In addition to my work with this coalition, I will be working closely with Van Jones, Ben Jealous and others to help ensure that leaders across the political spectrum take up the cause of criminal justice reform.

For our economy, for communities of color and for our nation as a whole -- this cause matters.

Again, thank you for your leadership.

van--

FROM YESTERDAY

On Mon, May 11, 2015 at 7:49 PM, Van Jones
<vanjones68@dreamcorps.us> wrote:

Mr. Mayor:

Thank you for taking time to address the concerns that I and others have raised about The Progressive Agenda -- both the process and document-to-date.

I have been in communication with numerous allies, including Deepak, Heather and Katrina from the original Gracie Mansion lunch. I have also talked with Rep. Keith Ellison, the Rev. Al Sharpton, Ben Jealous, Rashad Robinson from Color of Change and many other leaders from the African-American community in particular.

After you and I talked today, I conveyed to them the following:

1. You will not change the document in time for tomorrow's event.
2. But you will announce at tomorrow's event that this document is a work-in-progress -- and that the coalition will strengthen the agenda by the end of the week to include ideas like criminal justice reform, debt-free college and social security.
3. You will speak tomorrow specifically to the need for criminal justice reform as a part of economic justice, and so will I. You welcome suggestions for language to include in your remarks.
4. Independent of The Progressive Agenda, you want to hear additional ways that you personally can promote criminal justice reform.

We all agree that your proposal represents a constructive offer and a good-faith attempt to accommodate the many concerns that people have raised inside and outside of this process.

Therefore, we do want to move forward. At the end of the week, we will re-evaluate whether sufficient progress has been made to remain supportive of this effort. In the meantime, all parties will continue working in their various ways to strengthen and improve the Agenda.

I will be in touch with you in the late morning, with some suggestions on the criminal justice side.

In closing: thank you for your leadership. We look forward to doing all we can to build trust and momentum in the days, weeks and months to come.

Van

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea
Subject: Fwd: WH pool report #3 (part I)
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:00:16 PM

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: White House Press Office <noreply@messages.whitehouse.gov>
Date: May 12, 2015 at 11:54:14 AM EDT
To: <mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: WH pool report #3 (part I)
Reply-To: <noreply@messages.whitehouse.gov>

From: Annie LINSKEY [<mailto:annie.linskey@globe.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 11:50 AM
To: Rangel, Antoinette N. EOP
Subject: WH pool report #3 (part I)

WH Pool Report #3 (part I)

Georgetown University President
John J. DeGioia introduced POTUS.

Potus spoke on a panel at Gaston Hall in Georgetown University, which is a stunning auditorium with religious scenes and gold leaf painted on the walls.

Other panel members include Robert Putnam (Author "Our Kids")
Arthur Brooks (Prez of AEI)
EJ Dionne (WaPo columnist)

OBAMA (check quotes against transcript):

"I think we are at a moment in part of what happened in Baltimore and Ferguson and other places ... where it might be able to refocus attention on poverty."

"Part of the reason I thought this venue would be useful is that we have been stuck, I think for a long time, in a debate that creates a couple of straw men."

Obama says the "stereotype" on the left of people who want to throw money at poverty (paraphrasing here.)

Then you have "cold hearted capitalist types" who are reading "Ayn

Ryan" (audience of mostly student laughs)

"We can do something about these issues. I think it is a mistake for us to suggest somehow that effort effort we make has failed and we are powerless to address poverty."

Points to statistics showing poverty has gone down in some places.

"One of the things I'm always concerned about is cynicism."

Obama says he walks around the South Lawn with his CoS, and they talk about "values" -- and tell each other they must "guard against cynicism" especially in "this town."

Sent from my iPhone

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: Speech
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:22:48 PM
Attachments: RooseveltRemarksAsPrepared.docx

Whoops

But what you had already was fine

On 5/12/15, 11:20 AM, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>Attach?

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

>Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 11:21 AM

>To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea

>Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen

>Subject: Re: Speech

>

>Here's the final as prepared for delivery

>

>On 5/12/15, 11:11 AM, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>>Fine here

>>

>>-----Original Message-----

>>From: Hagelgans, Andrea

>>Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 11:11 AM

>>To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil

>>Subject: Re: Speech

>>

>>Agreed

>>

>>

>>----- Original Message -----

>>From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

>>Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 11:10 AM

>>To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea

>>Subject: Speech

>>

>>Let's release the remarks as prepared. He deviated a great deal, but >>it was all in the same vein - and would like to get in bloodstream/get >>to reporter who were denied a gaggle.

>>

>>

>

REMARKS AS PREPARED FOR DELIVERY

Mayor Bill de Blasio
Roosevelt Institute event
Tuesday, May 12th

- Thank you to Felicia Wong for that very kind introduction, and for your tremendous leadership as CEO and President of the Roosevelt Institute.
- I also want to thank Dr. Joseph Stiglitz, not only for producing this incredibly important, through-provoking analysis for rewriting the rules of our modern economy, but also for his advice and support.
- I also want to thank Senator Elizabeth Warren for her tireless advocacy on behalf of middle-class people – not just in her time as Senator, but for nearly four DECADES – as an academic, as a regulator, as a policy expert and advisor. Like many of you, I'm inspired by her brilliance, her passion, and her lifelong dedication to challenging the most powerful interests on behalf of those whose voices too often go unheard.
- I also want to applaud the Roosevelt Institute for the invaluable contribution that they make to the public discourse, particularly on the matter that's been discussed today – thinking big and bold about what it takes to fundamentally change the way our economy works...to ensure that we are creating a more just society...a place where EVERYONE gets a shot at a better life.
- I'm so proud to serve 8.5 million people as mayor of the greatest city on Earth.
- I ran for mayor in 2013 with a promise to tackle what I believed then – and still believe today – is the crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.
- I often spoke of the Tale of Two Cities that New York had become, particularly since the Great Recession had ended. We're home to Wall Street, which has come roaring back – breaking record after record. At the same time, 46 percent of our population was living at or near the poverty line.
- I said that needed to change – not just because this vast inequality posed a threat to those who were struggling...not simply because those in the middle class felt more and more anxious about staying IN the middle class...but because living in a Gilded City was a threat to EVERY New Yorker...a threat to what made New York so great for so many generations prior.
- So we set out to do something about it, and we achieved some real successes – universal, full-day Pre-K...for every single child who wants it. We more than DOUBLED the number of young people with access to after-school programs.

- We secured paid sick leave for 500,000 additional New Yorkers. We extended the living wage to thousands more. More than 190,000 New Yorkers now have a municipal ID – and that number is rapidly growing.
- And this year, we're pushing the most ambitious municipal affordable housing plan in U.S. history – committing ourselves to building or preserving 200,000 units of affordable housing, and requiring – for the first time ever – that developers include affordable housing as a CONDITION of building in New York.
- AND we have pledged to end poverty for 800,000 New Yorkers over the next ten years. Nothing defines the fight against inequality more than lifting people out of poverty.
- We've got a very long way to go, but we're tackling inequality every way we know how – with every tool at our disposal.
- I'm here today because the fight to lift up struggling New Yorkers, and to help rebuild New York's middle class, doesn't end at the borders of my city. What happens in Washington – or doesn't happen – makes an enormous difference to my 8.5 million constituents back home.
- When Franklin Roosevelt created the New Deal, he relied upon many policies first developed in states and cities across America. His collaboration with my predecessor, New York Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, defined that era's commitment to solving the challenge of economic inequality at every level of government.
- Governors, mayors, city and state legislatures – we all have the opportunity to incubate ideas at the local level, and create momentum for real, progressive national change.
- Today, the economic moment -- and the political momentum -- have converged. And NOW is the time for our country to enact bold structural changes to rebuild our middle class -- like the steps that Dr. Stiglitz is proposing today.
- In a word, we need an economy that rewards WORK and not just wealth.
- That means lifting the floor for working people – raising the minimum wage, strengthening the rights of workers to organize, and cracking down on wage theft.
- It means supporting working parents and their families – with paid sick and paid family leave; providing Pre-K and after-school programs and child care; and helping students graduate from college without a mountain of debt hanging over their heads.

- And yes, it means REAL, BOLD efforts to make our tax system more fair – closing tax loopholes that big corporations and the wealthy use to take their massive profits and wealth...and simply pile up greater profits and wealth for themselves.
- Just one example: the carried interest loophole that allows billionaire hedge fund managers to pay a lower overall tax rate than the hardworking men and women who clean their summer homes, or pilot their private jets. That loophole needs to be closed NOW.
- Now you've heard why this sort of thing is possible. It's because the system is rigged to benefit those at the top – and to leave everybody else behind.
- We want to rewrite those rules – not to punish success, but to create more success stories.
- We want every child to grow up in a society that says: “if you're willing to work hard, you've got a chance to live your dreams.”
- For generations, that was the promise of my city of New York. It was the definition of the American dream. But for too many, that promise...that dream...has steadily slipped away.
- And that's why we have to stand together. Progressive economists, activists, academics, elected officials, and everyday Americans in all fifty states.
- And you know what? The American people are already there.
- In 2014, four so-called “Red States” passed a minimum wage increase.
- Just look at the Fight for 15 – a massive movement in 200 cities, with more than 60,000 people taking to the streets to fight for a minimum wage.
- It's time for those of us in elected office to hear THEIR voices...and to follow THEIR lead.
- It was Franklin Roosevelt himself who said QUOTE: “Let us not be afraid to help each other. Let us never forget that government is ourselves and not an alien power over us. The ultimate rulers of our democracy are not a President and Senators and Congressmen and government officials but the voters of this country. END QUOTE.
- So as one government official – let me say this. The crisis of economic inequality is massive. But it is well within our power to take it head on, and a make a real difference.

- And we won't do it from the top-down. That never works.
- We'll do it as a progressive force...city by city, neighborhood by neighborhood...listening to the people who sent us to make the change for which they hunger.
- Answering THEIR call...their DEMAND...that we create a more just nation, and an economy that works for EVERYONE again.
- Thank you.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Snyder, Thomas; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea Subject: Re: Quinnipiac NYC MAYOR Advisory
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:24:10 PM
Attachments: image001.png

Funky.. But whatever

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 12:20 PM
To: "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Anthony Shorris <AShorris@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: FW: Quinnipiac NYC MAYOR Advisory

Poll results:

MBdB approval 44-40 (49-40 in January)

Natl push a distraction: 46 yes; 42 no

Large racial splits remain:

AA: 68-19 (78-15 in Jan)

W: 34-56 (32-57)

L: 48-32 (32-57)

59-30 – Honest and trustworthy

50-44 – understands my probs

44-50 – strong leader

Schools – Approve handling of schools 41-42 (48-33 in Jan)

Crime – Approve handling of crime 42-49 (50-41 in Jan)

Mayoral control: 28 – mayor sole control; 60 – shared control

From: Alyssa Adler [<mailto:aadler@Rubenstein.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 6:00 AM

Subject: Quinnipiac NYC MAYOR Advisory

Maurice Carroll, Assistant Director,
Quinnipiac University Poll
(203) 582-5334

Rubenstein Associates, Inc.
Public Relations
Contact: Pat Smith (212) 843-8026

MEDIA ADVISORY

QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY RELEASES RESULTS OF NEW YORK CITY POLL ON MAYOR DE BLASIO, PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Maurice Carroll, assistant director of the Quinnipiac University Poll, will discuss results of a poll of New York City voters, asking their opinions of Mayor de Blasio, city officials, and the public school system, Tuesday, May 12th, 3:00 PM, City Hall, Room 9.

