doesn't involve himself in rich-people things.

In a matter of a several days, Mr. de Blasio managed to rankle both the Rev. Calvin O. Butts III and the event publicist Peggy Siegal. Ms. Siegal, prompted by the mayor's absence from the Metropolitan Museum of Art's Costume Institute Ball, told The Wall Street Journal that Mr. de Blasio "had disdain for the striving, successful New Yorkers," and that "it is a major shortcoming not to mingle with all classes," as if she were a regular at game night at the Walt Whitman Houses.

The criticism coming from the Upper East Side philanthropic community and the Harlem clerical community is strikingly similar though; both feel betrayed by a posture that suggests that the mayor doesn't need them. While it isn't uncommon to lose momentum during a second year in office — Michael R. Bloomberg's approval ratings fell sharply during his second year as mayor, before reaching a high of 75 percent in his second term — Mr. de Blasio seems to be having trouble making, and keeping, friends. That may have no consequence on his ability to be re-elected, but it could affect his trajectory as a national leader of the progressive movement, a role he seems to relish. Messiahs don't need voters; they need disciples.

See below. Some of us discussed this yesterday on the scheduling call, and we can make a final decision at the planning mtg Tues eve. Since the invitation is from the Pope and about fighting inequality, I think it is near impossible to turn down. So the current thinking is to compress all our overseas travel into a week or so, anchored by this Vatican event.

So that would mean one trip including Israel and the Vatican -- I wonder if the tabloids would be able to criticize THAT :) Michael, pls discuss what this would look like when we all meet Tues, and if there are any major conflicts. And remember, my family is away in America for vacation give or take July 3-10. No other family travel plans until we take Dante to Yale in late August. And no other trips planned out of town in August if we do the overseas trip this way. Food for thought.

Dear Bill,
Greetings!

Congrats on the launch of the new progressive agenda. I've been traveling abroad (with Ban Ki-moon in Korea last week), but have been watching from afar!

The Vatican has confirmed to me again today that Pope Francis is indeed very keen to meet with you and other mayors on July 21 to discuss issues of social inclusion and sustainable development. (His encyclical on climate change will be issued in the next few weeks, before July 21).

They asked today whether you might be able to confirm your attendance. I've of course also been coordinating with Penny.

I have asked, and the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences has agreed, to host a symposium on Cities and Sustainable Development at the Vatican on July 22. I would love for you to present OneNYC to the other mayors on that occasion. I think it would have a HUGE impact.

I hope that we can get together soon.

All best,
Jeff

A week of family vacation (just like last year) and a week of overseas travel (rather than the overseas travel being in August). And City budget and Albany session will be done, with more achievements under our belt. But I defy any purveyor of conventional wisdom to beat a Vatican - Holy Land trip for bulletproofness! :)

Hi Sarah,

Just wanted to let you know the Brian's producer told us that Brian may take a few calls from listeners during the segment with Laurie and Liz. Wanted to make sure Liz has a heads up. I'm sure you've probably worked with the show before, but in our experience, they do a very good job of screening callers/questions.

Jeremy,

Would the morning of June 26th work for folks? Alicia, Vicki and Gary can all do that day.

Looping Ashley, who also reached out.

Please let us know!

Thanks,
Mary

Kate: Good talking to you yesterday. I've reattached the invite letter, which includes details on the project and broad thinking on messaging. In terms of a potential event, here's what we were thinking:

Timing: A May or June groundbreaking would be timely, with two affordable buildings underway and a third ready to break ground.

Location: The affordable building ready to break ground (site F) has remarkable views of the water and skyline, and is adjacent to the park and the first affordable building, which broke ground 10 months ago and is close to topping out.

Speaking program: The more the merrier, but would think speakers would come from among this list:

City
--Mayor

- Deputy Mayor Glen
- Commissioner Been
- Commissioner Rodney
- Commissioner Silver

Developers

- George Klein
- Ron Moelis

Local electeds

- CM Levin
- AM Lentol
- Sen. Dilan
- BP Adams
- Cong. Maloney

Community

- Open Space Alliance
- Others TBD

Multi-agency update and summary of incident:

Yesterday at approximately 10:30AM FDNY, NYPD, DOB, and NYCEM responded to reports of a crane incident at 261 Madison Avenue (a 30-story commercial building). The crane at the site was lifting a 23,000 pound commercial air conditioner unit to the roof of the location. The air conditioner fell to the ground, striking the building as it fell. The cause is still under investigation. The building's façade was damaged, 10 people were injured, and a small water main break was discovered after the air conditioner reached the street.

Current agencies and utilities still on scene: DOB, FDNY, NYPD, DEP, DOT, NYCEM, Con Ed

DOB

- DOB investigation is ongoing
- A full vacate order remains in place for 261 Madison Avenue
- DOB has constructed a sidewalk shed around the property to protect pedestrians from continuing work
- In addition to the ongoing incident investigation, DOB will be examining all open and active crane rigging work performed by the company working at 261 Madison Avenue as a precautionary measure

DEP

- Following the air conditioning unit striking the street, a small break in the 12 inch water main directly in front of 261 Madison was discovered
- DEP is in the process of repairing the break and assessing the cause and scope of the damage

FDNY

- 10 patients (7 actually transported)
  - 5 civilians (3 refused medical attention)
  - 2 NYPD personnel
  - 2 construction workers
  - 1 firefighter

NYPD

- Vehicular traffic is closed on Madison Ave from East 34th to East 39th
- There is no pedestrian access on Madison Ave from East 38th to East 39th
- Streets are expected to open to pedestrian and vehicular traffic tomorrow

NYCEM

- Coordination of interagency operations on site
- Debris from the air conditioner and building façade that fell onto the street was removed by a contractor, in coordination with NYCEM
- The crane was removed last night

Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

CBS - Staff - 12:49 pm

<http://newyork.cbslocal.com/2015/06/03/de-blasio-crime-rate/>

Using a coffin and body bags to make their point, angry demonstrators rallied in City Hall Park on Wednesday to demand that Mayor Bill de Blasio try new tactics to curb the city's soaring murder rate.

As CBS2's Marcia Kramer reported, New York City has seen a nearly 20 percent increase in homicides so far this year.

"There's too many people dying in the city of New York, and I'm under the premise of conversation with a number of leaders in our community who feel that this mayor is not sensitive to those that are dying in our neighborhoods," community activist Tony Herbert said.

Members of the Brooklyn Clergy Coalition and other community leaders have devised a One Family One Community initiative, which calls for tackling the issue of violence by sending more than 10,000 mentors into neighborhoods, schools and housing developments with the highest rate of gang and gun violence.

They say they've tried to talk to de Blasio about it, but he refuses.

"At the end of the day, we have to work as a collective," Herbert said. "The city has to work with the community, not walk around and call people fearmongers, to insult use when we're out here on every day, every aspect of the night — 2 o'clock, 3 o'clock in the morning — in the housing developments to try to stop violence."

Appearing on "The Daily Show" on Tuesday, de Blasio acknowledged the city has seen an alarming spike in shootings this year, but also said it's an issue the Police Department is handling. As of next week, 330 officers will be pulled from their usual duties for special patrols aimed at the shootings spike.

De Blasio defended curtailing the controversial "stop-and-frisk" policing technique and touted an overall drop in crime.

"We brought down murder to a rate we had not seen since the early '60s," de Blasio said. "We brought down crime across the board. We do have a shooting problem. We had a shooting problem last year; we have a shooting problem this year."

The mayor said that the shootings are centered around gang violence, and the city is rolling out aggressive anti-gang policing and intervention.

"Those strategies need to be applied," de Blasio said. "Going back to an unconstitutional, alienating approach is not only inappropriate and unfair to the populace, it doesn't work. It ties up a ton of police time and energy into things that aren't actually going after serious crime. So I think we're broadly on the right track."

De Blasio cited police retraining, body cameras and new technology as elements his administration is bringing to bear in the fight against crime.

"I think these pieces are going to add up," de Blasio said. "Because people are not wasting time on unnecessary and unconstitutional stops, and they're not wasting time on low-level marijuana arrests either."

In Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood, there were nine shootings last month. That's more than double the number for the same time last year, 1010 WINS reported. Some residents are calling for the mayor to drop his opposition to a City Council plan to hire an additional 1,000 police officers.

Hey guys, please find a more detailed run of show for the 6/16 Cornell event below.

The basic idea (and I can share detailed maps) is that we're going to do a pre-program VIP photo-op for the speakers on the program:

--The Mayor and detail can pull directly into the campus construction site. (Note 10:30 arrival time below but assumption is everyone's there and ready for Mayor when he arrives at maybe 10:45?)

--Andrew Winters from Cornell will lead the group on a very short walk (50 yards) to a raised portion of the site, where cameras will be waiting for photo op.

--We'll do a few candid and then maybe pose one for the group (MBDB, MRB, Skorton, Cornell Chair Bob Harrison, Dean Huttenlocher and the two developers).

--Mayor and detail can then drive the .2 miles to the program site at Four Freedoms. (We will also have golf carts if preferred).

Questions for you:

--Are there any security clearance issues we need to address for the pre-show photo-op?

--We're going to send out an initial advisory this week. Are we ok to include Mayor's participation?

--Would you expect there to be a room 9 van? We can accommodate at the photo-op and event if so.

TIME: 10:30 a.m. - 12 p.m.

Tuesday, June 16, 2015

LOCATION: Roosevelt Island (Four Freedoms)

The run of show is as follows:

11:00 a.m. VIPs are transported from construction site to event site (landing at Four Freedoms Park, approximately .22 miles away)

I am probably not making it to planning because of a breaking news situation for a client that is keeping me in front of my desk – if they are game after and want to text or email me when the close looks like it's coming could call an audible and if I'm out of the woods – would be great to do. Which is a long way of saying yes if the timing works out.

Hi again,

We touched bases about a million years ago on this. Seems we're on for next week so I wanted to circle back about finding a story for the Mayor's remarks. Any ideas of someone (student or faculty) with a good background story, who would be a good fit for the spirit of the occasion?

Really appreciate your help,

Hey guys, please find a more detailed run of show for the 6/16 Cornell event below. The basic idea (and I can share detailed maps) is that we're going to do a pre-program VIP photo-op for the speakers on the program:

--The Mayor and detail can pull directly into the campus construction site. (Note 10:30 arrival time below but assumption is everyone's there and ready for Mayor when he arrives at maybe 10:45?)

--Andrew Winters from Cornell will lead the group on a very short walk (50 yards) to a raised portion of the site, where cameras will be waiting for photo op.

--We'll do a few candid and then maybe pose one for the group (MBDB, MRB, Skorton, Cornell Chair Bob Harrison, Dean Huttenlocher and the two developers).

--Mayor and detail can then drive the .2 miles to the program site at Four Freedoms. (We will also have golf carts if preferred).

Questions for you:

--Are there any security clearance issues we need to address for the pre-show photo-op?

--We're going to send out an initial advisory this week. Are we ok to include Mayor's participation?

--Would you expect there to be a room 9 van? We can accommodate at the photo-op and event if so.

TIME: 10:30 a.m. – 12 p.m.

Tuesday, June 16, 2015

LOCATION: Roosevelt Island (Four Freedoms)

The run of show is as follows:

11:00 a.m.      VIPs are transported from construction site to event site (landing

Kate: Good talking to you yesterday. I've reattached the invite letter, which includes details on the project and broad thinking on messaging. In terms of a potential event, here's what we were thinking:

Timing: A May or June groundbreaking would be timely, with two affordable buildings underway and a third ready to break ground.

Location: The affordable building ready to break ground (site F) has remarkable views of the water and skyline, and is adjacent to the park and the first affordable building, which broke ground 10 months ago and is close to topping out.

Speaking program: The more the merrier, but would think speakers would come from among this list:

City

- Mayor
- Deputy Mayor Glen
- Commissioner Been
- Commissioner Rodney
- Commissioner Silver

Developers

- George Klein
- Ron Moelis

Local electeds

- CM Levin
- AM Lentol
- Sen. Dilan
- BP Adams
- Cong. Maloney

Community

- Open Space Alliance
- Others TBD

TO: Office of the Deputy Mayor for Housing & Economic Development
FROM: Greenpoint Landing Associates and L+M Development Partners
DATE: June 12, 2015
RE: Greenpoint Landing Groundbreaking Celebration

The memo below outlines proposed details of the press conference for the upcoming Greenpoint Landing groundbreaking, key messages and information about the project.

About Greenpoint Landing

Greenpoint Landing is a 22-acre development that will transform a half-mile stretch of Brooklyn waterfront into a mixed-use, mixed-income residential community, including much needed affordable housing, neighborhood retail, substantial public open space and a new public school. When complete, Greenpoint Landing will include approximately 5,500 residential units, of which 1,400 will be affordable.

The project is being developed by Greenpoint Landing Associates, LLC, and they have partnered with L+M Development Partners on the first three affordable housing buildings. James Corner Field Operations is responsible for the open space design and Handel Architects is designing the first phases of development.

Press Conference

When: Friday, June 26, 2015 – 11 a.m. (call for 10:30, start at 11)

Where: 21 Commercial Street, at the corner of Franklin Street. The site of the press conference will be approximately 200 feet into the property with a breathtaking view of the waterfront and skyline as a backdrop. The press conference location is the site of a 100% permanently affordable housing building, which we will be breaking ground on. This building is the third such affordable housing building all currently under construction at Greenpoint Landing and is situated within one block of the other two 100% permanently affordable buildings that were financed in conjunction with HPD and HDC.

Potential Speakers:

- Deputy Mayor Alicia Glen
- HPD Commissioner Vicki Been
- HDC President Gary Rodney
- Congresswoman Carolyn Maloney
- Parks Commissioner Mitchell Silver
- Councilmember Stephen Levin
- Assembly Member Joe Lentol
- Borough President Eric Adams
- George Klein, Park Tower Group
- Ron Moelis, CEO of L+M Development Partners
- Community representative: Open Space Alliance or Ward Dennis/Dewey Thompson

- We will also invite additional elected officials and will offer speaking roles if they attend: State Senator Martin Dilan, Senator Chuck Schumer, Senator Kirsten Gillibrand, State Senator Daniel Squadron.

Additional invitations:

Agencies:

- DOB: Commissioner Rick Chandler
- DOT Commissioner Polly Trottenberg
- SBS: Commissioner Maria Springer Torres
- SCA: Lorraine Grillo
- DCP: Purnima Kapur
- Representatives from State Department of Environmental Conservation

Press targets:

- Brooklyn reporters:
  - Brooklyn Daily Eagle
  - Brooklyn Paper
  - Brooklyn Courier Life
  - Brooklyn Reader
  - Greenpoint Gazette
  - Greenpoint Star
  - DNA Info
  - Brownstoner
  - Brokelyn
  - Brooklyn Magazine
  - News 12
  - NY1 – Jeanine Ramirez
  - NY Times – Vivian Yee
- Real estate/housing/open space reporters
  - Architect’s Newspaper
  - Architectural Record
  - Bloomberg – David Levitt
  - Capital NY – Dana Rubenstein
  - Crains – Joe Anuta
  - Curbed
  - Daily News – Kathy Clarke
  - Dezeen – Alan Brake
  - Inhabit
  - Huffington Post – James Gerken
  - NY Observer – Kim Velsey
  - Oculus
  - Next City – Ariella Cohen
  - NY Times – Michelle Higgins
  - NY Post – Steve Cuozzo

- The Real Deal – EB Solomont
- Real Estate Weekly
- 6 Square Feet
- Wall Street Journal – Emily Nonko
- WNYC – Janet Babin
- YIMBY
- TV and radio desks
- City Hall reporters

We would offer news as an exclusive to run on day of event. Target is TBD.

Key Messages

- Fulfilling the City’s promise to Greenpoint: Greenpoint Landing delivers on the longstanding promises of open space and affordable housing to the Greenpoint community, leveraging City investments in infrastructure (parks, streets, and schools) and exemplifying the de Blasio administration’s approach to planning.
  - Additionally, a sludge tank long-hated by the community was removed last year.
- Affordable housing: Greenpoint Landing will include approximately 1,400 affordable units, representing 25% of the total number of housing units in the development. By kicking off the project with three 100% permanently affordable buildings and designating 50% of the apartments as two-bedroom units, we are prioritizing affordable housing for low- and moderate-income families in the community for many years to come. Nearly 300 affordable units will become available over the next two years.
  - The first affordable housing building at 21 Commercial Street, with 93 units (40-60% of AMI), is topping out and is expected to open next year.
  - The second affordable building at 33 Eagle Street (98 units – 40%-120% AMI) is in foundation stages.
  - We are breaking ground on the third affordable housing building at 5 Blue Slip, with 103 units (30-60% AMI), which will open in 2017.
- Resilient open space: When the project is complete, four acres of new world-class open space designed by James Corner Field Operations will reconnect residents with the waterfront as well as serve as a resilient storm barrier for the Greenpoint community.
  - Open space complements the five acres of public parks the City is building at Newtown Barge Park, Greenpoint Playground, and Box Street Park.
    - Greenpoint Landing Associates has contributed $5.5 million for the reconstruction of Newtown Barge Park.
  - Waterfront open space was designed as an innovative series of terraces with materials that can sustain tidal surge.

- Strategy puts the development well above the revised FEMA 100-year flood elevation, protecting the buildings and the neighborhood.
- The open space network is also designed to incorporate larger-scale public amenity areas, such as a great lawn, a picnic area, a dog run and the Green Street Pier.
- Upcoming phases: It is anticipated that construction of the first two towers and the associated waterfront esplanade and public open space with access to the water will commence before the end of the year.
- Architecture: These three affordable buildings as well as the first towers and the overall site master plan are designed by Gary Handel of Handel Architects. The buildings reflect a modern Brooklyn industrial aesthetic – with considerable use of brick, steel, and divided light windows that recall the manufacturing history of the Greenpoint neighborhood.
- Infrastructure: Privately-funded infrastructure improvements to improve the street grid will complement DOT’s upcoming reconstruction of West Street as a greenway with bicycle lanes.
- Neighborhood retail: The first phase of development will also feature retail space, intended to be dedicated to local retailers.
- Public school: GLA has agreed to gift land to the School Construction Authority (SCA) for a 640-seat pre-k through 8th District 14 grade public school. Approximately $45M allocated in its FY2015-2019 capital plan for design and construction
- Ferry landing: Permitted for a ferry landing adjacent to Newtown Barge Park.

Logistics TBD

The following items should be considered for the press conference:

- A/V, seating, podium: provided by City?

Kate: Good talking to you yesterday. I've reattached the invite letter, which includes details on the project and broad thinking on messaging. In terms of a potential event, here's what we were thinking:

Timing: A May or June groundbreaking would be timely, with two affordable buildings underway and a third ready to break ground.

Location: The affordable building ready to break ground (site F) has remarkable views of the water and skyline, and is adjacent to the park and the first affordable building, which broke ground 10 months ago and is close to topping out.

Speaking program: The more the merrier, but would think speakers would come from among this list:

--Deputy Mayor Glen

--Commissioner Been

--Commissioner Rodney

--Commissioner Silver

Developers

--George Klein

--Ron Moelis

Local electeds

--CM Levin

--AM Lentol

TO: Office of the Deputy Mayor for Housing & Economic Development
FROM: Greenpoint Landing Associates and L+M Development Partners
DATE: June 12, 2015
RE: Greenpoint Landing Groundbreaking Celebration

The memo below outlines proposed details of the press conference for the upcoming Greenpoint Landing groundbreaking, key messages and information about the project.

About Greenpoint Landing

Greenpoint Landing is a 22-acre development that will transform a half-mile stretch of Brooklyn waterfront into a mixed-use, mixed-income residential community, including much needed affordable housing, neighborhood retail, substantial public open space and a new public school. When complete, Greenpoint Landing will include approximately 5,500 residential units, of which 1,400 will be affordable.

The project is being developed by Greenpoint Landing Associates, LLC, and they have partnered with L+M Development Partners on the first three affordable housing buildings. James Corner Field Operations is responsible for the open space design and Handel Architects is designing the first phases of development.

Press Conference

When: Friday, June 26, 2015 – 11 a.m. (call for 10:30, start at 11)

Where: 21 Commercial Street, at the corner of Franklin Street. The site of the press conference will be approximately 200 feet into the property with a breathtaking view of the waterfront and skyline as a backdrop. The press conference location is the site of a 100% permanently affordable housing building, which we will be breaking ground on. This building is the third such affordable housing building all currently under construction at Greenpoint Landing and is situated within one block of the other two 100% permanently affordable buildings that were financed in conjunction with HPD and HDC.

Potential Speakers:

- Deputy Mayor Alicia Glen
- HPD Commissioner Vicki Been
- HDC President Gary Rodney
- Congresswoman Carolyn Maloney
- Parks Commissioner Mitchell Silver
- Councilmember Stephen Levin
- Assembly Member Joe Lentol
- Borough President Eric Adams
- George Klein, Park Tower Group
- Ron Moelis, CEO of L+M Development Partners
- Community representative: Open Space Alliance or Ward Dennis/Dewey Thompson

- We will also invite additional elected officials and will offer speaking roles if they attend: State Senator Martin Dilan, Senator Chuck Schumer, Senator Kirsten Gillibrand, State Senator Daniel Squadron.

Additional invitations:

Agencies:

- DOB: Commissioner Rick Chandler
- DOT Commissioner Polly Trottenberg
- SBS: Commissioner Maria Springer Torres
- SCA: Lorraine Grillo
- DCP: Purnima Kapur
- Representatives from State Department of Environmental Conservation

Press targets:

- Brooklyn reporters:
  - Brooklyn Daily Eagle
  - Brooklyn Paper
  - Brooklyn Courier Life
  - Brooklyn Reader
  - Greenpoint Gazette
  - Greenpoint Star
  - DNA Info
  - Brownstoner

- TV and radio desks
- City Hall reporters

We would offer news as an exclusive to run on day of event. Target is TBD.

Key Messages

- Fulfilling the City’s promise to Greenpoint: Greenpoint Landing delivers on the longstanding promises of open space and affordable housing to the Greenpoint community, leveraging City investments in infrastructure (parks, streets, and schools) and exemplifying the de Blasio administration’s approach to planning.
  - Additionally, a sludge tank long-hated by the community was removed last year.
- Affordable housing: Greenpoint Landing will include approximately 1,400 affordable units, representing 25% of the total number of housing units in the development. By kicking off the project with three 100% permanently affordable buildings and designating 50% of the apartments as two-bedroom units, we are prioritizing affordable housing for low- and moderate-income families in the community for many years to come. Nearly 300 affordable units will become available over the next two years.
  - The first affordable housing building at 21 Commercial Street, with 93 units (40-60% of AMI), is topping out and is expected to open next year.
  - The second affordable building at 33 Eagle Street (98 units – 40%-120% AMI) is in foundation stages.
  - We are breaking ground on the third affordable housing building at 5 Blue Slip, with 103 units (30-60% AMI), which will open in 2017.
- Resilient open space: When the project is complete, four acres of new world-class open space designed by James Corner Field Operations will reconnect residents with the waterfront as well as serve as a resilient storm barrier for the Greenpoint community.
  - Open space complements the five acres of public parks the City is building at Newtown Barge Park, Greenpoint Playground, and Box Street Park.
    - Greenpoint Landing Associates has contributed $5.5 million for the reconstruction of Newtown Barge Park.
  - Waterfront open space was designed as an innovative series of terraces with materials that can sustain tidal surge.

- Strategy puts the development well above the revised FEMA 100-year flood elevation, protecting the buildings and the neighborhood.
- The open space network is also designed to incorporate larger-scale public amenity areas, such as a great lawn, a picnic area, a dog run and the Green Street Pier.
- Upcoming phases: It is anticipated that construction of the first two towers and the associated waterfront esplanade and public open space with access to the water will commence before the end of the year.
- Architecture: These three affordable buildings as well as the first towers and the overall site master plan are designed by Gary Handel of Handel Architects. The buildings reflect a modern Brooklyn industrial aesthetic – with considerable use of brick, steel, and divided light windows that recall the manufacturing history of the Greenpoint neighborhood.
- Infrastructure: Privately-funded infrastructure improvements to improve the street grid will complement DOT’s upcoming reconstruction of West Street as a greenway with bicycle lanes.
- Neighborhood retail: The first phase of development will also feature retail space, intended to be dedicated to local retailers.
- Public school: GLA has agreed to gift land to the School Construction Authority (SCA) for a 640-seat pre-k through 8th District 14 grade public school. Approximately $45M allocated in its FY2015-2019 capital plan for design and construction
- Ferry landing: Permitted for a ferry landing adjacent to Newtown Barge Park.

Ok will work on that, didn't realize that was a thing. In meantime here's the info:

Cornell Tech Presence on Roosevelt Island

- Cornell Tech's current presence on Gallery RIVAA on Main Street is the start of their entrance to New York City as an institutional neighbor.
- The future campus is filled with open space that will invite visitors from all over the city and world to visit and explore.
- Cornell Tech's committed to becoming a full member of the community and to bringing some of the best and brightest minds in tech to the university not only to benefit their students, but all Roosevelt Islanders.

Miwa Takaki/Hack Day

- For Cornell Tech's "Hack Roosevelt Island" day this past April, Miwa Takaki, MBA '15, led over half of the student body to engage in volunteerism at PS/IS 217 on Roosevelt Island and at the Roosevelt Island Senior Center.
- They taught middle school students coding skills they'll be able to use for a lifetime and helped senior citizens learn basic computer literacy and Internet skills to help them get around on the web.
- Lucky for us, Miwa won't be leaving New York after graduation. While she is originally from the west coast, she will be staying in the city after graduation and continue to pursue her passion volunteering, and introducing people of all ages to tech in the time she is not working as a product manager for eBay.

Startup Awards

- For Cornell Tech's inaugural Startup Awards, five student companies received $40,000 in pre-seed funding and co-working space from the university
- With generous support from the Blackstone Charitable Foundation and Forest City Ratner Companies, the five student startups recently moved into office space in the New York Times building and have become the newest members of New York's tech community.

Mynd

- Founded by Neil Lakin, MEng '15; Yukti Abrol, MEng '15; and Matt Windt, MBA '15
- Mynd solves every parent and teacher's worst nightmare by making it easier to keep track of kids in public spaces.

Cornell Tech FAQ

About Cornell Tech

Cornell Tech develops pioneering leaders and technologies for the digital age. Cornell Tech brings together faculty, business leaders, tech entrepreneurs, and students in a catalytic environment to produce visionary results grounded in significant needs that will reinvent the way we live in the digital age. Cornell Tech's temporary campus has been up and running at Google's Chelsea building since 2012, with a growing world-class faculty, and about 150 master's and Ph.D. students who collaborate extensively with tech-oriented companies and organizations and pursue their own start-ups.

About the Roosevelt Island campus

Construction is underway on Cornell Tech's campus on Roosevelt Island, with a first phase due to open in 2017. When fully completed, the campus will include 2 million square feet of state-of-the-art buildings, more than two acres of open space, and will be home to more than 2,000 graduate students and hundreds of faculty and staff. It will be one of the most environmentally-friendly and energy-efficient campuses in the world.

Phase one includes:

- * First Academic Building, designed by Thom Mayne of Morphosis
- * The Bridge, a first-of-its-kind corporate co-location building to fuse academia and industry, developed by Forest City Ratner Companies and designed by Weiss/Manfredi
- * A residential building for faculty, staff and graduate students that will be the first Passive House high-rise in the world, developed by The Hudson Companies and designed by Handel Architects

In January, Verizon announced a $50 million gift to develop the Verizon Executive Education Center, a convening place to leverage the impact the campus has on technology beyond its degree programs.

Are students really staying and making an impact in NY?

More than half of the 73 computer science and business students that just graduated in May are staying in New York City for job opportunities and to pursue their own startups. Almost one-third of the graduates are pursuing their own ventures that were developed on campus.

That includes the winners of Cornell Tech's first ever Startup Awards. Five companies that students developed during their academic program at Cornell Tech were awarded pre-seed funding from the Blackstone Foundation and one year of free co-working space at the New York Times building in midtown, courtesy of Forest City Ratner Companies. The students are now working on their startups - in the fields of health, childcare, finance and more - full-time. The awards level the startup playing field, ensuring that young but strong startup ideas can get off the ground without a wealthy personal network.

Are you still on track to complete the campus by 2037?

Yes, this is a long-term project and we are on track to finish construction of the full campus by 2037.

How are you supporting K-12?

Cornell has partnered with more than a dozen local schools, including PS/IS 217 on Roosevelt Island, on professional development for teachers and implementing tech education into school and after-school programming. We're also hosting a series of events with Google to bring together stakeholders from City Hall, public schools and the tech industry to talk about how to prepare students for the digital age.

Forest City Ratner Companies Unveils The Bridge at Cornell Tech: First-Of-Its-Kind Space for Tech Innovation, Connecting Academia & Industry

The Bridge at Cornell Tech will accelerate innovation & commercialization with startups, faculty, students, researchers and established companies under one roof

NEW YORK – Forest City Ratner Companies today launched The Bridge at Cornell Tech, a first-of-its-kind building that will be located at the heart of Cornell Tech’s campus on Roosevelt Island. The Bridge at Cornell Tech, developed by Forest City Ratner Companies and designed by WEISS/MANFREDI, will offer an opportunity for a limited number of start-ups and established companies pushing the edge of digital technology to be on campus. The Bridge will house an ecosystem of companies, researchers and entrepreneurs who are focused on catalyzing innovation and the commercialization of new products and technologies, driving economic growth for New York. The Bridge will be the only building in New York City designed and built to leverage the resources of a cutting edge research university, and to remove all barriers to collaboration and innovation with the world’s most cutting-edge companies. Construction commenced in May on the Bridge, which will be part of phase one of Cornell Tech’s campus, due to open in summer 2017. A video trailer introducing the building is available at www.thebridgeatcornelltech.com.

“The Bridge at Cornell Tech is a place for companies looking to test and launch products and ideas, a place where research comes to life and technology meets the market,” said MaryAnne Gilmartin, President and CEO of Forest City Ratner Companies. “For the right companies committed to innovation and collaboration, The Bridge will provide a massive competitive advantage at the center of the campus and the heart of New York City.”

“Cornell Tech has already made great strides in fusing academia and industry in our academic and research programs, and The Bridge will be the physical manifestation of that mission on our campus on Roosevelt Island,” said Cornell Tech Dean Dan Huttenlocher. “The Bridge will be the epicenter of this fusion on campus, putting practitioners, companies, students, faculty, and researchers in close proximity to one another in a design that encourages collaboration.”

From MetroTech in Brooklyn to the 5M project in San Francisco and University Park at MIT, Forest City has been at the forefront of place-making for the innovation economy, bringing together creative industry leaders and higher education to create truly 21st century places.

The Bridge will house a mix of cutting-edge companies working alongside groundbreaking Cornell academic teams: from recent Cornell Tech graduates spinning out new company ideas, to startups on the verge of explosive growth, and established companies testing their next product.

Designed with flexible spaces and loft-like common areas, the building will encourage random interactions and deep collaborations that solve problems, build partnerships and accelerate new products to market. The result will be one of the greatest concentrations of talent in the country, and an unparalleled community of entrepreneurs eager to collaborate and test new ideas, launch new products, and start new businesses.

“The Bridge is a crystalline incubator with river-to-river views and creates a three dimensional crossroads, an ecosystem of innovation that catalyzes collaboration between academics and entrepreneurs.” - Marion Weiss and Michael Manfredi, design partners at WEISS/MANFREDI Architecture/Landscape/Urbanism.

