

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

September 27, 2018

Dear Requester,

This letter is in response to requests pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law received by this Office, seeking generally the following records:

Correspondence between the Office of the Mayor and Hilltop Public Solutions, AKPD Message & Media and Patrick Gaspard.

Due to the number of FOIL requests the Mayor's Office has received for similar communications, the documents being disclosed to you today may include materials that are outside the scope of your request.

The responsive records comprise:

- A. Material previously withheld in full or in part pursuant to the inter-agency exemption §87(2)(g).
 - Range: January 1, 2014 to December 31, 2016.
- B. Material previously produced in full or in part, or withheld in full.
 - Range: January 1, 2014 to December 31, 2016.
- C. Material responsive to requests not yet fulfilled, and thus not produced previously.
 - Range: January 1, 2017 to December 31, 2017.

Please note that some responsive materials have been redacted in part and several emails have been withheld in their entirety pursuant to Public Officers Law §87(2)(b). Some schedules have been redacted pursuant to Public Officers Law §87(2)(b). Please also note that some responsive material has been redacted in part pursuant to §87(2)(f).

Additionally, you will find a table containing the identities of those whose personal email addresses were redacted pursuant to Public Officers Law §87(2)(b), effectively concealing the identities of the senders and/or recipients. Please note that the Mayor's Office is not aware of all identities of email recipients and senders. Those email senders and recipients who could not be identified are marked as “Unknown” on the attached table.

You may appeal the determination with regard to this production in writing within thirty days by addressing such an appeal to foilappeal@cityhall.nyc.gov.

Sincerely,

Laura

I've attached the resume of someone I've worked with before who I really like and respect. I think she is worth considering for the Deputy Chief of Staff for operations role. She is smart, easy to work with and has really grown in the past couple of jobs. She knows both government and CH. Unfortunately she worked for Carol Robles in term 1 and was underutilized although I had her work on a couple of things for me and she was both loyal and did a great job. I mentored her best I could under the circumstances and actually recommended and helped her move on from CH so she could develop. And she has. She is a candidate for DCAS where I will advocate for her if you aren't interested. She is a West Indian woman of color.

Let me know how you want to proceed?

Peter

The kind of experience that you're looking for. And mature. Can do operations and public roles. If she's a good writer, meeting convener, organized and doesn't have a big ego - she could be perfect. But those "ifs" need to be drilled down on. This is very promising.

Does noonish NY time work for anyone on Sat?

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
January 13, 2014

UPCOMING GUIDANCE FOR FIRST LADY MICHELLE OBAMA

Wednesday, January 15, 2014

Washington, DC * 4:00 PM – On Wednesday, First Lady Michelle Obama will host a discussion with education stakeholders and a White House screening of The Inevitable Defeat of Mister and Pete, a coming of age story about two inner-city youth who are left to fend for themselves in the Bronx. Attendees scheduled to join the movie screening and discussion include college access organizations, youth organizations, high school teachers and counselors, and college students.

The movie screening will be followed by a group discussion about the challenges and best practices regarding education access in underserved communities. Senior Administration officials will moderate a large group discussion after remarks by the First Lady.

The event is part of the First Lady's ongoing efforts to speak directly to young people about committing to their education so that they can create a better future for themselves and their country. In particular, Mrs. Obama's remarks and discussion will support the Administration's focus on empowering youth to achieve higher education, especially working to achieve the President's "North Star" Goal, that by 2020, America will once again have the highest proportion of college graduates in the world.

This event is open press. Members of the media who wish to cover this event must RSVP to firstladypress@who.eop.gov by Tuesday, January 14th, at 3:00 PM ET. Press who do not have a White House hard pass must include in their email a social security number, date of birth, country of citizenship, current city/state of residence, and gender.

Thursday, January 16, 2014

On Thursday, the President and First Lady will host an event at the White House on expanding college opportunity. More information will be forthcoming.

De Blasio's Plan to Tax the Rich: Not 'Dead on Arrival' After All
THE NATION - Jarrett Murphy
<http://www.thenation.com/blog/177905/de-blasios-tax-plan-enjoying-afterlife>

Here it is 14 days into the Bill de Blasio mayoralty, and we're still talking about a tax plan that was supposedly "dead on arrival" even before the Democratic primary back in September.

Yesterday in Albany, the Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver said, "Thanks to the momentum generated by Mayor Bill de Blasio, we will take the universal pre-K program that we originally proposed, bolster it, expand it so that every four-year-old in this state can benefit from early education and make it sustainable."

The program Silver referred to is the signature policy proposal from de Blasio's campaign, the provision universal early childhood education and middle-grade after-school services paid for by a tax on high earners. The reference to sustainability is a nod to de Blasio's insistence that the program be paid for by the high-earner tax, and not some other budget carve-out that could disappear in subsequent years.

Last week, Bronx State Senator Jeff Klein—who serves as co-leader of the upper house as part of a power-sharing deal between a breakaway group of Democrats and the Republican caucus—said he also supports the tax plan.

There are times on a trip when, even if you haven't reached your destination, it's instructive to look at how far you've come.

Back in August, even before the primary candidates had held an official, televised debate, the Daily News endorsed Christine Quinn, saying of de Blasio:

Additionally, his call for raising taxes on the wealthy to drum up hundreds of millions of dollars annually to pay for pre-K education sells well but hasn't a chance at a time when the next mayor will have to fight like hell just to preserve the status quo for New Yorkers.

A few weeks later, the New York Times also backed Quinn. It praised de Blasio mildly, but noted:

Mr. de Blasio's most ambitious plans — like a powerful new state-city partnership to make forever-failing city hospitals financially viable, or to pay for universal prekindergarten and after-school programs through a new tax on the richest New Yorkers — need support in the State Capitol, and look like legislative long shots. Once a Mayor de Blasio saw his boldest ideas smashed on the rocks of Albany, then what?

De Blasio's opponents picked up this theme. In their final pre-primary debate, Quinn said de Blasio's tax plan was "dead on arrival" at the state capitol, labeling it "pie in the sky." After de Blasio overturned all the handicapping and won the primary on the first round, Governor Cuomo sat with the Daily News editorial board and, according to the News, "virtually shot down the possibility next year that the state would take up a de Blasio plan to hike the city tax rate." Cuomo's re-election hopes and/or designs on the presidency, the thinking went, made it all but impossible for him to consider a tax hike. Soon, de Blasio's Republican opponent, Joe Lhota, took up the line of argument that Quinn tried, calling the plan "dead on arrival" in a debate with the Democrat. Through it all, de Blasio refused to consider a "plan B" or "negotiate against [himself]."

That seemed like rhetoric at the time. It doesn't now.

Last week, de Blasio convened union leaders in support of the pre-K plan at the same time as Cuomo held an event to tout a $2 billion package of tax cuts. Some saw this as the two men taking one step closer toward a real groin-kickin', gravel-in-the-eyes-throwin', beer-bottle-on-the-bar-breakin' street fight over the mayor's tax plan (which, you have to admit, would make for compelling drama, given their political history together and the fact that de Blasio's lengthy reach versus Cuomo's more powerful build create an interesting match-up).

Maybe that fight will still come to occur, but it was interesting that Cuomo's package of tax cuts addressed property taxes, businesses taxes, estate taxes and so on, but not the personal income tax, which is what the de Blasio plan would affect. By my unsophisticated math, if de Blasio's plan—which requires some $500 million a year in new revenue—goes through and Cuomo gets his other cuts he can still claim to have cut $1.5 billion in taxes. And hey, it's not like a future Cuomo presidential campaign is ever going to be able to claim that he transformed New York State into a low-tax environment—just that he lessened the overall bite.

What's more, Cuomo's recent tax proposals were clearly aimed more at upstate, where the economy is worse and Cuomo needs votes more if he is going to accomplish his perceived goal of trying to eclipse his father's widest electoral margin. If Cuomo needs anything from downstate in order to achieve a stunning re-election landslide, it's Democratic turnout, and that's where those unions who've jumped on the de Blasio UPK bandwagon come in.

Strange things often happen in Albany: Good ideas (see "pricing, congestion") die, bad ideas (see "stadium, West Side") die and things once thought politically impossible (e.g., Mayor Bloomberg securing mayoral control of the schools) actually occur. De Blasio's plan could still end up in tatters on the lifeless concrete plain of Empire State Plaza.

But it's valuable to note that the conventional wisdom, which so often narrows the parameters of political debate, appears to have underestimated the mayor, the legislature or both. If everybody had listened to the editorial boards, or the governor or Quinn or Lhota and written off de Blasio's plan and de Blasio, we wouldn't be here. If de Blasio's first big idea doesn't get smashed on the rocks of Albany, what then?

That seemed like rhetoric at the time. It doesn't now.