DATE: TUESDAY, MAY 12TH

TIME: 3:00 P.M.

PLACE: CITY HALL ROOM 9

###

Follow us on Twitter @QuinnipiacPoll

From: B
To: [REDACTED]
Cc: "ifdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Update pls
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:35:12 PM

Did Ben Jealous sign onto the TPA yet?

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: FW: WH pool report #3 (part II)
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:37:44 PM

From: White House Press Office [<mailto:noreply@messages.whitehouse.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:31 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Fw: WH pool report #3 (part II)

From: Annie LINSKEY [<mailto:annie.linskey@globe.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:22 PM
To: Rangel, Antoinette N. EOP
Subject: WH pool report #3 (part II)

WH pool report #3 (part II). Poverty panel at Georgetown

Q. From EJ Dionne to POTUS: What is something we could actually get done. (Makes joke about how the audience is religious, and believes in miracles.)

"The best anti-poverty program is a job," Obama says.

"What has happened is that since 1973 over the last 40 years, the share of income going to the bottom 90 percent has shrunk," Obama says.

"We can't talk about poverty without talking about the middle class."

POTUS notes that he's read Robert Putnam's book on poverty. ("Our Kids.")

"There have always been trends in which concentrations of wealth can lead to some being left behind. What's happened in our economy is those doing better are withdrawing from the commons." (Kids go to private schools, work in private clubs.)

Says that government has been "under attack" for the past 30 years.

Obama challenges Putnam's view that the 1960s were a rosier time for mobility
"Even back in Bob's day that was happening, it was happening to black people," Obama says.

"Who had access to the fire fighters job" all those "were foreclosed to the minority population for decades," POTUS says.

"It's hard being poor. People don't like being poor. It's time consuming, it's stressful. It's hard," Obama says.

"I say all this and I notice this is not an answer to your question," Obama says.

POTUS points to state, local and federal budgets. "We don't make those same common investments that we used to, and it's made an impact," Obama says

"Part of what happened in our politics and part of what has shifted ... elites in a very mobile globalized world are able to live together away from folks who are not as wealthy. They feel less of a commitment to making those investments," Obama says.

"What used to be racial segregation mirrors itself in class segregation," Obama says.

There has always been a strain in American politics where if you are struggling "who are you mad at" Obama says. "To suggest that the poor are sponges, leaches" got traction, Obama says.

"If you watch FOX news on a constant basis, it is a constant menu. They will make me mad. I don't know where they find them," Obama says. Obama makes some reference to the "Obama-phone."

"If we are going to change how John Boehner and Mitch McConnell think" we are going to have to change our body politic, Obama says.

Says we will have to change the ways news media reports on poverty.

Obama name checks Pres Lincoln, says he supported land grant colleges.

Now Brooks, the conservative on the panel, starts talking.
Brooks: "No economist says we don't need public goods."

"When we don't make cost benefit calculations" on what to the public pays for then "the poor pays" Brooks says

Sent from my iPhone

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: POTUS talking about closing carried interest loophole now!
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:40:01 PM

He says, "I've been called Hitler for doing this...this is an actual quote from a hedge fund manager"

Now quoting story about top 25 hedge fund managers making more than all the kindergarten teachers in the country...stealing our 3:00 p.m. remarks!!!

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: FW: WH Pool Report #3 (part III)
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:47:47 PM

From: White House Press Office [<mailto:noreply@messages.whitehouse.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:49 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Fw: WH Pool Report #3 (part III)

From: Annie LINSKEY [<mailto:annie.linskey@globe.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM
To: Rangel, Antoinette N. EOP
Subject: WH Pool Report #3 (part III)

WH Pool Report #3 (part III)

Georgetown University poverty forum. (Note on attendance -- 700 people are here from WH per Mary A. Haines Deputy Director of Protocol & Events Georgetown University)

POTUS speaking again. He seems to be using the phrase "turbo charged" a lot.

Talks about how CEO pays has increased significantly. Mentions Ayn Rand for the second time.

POTUS turns to a comment that Dionne made earlier. The comment was that POTUS speaks differently when talking to a black audience than, say, an all female audience.

"If I'm giving a commencement with Morehouse, I will have a convo about men taking responsibilities as fathers," Obama says.

"I make no apology for that.
the reason is because I'm a black man who grew up without a father," Obama says.

"For me to have that conversation doesn't negate the need for early childhood programs"
Obama says.

"I have a bunch of kids right now who are graduating and I want them to know they can have an impact," Obama says. Talks about his "My Brothers Keeper" program.

Says that when a young black person asks him about how he might forgive an absentee father "I'm not going to have a conversation with him about macro economics," Obama says.

"We are going to argue hard for those public investments. We're going to argue hard for early education," Obama says.

"I'm all for values, I'm all for character." ... "All of those things are shaped by what they see," Obama says.

"Some of those kids aren't going to get enough help with that," Obama says.

POTUS starts talking about closing the carried interest loophole. "I've been called Hitler for doing this," Obama says.

Obama says top 25 hedgefund managers make more money than all kindergarden teachers in the country.

"I'm not saying this because I dislike hedge fund managers or think they are evil," Obama says. "You pretty much have more than you'll ever use and your family will ever use."

Says closing the carried interest loophole could pay for early childhood education.

"If we can't ask for societies lottery winners for that modest contribution than really this conversation is all for show," Obama says (audience claps.)

Sent from my iPhone

Unsubscribe

The White House · 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW · Washington DC 20500 · 202-456-1111

From: Fink, Avi
To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Donovan
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:48:04 PM

I can try and get this

-----Original Message-----

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana; Fink, Avi; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Donovan

I just got this Intel -- we should try to track it down with his folks if possible

> On May 12, 2015, at 12:44 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> + EL
>
> IS he doing a reception?
>
>> On 5/12/15, 12:43 PM, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>
>> Getting sworn in in dc this evening if we want to stop by and shake hand
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Richardson, Jerika; Hayley Prim
Subject: Re: TPA tweet
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:03:11 PM

Hold. He's rewriting.

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 1:03 PM
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

How about this?

Ending mass incarceration, esp for people of color, is key to a fair society.
#p2Agenda will take this on. @TheRevAl @VanJones68 @hmcghee

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 12:50 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: TPA tweet

Ending mass incarceration, esp for people of color, is key to our future as a fair society. The Progressive Agenda will take on this issue

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: RE: Obama at Georgetown
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:05:17 PM

WH just sent another:

From: Annie LINSKEY [<mailto:annie.linskey@globe.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:59 PM
To: Rangel, Antoinette N. EOP
Subject: WH Pool report #3 (part IV)

WH pool report #3 (part IV)
(Final chapter from the poverty forum.)

Q. Dionne asks POTUS about role for religious/faith communities in poverty.

POTUS:

"I think that faith based groups across the country and around the world understand the centrality and importance of this issue in an intimate way."

"They are embedded in communities," Obama says.

"When I think about my own Christian faith and my own obligations it is important for me to do what I can myself individually," Obama says. "But I also think it's important to have a voice in the larger debate and I think it would be powerful for our faith based organizations to speak out on this in a more forceful fashion."

"This may sound self-interested" ... POTUS notes that he disagrees with the evangelicals on some issues "there is great caring and great concern but when it comes to what are you really going after, what is the defining issues when you are talking in your congregations this is often viewed as a 'nice to have' relative to an issue like abortion."

"That's how it's perceived in our political circles," Obama said.

"I think people don't set out wanting to be selfish," Obama said.

"Nobody has said that better than Pope Francis who has been transformative through his sincerity and insistence that this is vital to who we are" Obama says

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:58 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
Subject: Obama at Georgetown

As requested, here are all the pool reports in a single email. There might be more to follow, but White House hasn't sent yet:

From: Annie LINSKEY [<mailto:annie.linskey@globe.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 11:50 AM
To: Rangel, Antoinette N. EOP
Subject: WH pool report #3 (part I)

WH Pool Report #3 (part I)

Georgetown University President
John J. DeGioia introduced POTUS.

Potus spoke on a panel at Gaston Hall in Georgetown University, which is a stunning auditorium with religious scenes and gold leaf painted on the walls.

Other panel members include Robert Putnam (Author "Our Kids")
Arthur Brooks (Prez of AEI)
EJ Dionne (WaPo columnist)

OBAMA (check quotes against transcript):

"I think we are at a moment in part of what happened in Baltimore and Ferguson and other places ... where it might be able to refocus attention on poverty."

"Part of the reason I thought this venue would be useful is that we have been stuck, I think for a long time, in a debate that creates a couple of straw men."

Obama says the "stereotype" on the left of people who want to throw money at poverty (paraphrasing here.)

Then you have "cold hearted capitalist types" who are reading "Ayn Ryan" (audience of mostly student laughs)

"We can do something about these issues. I think it is a mistake for us to suggest somehow that effort effort we make has failed and we are powerless to address poverty."

Points to statistics showing poverty has gone down in some places.

"One of the things I'm always concerned about is cynicism."

Obama says he walks around the South Lawn with his CoS, and they talk about "values" -- and tell each other they must "guard against cynicism" especially in "this town."

Sent from my iPhone

From: Annie LINSKEY [<mailto:annie.linskey@globe.com>]

Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:22 PM

To: Rangel, Antoinette N. EOP

Subject: WH pool report #3 (part II)

WH pool report #3 (part II). Poverty panel at Georgetown

Q. From EJ Dionne to POTUS: What is something we could actually get done. (Makes joke about how the audience is religious, and believes in miracles.)

"The best anti-poverty program is a job," Obama says.

"What has happened is that since 1973 over the last 40 years, the share of income going to the bottom 90 percent has shrunk," Obama says.

"We can't talk about poverty without talking about the middle class."

POTUS notes that he's read Robert Putnam's book on poverty. ("Our Kids.")

"There have always been trends in which concentrations of wealth can lead to some being left behind. What's happened in our economy is those doing better are withdrawing from the commons." (Kids go to private schools, work in private clubs.)

Says that government has been "under attack" for the past 30 years.

Obama challenges Putnam's view that the 1960s were a rosier time for mobility

"Even back in Bob's day that was happening, it was happening to black people," Obama says.

"Who had access to the fire fighters job" all those "were foreclosed to the minority population for decades," POTUS says.

"It's hard being poor. People don't like being poor. It's time consuming, it's stressful. It's hard," Obama says.