From demo days, hackathons, lectures and conferences, to opportunities to collaborate with faculty and students and to participate in special events for the tech and creative community, companies at The Bridge will be part of and will thrive on the entrepreneurial energy at Cornell Tech and the larger NYC tech community. It will serve as a model for future tech sector growth and innovation.

The building is being designed to achieve LEED Silver certification, and, situated on the east side of Roosevelt Island, will feature expansive views of the waterfront, Queens and Manhattan. It will be one of the three main buildings as part of phase one of Cornell Tech’s campus, which also includes the First Academic Building, a residential building that will be the first Passive House high-rise in the world, and substantial open space. The campus will be one of the most environmentally-friendly and energy-efficient campuses in the world.

We're expecting around 200 people.

I will try to get you a full rsvp list. I suspect there are some admin people who haven't rsvped but will show.

Subject: RE: Quick q

Also this

- * Cornell Tech develops pioneering leaders and technologies for the digital age.
- * In a new approach to graduate education not seen at any other university, engineering and business students learn and work side-by-side at Cornell Tech, spending one-third of their experience together in a co-curriculum. They collaborate with the tech industry and postdoc-level researchers to build start-up companies and new products. By bringing these talents together at the start, there is enormous potential for better, more impactful and ultimately more successful companies and products.
- * More than half of the 73 computer science and business students that just graduated in May are staying in New York City for job opportunities and to pursue their own startups. Almost one-third of the graduates are pursuing their own ventures that were developed on campus.
- * This year, Cornell Tech launched the Startup Awards. Five companies that students developed during their academic program at Cornell Tech were awarded pre-seed funding from the Blackstone Foundation and one year of free co-working space at the New York Times building in midtown, courtesy of Forest City Ratner Companies. The students are now working on their startups - in the fields of health, childcare, finance and more - full-time. The awards level the startup playing field, ensuring that young but strong startup ideas can get off the ground without a wealthy personal network.
- * Construction is underway on the first phase of Cornell Tech's 12-acre campus on Roosevelt Island. With the unique opportunity to build a campus from scratch in the heart of New York City, Cornell has assembled a team of award-winning architects to design an open campus that will facilitate the interaction between academia and industry that's central to Cornell Tech's mission. Established companies and startups, including student ventures, will locate on campus in The Bridge, Cornell Tech's first corporate co-location building.
- * The campus will be highly sustainable - the residential building will be the world's first passive house high-rise, and the first academic building aspires to be net zero, with all of its energy generated on campus.
- * We've also begun efforts to meet our commitments to enrich tech education for New York City public school children. Cornell has partnered with more than a dozen local schools, including PS/IS 217 on Roosevelt Island. We're also hosting a series of events with Google to bring together stakeholders from City Hall, public schools and the tech industry to talk about how to prepare students for the digital age.
- * The Jacobs Institute at Cornell Tech is the academic partnership between Cornell and the Technion. The Institute's first program in Connective Media launched this past year, with a second program called Healthier Life launching in the fall. Healthier Life will bridge the gap between healthcare and tech, removing the barriers between research and application to reinvent the way all of us experience and manage health. Recent Ph.D. graduates are also building companies at the Jacobs Institute through the Runway program, where postdocs transform their research into new companies and products.

Hey Dan

I set up the van so the press will arrive by 10 am.

I'm wondering what the actual name of the building is, or if this groundbreaking is for the entire campus? I want to make sure we have it correct on the mayor's public schedule.

Is this all right? "Mayor de Blasio will deliver remarks at the groundbreaking for the Cornell Tech campus on Roosevelt Island"

If not, let me know what should be in that sentence instead.

Hey Dan,

I am looping you with Natalie from the press office who helps coordinate the press van etc.

She can work with you on timing and press logistics for the Cornell Tour.

Are you the right person for this? I work with Cornell and wanted to reach out about what time the Room 9 press van is set to get to Roosevelt Island tomorrow. We would like to have them arrive by 10 AM for the pre-press conference walking tour and photo op.

Does that make sense?

Dan

Thanks. I'm staffing.

FYI - we're going to have him
do an avail after the event.
Given that everyone will be trying to leave through the main exit, our plan is to escort press down and around the south tip of the park/island and have them meet the Mayor behind the stage.

NEW YORK CITY – Cornell University President David J. Skorton, Cornell University Board Chair Robert S. Harrison, Cornell Tech Dean Daniel P. Huttenlocher, New York State Lt. Governor Kathleen Hochul, Mayor Bill de Blasio, New York City Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito, former Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg, Forest City Ratner Companies President and CEO MaryAnne Gilmartin, and The Hudson Companies Principal David Kramer today celebrated the groundbreaking of Cornell Tech's campus on Roosevelt Island and announced a $100 million gift from Bloomberg Philanthropies to fund construction of the campus. The first academic building on the campus will be named The Bloomberg Center – in honor of Emma and Georgina Bloomberg. Cornell Tech is a revolutionary model for graduate tech education, developing pioneering leaders and technologies for the digital age. Three years ago, Cornell and its academic partner, the Technion – Israel Institute of Technology won New York City's competition – led by former Deputy Mayor Robert K. Steel – to build an applied sciences institution in partnership with the City. Today's groundbreaking and the announcement of the generous donation mark a major milestone in this effort, with the first phase of the campus due to open in the summer of 2017.

Cornell Tech began classes in January 2013 at its temporary campus in space donated by Google in their Chelsea building. There are currently approximately 15 world-class faculty members, an additional 15 research and development staff, two dozen Ph.D. students in several disciplines, and four master's programs: the MEng in computer science; the Johnson Cornell Tech MBA; the dual degree Connective Media program at the Jacobs Technion-Cornell Institute, the academic partnership between Cornell and the Technion; and starting this fall at the Jacobs Institute, Healthier Life, which will bridge the gap between healthcare and technology. The majority of Cornell Tech's nearly 100 alumni are pursuing their own startups and working at companies in New York City.

MAYOR DE BLASIO – quote to come

"We are so grateful for the generosity of Bloomberg Philanthropies. This gift holds special meaning because Mayor Bloomberg first envisioned the Applied Sciences initiative and has seen this project through since its inception in 2011," said Cornell University President David J. Skorton. "At Cornell Tech we are creating a high-tech entrepreneurial hub for the benefit of the city, the state and the world, and I want to thank Governor Cuomo, Mayor Bloomberg, Mayor de Blasio and many others for their trust, vision and partnership as we work to reinvent graduate education for the digital age and build a pipeline of tech talent right here in New York."

"New York became the greatest city in the world because we dared to dream bigger than anyone else, and this project – and the challenge it represents to Silicon Valley – are part of that tradition," said Michael R. Bloomberg. "After talking with leaders from every industry, we launched a competition to bring an applied science campus here, to help lay an economic foundation for the next century -- creating jobs and opportunity for New Yorkers on every rung of the economic ladder. I believe in the importance of this public-private partnership to our city's future, and it's why the contribution is in honor of my daughters, as there is no better gift I can leave them than to help make the world -- and their hometown -- a better place. This is a gift to support a brighter future for our city and for every young person who grows up here or comes here with a dream, like I did."

"Cornell Tech has come so far in just over three years, with new degree programs, faculty, 100 graduates and our developing campus on Roosevelt Island. We are extremely grateful to all of our partners in this effort, including the NYC tech community, the City, Roosevelt Islanders and many more who are helping us bring our vision to life," said Cornell Tech Dean Daniel Huttenlocher.

"This is a historic day for Cornell University and for New York City. Cornell has had an unwavering commitment to innovation over its rich history, and Cornell Tech is a prime example of that. We are achieving something revolutionary here, and this very generous gift from Bloomberg Philanthropies is symbolic of our shared values and dedication to the future," said Robert S. Harrison, Cornell University Board Chair.

"Cornell Tech, which is the home of the Joan and Irwin Jacobs Technion-Cornell Institute, will be one of the most fascinating campuses ever built. It is extremely gratifying to know that the Technion is part of it. It will be one of the most modern and advanced research institutes in the world -- a citadel of innovation. When I visited Roosevelt Island recently, I felt that I was standing on a bridge between the Technion and Cornell University. I think everyone in Israel and New York should be proud of what has been accomplished here. I congratulate Mayor Michael Bloomberg for his vision and for his extraordinary gift that will help make this vision a reality," said Technion President Peretz Lavie.

"New York City is a global hub for innovation and there is no better home for Cornell Tech's new state-of-the-art campus than right here in the tech capital of the world. From its unique fusion of technology, art, open space and community to its commitment to sustainability and energy conservation, the Cornell Tech Roosevelt Island Campus represents the new frontier in education for the next generation of leaders and problem-solvers. The New York City Council is proud to welcome Cornell Tech to New York City and looks forward to its great success," said New York City Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito.

To commemorate the groundbreaking, Cornell Tech commissioned Cornell University alumnus Peter Gerakaris to create a site-specific installation at the RIVAA Gallery on Roosevelt Island. The exhibition opens today and represents the university's presence by fusing art, technology, place and community. The sprawling 1,000-square-foot installation of kaleidoscopic imagery engages the public in visual play as new layers, patterns, and connections are revealed with each viewing. The exhibit is supported by a generous gift from the Eisenberg Family.

The first phase of Cornell Tech's campus includes:

The Bloomberg Center, designed by Pritzker Prize-winning architect Thom Mayne of Morphosis Architects. The building is a departure from traditional academic facilities with an open plan and extensive collaborative as well as private work spaces, adapting open plan offices from the tech world to the academic arena. Cornell is aspiring for the building to be among the largest net-zero energy buildings in the United States, with all of its power generated on campus.

The Bridge at Cornell Tech, designed by WEISS/MANFREDI and developed by Forest City Ratner Companies, will be a first-of-its-kind building that will house an ecosystem of companies, researchers and entrepreneurs who are focused on catalyzing innovation and the commercialization of new products and technologies, driving economic growth for New York.

A residential building, designed by Handel Architects and developed by Hudson and Related Companies, that will be the first Passive House high-rise in the world. Passive House is the strict international building standard that drastically reduces energy consumption while creating a healthier and more comfortable living environment for a fraction of residents' usual energy costs. The residential building will be for faculty, staff and students to ensure the campus is active 24/7.

The first phase of the campus will open summer 2017. When fully completed, the campus will span 12 acres on Roosevelt Island and house approximately 2,000 students and hundreds of faculty and staff. The campus master plan was designed by Skidmore, Owings & Merrill with James Corner Field Operations, and includes a number of innovative features and facilities across a river-to-river campus with expansive views, a series of green, public spaces, and a seamless integration of indoor and outdoor areas. The campus will be one of the most environmentally friendly and energy-efficient campuses in the world.

In May, 73 master's students in computer science and business and 2 PhD students graduated from Cornell Tech, and more than half stayed in New York for job opportunities and to pursue their own startups. Almost one-third of the graduates are pursuing their own ventures that were developed on campus, including the winners of Cornell Tech's first-ever Startup Awards. Through the awards, five groups of students are now working full-time on the companies they built during their academic program with pre-seed funding from the Blackstone Foundation and free co-working space at Forest City Ratner's New York Times building.

Cornell Tech was founded when it was selected in December of 2011 as the winner of the New York City Economic Development Corporation's Applied Sciences NYC initiative. The Economic Development Corporation, then led by Executive Director Seth Pinsky, sought proposals for a university to develop and operate a new or expanded campus in the City in exchange for City capital, access to City-owned land – and the full support and partnership of City government. Cornell's proposal was selected ahead of submissions from 17 world-class institutions from around the globe. The Cornell and Technion partnership was selected by the City as the first winner of the competition and was provided with land on Roosevelt Island and $100 million in City capital to build the $2 billion, 2 million square foot tech campus.

Cornell Tech is already fulfilling its promise to New York City to spur tech education in New York City public schools. Cornell Tech has partnered with more than a dozen local schools, including PS/IS 217 on Roosevelt Island, and is coordinating professional development opportunities for teachers to gain experience in incorporating tech thinking into their teaching.

Cornell Tech

Cornell Tech develops pioneering leaders and technologies for the digital age. Cornell Tech brings together faculty, business leaders, tech entrepreneurs, and students in a catalytic environment to produce visionary results grounded in significant needs that will reinvent the way we live in the digital age. Cornell Tech's temporary campus has been up and running at Google's Chelsea building since 2012, with a growing world-class faculty, and about 150 master's and Ph.D. students who collaborate extensively with tech-oriented companies and organizations and pursue their own startups. Construction is underway on Cornell Tech's campus on Roosevelt Island, with a first phase due to open in 2017. When fully completed, the campus will include 2 million square feet of state-of-the-art buildings, over 2 acres of open space, and will be home to more than 2,000 graduate students and hundreds of faculty and staff.

Thanks.

We will send out something separate.

Quote:

“Cornell Tech isn’t just one of the world’s leading research institutions – it’s a pioneering model for using tech to solve real-world problems, and an economic game-changer that will drive smart, powerful, and equitable growth in New York City for generations,” said Mayor Bill de Blasio. “The new Roosevelt Island campus will bring together academia and industry in the service of invention and innovation-- and the result will be hundreds of homegrown companies that provide a pathway to opportunity for thousands of New Yorkers. We look forward to continued partnership with Cornell Tech, and commend Mayor Bloomberg’s commitment to this effort, and to this groundbreaking institution.”

Yes to listing DM Glen as attending on Advisory.

We'd love to be a part of the WSJ story. Keep us looped!

We'd like to give quotes for your press release, and review language. We'll circulate to housing reporters, but you should issue it.

Hi everyone, some additional logistical questions to add to the outstanding questions below:

- Should we arrange appropriate flags or can the city provide?
- Is there a podium with the City seal you'd like to use?

If you could advise on these and the below by the end of the day that would be terrific. We are still talking through the exclusive story with Emily Nonko at the WSJ and hope to have her committed ASAP.

Thanks.

- we'd like to put out a very barebones media advisory Monday (e.g. Greenpoint Landing Associates, L+M Development Partners, and City Leaders to Make Announcement at Greenpoint Landing Site). Please let me know if I should list DM Glen as attending. I understand Commissioner Been and President Rodney are both confirmed.
- Additionally, we've targeted Emily Nonko a freelancer at the WSJ to run a same day exclusive next Friday. She has our pitch now. We'll let you know if she decides to write.
- Lastly, we are drafting a press release to be jointly issued by Greenpoint Landing Associates and L+M Dev. Partners but wanted to see if any of your offices were planning on issuing something? If so we can share our draft to be repurposed once it's in good shape. Let me know what route you all prefer and we'll take it from there.

Hi Juliet, currently we have George Klein of Greenpoint Landing Associates and Ron Moelis, CEO of L+M Development Partners confirmed.

We are working to nail down precise staging details but right now we have a podium and possible riser with audience seating that would be angled toward the waterfront, primarily on the F2 site (the groundbreaking site). The skyline and East River would be the backdrop of the speakers and the topped out G2 affordable building would be behind the audience.

Please let me know if you have further questions. We'll look out for your prep materials.

Also, are there any other updates on what the event will look like or are we still pretty close to

Kate: Good talking to you yesterday. I've reattached the invite letter, which includes details on the project and broad thinking on messaging. In terms of a potential event, here's what we were thinking:

Timing: A May or June groundbreaking would be timely, with two affordable buildings underway and a third ready to break ground.

Location: The affordable building ready to break ground (site F) has remarkable views of the water and skyline, and is adjacent to the park and the first affordable building, which broke ground 10 months ago and is close to topping out.

Speaking program: The more the merrier, but would think speakers would come from among this list:

City

- Mayor
- Deputy Mayor Glen
- Commissioner Been
- Commissioner Rodney
- Commissioner Silver

Developers

- George Klein
- Ron Moelis

Local electeds

- CM Levin
- AM Lentol
- Sen. Dilan
- BP Adams
- Cong. Maloney

Community

- Open Space Alliance
- Others TBD

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Greenpoint Landing Associates, L+M Development Partners and City Officials Break Ground on Affordable Housing at Greenpoint Landing

Greenpoint Landing celebrates groundbreaking of three 100 percent affordable housing buildings on site

Half-mile, 22-acre stretch along the East River to include approximately 1,400 affordable housing units, a new 640-seat public school, four acres of resilient public green space along the waterfront

June 26, 2015 (BROOKLYN) – Greenpoint Landing Associates and L+M Development Partners, together with New York City’s Deputy Mayor for Housing and Economic Development Alicia Glen, Housing, Preservation & Development Commissioner Vicki Been, Housing Development Corporation President Gary Rodney, and OTHER VIPS (Levin, Lentol, Maloney, Carlo), today marked the progress of Greenpoint Landing, the mixed-income 22-acre development along the East River set to transform a section of long-underutilized Greenpoint waterfront. Of the 5,500 units expected to be built at Greenpoint Landing, approximately 1,400 will be affordable and the first 300 affordable units will be delivered to the community over the next two years.

“For the last decade, we have been a part of the wonderful Greenpoint community and we are so proud to be delivering quality affordable housing to the neighborhood as part of this transformative project. L&M Development Partners has been an excellent joint-venture partner on these first three affordable housing sites and we are truly grateful to the City, HPD and HDC for their partnership as well.” said Marian Klein, Senior Vice President of Greenpoint Landing Associates.

“Our work on the affordable housing sites, in partnership with Greenpoint Landing Associates, is the epitome of our efforts to create dynamic affordable housing and amenities that drive neighborhood growth in New York City,” said Ron Moelis, CEO of L+M Development Partners. “With a wide array of low-, moderate- and middle-income units, larger units for families and 13,000 square feet of open space for residents, our affordable buildings will help establish a vibrant community on the Greenpoint waterfront. This development would not have been possible without the help of the de Blasio administration and the local community, who partnered with us to bring this exciting project to fruition.”

Alicia Quote

Been Quote

“Ensuring that housing development is guided by meaningful community engagement and coordinated with public investments in infrastructure and services is a prime commitment of Housing New York,” said Gary Rodney, President of HDC. “This large-scale development, Greenpoint Landing, sets a precedent for how we as a City can both invest in affordable housing and meet the critical housing needs of our residents, as well as how to make strategic investments that support new housing while revitalizing communities, and promotes economic diversity. I would like to thank all of our partners in the public and private sector and elected officials for their hard work and continuous efforts that enable a wider range of New Yorkers to benefit from the City’s ongoing affordable housing efforts.”

Greenpoint Landing Associates has collaborated with L+M Development Partners to construct the first three 100 percent affordable housing buildings, totaling nearly 300 units:

- 5 Blue Slip: Scheduled to open in 2017, 5 Blue Slip will have 103 deeply affordable units available to residents who earn between 30 percent and 60 percent of the area median income.
- 21 Commercial Street: Scheduled to open in one year, 21 Commercial Street will have 93 units available to residents who earn between 40 percent and 60 percent of the area median income.
- 33 Eagle Street: Slated to open in late 2016, 33 Eagle Street will include 98 units available to residents who earn between 40 percent and 120 percent of the area median income.

Fifty percent of the affordable housing units are two-bedroom apartments, providing more affordable options for families in the community. The units will be marketed and leased as per New York City Department of Housing Preservation & Development (HPD) and Housing Development Corporation (HDC) guidelines, which have traditionally provided a 50 percent preference for local community residents. These permanently-affordable units will contribute to Mayor Bill de Blasio’s goal to preserve and create 200,000 units of affordable housing over the next 10 years.

Gary Handel of Handel Architects designed all three affordable buildings in a style that incorporates Greenpoint’s industrial and historic past. Handel Architects is known for its innovative residential developments such as the Cornell University Residences underway on Roosevelt Island. Greenpoint Landing has hired James Corner Field Operations, designer of The High Line and Cornell Tech, to design the four acres of publicly accessible open space across the entire site. For the first time in generations, this portion of Greenpoint will have unencumbered access to the waterfront, including a great lawn, picnic area and the Green Street Pier, providing vantage points for the community and residents to enjoy an unobstructed view of the Manhattan skyline.

The new green space will also serve as a resilient storm barrier for the Greenpoint community. Greenpoint Landing was one of the first waterfront sites in New York to integrate new FEMA flood regulations and has incorporated innovative resiliency into its design. The flood barrier to protect the community against a potential flood is concealed within the terraced topography of the public esplanade. Plantings in the area will be salt-tolerant and materials will be used that are able to withstand tidal surge.

Greenpoint Landing’s four acres of new park space will complement the five acres of public park land the City is redesigning at neighboring Newtown Barge Park (for which Greenpoint Landing Associates has contributed $5.5 million for immediate park enhancements) as well as Greenpoint Playground and Box Street Park. A new ferry landing is contemplated at Greenpoint Landing, which will be constructed adjacent to Newtown Barge Park.

Each of the first three affordable housing buildings will feature retail spaces on the ground floor, smaller spaces geared towards local retailers. There will be approximately 9,000 square feet of retail space in the first three buildings.

Greenpoint Landing Associates has gifted land to the School Construction Authority (SCA) to build a 640-seat District 14 public school serving pre-kindergarten through eighth grade students within the community. Approximately $45 million has been allocated for the design and construction of this school.

In 2014, the City of New York demolished the East River Sludge Storage Tank – a concrete structure on the corner of Commercial and Dupont Streets previously used to store sludge from the Newtown Creek Wastewater Treatment Plant. The demolition of the tank fulfilled a longstanding promise to the Greenpoint community.

Hi Ryan and Elaine.

Here's the draft press release. The BPL is still working on Linda's quote. Do you think we might be able to get something from Tom and Alicia before tomorrow?

Thanks so much.

Hi all —

Attached is the latest version of the press release. We're still locking down Linda's quote, and perhaps more are coming from your end, Spaceworks.

We should send this out late morning tomorrow, since the WSJ story will be out and the news will have been broken (I tweaked the opening to reflect this). We'll field requests for tours and work with you all to figure out how to schedule those.

Also attached is a Q&A with some of the tough questions we anticipate. Can BPL and Spaceworks both review for accuracy? We'll be able to answer these questions on background should we be asked, and can set up on the record interviews as they are requested.

Thanks,

Emma

Hi Mary, on your questions--

Ron Moelis will be there from L&M

Financing: Wells Fargo

(More info if you need: Projects received bond financing via HDC, who also provided subsidy. One building (E3) also received HPD subsidy. Wells Fargo provided credit enhancement on the bonds and was the low income housing tax credit investor. There was also a sponsor loan on G2 and F2.)

One MWBE: Landscape architect for two of the buildings - Starr Whitehouse Landscape Architects and Planners PLLC

Hi everyone, you have probably seen the SCOTUS news around the Fair Housing Act and impacts on local-resident preferences. Just wanted to flag for your team and see if there was a response you will have in case it comes up (we saw that Daily News' Alyssa Katz was already opining). We will follow your lead. We would also be ok with taking the reference to local affordable out of the release: The units will be marketed and leased as per New York City Department of Housing Preservation & Development (HPD) and Housing Development Corporation (HDC) guidelines, which have traditionally provided a 50 percent preference for local community residents.

If someone could let me know about staging questions below (flags+podium), that would be great.

Also, heads up that Jeremy and I are unable to attend the actual event next Friday. Jovana and Danielle from our team will be on site to coordinate and answer and questions. We also have folks from Rubenstein and folks from Marathon Strategies, who work for L+M, on site as well.

Hi everyone, some additional logistical questions to add to the outstanding questions below:

<!--[if !supportLists]--> • <!--[endif]-->Should we arrange appropriate flags or can the city provide?

<!--[if !supportLists]--> • <!--[endif]-->Is there a podium with the City seal you'd like to use?

If you could advise on these and the below by the end of the day that would be terrific. We are still talking through the exclusive story with Emily Nonko at the WSJ and hope to have her committed

ASAP.

Hi Juliet, currently we have George Klein of Greenpoint Landing Associates and Ron Moelis, CEO of L+M Development Partners confirmed.

We are working to nail down precise staging details but right now we have a podium and possible riser with audience seating that would be angled toward the waterfront, primarily on the F2 site (the groundbreaking site). The skyline and East River would be the backdrop of the speakers and the topped out G2 affordable building would be behind the audience.

Please let me know if you have further questions. We'll look out for your prep materials.

Thanks,

One question I do have – I noticed you had a list of potential speakers in your memo. Do you have a list of confirmed speakers prepared yet? If so, could you share it?

Also, are there any other updates on what the event will look like or are we still pretty close to what's outlined in the memo?

Thanks,

Kate: Good talking to you yesterday. I've reattached the invite letter, which includes details on the project and broad thinking on messaging. In terms of a potential event, here's what we were thinking:

Timing: A May or June groundbreaking would be timely, with two affordable buildings underway and a third ready to break ground.

Location: The affordable building ready to break ground (site F) has remarkable views of the water and skyline, and is adjacent to the park and the first affordable building, which broke ground 10 months ago and is close to topping out.

Speaking program: The more the merrier, but would think speakers would come from among this list:

City

- Mayor
- Deputy Mayor Glen
- Commissioner Been
- Commissioner Rodney
- Commissioner Silver

Developers

- George Klein
- Ron Moelis

Local electeds

- CM Levin
- AM Lentol
- Sen. Dilan
- BP Adams
- Cong. Maloney

Community

--Open Space Alliance

--Others TBD

Best,

Jeremy Soffin

Jovana,

Quotes and one addition to the press release below:

Quote from Deputy Mayor Alicia Glen:

“We have worked hard to make this the best project it can be. It will ultimately mean more than a thousand affordable apartments in a neighborhood where fast-rising rents are putting pressures on working families. And what’s remarkable—and a sign of our commitment to getting the most affordable housing for our dollars—is that the City succeeding in reducing the projected subsidy per unit by half. This is a good deal for taxpayers and a great project for this community.”

Quote from our DOB Commissioner:

“The innovative Greenpoint Landing project will promote housing equity in this community and bring the City closer to reaching the Mayor’s 200,000 unit affordable housing goal, while incorporating necessary resiliency design enhancements into the waterfront space,” said Building Commissioner Rick Chandler. “I want to thank Deputy Mayor Glen and her team for their efforts on this project. As the Department of Buildings assembles our Affordable Housing Acceleration Team, we look forward to enhanced collaboration with HPD and other city agencies that will ensure timely review of applications in order to achieve the Administration’s Housing New York goals.”

And we’d like to add the highlighted sentence to this paragraph:

Fifty percent of the affordable housing units are two-bedroom apartments, providing more affordable options for families in the community. The units will be marketed and leased as per New York City Department of Housing Preservation & Development (HPD) and Housing Development Corporation (HDC) guidelines, which have traditionally provided a 50 percent preference for local community residents. These permanently-affordable units will contribute to Mayor Bill de Blasio’s goal to preserve and create 200,000 units of affordable housing over the next 10 years. Consistent with the de Blasio administration’s commitment to stretching every dollar to produce more affordable housing, the administration worked with the developer to reduce the projected per-unit subsidy by half, from a projected $136,000 per unit to $65,000 per unit.

Hi everyone, you have probably seen the SCOTUS news around the Fair Housing Act and impacts on local-resident preferences. Just wanted to flag for your team and see if there was a response you will have in case it comes up (we saw that Daily News' Alyssa Katz was already opining). We will follow your lead. We would also be ok with taking the reference to local affordable out of the release: The units will be marketed and leased as per New York City Department of Housing Preservation & Development (HPD) and Housing Development Corporation (HDC) guidelines, which have traditionally provided a 50 percent preference for local community residents.

If you could advise on these and the below by the end of the day that would be terrific. We are still talking through the exclusive story with Emily Nonko at the WSJ and hope to have her committed ASAP.

Hi Juliet, currently we have George Klein of Greenpoint Landing Associates and Ron Moelis, CEO of L+M Development Partners confirmed.

We are working to nail down precise staging details but right now we have a podium and possible riser with audience seating that would be angled toward the waterfront, primarily on the F2 site (the groundbreaking site). The skyline and East River would be the backdrop of the speakers and the topped out G2 affordable building would be behind the audience.

Please let me know if you have further questions. We'll look out for your prep materials.

Also, are there any other updates on what the event will look like or are we still pretty close to what's outlined in the memo?

Kate: Good talking to you yesterday. I've reattached the invite letter, which includes details on the project and broad thinking on messaging. In terms of a potential event, here's what we were thinking:

Timing: A May or June groundbreaking would be timely, with two affordable buildings underway and a third ready to break ground.

Location: The affordable building ready to break ground (site F) has remarkable views of the water and skyline, and is adjacent to the park and the first affordable building, which broke ground 10 months ago and is close to topping out.

Speaking program: The more the merrier, but would think speakers would come from among this list:

City

- Mayor
- Deputy Mayor Glen
- Commissioner Been
- Commissioner Rodney
- Commissioner Silver

Developers

- George Klein
- Ron Moelis

Local electeds

- CM Levin
- AM Lentol
- Sen. Dilan
- BP Adams
- Cong. Maloney

Community

- Open Space Alliance
- Others TBD

Jovana et al,

I am so sorry but after weeks of running ragged on the Albany front, DM Glen woke up very under the weather and cannot make today's groundbreaking. We are truly, truly sorry! Commissioner Vicki Been will speak in her stead. I'm reachable at [REDACTED] if we can be any help with reporters today. Again, we really do apologize for being unable to make this great event!

Jovana,

Quotes and one addition to the press release below:

Quote from Deputy Mayor Alicia Glen:

"We have worked hard to make this the best project it can be. It will ultimately mean more than a thousand affordable apartments in a neighborhood where fast-rising rents are putting pressures on working families. And what's remarkable—and a sign of our commitment to getting the most affordable housing for our dollars—is that the City succeeding in reducing the projected subsidy per unit by half. This is a good deal for taxpayers and a great project for this community."

Quote from our DOB Commissioner:

"The innovative Greenpoint Landing project will promote housing equity in this community and bring the City closer to reaching the Mayor's 200,000 unit affordable housing goal, while incorporating necessary resiliency design enhancements into the waterfront space," said Building Commissioner Rick Chandler. "I want to thank Deputy Mayor Glen and her team for their efforts on this project. As the Department of Buildings assembles our Affordable Housing Acceleration Team, we look forward to enhanced collaboration with HPD and other city agencies that will ensure timely review of applications in order to achieve the Administration's Housing New York goals."

And we'd like to add the highlighted sentence to this paragraph:

Fifty percent of the affordable housing units are two-bedroom apartments, providing more affordable options for families in the community. The units will be marketed and leased as per New York City Department of Housing Preservation & Development (HPD) and Housing Development Corporation (HDC) guidelines, which have traditionally provided a 50 percent preference for local community residents. These permanently-affordable units will contribute to Mayor Bill de Blasio's goal to preserve and create 200,000 units of affordable housing over the next 10 years. Consistent with the de Blasio administration's commitment to stretching every dollar to produce more affordable housing, the administration worked with the developer to reduce the projected per-unit subsidy by half, from a projected $136,000 per unit to $65,000 per unit.

Hi everyone, you have probably seen the SCOTUS news around the Fair Housing Act and impacts on local-resident preferences. Just wanted to flag for your team and see if there was a response you will have in case it comes up (we saw that Daily News' Alyssa Katz was already opining). We will follow your lead. We would also be ok with taking the reference to local affordable out of the release: The units will be marketed and leased as per New York City Department of Housing Preservation & Development (HPD) and Housing Development Corporation (HDC) guidelines, which have traditionally provided a 50 percent preference for local community residents.