Last week, de Blasio convened union leaders in support of the pre-K plan at the same time as Cuomo held an event to tout a $2 billion package of tax cuts. Some saw this as the two men taking one step closer toward a real groin-kickin', gravel-in-the-eyes-throwin', beer-bottle-on-the-bar-breakin' street fight over the mayor's tax plan (which, you have to admit, would make for compelling drama, given their political history together and the fact that de Blasio's lengthy reach versus Cuomo's more powerful build create an interesting match-up).

Maybe that fight will still come to occur, but it was interesting that Cuomo's package of tax cuts addressed property taxes, businesses taxes, estate taxes and so on, but not the personal income tax, which is what the de Blasio plan would affect. By my unsophisticated math, if de Blasio's plan—which requires some $500 million a year in new revenue—goes through and Cuomo gets his other cuts he can still claim to have cut $1.5 billion in taxes. And hey, it's not like a future Cuomo presidential campaign is ever going to be able to claim that he transformed New York State into a low-tax environment—just that he lessened the overall bite.

What's more, Cuomo's recent tax proposals were clearly aimed more at upstate, where the economy is worse and Cuomo needs votes more if he is going to accomplish his perceived goal of trying to eclipse his father's widest electoral margin.

If Cuomo needs anything from downstate in order to achieve a stunning re-election landslide, it's Democratic turnout, and that's where those unions who've jumped on the de Blasio UPK bandwagon come in.

Strange things often happen in Albany: Good ideas (see "pricing, congestion") die, bad ideas (see "stadium, West Side") die and things once thought politically impossible (e.g., Mayor Bloomberg securing mayoral control of the schools) actually occur. De Blasio's plan could still end up in tatters on the lifeless concrete plain of Empire State Plaza.

But it's valuable to note that the conventional wisdom, which so often narrows the parameters of political debate, appears to have underestimated the mayor, the legislature or both. If everybody had listened to the editorial boards, or the governor or Quinn or Lhota and written off de Blasio's plan and de Blasio, we wouldn't be here. If de Blasio's first big idea doesn't get smashed on the rocks of Albany, what then?

Patrick,

See attached the most current DEP list and I'm also sending OLTPS for reference.

Let me know if you have thoughts on candidates and if there are any people you'd suggest we add. We'll be whittling this down to a short list over the next few days.

(We'll note confidentially your feedback on Kathryn Garcia.)

Have a great evening (or actually morning!)

Chloe

Chief Financial Officer and Executive Deputy Commissioner, 2010 - Present: Direct operating and capital budget, customer service and revenue collection, procurement, information technology, human resources, engineering audit, facilities and fleet. $3.5 billion annual enterprise budget and $14 billion, ten-year capital program. Reduced operating budget by 20% ($200 million) over four years; structured and negotiated settlement with unions that had been without a contract for up to 15 years, and delivered smaller-than-planned water-rate increases for 4 consecutive years. Initiated public-private partnerships to develop energy, transform operations to achieve long-term savings, and privatize operation of new plants. Completed nation's largest automated-meter-reading program; $250 million technology project completed on-time and within budget, with new customer tools including: managing water usage and cost in real time, 2% discount for direct debit, paperless billing, automated leak notification, rate-plan selection/optimization for property owners/managers. Acting Commissioner in Commissioner's absence. Executive Director of New York City Water Board.

Commissioner (Acting), 2008 - 2009: Chief Executive for nation's largest public water and wastewater utility, with nearly 6,000 employees and an annual enterprise budget of $2.7 billion, including $1.1 billion in operations and maintenance and a ten-year, $13 billion capital program (the largest of any City agency). Direct responsibility for all operations, including water supply, water and sewer operations and wastewater treatment; engineering, design and construction; finance and administration; planning; legal; communications; and environmental, health & safety. Led agency to be released from Federal criminal probation and monitor oversight for the first time since 2001. Achieved record capital commitments, both in absolute dollars and as percentage of plan. Executive Director of New York City Water Board. Board Member of NY Municipal Water Finance Authority.

First Deputy Commissioner, 2006 - 2008: Direct responsibility for all operating, construction, finance and administrative functions, except legal and public affairs. Acting Commissioner in the Commissioner's absence. Executive Director of the New York City Water Board

President Barack Obama is reopening his White House political operation as the Office of Political Strategy and Outreach and naming aide David Simas as the director, POLITICO has learned.

Simas, currently Obama's deputy senior adviser for communications & strategy, takes over duties that had been outsourced since 2011, when then-White House political director Patrick Gaspard became executive director of the DNC. He assumes the role amid mounting Democratic concerns about this year's midterms and President Obama's level of political engagement.

Simas is expected to start next week and eventually direct a staff of five to seven people, working closely with deputy chief of staff Alyssa Mastromonaco and senior adviser Dan Pfeiffer.

President Barack Obama is reopening his White House political operation as the Office of Political Strategy and Outreach and naming aide David Simas as the director, POLITICO has learned.

Simas, currently Obama's deputy senior adviser for communications & strategy, takes over duties that had been outsourced since 2011, when then-White House political director Patrick Gaspard became executive director of the DNC. He assumes the role amid mounting Democratic concerns about this year's midterms and President Obama's level of political engagement.

Simas is expected to start next week and eventually direct a staff of five to seven people, working closely with deputy chief of staff Alyssa Mastromonaco and senior adviser Dan Pfeiffer.

Patrick,

I hope all is well!

Here is our assessment of Cynthia Lopez for MOME.

For the past 13 years Lopez has been an executive at PBS on their documentary side, at POV. In that capacity, she has in part overseen programming and she/they acquire documentaries already made. She has been a voice for diverse documentarians, and has longevity at PBS in this capacity. She does not have current production experience, TV series experience (the bulk of what's being shot in our production facilities currently in NYC) or studio experience. [REDACTED]

Phil and Gerry,

Wanted to make sure you were aware of the exciting news - this morning BDB is announcing Richard Buery as Deputy Mayor. He will be responsible for an inter-agency policy portfolio starting with our signature initiative to implement preK and after-school. More below.

LS

MAYOR DE BLASIO APPOINTS RICHARD BUERY AS DEPUTY MAYOR FOR STRATEGIC POLICY INITIATIVES, WITH PRE-K IMPLEMENTATION AS TOP PRIORITY

Buery to lead interagency efforts to launch pre-K for every 4-year-old, develop 100 community schools, assemble 'Children's Cabinet'

NEW YORK—Mayor Bill de Blasio today appointed Richard Buery as the city's Deputy Mayor for Strategic Policy Initiatives. The newly created post will direct many of the administration's signature initiatives requiring major interagency collaboration, from providing free, full-day pre-kindergarten to every child and launching 100 new community schools to support families in low-income neighborhoods.

A native of East New York and son of immigrant parents, Richard Buery is a champion for New York City children living in poverty and for expanding educational opportunity for young people. With a legal background in civil rights and innovative expertise in youth development and social entrepreneurship, Buery built community-based organizations from scratch and effectively ran one of the most well-respected and established child service organizations in the country—the Children's Aid Society.

“Richard is a powerful advocate who knows what it takes to lift up working families. He gets the big picture and will make sure that agencies are working together to achieve our biggest priorities. This is going to be one city, where everyone rises together—and that demands a city government that works as a single unit to confront the crises we face. No one is better qualified to take on that challenge than Richard,” said Mayor Bill de Blasio.

“This is the opportunity of a lifetime. It’s been my mission in life to help families work their way up the economic ladder. No agency, no community group can do that alone. It takes sustained and far-reaching coordination to drive that kind of change. This administration won’t let bureaucracy or business-as-usual stand in the way of the progress we’re going to make for children and families,” said incoming Deputy Mayor Richard Buery.

About Richard Buery:

Born and raised in East New York, the son of a retired New York City public school teacher and a retired lab manager, Richard R. Buery, Jr. has dedicated his life to improving educational opportunity and life outcomes for young people in America’s most disadvantaged communities.

As an undergraduate student at Harvard, he co-founded the Mission Hill Summer Program, an enrichment program for children in the Mission Hill Housing Development in the Roxbury section of Boston. Buery went on to establish two other nonprofit organizations before joining The Children’s Aid Society, iMentor and Groundwork, Inc. He served as executive director of iMentor, a technology education and mentoring program that each year connects New York City middle and high school students with professional mentors through online and face-to-face meetings. Highly regarded and now one of the largest youth mentoring organizations in New York City, iMentor is currently undergoing a national expansion. Replicating the same concept of the Mission Hill Summer Program in Boston, Buery also co-founded and served as executive director of Groundwork, Inc., a nonprofit organization serving the children and families of Brooklyn public housing developments.

Buery was a staff attorney at the Brennan Center for Justice. He also served as a law clerk to Judge John M. Walker, Jr. of the federal court of appeals in New York City, as a fifth grade teacher at an orphanage in Bindura, Zimbabwe, and as chief political officer and campaign manager to Kenneth Reeves, the mayor of Cambridge, Massachusetts. He has also served as an adjunct lecturer at the Baruch College School of Public Affairs.