"I say all this and I notice this is not an answer to your question," Obama says.

POTUS points to state, local and federal budgets. "We don't make those same common investments that we used to, and it's made an impact," Obama says

"Part of what happened in our politics and part of what has shifted ... elites in a very mobile globalized world are able to live together away from folks who are not as wealthy. They feel less of a commitment to making those investments," Obama says.

"What used to be racial segregation mirrors itself in class segregation," Obama says.

There has always been a strain in American politics where if you are struggling "who are you mad at" Obama says. "To suggest that the poor are sponges, leaches" got traction, Obama says.

"If you watch FOX news on a constant basis, it is a constant menu. They will make me mad. I don't know where they find them," Obama says. Obama makes some reference to the "Obama-phone."

"If we are going to change how John Boehner and Mitch McConnell think" we are going to have to change our body politic, Obama says.

Says we will have to change the ways news media reports on poverty.

Obama name checks Pres Lincoln, says he supported land grant colleges.

Now Brooks, the conservative on the panel, starts talking.

Brooks: "No economist says we don't need public goods."

"When we don't make cost benefit calculations" on what to the public pays for then "the poor pays" Brooks says

Sent from my iPhone

From: Annie LINSKEY [<mailto:annie.linskey@globe.com>]

Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM

To: Rangel, Antoinette N. EOP

Subject: WH Pool Report #3 (part III)

WH Pool Report #3 (part III)

Georgetown University poverty forum. (Note on attendance -- 700 people are here from WH per Mary A. Haines

Deputy Director of Protocol & Events Georgetown University)

POTUS speaking again. He seems to be using the phrase "turbo charged" a lot.

Talks about how CEO pays has increased significantly. Mentions Ayn Rand for the second time.

POTUS turns to a comment that Dionne made earlier. The comment was that POTUS speaks differently when talking to a black audience than, say, an all female audience.

"If I'm giving a commencement with Morehouse, I will have a convo about men taking responsibilities as fathers," Obama says.

"I make no apology for that.

the reason is because I'm a black man who grew up without a father," Obama says.

"For me to have that conversation doesn't negate the need for early childhood programs" Obama says.

"I have a bunch of kids right now who are graduating and I want them to know they can have an impact," Obama says. Talks about his "My Brothers Keeper" program.

Says that when a young black person asks him about how he might forgive an absentee father

"I'm not going to have a conversation with him about macro economics," Obama says.

"We are going to argue hard for those public investments. We're going to argue hard for early education," Obama says.

"I'm all for values, I'm all for character." ... "All of those things are shaped by what they see," Obama says.

"Some of those kids aren't going to get enough help with that," Obama says.

POTUS starts talking about closing the carried interest loophole. "I've been called Hitler for doing this," Obama says.

Obama says top 25 hedgefund managers make more money than all kindergarden teachers in the country.

"I'm not saying this because I dislike hedge fund managers or think they are evil," Obama says. "You pretty much have more than you'll ever use and your family will ever use."

Says closing the carried interest loophole could pay for early childhood education.

"If we can't ask for societies lottery winners for that modest contribution than really this conversation is all for show," Obama says (audience claps.)

Sent from my iPhone

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil
Subject: WJC about Eric Garner earlier today
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:10:40 PM

Speaking briefly about the criminal justice system, he evoked the death of Eric Garner last July, but appeared not to remember his name.

“Remember when the fellow was dying in New York, who was selling the illegal cigarettes in the street and he had a bunch of kids and he was very much overweight and was put in a chokehold and his cardio-vascular system failed,” Clinton said.

He contrasted the tragedy of his death and the protests it sparked with the death of Ezell Ford, a civilian, by police hands in Los Angeles days later, where there were no protests because a system of “community decision makers” was instituted to review every police incident.

There weren’t riots,” Clinton said. “People felt like they were part of a process that treated them like they mattered. That their children’s lives were not insignificant...that’s the big test of the entire world.”

Read more: <http://www.politico.com/story/2015/05/bill-clinton-immigration-citizenship-path-117856.html#ixzz3ZwfAxWB3>

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor’s Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: The latest for 3pm statement
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:11:49 PM

They all look the same to me. Whats changing?

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:56 PM
To: B
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Aaron PickrellEmail; Wolfe, Emma; Hayley Prim; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: The latest for 3pm statement

DRAFT REMARKS FINAL
TPA KICK-OFF
5/12/15

I'm New York Mayor Bill de Blasio, and I want to thank so many of my fellow progressives – mayors, Members of the House and Senate, labor leaders, civil rights champions, and top progressive activists for joining us here today.

Six weeks ago, I convened a small group of progressive leaders in New York City to discuss the central crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.

We pledged to reach out to hundreds of our fellow progressives and work together to generate a serious, bold set of solutions to that crisis.

So today, we are announcing, and signing onto, “The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality.”

These 13 progressive ideas will make an enormous difference in combatting income inequality – BOLD steps like a $15 minimum wage...national paid sick and family leave laws... universal Pre-K, after-school and child care...closing the tax loopholes that CEOs, hedge fund managers, and billionaires use to avoid paying their fair share.

The Progressive Agenda is a bold first step. And there will be more to come.

I've spoken to many in our coalition about the next chapter in this effort – covering issues that range from an expansion of Social Security...to debt-free college...to investing in schools, not jails...and giving people returning home from prison a second chance at an economic future. We look forward to soon adding those priorities to what we're unveiling today.

The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept. America needs economic policies that reward WORK...and not just wealth.

And here's why.

There's something happening out there...an urgent call for change...given voice by everyday people across this country. Just last month, more than 60,000 people took to the streets in 200 cities – all fighting for a higher minimum wage.

This isn't business as usual. It's a new politics that puts PEOPLE ahead of profits...that values WORK instead of wealth. We'll be calling on candidates and elected officials to stiffen their backbones, champion the progressive policies that our nation needs...and join our growing cause.

We also ask everyday people across America to join us...to sign up at our website – Progressive Agenda DOT U-S.

And while you're there, please read the beautiful invocation on behalf of our cause authored by the legendary Toni Morrison...a "founding member" of the group gathered here today...a woman whose words inform and inspire so many millions across our nation.

Now, let me turn to someone whose extraordinary work and commitment to genuine grassroots action has literally transformed progressive politics...former DNC Chairman, Governor Howard Dean.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Singleton, Jessica; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED] Rodriguez, Tobias \(Media\)
Subject: Re: TPA tweet
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:15:01 PM

ASAP

From: <Singleton>, Jessica <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 1:14 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]> "Rodriguez, Tobias (Media)" <tobrodriguez@digital.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: TPA tweet

+ Tobias. What is the timing for this?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:15 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

Here's what MBDB approved:

Money spent on prisons better spent on education, jobs. Will work with @TheRevAl @VanJones68 @hmcghee to end mass incarceration.
#p2Agenda

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 1:03 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

Boss making edits

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 01:03 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Richardson, Jerika; Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

How about this?

Ending mass incarceration, esp for people of color, is key to a fair society.
#p2Agenda will take this on. @TheRevAl @VanJones68 @hmcghee

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 12:50 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Cc: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: TPA tweet

Ending mass incarceration, esp for people of color, is key to our future as a fair society. The Progressive Agenda will take on this issue

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "John Del Cecato"; Singleton, Jessica; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED] Rodriguez, Tobias \(Media\)
Subject: RE: TPA tweet
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:16:55 PM

Ok

JS/TR can you que up

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:18 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Singleton, Jessica; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED] Rodriguez, Tobias (Media)
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

Sooner the better

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 1:14 PM
To: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>, "Rodriguez, Tobias (Media)" <tobrodriguez@digital.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: TPA tweet

Before 3 pm

From: Singleton, Jessica
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:14 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED] Rodriguez, Tobias (Media)
Subject: RE: TPA tweet

+ Tobias. What is the timing for this?

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:15 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

Here's what MBDB approved:

Money spent on prisons better spent on education, jobs. Will work with @TheRevAl @VanJones68 @hmcghee to end mass incarceration.

#p2Agenda

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 1:03 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

Boss making edits

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 01:03 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Richardson, Jerika; Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

How about this?

Ending mass incarceration, esp for people of color, is key to a fair society.
#p2Agenda will take this on. @TheRevAl @VanJones68 @hmcghee

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 12:50 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: TPA tweet

Ending mass incarceration, esp for people of color, is key to our future as a fair society. The Progressive Agenda will take on this issue

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Rodriguez, Tobias \(Media\); John Del Cecato
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Hagelgans, Andrea; Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED]
Subject: RE: TPA tweet
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:17:18 PM

thanks

-----Original Message-----

From: Tobias Rodriguez [<mailto:tobrodriguez@digital.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:18 PM
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

Tweeting now.

Money spent on prisons better spent on education, jobs. Will work with @TheRevAl @VanJones68 @hmcghee to end mass incarceration. #p2Agenda

Sent from my iPhone

On May 12, 2015, at 1:16 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>> wrote:

ASAP

From: <Singleton>, Jessica <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 1:14 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>
Cc: "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]<[mailto:\[REDACTED\]](mailto:[REDACTED])>> "Rodriguez, Tobias (Media)" <tobrodriguez@digital.nyc.gov<<mailto:tobrodriguez@digital.nyc.gov>>>
Subject: RE: TPA tweet

+ Tobias. What is the timing for this?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:15 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Richardson, Jerika; [REDACTED] [mailto:\[REDACTED\]](mailto:[REDACTED])
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

Here's what MBDB approved:

Money spent on prisons better spent on education, jobs. Will work with @TheRevAl @VanJones68 @hmcghee to end mass incarceration. #p2Agenda

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 1:03 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>
Cc: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>, "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]<[mailto:\[REDACTED\]](mailto:[REDACTED])>>
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

Boss making edits

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 01:03 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Singleton, Jessica; Richardson, Jerika; Hayley Prim
<<mailto:>>
Subject: Re: TPA tweet

How about this?

Ending mass incarceration, esp for people of color, is key to a fair society. #p2Agenda will take this on.
@TheRevAl @VanJones68 @hmcghee

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 12:50 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>
Cc: "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>, "Richardson, Jerika" <JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:JLRichardson@cityhall.nyc.gov>>>
Subject: TPA tweet

Ending mass incarceration, esp for people of color, is key to our future as a fair society. The Progressive Agenda will take on this issue

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: TPA going down
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:17:51 PM

Making sure you guys are aware:

Jonathan Weisman (@jonathanweisman)

5/12/15, 1:06 PM

Pro trade Dems emerge from meeting saying they will block TPA. Wyden, Bennet, Warner, Feinstein, Nelson, Murray, McCaskill, Cantwell

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Leopold, Elana
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re:
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:00:50 PM

They're sitting in front of me

Sent from my iPhone

> On May 12, 2015, at 2:00 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Are we printing out his 3pm remarks here?
>
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Leopold, Elana
Subject: Latest for 3pm
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:12:55 PM
Attachments: BDB TPA KICK OFF.docx

DRAFT REMARKS FINAL
TPA KICK-OFF
5/12/15

I'm New York Mayor Bill de Blasio, and I want to thank so many of my fellow progressives – mayors, Members of the House and Senate, labor leaders, civil rights champions, and top progressive activists for joining us here today.