Hi Juliet, currently we have George Klein of Greenpoint Landing Associates and Ron Moelis, CEO of L+M Development Partners confirmed.

We are working to nail down precise staging details but right now we have a podium and possible riser with audience seating that would be angled toward the waterfront, primarily on the F2 site (the groundbreaking site). The skyline and East River would be the backdrop of the speakers and the topped out G2 affordable building would be behind the audience.

Please let me know if you have further questions. We'll look out for your prep materials.

Thanks,

Hi Nicole,

Thanks for checking in. We are working on internal prep documents for this event and will follow-up with you very soon with questions.

One question I do have – I noticed you had a list of potential speakers in your memo. Do you have a list of confirmed speakers prepared yet? If so, could you share it?

Also, are there any other updates on what the event will look like or are we still pretty close to what's outlined in the memo?

Thanks,

Juliet

Kate: Good talking to you yesterday. I've reattached the invite letter, which includes details on the project and broad thinking on messaging. In terms of a potential event, here's what we were thinking:

Timing: A May or June groundbreaking would be timely, with two affordable buildings underway and a third ready to break ground.

Location: The affordable building ready to break ground (site F) has remarkable views of the water and skyline, and is adjacent to the park and the first affordable building, which broke ground 10 months ago and is close to topping out.

Speaking program: The more the merrier, but would think speakers would come from among this list:

City

- Mayor
- Deputy Mayor Glen
- Commissioner Been
- Commissioner Rodney
- Commissioner Silver

Developers

- George Klein
- Ron Moelis

Local electeds

- CM Levin
- AM Lentol
- Sen. Dilan
- BP Adams
- Cong. Maloney

Community

- Open Space Alliance
- Others TBD

When Mayor Bill de Blasio eviscerated Gov. Andrew Cuomo, a fellow Democrat, in an unusually candid press conference earlier today, there was the usual chatter about a vindictive governor readying to punish an unruly mayor who didn't know his place.

But among progressive Democrats frustrated at an executive who they see as antithetical to their values, there was elation. For Democrats in New York City and Albany, Mr. de Blasio's sudden decision to publicly air his grievances at Mr. Cuomo was long-awaited, the equivalent of a come-to-Jesus moment.

"The only way to make progress with Andrew is to attack him. If you attack him effectively, he'll cave. He's a bully," said Bill Samuels, a prominent liberal activist and fundraiser. "The verdict for Cuomo for many of us was decided long ago."

When Mr. de Blasio fumed that he had been "disappointed at every turn" with Mr. Cuomo and admitted he couldn't "tell you that I can place his philosophy at this point," liberals found their conscience given voice in the mayor of New York City.

For Mr. de Blasio and the left, the indignities are stacked high. Last year, Mr. Cuomo denied Mr. de Blasio the tax hike he sought to fund his universal prekindergarten initiative and later rammed through a law that guaranteed new charter schools free space in New York City, punishing the anti-charter teachers' union and the mayor, who was always a charter critic.

"It keeps playing out in ways that I think sometimes are about dealmaking, sometimes about revenge," Mr. de Blasio said today. "I think each situation obviously is different. But it's not about policy. It's not about substance. It's certainly not about the millions of people affected."

Despite Mr. de Blasio's enthusiastic endorsement of Mr. Cuomo's re-election bid in 2014, including a behind-the-scenes push to win him the Working Families Party endorsement, he found only roadblocks and inexplicable slights. There was the time Mr. Cuomo announced a new, controversial Ebola policy with Republican Gov. Chris Christie—and didn't tell the mayor. There was the time, early this year, when Mr. Cuomo ordered the shuttering of the subways to prepare for a snowstorm—and didn't tell the mayor. There was the time, less than a month later, when Mr. de Blasio, as a centerpiece of his State of the City address, announced a plan to build an affordable housing complex on a Queens rail yard—and Mr. Cuomo, within hours, shot it down. There was the time last week when Mr. Cuomo all but admitted he was trashing the mayor anonymously to reporters.

Mr. de Blasio and his Albany team had hoped incremental, tactful negotiation, combined with an appeal to logic and a degree of righteousness would win the day with Mr. Cuomo. But 2015, when mayoral control was extended for a single year and rent laws were barely strengthened, proved Mr. de Blasio's more honeyed approach to handling Mr. Cuomo failed. Mr. Cuomo's reflexive dismissal of almost everything the mayor advocated—from a reform of the 421a tax break to a decision to allow more charter schools in the city—baffled City Hall.

So today, Mr. de Blasio tried something new.

“Enough is enough. This isn't about personalities. It's about one personality playing politics and using 8.5 million people as pawns,” crowed one de Blasio loyalist.

An Albany Democrat was similarly blunt.

“I think what you are seeing is that the governor has no friends and that is because he has no actual beliefs and vision,” the Democrat said. “He just wants to win.”

Mr. de Blasio's new posture—far more pugilistic than passive aggressive—represents a realization that he has more leverage in this fight than many, including himself, might have believed. Yes, Albany wields inordinate power over New York City, determining whether it can raise its minimum wage, control its public schools, or alter the web of its rent regulations. Yes, an irate Mr. Cuomo can continue to thwart much of what Mr. de Blasio hopes to accomplish.

Yet Mr. de Blasio, for all his scuffles at home, is the more popular man, at least with progressive Democrats who make up a primary electorate. Mr. Cuomo's overall popularity continues to plummet, too: just 44 percent of voters gave him a thumbs up earlier this month, and 42 percent didn't.

Among top Democrats in New York, Mr. Cuomo is virtually friendless. He has burned bridges with Sen. Charles Schumer, Attorney General Eric Schneiderman and State Comptroller Thomas DiNapoli. Ditto the rank-and-file party activists motivated more by ideology than Mr. Cuomo's centrist pragmatism.

If Mr. Cuomo enacts payback on Mr. de Blasio, a city of eight million people could suffer, and Mr. de Blasio can point to a scapegoat in the governor. He has the advantage of the largest media market in the world to disseminate his message; Mr. Cuomo, never one for cameras or microphones, has Albany.

Viewed as feckless by at least some politicians, Mr. de Blasio is still a relatively deft campaigner and messenger, a veteran of several tough elections. Mr. Cuomo has mixed it up with the State Legislature, but how adept he can become at a full-scale public relations war with a mayor of his own party remains an open question.

And Assembly and State Senate Democrats, long cowed by the governor, are feeling emboldened to speak out as Mr. de Blasio has done. If Republicans lose their slim majority in 2016—Mr. de Blasio implied today Mr. Cuomo leaned on them to foil him—Mr. de Blasio will only have more weapons in his arsenal.

In Albany, where strength often matters more than reason, Mr. de Blasio could conceivably hold leverage over Mr. Cuomo if he seeks re-election in 2018. An underfunded challenger, law professor Zephyr Teachout, garnered a surprising 34 percent of the vote against Mr. Cuomo last year. Activists are hoping to coax a bigger name, like Mr. Schneiderman, to take on Mr. Cuomo—if Mr. de Blasio lends his clout and fundraising prowess to an influential challenger, or even feints at doing so, Mr. Cuomo could find himself in a very uncomfortable position.

“We’ve seen Cuomo’s standing plummet as more and more people realize he’s not his father and really has a Republican austerity agenda,” Ms. Teachout said. “Increasingly, what the base cares about really matters.”

So Tony wanted to meet Jonathan Rosen and Josh Wallack this week, before MBdB came back. Maybe he can just meet with Wallack and Emmy Liss and go over the metrics Wallack sent him. Tony needs to have something he can say to MBdB to point to progress on edu speech prep. Can you please work with Joy B to get Wallack in before Weds even if only for 30 mins? ## Education goals - speech outline

- All children have the right to an excellent public education. We believe in and strive for a system that delivers high quality education to all of our students. We will not settle for less.
- Many have said a system cannot effectively close the gap and raise the bar at the same time; we disagree. We are committed to doing both, and believe the goals of excellence and equity can be mutually reinforcing
- Our theory of action relies on the expertise of educators who know what works:
  1. Set a high standard for all our schools, which starts with rich instruction in the skills that will enable children to succeed, by the most effective and well-trained teachers, with strong principals to lead their school communities and select and support the most effective educators
  2. Address the barriers that keep kids from learning without allowing those barriers to become an excuse for why they cannot succeed
  3. Get kids an earlier start to even the playing field, and reinforce the impact of those early interventions with a system of academic and community supports for kids at all grade levels (Never saying 'it's too late' to provide an excellent education.)
- What does this mean in practice?
  1. Starting early, we set an ambitious goal to enroll every four-year-old in New York City in free, full day pre-k. Today, we have over 70,000 children in these programs. We will continue to make seats available until every family has access to a program that is best suited to their needs, and we are dedicated to ensuring the highest quality pre-kindergarten education for all of our students
  2. We are implementing a community schools model to provide the supports that enable children to enter the classroom ready to learn, including health services, like free vision screenings, and social-emotional supports. This year, XXX children will receive free physical and mental health services and additional instructional support with the help of our community partners.
    - And especially in our Renewal Schools, we are working to address the effects of deep poverty while raising our expectations for academic achievement. The two strategies go hand-in-hand
  3. Across the system, we are raising the bar for quality in all our classrooms and ensuring all our students are learning the material that will prepare them for their future, taught by effective teachers, who are supported by strong principals
    - The implementation of Common Core is raising the standard for all of our students. Common Core is not a curriculum but an approach; designed to teach higher-order and creative thinking
    - Paired with the implementation of rich classroom content for our students is rigorous training for our teachers to continuously improve their practice
    - And we are supporting our principals to lead strong, healthy school communities and continue striving for academic excellence in all 1800 of our schools

- We have bold aspirations for our system, which are grounded in the notion that every child has the right to an excellent education. We hold this unwavering belief to be true for the thousands of four-year-olds who joined the inaugural class of universal pre-k, and for the thousands of students who enter our system for the first time from near and far in high school. We will work until:
  1. Every high school student is on track to graduate, ready for college, career, and independent living
  2. Every middle school student is socially, emotionally, and academically ready for high school
  3. Every elementary school student has the academic foundation to succeed
  4. Every child in NYC enters kindergarten ready to learn
- At every level of education, we are preparing students for the next set of hurdles – academically, socially, and emotionally – and are striving for all our students to become inquisitive, thoughtful, productive members of society
- But setting aspirations is not enough to drive excellence. And progress toward our goals is more than just a test score. We have identified key moments in students’ academic and social-emotional growth that will set them up to succeed in the long-term, and we will focus on making progress against these indicators at a system level
- These key moments in our students’ education include:
  1. Are our second graders reading at grade level?
  2. Are our seventh-graders socially and emotionally prepared for the rigors of high school?
  3. Are our tenth-graders earning enough credits to be on-track for graduation and college and career readiness?

Hi Jeff,

I'm Andy Fitzgerald, I work on the Citymart team over at BerlinRosen. I wanted to follow-up with you on scheduling a call to coordinate our press outreach with your plans around the kick off the NYC partnership. I'll be handling the logistics while my colleague Jordan Smith is on vacation – are there times over the next few days that could work for you?

Thanks!

Andy

Subject: Staten Island Power Outage Updates

Staten Island Power Outage Fact Sheet

“This afternoon about 19,000 Con Edison customers in two networks on Staten Island lost power. The City is working closely with Con Edison as the company restores services. All City agencies are coordinating to ensure Staten Island and its residents get the support they need. As always, in the event of an emergency, affected residents should call 911.”

- First Deputy Mayor Anthony Shorris

Con Edison

- 19K customers now out of service
- Two Con Edison networks impacted (Fox Hills and Fresh Kill)
- Three feeders went out at approximately 2PM causing the initial outage
- Five feeders were down at one point
- Currently, two feeders remain out and they are undergoing repairs
- Transporting 8 generators to support the two impacted networks – 3 are currently on site
- Richmond Hills under an 8% voltage reduction
- Midtown West network in Manhattan under an 8% voltage reduction
- Residents should report a loss of electric service to Con Edison at 1-800-75-CONED (26633)
- Con Edison has asked customers in impacted areas who have power not to use appliances such as washers, dryers, air conditioners, and other energy-intensive equipment until the equipment problems are resolved

NYPD

- Task Force resources currently being deployed to Staten Island
- Traffic assistance: 32 traffic agents and 4 supervisors to manage main thoroughfares
- Transporting light towers – 24 light towers to provide lighting at critical intersections and locations including Hylan Blvd. and Father Capodanno Blvd.
- Visiting critical care patients to get them necessary attention and care

OEM

- Coordinating citywide response
- Setting up field command post near Staten Island University Hospital
- Extending hours of operation for select cooling centers on Staten Island until 11PM: Todt Hill Community Center at 255 Westwood Avenue, Richmond Terrace Community Center at 71 Jersey Street, and West Brighton Community Center at 230 Broadway
- Facilitating deployment of MTA busses to help provide air conditioning at critical locations
- Contacting nursing homes in impacted areas
- Transporting 8 light towers to the area
- Managing the deployment of Community Emergency Response Team (CERT) volunteers (currently 19 volunteers are assisting NYPD with traffic control)

EMS

- Adding units to impacted areas

-South Brooklyn EMS units being prepped to support potential increase in call volume

NYCHA

-Stair climbers to check on elderly and critical NYCHA residents

-Deployed high-voltage electrician teams to hook up generators when deployed

Hi Jeff,

I hope all is well. I would like to follow up our conversation regarding the event next Tuesday. In our last call said you wanted to use this opportunity to start talking about our partnership. Is this still the plan? As we are presenting an ignite talk directly after your presentation I would like to briefly align the messaging. Would you have a minute for a call this afternoon or Monday morning?

Also Berlin Rosen have a few questions for you as they are preparing the announcement of our partnership (whenever appropriate). I have listed them below to give you an idea where they are going with this. They want to naturally leverage this announcement as much as possible and are therefore keen on aligning with you.

Questions from Berlin Rosen for Jeff Merritt in NYC

- Are you planning to mention Citymart-NYC partnership at event on Tuesday?
- If not, what would be a good timeline for going public?
- How locked in are challenge topics?
  - What challenges can we specifically name in our release and initial outreach effort? (Process for employees to raise problems, get feedback?)
    - How much detail can we go into on these?
- Can we talk about the focus on underused or outmoded assets?
- We'll probably have a couple of quotes from Citymart, would it be possible to get a quote from the Mayor or a city official to include?
- Other partners we should mention in release?

Thanks

Hi Ishanee,

I work with Common Ground and they let me know about the Mayor's street outreach plans Monday and that they may come to Common Ground's Andrews building on the Bowery if someone agrees to come into housing. Do you know if the Mayor will want to come to the Andrews with those individuals? We just want to make sure we are prepared.

Thanks so much!

Need off-the-top-of-your-head BdB favorite dining/drinking spot intel.

We're cooking up a post for the Mayor/Fam (TBD) on The Infatuation, a food app with a sizable audience. All part of our quest to make Mayor "real" in the digital realm.

I've included you BdB-world VIPs/Park Slope Mafia types b/c you're the most likely to know where the Mayor (& fam) most likes to eat and drink.

I know places like: Bar Toto, Di Fara's, Colson's

Please share whatever places come to mind for you folks. Would be great to get outside of Park Slope too.

We have a wide berth here. Some categories to trigger ideas...

- Authentic Ethnic Eats
- Best Burger Ever
- Date Night
- Impressing Out of Towners
- Late Night Eats
- Quick Eats
- Special Occasions
- Sports on TV
- Unique Dining Experience
- Vegetarians

I am certain you have more important cases on your docket than this one. Please feel free to disregard.

Peace.

TRANSFORMING
THE WAY CITIES

New York City Will Transform the Way it Solves Problems in New Partnership with Citymart

Mayor's Office of Technology and Innovation and Citymart will focus first on how to best use city's obsolete assets

New York, N.Y. –In the largest implementation yet of its innovative approach, Citymart will partner with the New York City Mayor's office to pilot a new method that could transform the way the city's government solves problems by connecting city planners with innovative new ideas through open challenges to entrepreneurs and citizens.

The Mayor's Office of Technology and Innovation will work with Manhattan-based Citymart on launching up to five challenges, starting with a focus on how the city can best take advantage of obsolete or underused assets that are spread throughout the city but no longer serve their original purposes. Postal service boxes, emergency phones, and fire hydrants are among the possible dormant assets to be repurposed and revitalized.

"Anything done in New York City has ramifications around the world – we're absolutely thrilled to be partnering with the city in this effort," said Citymart CEO Sascha Haselmayer. "Mayor Bill de Blasio proved he's committed to transforming the way the city approaches some of the most daunting urban problems that any city in the world can face by establishing the Mayor's Office of Technology and Innovation to seek out inventive, effective, and affordable solutions. This process will help the city further that goal by leveraging existing resources to bring new players into the process and open up new possibilities for innovation."

Citymart helps cities learn how to use the open market to find proven, innovative solutions addressing the pressing needs of urban areas, helping them rethink their spending habits so they focus on not just buying goods and services, but on solving problems. Citymart starts by working with a city to help them define their problems and capabilities. Then the firm conducts intensive research and outreach to identify the market leaders and proven innovators with possible solutions and issues a challenge to those leaders, to local businesses and citizens, and to a global network of businesses, entrepreneurs, and universities in a search for the most effective and affordable solution.

The Citymart-New York City partnership will apply Citymart's unique problem-solving methodology to address the problem of obsolete assets and other city needs. "We will issue an open challenge to market leaders and proven innovators for possible solutions to each particular problem," Haselmayer said. "This challenge asks three simple questions: 'What is your idea for solving the problem, how ready is your solution, and how can we measure its success?' We'll be training New York City staff how to run these challenges and evaluate proposed solutions in a transparent and efficient manner."

Citymart is also partnering with Philadelphia, Miami, Long Beach, and other major American cities to help them transform the way they solve city problems.

"Cities in the United States collectively spend more than one trillion dollars that we know could be spent in better solutions. If we put even a small fraction of that to use in creating cities that are more responsive, more efficient and more nimble at solving problems for citizens, we'll make an enormous impact on thousands of people's lives" said Citymart Principal Julia Haselmayer.

Citymart is a New York-based company that transforms the way cities solve problems, connecting them with new ideas through open challenges to entrepreneurs and citizens. The company has helped cities around the world from San Francisco to London find proven, innovative solutions addressing the pressing needs of urban areas, such as efficient transportation, quality public spaces, sustainability, effective social services, and robust commerce and tourism.

Sorry for v slow response.

I changed some of these dates because the 2025 date is sooner than it seems—ppl who would graduate college then are already halfway through their journey (7th grade) .

I think for today we need to just have a placeholder and not get into the specifics bc (a) we are still crafting the options here and (b) it would help a lot if we could get aligned on direction and then go hammer this part out.

What do you think of this list - which I took from menu you gave plus some stuff we discussed in mtg last week? I made up some of the dates/stats - just looking for broad strokes to test...

1. Doubling the number of NYC students who graduate from college by 2030
2. Cutting the high school dropout rate in half.
3. Doubling the percentage of students who graduate from NYC public schools who are deemed college-ready.
4. NYC signs a pledge with public school families that says every child who is capable of going to college will get the instruction/resources they need to get to college.
5. Every Second Grader will read on grade level.
6. Double the number of students who are reading successfully within 10 years.
7. 200,000 more NYC students entering college by 2025.
  - Double # of college graduates by 2030
  - 50,000 more college graduates by 2030
8. Add XX community schools, offering mental health services, career counseling, eye exams, and nutrition assistance to all students, by 2020.
9. All 8th Graders will have the math skills they need to succeed in high school.
10. Every student who graduates from NYC public school with a B average will get City support to cut their rate of student loan repayment in half.
11. (ALT) Every student who graduates from NYC public school with a B average will get City support to cut their rate of student loan repayment in half - at whatever New York State college they choose - public, private, or community college.
12. Double funding for 0 to 3 learning by 2020.

13. Double the size of Tuition Assistance Program grants from $5K to $10K.
14. (ALT) Double the size of Tuition Assistance Program grants from $5K to $10K, paid for by putting a 1% tax on currently tax-free university endowments larger than $100 million.
15. New York Promise: up to $5K towards college for every NYC kid.
16. Every kid who graduates college ready will get up to $5K towards college.
17. 529NYC—a college fund for every New York City student, funded by every New Yorker, up to $2500 per student
18. 529NYC—a college fund for every New York City student, funded by every New Yorker, up to $5K per student

Would he be able to do 30 mins in the following windows?

I just spoke to Jake Lemonda [REDACTED] president of the UFOA which represents to fire officers -- including lieutenants. He says he has already issued a positive statement re: being present at my visit with Hayes and how much it was appreciated. He also says (I can't verify) that he's spoken to Cassidy (not his member, keep in mind) and Steve says he will not comment -- fwiw. Make sure Lemonda's statement gets out there -- I told him I needed him to stand up here and speak the positive truth, and he agreed. He says other union leaders will attack me -- I assume he means mullins and lynch. I need a scorecard tmrw re: who was a friend and who was cheap. Fwiw, the electeds at the presser (Savino, Cusick and Rose) all told me they thought the attack was outrageous -- see if you can get them on record. Rose was in the hospital room with me. Ironically, the firefighters and officers I encountered were overwhelmingly warm and appreciative, including the members of Engine 158 who I spoke with at the hospital. I know this too shall pass, but let's deal with these bastards.

Subject: Re: SI ADVANCE: Firefighter shot responding to house fire on Staten Island

First of all, the news media is pitiful and it's sad for our city and nation.

Second, we keep getting new scenarios to add to our database. Here's what we know: the media wants to focus on death in all its forms and wants me to be present wherever death or grievous injury is involved. Today's controversy about when exactly I should be at the hospital or an active shooter situation and what I'm "allowed" to do if I'm not there is a case in point.

We can make a conscience decision to surrender to them and just go to fires, crime scenes and memorials all day every day -- or we can govern. Now, that being said, it is worth having a team discussion re: whether we no longer believe we have the firepower to fight back in these situations. If we instead believe the media environment has metastasized, we can then institute a protocol that says that I will go immediately to whatever crisis location exists as the default position. Granted, this attack line today would have been harder to promote if I was at CH -- but then the line could have been I took too long to go visit the hospital. If by now you're thinking this is a lose-lose equation and a trap, you may be right.

Third, this is always an attack on us and what we represent. Only we can decide the template we believe in. Only we can choose to either give in (which might be a logical choice) to this part of the tabloid culture, or to blow by it. But we need a template that is sharper. We've had a basic one before but there's still a long pause and lots of internal discussion typically before we act. We need to have a clearer playbook and faster execution.

Fourth, one person in charge -- the only thing that ever works. From now on, Tom will be responsible for immediately convening all key personnel to decide how and when I go to the scene of a crisis. It must start immediately upon info coming in. And I expect the fastest possible decision. Until we decide otherwise, when Tom is not available, Phil will run this process. And when Phil is not available, Dom will run this process.

They will never defeat us. Only we can do that. Let's get tighter, clearer, faster, better.

Just spoke with BB. Situation is not over but is contained. Suspect holed up in a basement apt -- surrounding area evacuated. PD is flying the suspect's mom up from DE by helicopter -- suspect has asked to speak with her, hopefully as part of surrender. BB will brief the media now. He suggests I go out after the situation is resolved to be part of the post-incident presser and to thank first responders. Then could visit the wounded lieutenant in hospital or at home if he's been released.

Think should read visiting the firefighter after Nigro connects you.

Think we shouldn't be anywhere near the scene now or any time soon. Think we call that once the scene is no longer active, and would underline that that could be a different trip to hospital, not necessarily to scene.

Emma is talking to electeds and Cassidy and that readout will be helpful as well.

Just spoke with Nigro and Bratton. Nigro's at the hospital with the lieutenant -- thankfully he's in good condition. BB's going to the site where the shooter is, and says this could be a prolonged stand-off. Shooter is well-armed. BB will update me when he's out there. Nigro will put me on the phone with the lieutenant shortly most likely. BB held open the possibility that I should go to the site of the standoff. Need you guys to evaluate next steps and prepare to make schedule changes. I would put the guy I'm seeing for my first mtg on alert that we may need to re-sched

Firefighter shot responding to house fire on Staten Island

SI ADVANCE - Maura Grunlund

An explosive situation unfolded early Friday morning in Mariners Harbor when U.S. Marshal's attempted to serve a warrant to an individual and the person set fire to his home and began shooting, according to police and a law enforcement source at the scene.

One of the bullets struck a firefighter in the ankle, according to a spokesman for the NYPD. The shooter is still believed to be inside the home and the situation active.

Firefighters responded to the blaze at 5:58 a.m. at 15 Destiny Court, just around the corner from St. Clement and St. Michael R.C. Church.

An enormous number of emergency officials are on the scene -- including heavily-armed Emergency Service Unit cops, Haz-Mat officers and about 60 firefighters.

At least three helicopters are flying over the area and there is a heavy smell of smoke in the air.

So it turns out NYC already has a college grad goal--to double # of grads coming out of CUNY by 2020 (from 2010).

Would like to broaden so I propose adding following:
Beat the national college completion rate (it's 46%) by 2030
NY produces 75,000 additional college grads by 2030 (cumulative)

Requires adding, on average, 5K grads per year--obviously targets would be lower initially.

Josh's #s will be based on a better spreadsheet so we should use his.

Also I think we can take off the $10K for college that's outside realm of possibility.
That's 500M/yr just at today's grad rates for something state should pay for.

A lot of subjective reflection here, to say the least, but a way to move forward. My advice is to let us play good cop/bad cop with room 9. Yesterday was a top shelf performance that I've seen plenty of times before. Keep doing what you did yesterday. And I promise to not get ahead of the team again.

After Friction, Renewed Zen for de Blasio

By MICHAEL M. GRYNBAUM and MATT FLEGENHEIMERAUG.
18, 2015

He was the mayor of populist messages, pledging to crack down on toplessness in Times Square, a recent pet cause of the New York City tabloids, whose campaigns he typically ignores.

He was the mayor of good deeds, promoting his efforts to end an outbreak of Legionnaires' disease in the Bronx.

And, notably, Bill de Blasio was the mayor of magnanimity, demurring when invited to complain about the news media, and calmly fielding a query about his gym habits, which he had sternly dismissed as “not a serious question” just days ago.

Mr. de Blasio, in a news conference at City Hall on Tuesday, showcased a side of his personality that New Yorkers have seen little of lately: crankiness replaced by comity, defiance replaced by evenhandedness.

When his press secretary, Karen Hinton, signaled that it was time to go, Mr. de Blasio, a former campaign manager who has a habit of overruling aides, collected his papers and walked off.

The appearance was a sign, preliminary to be sure, that Mr. de Blasio may be starting to heed the concerns of allies and advisers who are worried that a pileup of political headaches and public-relations bungles have dimmed views of his administration.

A Quinnipiac poll this month showed that more New Yorkers disapprove of the mayor's performance than at any other time in his tenure, in the wake of a feud with Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo and scraps over homelessness and taxicabs. The mayor has also faced questions about patronage — a $150,000-a-year position went to the companion of a top aide — and his populist image, after his wife told court officials that she was too busy to perform jury duty.

After a family trip on Monday to Rhode Island, Mr. de Blasio was back at City Hall on Tuesday. And there were subtle, but perceptible, shifts in his words.

The mayor was frustrated last week by a question about why he had exercised at a gym during a police standoff with a gunman on Staten Island. On Tuesday, he responded, taking pains to underscore his devotion to the job.

“There is no such thing in this job as being off duty,” Mr. de Blasio said. (He also suggested that exercise helped him “be as effective as I can be.”)

Criticized by some on quality-of-life concerns, Mr. de Blasio on Tuesday issued a stern warning when asked about the trend of topless women in Times Square who wear body paint, a novelty that caught the ire of The

New York Post in April and The Daily News.

“It’s wrong, it’s wrong,” the mayor said, pledging to address the issue “in a very aggressive manner.”

The mayor’s shift in tone came after several days of unflattering headlines, including an article in The New York Times on Sunday about his difficulties controlling perception of City Hall.

In an interview with The Times for that article on Saturday, Mr. de Blasio expressed deep frustration with how the news media has covered his administration. He began by saying: “Let’s be straightforward here: You’re going to write a piece about how it’s been a bad summer, and you’re not going to talk about our achievements. So I’m really interested in why you’re going to do that.”

The mayor also said that political challenges were a “constant part of the reality of being mayor of New York,” and he asserted that the news media had reported on his predecessor, Michael R. Bloomberg, with “a kid-glove sensibility.”

Privately, some allies of the mayor said this week that they were surprised by the tenor of some of Mr. de Blasio’s comments.

On Tuesday, Mr. de Blasio took a different tack. When a reporter broached the subject of news media coverage, Mr. de Blasio’s reply was calm and unwavering.

“I don’t really have anything to say on that right now,” the mayor said. “Let’s stay on the substance of the day.” He moved on to the next question.

On Wednesday morning, Mr. de Blasio is set to appear on WNYC for an interview. The mayor rarely takes listener call-in questions, but he plans to do so on Wednesday.

On a WNYC show Tuesday, a man identifying himself as “Louis in the Village” called in to defend the mayor, and the station’s producers and listeners said he was almost certainly the comedian Louis C.K.

“I really like this mayor,” Louis in the Village said on air. “And I think he deserves a better chance than he’s getting.”

A version of this article appears in print on August 19, 2015, on page A19 of the New York edition with the headline: After Friction, Renewed Zen For de Blasio .

Hi, all—I've connected variously with a bunch of you in the past day for some excellent feedback and updates. Right now I'm in the process of revising three documents to have available at the speech prep later:

- 1- Overall education vision and goals doc (with speech planning/goals too)
- 2- Vignettes doc (the student portraits we're painting in the speech to communicate the vision)
- 3- Pull quotes/soundbites doc

I'll send these around to you all as soon as they're ready for feedback so we're all on the same page heading into 5:30. Thanks very much.

EQUITY AND EXCELLENCE

Every Day, Every Step of the Way

Speech notes:

- College is the fulcrum
  - We cannot fulfill our destiny unless every child who wants to go to college CANcan
  - What is City's new vision of how to get kids to college, how to succeed there, how to afford it, and everything K-12 that supports that?

- APPROACH:
  - Anti-bureaucratic: child-centered, not system/government-centered
  - Anti-status quo – willingness to break it down – undercut perceptions we are perpetuating status quo
  - Historic shifts balanced with deliverables people will notice

- TONE: Positive, resolute, rallying (call to arms – our kids can do it; it will take us all), expansive: we are battling for the soul of public education

Why we are driven to action:

- The status quo is unacceptable.
- Education determines economic destiny more now than at any point in human history.
- NYC's success as a 21st century global city depends on the success of our education system.

Formatted

Values behind our action:

- Every school can and should deliver an excellent education for every child.
- Every child can grow into a successful adult—ready for college, ready for life—if their education gives them the right tools.

Simple set of ideas that express/execute these values:

- Start educating children earlier so all children begin kindergarten ready to succeed.
- Make parents, the first and last teachers of children, our partners.
  - 40 minutes of parent-teacher time each week
  - Community schools
- No Treat each school and each student individually. No two schools and no two children need the same support in order to excel.