In October 2009, Buery was named the tenth President and Chief Executive Officer of The Children’s Aid Society. Children’s Aid is an independent, not-for-profit organization established to serve the children of New York City. Its mission is to provide comprehensive support for children in need, from birth to young adulthood, and for their families to help children succeed and thrive. Children's Aid serves New York's neediest children and their families with a network of services and programs that support children and their families from before birth through young adulthood. Buery is the first black leader of Children's Aid and the youngest since Charles Loring Brace founded the agency in 1853.

Under Buery's leadership, Children's Aid has begun a process to transform the organization to be more focused programmatically and more results-oriented. Children's Aid's new vision is to end the cycle of poverty by putting children on the path to college graduation, concentrating its efforts on the highest-need neighborhoods and making long-term investments in children—from cradle to college graduation. The organization is building systems to track children's progress along the way, both to improve its ability to give individual children the support they need and to ensure that its programs are achieving the desired outcomes in education, health and wellness, family stability, and social and emotional learning.

The recipient of many honors and awards, Buery was a 1992-1993 Michael Clark Rockefeller Fellow, in 2000 was named one of Ebony magazine's "30 Leaders of the Future Under 30," and in 2009 was named one of Crain's New York Business's "40 Leaders of the Future Under 40" in recognition of his contributions to the life of New York City.

He received the Mary McLeod Bethune Recognition Award from the National Council of Negro Women; the Extraordinary Black Man Award for Humanitarianism from the United Negro College Fund; and the inaugural outstanding alumnus award from the Phillips Brooks House Association at Harvard University. He has also been honored by the Rush Philanthropic Arts Foundation, the Brooklyn Borough President, and others.

Buery lives with his wife Deborah, a law professor, and his two sons, Ellis and Ethan.

Mayor's Judgment Debated After His Call to Police About a Supporter's Arrest

By MICHAEL M. GRYNBAUM FEB. 12, 2014

When a teacher at his daughter's

EMAIL school was arrested at a political protest, Bill de Blasio, then a New York City councilman, pleaded with the district attorney not to seek jail time, then wrote to the judge to request leniency. Mr. de Blasio would frequently call the local police precinct to inquire about crime reports.

As public advocate, when marchers were arrested after arguing with police at a Brooklyn parade, Mr. de Blasio rushed to the scene to appeal for their release.

Now, as the mayor, Mr. de Blasio is discovering that a hands-on approach to government is not so simple when you run City Hall.

The mayor is facing questions about favoritism and undue influence after it emerged this week that he called a high-ranking police official to inquire about the arrest of a Brooklyn bishop, a key political supporter.

Both the police and City Hall said the mayor did not request any special treatment for the pastor, Bishop Orlando Findlayter of New Hope Christian Fellowship, who was arrested on Monday evening for a traffic violation and was facing a night in custody because of two outstanding warrants for failing to answer minor charges. A local precinct commander chose to release the bishop before learning of the mayor's inquiry, according to city officials.

But Mr. de Blasio's midnight telephone call, which officials said he made after mayoral aides did not respond to his messages about the incident, drew questions about the mayor's judgment in his new job, even as allies said his actions were in keeping with his history as a grass-roots organizer and activist politician.

"The rule is, the mayor shouldn't be involved in any way about somebody's arrest," the city comptroller, Scott M. Stringer, told reporters on Wednesday, describing Mr. de Blasio's actions as "problematic."

"When you do make that call," Mr. Stringer added, "you do have to answer a lot of questions."

Mr. de Blasio declined to speak about the episode on Wednesday, and said he would address it later in the week. A spokesman on Wednesday had no reply when asked whether the mayor would take the same action in the future.

But interviews with the mayor's current and former colleagues suggested that Mr. de Blasio, a Democrat, is accustomed to an aggressive, hands-on form of governance, impatient to hear information firsthand and keen to speak with the authorities directly about matters he deems important.

"That's typical Bill," said Bertha Lewis, a liberal activist and longtime friend of the mayor, when asked about his direct contact with the police.

"Bill still views himself like he has for years," Ms. Lewis said, adding that

Mr. de Blasio prided himself on aiding constituents during his days on the City Council. “He has a different title now, but instinctually, he would do that.”

Ms. Lewis said the mayor relished the details of public service. “Bill is the type of person who on closer inspection has dirt under his fingernails,” she said. “He doesn’t overthink it like, ‘Hmm, should I make this call?’ ”

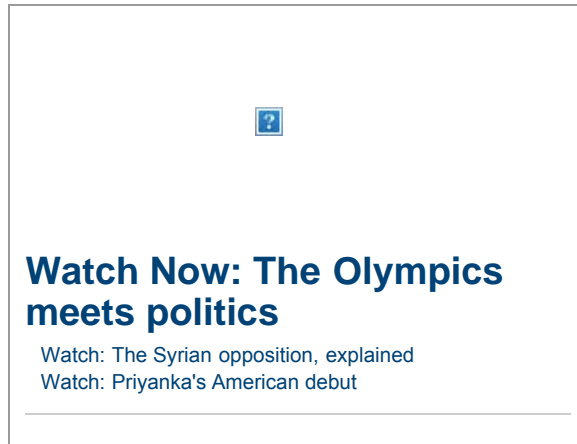

The episode unfolded late on Monday, when Mr. de Blasio, at his home in Park Slope, Brooklyn, was preparing to go to sleep, according to aides who provided an account of the evening.

The mayor began receiving messages about the bishop’s arrest from members of a local Brooklyn clergy council, some of whom he had known for years.

Unsure of the specifics, Mr. de Blasio sought more information from several aides, but he did not receive an immediate response.

Mr. de Blasio was told by the bishop’s supporters that the situation was urgent: Mr. Findlayter might have to be held overnight. Eager for clarification, Mr. de Blasio called Kim Royster, a deputy chief in the Police Department’s public affairs office, whom he had recently met.

Ms. Royster said that the mayor asked her to find out the bishop’s status, but that he did not prescribe any course of action. After speaking with Mr. de Blasio, she said she called the precinct and was told that a local commander had already decided to release Mr. Findlayter.

On Tuesday morning, Mr. de Blasio and Mr. Findlayter, both smiling, were photographed together at a clergy breakfast in Brooklyn. By Wednesday, however, the mayor was being pilloried by critics who said the phone call amounted to improper interference to aid a friend.

Fred Siegel, a political historian at St. Francis

College in Brooklyn, said that, even if Mr. de Blasio did not urge special treatment for the bishop, the simple fact of a phone call from the mayor carries enormous weight.

“When the mayor is inquiring in this personal manner, a deputy chief knows what this means,” Mr. Siegel said.

But Mr. de Blasio received support on Wednesday from an unlikely source: former Mayor Rudolph W. Giuliani, a Republican.

“I don’t think he did anything wrong,” Mr. Giuliani said in a telephone interview. “It sounds to me like he was just making an inquiry as to what happened with the guy.”

Mr. Giuliani said the episode was “probably a learning experience” for Mr. de Blasio. He said he “probably” made similar calls during his own mayoralty, but would have contacted the commissioner, rather than a lower-ranking official.

Still, Mr. Giuliani added, “I don’t see that it’s a big deal.”

In Interview, Cuomo's Support for de Blasio Comes With a Few Barbs

By MICHAEL M. GRYNBAUM FEB. 14, 2014

In politics, friendship can be a complicated thing.

Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo on Friday offered Mayor Bill de Blasio an olive branch in one hand and a shiv in the other, defending the much-criticized decision to open New York City schools in a snowstorm but mocking the mayor for his signature mantra.

"I know the 'tale of two cities' very well," said Mr. Cuomo, his voice betraying only a trace of slyness, in an interview on WNYC. "I was in the audience in 1984 at the Democratic convention when I think it was articulated very well."

The articulator in question was Mr. Cuomo's father, former Gov. Mario Cuomo, whose keynote speech at that convention 30 years ago prominently featured the same Dickensian phrase that Mr. de Blasio adopted as a staple of his political image.

(The elder Cuomo's speech, an assault on the policies and record of then-President Ronald Reagan, was widely heralded for its rhetorical power, instantly made him a national Democratic star and vaulted him into the top rank of presidential contenders.)

The mayor and the current governor, both Democrats, often boast of their ostensibly warm relations. But Mr. Cuomo's remarks suggested the governor had no plans to dial back his opposition to Mr. de Blasio's proposal to tax wealthy New Yorkers to pay for prekindergarten classes, which requires approval in Albany.

"I'm not going to leave behind the children in any part of this state," Mr. Cuomo said. The governor has said he would prefer to fund statewide prekindergarten using existing money in the budget, rather than levying a new tax for a city-specific program.