Six weeks ago, I convened a small group of progressive leaders in New York City to discuss the central crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.

We pledged to reach out to hundreds of our fellow progressives and work together to generate a serious, bold set of solutions to that crisis.

So today, we are announcing, and signing onto, “The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality.”

These 13 progressive ideas will make an enormous difference in combatting income inequality – BOLD steps like a $15 minimum wage...national paid sick and family leave laws...universal Pre-K, after-school and child care...closing the tax loopholes that CEOs, hedge fund managers, and billionaires use to avoid paying their fair share.

The Progressive Agenda is a bold first step. And there will be more to come.

I've spoken to many in our coalition about the next chapter in this effort – covering issues that range from an expansion of Social Security...to debt-free college...to investing in schools, not jails...and giving people returning home from prison a second chance at an economic future. We look forward to soon adding those priorities to what we're unveiling today.

The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept. America needs economic policies that reward WORK...and not just wealth.

And here's why.

There's something happening out there...an urgent call for change...given voice by everyday people across this country. Just last month, more than 60,000 people took to the streets in 200 cities – all fighting for a higher minimum wage.

This isn't business as usual. It's a new politics that puts PEOPLE ahead of profits...that values WORK instead of wealth. We'll be calling on candidates and elected officials to stiffen their backbones, champion the progressive policies that our nation needs...and join our growing cause.

We also ask everyday people across America to join us...to sign up at our website – Progressive Agenda DOT U-S.

And while you're there, please read the beautiful invocation on behalf of our cause authored by the legendary Toni Morrison...a "founding member" of the group gathered here today...a woman whose words inform and inspire so many millions across our nation.

Now, let me turn to someone whose extraordinary work and commitment to genuine grassroots action has literally transformed progressive politics...former DNC Chairman, Governor Howard Dean.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Leopold, Elana; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Fwd: Hayley says he should be there between 250pm and 300pm
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:21:10 PM

What's the call?

From: Leopold, Elana
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 02:06 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Fwd: Hayley says he should be there between 250pm and 300pm

? - should we leave later

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: "Grybauskas, Stefan" <SGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: May 12, 2015 at 2:03:44 PM EDT
To: "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Hayley says he should be there between 250pm and 300pm

Stefan Grybauskas
Associate Director of Advance
Office of the Mayor
City of New York
C: 347-515-5874

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B; [REDACTED]
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; John, Roxanne; FLONYC; Bray, Jackie
Subject: Re: Toni essay
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:23:16 PM

This was handled. Being uploaded now on website.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 07:55 AM
To: 'BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov' <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>; [REDACTED]
<[REDACTED]>
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; John, Roxanne; FLONYC; Bray, Jackie
Subject: Re: Toni essay

We are working on it!

From: B
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 07:52 AM
To: [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]>
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; John, Roxanne; FLONYC
Subject: Re: Toni essay

Audio is fine -- doesn't need to be video. But video is good too

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:[REDACTED]]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 07:51 AM
To: B
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; John, Roxanne; FLONYC
Subject: Re: Toni essay

Ah, sorry! Misread the email. The essay is posted on the site but we will work to get Chirlane's video up asap.

On Tuesday, May 12, 2015, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Excellent!! Thanks

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:[REDACTED]]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 07:45 AM
To: B
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; John, Roxanne
Subject: Re: Toni essay

Yep already done and ready to go

On Tuesday, May 12, 2015, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

If you can get it done and on the website by 3pm, that's ideal

----- Original Message -----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea

Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 06:54 AM

To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; [REDACTED]

<[REDACTED]>

Cc: Walzak, Phil; John, Roxanne

Subject: Re: Toni essay

I love that idea

----- Original Message -----

From: B

Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 06:41 AM

To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; [REDACTED]

<[REDACTED]>

Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; John, Roxanne

Subject: Toni essay

One more thought: Chirlane can tape audio of it and that could go up on the website as well. Might be a nice touch. Chirlane's game to do it

--

Hayley Prim

c: [REDACTED]

--

Hayley Prim

c: [REDACTED]

From: John Del Cecato
To: Leopold, Elana; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Hayley says he should be there between 250pm and 300pm
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:24:20 PM

don't want to be late! Car time is fun time

From: <Leopold>, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 2:22 PM
To: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Hayley says he should be there between 250pm and 300pm

Jdc says head over there and sit in the car

Sent from my iPhone

On May 12, 2015, at 2:21 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

What's the call?

From: Leopold, Elana
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 02:06 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Fwd: Hayley says he should be there between 250pm and 300pm

? - should we leave later

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: "Grybauskas, Stefan" <SGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: May 12, 2015 at 2:03:44 PM EDT
To: "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Hayley says he should be there between 250pm and 300pm

Stefan Grybauskas
Associate Director of Advance
Office of the Mayor
City of New York

C: 347-515-5874

From: Gunaratna.Mahen
To: Haselbans.Andrea@afodmedia.com
Subject: FW: Remarks by the President in Conversation on Poverty at Georgetown University
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:59:09 PM

From: White House Press Office [mailto:noreply@messages.whitehouse.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 3:00 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Remarks by the President in Conversation on Poverty at Georgetown University

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

2015

May 12,

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT IN CONVERSATION ON POVERTY

Georgetown University
Washington, D.C.

11:39 A.M. EDT

MR. DIONNE: It's a real honor to be here today with my two Presidents -- President Obama and President DeGioia. (Laughter.) And my friend, David Brooks, hurled the most vicious insult at me ever once when he said that I was the only person he ever met whose eyes lit up at the words, "panel discussion." (Laughter.) And I have to confess my eyes did light up when I was asked to do this particular panel discussion -- and not just for the obvious reason, to my left -- and, again, it's a real honor to be with you, Mr. President -- or Arthur or Bob.

Poverty is a subject we talk about mainly when tragic events, such as those we witnessed recently in Baltimore, grab our attention. Then we push it aside; we bury it; we say it's not politically shrewd to talk about it. So I salute Georgetown, my friend John Carr and Galen Carey, and all the other extraordinary people who are gathered here for the poverty summit from all religious traditions all over the country.

Our friend, Jim Wallace, once said that if you cut everything Jesus said about the poor out of the Gospel you have a book full of holes. And these are evangelicals, Catholics and others who understand what the Scripture said.

Just two quick organizing points on our discussion. The first is that when it's time to go, please keep your seat so the President can be escorted out. The other is that Bob and Arthur and I all agreed that we should direct somewhat more attention to President Obama than to the other members of the panel. (Laughter.) I just say that -- I say that in advance so that you know this was our call and not some exercise in executive power. (Laughter.) This was our decision to do this. (Applause.)

And in any event, we hope this will be a back-and-forth kind of discussion. Bob and Arthur, feel free to interrupt the President if you feel like it. (Laughter.)

My first question, Mr. President, is the obvious one. A friend of mine said yesterday, when do Presidents do panels? And what came to mind is the late Admiral Stockdale, "Who am I? Why am I here?" (Laughter.) And I'd like to ask you why you decided -- this is a very unusual venue for a President to put himself in -- and I'd like to ask you where do you hope this discussion will lead beyond today?

And I was struck with something you said in your speech last week. You said, politicians talk about poverty and inequality, and then gut policies that help alleviate poverty and reverse inequality. Why are you doing this, and how do you want us to come out of here?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, I want to thank President DeGioia, the Georgetown community, all the groups -- nonprofits, faith-based groups and others -- who are hosting this today. And I want to thank this terrific panel.

I think that we are at a moment -- in part because of what's happened in Baltimore and Ferguson and other places, but in part because a growing awareness of inequality in our society -- where it may be possible not only to refocus attention on the issue of poverty, but also maybe to bridge some of the gaps that have existed and the ideological divides that have prevented us from making progress.

And there are a lot of folks here who I have worked with -- they disagree with me on some issues, but they have great sincerity when it comes to wanting to deal with helping the least of these. And so this is a wonderful occasion for us to join together.

Part of the reason I thought this venue would be useful and I wanted to have a dialogue with Bob and Arthur is that we have been stuck, I think for a long time, in a debate that creates a couple of straw men. The stereotype is that you've got folks on the left who just want to pour more money into social programs, and don't care anything about culture or parenting or family structures, and that's one stereotype. And then you've got cold-hearted, free market, capitalist types who are reading Ayn Rand and -- (laughter) -- think everybody are moochers. And I think the truth is more complicated.

I think that there are those on the conservative spectrum who deeply care about the least of these, deeply care about the poor; exhibit that through their churches, through community groups, through philanthropic efforts, but are suspicious of what government can do. And then there are those on the left who I think are in the trenches every day and see how important parenting is and how important family structures are, and the connective tissue that holds communities together and recognize that that contributes to poverty when those structures fray, but also believe that government and resources can make a difference in creating an environment in which young people can succeed despite great odds.

And it seems to me that if coming out of this conversation we can have a both/and conversation rather than either/or conversation, then we'll be making some progress.

And the last point I guess I want to make is I also want to emphasize we can do something about these issues. I think it is a mistake for us to suggest that somehow every effort we make has failed and we are powerless to address poverty. That's just not true. First of all, just in absolute terms, the poverty rate when you take into account tax and transfer programs, has been reduced about 40 percent since 1967.

Now, that does not lessen our concern about communities where poverty remains chronic. It does suggest, though, that we have been able to lessen poverty when we decide we want to do something about it. In every low-income community around the country, there are programs that work to provide ladders of opportunity to young people; we just haven't figured out how to scale them up.

And so one of the things I'm always concerned about is cynicism. My Chief of Staff, Denis McDonough -- we take walks around the South Lawn, usually when the weather is good, and a lot of it is policy talk, sometimes it's just talk about values. And one of our favorite sayings is, our job is to guard against cynicism, particularly in this town. And I think it's important when it comes to dealing with issues of poverty for us to guard against cynicism, and not buy the idea that the poor will always be with us and there's nothing we can do -- because there's a lot we can do. The question is do we have the political will, the communal will to do something about it.

MR. DIONNE: Thank you, Mr. President. I feel as a journalist maybe I'm the one representative of cynicism up here -- (laughter) -- so I'll try to do my job. I want to go through the panel and come back to you, Mr. President. I want to invite Bob, and I'm going to encourage us to reach for solutions. But before we get there, I think it's important to say that your book, Bob, your book, "Our Kids," is above all a moral call on the country to think about all the kids in the country who have been left out as our kids, in some deep way. And you make the point that the better off and the poor are now so far apart that the fortunate don't even see the lives of the unlucky and the left behind. You wrote, "Before I began this research, I was like that."

And following on what the President said, you insist that the decline in social mobility, the blocking of the American Dream for so many is a purple problem. And I may have some questions later on that, but I really would like you to lay out the red and blue components. And also, how do we break through a politics in which food stamp recipients are still somehow cast as privileged or the poor are demonized. But I'd like you to lay out sort of the moral call of your book.