Formatted: Font: Bold

- To fulfill their potential, each child will travel their own academic, social, and emotional journey
- To become great, each school needs different amounts of support in the six key areas that comprise our Framework for Great Schools
- ~~The majority of our investments are going to schools most in need~~
- ~~Parents, the first and last teachers of children, are our partners.~~
  - ~~40 mins of parent teacher time each week~~
  - ~~Community schools~~
- ~~We will address the needs of the whole child. Break down all barriers to learning so children come to school ready to succeed.~~
  - ~~Mental and physical health matter.~~
  - ~~Mental and physical health: community schools (social services, glasses, etc.)~~
  - ~~Affordability: College savings accounts, testing waivers~~
- Aiming high matters.
  - Don't force kids to dream about college, a living wage job and a career: show them
    - ~~EVERY~~ Every middle and high school will have a business partner
    - Huge numbers of kids in internships/mentorships/summer jobs
    - ~~EVERY~~ Every middle/high school student is taken on NYC college tours multiple times
  - Most rigorous curriculum/toughest tests in the nation
- ~~Accountability matters~~ Be accountable for both the process and the result.
  - ~~We—City leaders, school leaders, teachers, parents—are all accountable to our students. Progress Pact.~~
  - Schools are accountable to us not just for test scores and grad rates, but for the rigorous instruction, collaborative teachers, supportive environments, strong family-community ties, effective school leaders, and trust that improve those scores and rates. This is the Framework for Great Schools. Research shows it works.
  - We (gov't) are accountable to New Yorkers for our schools' successes and difficulties alike.
  - We are giving more information for parents and all NYers on how schools are doing, where they need help, what that help looks like.
  - ~~[need to flesh out]~~
- Spread what works. Connect the whole system.
  - Veteran educators will help fellow teachers and principals improve, spreading success throughout the system.
  - Conduct bold experiments (PROSE) and spread what works.
- Treat tests as an important thing, not THE important thing.
  - They only tell you that you need to improve and where that improvement is needed—not how to get it done.
- Make the change that's necessary.

Our vision:

We are building people, not systems. A community of teachers, staff, and families grows around every student, supporting them at every turn, academically and personally, to and through college and/or a living wage job.

Our endgame goals:

- 75% four-year graduation rate – an additional 5,000 graduates – by 2020 2020 – an additional 5,000 graduates every year (up from 68%) – no school below X% graduation rate
- Double the number of college- and career-ready graduates to 50,000 a year (66%) by 2025 – can we bring in line with 2020?
- We will increase the number of DOE graduates completing college by 50% by 2020.

Our pledge to get there:

By 2022~~XX~~, ~~each student~~ every middle and high school student that enters the City's education system will be guided through this journey by a ~~Personalized Student Success Plan~~ Progress Pact

Formatted: Not Highlight

Formatted: Not Highlight

This will be a living contract between our students, families, teachers, and school leaders that outlines how each student will reach the goal of graduating high school, ~~and succeeding making~~ college, and succeeding all the way ~~and~~ through college.

With this contract, every student will be held accountable for driving their own learning, and every teacher, principal, and parent will be accountable for enabling that success.

Our vision, come to life:

I. ~~Sam: A four year old is intently focused on building a tower of blocks, as her classmates play behind her—singing with a teacher, drawing early masterpieces, gazing at beginner books.~~

Formatted: Font: Italic

{THEMES: EARLY LEARNING, HIGH QUALITY TEACHING}

~~Goal: Kickstart lifetime of learning by ensuring every four year old is exposed to a high quality early learning environment.~~

~~What we've done towards this (proof we are undercutting status quo):~~

- ~~• Equity: offer a free, high quality pre K seat to the family of every 4 year old that wants one.~~
- ~~• Excellence: Trained teachers in every pre k classroom (prof dev)~~

~~What more we will do:~~

- ~~• Excellence: offer the best pre k program in the country within X years as measured by national program assessment tool~~

~~II. 8:30am: A second grader rides the bus to school with a parent, proudly showing off the book the class has been reading—explaining what it's about and which character she was chosen to play in a class activity yesterday.~~

~~[THEMES: READING, PARENT ENGAGEMENT, EXCELLENT TEACHERS, RENEWAL SCHOOLS, SPECIAL NEEDS ED (to be added in)]~~

~~Goal: Every second grader will read, giving them tools to excel in every other subject.~~

~~What we've done towards this (proof we are undercutting status quo):~~

- ~~• Equity: Making sure that all of our schools have great teachers and quality curriculum: Reading/writing workshops in Renewal Schools, following the model used at high performing schools~~

~~What more we will do:~~

- ~~• Equity:
  - ~~○ 100% of parents of students in K-2 will be aware of their child's reading level by 2017~~
  - ~~○ [What do we do if a kid is off track, struggling to learn to read? What are the "targeted reading interventions"??]~~~~
- ~~• Excellence:
  - ~~○ Every elementary school child will have access to challenging summer programming because summer learning loss is a serious issue for our students.
    - ~~• Increase summer programming for students by 50% by 2018 — NEED HARD #s~~~~~~

~~III. Noon: An eighth grader hunched over an algebra book in the library finally solves  $A^2 + B^2 = C^2$ , and sits back in wonder. She glances up at the clock to see how many minutes are left till her advisory session, when she can tell her adviser how hard it was—and how it feels to finally get it.~~

[THEMES: COMMUNITY SCHOOL, SOCIAL/EMOTIONAL LEARNING]

Goal: Every middle school student is socially, emotionally, and academically ready for high school. In 7th grade, show:

- Academic milestones:
  - Reading and writing at grade level
  - Completion of algebra OR proficiency in 8th grade math
  - Knowing how to manage a multi-stage assignment
- Personal milestones:
  - Resilience/persistence in dealing with setbacks and challenges
  - Conflict resolution: able to overcome conflicts and have healthy relationships with peers
  - Healthy management of emotions
  - Strong connection to a caring adult

What we've done towards this (proof we are undercutting status quo):

- Equity: Community schools model (color/examples TK from KG) — eye exams
- Excellence: Expand afterschool programs for all middle school students, this provides nurturing and academic focus that middle school students need

What more we will do:

- Equity:
  - Target supports for struggling 8th grade students: improve and increase our 8Plus Programs, which builds an academic bridge for high school — KG to provide data
  - Algebra is often called the gateway to higher level math coursework. We will substantially increase the number of Algebra courses offered to our 8th graders — introducing algebra to XX traditionally underserved schools that do not offer it — and maintain a high pass rate for our 8th grade students taking the Algebra Regents

Excellence:

- We will eliminate chronic absence and truancy in 6th grade — annual improvement from current XX% until we reach 100%
- Add research-based social-emotional learning programs to all middle schools by X — NEED REAL LIFE DETAILS HERE
- Continue investments to cultivate interests and passions in middle school students with by increasing arts and sports opportunities by XX — IN WHAT SCHOOLS? IS THIS AN EQUITY PLAY? WHAT IS CURRENT INVESTMENT?

IV. 4pm: A tenth grader runs her fingers over the pages of her ELA workbook. As a recent immigrant, she needs to pass the English Regents to graduate — so her school staff have created this extended learning period for her and the 15 other English Language Learners in the class.

{THEMES: RENEWAL SCHOOLS, ENGLISH LANGUAGE LEARNERS, GREAT PRINCIPALS}

Note: 20,000 students who begin high school don't finish.

Goal:

- Get every high school student on track to graduate ready for college, career, and independent living.
  - Increase # of 10th graders with credits and Regents needed to keep them on track to graduating on time and college/career ready ~~X~~ times the number of students on track within ~~Y~~ years
- 75% four year graduation by 2020— an additional 5,000 graduates every year (up from 68%)
- Double the percent of college and career ready graduates by 2025

What we've done towards this (proof we are undercutting status quo):

Equity:

- As part of relentless focus on our most struggling schools at all levels of education: created Renewal Schools
- Ensuring the best instruction for Renewal and other schools by restaffing administrators and teachers who shouldn't be in a learning environment
- Extending the school day
- Tracking every Renewal School student HOW DOES THIS PLAY AGAINST NEW PERSONAL PLANS
- Knocking down personal barriers: waiving testing fees, WHAT ELSE

What more we will do:

- Equity:
  - Ensure access to rigorous coursework necessary for success : increase # of AP and other advanced courses in traditionally underserved schools— NEED HARD #s HERE
  - Increase the number of CTE programs, because CTE students are more likely to graduate high school than their non CTE student counterparts —and have better outcomes for young male students of color
- Excellence:
  - Increase access to CUNY College Now and other programs that will expose students to college level material and enable them to begin earning credits
    - In 350 high schools today; grow to ~~X~~ by ~~Y~~
  - [If a student is off track— what will we do?]

V. 5pm: A recent graduate comes home from her summer job cleaning hotel rooms to a letter from her [community?] college. It's her fall semester reading list. Total price of textbooks: $600.

[THEMES: TACKLING "SUMMER MELT," COLLEGE AFFORDABILITY FOR ALL]

- Note: 20,000 students who graduate high school do not enter college.
- Equity: We will not allow finances to be a barrier to education
  - Saving programs—a college savings account for every student to support and encourage family savings for college from a young age
  - Promise Program—a last dollar scholarship to ensure no student faces a gap in scholarship funding that prevents them from pursuing their studies
  - Tackling hidden barriers—identifying the oft forgotten financial challenges that impact many of our students and serve as a major barrier, and implement systemic solutions (e.g., providing all CUNY students with a free MetroCard, like NYC DOE students)

VI. 8:30pm: After a morning spent at a part-time job and classes all afternoon and into the evening, college freshman enters the subway and carefully puts away her Metrocard. At the right stop, she runs up the stairs and greets her study group inside a public library. At stations all over the City, they each swiped a Metrocard provided by CUNY in order to be able to meet in one place and study for the next day's exam.

[THEMES: CUNY ASAP, AFFORDABILITY, PERSONAL SUPPORT FOR COLLEGE GRADUATION]

Note: 17,000 students who begin college do not finish.

- Equity: CUNY ASAP: Students who complete ASAP are more likely to graduate on time and with less debt than their peers. We have committed to expanding ASAP to serve 13,000 students over the next three years, and will continue to support its growth as more and more students graduate
- Excellence: Working to improve college advising at CUNY

VII. It's 8 a.m., the next day: a college senior/recent grad faces her reflection in a mirror, takes a deep breath, and locks the door behind her: on the way out the door for a job interview.

Goal: 20,000 more college degrees by 2025.

See: everything we've just revealed.

Hi, all—I've connected variously with a bunch of you in the past day for some excellent feedback and updates. Right now I'm in the process of revising three documents to have available at the speech prep later:

- 1- Overall education vision and goals doc (with speech planning/goals too)
- 2- Vignettes doc (the student portraits we're painting in the speech to communicate the vision)
- 3- Pull quotes/soundbites doc

I'll send these around to you all as soon as they're ready for feedback so we're all on the same page heading into 5:30. Thanks very much.

EQUITY AND EXCELLENCE

Every Day, Every Step of the Way

Speech notes:

- College is the fulcrum
  - We cannot fulfill our destiny unless every child who wants to go to college can
  - What is City's new vision of how to get kids to college, how to succeed there, how to afford it, and everything K-12 that supports that?
- APPROACH:
  - Anti-bureaucratic: child-centered, not system/government-centered
  - Anti-status quo – willingness to break it down – undercut perceptions we are perpetuating status quo
  - Historic shifts balanced with deliverables people will notice
- TONE: Positive, resolute, rallying (call to arms – our kids can do it; it will take us all), expansive: we are battling for the soul of public education

Why we are driven to action:

- The status quo is unacceptable.
- Education determines economic destiny more now than at any point in human history.
- NYC's success as a 21st century global city depends on the success of our education system.

Values behind our action:

- Every school can and should deliver an excellent education for every child.
- Every child can grow into a successful adult—ready for college, ready for life—if their education gives them the right tools.

Simple set of ideas that express/execute these values:

- Start educating children earlier so all children begin kindergarten ready to succeed.
- Make parents, the first and last teachers of children, our partners.
  - 40 minutes of parent-teacher time each week
  - Community schools
- Treat each school and each student individually. No two schools and no two children need the same support in order to excel.
  - To fulfill their potential, each child will travel their own academic, social, and emotional journey

- To become great, each school needs different amounts of support in the six key areas that comprise our Framework for Great Schools
- Break down all barriers to learning so children come to school ready to succeed.
  - Mental and physical health: community schools (social services, glasses, etc.)
  - Affordability: college savings accounts, testing waivers
- Aim high.
  - Don't force kids to dream about college, a living wage job and a career: show them
    - Every middle and high school will have a business partner
    - Huge numbers of kids in internships/mentorships/summer jobs
    - Every middle/high school student is taken on NYC college tours multiple times
  - Most rigorous curriculum/toughest tests in the nation
- Be accountable for both the process and the result.
  - We—City leaders, school leaders, teachers, parents—are all accountable to our students. Progress Pact.
  - Schools are accountable to us not just for test scores and grad rates, but for the rigorous instruction, collaborative teachers, supportive environments, strong family-community ties, effective school leaders, and trust that improve those scores and rates. This is the Framework for Great Schools. Research shows it works.
  - We (gov't) are accountable to New Yorkers for our schools' successes and difficulties alike.
  - We are giving more information for parents and all NYers on how schools are doing, where they need help, what that help looks like.
- Spread what works. Connect the whole system.
  - Veteran educators will help fellow teachers and principals improve, spreading success throughout the system.
  - Conduct bold experiments (PROSE) and spread what works.
- Treat tests as an important thing, not THE important thing.
  - They only tell you that you need to improve and where that improvement is needed—not how to get it done.
- Make the change that's necessary.
  - If schools cannot improve with our tailored and targeted support, we will change the personnel, the leadership, or the school itself. But we believe most schools can and will improve, and in fact that is the only route to true citywide improvement.
- Don't stop at graduation.
  - [academic and personal/mindset interventions to get kids to enroll, persist, and complete]

Our vision:

We are building people, not systems. A community of teachers, staff, and families grows around every student, supporting them at every turn, academically and personally, to and through college and/or a living wage job.

Our endgame goals:

- 75% four-year graduation rate – an additional 5,000 graduates – by 2020 (up from 68%)
- Double the number of college- and career-ready graduates to 50,000 a year (66%) by 2025 – can we bring in line with 2020?
- We will increase the number of DOE graduates completing college by 50% by 2020.

Our goals on the way, and the ways we'll know our progress towards achieving them:

- 1. Every child in NYC enters kindergarten ready to learn
  - Are all eligible 4-year-olds enrolled in full-day, high-quality Pre-K? (Goal: 100%)
- 2. Every elementary school student has the academic foundation to succeed
  - How many 2nd graders are reading on grade level? (Goal: 100%)
  - How many parents of students K-2 are aware of their child's reading level (Goal: 100%)
  - How many 3rd graders are proficient in ELA?
  - How many 5th graders can control impulses, manage stress, motivate themselves, and set and work towards goals?
  - How many 5th graders are proficient in math (measured by the State test)?
- 3. Every middle school student is socially, emotionally, and academically ready for high school
  - Are we reducing the number of 6th graders who are chronically absent?
  - How many 7th graders show resilience in dealing with setbacks and challenges, can manage their emotions, overcome conflict, and successfully manage complex projects?
  - Conflict resolution: able to overcome conflicts and have healthy relationships with peers
  - How many 8th graders are proficient in math (as measured by the State test and Algebra Regents)?
  - Are all our middle schoolers exposed to the arts and performance? (Note: this is an SED requirement)
- 4. Every high school student is on track to graduate, ready for college, career, and independent living
  - Are all our 9th and 10th graders accumulating the right number and nature of credits to be on track to graduate? (Goal: 100%)
  - How many high schoolers are taking AP or other college-level coursework? (Goal: ?)
  - How many of our graduates do not need remedial coursework in college?
  - How many high schoolers are graduating in 4 years? (Goal: 75% by 2020)
  - How many graduates enroll in college? (Goal: increase enrollment rates in CUNY2, CUNY 4, non-CUNY by 25% respectively by 2020)

- Persistence

Our pledge to get there:

By 2022, every middle and high school student that enters the City's education system will be guided through this journey by a Progress Pact.

This will be a living contract between our students, families, teachers, and school leaders that outlines how each student will reach the goal of graduating high school, making to college, and succeeding all the way through.

With this contract, every student will be held accountable for driving their own learning, and every teacher, principal, and parent will be accountable for enabling that success.

Kate,

I think this is coming together nicely. A few thoughts, mostly for us to provide more to you...

Changes tracked in this document.

1. Starting from 5th grade onward, we make absolutely no mention of literacy. I think this is bad signaling and we should include literacy development past 2nd grade.
2. In response to your question, hard to make 2020 the college goal bc (a) that's only 5 years away and we need a longer runway to hit target and (b) City already has a 2020 college completion target—double # of grads coming out of CUNY—a goal I think we should name, embrace, and build on in the college graduation part. Relevant section on goals pasted below with suggested changes.
3. We still need to provide a lot more “how.” We say we will make sure all 2nd graders are reading, but no talk of how we will do that. Same for the graduation rate goals. So, either we need to be super clear and committed to our message that every kid is different and every school's needs are different, or we need to have some way of answering this question—professional development, strong curriculum, constant communication with parents, or, even better, more specific. Maybe this all goes in the Phil Walzak Plan of Action companion book, not in the speech—but I think we have to have it somewhere.
4. Where are we on getting to actual numbers for the college attainment part? Are these the actual target numbers in here, vetted by DOE?

Hi, all—I've connected variously with a bunch of you in the past day for some excellent feedback and updates. Right now I'm in the process of revising three documents to have available at the speech prep later:

- 1- Overall education vision and goals doc (with speech planning/goals too)
- 2- Vignettes doc (the student portraits we're painting in the speech to communicate the vision)
- 3- Pull quotes/soundbites doc

I'll send these around to you all as soon as they're ready for feedback so we're all on the same page heading into 5:30. Thanks very much.

EDUCATION VISION 2015: Update August 19, 2:35pm

EQUITY AND EXCELLENCE

Every Day, Every Step of the Way

Speech notes:

- College is the fulcrum
  - We cannot fulfill our destiny unless every child who wants to go to college can
  - What is City's new vision of how to get kids to college, how to succeed there, how to afford it, and everything K-12 that supports that?
- APPROACH:
  - Anti-bureaucratic: child-centered, not system/government-centered
  - Anti-status quo – willingness to break it down – undercut perceptions we are perpetuating status quo
  - Historic shifts balanced with deliverables people will notice
- TONE: Positive, resolute, rallying (call to arms – our kids can do it; it will take us all), expansive: we are battling for the soul of public education

Why we are driven to action:

- The status quo is unacceptable.
- Education determines economic destiny more now than at any point in human history.
- NYC's success as a 21st century global city depends on the success of our education system.

Values behind our action:

- Every school can and should deliver an excellent education for every child.
- Every child can grow into a successful adult—ready for college, ready for life—if their education gives them the right tools.

Simple set of ideas that express/execute these values:

- Start educating children earlier so all children begin kindergarten ready to succeed.
- Make parents, the first and last teachers of children, our partners.
  - 40 minutes of parent-teacher time each week
  - Community schools
- Treat each school and each student individually. No two schools and no two children need the same support in order to excel.
  - To fulfill their potential, each child will travel their own academic, social, and emotional journey

- To become great, each school needs different amounts of support in the six key areas that comprise our Framework for Great Schools
- Break down all barriers to learning so children come to school ready to succeed.
  - Mental and physical health: community schools (social services, glasses, etc.)
  - Affordability: college savings accounts, testing waivers
- Aim high.
  - Don't force kids to dream about college, a living wage job and a career: show them
    - Every middle and high school will have a business partner
    - Huge numbers of kids in internships/mentorships/summer jobs
    - Every middle/high school student is taken on NYC college tours multiple times
  - Most rigorous curriculum/toughest tests in the nation
- Be accountable for both the process and the result.
  - We—City leaders, school leaders, teachers, parents—are all accountable to our students. Progress Pact.
  - Schools are accountable to us not just for test scores and grad rates, but for the rigorous instruction, collaborative teachers, supportive environments, strong family-community ties, effective school leaders, and trust that improve those scores and rates. This is the Framework for Great Schools. Research shows it works.
  - We (gov't) are accountable to New Yorkers for our schools' successes and difficulties alike.
  - We are giving more information for parents and all NYers on how schools are doing, where they need help, what that help looks like.
- Spread what works. Connect the whole system.
  - Veteran educators will help fellow teachers and principals improve, spreading success throughout the system.
  - Conduct bold experiments (PROSE) and spread what works.
- Treat tests as an important thing, not THE important thing.
  - They only tell you that you need to improve and where that improvement is needed—not how to get it done.
- Make the change that's necessary.
  - If schools cannot improve with our tailored and targeted support, we will change the personnel, the leadership, or the school itself. But we believe most schools can and will improve, and in fact that is the only route to true citywide improvement.
- Don't stop at graduation.
  - [academic and personal/mindset interventions to get kids to enroll, persist, and complete]
  - College Savings Accounts
  - Scale ASAP to help more students make it through community college

Formatted: Font: Bold

Formatted: Font: Bold

Our vision:

We are building people, not systems. A community of teachers, staff, and families grows around every student, supporting them at every turn, academically and personally, to and through college and/or a living wage job.

Our endgame goals:

- 75% four-year graduation rate – an additional 5,000 graduates – by 2020 (up from 68%)
- Double the number of college- and career-ready graduates to 50,000 a year (66%) by 2025 ~~—can we bring in line with 2020?~~
- We will increase the number of DOE graduates completing college by 50% by ~~2020~~2030.
- CHANGE TO ONE OF FOLLOWING:
  - Increase college graduation rate by 50% (= if 15K now, will go to 22.5K)
  - Double college graduation rate (from 15K to 30K)
  - Already on track to double the number of college grads coming out of CUNY by 2020—need to do even more—will need to reach XX,000 college graduates per year by 2030.
  - This will represent XX,000 additional college graduates.

Comment [GK1]: Need to give ourselves a runway here, 2020 kids are in 8th grade now Doubling college readiness while the standards continue to get higher for HS kids is a big, big lift

Formatted

Our goals on the way, and the ways we'll know our progress towards achieving them:

1. Every child in NYC enters kindergarten ready to learn
  - Are all eligible 4-year-olds enrolled in full-day, high-quality Pre-K? (Goal: 100%)
2. Every elementary school student has the academic foundation to succeed
  - How many 2nd graders are reading on grade level? (Goal: 100%)
  - How many parents of students K-2 are aware of their child's reading level (Goal: 100%)
  - How many 3rd graders are proficient in ELA reading and writing?
  - How many 5th graders can control impulses, manage stress, motivate themselves, and set and work towards goals?
  - How many 5th graders are proficient in math (measured by the State test)?
3. Every middle school student is socially, emotionally, and academically ready for high school
  - Are we reducing the number of 6th graders who are chronically absent?
  - How many 7th graders show resilience in dealing with setbacks and challenges, can manage their emotions, overcome conflict, and successfully manage complex projects?
  - Conflict resolution: able to overcome conflicts and have healthy relationships with peers
  - ~~How many 8th graders are proficient in math (as measured by the State test and Algebra Regents)?~~

- Are all our middle schoolers exposed to the arts and performance? (Note: this is an SED requirement)

4. Every high school student is on track to graduate, ready for college, career, and independent living

- Are all our 9th and 10th graders accumulating the right number and ~~nature-kind~~ of credits to be on track to graduate? (Goal: 100%)
- Can our students manage and successfully complete a multi-stage assignment such as a research project—assignments they will get in college from day one and that cannot be assessed through a standardized test?
- How many high schoolers are taking AP or other college-level coursework? (Goal: ?)
- How many of our graduates do not need remedial coursework in college?
- How many high schoolers are graduating in 4 years? (Goal: 75% by 2020)
- How many graduates enroll in college? (Goal: increase enrollment rates in CUNY2, CUNY 4, non-CUNY by 25% respectively by 2020)
- Persistence

Our pledge to get there:

By ~~2022~~2018, every middle and high school student that enters the City’s education system will be guided through this journey by a Progress Pact.

This will be a living contract between our students, families, teachers, and school leaders that outlines how each student will reach the goal of graduating high school, making to college, and succeeding all the way through.

Comment [GK2]: Between sounds better but is technically not correct, shld be among Grammar cop in me has to say it but I get it if it has to stay this way

With this contract, every student will be held accountable for driving their own learning, and every teacher, principal, and parent will be accountable for enabling that success.

MEMO

Date: February 5, 2015

To: Michael Owh, Mayor's Office of Contract Services
Jose Jimenez, Mayor's Office of Contract Services

From: Jeff Merritt, Mayor's Office of Tech and Innovation

Subject: Demonstration Project for Innovative Procurement

I. Rational for this Demonstration Project

In a keynote address at Internet Week in May 2014, Mayor de Blasio laid out a vision for a more innovative, participatory model for procuring government technology:

“We know the City government has so much it can do more effectively when it comes to technology. And one of the things I've heard, and I've deeply appreciated by so many members of the tech community, is they've said, look at the fact that the way we think about technology in City government is so often outmoded. And they point to, for example, our procurement process, our RFP process – that takes so long that by the time the process is completed the technology has already changed and the outcome of the process is made, to some extent, moot. And people in the community have said, can't we create a more flexible, interactive, communicative process that actually reflects the way the knowledge economy is going, the way innovation is moving? And we're committed to doing that. We know it can be done.”

For years, the standard ethos for beginning a new procurement has been to define detailed product requirements and then solicit bids to determine who can offer the best product at the lowest cost. While this approach can work well if you're buying pens or paper, unfortunately it doesn't always work with technology – where there may be countless different approaches and solutions for solving the same problem. More often than not, technology decisions are made with insufficient market intelligence, inadequate risk management and a narrow vendor-pool.

This demonstration project is the result of research at the Mayor's Office of Technology and Innovation aimed at identifying new models for procuring government technologies – particularly in cases where City government may not know what products or solutions are on the market or are best suited to meet a particular need. Recognizing that these methodologies and techniques for problem-based procurement and challenges are new to most Agency Chief Contracting Officers (ACCOs), the attached project plan places a strong emphasis on capacity building while also testing the value and benefit of this approach.

II. Recommended Vendor & Methodology

Citymart was identified as the strongest partner for this project based on their unparalleled experience, unique methodology, extensive knowledge, and database of more than 20,000 solution providers in a diverse range of fields including energy, mobility, tourism, climate, waste, utilities, participation, and accessibility. We are not aware of an organization or company that is offering comparable proven methods or services to Citymart.

To date, Citymart has completed contracts on over 100 projects with more than 50 global cities including Paris, London, Barcelona and Mexico City. In the US, Citymart has successfully sourced solutions through challenge programs for Boston, Tacoma, and San Francisco. As a testament to the significant social impact Citymart can deliver in cities, Citymart received a grant from the Knight Foundation in 2014 to establish operations in New York City, thereby making their services become more accessible to US cities

Citymart has developed a unique and proven methodology for problem-based procurement which it delivers through a collaborative and open model. After identifying and refining agency needs to create problem statements, Citymart analysts proactively engage solution providers using established and documented protocols. They also follow-up and support their submission process, assuring that bids represent the best possible vendor pool. Citymart's database of vendors and solutions is unique and contains critical intelligence not available elsewhere - including experts' evaluations, solution track records, and description of projects previously executed, successes, impact assessments, and other relevant information.

Citymart has also established a unique database to provide business intelligence for decision-making and management of innovation in city government, building on their work in more than 50 global cities. This knowledgebase is the result of more than 7 years of research and allows cities to benchmark the outcomes of specific processes supporting innovation, tracking different competences and methods against best-in-class approaches in other cities.

Through this unique model for procuring solutions through open challenges, the Mayor's Office of Technology and Innovation seeks to generate a broader market response, inspire new innovative approaches and open up government procurement to a broader provider-base, including start-ups and social enterprises.

New York City Will Transform the Way it Solves Problems in New Partnership with Citymart

Mayor's Office of Technology and Innovation and Citymart will focus first on how to best use city's obsolete assets

New York, N.Y. –In the largest implementation yet of its innovative approach, Citymart will partner with the New York City Mayor's office to pilot a new method that could transform the way the city's government solves problems by connecting city planners with innovative new ideas through open challenges to entrepreneurs and citizens.

The Mayor's Office of Technology and Innovation will work with Manhattan-based Citymart on launching up to five challenges, starting with a focus on how the city can best take advantage of obsolete or underused assets that are spread throughout the city but no longer serve their original purposes. Postal service boxes, emergency phones, and fire hydrants are among the possible dormant assets to be repurposed and revitalized.

"Anything done in New York City has ramifications around the world – we're absolutely thrilled to be partnering with the city in this effort," said Citymart CEO Sascha Haselmayer. "Mayor Bill de Blasio proved he's committed to transforming the way the city approaches some of the most daunting urban problems that any city in the world can face by establishing the Mayor's Office of Technology and Innovation to seek out inventive, effective, and affordable solutions. This process will help the city further that goal by leveraging existing resources to bring new players into the process and open up new possibilities for innovation."

Citymart helps cities learn how to use the open market to find proven, innovative solutions addressing the pressing needs of urban areas, helping them rethink their spending habits so they focus on not just buying goods and services, but on solving problems. Citymart starts by working with a city to help them define their problems and capabilities. Then the firm conducts intensive research and outreach to identify the market leaders and proven innovators with possible solutions and issues a challenge to those leaders, to local businesses and citizens, and to a global network of businesses, entrepreneurs, and universities in a search for the most effective and affordable solution.

The Citymart-New York City partnership will apply Citymart's unique problem-solving methodology to address the problem of obsolete assets and other city needs. "We will issue an open challenge to market leaders and proven innovators for possible solutions to each particular problem," Haselmayer said. "This challenge asks three simple questions: 'What is your idea for solving the problem, how ready is your solution, and how can we measure its success?' We'll be training New York City staff how to run these challenges and evaluate proposed solutions in a transparent and efficient manner."

Citymart is also partnering with Philadelphia, Miami, Long Beach, and other major American cities to help them transform the way they solve city problems.

"Cities in the United States collectively spend more than one trillion dollars that we know could be spent in better solutions. If we put even a small fraction of that to use in creating cities that are more responsive, more efficient and more nimble at solving problems for citizens, we'll make an enormous impact on thousands of people's lives" said Citymart Principal Julia Haselmayer.

New York City Pilots Innovative New Approach to Urban Problem Solving in Partnership with Citymart

New Initiative Opens Door for Start-ups and Other Innovative Companies to Work with New York City to Tackle the Most Pressing Urban Challenges

New York, N.Y. –In the largest implementation yet of its innovative approach, Citymart will partner with the New York City Mayor’s Office of Technology and Innovation to pilot a new method that could transform the way the city’s government solves problems by connecting city planners with innovative new ideas through open challenges to entrepreneurs and citizens.

The Mayor’s Office of Technology and Innovation will work with New York-based Citymart on launching a series of problem-based challenges over the course of the next two years. Challenges will draw on key themes that were set forth in Mayor de Blasio’s Plan for One New York, which was released in April 2015. OneNYC establishes bold goals and specific targets for a strong, sustainable, resilient, and equitable city – 800,000 people out of poverty by 2025, Zero Waste, eliminating long-term displacement after future shock events, and much more.

“Anything done in New York City has ramifications around the world – we’re absolutely thrilled to be partnering with the city in this effort,” said Citymart CEO Sascha Haselmayer. “Mayor Bill de Blasio proved he’s committed to transforming the way the city approaches some of the most daunting urban problems that any city in the world can face by establishing the Mayor’s Office of Technology and Innovation to seek out inventive, effective, and affordable solutions. This process will help the city further that goal by leveraging existing resources to bring new players into the process and open up new possibilities for innovation.”