It was a fascinating bit of political theater on the heels of a tough day at the office for Mr. de Blasio, who canceled his lone scheduled public appearance on Friday in the wake of tough headlines over his handling of Thursday's storm.

Aides to the mayor said they decided the event, a storm update, was unnecessary because the city had seen very few weather-related problems on Friday morning.

On the storm front, Mr. Cuomo was sympathetic. "On any of these situations, second-guessing is very easy," the governor said on WNYC, acknowledging that Mr. de Blasio "is taking a little heat." Mr. Cuomo recalled the criticism he hears from drivers after a state road is closed or kept open in a storm.

Still, even the governor's supportive comments had a bit of edge. "Welcome to the job," Mr. Cuomo said, as a message to the mayor, adding, with a laugh, "That's why we get the big bucks."

If his dynamic with the governor remains frosty, Mr. de Blasio did gain some ground in his emerging feud with Al Roker, the "Today" show weatherman, who stridently attacked the mayor on Twitter on Thursday for keeping schools open and claiming that a National Weather Service forecast had been inaccurate.

On a Friday broadcast from Sochi, where he is covering the Winter Olympics, Mr. Roker stood by most of his comments.

But he apologized to Mr. de Blasio for one particularly tough tweet, in which Mr. Roker predicted a one-term administration for the new mayor.

“That was a little below the line,” Mr. Roker told his co-hosts, explaining that he had become heated in the moment.

Mr. Roker added, “I’m very passionate about the weather.”

For the record, the fact that this speech is now being limited to 15 minutes is a real problem. I will make do, but it won't be as good a speech. And had we known we were only being given 15 mins, we could have moved to another location that gave us more freedom. Stating the obvious, we can't learn about restrictions like this at the last moment -- we need to set ground rules up front, or be ready to move if people switch up on us. I need a better, more thorough approach next time pls

I sat down with Rev. Forbes today and Rachel spoke to a Riverside board member who also spoke to Rev Forbes on our behalf. We have him in a good place.

He is sensitive to anything over 15 minutes, mostly due to internal issues, but very excited about your visit, and excited about his sermon buttressing your remarks. He looks forward to working in tandem on many of our policies.

No call from you needed, thank him tomorrow and ensure him that his concern is respected and

Because this is an important day tomorrow I am going to give you more details on the timing.

We just got done another conversation with Forbes. He has a very big personality as you probably know, and as he has now timed out his own sermon and is asking for you to stay within a 15 minute timeframe.

I am looking at the outline and it looks fine to do in 15, but I cannot tell entirely. Am sure the team can time your remarks and let you know, whenever you're ready.

John, can you please make sure MBDB gets this for when you're prepping later.

Your team wanted to make sure you hear this:

Forbes is saying today he wants you to cut down remarks because it is lent and because he has his own sermon he's working on. He's of course very excited for you to come, but he really wants to make sure you know time is an issue.

We can time your latest draft and tell you how many minutes it is.

(He says he has always said the same to presidents like wjc even the day they come to the speech and they go along with it. We have been in constant contact with him on all logistics but he just started getting wary on our timing last night.)

PlEAsE let me know you got. Sorry for the nuisance.

At Vanity Fair Party, de Blasio Navigates New Terrain: The Red Carpet

By MICHAEL M. GRYNBAUM APRIL 24, 2014

<image001.jpg>
Mayor Bill de
Blasio chatted

with Harvey Weinstein, right, at the Vanity Fair party for the Tribeca Film Festival on Wednesday. Credit Casey Kelbaugh for The New York Times

Flashbulbs popped as Anna Wintour greeted Robert De Niro and Harvey Weinstein. Courteney Cox and Christy Turlington caught up by the bar. John McEnroe and Ron Howard posed for pictures nearby.

And in one corner of the room, Mayor Bill de Blasio was discussing the finer points of Canadian social democracy.

The Vanity Fair party for the Tribeca Film Festival, held on Wednesday in the floodlit foyer of the State Supreme Court building in Lower Manhattan, was not exactly a natural setting for Mr. de Blasio, he of the scruffy Park Slope townhouse and regular-guy persona.

But the mayor, making his social debut on the city's glitterati circuit, quickly found his niche.

His arrival, 75 minutes after the party began, sent a stir through the A-list crowd. Mr. de Blasio and his wife, Chirlane McCray, were swarmed by guests, including Mr. De Niro, Mr. Weinstein, and Graydon Carter, the editor of Vanity Fair. Sandra Bernhard, the comedian, greeted the mayor and his wife with kisses on the cheek.

The actress Christine Baranski, standing patiently at the mayor's side, waited for nearly 10 minutes before she could slip in a greeting.

Photo

"I told him, 'Let me know if I can do anything,' " Ms. Baranski said afterward, saying she first met Mr. de Blasio at a fund-raiser hosted by the actress Cynthia Nixon. "He was such an underdog at the time, but I thought he had his heart in the right place."

Among the first to speak with the mayor was Mike Myers, the "Austin Powers" star, who quickly engaged Mr. de Blasio in a discussion of Pierre Trudeau, the former Canadian prime minister and liberal icon.

The mayor was pleased. "In all of my political discussions over all the years, no one has ever referenced Pierre Trudeau before, so I gave him great points for that," Mr. de Blasio said afterward.

It was the mayor's first Vanity Fair gala, and in a brief interview, he said he was enjoying himself. The Tribeca Film Festival, created in part to promote Lower Manhattan after the Sept. 11 attacks, was "a beautiful, powerful story," Mr. de Blasio said, "and I've said to them, 'Anything I can do to help.' "

Still, Mr. de Blasio was not entirely comfortable with red-carpet culture. Told by a reporter that he and his wife looked glamorous, the mayor was quick to demur. “Well, I don’t think we’re trying for glamour,” Mr. de Blasio said, a touch defensively. “We’re wearing our business clothes, if that’s O.K.”

Like any good party, this one had a frisson of political intrigue to go with the hors d’oeuvres from Per Se. Raymond W. Kelly, the former police commissioner whose tenure has been criticized by the mayor, stood mere feet away from Mr. de Blasio, but the two did not appear to speak. Mr. Kelly did, however, engage in a friendly chat with another guest: Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo.

The governor and mayor, who have had differences of late, held court at opposite ends of the room, seemingly opting for a policy of benign neglect. But around 9 p.m., Mr. Cuomo made his way over to the mayor’s corner, greeting Ms. McCray with a kiss and then entering a half-hug with Mr. de Blasio. The men spoke sotto voce, unable to be heard over the Dave Brubeck music on the sound system.

Mr. de Blasio, who posed for photographs with his wife and chief of staff, Laura Santucci, stayed at the event for about an hour, and he left to warm reviews.

Fran Lebowitz, the writer and essayist, said she had been impressed so far with Mr. de Blasio’s tenure, particularly his efforts to help carwash workers organize a union.

Ms. Lebowitz glanced around the room of boldface names. “Maybe he’s coming here to unionize these people,” she said.

The Women of New York's City Hall

Women are helping set Mayor Bill de Blasio's agenda. Two of the deputy mayors are women, Lilliam Barrios-Paoli and Alicia Glen. With Manhattan still cloaked in early-morning darkness, New York City's new sanitation commissioner stepped into a semicircle of 40 men holding brooms and dustpans as they finished roll call and prepared to clean the streets of the Village.

They wore neon yellow and orange vests. She wore black high-heeled boots.

Uniformed women didn't break the department's gender barrier until 1986, and still make up just 200 of the 6,000 members of what is still called the Uniformed Sanitationmen's Association.

But Kathryn Garcia, the city's second female sanitation commissioner, is anything but outnumbered at City Hall.

There, she is part of an administration where women hold more than half of the highest-ranking jobs. Two deputy mayors are women, as are two dozen commissioners and directors, including Polly Trottenberg at the Department of Transportation; Meera Joshi, of the Taxi & Limousine Commission; Vicki L. Been of the Department of Housing Preservation and Development; and Shola Olatoye, who runs the New York City Housing Authority.

Like no mayor before him, Bill de Blasio has tapped women to serve in key roles in his administration. Here is a breakdown of the mayor's appointments to top positions so far, compared with the administrations of his three predecessors in the first year of their terms.

OPEN GRAPHIC

The longtime fraternity of government power — a boys' club that women have been admitted to for years but without ever becoming a dominant force — now resembles a sorority where women are helping set Mayor Bill de Blasio's agenda, squeezing real estate developers for better deals, and prodding entrenched bureaucrats out of their comfort zones.

The statistical milestone elicits as many shrugs as fist-pumps among the women in charge at City Hall, where increased racial and ethnic diversity is also noticeable. But its effects are unmistakable: in the clusters of veteran female officials who helped one another land their jobs and are now mentoring a new generation of political women; in the issues being taken up, from Mr. de Blasio's all-hands-on-deck push for expanded prekindergarten and after-school programs — a boon for working mothers — to a quieter look at whether to beef up enforcement of Title IX, which bans sex discrimination in federally funded education programs; even in the way important negotiations are conducted.