MR. PUTNAM: Thanks, E.J., and thanks to the President and to Arthur for joining me in this conversation.

I think in this domain there's good news and bad news, and it's important to begin with the bad news because we have to understand where we are. The President is absolutely right that the War on Poverty did make a real difference, but it made a difference more for poverty among people of my age than it did for poverty among kids.

And with respect to kids, I completely agree with the President that we know about some things that would work and things that would make a real difference in the lives of poor kids, but what the book that you've deferred to, "Our Kids," what it presents is a lot of evidence of growing gaps between rich kids and poor kids; that over the last 30 or 40 years, things have gotten better and better for kids coming from well-off homes, and worse and worse for kids coming from less well-off homes.

And I don't mean Bill Gates and some homeless person. I mean people coming from college-educated homes -- their kids are doing better and better, and people coming from high school-educated homes, they're kids aren't. And it's not just that there's this class gap, but a class gap on our watch -- I don't mean just the President's watch, but I mean on my generation's watch -- that gap has grown.

And you can see it in measures of family stability. You can see it in measures of the investments that parents are able to make in their kids, the investments of money and the investments of time. You can see it in the quality of schools kids go to. You can see it in the character of the social and community support that kids -- rich kids and poor kids are getting from their communities. Church attendance is a good example of that, actually. Churches are an important source of social support for kids outside their own family, but church attendance is down much more rapidly among kids coming from impoverished backgrounds than among kids coming from wealthy backgrounds.

And so I think what all of that evidence suggests is that we do face, I think, actually a serious crisis in which, increasingly, the most important decision that anybody makes is choosing their parents. And if -- like my grandchildren are really smart, they were -- the best decision they ever made was to choose college-educated parents and great grandparents. But out there, someplace else, there is another bunch of kids who are just as talented and just as -- in principle -- just as hardworking, but who happened to choose parents who weren't very well-educated or weren't high-income, and those kids' fate is being determined by things that they had no control over. And that's fundamentally unfair.

It also is, by the way, bad for our economy, because when we have this large number of kids growing up in poverty, it's not like that's going to make things better for my grandchildren. It's going to make things worse for my grandchildren. So this is, in principle, a solution that we -- a problem that we ought to find solutions to.

And historically, this is a kind of problem that Americans have faced before and have solved, and this is the basis for my optimism. There have been previous periods in American history when we've had a great gap between rich and poor, when we've ignored the least of these, in which we've -- I'm thinking of the Gilded Age at the end of the 19th century -- and both of you have written about that period, in which there was a great gap between rich and poor and we were ignoring lots of kids, especially lots of immigrant kids. And America seemed to be going to hell in a hand basket. And there was a dominant philosophy, social Darwinism, which said that it's better for everybody if everybody is selfish, and the devil take the hindmost.

But that, unlike some of the ideology of Ayn Rand that you referred to -- but that period was quickly -- not quickly -- but was overcome by a real awakening of the conscience of America across party lines, with the important contribution of religious leaders and religious people, to the fact that these are all our kids.

And now is not the time to rehearse all of the lessons of that earlier period, but I think it does actually give me grounds for hope. This is a kind of problem that we could solve as long as we all recognize that it's in everybody's interest to raise up these poor kids and not to leave them in the dust.

MR. DIONNE: Thank you very much. By the way, let the record show the President was not looking at Arthur when he referred to cold-hearted capitalists. (Laughter.) But it is nice to have somebody here from the AEI.

MR. BROOKS: Well, D.J., when the President said that, I was just thinking -- what was going through my head was, please don't look at me, please don't look at me. (Laughter.) But you notice when Bob said this -- about the social Darwinism, he pointed at me. (Laughter.) So I'm more outnumbered than my Thanksgiving table in Seattle, let me tell you. (Laughter.)

MR. DIONNE: You just have to look into your heart, Arthur. And in fact, that's kind of what I want to ask you to do here. I mean, your views on these subjects have actually changed, and I think it's one of the reasons you wanted to join us today.

Back in 2010, you talked about makers and takers in society and a culture of redistribution. But in February 2014, you wrote a very important article and commentary -- the open-handed toward your brothers -- and you said we have to declare peace on the safety net, which I think is a really important thing to say.

And as the President suggested, the safety net we have has actually cut poverty substantially. So twin questions: Could you talk about how and why your own views have changed -- if I've fairly characterized that. And in the spirit we're celebrating here of trans-ideological nonpartisanship -- now, there's a mouthful for you -- in that spirit, where can Republicans cooperate with Democrats, conservatives with liberals, on safety net issues like making the earned income tax credit permanent or expanding the child tax credit? I mean, where can we find not just verbal common ground, but actual common ground to get things done for the least among us?

MR. BROOKS: Thank you, E.J. And thank you, Mr. President. It's an honor to be here and with all of you. This is such an important exercise in bringing Catholics and evangelicals together, but having a public discussion.

One of the main things that I do as President of AEI is to talk publicly about issues and start a conversation with my colleagues in a way that I hope can stimulate the conversation and spread it around the country.

At the American Enterprise Institute -- where we have a longstanding history of work on the nature of American capitalism -- when we're focusing very deeply on poverty, it sends a signal to a lot of people that are deeply involved in the free enterprise movement. My colleague, Robert Doar is here -- he came to AEI because poverty is the most important thing to him. And indeed, the reason I came into the free enterprise movement many years ago is because poverty is the thing I care about the most.

And in point of fact, 2 billion people around the world have been lifted up out of poverty because of ideas revolving around free enterprise and free trade, and the globalization of ideas of sharing through property rights and rule of law, and all the things that the President is talking about in policy debates right now.

That's why I'm in this particular movement. But we've gotten into a partisan moment where we substitute a moral consensus about how we serve the least of these, our brothers and sisters, where we pretend that that moral consensus is impossible,+++++ and we blow up policy differences until they become a holy war. That's got to stop because it's completely unnecessary. (Applause.) And we can stop that, absolutely, with a couple of key principles.

So how are we on the center right talking about poverty in the most effective way? Number one is with a conceptual matter. We have a grave tendency on both the left and the right to talk about poor people as "the other." Remember in Matthew 25, these are our brothers and sisters. Jim Olsen and I have this roadshow -- we go to campuses and everybody wants to set up something, right-left debates, and it never works out, because it turns out we both have a commitment to the teachings of the Savior when it comes to treating the least of these, our brothers and sisters.

When you talk about people as your brothers and sisters you don't talk about them as liabilities to manage. They're not liabilities to manage. They're assets to develop because every one of us made in God's image is an asset to develop. That's a completely different approach to poverty alleviation. That's a human capital approach to poverty alleviation. That's what we can do to stimulate that conversation on the political right, just as it can be on the political left.

One concept that rides along with that is to point out -- and this is what I do to many of my friends on Capitol Hill -- I remind them that just because people are on public assistance doesn't mean they want to be on public assistance. And that's the difference between people who factually are making a living and who are accepting public assistance. It's an important matter to remember about the motivations of people and humanizing them. And then the question is, how can we come together? How can we come together?

I have, indeed, written that it's time to declare peace on the safety net. And I say that as a political conservative. Why? Because Ronald Reagan said that; because Friedrich Hayek said that. This is not a radical position. In fact, the social safety net is one of the greatest achievements of free enterprise -- that we could have the wealth and largesse as a society, that we can help take care of people who are poor that we've never even met. It's ahistoric; it's never happened before. We should be proud of that.

But then when I talk to conservative policymakers, and say how should you distinguish yourself from the traditional positions in a marketplace of ideas from progressives, you should also talk about the fact that the safety net should be limited to people who are truly indigent, as opposed to being spread around in a way that metastasizes into middle-class entitlements and imperils our economy.

And the third part is that help should always come with the dignifying power of work to the extent that we can. Then we can have, with these three ideas -- declaring peace on the safety net, safety net only for the indigent, and always with work -- then we can have an interesting moral consensus and policy competition of ideas and maybe make some progress.

MR. DIONNE: Thank you. In fact, I'm hoping people will challenge each other about what that actually means in terms of policy. And I want to invite the President to do that.

I'm tempted, Mr. President, to ask you to sort of go in a couple of directions at once. One is, I am, again, hoping that you can enlist Arthur as your lobbyist on this. One kind of question I want to ask is if John Boehner and Mitch McConnell were watching this and suddenly had a conversion -- and there are a lot of religious people in the audience, so miracles --

THE PRESIDENT: I assure you they're not watching this. (Laughter.) But it's a hypothetical. (Laughter.)

MR. DIONNE: Well, it's a religious audience. I believe in miracles. (Laughter.) So if they said we are so persuaded that it's time we do something about the poor, Mr. President, tell us a few things that we'll actually pass, we'll do this -- when you think about -- we can talk kind of abstractly about the family on this side, and what government can do. What do you think would actually make a difference? So that's one kind of question I'm tempted to ask.

And maybe you could put that into the context of Bob's mention of the Gilded Age. As you know, I was much taken by that Osawatomie speech -- I even learned how to pronounce Osawatomie, thanks to you -- back in 20 -- help me. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: A couple years ago.

MR. DIONNE: A couple years ago -- 2011. And it really did put this conversation in context. We do seem in certain ways to be having the problems we had back then. So what would you tell Congress? Please help me on this. And how do we sort of move out of this Gilded Age feeling kind of period?

THE PRESIDENT: Let me tease out a couple things that both Bob and Arthur said -- and maybe some of these will be challenging to a couple of them and they may want to respond. But let me talk about big picture, and then we can talk about specifics.

First of all, I think we can all stipulate that the best antipoverty program is a job, which confers not just income, but structure and dignity and a sense of connection to community. Which means we have to spend time thinking about the macro-economy, the broader economy as a whole.

Now, what has happened is, is that since, let's say, 1973, over the last 40 years, the share of income going to the bottom 90 percent has shrunk from about 65 percent down to about 53 percent. It's a big shift. It's a big transfer. And so we can't have a conversation about poverty without talking about what's happened to the middle class and the ladders of opportunity into the middle class.

And when I read Bob's book, the first thing that strikes you is when he's growing up in Ohio, he's in a community where the banker is living in reasonable proximity to the janitor at the school. The janitor's daughter may be going out with the banker's son. There are a set of common institutions -- they may attend the same church; they may be members of the same rotary club; they may be active at the same parks -- and all the things that stitch them together. And that is all contributing to social mobility and to a sense of possibility and opportunity for all kids in that community.

Now, part of what's happened is that -- and this is where Arthur and I would probably have some disagreements. We don't dispute that the free market is the greatest producer of wealth in history -- it has lifted billions of people out of poverty. We believe in property rights, rule of law, so forth. But there has always been trends in the market in which concentrations of wealth can lead to some being left behind. And what's happened in our economy is that those who are doing better and better -- more skilled, more educated, luckier, having greater advantages -- are withdrawing from sort of the commons -- kids start going to private schools; kids start working out at private clubs instead of the public parks. An anti-government ideology then disinvests from those common goods and those things that draw us together. And that, in part, contributes to the fact that there's less opportunity for our kids, all of our kids.