Citymart helps cities learn how to use the open market to find proven, innovative solutions addressing the pressing needs of urban areas, helping them rethink their spending habits so they focus on not just buying goods and services, but on solving problems. Citymart starts by working with a city to help them define their problems and capabilities. Then the firm conducts intensive research and outreach to identify the market leaders and proven innovators with possible solutions and issues a challenge to those leaders, to local businesses and citizens, and to a global network of businesses, entrepreneurs, and universities in a search for the most effective and affordable solution.

“We will issue an open challenge to market leaders and proven innovators for possible solutions to each particular problem,” Haselmayer said. “This challenge asks three simple questions: ‘What is your idea for solving the problem, how ready is your solution, and how can we measure its success?’ We’ll be training New York City staff how to run these challenges and evaluate proposed solutions in a transparent and efficient manner.”

The Citymart-New York City partnership builds on the City’s first Call for Innovations (CFI) launched earlier this year. The CFI, which focused on new approaches for providing Internet access in underserved communities, produced 69 proposals from 52 sources over a period of 11 weeks from April to June. The largest number of submissions came from start-ups and small businesses, most of whom had not previously worked with the City of New York.

Citymart is also partnering with Philadelphia, Miami, Long Beach, and other major American cities to help them transform the way they solve city problems.

“Cities in the United States collectively spend more than one trillion dollars that we know could be spent in better solutions. If we put even a small fraction of that to use in creating cities that are more responsive, more efficient and more nimble at solving problems for citizens, we’ll make an enormous impact on thousands of people’s lives” said Citymart Principal Julia Haselmayer.

LOL..

I'm open to that... Just thought that Wall Street had a real interest in seeing the city's schools succeed (and in home-grown talent getting a college education)... Maybe this is out of left field & we're too far down the road for a new policy - but thought I'd throw it out there... (Thanks a LOT, JDC!)

Would argue this works better as a private "College for all, by all" fund that every NYer is asked to contribute to, according to their means. Ex, up to $25K annual earnings, put in one dollar; $25M annual earnings, put in $500K.

Instead of a tax the rich, it's one NY, rising together....

OK do I get extra points for deB AND Marxz refs in one email?

Sorry for the delay - looks good to me...

I did want to float the idea of calling on Wall Street to put up $100M (or whatever the number is) for a private fund that would help ensure that every kid who gets to college can pay for it... It's a two-step dance... We do our part in K-12 to help get kids ready for college - and Wall Street helps them pay for it...

Adding Andie. Here's the first doc, attached. There's a lot to sift through so this is meant to bring some order to the proceedings. Note that this doesn't really detail the work underway—the HOW—of how our ideas are animated (e.g. we are Aiming High by increasing # of AP classes in underserved schools by X). The vignettes will have more of this sort of HOW.

Please let me know of concerns/thoughts/feelings/edits ASAP. Even though our meeting is canceled, I'd like to ship these docs to the Mayor tonight or ASAP.

Hi, all—I've connected variously with a bunch of you in the past day for some excellent feedback and updates. Right now I'm in the process of revising three documents to have available at the speech prep later:

- <!--[if !supportLists]-->1. <!--[endif]-->Overall education vision and goals doc (with speech planning/goals too)
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->2. <!--[endif]-->Vignettes doc (the student portraits we're painting in the speech to communicate the vision)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->3. <!--[endif]-->Pull quotes/soundbites doc

I'll send these around to you all as soon as they're ready for feedback so we're all on the same page heading into 5:30. Thanks very much.

Is It Time For The Mayor To Do Town Halls?

GOTHAM GAZETTE – Ben Max

<http://www.gothamgazette.com/index.php/government/5858-is-it-time-for-the-mayor-to-do-town-halls>

Scott Stringer has led 16 town hall-style events since becoming Comptroller; Letitia James, the Public Advocate, hosted her 28th on Wednesday night in Brooklyn. As has been well-documented, Mayor Bill de Blasio - along with Stringer and James, one of three popularly-elected citywide officials - has not yet held a town hall event himself.

Is it time for the mayor to host one?

As de Blasio and his team wrestle with how to combat sagging public opinion poll numbers, what they see as unfair press coverage, and a perception gap that many agree leaves New Yorkers thinking de Blasio is performing worse than he actually is, it may be time for de Blasio to take his message directly to the people and hold his first town hall.

"He might want to look at where his criticism is coming from in his base," says Fordham political science professor Dr. Christina Greer. "If you're going to do a town hall, be strategic about it, so that it is effective for you and for New Yorkers," Greer advises.

Greer says that de Blasio should target where he had the deepest support in his 2013 election, with an eye, though, "especially on people feeling neglected," and go communicate with them. She said that these would be "productive places to start, but can't be the end."

Political consultant Evan Thies argues it would be smart for de Blasio to utilize his elected allies to get his message out, possibly at town hall-style events. "If they believe they can get those surrogates to host friendly conversations with real New Yorkers they should do that," Thies said, adding that de Blasio is suffering from a major perception problem and that he and his team need to resume "politicking."

"The perception" among the public, Thies says, "is not just that he's not the doing the job they hired him for, the perception is that he doesn't care about opinions that aren't his. And I just don't think that's true. He's trying to lead on issues of affordability - it's really just a perception problem and he needs to get out there and talk to people."

Doing so in the form of town halls would surely be risky for the mayor, who mostly plays things safe, but public forums are high-risk, high-reward opportunities. De Blasio could show New Yorkers that he is engaged, that his ear is to the ground, and that he is both tough and humble.

"The risk is not any worse than having the tabloids portray him as they are now," says former Rep. Anthony Weiner, who held many town halls when in office and has urged de Blasio to adopt the practice.

Sure, Weiner says, there can be some tough moments, and the TV cameras will gravitate toward those. But, holding town halls has many advantages: "You become a better representative when you do it...you hear the language real citizens use to describe the problems in their lives," Weiner tells Gotham Gazette.

"It would help him with a lot of the problems that he has," Weiner argues of the mayor. "He develops a little bit more of a fighter identity. If you're standing up in a hostile room, people respect that. There's a sense he's being pushed around too much, town halls gives you the opportunity to change that."

As of now, no one would call de Blasio a hothead or peg him as likely to commit a serious gaffe, but of course a public event with open microphones would leave the mayor prone to all sorts of challenges. (For example, we've seen of late what Black Lives Matter activists have accomplished at several presidential candidate events.) But, these events are always well-staffed with aides and security.

Even if he does a few town halls, there would be inevitable questions about where he's held them, and surely some media latching on to any outrageous moments.

However, nothing says 'I'm listening' like actually listening. And it appears the mayor needs a bit of a correction to perceptions that he's distracted by national politics and not a strong enough chief executive of this very hard to manage city.

In correspondence with City Hall, it does not appear that a de Blasio-led town hall is afoot.

Spokesperson Karen Hinton wrote Gotham Gazette saying, "Mayor de Blasio hears directly from New Yorkers in both formal and informal ways - whether it's through taking calls on public radio, or being stopped on the street - as he often is."

Indeed, in what was a rare formal opportunity for the mayor to engage in unscripted conversation with constituents, de Blasio took calls while on air with radio host Brian Lehrer Wednesday morning. All told, de Blasio's WNYC appearance lasted more than 40 minutes and gave the mayor a chance to speak directly to a wide swath of New Yorkers, and with several who called in.

Doing so, de Blasio again showed he is adept at responding to impromptu gripes about the city and his stewardship of it. Yet, the mayor has made only sporadic appearances on call-in radio.

Hinton's response echoes what the mayor himself has said when asked about holding town halls, something that his predecessors did with varying frequency - but did - and that his current fellow citywide electeds are clearly doing fairly regularly.

Public Advocate James held one town hall in each borough specifically about mayoral control of city schools, releasing a report afterward in which she called for some modifications to the system that would weaken the mayor's power. Among her twenty-plus other open events, James held a public safety town hall Wednesday evening in Brooklyn in response to a recent wave of shootings.

Comptroller Stringer has held at least one town hall in each borough, according to his office.

Stringer held a "Sandy Oversight Hearing" in each borough other than the Bronx, which was the borough least damaged by the superstorm.

A spokesperson for the comptroller, Eric Sumberg, said that Stringer "believes that listening to constituents and meeting with them in their communities is one of the best ways to learn how he can use his office to root out waste and fraud and fight for working families."

Hinton, the de Blasio spokesperson, told Gotham Gazette that representatives of the administration are "out in neighborhoods across the city every single day, working directly with New Yorkers and bringing that feedback to City Hall to further shape our work. We are continually looking for additional opportunities to hear directly from New Yorkers across the five boroughs."

Highlighting efforts by the Community Affairs Unit, Hinton cited "dozens of town halls" organized around informing small business owners, improving city services for LGBTQ New Yorkers, and providing information on the city's handling of the recent Legionnaires' Disease outbreak in the Bronx.

To New Yorkers who feel good, bad, or iffy about the mayor, though, those efforts may not be enough. "Sometimes people want to see the mayor, not his proxy," says Dr. Greer, Fordham political science professor.

This, in part, is why the mayor marches in many parades, speaks at churches, and appears at a variety of other community events. There may be nothing quite like the unfiltered town hall, though, to move the public image of de Blasio, as Weiner points out.

In May, de Blasio was asked about plans to hold town halls on at least two different occasions. On May 11, de Blasio said he hears from New Yorkers all the time. "[I]t's amazing how many conversations I have with people every single day because they're not shy about coming up and starting a conversation, I assure you – every time I'm on the subway, every time I'm walking down the street and whether it's the Upper East Side or Park Slope or anywhere else. But beyond that, I talk to people who represent a whole host of communities all the time."

On May 18, de Blasio said of holding town halls, "I don't have a specific plan, but, you know, what I do all the time is go out around different communities in different settings...people just come up and talk about things, and offer their views, raise concerns...I go around all over the place – and the subways, and walking down the street – talk to everybody."

A spokesperson for Public Advocate James wrote Gotham Gazette that the public advocate has "worked aggressively to bring government to every corner of this city" and that the best way to connect constituents and government "is by reaching the people where they are."

It is certainly not a sentiment de Blasio would disagree with, and the mayor often highlights that he's bringing government to those who need it most, whether or not he is holding the type of open evening events his colleagues are. On Thursday, de Blasio held a ground-breaking in Far Rockaway for what will be 154 affordable housing units for low-income seniors.

At the mid-day press conference, de Blasio said affordable housing is the number one thing brought up to him by New Yorkers "on the subway, on the street - wherever I go."

Cant do #1
#2 perhaps we can get away w
3 and 4 are fine, part of plan of renewal anyway

Doing 2 off Ts a week is pretty sparse - we limit too much we are going to invite ambushes and more

On press...

1. Eliminate off-topic altogether? I know we are already talking about limiting.
2. Have PW or KH do on the record gaggles, similar to WH, so reporters can get their off-topic questions in while limiting the "exclusive" questions coming into CH?
3. Tweet photos of MBDB on subway, working late at night?
4. Have MBDB personally tweet late at night (needs to be thought through - but could demonstrate how late our guy works).

Hi Jeff:

Just spoke with Sascha and Julia—they very much understand your concerns. They made clear to me that when they speak to reporters, they are clear that they are only piloting five projects, and that they don't even know the nature of those projects yet. Obviously they hope that those projects can be scaled up, but they never have told a reporter that they're transforming NYC procurement overnight or anything. They're using talking points from the press release and from the first Politico article, and I've made them aware of your concerns about inflating the scope of the work.

I'll make sure reporters understand that going forward, as well.

Thanks for all your help.

Best,

Jordan

Articles like today's Crain's post are not helpful --

Can you make sure your team is not exaggerating the scope of work? This is the second article that seemed to suggest this is a fix to procurement which is just incorrect. This is a pilot to explore ways to crowdsource new ideas to problems. Let us know if you have any questions - thanks.

Thanks, Natalie. In absolutely all our pitching—and in Sascha and Julia’s interviews—we are never critical of New York procurement processes. That’s all the reporter making his own conclusions to make his story more sexy. We certainly never pile on the city at all. I’ll relay that concern to Sascha and Julia directly and reiterate your concerns.

The Politico article was very balanced and I’m glad to hear the team is using it as a resource for talking points. Hawkins’ story was definitely overblown and heavy on the criticism of our current procurement process. Don’t think that’s fair to conflate with the CityMart contract because they are simply not the same thing, and bringing them together piles criticism onto the City unnecessarily.

Hey Jeff,

After talking with my team just now, we’re going to tone down our pitching going forward to make sure we’re not over-hyping Citymart’s significance. There’s one story already in the works—with Chester Soria at Metro—but we’re going to make very clear to him this is merely a pilot project, an experiment, one that has possibilities but has not at all made major changes to NYC procurement. We’ll be much more precise going forward—some of this, I think, is reporters getting carried away, but some of it is on our end in conflating Citymart’s ambitions and national work with the actual details of the NYC contract.

Can we continue with the Metro story, or would you rather us call it off completely?

Sorry for all the confusion and any trouble we caused you.

We've got a comms plan to present to him tomorrow. However, I do NOT think we want to do a roundtable or speech prior to Mindy's data analysis which will not be ready till October. In addition any nuance will get lost in the noise right now. We have robust push back and can do announcements on stuff and things. But the larger conversation has to wait in my opinion

As I've said before, I propose we go the offensive on homelessness. A roundtable, a speech and/or a report asap. Dispel the myths and lay out our larger vision. Show what we're doing with affordable housing plan, safe havens, more nypd enforcement of quality of life, ending encampments, mental health efforts, etc. Need a proposal on this to be discussed thurs night

Homeless Communications Strategy

Background: As anticipated, the summer has seen a spike in coverage of street homelessness and concerns about so-called “quality of life” as a result.

While the vast majority of homeless are sheltered (averaging 56K), nearly 4000 individuals continue to live on the streets. Summer months are known to have an increased presence of street homeless for a variety of reasons that include warmer temperatures, closed schools and sweeps of the subway system.

We also know New Yorkers are encountering “sheltered” but unoccupied individuals (e.g., those that have a place at night but who hang out on the streets during daytime) and conflating it with street homelessness.

As DHS sites more shelters in neighborhoods we can anticipate more coverage questioning the City’s approach to the homeless epidemic.

Currently we are averaging a minimum of 2-3 stories per week focused on resident concerns about homelessness.

In October/November, the administration will unveil a new data-driven approach to street homelessness, shelters and social service provision to improve the quality-of-life for all New Yorkers. This report will level-set the causes and factors that contribute to homelessness within the income inequality framework.

Communications Strategy

Given the heightened --- and often sensationalized ---- focus on homelessness, we propose a two-phased approach.

The first phase is designed to push aggressively that the Mayor and City is focused on the challenge and addressing it head on. This is done visually (e.g. “encampment sweeps”) as well as through clear, direct policy and messaging (e.g. “the mental health policy/hubs”). Broaden our housing plan discussion to connect the dots.

The second phase begins once we start to see a decline in the street homelessness, or at least the perception of it. This is anticipated to occur in late September after school has begun and the temperatures begin to cool. During this portion, we can begin to frame a more nuanced conversation about the complexity of homelessness and our multi-faceted, data-driven approach. The current environment is too noisy to allow for this

- Ongoing (effective immediately): Increased push back on bogus claims of NYC returning to 80’s, including background briefings, myth vs. facts docs/tweets/video; validator deployment (expanded list of validators with clear asks); pushing of success former-homeless stories; strategic engagement of editorial board meetings.

Simultaneously we will push our housing work. Examples – partnership with Public Advocate and Agencies to take on repeat watchlist offenders; tenant protection programs to prevent evictions; know your rights sessions

- Calendared (starting next week): The next two weeks, and until back to school, aggressive engagement with reporters on the work the City is doing to address the homelessness and to demonstrate swift, clear leadership in heated environment; followed by a steady drum-beat of homeless-related announcements that will begin with a major housing-for-the-homeless plan, including the launch of a major NYNY4 campaign. Two-phased approach:

Phase 1: Immediate (August – late September):

Week of 9/1:

- Limited media access to Mayor's visits to sweeping camps, followed by paper announcement of ongoing the Homeless Encampment initiative
- Follow up: 1-on-1 interview with Mayor visiting DHS war room (show maps of hot spots and encampments + explain operation)
- AARP teletownhall: Discuss senior housing and housing insecurity seniors feel and our steps to protect
- Housing bill signing in community: Tenant Harassment – connect prevention evictions with tackling homeless problem

Week of 9/7 (before back-to-school):

- Announcement of Safe Havens beds with clergy* and SEPS – Special Exit and Prevention Supplement ($10M) Prevention and relocation. Announce new rental assistance for 1,000 single adults with rapid rehousing assistance based on national mode.
- Announcement of new street/subway homeless ads. Possible messages (very rough):
  - Help us address homelessness: Call 311 if someone needs help or exhibits dangerous behavior.
  - Help us address homelessness: Call 311 if you see an encampment.
  - Help us address homelessness: Tell a friend in need about homeless prevention programs.
  - Help us address homelessness: Participate in City-sponsored rental assistance programs.

Week of 9/21 (Pope week)

- Announce housing partnership with the Catholic Church in honor of Pope Francis visit
- Engagement of faith leaders on issues of income inequality--- utilize voices online and in media to shame folks for sensationalizing and dehumanizing while the City looks for real long-term solutions

Phase Two (mid-September – December)

After back to school, major housing-for-the-homeless announcement. Rollout includes salon-style discussion with Freakonomics reporter, or Paul Krugman on income inequality, homelessness and the new way New York is approaching the challenge. Think 92nd street Y talk. Ed boards. Online push

Week of 9/28

- Major announcement:
  - support for 30,000 supportive housing units in NYC over 10 years and commit City's traditional share with challenge to the State to join as a partner (implement by half new units and half scattered site rentals)
  - 10% (10K) set-aside for Housing Plan units
  - Converting 2,000 cluster shelter units to permanent housing for families
  - Expansion of shelter and assistance for DV survivors (in single women's system)
  - Expanded rapid rehousing assistance to help access previously allocated rental assistance for families (1000 single adults/ 1000 FWC]
- 30K Unity rally (organized by allies)
- (T) Announce litigation against the State for failure to set a rental allowance supplement that is based on the reasonable cost of housing, which is a major driver of homelessness (mid late sep)

October

- Announcement of Mental Health Road Map
- Salon-style release of Operations analysis and public one-on-one thought leadership sit-down with Mayor.

Week of 11/11 (Veterans Day)

- Launch countdown to end veterans homelessness

December

- Announce end of veteran homelessness
- Visit a family who has been relocated from shelter to permanent housing and announce total number of shelter exits

Aaron -

GMHC is very excited to become a pop-up location for the ID NYC. We plan to issue the attached media advisory, but wanted to make sure you had a chance to review it before we did.

Can you please look this over and let us know if there are any proposed edits. Additionally, if you have any art work you would like us to include when we issue it, please send along for consideration.

Thanks,
-AH

MEDIA ADVISORY

GMHC TO BECOME NEW, POP-UP ENROLLMENT SITE FOR IDNYC THIS SEPTEMBER

GMHC is Proud to Support the New, Free Identification Card
for All New York City Residents

New York, NY-- From Tuesday, September 1st to Friday September 18th, Gay Men's Health Crisis (GMHC) will transform its Manhattan offices into a pop-up enrollment site for IDNYC—the new, free identification card for all New York City residents. As a government-issued photo identification card, IDNYC secures the peace of mind and access to City services that come from having recognized identification. IDNYC benefits every city resident, including the most vulnerable communities—the homeless, youth, the elderly, undocumented immigrants, the formerly incarcerated, the HIV/AIDS community, and others who may have difficulty obtaining other government-issued ID.

"No one living in New York City should ever have to worry about not having proper identification," said GMHC CEO Kelsey Louie. "GMHC thanks Mayor de Blasio, Speaker Melissa Mark Viverito and Council Member Corey Johnson for their leadership in building the IDNYC program, which will make it much easier for our most vulnerable communities to receive government-issued photo identification cards. By not requiring transgender New Yorkers to select their gender assigned at birth, IDNYC goes a long way towards making the very notion of identity as inclusive as possible, uniting us all together as New Yorkers."

IDNYC cardholders can access services and programs offered by the City as well as by businesses. IDNYC helps enhance public safety, by serving as a recognized ID for interacting with NYPD. It also helps New Yorkers gain access to all City buildings that provide services to the public and is accepted as a form of identification for accessing numerous City programs and services. Other benefits include access to many of the city's museums, zoos and botanical gardens. For more information about IDNYC, visit: <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/idnyc/index.page>.

WHAT:

GMHC becomes new, pop-up enrollment site for IDNYC this September

About Gay Men's Health Crisis:

Gay Men's Health Crisis (GMHC) is the nation's leading provider of HIV/AIDS care, prevention services and advocacy, serving nearly 9,000 people living with and affected by HIV/AIDS in New York City, the epidemic's largest U.S. epicenter. As the world's first HIV and AIDS service organization GMHC is an expert in providing services that every person affected by the epidemic deserves. GMHC is on the front lines caring for people who are both HIV negative and positive, including: testing, nutrition, legal, mental health and education services. GMHC also advocates for stronger public policies at the local, state and federal level with the goal of ending AIDS as an epidemic in New York State by 2020. Most recently, GMHC and other HIV/AIDS organizations successfully persuaded the federal government to recommend widespread use of PrEP, a new daily treatment that is over 90% effective in preventing HIV infection. For more information, visit www.gmhc.org.

Verizon Walks Away From $550M+ In Federal Broadband Money

Verizon Only Telecom Company to Do So, Exacerbating Digital Divide

Millions in Eight States and DC to Remain Without Access to High-Speed Broadband

WASHINGTON- Verizon today became the only major U.S. telecommunications company to turn down federal funding to build broadband in unserved, primarily rural, communities, leaving many residents in eight states and the District of Columbia without access to vital communications options. The company was offered $568 million over six years by the Federal government to bring broadband to 270,000 locations in Washington, DC, Delaware, Massachusetts, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Virginia.

“Verizon’s track record is clear,” said Bob Master, Assistant to the Vice President of District One of the Communications Workers of America. “Even while raking in a billion dollars per month in profits, Verizon is turning its back on underserved communities by refusing federal subsidies to expand high-speed internet access. Instead, its top priority is slashing job and retirement security for its employees and eliminating benefits for workers injured on the job.”

In April, the Federal Communications Commission launched Phase II of the Connect America Fund. The FCC offered major telecommunications companies nearly \$1.7 billion a year over six years to provide high-speed internet and voice to unserved, primarily rural, communities. The carriers had until August 27 to decide whether to participate. The program was based on the successful universal service program, which ensured telephone service was available in rural communities.

Verizon accepted funding for two states where it is selling its network to Frontier Communications and rejected funding in the other states it operates.

Verizon’s attitude toward the federal subsidies is sadly consistent with its approach in New York State, where the company refuses to avail itself of Governor Cuomo’s $500 million New New York Broadband Fund, which offers up to 50% subsidies to companies willing to build high-speed service in underserved areas. For years, Verizon has steadfastly refused to bring its high-speed internet service (or FiOS) to areas like Buffalo, Syracuse, Albany, Rome, Utica and numerous other upstate New York cities, as well as much of Eastern Suffolk. At a series of hearings held by New York State, elected officials from Buffalo, Syracuse, Albany, the North Country, the Southern Tier and the Hudson Valley decried the lack of FiOS in their communities.

Campaigns in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts have also called for FiOS to be built in their communities.

A damning audit of Verizon’s FiOS rollout in New York City found that Verizon has failed to meet its promise to deliver high-speed fiber optic internet and television to everyone in the city who wanted it. During its negotiations for a city franchise, Verizon promised that the entire city would be wired with fiber optic cables by June 2014 and that after that date, everyone who wanted FiOS would get it within six months to a year. The audit found that despite claiming that it had wired the whole city by November 2014, Verizon systematically continues to refuse orders for service. The audit also found that Verizon stonewalled the audit process.

At the same time, Verizon has been letting its traditional phone network deteriorate. In 2005, New York’s Public Service Commission (PSC) eliminated automatic fines for Verizon’s telephone service quality failures, reasoning that “competition” would improve services. Instead, service quality plunged. In the 3rd quarter of 2010, Verizon cleared only 1.2% of out of service complaints within 24 hours, almost 79 percentage points lower than the PSC's 80% requirement. Rather than reverse course, the PSC changed its measurements, cutting out 92% of customers from service quality measurements and consolidating 28 repair service bureaus into 5 regions. On paper, terrible service quality was almost miraculously transformed. In reality, service quality continued to decline.

MEDIA ADVISORY

GMHC TO BECOME NEW, POP-UP ENROLLMENT SITE FOR IDNYC THIS SEPTEMBER

GMHC is Proud to Support the New, Free Identification Card
for All New York City Residents

New York, NY-- From Tuesday, September 1st to Friday September 18th, Gay Men's Health Crisis (GMHC) will transform its Manhattan offices into a pop-up enrollment site for IDNYC—the new, free identification card for all New York City residents. As a government-issued photo identification card, IDNYC secures the peace of mind and access to City services that come from having recognized identification. IDNYC benefits every city resident, including the most vulnerable communities—the homeless, youth, the elderly, undocumented immigrants, the formerly incarcerated, the HIV/AIDS community, and others who may have difficulty obtaining other government-issued ID.

"No one living in New York City should ever have to worry about not having proper identification," said GMHC CEO Kelsey Louie. "GMHC thanks Mayor de Blasio, Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito and Council Member Corey Johnson for their leadership in building the IDNYC program, which will make it much easier for our most vulnerable communities to receive government-issued photo identification cards. By not requiring transgender New Yorkers to select their gender assigned at birth, IDNYC goes a long way towards making the very notion of identity as inclusive as possible, uniting us all together as New Yorkers."

"The City is committed to ensuring every resident across the five boroughs has valid identification that truly reflects their personhood and their identity as New Yorkers. We are proud to announce this partnership with GMHC, the leading advocate for the HIV/AIDS community in New York City, to encourage every New Yorker – regardless of immigration status, race, gender or sexual orientation – to apply for an IDNYC," said Nisha Agarwal, Commissioner of the Mayor's Office of Immigrant Affairs. "IDNYC cardholders have access to the wide breadth of recreation, entertainment, services and benefits the City has to offer through the card – from free, year-long memberships at world renowned cultural institutions like the MET to health benefits like prescription drug discounts and fitness memberships that can improve quality of life. IDNYC is truly a card for all New Yorkers, and we want all New Yorkers to make an appointment today!"

IDNYC cardholders can access services and programs offered by the City as well as by businesses. IDNYC helps enhance public safety, by serving as a recognized ID for interacting with NYPD. It also helps New Yorkers gain access to all City buildings that provide services to the public and is accepted as a form of identification for accessing numerous City programs and services [redundant with first line]. Other benefits include access to many of the City's museums, zoos and botanical gardens. For more information about IDNYC, visit: <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/idnyc/index.page>.

WHAT:

GMHC becomes new pop-up enrollment site for IDNYC this September

WHEN:

September 1st – September 18th

Monday – Thursdays, 10 am – 6 pm; Fridays, 12 – 8 pm

(Will be closed on Monday, September 7th for Labor Day)

WHERE:

GMHC Offices

446 West 33rd Street (Between 9th and 10th Avenues)

Room 6294, Sixth Floor

New York, NY 1001

(Appointments preferred; walk-ins accepted)

About Gay Men's Health Crisis:

Gay Men's Health Crisis (GMHC) is the nation's leading provider of HIV/AIDS care, prevention services and advocacy, serving nearly 9,000 people living with and affected by HIV/AIDS in New York City, the epidemic's largest U.S. epicenter. As the world's first HIV and AIDS service organization GMHC is an expert in providing services that every person affected by the epidemic deserves. GMHC is on the front lines caring for people who are both HIV negative and positive, including: testing, nutrition, legal, mental health and education services. GMHC also advocates for stronger public policies at the local, state and federal level with the goal of ending AIDS as an epidemic in New York State by 2020. Most recently, GMHC and other HIV/AIDS organizations successfully persuaded the federal government to recommend widespread use of PrEP, a new daily treatment that is over 90% effective in preventing HIV infection. For more information, visit www.gmhc.org.

Sir,

In thinking about the discussion last night about authenticity and relatability, we've kicked around having you do some sports radio if you are "game" for it (nice pun, right!) as we head into the 3 game series. Pulling together recommendations and will send shortly for your review. Of course, if it's a no-go with schedule we understand.

Thanks,
Andrea

Guess I got your attention! :) Since I didn't get to go visit family in new england before labor day (my original plan), the remainder of my summer vacation will happen at Citi Field. Chirlane, Chiara will go to the Mets/Red Sox game Friday night -- in very cheap seats. I will go the Sat game with queens bp melinda katz. I will go to the sunday game with queens councilmembers. I'm certain the media will conclude I have no work ethic and don't care about the serious work of being mayor. And I wish I was joking, but I'm not entirely. Oh and I'm a red sox fan. So it may be a comms weekend disaster. And I'm used to it. If anyone wants to comment, feel free

B off. Love this too, one tweak - can we also frame as this is how BdB does his politics. Some pols do dinners and drinks and whatever - but he's working the Queens delegation and the BP over Mets games. It's work - him doing politics well.

Strategic reasons for recommending this route:

- 1) allows us to showcase your fun side in an outlet that tends to drive coverage both on broadcast and beyond NYC
- 2) will help us nestle the news of 3 games (which you note will cause the world to collapse for some) and position you as a very relatable "sports fanatic" . This is not about reaction to anticipated tabloid fodder, but more about making sure we always have the upper hand
- 3) reporter is low key and will abide by ground rules

Sir,

We decided against doing sports radio because Mike Francesa's show is live from a bar with somewhat out of control crowd.

Alternatively, we could invite Jon Lemire and let him sit with you for about 3 innings. It would be a conversation focused on baseball and would get result in wide circulation.

Are you interested in this route?

Peter

Lemire can go tonight and he is already going to the Sunday game. Will be with family, but he could probably sneak away for a bit.

If it is for one inning tonight, don't think it is worth bringing him out.

Sir,

The booth didn't work and we were considering Francesa as an alternate option in advance of the game.

We discussed and recommend bringing Lemire along Sunday. This gives him the opportunity to talk baseball and experience a game with you, while seeing you interact with other electeds over baseball.

If the offenses of Donald J. Trump weren't getting played out by the hour at the volume of a jackhammer in competition with a Nascar event, then recent comments by another New Yorker synonymous with unchecked expressiveness, and also touched by the pixie dust of presidential aspiration, might be generating more outrage. In an interview with NBC's local news channel in New York, former Mayor Rudolph W. Giuliani explained, with both glee and self-regard, that not long ago he had paid a visit to the 19th Precinct station house on the Upper East Side to complain about a homeless man who had taken up residence on his block.

"Do you know when people lived on the streets and didn't use bathrooms inside?" he said. "It's called the Dark Ages."

Needless to say, Mr. Giuliani did not pause and follow up that remark with, "And how disgraceful that so many centuries later we are still not able to house all of our neediest." He instead went on to remind us how in the 1990s, his "brain" and Police Commissioner William J. Bratton's "people" got rid of the homeless, the panhandlers, the nuisances. "You chase 'em and you chase 'em and you chase 'em and you chase 'em, and they either get the treatment that they need or you chase 'em out of the city." (Clearly we should be enticing the naked ladies of Times Square to head to Atlantic City, maybe with brunch coupons for Trump Taj Mahal.