At meetings at every level throughout City Hall, women now equal or outnumber men. "There are certainly moments where I kind of sit back and think, 'Wow, this is sort of changing before our eyes,'" said Emma Wolfe, Mr. de Blasio's longtime aide, whose title is director of Intergovernmental Relations but whose real role is that of fixer. The muscle.

She looked around a stately conference room on City Hall's second floor. "We're sitting in this room here, in the Governor's Room, surrounded by all of these —" she paused and whispered, "white men," then continued, "on the walls."

There are more than 100 portraits of city officials throughout the building. Not one is of a woman, an imbalance that reflects the realities of the 19th century, when most were commissioned. The city no longer commissions such paintings.

If it did now, they would look very different. The mayor "wholeheartedly rejects that as the face of New York City," Ms. Wolfe said of the many portraits. "He's just more conscious of it. It's just him."

The Bloomberg administration had its own high-powered women, including Amanda Burden, the head of city planning, and Emily Lloyd, who during the Dinkins administration was the first female sanitation commissioner and then later ran the Department of Environmental Protection. Patricia Harris, Mr. Bloomberg's first deputy mayor, routinely ranked as one of the most powerful New Yorkers. These days, the first deputy mayor is a man, Anthony Shorris, but he is among the first to point out he is surrounded by women and is, in fact, in the minority.

Mr. de Blasio, 53, has tapped several career city administrators, including Ms. Lloyd, who is again serving as head of the environmental protection agency. "Certainly, all of the administrations had this as a goal," she said of the de Blasio administration's gender balance. "But this is really a new level of achievement in reaching that goal from the get-go."

Lilliam Barrios-Paoli, 67, Mr. de Blasio's deputy mayor for social services who also served in the administrations of Edward I. Koch, Rudolph W. Giuliani and Mr. Bloomberg, observed that there was another difference now.

"In the Giuliani administration, it was really tough," she recalled. "They were nice people, but they were so tough, and in the Koch administration as well: Join the group, or you get killed.

“The men in this administration are in touch with their feminine side,” Ms. Barrios-Paoli said. “There’s a gentler group. I’m used to the high masculinity, testosterone-driven group, and they’re not.”

It is not an overstatement to say that women have made possible some of the biggest accomplishments of Mr. de Blasio’s still-young administration.

On the night before the mayor’s much anticipated contract with the teachers’ union was announced, a few of Mr. de Blasio’s advisers fretted that the Municipal Labor Committee, the umbrella group for the city’s unions, wouldn’t sign off on a health care cost-saving plan crucial to the contract. That would have jeopardized the deal, which was designed to set the tone for negotiations with more than 150 other unions.

One senior aide who was in the room said Mr. de Blasio uttered two words: “Call Emma.”

In an interview, the mayor recalled saying a bit more: “I said, ‘If you want to get a real sense of that vote, get Emma on it.’ She went and did her thing.”

Ms. Wolfe, a 34-year-old who has made a career as an organizer in the male-led world of labor, worked the phones. The labor group’s steering committee voted 20-2 in favor of the contract with the United Federation of Teachers.

During the mayoral campaign, when Mr. de Blasio’s political advisers were suggesting policy initiatives that could become centerpieces of his election effort, Ursulina Ramirez, now 29 and the chief of staff to the schools chancellor, Carmen Fariña, spoke up. Ms. Ramirez had studied prekindergarten programs as an analyst for the Committee for Hispanic Children and Families before working for Mr. de Blasio in the public advocate's office.

If Mr. de Blasio was going to be bold, she said, he should push for universal pre-K, with a tax on wealthy residents' income to pay for it. "I thought, 'What is the game changer?'" recalled Ms. Ramirez.

Mr. de Blasio took little convincing, she said. "Bill and I were in 100 percent agreement."

Mr. de Blasio said he and his wife had always seen prekindergarten as something that needed to be prioritized, but Ms. Ramirez crystallized the issue. "Ursulina helped push it to the floor," he said.

And after an investigative series in The New York Times revealed the squalid conditions facing homeless children and their families, it was left to Alicia Glen, deputy mayor for economic development, and Ms. Barrios-Paoli to respond.

The two learned that, incredibly, the city's Housing Authority, its Department of Homeless Services and its Department of Housing Preservation and Development rarely collaborated.

"It was literally one of those moments where Lilliam and I just called everybody in and said: 'This is insane. We know there's a way to do this,'" Ms. Glen said in an interview. "Maybe this is the way women think; you sort of get out of your vertical and think horizontally."

A solution quickly emerged: 400 children and their families would move out of shelters and into empty public housing apartments. "We were able to do what had not been done before," Ms. Glen said, "in a couple of hours."

"Nobody was getting out of that room alive until we were finished," she added, recalling how she and Ms. Barrios-Paoli forced the two turf-bound agencies to team up. "It's sort of like how I do my kids: Nobody's done until we're done."

Ms. Glen, who left Goldman Sachs to be deputy mayor, has applied her hard-nosed tactics elsewhere. In February, when she learned that the developer of the Domino Sugar refinery in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, was awaiting a city zoning change, she moved the goal posts, demanding an increase in the number of apartments set aside for low- and middle-income tenants.

Carmen Fariña, who came out of retirement to be the new schools chancellor, and her chief of staff, Ursulina Ramirez. CreditEmon Hassan for The New York Times

Within days, Ms. Glen had given the developer permission to build 20 stories higher and to charge more for low-priced units in exchange for adding 40 more, increasing the number that would be large enough for families, and assuring they would remain low-priced permanently — deal points that the city said would be a template for Mr. de Blasio's approach to creating more affordable housing over the next few years.

The number of women in the administration has even changed the way many outsiders are approaching City Hall.

Mary Brosnahan, executive director of the Coalition for the Homeless, said she met with Ms. Barrios-Paoli for two hours on Christmas Eve to talk about homelessness, which had grown to record numbers by the end of Mr. Bloomberg's third term. "She wanted me to really delineate for her how the Bloomberg administration got off-track," she said.

A week later, with Mr. de Blasio in office, Ms. Barrios-Paoli, with his backing, reversed a policy preventing homeless families denied a place in the system from seeking shelter on nights temperatures went below freezing. "As a woman, you see things differently," Ms. Brosnahan said.

The women of City Hall are not a monochromatic lot: married, unmarried; mothers and the childless; straight, gay, and every conceivable hue.

Ms. Glen, 47 and a white, married mother of two children, spent 12 years at Goldman Sachs, though she has a strong foundation for public sector work. Her mother is a judge; her stepmother was in city planning.

Ms. Joshi, of Indian descent and a mother of two children and stepmother to two others, is 45 and worked her way up through city government, serving in the Department of Investigation and on the Civilian Complaint Review Board.

Rachel Noerdlinger, the 43-year-old chief of staff to the city's first lady, Chirlane McCray, is a black single mother who is the adopted daughter of a white couple. She made a career out of helping to reshape the image of the Rev. Al Sharpton, from storefront preacher to civil rights activist and television personality.

Ms. Fariña is a 71-year-old married grandmother who is descended from Spanish immigrant parents. She is a longtime educator who returned from retirement to lead the school system.

Nationally, women's numbers in government management have been growing, said Peggy Merriss, city manager of Decatur, Ga., and the first female president of the International City/County Management Association.

"When I started in this business 30 years ago, women in senior management, they weren't unheard-of but there weren't that many," she said.

More women are seeking degrees in public administration, law and business administration, paths to public sector jobs, Ms. Merriss said. “You have a lot more women in the pool,” she said. “In my opinion, there is a calling to public service that appeals to women in a broad, doing-good-for-others kind of way, the passion for, I don’t want to say, caretaking.

“That’s not to say guys don’t have it,” she said.

The women in Mr. de Blasio’s administration tend to avoid generalizing about Mars-Venus differences and while some describe “leaning in,” others seem to reject the female solidarity proposed by Facebook’s Sheryl Sandberg.

Ms. Garcia, the sanitation commissioner, who is a married mother of two, refuses to be pigeonholed. A lover of math and science who grew up in Park Slope and went to Stuyvesant High School, she said her aptitudes were a good match for the calculus behind snowplow routes.

“Historically, women had been in health and human services and in education. And back probably 50 years ago, what were your choices? Telephone operator and teacher.

“I think you have then seen the evolution of women who are interested in a lot of different fields and also may have different skill sets,” she added.

One morning a week, Mr. de Blasio’s senior staff convenes in a second-floor conference chamber, beneath a life-size portrait of James Monroe, in front of a grandfather clock. The group, charged with long-range planning — tending to what will eventually become Mr. de Blasio’s legacy — includes Deputy Mayors Glen and Barrios-Paoli; Laura Santucci, Mr. de Blasio’s chief of staff; Ms. Wolfe; and Ms. Noerdlinger.