Now, that's not inevitable. A free market is perfectly compatible with also us making investment in good public schools, public universities; investments in public parks; investments in a whole bunch -- public infrastructure that grows our economy and spreads it around. But that's, in part, what's been under attack for the last 30 years. And so, in some ways, rather than soften the edges of the market, we've turbocharged it. And we have not been willing, I think, to make some of those common investments so that everybody can play a part in getting opportunity.

Now, one other thing I've got to say about this is that even back in Bob's day that was also happening. It's just it was happening to black people. And so, in some ways, part of what's changed is that those biases or those restrictions on who had access to resources that allowed them to climb out of poverty -- who had access to the firefighters job, who had access to the assembly line job, the blue-collar job that paid well enough to be in the middle class and then got you to the suburbs, and then the next generation was suddenly office workers -- all those things were foreclosed to a big chunk of the minority population in this country for decades.

And that accumulated and built up. And over time, people with less and less resources, more and more strains -- because it's hard being poor. People don't like being poor. It's time-consuming; it's stressful. It's hard. And so over time, families frayed. Men who could not get jobs left. Mothers who are single are not able to read as much to their kids. So all that was happening 40 years ago to African Americans. And now what we're seeing is that those same trends have accelerated and they're spreading to the broader community.

But the pattern that, Bob, you're recording in some of your stories is no different than what William Julius Wilson was talking about when he talked about the truly disadvantaged. So I say all this -- and I know that was not an answer to your question. (Laughter.) I will be willing to answer it, but I think it is important for us at the outset to acknowledge if, in fact, we are going to find common ground, then we also have to acknowledge that there are certain investments we are willing to make as a society, as a whole, in public schools and public universities; in, today, I believe early childhood education; in making sure that economic opportunity is available in communities that are isolated, and that somebody can get a job, and that there's actually a train that takes folks to where the jobs are -- that broadband lines are in rural communities and not just in cities. And those things are not going to happen through market forces alone.

And if that's the case, then our government and our budgets have to reflect our willingness to make those investments. If we don't make those investments, then we could agree on the earned income tax credit -- which I know Arthur believes in. We could agree on home visitation for low-income parents. All those things will make a difference, but the broader trends in our society will make it harder and harder for us to deal with both inequality and poverty.

And so I think it's important for us to recognize there is a genuine debate here, and that is what portion of our collective wealth and budget are we willing to invest in those things that allow a poor kid, whether in a rural town, or in Appalachia, or in the inner city, to access what they need both in terms of mentors and social networks, as well as decent books and computers and so forth, in order for them to succeed along the terms that Arthur discussed.

And right now, they don't have those things, and those things have been stripped away. You look at state budgets, you look at city budgets, and you look at federal budgets, and we don't make those same common investments that we used to. And it's had an impact. And we shouldn't pretend that somehow we have been making those same investments. We haven't been. And there's been a very specific ideological push not to make those investments. That's where the argument comes in.

MR. DIONNE: And if I could follow up, which gets to the underlying problem where we talk, piously, sometimes, about let's tear down these ideological red/blue barriers, yet when push comes to shove, these things get rejected. How do you change the politics of that? I mean, as you said, Mitch McConnell and John Boehner were unlikely to be watching us -- that actually has a kind of political significance. Not to this event, but in general.

THE PRESIDENT: I was suggesting they're busy right now. They've got votes. (Laughter.)

MR. DIONNE: No, but I think you were saying something else. How do you tear down those barriers? Because you laid out a fairly robust agenda there. And I want to -- forgive me, Arthur and Bob -- but I'm curious, how do you get from here to there?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, part of what happened in our politics and part of what shifted from when Bob was young and he was seeing a genuine community -- there were still class divisions in your small town.

MR. PUTNAM: True.

THE PRESIDENT: There were probably certain clubs or certain activities that were still restricted to the banker's son as opposed to the janitor's son. But it was more integrated. Part of what's happened is, is that elites in a very mobile, globalized world are able to live together, away from folks who are not as wealthy, and so they feel less of a commitment to making those investments.

In that sense -- and what used to be racial segregation now mirrors itself in class segregation and this great sorting that's taking place. Now, that creates its own politics. Right? I mean, there's some communities where I don't know -- not only do I not know poor people, I don't even know people who have trouble paying the bills at the end of the month. I just don't know those people. And so there's a less sense of investment in those children. So that's part of what's happened.

But part of it has also been -- there's always been a strain in American politics where you've got the middle class and the question has been, who are you mad at, if you're struggling; if you're working, but you don't seem to be getting ahead. And over the last 40 years, sadly, I think there's been an effort to either make folks mad at folks at the top, or to be mad at folks at the bottom. And I think the effort to suggest that the poor are sponges, leaches, don't want to work, are lazy, are undeserving, got traction.

And, look, it's still being propagated. I mean, I have to say that if you watch Fox News on a regular basis, it is a constant menu -- they will find folks who make me mad. I don't know where they find them. (Laughter.) They're like, I don't want to work, I just want a free Obama phone -- (laughter) -- or whatever. And that becomes an entire narrative -- right? -- that gets worked up. And very rarely do you hear an interview of a waitress -- which is much more typical -- who's raising a couple of kids and is doing everything right but still can't pay the bills.

And so if we're going to change how John Boehner and Mitch McConnell think, we're going to have to change how our body politic thinks, which means we're going to have to change how the media reports on these issues and how people's impressions of what it's like to struggle in this economy looks like, and how budgets connect to that. And that's a hard process because that requires a much broader conversation than typically we have on the nightly news.

MR. DIONNE: I am tempted to welcome Arthur to defend his network. But instead, I want to sort of maybe invite him to an alter call here. (Laughter.) I want to invite you to a kind of alter call, which is, the President talked about some basis public investments that are actually pretty old-fashioned public investments, along the lines of somebody like President Eisenhower supported a lot of those kinds of investments --

THE PRESIDENT: Republican President Abraham Lincoln thought things like land-grant colleges and infrastructure, investments in basic research in science were important.

I suspect, Arthur, you'd agree in theory about those investments. And the question would be, how much?

MR. BROOKS: Look, no good economist, no self-respecting person who understands anything about economics denies that there are public goods. There just are public goods. We need public goods. Markets fail sometimes -- there's a role for the state. There are no radical libertarians up here, libertarians who believe that the state should not exist, for example. Even the libertarians don't think that. So we shouldn't caricature the views of others because, in point of fact, that impugns the motives.

I think that what we're talking about is, one, when are there public goods? When can the government provide them? And when are the benefits higher than the costs of the government proving these things? Because, in point of fact, when we don't make cost-benefit calculations at least at the macro level about public goods, the poor pay. This is a fact.

If you look at what's happening in the periphery countries of Europe today, as George W. Bush used to say, this is a true fact. (Laughter.) It's more emphasis. There's nothing wrong. (Laughter.) If you don't pay attention to the macro economy and the fiscal stability, you will become insolvent. And if you become insolvent, you will have austerity. And if you have austerity, the poor always pay. Jim Wallace taught me this. The poor always pay when there's austerity. The rich never pay. The rich never are left with the bill. It's the poor who are left with the bill.

So if you join me in believing the safety net is a fundamental, moral right, and it's a privilege of our society to provide, you must avoid austerity and you must avoid insolvency. And the only way that you can do that is with smart policies.

And I'm 100 percent sure the President agrees with me about smart macro-economic public policies, so I'm not caricaturing these views either. Although can you believe he said "Obama phone"? (Laughter.) And he's against the Obama phone. So let's stipulate to that. (Laughter.) Just because they took away his phone. (Laughter.)

Now, since we believe that there should be public goods, then we're really talking about the system that provides them and provides them efficiently. The President talked about the changing structure of the income distribution, and it's unambiguously true. What I would urge us to regret is this notion that it's not a shift, but a transfer. It's not a transfer.

Since the 1970s, it's not that the rich have gotten richer; because the poor have gotten poorer. The poor are not having their money taken away and given to the rich. The rich have gotten richer faster than the poor have moved up. And we might be concerned with that because that also reflects on opportunity. And as an opportunity society, as an equal opportunity society, we should all be really concerned with that.

But the extent that we can get away from this notion that the rich are stealing from the poor, then we can look at this in I think in a way that's constructive. Why? Because the rich are our neighbors and the poor are our neighbors, and everybody else should be our neighbors and they're all our kids. And I think getting away from that rhetoric is really important.

And then the last point, actually, as we come to consensus is remembering that capitalism or socialism or social democracy or any system is just a system. Look, it's just a system. It's just a machine. It's like your car. You can do great good with it, you can do great evil with it. It can't go uninhibited. So far it can't drive on its own. It will soon enough. The economy never will be able to.

Capitalism is nothing more than a system, and it must be predicated on right morals. It must be. Adam Smith taught me that. Adam Smith, the father of modern economics -- he wrote "The Wealth of Nations," in 1776 -- 17 years before he wrote "The Theory of Moral Sentiments," which was a more important book because it talked about what it meant as a society to earn the right to have free enterprise, to have free economics. And it was true then, and it's still true today.

So this is why this conference is so important. This conversation with the President of the United States is so important, from my point of view -- I say with appropriate humility -- is because we're talking about right morality toward our brothers and sisters, and built on that, that's when we can have an open discussion to get our capitalism right. And then the distribution of resources is only a tertiary question. (Applause.)

MR. DIONNE: I still want to know how much infrastructure you're actually willing to vote for, but I'll take --

MR. BROOKS: $41 billion.

MR. DIONNE: All right, it's a start. We can negotiate.

I want to -- this is in a way for both the President and Bob, because in this conversation about poverty, there's kind of consensus on this stage that, yes, you need to care about family structure, it really matters, but if you don't worry about the economy, you're not sort of thinking about why the battering ram is against the family.

And yet, this family conversation can make a lot of people feel uneasy because it sounds like either you're not taking politics seriously, or you're not taking the real economic pressure seriously. And I just want to share two things with the President and Bob, and have you respond.

One, as you can imagine, I asked a lot of smart people what they would ask about if they were in my position. And one very smart economist said, look, what we know is when we have really tight labor markets, unemployment down below -- down to 4 or even lower -- Kennedy, Johnson years, World War II, at the end of the Clinton years -- all kinds of good things start happening to poor people. So maybe, this person said, even though, he says, yes, family structure matters, let's stop with the moral lectures and just run a really tight economic policy, and we could have some really good things happen to us.