Advocates for the homeless responded with fury, pointing out that Mr. Giuliani's views were "morally appalling" and ignored the way that his own policies had fueled the crisis of homelessness. Of course, his conception of those with no place to live as essentially a gross inconvenience for the rest of us is hardly singular. In recent weeks, an unsettling narrative has unfolded in New York, promoted in large part but by no means exclusively in the tabloid press, demonizing the homeless as a growing presence and a threat to bourgeois life. "Going to the Park? Don't Trip on a Bum," read a headline in The New York Post.

Over the summer, pictures of people sleeping on the streets have been posted on social media with insinuations that their presence is proof that the city is returning to the mayhem of the 1970s. This would suggest that we knew something definitive about the propensity of homeless people to commit serious crimes. We don't. Years ago, a researcher at Johns Hopkins University looked at arrest records in Baltimore for 1983 and found that although homeless people were more likely to commit nonviolent offenses like camping without a permit and indecent exposure, they were less likely to commit crimes against people or property. Homeless people themselves are considerably imperiled; last year, a report from the National Coalition for the Homeless revealed that from 1999 to 2013 there had been 1,437 documented acts of violence in 47 states perpetrated against homeless people by those who were not homeless.

Last year, the number of homeless men, women and children in New York City reached record levels, in large part because of failed or discontinued policies implemented during the Bloomberg years; the issue of affordable housing is obviously one of the most serious and vexing facing the de Blasio administration. At the same time, the number of people spending the night in city shelters, the metric by which the homeless population is measured, has, in fact, been in steady month-to-month decline since December.

This has not stopped the Sergeants Benevolent Association in New York City from implementing an initiative aimed at getting members and their friends and families to photograph homeless people lying on the street or urinating in public and posting those pictures online. (What could be more benevolent?) The association's president has said the campaign — called Peek-a-Boo We See You Too! — was a response to “the diminishing” of the city's reputation as a pre-eminently safe place. “It's outing,” as the actor Richard Gere remarked to me recently.

We were talking about the new film he has produced and in which he stars, “Time Out of Mind,” due next week. It is one of three movies that will be released in fairly quick succession that deal with homelessness in

New York, including a documentary about a former male model who now works as a photographer and who lives on a fire escape, “Homme Less,” and a feature film, “Shelter,” written and directed by Paul Bettany. Mr. Gere’s film had been in development since the late 1980s. “Unfortunately, it was still relevant,” he said.

Mr. Gere has worked with the Coalition for the Homeless for years; he has spent time in shelters; and as a longtime New Yorker, he has committed himself to thinking about his encounters with homeless people. “I went through a period where I insisted on talking, and then I realized how abusive that was — asking people about their stories and these intimate details of their lives,” he said. Now he gives every homeless person he sees some money — from $1 to $5 — and moves on.

Spare and free of melodrama, “Time Out of Mind” examines the immiserating realities of dealing with the bureaucracy around the shelter system and other social services. The film takes great care to render the assault of noise, the difficulties that homeless people have getting any sleep anywhere, and the kind of madness that it produces. It should remind anyone who might have forgotten that homelessness isn’t awful because it degrades the streetscape; it is awful because it degrades lives.

Sir,

We are working to get you on the field for Mets warm ups tomorrow as I was told there is no BP on Sundays.

So everyone is in the loop:

We worked out having him go on-field for warm ups. He will arrive at noon, be escorted to home plate, and spend time on the field.

I will handle Lemire and expect to bring him over around the 3rd inning and let them spend 2-3 innings together. This will give the Mayor some time to settle into the game and speak with Queens electeds before bringing Lemire over.

Lemme know if there are any questions.

Wanted to follow up with you directly on communications proposals for Monday and provide a holistic overview of the week. Know that you'll then discuss with Front Office and make determinations. If you hate this format, I apologize and will re-configure.

Monday

Homeless Encampment Clean Up Operation

Date: Monday, August 30th at 11am

Location: 150th Street & St. Ann's Avenue (south end)– Rae Street & Hegney Place (north end)

Strategy:

- YOU walk with representatives of DHS, DSNY, MOCJ, NYPD, Boom! Health (community service partner) to assess an encampment that is scheduled to be cleaned out this Thursday. There are approximately 12-15 individuals at this site all day long. Debris, including needles and trash, on the ground with tents built up. We are inviting the PC to join.
- We anticipate inviting tier 1 print and TV photographers to cover your visit and plan to pre-position them along the encampment, pending our walk through of the site, to cover you walking the ground flanked by folks and being briefed.

- YOU then are pulled to the side to provide a brief topper to cameras—what you just witnessed and what we are doing about it. We are also inviting the PC.
- 3-5 on-topic questions only. No off topic
- We issue a press release on the encampment work, framing it as YOU assessing the situation and ordering sites be cleaned and enforced. Media will be told that this site will be cleared on Thursday and we expect they will return to watch.

NOTE: You raised earlier the concern about cameras and the spontaneous atmosphere of these walks. We believe that to maximize this opportunity we should have TV-cameras there, but based on your feedback we can limit to just still photos and no avail. Nothing has been pitched at this time.

Daily News op-ed with homeless focus will run tomorrow

Pre-K Education Twitter Chat

Date: Monday, August 30th, time TBD with scheduling

Location: wherever

Strategy:

- YOU conduct a 10-15 minute twitter chat aimed at parents on the start of school next week.
- Focus is pre-K.
- Could possibly get a question about some of the schools determined not ready to be opened. Answers will be prepped for you. This is our opportunity to have you begin to reach New Yorkers directly rather than through press conferences.

If we are planning an event to tell the world about some new tools we have in place to help homeless folks, then I think it's fine. If what we are doing is "cracking down" on groups of poor, mentally-ill people with nowhere else to go, then it's not. And if all we are really planning to do is chase troubled people from one place to another, then we're no better than Giuliani. I have not heard about any new programmatic initiatives here -- until we have them, I don't think we're ready to go.

Couple of thoughts / questions:

When he tours is it a big outreach push to get these guys in shelter? I assume we are not going in there and just busting people up hence all the agencies and outreach partners?

Could we also couple it with him going out on an overall outreach tour in same neighborhood with the folks who talk people off the street?

More him spending a night hands on the problem talking people into shelter with this as a piece and less what could be perceived as punitive narrative Tony and I think we all want to avoid?

Still sends a signal against encampments etc. maybe do it just with daily news and no tv to start?

Couple of thoughts / questions:

When he tours is it a big outreach push to get these guys in shelter? I assume we are not going in there and just busting people up hence all the agencies and outreach partners?

Could we also couple if with him going out on an overall outreach tour in same neighborhood with the folks who talk people off the street?

More him spending a night hands on the problem talking people into shelter with this as a piece and less what could be perceived as punitive narrative Tony and I think we all want to avoid?

Still sends a signal against encampments etc. maybe do it just with daily news and no tv to start?

If we can rid Times Square of desnudas without having them return, surely we can do the same with people who are not mentally ill and are still refusing shelter.

There may be a humane plan in the making about street homeless, and I don't know about it. If there is, we should start talking about it, a long with busting up encampments.

Talking about real solutions also will help mitigate the Mayor's concern about seeming uncaring.

Reducing thread and adding Tony. I think we should do it.

I'll irritate everyone by referencing Tompkins Square Park. Tony - this AM - there were 7 people sleeping in the main grassy area at 7am - so a 5-person reduction from Friday at the same time - but still feels out of control.

I know Ginia Belafonte had a thoughtful column this AM - but I don't think it represents the vast majority of New Yorkers, who believe homelessness is a quality of life issue, and is getting way out of hand.

Two concerns:

1. As you know, Chirlane will continue to "head up" mental health (I've cc'ed her and her team here). She will effectively be the Chair of and chief spokesperson for all we do on this topic for the duration. Richard will head the Mental Health Cabinet, meaning the actual day-to-day coordination amongst all the agencies, which requires a deputy mayor's involvement. Pls make sure this is crystal clear in the roll-out

2. The broad idea of the encampment event makes sense to me, but don't wrong it could really backfire. I've cc'ed Rosen and Del Cecato for this piece. The danger here is that it will be interpreted wrongly as an attack on the homeless -- which I would never be party to.

Our problem is that as a team we have all (led by me) absolutely sucked at laying down the predicate on this issue. If over the last two months we had set the record straight effectively, this effort re: the encampment would have seemed natural and smooth. In the absence of framing, it could really come across as desperate and over-the-top.

I really want to hear with jonathan and john think -- especially Jonathan because of his long experience on this issue. And I really don't want to alienate our true friends and allies on this issue. So if we can do this right, contextualize it right, explain it right and inhibit media sensationalism, I'm all in.

If not, we should consider having officials other than me and BB do this, and then I speak to it after. Pls discuss without me on the thread and come back with a rec. Thanks

Sir,
Wanted to follow up with you directly on communications proposals for Monday and provide a holistic overview of the week. Know that you'll then discuss with Front Office and make determinations. If you hate this format, I apologize and will re-configure.

Monday
Homeless Encampment Clean Up Operation

Date: Monday, August 30th at 11am

Location: 150th Street & St. Ann's Avenue (south end)– Rae Street & Hegney Place (north end)

Strategy:

- YOU walk with representatives of DHS, DSNY, MOCJ, NYPD, Boom! Health (community service partner) to assess an encampment that is scheduled to be cleaned out this Thursday. There are approximately 12-15 individuals at this site all day long. Debris, including needles and trash, on the ground with tents built up. We are inviting the PC to join.

- We anticipate inviting tier 1 print and TV photographers to cover your visit and plan to pre-position them along the encampment, pending our walk through of the site, to cover you walking the ground flanked by folks and being briefed.
- YOU then are pulled to the side to provide a brief topper to cameras—what you just witnessed and what we are doing about it. We are also inviting the PC.
- 3-5 on-topic questions only. No off topic
- We issue a press release on the encampment work, framing it as YOU assessing the situation and ordering sites be cleaned and enforced. Media will be told that this site will be cleared on Thursday and we expect they will return to watch.

NOTE: You raised earlier the concern about cameras and the spontaneous atmosphere of these walks. We believe that to maximize this opportunity we should have TV-cameras there, but based on your feedback we can limit to just still photos and no avail. Nothing has been pitched at this time.

Daily News op-ed with homeless focus will run tomorrow

Pre-K Education Twitter Chat

Date: Monday, August 30th, time TBD with scheduling

Location: wherever

Strategy:

- YOU conduct a 10-15 minute twitter chat aimed at parents on the start of school next week.
- Focus is pre-K.
- Could possibly get a question about some of the schools determined not ready to be opened. Answers will be prepped for you. This is our opportunity to have you begin to reach New Yorkers directly rather than through press conferences.

Weekly Communications

I like jonathan's ideas. That won't be ready for tomorrow, unfortunately.

Should we pull and re-tool to get both pieces? Last time he worried we looked weak on enforcement so i'm just not clear on his desire and our ultimate goal other than to show him in control

Couple of thoughts / questions:

When he tours is it a big outreach push to get these guys in shelter? I assume we are not going in there and just busting people up hence all the agencies and outreach partners?

Could we also couple if with him going out on an overall outreach tour in same neighborhood with the folks who talk people off the street?

More him spending a night hands on the problem talking people into shelter with this as a piece and less what could be perceived as punitive narrative Tony and I think we all want to avoid?

Still sends a signal against encampments etc. maybe do it just with daily news and no tv to start?

If we can rid Times Square of desnudas without having them return, surely we can do the same with people who are not mentally ill and are still refusing shelter.

What worries me is we have no way of moving the homeless off the streets, except to arrest them and put them through the jail, hospital, shelter, street cycle — which Guliani and Bloomberg used to reduce their visibility.

When it starts to get cold, the problem just moves to the subways. We can arrest them there, but is that the plan?

There may be a humane plan in the making about street homeless, and I don't know about it. If there is, we should start talking about it, along with busting up encampments.

Talking about real solutions also will help mitigate the Mayor's concern about seeming uncaring.

Reducing thread and adding Tony. I think we should do it.

I'll irritate everyone by referencing Tompkins Square Park. Tony - this AM - there were 7 people sleeping in the main grassy area at 7am - so a 5-person reduction from Friday at the same time - but still feels out of control.

I know Ginia Belafonte had a thoughtful column this AM - but I don't think it represents the vast majority of New Yorkers, who believe homelessness is a quality of life issue, and is getting way out of hand.

Well done

Two concerns:

1. As you know, Chirlane will continue to "head up" mental health (I've cc'ed her and her team here). She will effectively be the Chair of and chief spokesperson for all we do on this topic for the duration. Richard will head the Mental Health Cabinet, meaning the actual day-to-day coordination amongst all the agencies, which requires a deputy mayor's involvement. Pls make sure this is crystal clear in the roll-out

2. The broad idea of the encampment event makes sense to me, but don't wrong it could really backfire. I've cc'ed Rosen and Del Cecato for this piece. The danger here is that it will be interpreted wrongly as an attack on the homeless -- which I would never be party to.

Our problem is that as a team we have all (led by me) absolutely sucked at laying down the predicate on this issue. If over the last two months we had set the record straight effectively, this effort re: the encampment would have seemed natural and smooth. In the absence of framing, it could really come across as desperate and over-the-top.

I really want to hear with Jonathan and John think -- especially Jonathan because of his long experience on this issue. And I really don't want to alienate our true friends and allies on this issue. So if we can do this right, contextualize it right, explain it right and inhibit media sensationalism, I'm all in.

If not, we should consider having officials other than me and BB do this, and then I speak to it after. Pls discuss without me on the thread and come back with a rec. Thanks

Sir,
Wanted to follow up with you directly on communications proposals for Monday and provide a holistic overview of the week. Know that you'll then discuss with Front Office and make determinations. If you hate this format, I apologize and will reconfigure.

Monday

Homeless Encampment Clean Up Operation

Date: Monday, August 30th at 11am

Location: 150th Street & St. Ann's Avenue (south end)– Rae Street & Hegney Place (north end)

Strategy:

- YOU walk with representatives of DHS, DSNY, MOCJ, NYPD, Boom! Health (community service partner) to assess an encampment that is scheduled to be cleaned out this Thursday. There are approximately 12-15 individuals at this site all day long. Debris, including needles and trash, on the ground with tents built up. We are inviting the PC to join.
- We anticipate inviting tier 1 print and TV photographers to cover your visit and plan to pre-position them along the encampment, pending our walk through of the site, to cover you walking the ground flanked by folks and being briefed.
- YOU then are pulled to the side to provide a brief topper to cameras—what you just witnessed and what we are doing about it. We are also inviting the PC.

- 3-5 on-topic questions only. No off topic
- We issue a press release on the encampment work, framing it as YOU assessing the situation and ordering sites be cleaned and enforced. Media will be told that this site will be cleared on Thursday and we expect they will return to watch.

NOTE: You raised earlier the concern about cameras and the spontaneous atmosphere of these walks. We believe that to maximize this opportunity we should have TV-cameras there, but based on your feedback we can limit to just still photogs and no avail. Nothing has been pitched at this time.

Daily News op-ed with homeless focus will run tomorrow

Pre-K Education Twitter Chat

Date: Monday, August 30th, time

TBD with scheduling

Location: wherever

Strategy:

- YOU conduct a 10-15 minute twitter chat aimed at parents on the start of school next week.
- Focus is pre-K.
- Could possibly get a question about some of the schools determined not ready to be opened. Answers will be prepped for you. This is our opportunity to have you begin to reach New Yorkers directly rather than through press conferences.

Sir,

The group consensus is that since we will have service providers who are doing outreach to these clientele that we show a different approach than the past- enforcement and support to work towards long-term, achievable solutions.

However, we recommend scaling back to just Daily news photog and reporter (Jen fermino) which limits media presence while achieving our goal of amplifying your oped today.

We would have the following with you

- kathryn garcia, dsny
- Mindy tarlow, operations
- Gilbert taylor, dhs
- o'neill or fox, nypd

Representatives of Bronx Works- which has been outspoken in support for your approach- and Harm Reduction programs will be there and can brief you.

Advance has told us that it is only safe to view from an overlook. You will not walk the grounds. But it would give you a view of the camps and opportunity to be briefed.

The camps will be cleared on Thursday and we would make clear to Jen this is a strategic response to a complex problem.

ROS

- YOU are greeted by the agencies and community partners
- YOU are briefed on situation
- Daily News photog covers
- YOU do a brief one-on- one with Jen Fermino on site after.

As you may recall, she was quite thoughtful in her coverage after the mentally ill person approached Chirlane at an event and we believe she will treat this respectfully.

We do anticipate some questions on veterans homelessness potentially and will work up QandA.

Please let us know your thoughts. Nothing has been pitched.

Mayor de Blasio Authorizes Emergency Measure to Aid Homeless People
NY TIMES - Nikita Stewart
<http://mobile.nytimes.com/2015/08/31/nyregion/mayor-de-blasio-authorizes-emergency-measure-to-aid-homeless-people.html?referrer=>

With few beds available in New York City's homeless shelters, Mayor Bill de Blasio has authorized another emergency measure to provide rental assistance to people facing homelessness.

The $10 million initiative is expected to provide aid to as many as 1,000 adults and is modeled on an emergency measure in May to assist families with children, who have been the focus of the administration's recent efforts to reduce homelessness.

While the number of homeless people has fallen since last winter's record of about 60,000, officials concluded that more needed to be done to assist adults without children. In an Aug. 5 count, 16,562 people were living in city homeless shelters. The average vacancy rate at shelters for single adults was 1.1 percent, while the rate at shelters for adult families was 1.29 percent.

The new emergency measure, the Special Exit and Prevention Supplement, will give subsidies to tenants facing eviction, domestic violence survivors timing out of shelters, recovering addicts discharged from treatment and former residents of so-called three-quarter homes.

Mary Brosnahan, executive director of the Coalition for the Homeless, said the new program was an “important step.”

“The numbers have been going down on families, but we’re seeing growing numbers of single adults,” Ms. Brosnahan said. “It’s going to do a lot for single people in the shelters, many of whom are working.”

Based on household size and other factors, the subsidies will allow recipients to rent private apartments long term. But finding apartments within the program’s cap, $1,213 for a single adult, will not be easy. The city has been criticized for years for the poor conditions of private buildings in a temporary assistance program for homeless families.

“Yes, it’s going to be difficult, but I don’t think it’s impossible,” Ms. Brosnahan said.

The city has been trying to recruit landlords to participate in the new rental assistance programs, Steven Banks, commissioner of the city’s Human Resources Administration, said. But he added that many landlords remain bitter about a 2011 decision by Mr. de Blasio’s predecessor, Michael R. Bloomberg, to end a similar subsidy program. “It’s a legacy that we had to work very hard with landlords to wipe away.”

Mr. Banks and Gilbert Taylor, commissioner of homeless services, had asked Mr. de Blasio, a Democrat, to set up the new program and to model it on the Family Eviction Prevention Supplement program, started in May.

The initiatives are part of a broader effort to move people out of shelters and into permanent housing.

Since last fall, the city has been rolling out various rental assistance programs through emergency rules, allowing the city to start the programs before the public-comment period ends.

Councilman Stephen T. Levin, a Brooklyn Democrat who is chairman of the general welfare committee, said expediting the programs is justified. “It’s an emergency, particularly when we see the vacancy rate within the shelter system,” he said. “It’s a much wiser course of action to come up with programs. Time is of the essence.”

Matthew Main, a staff attorney at MFY Legal Services Inc., a nonprofit firm focused on poverty issues, said the new program would greatly help people receiving a state shelter allowance of just $215, an amount that has been unchanged since 1988.

Many of those people end up in three-quarter housing, he said, group homes that are effectively unregulated and have multiplied over the past decade, driven by a mandate to reduce shelter rolls and a dearth of affordable housing.

“A lot of people in three-quarter housing are folks who are down on their luck,” Mr. Main said. “This is essentially a way for people who are simply poor to procure safe housing.”

More than 200 people were removed from three-quarter houses that were shut down for illegal conditions, such as building code violations and overcrowding. They are currently in temporary housing and would likely benefit from the new program.

Thanks Jordan.

The Politico article was very balanced and I'm glad to hear the team is using it as a resource for talking points. Hawkins' story was definitely overblown and heavy on the criticism of our current procurement process. Don't think that's fair to conflate with the CityMart contract because they are simply not the same thing, and bringing them together piles criticism onto the City unnecessarily.

Hey Jeff,

After talking with my team just now, we're going to tone down our pitching going forward to make sure we're not over-hyping Citymart's significance. There's one story already in the works—with Chester Soria at Metro—but we're going to make very clear to him this is merely a pilot project, an experiment, one that has possibilities but has not at all made major changes to NYC procurement. We'll be much more precise going forward—some of this, I think, is reporters getting carried away, but some of it is on our end in conflating Citymart's ambitions and national work with the actual details of the NYC contract.

Can we continue with the Metro story, or would you rather us call it off completely?

Sorry for all the confusion and any trouble we caused you.

Jordan

New York City Pilots Innovative New Approach to Urban Problem-Solving in Partnership with Citymart

New Initiative Opens Door for Start-ups and Other Innovative Companies to Work with New York City to Tackle the Most Pressing Urban Challenges

New York, N.Y. –In the largest implementation yet of its innovative approach, Citymart will partner with the New York City Mayor’s Office of Technology and Innovation to pilot a new method that could transform the way the city’s government solves problems by connecting city planners with innovative new ideas through open challenges to entrepreneurs and citizens.

The Mayor’s Office of Technology and Innovation will work with New York-based Citymart on launching a series of problem-based challenges over the course of the next two years. Challenges will draw on key themes that were set forth in Mayor de Blasio’s Plan for One New York, which was released in April 2015. OneNYC establishes bold goals and specific targets for a strong, sustainable, resilient, and equitable city – 800,000 people out of poverty by 2025, Zero Waste, eliminating long-term displacement after future shock events, and much more.

“Anything done in New York City has ramifications around the world – we’re absolutely thrilled to be partnering with the city in this effort,” said Citymart CEO Sascha Haselmayer. “Mayor Bill de Blasio proved he’s committed to transforming the way the city approaches some of the most daunting urban problems that any city in the world can face by establishing the Mayor’s Office of Technology and Innovation to seek out inventive, effective, and affordable solutions. This process will help the city further that goal by leveraging existing resources to bring new players into the process and open up new possibilities for innovation.”

Citymart helps cities learn how to use the open market to find proven, innovative solutions addressing the pressing needs of urban areas, helping them rethink their spending habits so they focus on not just buying goods and services, but on solving problems. Citymart starts by working with a city to help them define their problems and capabilities. Then the firm conducts intensive research and outreach to identify the market leaders and proven innovators with possible solutions and issues a challenge to those leaders, to local businesses and citizens, and to a global network of businesses, entrepreneurs, and universities in a search for the most effective and affordable solution.

“We will issue an open challenge to market leaders and proven innovators for possible solutions to each particular problem,” Haselmayer said. “This challenge asks three simple questions: ‘What is your idea for solving the problem, how ready is your solution, and how can we measure its success?’ We’ll be training New York City staff how to run these challenges and evaluate proposed solutions in a transparent and efficient manner.”

The Citymart-New York City partnership builds on the City’s first Call for Innovations (CFI) launched earlier this year. The CFI, which focused on new approaches for providing Internet access in underserved communities, produced 69 proposals from 52 sources over a period of 11 weeks from April to June. The largest number of submissions came from start-ups and small businesses, most of whom had not previously worked with the City of New York.

Citymart is also partnering with Philadelphia, Miami, Long Beach, and other major American cities to help them transform the way they solve city problems.

“Cities in the United States collectively spend more than one trillion dollars that we know could be spent in better solutions. If we put even a small fraction of that to use in creating cities that are more responsive, more efficient and more nimble at solving problems for citizens, we’ll make an enormous impact on thousands of people’s lives” said Citymart Principal Julia Haselmayer.

Citymart is a New York-based company that transforms the way cities solve problems, connecting them with new ideas through open challenges to entrepreneurs and citizens. The company has helped cities around the world from San Francisco to London find proven, innovative solutions addressing the pressing needs of urban areas, such as efficient transportation, quality public spaces, sustainability, effective social services, and robust commerce and tourism.

EXCLUSIVE: Summer jobs for city kids surged in 2015

LISA L. COLANGELO, BEN CHAPMAN NEW YORK DAILY NEWS 08/31/2015 2:30 AM ET AMY SUSSMAN/GETTY IMAGES

More Big Apple youths landed city-funded summer jobs in 2015 than at any other point in the program's 50-year history, Department of Youth and Community Development figures show.

A whopping 54,263 city youths age 14-24 landed paid summer gigs lasting up to 6 weeks through the Summer Youth Employment Program that ended earlier this month, commissioner Bill Chong said. That's up from 47,126 youngsters in 2014.

Chong said a $12 million boost in city funds for the program -- bringing its budget to nearly $79 million-- fueled the employment explosion. The program connects youths with minimum wage jobs at private companies, non-profits and city agencies.

But the lessons learned on the job count for more than the spending cash they generate, Chong said.

"Younger youths and those who have never worked before learn the importance of showing up on time and working with other people," Chong said. "For the older youths, it's about lining up the work experience that they're interested in."

More than 130,000 applicants applied for the program this year. Participants were selected through a lottery system.

Khaleel Jones admitted he was a little nervous his first day working the floor at the Modell's Sporting Goods in Fresh Meadows.

"This is my first retail job," said the 18-year-old from Rosedale, who is heading into his senior year at Campus Magnet High School. "I didn't know what to sell and I'm not good at talking to people publicly."

But he credits his co-workers with helping him gain confidence and knowledge. He aced two "mystery shopping" tests by an anonymous Modell's employee and impressed his bosses enough to earn him a part-time job after the program ended.

“Working here has taught me a lot of things,” said Jones, who is making careful plans to juggle the job with his schoolwork and football practice. He’s an offensive lineman with the Campus Magnet Bulldogs. “I’m confident talking to people now and I know what to do in my workspace.”

Ed Cohen, general manager of the store, said he was impressed with Khaleel and his fellow workers from the summer jobs program.

“He was hungry to learn and he used his knowledge,” said Cohen. “Khaleel was here just three weeks when he was tested by a mystery shopper and received a 100. His customers are well taken care of.”

Thanks Jordan.

The Politico article was very balanced and I'm glad to hear the team is using it as a resource for talking points. Hawkins' story was definitely overblown and heavy on the criticism of our current procurement process. Don't think that's fair to conflate with the CityMart contract because they are simply not the same thing, and bringing them together piles criticism onto the City unnecessarily.

I want to double check with jeff before anything, but he is out of the country....my thoughts are if you guys are still going to send out, I'd want to see a couple choice edits to avoid further brouhaha.

Thanks Jordan.

The Politico article was very balanced and I'm glad to hear the team is using it as a resource for talking points. Hawkins' story was definitely overblown and heavy on the criticism of our current procurement process. Don't think that's fair to conflate with the CityMart contract because they are simply not the same thing, and bringing them together piles criticism onto the City unnecessarily.

Hey Jeff,

After talking with my team just now, we're going to tone down our pitching going forward to make sure we're not over-hyping Citymart's significance. There's one story already in the works—with Chester Soria at Metro--but we're going to make very clear to him this is merely a pilot project, an experiment, one that has possibilities but has not at all made major changes to NYC procurement. We'll be much more precise going forward—some of this, I think, is reporters getting carried away, but some of it is on our end in conflating Citymart's ambitions and national work with the actual details of the NYC contact.

Can we continue with the Metro story, or would you rather us call it off completely?

Sorry for all the confusion and any trouble we caused you.

Jordan--

Articles like today's Crain's post are not helpful --

<http://www.crainsnewyork.com/article/20150825/BLOGS04/150829991/de-blasio-administration-pays-firm-180000-to-fix-a-17-billion-problem>

Can you make sure your team is not exaggerating the scope of work? This is the second article that seemed to suggest this is a fix to procurement which is just incorrect. This is a pilot to explore ways to crowdsource new ideas to problems. Let us know if you have any questions - thanks.

Personally, I love PK's U Mad idea - but would do it with Willy Wonka
<http://vignette4.wikia.nocookie.net/trollpasta/images/d/db/U-mad-bro.jpg/revision/latest?cb=20140610192555>

BUT, in the interest of message discipline, maybe we just retweet our own original tweet & say something like "ICYMI: Here's the fake cover that has @NYPost all worked up this morning."

OR, you could really rub it in, and say "Here's the fake cover that has @NYPost all worked up." Post this:
<http://www.thesmokinggun.com/sites/default/files/imagecache/750x970/documents/0706041post1.jpg>

And then say: "Whoops. Not that one. This one." And then post the mock-up from Wednesday night.

Hello All

I will be the point person on press for Brave New Films.

The draft press release will be coming shortly for your review/edits. But I did have a few quick questions about press leading to and day of the event:

- We are more than happy to send out the press release and pitch to our contacts. However, we rarely have NY specific releases so that's not really our world. Are there any press lists/contacts you all have and would like to share to ensure full coverage of the event in NY media?

For clarification, both offices will be sending out the press release, correct?

- Will there be an official photographer on site? If so will he/she be roaming or will they just be taking official pictures? Important for us to know.

Thanks everyone! Looking forward to a great event!

Vanessa

My recommendations

- Close read and rebut by staffers of any inaccuracies, falsehoods
- Line up validators if it spins out – and look to see if we can harness anything into a positive discussion (a la Chirlane and working motherhood)
- Mayor stays high level --- interesting folks say these things when we just had safest summer in 20 years and upwards of 70K 4 year olds are starting pre-K this week thanks to my pre-k for all program

Bryan characterizes the story as “tough neutral,” says that no one is going to walk away from this piece thinking that the Mayor is doing a great job or a bad job. The story opens with some judgment on tardiness, perception that the Mayor is disengaged from running the city, but he says we come back hard on those critiques. Of note is that Bryan told me that we’re going to be irritated by what’s in quotes, not by what he wrote.

The story will say that an awful lot of unpopularity comes from whites, wealthy and conservative outlets like the Post. Then they’ll ask the question, so which is it? Is Mayor disengaged or should we give him the benefit of the doubt because he’s putting so much emphasis on helping the “have nots,” a population that’s been ignored for 20 years? There is still a good section about what the Mayor is like as a person – to include the Subway ride and color from the shadow day.

It’s still an introduction of the Mayor, but the progressive theme he talked about is no longer a major part of the story. That said, there is still a line in the story that says Mayor is the only progressive worth watching, and there is a small section where he makes the case that it matters how Mayor does and what you think of him because he is a significant national figure.

The Cuomo section is the last 20 percent of the story and will be a “non-issue” for us, per Bryan. Cuomo’s staff will obviously read between the lines when they see the quotes attributed to others, but he told me that he realizes now that the June interview was not as a meaningful moment as he had originally thought, so he didn’t put too much into this section.

Mayor should know that the story was heavily edited – “written by committee” to use Bryan’s exact words – so that helps to explain why the final product isn’t going to look like what he told us and the Mayor the week he spent with us.

Bryan doesn’t know the headline but says we’ll have a double photo of the Mayor on the steps of Gracie and a full page family portrait.

In terms of timing, he said that it could be leaked as early as Monday, but Tuesday or Wednesday is more likely. FWIW, Bryan said he doesn't know what the Post will pick up. Knowing this timeline, we'll have to him to respond to criticism during our FDOS media blitz with something like "For those who think I'm disengaged or tardiness is a problem, today is the day that we have 65k four year olds going to free, full day pre-k. That's more than the entire public school population of the city of Boston (or Detroit, Sacramento, Seattle, El Paso)."