“When I walk into that room, there are 12 people sitting around that table, of which I am one. Six of us are women. Three of us are women of color,” said Maya Wiley, Mr. de Blasio’s general counsel and another regular participant. “That right there is the beginning of my day and it is one in which women are at the table and highly respected.”

For Mr. de Blasio, a tale of women is familiar. The mayor has repeatedly shared his story of estrangement from his father, who struggled with alcoholism and committed suicide, and admiration of his mother who he said “stared down adversity.”

“Mom kept everything together,” he said.

Female independence is a thread of his family history, Mr. de Blasio said, proudly acting as amateur genealogist as he talked about the tailoring business started by his Italian immigrant grandmother and great-aunts. His mother, he said, “pretty much passed the ball to my wife.”

“In the middle of all that, I worked for Hillary Clinton. That was part of my development,” said Mr. de Blasio, who worked as Mrs. Clinton’s campaign manager when she ran for the Senate in 2000.

He joked about Mrs. Clinton and Ms. McCray sharing an alma mater in all-women Wellesley College, calling them “the warrior princesses of our society.”

His wife, he said, constantly reminds him about the challenges facing women and how City Hall can make a difference, such as supporting paid sick leave and after-school programs that will benefit working women. “It’s been a constant dialogue once we had Chiara,” he said, referring to their 19-year-old daughter.

Ms. McCray, 59, is a driving force. She interviews candidates for jobs. She sits in on senior strategy meetings. Despite public sentiment that a mayor’s spouse should not hold a major post in City Hall, Mr. de Blasio named her chairwoman of the Mayor’s Fund to Advance New York City, a nonprofit used by his administration primarily to help immigrants, children and families.

Ms. McCray is often the administration’s voice and face of women’s issues. Her schedule is filled with speeches about those issues or before groups of women: the Feminist Majority Foundation, the New York Coalition of One Hundred Black Women, the Women Mean Business luncheon of the Coalition for the Homeless.

“Bill understands the value of having women, of varied ethnicity and background, at all levels of government. This is second nature to him,” Ms. McCray said in an email. “I wouldn’t have married Bill if the value of this representation was not central to who he is. And he wouldn’t have married me if he thought I’d ever let him forget it. And I don’t.”

Dear Laura –

I haven't bugged you about anything in a while, but Bill's appointment of the Fire Commissioner last week, reminded me that there were a few great folks who are eager to join the de Blasio team, but don't seem to have found a spot as of yet, so here goes.

[REDACTED]. An intergovernmental position with an agency would be perfect for him. However, he would also make an excellent chief of staff or agency policy guy. I've attached his resume, along with the note about [REDACTED] that I sent to Carl back in November.

Valerie James – is currently an administrative manager on my staff. You must know her, she's family - tremendously loyal and capable with world view that is completely consistent with the administration – resume attached, she should also be in the transition queue Nilda Mesa – was Environmental Stewart at Columbia for a number of years. She has a killer resume – EPA, Harvard Law and although I think that I recommended her for head of the Mayor's office of environmental Coordination – she's also make an excellent Deputy at DEP or a related agency or at DCA. I thought that I had her resume, but not on this computer – so I've attached an old bio (she's no longer at Columbia) and will send her current contact info and resume as soon as I get them.

Thanks in advance for any help you can provide – hope that you're getting some rest.

Carl –

I may have already sent this CV to the email address that we were given, but after I heard Bill broaden our charge to include select junior and mid-level folks I thought that I should send it to you as well, along with some dressing on the salad (I have food on my mind).

██████████ has been with our office for 8 years. I met him when he was working for ██████████

██████████ is smart, organized, collegial and ambitious and as a progressive white guy growing up in Alabama, he has proven his fidelity to the cause.

In my office ██████████. He knows everyone and was instrumental in helping guide the Manhattanville campus through the complex waters of ULURP and the State approval processes. He would be a great top aide to a Deputy Mayor or Commissioner and would excel in the City's DC office or in the Mayor's office

Although I'd love to keep him enslaved here forever, he's done good and deserves to fly.

Let me know, if you'd like additional information,

Nilda Mesa is Assistant Vice President of Environmental Stewardship at Columbia University.

She works with students, faculty, and staff at all three campuses to lessen the environmental footprint of the University. Major initiatives underway include programs to promote energy and greenhouse gas emissions reductions, develop energy-saving IT strategies, incorporate LEED and other green standards into construction and operations, green roofs and the area's first green roof research station, promote sustainable food purchasing and dining practices, a surplus reuse program that keeps furniture and equipment out of landfills and makes it available to local not-for-profits, recycling and energy competitions and initiatives, and the development of energy-saving strategies to reduce carbon emissions.

Following her graduation from Harvard Law School, Mesa worked for the California Attorney General on enforcement of toxic management and natural resources laws. As an appointee in the Clinton-Gore administration, she held several positions, including as a member of the U.S. delegation and lead legal negotiator on the environmental side agreements subsequent to the ratification of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA).

As Assistant Deputy for Environment for the U.S. Air Force, she worked to reconcile training and airspace environmental issues with tribal governments, environmental groups and local business groups. At the White House Council for Environmental Quality, Mesa led an interagency task force on reinventing environmental review and permitting processes.

In 1998, following her service in Washington, Mesa moved to New York City with her family and has been a Harlem resident since 2001.

During this period, she co-directed the Maryland Institute College of Art summer residency program for American artists in Brittany, France. In addition to her environmental background, [REDACTED]

Laura – I don't understand how you respond so quickly – it must be nice to be young.

I should be able to reach Nilda this evening and will send info along – in the meantime, you may want to take a look at her bio.

Hi Maxine,

Thanks for the reminder on these folks. I'm particularly interested in Nilsa as we're in the process of searching for a new director of our Sustainability office. Pls definitely send her info. Will follow up on all three.

Editorial: Score One for Stringer

NY OBSERVER - Editorial

<http://observer.com/2014/05/score-one-for-stringer/#axzz31hcUfgK3>

Several months ago, when a good portion of the city's political class was celebrating the imminent arrival of a self-consciously progressive administration in City Hall, it was fair to wonder who, if anybody, would serve as a check on the budgetary enthusiasms of the new mayor and his comrades in the City Council.

Well, that independent voice has been identified. And it belongs to City Comptroller Scott Stringer.

Mr. Stringer is hardly anybody's idea of a small-government conservative. Indeed, he was an eager passenger of the progressive express that pulled into the City Hall subway stop on Jan. 1.

But when the comptroller got a look at Mayor Bill de Blasio's proposed new budget, he didn't simply nod in agreement. He and his staff scrutinized it and came back with a startling assessment: The budget, the comptroller said, was out of whack.

Actually, the comptroller's office was a bit more diplomatic. Mr. Stringer argued that the mayor's plan did not conform with generally accepted accounting principles. Without going into mind-numbing details, GAAP is a framework designed to ensure a realistic assessment of revenue and liabilities. There was a time when New York's budget makers paid no attention to GAAP standards. The result was the near-collapse of the city's finances in the mid-1970s. Now GAAP compliance is the law.

Mr. Stringer's intervention led the mayor to retool the budget, shifting $720 million in retroactive pay for some teachers nearing retirement to the current fiscal year ending on June 30. The mayor had hoped to spread out the payments over four years.

The comptroller may be simpatico with the mayor's agenda, but in this first test of his independence, Mr. Stringer made it clear that he takes his role as a fiscal watchdog seriously. That's a good sign—there ought to be some tension in city government, particularly in a one-party town.

Meanwhile, experts outside of government are raising broader concerns about the mayor's budget. Analysts at Moody's, the ratings service, have predicted a looming deficit of $7.5 billion through the 2018 fiscal year. Only a few months ago, that projected deficit was "just" $2 billion.

The mayor was somewhat smug in portraying his budget as a triumphant marriage of progressive values and fiscal prudence. Upon further review, it would appear that his message is half right.

Let's hope the City Council, which must approve the budget, finds something to admire about Mr. Stringer's welcome independence.

Job Description

About NYC Business Solutions:

NYC Business Solutions is a set of services offered by the New York City Department of Small Business Services (SBS) to help businesses start, operate and expand in New York City. NYC Business Solutions has been at the forefront of the City's commitment to help business customers, providing small businesses and entrepreneurs with the ability to access government services by phone, online, or in person at NYC Business Solutions Centers located in neighborhoods throughout the five boroughs. The NYC Business Solutions set of services consists of: Business Courses, Legal Assistance, Financing, Incentives, Navigating Government, Recruitment, Training, Selling to Government and M/WBE Certification. In 2013, NYC Business Solutions helped over 8,700 businesses throughout New York City to start, operate, and expand.