And then the other thing I wanted to share -- and I'm being pointed here, Mr. President, because you know and I've heard you talk about this, but not that often publicly, which is -- you know, I've heard you in those sessions you do with opinion reporters -- Ta-Nehisi Coates wrote something back in 2013 about your talk about what needs to happen inside the African American community -- I know you remember this: "Taking full measure of the Obama presidency thus far, it is hard to avoid the conclusion that this White House has one way of addressing the social ills that afflict black people and particularly black youth, and another way of addressing everyone else. I would have a hard time imagining the President telling the women of Barnard that 'there's no longer room for any excuses' -- as though they were in the business of making them."

I'd love you to address sort of the particular question about -- maybe it is primarily about economics because we can't do much about the other things through government policy, and also answer Ta-Nehisi's critique, because I know you hear that a lot.

THE PRESIDENT: Why don't we let Bob --

MR. DIONNE: Let Bob --

MR. PUTNAM: Well, I'm going to try to respond to that, and of course, I want to hear what the President has to say about that. But I wanted to just comment briefly on that earlier conversation, first of all, about public goods.

I agree very much with the President's framing of this issue -- that is that we disinvested in collective assets, collective goods that would benefit everybody but are more important for poor people because they can't do it on their own. I want to just give one example of that that's very vivid, and this is a case where we've clearly shot ourselves in the foot.

For most of the 20th century, all Americans of all walks of life thought that part of getting a good education was getting soft skills -- not just reading, writing, arithmetic, but cooperation and teamwork, and so on. And part of that was that everybody in the country got free access to extracurricular activities -- band and football, and music and so on. But beginning about 20 years ago, the view developed -- which is really, really deeply evil -- that that's just a frill.

And so we disinvested, and we said if you want to take part in football here, or you want to take part in music, you've got to pay for it. And of course, what that means is that poor people can't pay for it. It's a big deal -- $1,600 on average for two kids in a family. Well, $1,600 to play football, or play in the band, or French club or whatever -- it's not a big deal if your income is $200,000; but if your income is $16,000, who in their right mind is going to be paying 10 percent of their family income?

So it seems to me that that's a case where the allocation that the benefits of learning teamwork and hard skills -- I mean grit were only on the individual. But that wasn't true. The whole country was benefitting from the fact that we had a very broad-based set of skills that people had. So I'm trying to emphasize this -- how deep runs this antipathy in some quarters for the notion that these are all our kids and, therefore, we've got to invest in all of them.

But I also want to then come back, if I can, to I think the thing we maybe haven't spent enough time here, and that is this is a purple problem. There are those of us who on the left can see most clearly the economic sources of this problem and want to do something about it. But then there are people on the conservative side, especially religious people, who use a different lens and they can see most clearly the effects of family disruption among poor families of all races on the prospects of kids.

And in the stories of the kids that we gathered across America -- I want to return a little bit not just to the abstract discussion of poverty, but to real kids. Mary Sue from -- doesn't have anything like the same opportunities as my granddaughter. But part of that is because Mary Sue's parents behaved in very irresponsible ways. We interviewed a kid from -- a young woman from Duluth who is now on drugs. How did she get on drugs? Because her dad was addicted to meth and wanted to get high, but didn't want to get high alone, so her dad taught -- Molly is her name -- how to smoke -- how to do meth. I don't even know how you do meth myself. I'll have to check with him. (Laughter.)

And it's systematically -- the fact is we all know this, that it's -- I'm not making an attack on single moms, who are often doing terrific jobs in the face of lots of obstacles, but I am saying it's harder to do that. And therefore, we need to think, all of us, including those of us -- and I know the President agrees with me about this -- even those of us on the more progressive side have to think, how did we get into a state in which two-thirds of American kids coming from what we used to call the working class have only a single parent, and what can we do to fix that?

I'm not sure this is government's role. But I do think that if we're concerned about poverty, we also, all of us, have to think about this purple side of the problem -- I mean, this family side of the problem. And we shouldn't -- those of us -- I'm now speaking to my side of the choir -- we shouldn't just assume that anybody who talks about family stability is somehow saying that the economics don't matter. Of course, the economics matter. It's both/and; it's not either/or. (Applause.)

MR. DIONNE: Mr. President?

THE PRESIDENT: A couple of things I would say. First of all, just going back to something Arthur said earlier about how we characterize the wealthy, and do they take this extra wealth from the poor, the middle class -- these are broad economic trends turbocharged by technology and globalization, a winner-take-all economy that allows those with even slightly better skills to massively expand their reach and their markets, and they make more money and it gets more concentrated, and that then reinforces itself. But there are values and decisions that have aided and abetted that process.

So, for example, in the era that Bob was talking about, if you had a company in that town, that company had a whole bunch of social restraints on it because the CEO felt it was a member of that community and the sense of obligation about paying a certain wage or contributing to the local high school or what have you was real. And today the average Fortune 500 company -- some are great corporate citizens, some are great employers -- but they don't have to be, and that's certainly not how they're judged.

And that may account for the fact that where a previous CEO of a company might have made 50 times the average wage of the worker, they might now make a thousand times or two thousand times. And that's now accepted practice inside the corporate boardroom. Now, that's not because they're bad people. It's just that they have been freed from a certain set of social constraints.

And those values have changed. And sometimes tax policy has encouraged that, and government policy has encouraged that. And there's a whole literature that justifies that as, well, that's what you'd need to get the best CEO and they're bringing the most value, and then you do tip into a little bit of Ayn Rand.

Which, Arthur, I think you'd be the first to acknowledge because I'm in dinners with some of your buddies and I have conversations with them. (Laughter.) And if they're not on a panel, they'll say, you know what, we created all this stuff and we made it, and we're creating value and we should be able to make decisions about where it goes.

So there's less commitment to those public goods -- even though a good economist who's read Adam Smith's "Moral Sentiments" would acknowledge that actually we're under-investing, or at least we have to have a certain investment. So that's point number one.

Point number two, on this whole family-character values-structure issue. It's true that if I'm giving a commencement at Morehouse that I will have a conversation with young black men about taking responsibility as fathers that I probably will not have with the women of Barnard. And I make no apologies for that. And the reason is, is because I am a black man who grew up without a father and I know the cost that I paid for that. And I also know that I have the capacity to break that cycle, and as a consequence, I think my daughters are better off. (Applause.)

And that is not something that -- for me to have that conversation does not negate my conversation about the need for early childhood education, or the need for job training, or the need for greater investment in infrastructure, or jobs in low-income communities.

So I'll talk till you're blue in the face about hard-nosed, economic macroeconomic policies, but in the meantime I've got a bunch of kids right now who are graduating, and I want to give them some sense that they can have an impact on their immediate circumstances, and the joys of fatherhood.

And we did something with My Brother's Keepers -- which emphasizes apprenticeships and emphasizes corporate responsibility, and we're gathering resources to give very concrete hooks for kids to be able to advance. And I'm going very hard at issues of criminal justice reform and breaking this school-to-prison pipeline that exists for so many young African American men. But when I'm sitting there talking to these kids, and I've got a boy who says, you know what, how did you get over being mad at your dad, because I've got a father who beat my mom and now has left, and has left the state, and I've never seen him because he's trying to avoid $83,000 in child support payments, and I want to love my dad, but I don't know how to do that -- I'm not going to have a conversation with him about macroeconomics. (Laughter and applause.)

I'm going to have a conversation with him about how I tried to understand what it is that my father had gone through, and how issues that were very specific to him created his difficulties in his relationships and his children so that I might be able to forgive him, and that I might then be able to come to terms with that.

And I don't apologize for that conversation. I think -- and so this is what I mean when -- or this is where I agree very much with Bob that this is not an either/or conversation. It is a both-and. The reason we get trapped in the either/or conversation is because all too often -- not Arthur, but those who have argued against a safety net, or argued against government programs, have used the rationale that character matters, family matters, values matter as a rationale for the disinvestment in public goods that took place over the course of 20 to 30 years.

If, in fact, the most important thing is character and parents, then it's okay if we don't have band and music at school -- that's the argument that you will hear. It's okay. Look, there are immigrant kids who are learning in schools that are much worse, and we're spending huge amounts in the district and we still get poor outcomes, and so obviously money is not the issue. And so what you hear is a logic that is used as an excuse to under-invest in those public goods.

And that's why I think a lot of people are resistant to it and are skeptical of that conversation. And I guess what I'm saying is that, guarding against cynicism, what we should say is we are going to argue hard for those public investments. We're going to argue hard for early childhood education because, by the way, if a young kid -- three, four years old -- is hearing a lot of words, the science tells us that they're going to be more likely to succeed at school. And if they've got trained and decently paid teachers in that preschool, then they're actually going to get -- by the time they're in third grade, they'll be reading at grade level.

And those all very concrete policies. But it requires some money. We're going to argue hard for that stuff. And lo and behold, if we do those things, the values and the character that those kids are learning in a loving environment where they can succeed in school, and they're being praised, and they can read at grade level, and they're less likely to drop out, and it turns out that when they're succeeding at school and they've got resources, they're less likely to get pregnant as teens, and less likely to engage in drugs, and less likely to be involved in the criminal justice system -- that is a reinforcement of the values and character that we want.

And that's where we, as a society, have the capacity to make a real difference. But it will cost us some money. It will cost us some money. It's not free.

You look at a state like California that used to have, by far, the best public higher education system in the world, and there is a direct correlation between Proposition 13 and the slow disinvestment in the public university system so that it became very, very expensive. And kids got priced out of the market, or they started taking on a whole bunch of debt. Now, that was a public policy choice, based on folks not wanting to pay property taxes. And that's true in cities and counties and states all across the country. And that's really a big part of our political argument.

So I am all for values; I am all for character. But I also know that that character and the values that our kids have that allow them to succeed, and delayed gratification and discipline and hard work -- that all those things in part are shaped by what they see, what they see really early on. And some of those kids right now, because of no fault of those kids, and because of history and some tough going, generationally, some of those kids, they're not going to get help at home. They're not going to get enough help at home. And the question then becomes, are we committed to helping them instead?

MR. DIONNE: Mr. President, I want to follow up on that and then invite Arthur and Bob to reply. Arthur, you clearly got a plenary indulgence in this session on all kinds of positions. (Laughter.)

A lot of us, I think, feel that we made bargains with our friends on the conservative side that -- I agree with the idea that you've got to care about what happens in the family if you're going to care about social justice, and you got to care about social justice of you care about the family. Yet when people like you start talking like this, there doesn't seem to be much giveback on, "okay, we agree on these values; where's the investment in these kids?"

Similarly, when welfare reform was passed back in the '90s, there were a lot of people who said, okay, we're not going to hear about welfare cheats anymore because all these people are going to have to work. And yet we get the same thing back again. It's as if the work requirement was never put in the welfare bill. How do we change this conversation so that it becomes an actual bargain where the other half of the agenda that you talked about gets recognized and that we do something about it?

THE PRESIDENT: I'll ask Arthur for some advice on this -- because, look, the devil is in the details. I think if you talk to any of my Republican friends, they will say, number one, they care about the poor -- and I believe them. Number two, they'll say that there are some public goods that have to be made -- and I'll believe them. But when it comes to actually establishing budgets, making choices, prioritizing, that's when it starts breaking down.