To be clear, this seems like an outsiders view that features the thinking of allies and opposition he has talked with. Not sure who those folks are.

If we want a quote or to weigh in with an official voice, and I don't think we necessarily need to on this one, think it should come from Phil to reflect larger strategic thinking.

Talked to Matt and this is less about going around media and more about the Mayor as a constituent services kind of guy.

Bloomberg said everyone was wrong but him, Rudy was hated and didn't care, Ed battled with people in the street, but the Mayor seems more prone to course correct based on public/media critiques than previous Mayor's.

Few examples he is working with: adjusted scheduling and is regularly on time now, Times Square response with the DN, and calls to see more interaction with voters resulted in lots more Lehrer and experiment with things like twitter chat.

From what I can tell this will read: Allies say he has a bias towards good ideas no matter the source and opposition says he is reactive to pressure.

New media/adjustments to media strategy portion seems to enter when comparing Peter Ragone's prior statements that he didn't read the tabloids or care about them, to some of the things we have been doing lately. Matt weighs Peter's statements against our use of Twitter to mock the Post front-page.

Sounds like a relatively neutral story with the biggest danger being that saber-rattling (uber) has shaken the administration at times.

He hasn't called me - but I don't think this is a bad line for us. In fact, when we first talked about going around media filter/doing new media - we talked about how we should do that a couple of weeks and then the NYT would write about it in a meta way. It looks like they're a week ahead of schedule. And it's all good

I haven't said anything really.

He talked to me and said he sees the Mayor adjust strategy more than one might have seen from other Mayors. If Bloomberg was late a lot, he probably would have kept doing it. His take generally seemed to be "this Mayor seems willing to take good ideas even if they come from externally." Complaints about him being on time, so he adjusted. Daily News makes a recommendation about calling Times Square parkland to avoid panhandling and the Mayor said it was an idea worth looking at.

Also sees a change in approach on engagement with public. More radio and more public activity like lehrer and ball games.

Just spoke to producer-

They're looking to have on an advocate (maybe Coalition person), someone who can speak to the legal issues (she mentioned a civil rights attorney), and was hoping for someone from DHS. So far no one has confirmed.

Topics of discussion will include encampment breakdown, Giuliani's piece, shelter v street population, and programs in place to alleviate the issue.

She said the discussion would last no longer than 6 minutes with panel participants and the anchors, Suki Christian and Scott Stanford.

Daily News play is important - glad you are doing board and Colin. Ed speech coming together. Kate Taylor community schools piece excellent. I didn't say much because agreed with overall point and need to keep applying it. Phil's calendar for next three weeks is right plus moving up K2 and getting in front of that. Staying engaged w team and will speak up. Blake thing is going to have more turns to it but we're in the right place on it.

I think it looks good – I have two thoughts: (neither of which are deal breakers at this point)

- For the last still of Mike measuring at the beginning (1:03), can you replace with him looking at the boiler? The VO says “machinery like air conditioners and boilers” but we see him measuring a meter
- I think the FloodHelpNY.org shot (1:06) could be confusing because we don’t explain what it is – also, the VO says “when you get your elevation certificate...” so can we replace that with a shot of the EC or just lose it and go straight to the graphic that explains BFE?

Abe - If these can be done easily while you are replacing the graphic over the weekend, then great – if not, I realize these are very fine points and as a whole, this is a strong video that accomplishes our goal!

Matt – we don’t have a press release at this point and I am still waiting to hear back on the communications plan... I will follow up again today and hopefully have an answer by the end of the day.

Thank you!

Hi guys,

The link above is (hopefully) the final video. Let me know if it needs tweaks.

I believe I solved the graphics rendering issue but it will take numerous hours to export the file with those settings. The following link is for a video of the first 8 seconds exported with those settings. Please download it, Leyla, to confirm that the graphics are a match. Then I will export the full final video over the weekend once the edit is approved.

Dan and Diane --

Wanted to give you a heads up about a major announcement coming this Wednesday: (still confidential) Mayor de Blasio will announce a plan to deliver computer science education to every child in elementary, middle, and high schools by 2025. This will be the largest CS program in the country.

Below is basic information about the program (at least that we are sharing by email right now.... I can brief you on the programmatic details by phone), and opportunities for you and Cornell Tech to partner with us on the initiative (and Diane, I want to formally loop you with the programmatic team at DOE... Debbie Marcus and her team, if you aren't already in touch with them about this).

Let me know what you think and if you'd be up for any of this!

Best,
Jessie

While still confidential, next week on Wednesday, September 16th, the Mayor will announce what is the most ambitious computer science education effort in the country to date. As part of an $81 million public-private partnership, New York City will deliver computer science education to every student in each of the City's elementary, middle, and high schools by 2025—that's 1.1 million students.

We couldn't be more thrilled. This has been months in the making, and as you know, something leaders like yourself have long promoted as a critical investment in our students and growing tech ecosystem.

We wanted to come to you before going out with the news to give you a chance to partner with us when we announce this initiative. It is the cornerstone of the Mayor's broader agenda for the future of public schools and there are multiple opportunities for engagement.

- Quote. Send us a quote for potential inclusion in broad-based press and digital collateral.
- Tweet. Tweet on September 16th to commend this historic undertaking by the City of New York in partnership with the DOE.
- Speak. Respond to press inquiries on behalf of the community you represent (business, academia, and/or workforce).
- Attend. Attend the Mayoral Address on our Schools at 10:30am at Bronx Latin School (800 Home Street, Bronx, NY 10456).
- Represent. Attend the Mayoral Address on our Schools and engage with press on-site.

I would be happy to provide more information on this initiative; please let me know if you would like to discuss live. Pending your response, we will follow-up with suggested messaging and tweets. We need your response no later than 5pm on Monday, September 14th.

We heard you and your colleagues in the tech sector, business community, and academia loud and clear on this issue and we look forward to your ongoing partnership over the next few years. Thank you.

I think this is disgusting. She provides no balance whatsoever on the overall plan. Yes, the computer science story was good, but this story is about much more and is entirely biased. We need to figure out a new paradigm with the Times. This level of bias can't be ignored. Either starve them or reason with them or something else -- but this is ridiculous

Her story in today's paper was very good so I think she felt the need to criticize to balance it out. But, she didn't even bother to include one positive quote, and she had plenty of validators thrown her way today.

De Blasio's Plan to Lift Poor Schools Comes With High Costs and Big Political Risks

NY TIMES - Kate Taylor

<http://www.nytimes.com/2015/09/17/nyregion/de-blasios-plan-to-lift-poor-schools-comes-with-high-costs-and-big-political-risks.html>

There was $75 million a year for second-grade reading specialists. Advanced Placement classes got $51 million. Every eighth grader can take algebra thanks to $19 million. And $15 million was proposed to provide more than 16,000 students with dedicated counselors from sixth through 12th grade.

On Wednesday, Mayor Bill de Blasio made his biggest commitment yet to his education philosophy. He announced a half-dozen programs that focus on New York City's poorest students, in a speech that framed the proposals as a way to address income inequality, a touchstone issue of his administration.

The cost of Mr. de Blasio's programs is high, and the political risks are great. Republicans in the State Legislature are already skeptical of the mayor's approach to education, and the results of his new programs will not be known for years. In June, the Legislature extended the mayor's control of schools by only one year, meaning that he has to go back to Albany next year to request an extension. (The Legislature had given former Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg control for seven years, then a renewal for six.)

In his speech, Mr. de Blasio argued that this investment in the city's struggling schools was a moral imperative.

"There is a tale of two cities in our schools, and we simply don't accept it," he said, reprising the theme of his campaign. "Each and every child, in each and every classroom, deserves a future that isn't limited by their ZIP code."

But many questions remain about how these programs will work and what the impact will be on the school system.

The city is already redirecting $113.5 million a year in existing education funding to its previously announced effort to add social services and improve results at the city's 94 lowest-performing schools, according to the city's Independent Budget Office.

City Hall said that the funding for the $186 million commitment laid out on Wednesday, which also includes computer science instruction in every school, will come from new revenues that they are anticipating based on financial projections.

But if the economy slowed down, the city would have to choose between backing off these programs or making cuts elsewhere. Mr. de Blasio could risk turning off voters if parents saw class sizes grow or extracurricular activities shrink further.

Leonie Haimson, the executive director of Class Size Matters, an organization that advocates smaller classes, was disappointed with the mayor's speech.

"Where is the research that shows that these initiatives would narrow the achievement gap, as class size reduction has been proven to do?" she said. "De Blasio made many promises during his campaign to parents and other voters to lower class size that he now appears to have forgotten completely."

David C. Bloomfield, a professor of education leadership at Brooklyn College and the CUNY Graduate Center, called Mr. de Blasio's speech "a feel-good parade of accomplishments and helpful initiatives" that was meant to bolster his chances for renewal of mayoral control of schools and re-election.

He said it was striking that, in a speech titled "Equity and Excellence," there was no mention of the high degree of racial segregation in New York City schools and ways to combat it.

Mr. de Blasio did try to inoculate himself against critics who adhere to Mr. Bloomberg's education approach. In contrast with the Bloomberg administration, the current mayor opposes closing schools that perform poorly, except as a last resort. While Mr. Bloomberg was on a constant, and largely unsuccessful, mission to fire teachers he considered subpar, Mr. de Blasio has had a more amicable relationship with the city teachers' union.

But he said on Wednesday that his administration had "helped 660 educators find their way out of the New York City school system," from April 2014 to April 2015. Asked to elaborate, the Department of Education said that the number included teachers who had been fired or denied tenure, and who resigned while facing disciplinary action.

"This shows we are willing and able to make the change that's necessary," Mr. de Blasio said. "Where it's needed, we will replace school leadership or staff to transform a school if they cannot improve with our tailored and targeted support."

Mr. de Blasio, who has clashed with charter school supporters, also announced a $5-million-a-year program under which district and charter schools can share practices.

One prominent pro-charter group, Families for Excellent Schools, was not satisfied, arguing that Mr. de Blasio's aversion to more charter schools was cutting off an avenue of opportunity for poor families.

"At the current rate, all New York City students won't be able to read at grade level until 2051," the group's chief executive, Jeremiah Kittredge, said in a statement. "The incremental change proposed today won't fix New York City's education inequality."

Mr. de Blasio set a number of long-term goals during the speech, including increasing the four-year high school graduation rate to 80 percent from 68 percent by 2026 (by which point he will have been out of office for at least four years).

Some of the goals he set on Wednesday may be even more ambitious.

"Excellence and achievement cannot, should not and will not discriminate in New York City," he said, adding that "we have to make sure success is as common in East New York as it is on the Upper East Side."

Read this piece carefully, and I think it shows my fears were justified. Yes, it's good that I sound reasonable and am in fact being reasonable. But look at what's already starting to happen with the price tag. Cuomo has laid a trap and we're walking into it. If we we offer $200m more a year, he will dismiss it as too little and claim we're the problem. We are letting him dictate the terms. We have to correct this before we create a new defeat for ourselves. NO ONE on this team should say anything more on this issue publicly until we sort out our longer term strategy. If we don't get this right, Cuomo will make the $3B figure the litmus test and we will be huge losers here

DAILY NEWS – Editorial

<http://www.nydailynews.com/opinion/editorial-bill-bill-due-mta-article-1.2365180>

Expressing a willingness to increase New York City support of the state-run subway system if basic conditions are met, Mayor de Blasio Thursday offered a path toward resolving the city-state transit funding war.

Gov. Cuomo, legislative leaders and Metropolitan Transportation Authority Chairman Tom Prendergast should weigh hte terms de Blasio spelled out to the Daily News Editorial Board and say: Mr. Mayor, let's talk more.

As for de Blasio, he needs to prepare to substantially up the city's contribution to the MTA without imposing new taxes.

Cuomo is charged with funding the MTA's $26.8 billion, 10-year plan for keeping mass transit in working condition, plus pay for mega-projects like the Second Ave. subway. But, after counting federal aid, the governor is more than $11 billion short.

To break that nut, Cuomo has promised to draw $8.3 billion from still-unidentified sources and is dunning de Blasio for $3 billion — five times the $600 million the mayor had offered up.

The mayor says he may agree to go higher if he is assured that the state's commitment is real and is not set up in a way that could drive up fares. He also wants a voice in how the MTA spends the money.

Prendergast responded that, pending next year's legislative session, where all this will be hashed out, de Blasio could give conditional approval to providing any particular amount of money.

The two positions should be easily reconcilable, with de Blasio markedly boosting city support and both men agreeing that the mayor would turn over the cash only if Albany meets his terms.

The MTA, a state agency, has two primary sources of revenue: fares and the collection of taxes and fees, such as a levy on real estate transactions and a surcharge on every yellow cab ride.

Riders have been paying more under a deal with Albany: Fares would go up biannually in line with inflation and the state would add however much money the MTA needed to operate.

The arrangement has been great for Albany. With MTA taxes and fees rolling in, it siphoned $270 million out of the agency over the past four years, a maneuver that de Blasio cites as cause to question what the governor and Legislature would do if he commits $3 billion.

At the same time, the mayor questions how Cuomo intends to raise his promised $8.3 billion. If the governor were to have the MTA borrow the money, the authority would all but certainly have to tap the riders to pay it back — which would likely push up fares.

The governor on Thursday evening ruled out MTA borrowing and said his plan called for drawing the $8.3 billion out of the state general fund over 10 years — a commitment that should relieve de Blasio's worry about a threat to the fare.

The state of play, then, is that de Blasio, Cuomo and Prendergast should easily come into sync on the fundamentals that the state's general budget will fund the capital plan at a set level in partnership with specified contributions from the city.

De Blasio's share will surely be larger than the $600 million he's offered. In the past two capital plans, the city has footed roughly 11% of the bill, a level that would put de Blasio in Cuomo's $3 billion ballpark. Soon enough, with his conditions met, the mayor will have to talk money.

The state wants us reacting, dragging this out and making us passive rather than active, and they do not want us proposing sensible solutions

Here is a draft of what I propose sending to Tom Prendergast this morning, following up on your comments at the Daily News. Senior team is comfortable, but let me know if you have any changes you'd like to see. Once you are OK, IGA can begin working with our allies to build a groundswell of support.

Dear Tom:

As you know, Mayor de Blasio has long recognized the importance of the MTA to the future of New York. Throughout his campaign and his mayoralty, he has made clear his support for the work of the agency and the need for its capital program to receive the support it needs to address to create the platform for the economic growth and opportunity essential to the entire State. He has urged full funding of the MTA capital program again and again, despite that fact that the current plan is modest in its ambition.

New Yorkers recognize the agency's importance. Our riders, toll-payers and taxpayers supply three-quarters of the MTA's revenues, more than their fair share of the burden despite the many other challenges facing our city. Spending nearly $11 billion a year on the agency's operations is a clear sign of our citizens' commitment to the mission of mass transit.

This City government recognizes the agency's importance too. We have supported the MTA and its capital program in every way. We stood together at the opening of the 7-train expansion, a commitment of $2.4 billion of City funding. The City recently dedicated another $200 million to transit improvements at the Vanderbilt Corridor development. And most recently, meeting your full request of us at the time, the Mayor and Council increased the City's capital contribution to the MTA to the highest level in many years.

Yet not every level of government has stepped up to meet its responsibility. Over the past five years, over $270 million of funds that should have been available to the MTA have been diverted to other State budget needs. Over the past 20 years, the City has contributed more than twice as much to the MTA capital program as New York State, despite the fact that the MTA is a State agency with a clear state and regional mission since its founding in the Sixties. And most recently, despite talk of additional funding, not a single dollar of new funding for the agency has been specified by New York State, let alone allocated to its budget.

It is time to speak honestly about the MTA and its future once and for all. The Mayor will recommend to the City Council that additional capital contributions be made to support the MTA's capital program as soon as three specific conditions are met:

1. The sources of any additional funds to be committed by New York State are specifically identified, and those funds are provided in ways that do not reduce any other funding for the MTA or the City or increase the likelihood of fare hikes on already-burdened City residents;
2. Funds otherwise intended for the MTA that have been previously been diverted by New York State are returned to the MTA, in addition to any other State funding to be provided, and no further diversions will be permitted; and,
3. The MTA capital budget process will be revised to give the City of New York approval to allocate funds among projects located in the city in order to insure the needs of the residents who pay for the vast preponderance of the MTA's operations are addressed.

These are simple and obviously fair conditions to be met before additional City funds are provided. How could any Mayor consider significant new funding without knowing the rest of the Five Year Plan is in fact funded, that City funding will not be simply diverted to other State purposes, and that City funds will be used to address the priorities of City residents?

I assume the MTA would support each of these requirements. As chief operating officer of the agency, I am sure you do not welcome diversion of funds you had every right to expect would be available to you. As Chair of the Board, I know you could not vote for any financial plan based on funds that have not been specified as new, real and committed. And as someone who cares deeply about New York, I'm sure you would want to insure the MTA capital program reflects the priorities identified by the elected representative of the people of the city.

These are the pre-requisites to insuring this Five Year Capital Plan is funded. And perhaps just as importantly, these are guidelines that should be followed by both State and City for all future capital plans.

As the Mayor laid out in his OneNYC plan, we have a broad vision for the City (and the entire region it supports), one that reflects our commitment to being a strong, just, sustainable, and resilient community. Our competitors around the world recognize that strong transit systems are key to their future – and so should we.

The Mayor and our entire team look forward to working with you and rest of the officials who hold the MTA in their trust as we create a transit system that will be the platform for a stronger and more just state and region. Millions of New Yorkers depend on us to get this right.

Sincerely,

Anthony E. Shorris

Mr. Mayor — If you have time and want to review off topic for Brian Lehrer before Peter and I see you:

MTA(MTA said City had to contribute more or cuts would be in store. Called on Mayor to provide more funding)

Q: Are you going to give MTA more funding for capital improvements?

— New Yorkers rely on the MTA - and fund three-quarters of its operations. Yet the City has no control over this State agency.
— Still, even after increasing our capital contribution this spring, we are ready to recommend even further City support -- but won't blindly hand over a check given the State's track record.

— So we are asking the State to meet 3 simple and fair conditions before even more City taxpayer funds are provided:

- (1) make clear where this promised State funding will come from, so we know it won't be on the backs of riders and City residents;
- (2) return the $270M the Governor has raided from the MTA and ensure no further diversions; and
- (3) give NYC approval over where capital funds are allocated in the city.

Older Talking Points:

- NYC residents are not getting what they are giving to the MTA and we aren't going to blindly hand money over
- NYC taxpayers don't get back what they put in to the MTA
- We need to know what the Governor and MTA's plans are and assurances that they don't intend to push fare increases that hurt working people
- Past 25 years, the City government put in more than twice as much support for the MTA capital program as the State government.

Mr. Mayor — If you have time and want to review off topic for Brian Lehrer before Peter and I see you:

MTA(MTA said City had to contribute more or cuts would be in store. Called on Mayor to provide more funding)

Q: Are you going to give MTA more funding for capital improvements?

— New Yorkers rely on the MTA - and fund three-quarters of its operations. Yet the City has no control over this State agency.

— Still, even after increasing our capital contribution this spring, we are ready to recommend even further City support -- but won't blindly hand over a check given the State's track record.

— So we are asking the State to meet 3 simple and fair conditions before even more City taxpayer funds are provided:

(1) make clear where this promised State funding will come from, so we know it won't be on the backs of riders and City residents;

(2) return the $270M the Governor has raided from the MTA and ensure no further diversions; and

(3) give NYC approval over where capital funds are allocated in the city.

Older Talking Points:

-NYC residents are not getting what they are giving to the MTA and we aren't going to blindly hand money over

-NYC taxpayers don't get back what they put in to the MTA

-We need to know what the Governor and MTA's plans are and assurances that they don't intend to push fare increases that hurt working people

-Past 25 years, the City government put in more than twice as much support for the MTA capital program as the State government.

TIMES SQUARE TASK FORCE(Task Force met yesterday and meeting again today -- made clear yesterday that consensus to complete plazas)

Q: Why didn't your task force meet sooner? Are you going to tear up Times Square?

-Past month members of the administration and task force members have had many conversations

-All working together to advance common goals for Times Square

-Group will continue to meet and have recommendations by October

ON PLAZAS

-General consensus among task force to complete construction of the Times Square plaza and then evaluate

-Strong interest from members in cordoning off the cartoon characters

MMR HOMELESSNESS (Post on slight increases in majority of indicators - following trends)

Q: Reports yesterday from homeless agency shows increases in homelessness?

- Homelessness increasing over past 20 yrs -- more than 100%
- Systematically rebuilt programs, showing more results
- Over 15k moved out of shelter; 20k enrolled in prevention programs
- Clergy helping with Safe Haven beds
- NYC Safe/NYPD retraining

POLL NUMBERS (Lowest they've been and voters say Cuomo/MBDB feud hurts NY)

Q: How do you explain drops in your polling numbers? When are you and Governor going to move beyond this feud?

- Here's what really matters: safest summer in over 20 years; more affordable housing than at any point in last 40 years; 177K new jobs since I took office; pre-K for all
- If there are ways to productively work with this Gov we will
- But we will continue to speak out if NYC getting short end of stick

JAMES BLAKE (Blake has called for the officer involved in his arrest to no longer be on the force plus calls for investment in appropriate training of officers)

Q-Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

- Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake
- Focused now on resolving this issue
- Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world

FURTHER POINTS IF NEEDED

- The incident under investigation & at the end we will determine who can be held accountable & what can be learned to further prevent incidents like this
- Our administration has already invested nearly $29 million to retrain about 22,000 uniformed service members and thousands more will be training in coming months
- We are focused on neighborhood policing and CCRB complaints are at the lowest levels in nearly 15 years

UBER TRAFFIC STUDY (Uber releasing analysis saying it'll take more than 4 months to do a comprehensive traffic analysis)

Q: Are you starting up your fight with Uber again? Do they have a point that 4 months isn't enough time?

- Administration, City Council, AND Uber all agreed to 4 month study
- Uber SAID it would provide City with new data—like where/when they drop off their riders
- Plenty of time to complete the study and it would be a shame if Uber went back on this agreement

JOBS (New data from Bureau of Labor Statistics showing NYC unemployment dropped to 5.4%)

Q. What's behind this?

- Good news. Unemployment at 5.4%—lowest since June 2008 (pre-Lehman Brothers)
- Dropped 2.7% since we took office with 177,000 new private sector jobs added
- Wages finally going up again, though still below pre-recession peak
- Our focus on good jobs, investing growing sectors like tech with good paying jobs—link to Computer Science in all schools

HRC

Q: When are you endorsing?

- Excited to see HRC discuss the critical issues facing the country- Progressive priorities like paid family leave
- Have been clear that she has put out a strong platform, but I would like to see a fuller vision laid out

BIDEN

Q-You recently suggested Biden should not run, why do you think he should stay out of the field?

- Great deal of respect for VP and never said he should not run
- What I have been clear on is that we have enough great candidates in the field

DN ED BOARD (You told the DN ed board you want to spend more time talking with NYers about yourself and what your administration has done)

Q-Do you think you haven't successfully communicated your work? Are you essentially campaigning for a second term?

- Focused on speaking to New Yorkers, answering their questions, and discussing their concerns
- Spent almost two years building an infrastructure and putting programs in place, now I'd like to speak with New York about that work and how it impacts the city

Expecting a middling/negative NYT editorial on education speech. Brent's historic view: we should be replicating what Eva Moskowitz is doing because her scores are higher, we didn't announce new steps to fire bad teachers.

I've taken a run at him. We've sent our top-level validators at him, and DK is getting DOE brass (Josh or Carmen) on phone for a quick chat.

Doing our best but Brent is not movable.

Attached is what Peter Monica and I are emailing to mayor shortly for this week. Just need to plug in home bases for pope.

Send any thoughts soonest if u have. Would like to send to mayor by 130 or 2.

Peter also is going to write a consolidated one page cheat sheet since this is three pages and mayor always wants shorter. We will use the cheat sheet for day of .

Pope:

Home Bases

Q+A

What does the Pope's visit mean for NYC?

- Biggest voice on income inequality
- Many of the initiatives we have put in place in NYC highlights the Pope's focus to pull people out of poverty
- Housing, education, services to help individuals exit homelessness

What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

- He's in unique position to talk about how these aren't partisan issues – but critical human issues

Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

- Would be a shame if they boycott his speech and I hope everyone plans to listen to his message

When Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

- Apples/oranges.
- GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political.
- The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global leader and the world's conscious

HRC:

Home Bases

- Excited to see her discussing critical issues facing the Country
- Focused on many progressive priorities like paid family leave and closing carried interest
- I've been clear that I want to see the full vision of what is a strong platform

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

- Always said she has unequaled experience & great progressive track record
- Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race
- No hard and fast timeline

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

- Don't pretend my endorsement is worth any more or less than other endorsements.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

- No test. Waiting to see full and bold solutions to income inequality
- Liked what I've heard.
- She is speaking big & tackling important issues

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

- Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

- Not going to get into details of private conversations, but I talk with her and her team from time to time.

I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." (LISTS ISSUES) How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

- Few more questions about trade & min wage, but she's unveiled impressive progressive vision from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

-No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness– like closing carried interest loophole.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

-I'm out of the campaign manager business.

-As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time.

-When she talks about those things, she's very persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP, but the field has excellent candidates right now.

Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

-I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying.

-Forceful voice on income inequality.

-I'm not going to read tea leaves, but confident Dems will have strong nominee who will win

SANDERS

You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

Still listening for the full vision of the candidates on income inequality

How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are? Have you talked to him? Can he win?

-Many Dems talking about income inequality & offering bold solutions – and that’s good for America.

-Don’t get into private conversations.

-All I know is that Dems will win on solutions to income inequality

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

-Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole

-His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election? Endorse his opponent? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I’m focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world

TPA

You’ve been criticized for spending too much time on national issues. You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We’re doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

-Need partners in Albany AND Washington

-For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

-There’s nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

LOW POLLS

How do you respond to dipping poll numbers and voters saying your feud with the Governor hurts NY?

-Here is what matters: NYC just had the safest summer in 20 years, we’ve built more affordable housing than at any point in the last 40 years, added 177,000 new jobs, and provided full day pre-K for more than 60,000 four-year-olds

-If there is a way to work productively with this Governor, we will. But New Yorkers need to get their fair share from our State and I'll continue to say that

JAMES BLAKE

Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

-Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake

-Focused now on resolving these issues

-Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world

The Nassau Suffolk Westchester pieces are really compelling - the cost of east side access and metro north capital is huge and they are being asked to contribute nothing. That feels like a piece worth moving as part of an overall plan.

Subject: MTA Facts

Someone did this for me. There's a lot here for "offensive" facts we could use while we are arguing MTA needs to be "fixed" before city pours money into it.

City Residents Pay More Than Their Fair Share of MTA Operating Revenues,

While Service Deteriorates And MTA Waste Increases

The State Needs to Focus on Improving Service, Not Just Squeezing More Money Out of NYC Residents for Declining Service

Subway riders pay a significantly larger share of the costs of operating the subway than LIRR and Metro North customers pay for their system.

MTA subway riders pay 60% of operating costs. LIRR customers pay 47% and Metro-North pay 57%. Source: MTA July Financial Plan 2016-2019 Volume I, pg 7. (“MTA Financial Plan”).

The share paid by subway riders has increased dramatically in recent years. In 2008, riders paid 52% of operating costs. The MTA predicted it would decline to 47%. Instead the share paid by riders has increased to 60%. Source: 2008 MTA Financial Plan, Volume 2. Every percent increase is about $85 million dollars cost to subway riders.

The financial support by NYC residents extends to the state and regional taxes that support MTA as whole.

According to the Citizens Budget Commission, New York City residents pay over $4.2 billion of the $6 billion in dedicated regional MTA taxes. NYC employers pay 73 percent of the MTA’s $1.3 billion regional payroll tax - supporting LIRR and Metro North, not just the city subways and buses.

Source: Funding the MTA Capital Plan: Avoiding a False Choice, Carol Kellerman, CBC, July 2015

NYC subway riders pay -by far- the largest share of operating costs of almost any transit system in the country - 2x the national average; including paying 50 percent more than NJ path commuters.

Sources: Average national share paid by riders: 33% - National Transit

NYCT has “the third highest so-called farebox recovery ratio for such US systems, according to the Federal Transit Administration”. WSJ, Andrew Tangel, Nov. 2014

NJ Path commuter share of burden: 42.8%

Other cities compared to NYC: 2010 Farebox Recovery Ratio; Presentation by Federal Transit Administration from 2010 data, page 21. Most riders pay 20-40% in big city transit systems. NYC at 70%. Chicago at 55% for comparison.

Clyde Haberman, NYT, May 25, 2011 "the comparable percentages are appreciably lower for suburban rail lines and the authority's other divisions. Not only that, but the burden is also lighter for subway and bus riders in other American cities. Statistics kept by the Federal Transit Administration put it in the range of 20 to 45 percent in Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, Philadelphia and Washington.”

Although they already pay among the highest percentage of operating costs in the nation, MTA customers are being asked to pay over a billion dollars in additional fare increases in in the current operating plan - on top of hundreds of millions from the 2015 fare. That's a 12 percent increase in subway fares in a 5 year period.

Source MTA Financial Plan, Vol. I, page III-I.

Worse, only a fraction of the fare increase goes to service improvements. The MTA plan contains just $183 million in service improvements for the subway and bus systems- over five years! Compared with almost $2 billion in fare increases for 2015 - 2019.

Source: 183 million for service improvements in 5 year operating budget. MTA Financial Plan, page I-3.

So where do all those increases go? To MTA Headquarters for one thing. In 2012 MTA headquarters expenses were an already astonishing -and bloated- $400 million. In 2015, MTA says that number will rise to over $900 million - more than double in 3 years. Between 2015 and 2019 MTA headquarters will spend almost $4 billion on itself - over 20 times more for

MTA bureaucrats than for service improvements.

Source: November 2013 Financial Plan; July 2015 Financial Plan, page I-5

And the MTA admits it has no real plan to achieve hundreds of millions in targeted savings, without which fares will rise even more. The MTA operating budget relies on almost $1.5 billion in “phantom savings”.

For 2015 for example, the MTA targeted 1.3 billion in savings. According to the July Financial Plan, MTA had only identified $45 million in savings of the $1.3 billion. For the 2017 plan - when subway riders would get hit with yet another fare hike- MTA says they need $1.6 billion in savings, but have only come up with $76 million. Source: Financial Plan, Vol. 1, page I-3.

While riders pay billions in fares every year for the subway - with much of it diverted to waste - the contribution from New York State to operating the subways is a just $158 million a year - by any measure an infinitesimal portion of the $8.5 billion operating budget.

Source: July 2015 Financial Plan, Volume II, Page 62.
State operating assistance.

To top it off, subway performance has decreased markedly according to the MTA’s own data - while LIRR and MNR have much higher performance rates.

On time performance in the last year has fallen in the subways from 75% to 70%. Meanwhile, LIRR and Metro North have 91 and 93 percent on time ratings. Source: MTA Performance Dashboard

The bottom line: Subway riders shoulder a far larger burden than suburban riders, and one of the largest burdens of any system in the nation. Fare increases are going to MTA mismanagement instead of service improvements. And subway performance continues to deteriorate.