The Director of the NYC Business Solutions, Staten Island Center is responsible for managing the day-to-day operations of NYC Business Solutions' Center in Staten Island as well as leading the Center towards its goal of providing high-quality services to help small businesses in Brooklyn to start, operate, and expand. Specifically, the Director executes the center's strategy, drives business development, supports service delivery, oversees ongoing operations, manages a team of account managers, and cultivates and manages key center partnerships.

The NYC Department of Small Business Services (SBS) operates the NYC Business Solutions, Staten Island Center, and the Director reports directly to SBS' Executive Director of NYC Business Solutions. SBS is seeking a dynamic and entrepreneurial leader to serve as the Director of the Staten Island Center. This is an exciting opportunity for a strategic leader to manage all day-to-day strategy, operations, and partnership development for the Center as well as provide ongoing leadership, vision, and support for all Center staff as they strive to develop and grow the impact of the services they deliver.

Responsibilities:

- Lead all day-to-day operations of the NYC Business Solutions, Staten Island Center.
- Develop and execute a business development and service delivery strategy for the center.
- Ensure high-quality service delivery to the businesses that access NYC Business Solutions' set of services.
- Direct the Center's outcomes measurement, marketing, business development, partnership development, reporting, and project coordination.
- Provide primary oversight and strategic management of the Center's outcomes, identifying areas for improvement, spearheading corrective action plans, and working closely with key staff on strategies to improve overall performance.
- Oversee, coach, and develop a highly motivated and self-directed staff of two Account Managers, who specialize in direct service delivery to small businesses.
- Establish and grow mutually beneficial relationships with partners that can help the center to extend and deepen its service delivery within the borough of Staten Island.
- Coordinate participation among community-based organizations, community boards, Business Improvement Districts and other relevant stakeholders in the interest of improving the access that small Staten Island businesses have to support services.
- Attend morning and evening events in the Staten Island community as needed, in the interest of strengthening partnerships and business development efforts.

Minimum Qual Requirements

1. A baccalaureate degree from an accredited college or university and five years of full-time paid experience acquired within the last fifteen years, of supervisory or administrative experience including handling of business promotion or urban economic problems, at least 2 years of which must have been in a managerial or executive capacity with primary focus on business promotion or urban economic planning; or

2. A satisfactory equivalent combination of education and experience. However all candidates must have 2 years of managerial or executive experience as described in "1" above.

Appropriate graduate study in an accredited college or university may be substituted for the general experience on a year-for-year basis. All candidates must have a four-year high school diploma or its equivalent approved by a State's Department of Education or a recognized accrediting organization.

Preferred Skills

- At least 5-7 years of relevant work experience, including experience managing teams in a fast-paced work environment.
- A strong belief in the potential of small businesses and the value of understanding and addressing their needs.
- Excellent interpersonal skills and the ability to work well with staff across a variety of positions and levels of seniority throughout the center, the Staten Island business community, and the Department of Small Business Services.
- Excellent leadership skills and the ability to manage a team towards achieving annual performance goals/metrics.
- The ability to think innovatively and generate new ideas that can translate directly into results.
- Strong writing, analytical, interpersonal, time-management, and communications skills
- Flexible, adaptable, customer-focused, and goal-oriented with a commitment to high standards of excellence.
- Bachelor's degree or equivalent experience required; advanced degree preferred.
- Experience providing direct technical assistance to small businesses preferred.
- An understanding of the political and community based landscape in Staten Island preferred.
- Valid NYS Driver's license

To Apply

To apply for this position, please ALSO email your resume and cover letter including the following subject line: Director – NYC Business Solutions, Staten Island to: careers@sbs.nyc.gov

Salary: $60,000 - $65,000

NOTE: Only those candidates under consideration will be contacted.

Residency Requirement

New York City residency is generally required within 90 days of appointment. However, City Employees in certain titles who have worked for the City for 2 continuous years may also be eligible to reside in Nassau, Suffolk, Putnam, Westchester, Rockland, or Orange County. To determine if the residency requirement applies to you, please discuss with the agency representative at the time of interview.

Hi Laura,

Hearing talk about the DNC on the news tonight reminded me to mention that the Mayor should let me know if I can be at all helpful re Brooklyn's bid to host the convention. As Patrick knows, I've attended every convention since 1984 and served as a consultant to every convention - either for a candidate or the DNCC - except for 1996 (when I was working in the administration) and, of course, 2013.

To: "Tarlow, Mindy" <mtarlow@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Dear Colleagues,

I am pleased to announce the appointment of Nilda Mesa as the new Director of the Mayor's Office of Environmental Coordination.

Nilda was most recently the Chief Administrative Officer/Associate Dean of Administrative Affairs at the Graduate School of Journalism at Columbia University. Prior to that role, she was the Assistant Vice President for Environmental Stewardship and served as the Chief Sustainability officer at the University. In that capacity, she established innovative initiatives to lessen the University's environmental impact and was successful in gaining national recognition for her efforts.

In addition to her work in New York City, Nilda served in a national capacity as a Clinton-Gore appointee to the White House Council on Environmental Quality, and the Department of Defense at the U.S. Air Force as an Assistant Deputy for Environment. A lawyer by trade, she has also served as Counsel to the Environmental Protection Agency on the NAFTA Task Force.

In her new role at MOEC, Nilda will help to shape this administration's response to important environmental review procedures and policies, including preparation and oversight of environmental reviews on behalf of the Office of the Mayor. Nilda will work to find ways to improve public understanding of the City's Environmental Quality Review Procedure (CEQR) review process and will be responsible for identifying and implementing efficiencies to it. As Director, Nilda is also responsible for assisting other agencies in carrying out their environmental review responsibilities and overseeing updates to the Technical Manual, which is the guiding document for environmental reviews prepared as part of the CEQR.

Finally, Nilda's expertise will assist other colleagues at the Office of Operations as we fulfill our mandate to move the Mayor's inequality agenda forward.

We are very lucky to have Nilda's vast experience, demonstrated ability to coordinate large-scale environmental projects, and dedicated work ethic on our team.

Laura –

I know that you are beyond busy, and this is certainly not an urgent matter, but it's been suggested that this might not be a bad time to re-send [REDACTED] (somewhat updated) resume.

As I may have mentioned previously, in addition to the standard government and community affairs portfolio – [REDACTED] has handled a ton of policy and policy coordination work for us; I believe he'd be equally effective in a role requiring those sets of skills, perhaps a policy analyst, deputy chief of staff or related position.

Btw, We are unbelievably proud of Bill for his handling of the Ebola situation – it really is a test of character.

Best –

Hello Dom,

It's been more than 6 months since I supplied you with a list of positions. With your help I was interviewed at NYCHA. In January, I was contacted by DoITT to interview with the commissioner and the COS. When I arrived I was told they had been asked to conduct an informational interview with me. In preparing for the interview I came across a posting for a deputy commissioner of telecom position. I demonstrated my qualifications for the position. The commissioner and the COS told me that if I was not chosen for the opening, they had strategic tech positions in mind for me.

After months of not hearing from either agency, I followed up with Appointments. I just received a call from NYCHA with regrets about not communicating and about not being selected.

As you said, the city is lucky to have candidates like me interested in serving. I spoke to you directly about my interest in leading MODA, but wasn't even interviewed for the position. The absence of communication and offers has been insulting considering my skill set and interest. I have commissioner-level qualifications, but have been willing to look at a range of positions. What gives? Consider the message delivered that the city is not interested in my service.

At a loss.

[REDACTED], the amazing EP, Producer and Harlemita, is interested in being the Film Commissioner. I think she'd be an excellent choice. Please put her name in the hopper. She has also submitted her attached resume online.

Feel free to reach out to her directly for any additional information.

All the best in 2014 -- and see you at Sundance!

The de Blasio Diaries, Chapter 55: Cropped Out

VANITY FAIR - Staff

<http://www.vanityfair.com/news/2016/02/bill-de-blasio-diaries-chirlane-new-york-times-magazine>

Our mayor dad explains why he had to make a last-minute change to his Valentine’s Day plans.

Dear Diary,

Valentine’s Day was not, to say the least, always a favorite holiday of mine. There were some years when I would call in sick to school on it. “Mom, I’ve got . . . I’ve got that tall-guy nauseous thing . . . Kyle was telling me about it—you, uh, get it after you get a growth spurt,” I told her one year, and then I hid under the covers reading my Batman comics the whole day. I just wasn’t the romantic sort of guy at that age. I was a foot taller than all the other dudes, and my jump shot was garbage. If you’re gangly and tall in your teens and not a basketball star, you’re basically hopeless.

Everything changed when I got to college, though. I was dating a girl whom I really liked and I took her to this Italian place my mom had recommended (What? This is my diary—if I can’t be honest here, then where?) and then we saw a movie (I don’t even remember which one, which tells you how well the date was going :D). That was the confidence boost I needed.