The MTA Capital program is important. But lets be clear: 74% of the last capital budget was unspent by the end of 2014 - the last year of the last capital plan. We have plenty of opportunity to discuss how to salvage troubled mega-projects - whose completion is years away. So in the meantime lets focus on improving the service for which New Yorkers are paying record amounts. Lets talk about ensuring that the burden on NYC subway riders is no more than that of suburban commuters. And lets get the basics right - trains that run on time, with equipment and stations that are clean, safe and comfortable. We're not talking about platinum projects like multi-billion dollar bridges and airport halls. Meanwhile, the subways are underfunded and the riders are overpaying compared to their suburban counterparts and other cities. We need a real commitment from the state on operating funds, on reducing waste, and improving service; I look forward to that discussion.

Optional Counter-proposal: Its clear you can't run the subways from Albany. New York City Transit (NYCT) can best be run in New York City by New York City for New York City. . The City proposes to assume full operational control of the subways, by returning NYCT to a City authority (as it originally was); In return the City will FULLY FUND not only its current portion but also the states full share of operating assistance attributable to the NYCT.

MTA five year plan assumes $158 million in state operating assistance annually. The city already matches this amount. July 2015 Financial Plan, Volume II, Page 62.

Capital

The State has proposed an increase in the City's contribution to the Capital Plan - yet the plan includes billions in spending for LIRR and Metro North commuters and not a cent from Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester,

Rockland, Putnam or Connecticut. New York City is the ONLY locality making a direct contribution to the capital plan.

Before discussing additional NYC contributions, regional governments need to step up. All sourcing from MTA 2015-19 Capital Plan.

By the end of the last capital plan, 73% of funds were UNSPENT. So lets have a deliberative process instead of gamesmanship and false threats about projects being threatened. If anything is threatening MTA capital projects, its MTA's failure -and the states disinterest - to manage projects with are billions over budget and literally decades behind. Source: IBO, Tracking the Pace of Spending Under MTA Capital Plans, June 2015. "As of December 31, 2014, only $8.5 billion (27 percent) of the 2010-2014 plan total had been spent".

MTA's mega capital projects are deeply over budget and behind schedule, with little accountability from the state.

The Governor, notoriously intolerant of projects that take too long and cost too much has been notably silent on the billions in cost overruns and decades of delay when it comes to MTA's largest projects.

Nassau and Suffolk commuters see $5.7 billion in the capital plan for LIRR improvements (including East Side Access). Metro North commuters from Westchester, Rockland, Putnam and the state of Connecticut see $2.5 billion in improvements. None of these localities make a contribution to the $8.3 billion in capital spending that benefit areas outside NYC.

Any evaluation of capital contributions must include the entire region - not just NYC. NYC is the ONLY locality making contributions to the capital plan.

Key projects are billions over budget and years behind schedule:

East Side Access - A project primarily of benefit to Long Island Railroad Commuters, ESA is 150% over budget and 14 years late.

Now $6.4 billion over the initial budget with project completion has been delayed to 2023. Neither Nassau nor Suffolk County contribute any direct support to this project designed as a convenience for Long Island Commuters.

The state says they need $2.6 billion in the Capital Plan to complete the project - but state estimates have never been accurate.

Source: More Delays and Rising Costs for Project Connecting LIRR to Grand Central, NYT, Jan 2014.

LIRR: In addition to East Side Access, the capital plan allocates $3.1 billion for LIRR improvements, for a total of $6.6 billion for Long Islanders. Neither Nassau nor Suffolk make a capital contribution.

Metro North: The capital plan calls for $2.5 billion for Metro North projects to benefit Westchester, northern suburb and Connecticut commuters. Neither the suburban counties nor the state of Connecticut make a capital contribution.

Second Avenue Subway: New Yorkers have been promised a 2nd Ave subway since 1919. Phase one of the project, from 96th to 63rd St, is due for completion in 2017 and is already funded. Phase 2, to 125th street, is estimated by MTA to initially require $1.5 billion in capital - less funding than The full project is to lower Manhattan could be 2029 or beyond. No funding is allocated in the current MTA capital plan for completion of the line.

Subject: MTA Facts

Someone did this for me. There's a lot here for "offensive" facts we could use while we are arguing MTA needs to be "fixed" before city pours money into it.

City Residents Pay More Than Their Fair Share of MTA Operating Revenues, While Service Deteriorates And MTA Waste Increases

The State Needs to Focus on Improving Service, Not Just Squeezing More Money Out of NYC Residents for Declining Service

Subway riders pay a significantly larger share of the costs of operating the subway than LIRR and Metro North customers pay for their system.

MTA subway riders pay 60% of operating costs. LIRR customers pay 47% and Metro-North pay 57%. Source: MTA July Financial Plan 2016-2019 Volume I, pg 7. ("MTA Financial Plan").

The share paid by subway riders has increased dramatically in recent years. In 2008, riders paid 52% of operating costs. The MTA predicted it would decline to 47%. Instead the share paid by riders has increased to 60%. Source: 2008 MTA Financial Plan, Volume 2. Every percent increase is about $85 million dollars cost to subway riders.

The financial support by NYC residents extends to the state and regional taxes that support MTA as whole. According to the Citizens Budget Commission, New York City residents pay over $4.2 billion of the $6 billion in dedicated regional MTA taxes. NYC employers pay 73 percent of the MTA's $1.3 billion regional payroll tax - supporting LIRR and Metro North, not just the city subways and buses.

Source: Funding the MTA Capital Plan: Avoiding a False Choice, Carol Kellerman, CBC, July 2015

NYC subway riders pay -by far- the largest share of operating costs of almost any transit system in the country - 2x the national average; including paying 50 percent more than NJ path commuters.

Sources: Average national share paid by riders: 33% - National Transit Database 2012, page 34, exhibit 46

NYCT has “the third highest so-called farebox recovery ratio for such US systems, according to the Federal Transit Administration”. WSJ, Andrew Tangel, Nov. 2014

NJ Path commuter share of burden: 42.8%

Other cities compared to NYC: 2010 Farebox Recovery Ratio; Presentation by Federal Transit Administration from 2010 data, page 21. Most riders pay 20-40% in big city transit systems. NYC at 70%. Chicago at 55% for comparison.

Clyde Haberman, NYT, May 25, 2011 "the comparable percentages are appreciably lower for suburban rail lines and the authority's other divisions. Not only that, but the burden is also lighter for subway and bus riders in other American cities. Statistics kept by the Federal Transit Administration put it in the range of 20 to 45 percent in Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, Philadelphia and Washington.”

Although they already pay among the highest percentage of operating costs in the nation, MTA customers are being asked to pay over a billion dollars in additional fare increases in in the current operating plan - on top of hundreds of millions from the 2015 fare. Thats a 12 percent increase in subway fares in a 5 year period.

Source MTA Financial Plan, Vol. I, page III-I.

Worse, only a fraction of the fare increase goes to service improvements. The MTA plan contains just $183 million in service improvements for the subway and bus systems- over five years! Compared with almost $2 billion in fare increases for 2015 - 2019.

Source: 183 million for service improvements in 5 year operating budget. MTA Financial Plan, page I-3.

So where do all those increases go? To MTA Headquarters for one thing. In 2012 MTA headquarters expenses were an already astonishing -and bloated- $400 million. In 2015, MTA says that number will rise to over $900 million - more than double in 3 years. Between 2015 and 2019 MTA headquarters will spend almost $4 billion on itself - over 20 times more for MTA bureaucrats than for service improvements.

Source: November 2013 Financial Plan; July 2015 Financial Plan, page I-5

And the MTA admits it has no real plan to achieve hundreds of millions in targeted savings, without which fares will rise even more. The MTA operating budget relies on almost $1.5 billion in “phantom savings”.

For 2015 for example, the MTA targeted 1.3 billion in savings. According to the July Financial Plan, MTA had only identified $45 million in savings of the $1.3 billion. For the 2017 plan - when subway riders would get hit with yet another fare hike- MTA says they need $1.6 billion in savings, but have only come up with $76 million. Source: Financial Plan, Vol. 1, page I-3.

While riders pay billions in fares every year for the subway - with much of it diverted to waste - the contribution from New York State to operating the subways is a just $158 million a year - by any measure an infinitesimal portion of the $8.5 billion operating budget.

Source: July 2015 Financial Plan, Volume II, Page 62.
State operating assistance.

To top it off, subway performance has decreased markedly according to the MTA’s own data - while LIRR and MNR have much higher performance rates.

On time performance in the last year has fallen in the subways from 75% to 70%. Meanwhile, LIRR and Metro North have 91 and 93 percent on time ratings. Source:

The bottom line: Subway riders shoulder a far larger burden than suburban riders, and one of the largest burdens of any system in the nation. Fare increases are going to MTA mismanagement instead of service improvements. And subway performance continues to deteriorate.

The MTA Capital program is important. But lets be clear: 74% of the last capital budget was unspent by the end of 2014 - the last year of the last capital plan. We have plenty of opportunity to discuss how to salvage troubled mega-projects - whose completion is years away. So in the meantime lets focus on improving the service for which New Yorkers are paying record amounts. Lets talk about ensuring that the burden on NYC subway riders is no more than that of suburban commuters. And lets get the basics right - trains that run on time, with equipment and stations that are clean, safe and comfortable. We're not talking about platinum projects like multi-billion dollar bridges and airport halls. Meanwhile, the subways are underfunded and the riders are overpaying compared to their suburban counterparts and other cities. We need a real commitment from the state on operating funds, on reducing waste, and improving service; I look forward to that discussion.

Optional Counter-proposal: Its clear you can't run the subways from Albany. New York City Transit (NYCT) can best be run in New York City by New York City for New York City. . The City proposes to assume full operational control of the subways, by returning NYCT to a City authority (as it originally was); In return the City will FULLY FUND not only its current portion but also the states full share of operating assistance attributable to the NYCT.

MTA five year plan assumes $158 million in state operating assistance annually. The city already matches this amount. July 2015 Financial Plan, Volume II, Page 62.

Capital

The State has proposed an increase in the City's contribution to the Capital Plan - yet the plan includes billions in spending for LIRR and Metro North commuters and not a cent from Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester, Rockland, Putnam or Connecticut. New York City is the ONLY locality making a direct contribution to the capital plan. Before discussing additional NYC contributions, regional governments need to step up. All sourcing from MTA 2015-19 Capital Plan.

By the end of the last capital plan, 73% of funds were UNSPENT. So lets have a deliberative process instead of gamesmanship and false threats about projects being threatened. If anything is threatening MTA capital projects, its MTA's failure -and the states disinterest - to manage projects with are billions over budget and literally decades behind. Source: IBO, Tracking the Pace of Spending Under MTA Capital Plans, June 2015. "As of December 31, 2014, only $8.5 billion (27 percent) of the 2010-2014 plan total had been spent".

MTA's mega capital projects are deeply over budget and behind schedule, with little accountability from the state. The Governor, notoriously intolerant of projects that take too long and cost too much has been notably silent on the billions in cost overruns and decades of delay when it comes to MTA's largest projects.

Nassau and Suffolk commuters see $5.7 billion in the capital plan for LIRR improvements (including East Side Access). Metro North commuters from Westchester, Rockland, Putnam and the state of Connecticut see $2.5

billion in improvements. None of these localities make a contribution to the $8.3 billion in capital spending that benefit areas outside NYC.

Any evaluation of capital contributions must include the entire region - not just NYC. NYC is the ONLY locality making contributions to the capital plan.

Key projects are billions over budget and years behind schedule:

East Side Access - A project primarily of benefit to Long Island Railroad Commuters, ESA is 150% over budget and 14 years late. Now $6.4 billion over the initial budget with project completion has been delayed to 2023. Neither Nassau nor Suffolk County contribute any direct support to this project designed as a convenience for Long Island Commuters. The state says they need $2.6 billion in the Capital Plan to complete the project - but state estimates have never been accurate.

Source: More Delays and Rising Costs for Project Connecting LIRR to Grand Central, NYT, Jan 2014.

LIRR: In addition to East Side Access, the capital plan allocates $3.1 billion for LIRR improvements, for a total of $6.6 billion for Long Islanders. Neither Nassau nor Suffolk make a capital contribution.

Metro North: The capital plan calls for $2.5 billion for Metro North projects to benefit Westchester, northern suburb and Connecticut commuters. Neither the suburban counties nor the state of Connecticut make a capital contribution.

Second Avenue Subway: New Yorkers have been promised a 2nd Ave subway since 1919. Phase one of the project, from 96th to 63rd St, is due for completion in 2017 and is already funded. Phase 2, to 125th street, is estimated by MTA to initially require $1.5 billion in capital - less funding than The full project is to lower Manhattan could be 2029 or beyond. No funding is allocated in the current MTA capital plan for completion of the line.

NYC is the only locality to contribute to the Capital Plan - even though $8.3 billion of the plan serves primarily suburban commuters. That is not sustainable.

Subject: MTA Facts

Someone did this for me. There's a lot here for "offensive" facts we could use while we are arguing MTA needs to be "fixed" before city pours money into it.

City Residents Pay More Than Their Fair Share of MTA Operating Revenues, While Service Deteriorates And MTA Waste Increases

The State Needs to Focus on Improving Service, Not Just Squeezing More Money Out of NYC Residents for Declining Service

Subway riders pay a significantly larger share of the costs of operating the subway than LIRR and Metro North customers pay for their system.

MTA subway riders pay 60% of operating costs. LIRR customers pay 47% and Metro-North pay 57%. Source: MTA July Financial Plan 2016-2019 Volume I, pg 7. ("MTA Financial Plan").

The share paid by subway riders has increased dramatically in recent years. In 2008, riders paid 52% of operating costs. The MTA predicted it would decline to 47%. Instead the share paid by riders has increased to 60%. Source: 2008 MTA Financial Plan, Volume 2. Every percent increase is about $85 million dollars cost to subway riders.

The financial support by NYC residents extends to the state and regional taxes that support MTA as whole.

According to the Citizens Budget Commission, New York City residents pay over $4.2 billion of the $6 billion in dedicated regional MTA taxes. NYC employers pay 73 percent of the MTA's $1.3 billion regional payroll tax - supporting LIRR and Metro North, not just the city subways and buses.

Source: Funding the MTA Capital Plan: Avoiding a False Choice, Carol Kellerman, CBC, July 2015

NYC subway riders pay -by far- the largest share of operating costs of almost any transit system in the country - 2x the national average; including paying 50 percent more than NJ path commuters.

Sources: Average national share paid by riders: 33% - National Transit Database 2012, page 34, exhibit 46

NYCT has “the third highest so-called farebox recovery ratio for such US systems, according to the Federal Transit Administration”. WSJ, Andrew Tangel, Nov. 2014

NJ Path commuter share of burden: 42.8%

Other cities compared to NYC: 2010 Farebox Recovery Ratio; Presentation by Federal Transit Administration from 2010 data, page 21. Most riders pay 20-40% in big city transit systems. NYC at 70%. Chicago at 55% for comparison.

Clyde Haberman, NYT, May 25, 2011 "the comparable percentages are appreciably lower for suburban rail lines and the authority's other divisions. Not only that, but the burden is also lighter for subway and bus riders in other American cities. Statistics kept by the Federal Transit Administration put it in the range of 20 to 45 percent in Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, Philadelphia and Washington.”

Although they already pay among the highest percentage of operating costs in the nation, MTA customers are being asked to pay over a billion dollars in additional fare increases in in the current operating plan - on top of hundreds of millions from the 2015 fare. Thats a 12 percent increase in subway fares in a 5 year period.

Source MTA Financial Plan, Vol. I, page III-I.

Worse, only a fraction of the fare increase goes to service improvements. The MTA plan contains just $183 million in service improvements for the subway and bus systems- over five years! Compared with almost $2 billion in fare increases for 2015 - 2019.

Source: 183 million for service improvements in 5 year operating budget. MTA Financial Plan, page I-3.

So where do all those increases go? To MTA Headquarters for one thing. In 2012 MTA headquarters expenses were an already astonishing -and bloated- $400 million. In 2015, MTA says that number will rise to over $900 million - more than double in 3 years. Between 2015 and 2019 MTA headquarters will spend almost $4 billion on itself - over 20 times more for MTA bureaucrats than for service improvements.

Source: November 2013 Financial Plan; July 2015 Financial Plan, page I-5

And the MTA admits it has no real plan to achieve hundreds of millions in targeted savings, without which fares will rise even more. The MTA operating budget relies on almost $1.5 billion in “phantom savings”.

For 2015 for example, the MTA targeted 1.3 billion in savings. According to the July Financial Plan, MTA had only identified $45 million in savings of the $1.3 billion. For the 2017 plan - when subway riders would get hit with yet another fare hike- MTA says they need $1.6 billion in savings, but have only come up with $76 million. Source: Financial Plan, Vol. 1, page I-3.

While riders pay billions in fares every year for the subway - with much of it diverted to waste - the contribution from New York State to operating the subways is a just $158 million a year - by any measure an infinitesimal portion of the $8.5 billion operating budget.

Source: July 2015 Financial Plan, Volume II, Page 62.

State operating assistance.

To top it off, subway performance has decreased markedly according to the MTA's own data - while LIRR and MNR have much higher performance rates.

On time performance in the last year has fallen in the subways from 75% to 70%. Meanwhile, LIRR and Metro North have 91 and 93 percent on time ratings. Source: MTA Performance Dashboard

The bottom line: Subway riders shoulder a far larger burden than suburban riders, and one of the largest burdens of any system in the nation. Fare increases are going to MTA mismanagement instead of service improvements. And subway performance continues to deteriorate.

The MTA Capital program is important. But lets be clear: 74% of the last capital budget was unspent by the end of 2014 - the last year of the last capital plan. We have plenty of opportunity to discuss how to salvage troubled mega-projects - whose completion is years away. So in the meantime lets focus on improving the service for which New Yorkers are paying record amounts. Lets talk about ensuring that the burden on NYC subway riders is no more than that of suburban commuters. And lets get the basics right - trains that run on time, with equipment and stations that are clean, safe and comfortable. We're not talking about platinum projects like multi-billion dollar bridges and airport halls. Meanwhile, the subways are underfunded and the riders are overpaying compared to their suburban counterparts and other cities. We need a real commitment from the state on operating funds, on reducing waste, and improving service; I look forward to that discussion.

Optional Counter-proposal: Its clear you can't run the subways from Albany. New York City Transit (NYCT) can best be run in New York City by New York City for New York City. . The City proposes to assume full operational control of the subways, by returning NYCT to a

City authority (as it originally was); In return the City will FULLY FUND not only its current portion but also the states full share of operating assistance attributable to the NYCT.

MTA five year plan assumes $158 million in state operating assistance annually. The city already matches this amount. July 2015 Financial Plan, Volume II, Page 62.

Capital

The State has proposed an increase in the City's contribution to the Capital Plan - yet the plan includes billions in spending for LIRR and Metro North commuters and not a cent from Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester, Rockland, Putnam or Connecticut. New York City is the ONLY locality making a direct contribution to the capital plan.

Before discussing additional NYC contributions, regional governments need to step up. All sourcing from MTA 2015-19 Capital Plan.

By the end of the last capital plan, 73% of funds were UNSPENT. So lets have a deliberative process instead of gamesmanship and false threats about projects being threatened. If anything is threatening MTA capital projects, its MTA's failure -and the states disinterest - to manage projects with are billions over budget and literally decades behind. Source: IBO, Tracking the Pace of Spending Under MTA Capital Plans, June 2015. "As of December 31, 2014, only $8.5 billion (27 percent) of the 2010-2014 plan total had been spent".

MTA's mega capital projects are deeply over budget and behind schedule, with little accountability from the state.

The Governor, notoriously intolerant of projects that take too long and cost too much has been notably silent on the billions in cost overruns and decades of delay when it comes to MTA's largest projects.

Nassau and Suffolk commuters see $5.7 billion in the capital plan for LIRR improvements (including East Side Access). Metro North commuters from Westchester, Rockland, Putnam and the state of Connecticut see $2.5 billion in improvements. None of these localities make a contribution to the $8.3 billion in capital spending that benefit areas outside NYC.

Any evaluation of capital contributions must include the entire region - not just NYC. NYC is the ONLY locality making contributions to the capital plan.

Key projects are billions over budget and years behind schedule:

East Side Access - A project primarily of benefit to Long Island Railroad Commuters, ESA is 150% over budget and 14 years late.

Now $6.4 billion over the initial budget with project completion has been delayed to 2023. Neither Nassau nor Suffolk County contribute any direct support to this project designed as a convenience for Long Island Commuters.

The state says they need $2.6 billion in the Capital Plan to complete the project - but state estimates have never been accurate.

Source: More Delays and Rising Costs for Project Connecting LIRR to Grand Central, NYT, Jan 2014.

LIRR: In addition to East Side Access, the capital plan allocates $3.1 billion for LIRR improvements, for a total of $6.6 billion for Long Islanders. Neither Nassau nor Suffolk make a capital contribution.

Metro North: The capital plan calls for $2.5 billion for Metro North projects to benefit Westchester, northern suburb and Connecticut commuters. Neither the suburban counties nor the state of Connecticut make a capital contribution.

Second Avenue Subway: New Yorkers have been promised a 2nd Ave subway since 1919. Phase one of the project, from 96th to 63rd St, is due for completion in 2017 and is already funded. Phase 2, to 125th street, is estimated by MTA to initially require $1.5 billion in capital - less funding than The full project is to lower Manhattan could be 2029 or beyond. No funding is allocated in the current MTA capital plan for completion of the line.

NYC is the only locality to contribute to the Capital Plan - even though $8.3 billion of the plan serves primarily suburban commuters. That is not sustainable.

1. Yes -- We are strategizing per your directive yesterday --- want to bring you a solid plan and not more seat of the pants ad hoc tactical plans.
2. We mobilized a lot of voices today to lay out for us. Council transpo committee did letter which will get press soon, other voices from state electeds to advocates out throughout day.
3. Still have elephant in room problem of too many strong potential allies needing to know what we believe is the best play for city and what we are willing to do / not do. Too many potential coalition/allies need this. (Back to #1).
4. Fyi: Getting all these potential validators in to city hall to listen and invest them this week to get to a bigger place. But that's part of the work in #1 as well.
5. Additional research operations in full effect.

MTA suggests it might apply cuts in city only
POLITICO NY – Dana Rubinstein
<http://www.capitalnewyork.com/article/albany/2015/09/8577423/mta-suggests-it-might-apply-cuts-city-only>

On Monday afternoon, the chairman of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority — an appointee of Gov. Andrew Cuomo — suggested that if Mayor Bill de Blasio failed to meet his demands for more financial support, he might apply cuts to just the city, rather than to services across the entire metropolitan region.

"I've directed the staff in finance and capital programs to incorporate all of the revisions that were part of the discussions with stakeholders, as well as to align with the current commitment of the city, at $657 million," said Tom Prendergast during the MTA's monthly finance meeting.

"I just want to clarify Mr. Chairman, a little more detail about what you are asking the staff to do here," interjected Polly Trottenberg, de Blasio's transportation commissioner and an MTA board member.

The overall size of the capital plan "would have to come down in cost and scope to align with the difference between the $3.2 billion and the $657 million," said Prendergast, referring to the difference between what the state wants and what the city has offered.

Trottenberg asked for just a little bit more clarity.

"We're looking at the urban portion of it, New York City Transit," said Prendergast, referring to the MTA subdivision that operates New York City subways and buses.

"But only within one jurisdiction?" asked Trottenberg.

"Yes, the urban portion," said Prendergast.

That's "punitive and pretty divisive," said Trottenberg.

She called for Prendergast to adopt a regional approach instead, since the MTA is a regional organization.

Prendergast, apparently backing away, said he'd direct his staff to do that, too.

As if to make sure, several board members sprang to Trottenberg's defense, including Mitchell Pally, who is from Long Island.

"I want to support Commissioner Trottenberg's request," he said. "While many of us represent outlying counties proudly, we also represent all of the riders of the system, regardless of where they came from or where they end up."

Every five years, the MTA formulates a plan to keep the region's mass transit system, including its subways and buses, in a state of good repair and expand it where needed.

Though the MTA board approved its plan last September, the state has yet to approve it.

In the meantime, the rhetoric surrounding the program has grown unusually bitter, and even spilled into normally feel-good events, like the ribbon-cutting for the city's first new subway station in 26 years.

Recent historical precedent had the city contributing about $100 million a year for five years, but the MTA last year asked the city to up its modest contribution to an also-modest $125 million.

After a good deal of suspense, de Blasio surprised transit advocates by agreeing to the MTA's demands.

The MTA, which the governor controls, responded by immediately upping the ante, from $657 million over the five years ($125 million a year plus some additional funding) to $3.2 billion.

The mayor has, so far, declined to meet the state's new request.

The capital program would put money towards things like replacing the Metrocard with a modern fare payment system, launching the second phase of the Second Avenue Subway up to 125th Street, and replacing the system's ancient signaling systems to allow trains to run more reliably and closer together.

But the increasingly nasty funding dispute between de Blasio and Cuomo has thrown the plan's future into question.

"My sense of frustration and concern about not having a program — because it is a year, this is the longest we've ever gone without a capital program — weighs on me very heavily," Prendergast said on Monday. "There are critical projects out there that need to go forward."

The governor's office had no comment.

Critics call new charter school ad 'racist'

POLITICO NY - Eliza Shapiro

<http://www.capitalnewyork.com/article/city-hall/2015/09/8577871/critics-call-new-charter-school-ad-racist>

A coalition of elected officials, community organizations and union-allied groups criticized a new Families for Excellent Schools ad Friday, accusing the pro-charter group of "race-baiting" in order to advance its political agenda.

The ad, first reported by POLITICO New York, is called "Tale of Two Boys" and argues that Mayor Bill de Blasio is forcing minority students into failing schools. It began running Friday, though it was not publicly promoted by FES.

The ad buy will cost FES about half a million dollars this week and will become a multimillion-dollar ad buy over the next few weeks, according to a source.

The ad contrasted the educations of a young white boy and a black boy in New York City, saying the white child would attend a good school and go to college while the black child would be trapped in a struggling school and never make it to college.

Bertha Lewis, the president of the Black Institute, called it "the most racist ad I've seen in my life."

"They found a way to make money and profit off little black boys and girls," she said. "They act as if they are here to save us."

Zakiyah Ansari, the advocacy director of the Alliance for Quality Education, made a similar argument. AQE is partially funded by city and state teachers' unions.

"They are using a black face to push their political agenda, and they make the assumption that all black people are poor," she said. "They used our children in a race-baiting commercial."

Some called on FES to remove the ad on Friday.

Brooklyn Assemblyman N. Nick Perry called on FES to "do the right thing" and pull the ad. Perry — who is also the chairman of the New York State Black, Puerto Rican, Hispanic and Asian Legislative Caucus — said he was "incensed over the use of blatant race baiting tactics to advance the agenda of FES."

Other elected officials also took issue with the ad.

Manhattan Borough President Gale Brewer accused FES in a statement of helping to "divert money, resources and space from our public schools ... into increasingly unaccountable private empires. The rhetoric of this ad, and the people and money behind it, are part of the problem."

New York City Council education committee chair Danny Dromm called the ad "highly divisive and harmful."

Representatives for three of New York's largest charter networks — KIPP, Uncommon, and Achievement First — did not respond to requests for comment about the ad.

A spokesperson for FES declined to comment.

East Coast Mayors Representing Over 12 Million People Blast Verizon: Stop Stalling, Start Building, High-Speed Internet – and Guarantee Good Phone Service to All Consumers

In Some Cities, Verizon Ignores Legislative and Contractual Buildout Requirements, In Others, Refuses to Build FiOS at all, While Letting Traditional Landline Network Deteriorate Everywhere

WASHINGTON- Mayors of 14 cities with over 12 million residents are fed up with Verizon. The Mayors expressed anger at Verizon's refusal to build its high-speed FiOS network at all in some cities while in others the company fails, to meet contractual and legal requirements to complete universal build-outs. The Mayors also expressed concern about Verizon's treatment of its workforce in ongoing contract negotiations.

In a letter to Verizon CEO Lowell McAdam, the Mayors called on the company to sit down to discuss ways the company can better serve customers and resolve disputes with the Verizon workers who are in the midst of a contract negotiation.

"As Mayors, we understand firsthand how vital Broadband is to the growth of our local economies and to nurturing a healthy, competitive marketplace in our state. Our residents use the Internet to search for jobs, build home-based businesses, educate their children and engage in the civic life of our cities.

"But consistently and increasingly, our consumers have complained that FiOS service is not available to them. These are not isolated complaints – there are millions of residents in communities throughout the Northeast who have been left without service, and with no plan or promise for future resolution," wrote the Mayors.

"At the same time, we are beginning to hear concerns that both in cities covered by a FiOS franchise or in which FiOS is still completely unavailable, Verizon has been abandoning the copper network and traditional landline customers are experiencing frequent service outages, delays in repairs and installations, and forced migration to the inferior VoiceLink product. As you know, the New York Public Service Commission stated in its recent Staff Assessment of Telecommunications in NY: 'In many areas of New York City, the legacy copper infrastructure is in such poor condition that copper failures due to weather conditions can cause long delays for service restoration and Commission service quality standards are missed,'" the letter continued.

In a sign of the growing frustration with Verizon's refusal to invest in its wired network, the letter was signed by the Mayors of New York, Pittsburgh, Newark, Jersey City, Buffalo, Worcester, Paterson, Syracuse, Lowell, Albany, Brockton, Trenton and Revere and the Democratic candidate for Mayor in Philadelphia.

The anger has been growing across the East Coast as Verizon systematically refuses to invest in its infrastructure. In August, it was the only major U.S. telecommunications company to turn down federal funding to build broadband in unserved, primarily rural, communities, leaving many residents in eight states and the District of Columbia without access to vital communications options. The company was offered $568 million over six years by the Federal government to bring broadband to 270,000 locations in Washington, DC, Delaware, Massachusetts, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Virginia.

In New York State, the company refuses to avail itself of Governor Cuomo's $500 million New New York Broadband Fund, which offers up to 50% subsidies to companies willing to build high-speed service in underserved areas. For years, Verizon has steadfastly refused to bring its high-speed internet service (or FiOS) to areas like Buffalo, Syracuse, Albany, Rome, Utica and numerous other upstate New York cities, as well as much of Eastern Suffolk. At a series of hearings held by New York State, elected officials from Buffalo, Syracuse, Albany, the North Country, the Southern Tier and the Hudson Valley decried the lack of FiOS in their communities.

Campaigns in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts have also called for FiOS to be built in their communities.

A damning audit of Verizon's FiOS rollout in New York City found that Verizon has failed to meet its promise to deliver high-speed fiber optic internet and television to everyone in the city who wanted it. During its negotiations for a city franchise, Verizon promised that the entire city would be wired with fiber optic cables by June 2014 and that after that date, everyone who wanted FiOS would get it within six months to a year. The audit found that despite claiming that it had wired the whole city by November 2014, Verizon systematically continues to refuse orders for service. The audit also found that Verizon stonewalled the audit process.

At the same time, Verizon has been letting its traditional phone network deteriorate. In a letter to the FCC it admitted that it had only spent $200 million or $3.50 per customer over the last seven years to maintain its copper landline network in eleven states and the District of Columbia. The Communications Workers of America filed letters in six states and Washington, DC calling on them to investigate whether Verizon was neglecting its responsibility.

De Blasio wants a constitutional amendment to overturn Citizens United?
That's what they said on CNN. Seems ironic since he has a big non-profit to tout his agenda. Is that accurate? What would it do to his Campaign for One New York?