My Valentine’s Day celebrations with Chirlane have been pretty low-key. We’re not really your seven-course-dinner and horse-and-carriage-ride kind of couple, which shouldn’t come as much of a surprise (hmmm, maybe should have used imagery other than horse-and-carriage there!). We went bowling a few years ago. One time, Chirlane went to some poetry retreat and straight up didn’t even realize she wouldn’t be home for Valentine’s Day. It was fine! I made cannolis with ████ and ████ instead. We’ve never put much stock in the Hallmark brand of gooeyness; we’d rather eat out of a clay pot our daughter made in art class than on some fancy china, ya catch my drift?

This year, though, I decided to really try and be a romantic, for once, to channel my inner Mario Lopez. (I met that guy once, and was very impressed; his skin really glistens.) I arranged for a helicopter ride over the city, and I rented out our favorite local spot for the night, for dinner, with the chef on retainer to make whatever Chirlane wished. And then I had a book made of all of her sketches from the past decade. (She's always sketching . . . she's just overteeming with creative spirit, that woman). It's been an intense two years. I felt like she deserved to be really pampered for a night. I wanted to do something special.

On Valentine's Day, though, I got an e-mail from my press team. "You know that feature Chirlane's doing for The New York Times Magazine?" it started. (My first thought was that somehow Chirlane was breaking up with me via magazine profile—the late hours of this job will make a man insane, and ever since getting back from Iowa, I haven't been able to sleep.) "Well, it's out, and the photos are . . . interesting. You might want to take a look." I clicked immediately on the attachment: the first photo I saw looked fine, it was the two of us gazing into each other's eyes. In the second, though, my head was, well, cropped off at the middle. I wrote back to my aide, "Hey, I think this is funny! It's fine! It's just a joke about how I'm tall, right?" But then I started to think about it some more. Was it a joke about me being tall? Or was there more to it? Was the photo editor trying to make some kind of point about our relative merits? Was there a joke at my expense embedded in here? I started having tremors remembering the New York Magazine cover, in which I was miniaturized to about a twentieth of the page. What was it with these magazine people and manipulating my image? No one ever messed with Bloomberg like this! Do I really give people the idea that they can do whatever they like to my face and I'll just laugh it off?!?! And, if so, that's maybe not a bad trait for a person to have, but for a mayor!?!?

I went into Chirlane's office, where she was grinning broadly in a way I had frankly never seen before. She said, "Did you see these photos of us?!? I love them. I just had my person tweet them!" I just nodded, solemnly. "Yeah," I said. "I saw them."

"I think I want to blow them up, like poster-sized, and hang them in the house."

"Oh, uh, maybe . . . sure, sure."

She looked up. "So, what do you want to do tonight, for Valentine's Day?"

There was a part of me, a part I didn't particularly like but had to acknowledge nevertheless, that, despite what my head was saying, despite my better instincts, hesitated. "Let's just stay in and watch a movie, or whatever's on?"

"That sounds great," she said, and I quickly e-mailed my aide to cancel all the plans I had made.

The helicopter ride would have been silly, I considered later, as we watched a Friends rerun on the couch. She wouldn't even have liked it. Yeah, she wouldn't have at all.

Thanks Darren. Lots of good work to do.

Unfortunately in at a Board mtg that day and can't make it. Thanks for thinking of me. Would love to join in the future.

Hi Patrick, it's been a while – and you've been busy – congrats on all the work and the newish role with OSF.

As we do from time to time we are organizing a small meeting this week with the Mayor's Fund Board of Advisors and our close friends and partners in the work, and as someone closely aligned with the efforts I wanted to know if you were interested and available to join.

We try to keep these programs tidy and meaningful. In addition to a quick update on recent Fund activity, this program will feature a discussion with NYPD Commissioner O'Neill, talking about his recent work on neighborhood policing and broader efforts that he and NYPD are advancing.

Here are the details:

Board of Advisors Convening
Hosted by Board of Advisors Chair Rob Speyer
Featuring NYPD Commissioner James O'Neill
September 28, 2017
8:30 - 9:30 am
Tishman Speyer - 45 Rockefeller Plaza, 7th Floor
RSVP to Daniele Baierlein at dbaierlein@cityhall.nyc.gov or 212-788-8782

Let us know what you think, and either way, I hope we can reconnect again soon on the your work planned and underway.

Subject: Kicking off the NYC Soccer Initiative

Hello Friends and Partners:

In case you missed it, I wanted to send a quick note updating you on a recent milestone announcement for one of our projects – the NYC Soccer Initiative.

On Tuesday morning, First Lady, and our Board Chair, Chirlane McCray, Senior Advisor to the Mayor and Director of the Office of Strategic Partnerships Gabrielle Fialkoff, Parks Commissioner Mitchell J. Silver, and other key city officials were joined by the U.S. Soccer Foundation, Adidas, Etihad Airways and executives and star players from the New York City Football Club to cut the ribbon on ten new mini-soccer pitches built across the City.

The celebration comes a year after the Mayor announced the $3m privately funded project; and these ten sites represents the first of 50 to be built in historically under-resourced neighborhoods around the five boroughs.

As part of the celebration students played soccer with international stars David Villa, Sean Johnson and Jack Harrison. Later that afternoon, New York City FC and partners hosted local soccer festivals with soccer stars at additional NYC Soccer pitches in each of the five boroughs.

The opening of the first ten sites was covered by NY1, NY Sports Day, SILive, and NY Daily News. Take a look at a few pictures from the day.

Also ICYMI

Also, in case you missed it... I wanted to make sure you saw the recent op-ed in The Hill, posted by our Executive Director, Darren Bloch. The op-ed challenges the thinking around proposed Federal budget cuts eliminating the Social Innovation Fund, which had created a powerful public-private funding model to drive innovative evidence-based solutions to scale. In it, he writes, "For a president who views himself as a savvy negotiator, the de-funding of a program that literally yields a 2:1 return on the federal government's investment is a short-sighted choice, and a poor business decision. Over the program's seven year history, $352 million in federal funding leveraged over $700 million in local and private funds."

It was great seeing you last week — so exciting to know you're about to take over that enormous force for social justice. We are working on some of the notions we discussed and should have something back soon.

If you're amenable, I'm wondering if you'd be able to spare a few minutes (by phone or in person) on a more personal matter. If so, I'll call your office and try to find some time.

Many thanks — and wishing you all the best.

Hope all is well. Just wanted to pass along that the folks down at Princeton called Friday to offer me a Visiting Chair for the Spring term. Before getting back to them, I wanted to get a sense of your thinking — whether you have a sense I could be helpful as you transition into the leadership role or in some other fashion. CHARTERS in New York City

The conversation around charters is a good one to have. While the vast majority of New York’s students are served by traditional public schools, we are committed making sure EVERY child in New York City can secure a quality education that prepares students for career and college.

If we’re going to educate our children for the 21st century, we must not divide parents and children in this discussion. It’s time for all leaders and stakeholders to unite around common goals and a strong public policy that lifts up every student.

Latest on Charters & Co-Location:

- New York City made decisions based on sound public policy and what’s best for our schools and students.
- The mayor and his team inherited 45 colocations proposals for this coming September that were rushed through in the final days of the past administration. Because of the hasty manner of these original approvals, the mayor and his team needed to act quickly to determine if these were all good ideas.
- The mayor and his team were determined to do right by all students, and we set up objective criteria to make sure children weren’t harmed because of these decisions.
- The objective criteria were simple.
 - o No elementary schools opening on high school campuses
 - o No colocations that create very small schools (under 250) that cannot provide range of support needed to serve our students effectively
 - o No colocations that require heavy construction
 - o We will not reduce District 75 seats – special education. Will not disadvantage those kids in need.
- In all, the mayor’s team approved 36 of the 45 total colocation proposals because working with school communities, those plans could be implemented responsibly.
- Nine proposals were declined because they did not meet these smart, common sense standards.
- Contrary to some of the news reports, 14 of 17 charter proposals were approved, and 5 out of 8 proposals were approved from the Success Academy network.
- Two colocations were declined because they would have put an elementary school into a high school campus. This is a bad education policy that doesn’t work for either population of kids because it doesn’t enable shared resources such as AP classes or a library. No students were impacted by these two decisions because these schools have not had their lotteries yet.

- A third colocation that was declined at PS149 would have reduced enrollment for special education students already going to school at there — kids with serious disabilities that our system has too often let down.
- We are here to serve ALL of our kids.
- And just like we won't approve a colocation that will hurt special needs students at a traditional public school, we won't turn our backs on the children who were planning to attend this charter school prior to this decision. We are working to find space for the kids at Success Academy 4 because we know that every child, every student is our charge.
- And we are working cooperatively with a number of charters right now on a range of shared priorities.
- This administration is committed to working with all parents, educators and stakeholders to ensure that every single one of New York's 1.1 million students receives a great education.