And I actually think that there will come a time when political pressure leads to a shift, because more and more families -- not just inner-city African-American families, or Hispanic families in the barrio, but more and more middle-class or working-class folks are feeling pinched and squeezed -- that there will be a greater demand for some core public goods and we'll have to find a way to pay for them. But ultimately, there are going to have to be some choices made.

When I, for example, make an argument about closing the carried interest loophole that exists whereby hedge fund managers are paying 15 percent on the fees and income that they collect, I've been called Hitler for doing this, or at least this is like Hitler going into Poland. That's an actual quote from a hedge fund manager when I made that recommendation. The top 25 hedge fund managers made more than all the kindergarten teachers in the country.

So when I say that, I'm not saying that because I dislike hedge fund managers or I think they're evil. I'm saying that you're paying a lower rate than a lot of folks who are making $300,000 a year. You pretty much have more than you'll ever be able to use and your family will ever be able to use. There's a fairness issue involved here. And, by the way, if we were able to close that loophole, I can now invest in early childhood education that will make a difference. That's where the rubber hits the road.

That's, Arthur, where the question of compassion and "I'm my brother's keeper" comes into play. And if we can't ask from society's lottery winners to just make that modest investment, then, really, this conversation is for show. (Applause.)

And by the way, I'm not asking to go back to 70 percent marginal rates, which existed back in the golden days that Bob is talking about when he was a kid. I'm just saying maybe we can go up to like -- tax them like ordinary income, which means that they might have to pay a true rate of around 23, 25 percent which, by historical standards in postwar era, would still be really low.

So that's the kind of issue where if we can't bridge that gap, then I suspect we're not going to make as much progress as we need to -- although we can find some areas of agreement like the earned income credit, which I give Arthur a lot of credit for extolling because it encourages work and it could help actually strengthen families.

MR. DIONNE: Arthur raised capital gains taxes for us here.

MR. BROOKS: Yes, sure. Fine. These are show issues. Corporate jets are show issues. Carried interest is a show issue. The real issue? Middle-class entitlements -- 70 percent of the federal budget. That's where the real money is. And the truth of the matter is until we can take that on -- if we want to make progress, if the left and right want to make progress politically as they put together budgets, they're going to have to make progress on that.

Now, if we want to create -- if we want to increase taxes on carried interest, I mean, that's fine for me -- not that I can speak for everybody, certainly not everybody on the Republican side.

And by the way, Mitch McConnell and John Boehner are watching, at least indirectly, and they're paying attention to this -- 100 percent sure, because they care a lot about this. And they care a lot about both culture and economics, and they care a lot about poverty. And, again, we have to be really careful not to impugn their motives, and impugning motives on the other side is the number-one barrier against making progress. Ad hominem is something we should declare war on and defeat because then we can take on issues on their face, I think. It's really important morally for us to be able to do that.

Who, by the way, were you having dinner with who was discussing Ayn Rand and why wasn't I invited? (Laughter.)

So if we want to make progress, I think let's decide that we have a preference -- I mean, let's have a rumble over how much money we're spending on public goods for poor people, for sure. And Republicans should say, I want to spend money on programs for the poor, but I think these ones are counterproductive and I think these ones are ineffective, and Democrats should say, no they're not, we've never done them right and they've always been underfunded. I want to have that competition of ideas. That's really productive.

But we can't even get to that when politicians on the left and the right are conspiring to not touch middle-class entitlements, because we're looking at it in terms of the right saying all the money is gone on this, and the left saying all we need is a lot more money on top of these things -- when most people who are looking at it realize that this is an unsustainable path. It's an unsustainable path for lots of things, not just programs for the poor. We can't adequately fund our military.

I think you and I would have a tremendous amount of agreement about the misguided notion of the sequester, for lots of reasons, because we can't spend money on purpose. And that's what we need to do. And when we're on an automatic path to spend tons of money in entitlements that are leading us to fiscal unsustainability, we can't get to these progressive conversations where conservatives and liberals really disagree and can work together, potentially, to help poor people and defend our nation.

MR. DIONNE: I just want to say if the carried interest is a show issue, why can't we just get it out of the way and move forward? (Laughter and applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: It is real money. It's real money.

MR. DIONNE: Here is what I'd like to do. I think we have about three minutes left, so I'd like Bob to speak, and then I have one last question for the President.

MR. PUTNAM: All of us would agree about this -- we need to a little bit rise out of the Washington bubble and the debates about these things. Of course, they're important. I understand why they're important. But, actually, we're speaking here to an audience of people of faith. We're speaking, more largely, to America. And I think we ought not to disempower ordinary Americans. If they care about these problems, Americans can change the politics that would, over the next five to 10 years, make a huge difference.

And I'm not talking about changing Republican-Democrat. I'm talking about making poverty and the opportunity to escape from poverty a higher issue on both parties' agendas. (Applause.) I have some hope that that will happen. I understand -- this may not be true, Mr. President -- I understand that there is going to be an election next year. (Laughter.)

THE PRESIDENT: That's a true fact. (Laughter and applause.)

MR. PUTNAM: And I think American voters should insist that the highest domestic priority issue is this issue of the opportunity gap, the fact that we're talking about. This is not a third order issue, it's a really important issue. And ask candidates, what are you going to do about it? And then just use your own common sense. Is that the right way to go forward?

I think that we need, as a country, not just from the top down and from Washington, but from across the grassroots, to focus -- and in congregations and parishes all across this country, focus on what we can do to reduce this opportunity gap in America.

MR. DIONNE: Mr. President, I wanted you to reflect on this religious question. I mean, one of your first salaries was actually paid for by a group of Catholic churches, something -- Cardinal McCarrick knows that, but not a lot of Catholic bishops notice that -- (laughter) -- that you were organizing for a group of South Side churches. You know what faith-based groups can do. And I'd like you to talk about sort of three things at the same time, which is the role of the religious community simply in calling attention to this problem; the issues of how government can cooperate with these groups; and sort of the prophetic role of these ideas for you, where your own reflections on your own faith have led you on these questions.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, it's true, my first job was funded through the Campaign for Human Development, which was the social justice arm of the Catholic Church. (Applause.) And I think that faith-based groups across the country and around the world understand the centrality and the importance of this issue in a intimate way -- in part because these faith-based organizations are interacting with folks who are struggling and know how good these people are, and know their stories, and it's not just theological, but it's very concrete. They're embedded in communities and they're making a difference in all kinds of ways.

So I think that what our administration has done is really a continuation of work that had been done previously by the Bush administration, the Clinton administration. We've got our office of faith-based organizations that are working on an ongoing basis around a whole host of these issues. My Brother's Keeper is reaching out to churches and synagogues and mosques and other faith-based groups consistently to try to figure out, how do we reach young boys and young men in a serious way?

But the one thing I guess I want to say, E.J., is that when I think about my own Christian faith and my obligations, it is important for me to do what I can myself -- individually mentoring young people, or making charitable donations, or in some ways impacting whatever circles and influence I have. But I also think it's important to have a voice in the larger debate. And I think it would be powerful for our faith-based organizations to speak out on this in a more forceful fashion.

This may sound self-interested because there have been -- these are areas where I agree with the evangelical community and faith-based groups, and then there are issues where we have had disagreements around reproductive issues, or same-sex marriage, or what have you. And so maybe it appears advantageous for me to want to focus on these issues of poverty, and not as much on these other issues.

But I want to insist, first of all, I will not be part of the election next year, so this is more just a broader reflection of somebody who has worked with churches and worked in communities.

There is great caring and great concern, but when it comes to what are you really going to the mat for, what's the defining issue, when you're talking in your congregations, what's the thing that is really going to capture the essence of who we are as Christians, or as Catholics, or what have you, that this is oftentimes viewed as a "nice to have" relative to an issue like abortion. That's not across the board, but there sometimes has been that view, and certainly that's how it's perceived in our political circles.

And I think that there's more power to be had there, a more transformative voice that's available around these issues that can move and touch people. Because the one thing I know is that -- here's an area where, again, Arthur and I agree -- I think fundamentally people want to do the right thing. I think people don't set out wanting to be selfish. I think people would like to see a society in which everybody has opportunity. I think that's true up and down the line and across the board. But they feel as if it's not possible.

And there's noise out there, and there's arguments, and there's contention. And so people withdraw and they restrict themselves to, what can I do in my church, or what can I do in my community? And that's important. But our faith-based groups I think have the capacity to frame this -- and nobody has shown that better than Pope Francis, who I think has been transformative just through the sincerity and insistence that he's had that this is vital to who we are. This is vital to following what Jesus Christ, our Savior, talked about.

And that emphasis I think is why he's had such incredible appeal, including to young people, all around the world. And I hope that that is a message that everybody receives when he comes to visit here. I can't wait to host him because I think it will help to spark an even broader conversation of the sort that we're having today.

MR. DIONNE: All events are better with a reference to Pope Francis. Thank you so much, Mr. President.
(Applause.)

I really want to thank Arthur and Bob. And thank you, Bob, for writing this book that's moved us all. And thank you, Mr. President, for being here. And John and Galen and then so many others for creating this.

If I may close by simultaneously quoting Amos and Dr. King, "Let justice roll down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream. Bless you all."

Thank you, Mr. President.

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you.

END

12:55 P.M. EDT

Unsubscribe

The White House - 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW - Washington DC 20500 - 202-456-1111

From: Leopold, Elana
To: John Del Cecato; [REDACTED]
Subject: Can we give him list of speakers in order
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 3:08:40 PM

Sent from my iPhone

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
Cc: Grybauskas, Stefan; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re:
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 3:15:12 PM

++

----- Original Message -----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 03:14 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)

Amy and I think he needs to do qanda at the podium. Otherwise a shit show with the camera movements.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Audio
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 3:32:41 PM

Either of you guys have? I just need the first 60 seconds or so of his remarks...got the rest taken care of and already transcribed.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Leopold, Elana; Grybauskas, Stefan; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; B
Subject: Heads up- 2 horse people
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 3:36:47 PM

Posing as press. Do not to call on them

Woman in blue shirt with video camera by Amy

Woman in front of me, next to fermino

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: TPA Updates
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 3:38:51 PM
Attachments: image006.png

Elissa Laitin @elaitin

Leaflet distributed at @BilldeBlasio presser in DC. Majority of NYC wants 2 keep horse carriages. #CarriageOn

RETWEETS 2

3:24 PM - 12 May 2015

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:51 PM
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: TPA Updates

Mara Gay @MaraGay 27s27 seconds ago Washington, DC

Carriage driver Christina Hansen has followed Mayor @BilldeBlasio to Washington. He's a hypocrite," she says.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:43 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: TPA Updates

Website is live...so might as well get the Twitter updates going!

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti 7m7 minutes ago

Howard Dean just walked up to the site of the de Blasio press conference on the Hill half an hour early.

—
Mahen Gunaratna
Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Grybauskas, Stefan; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Cbs this morning?
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 3:48:45 PM

Yes - can do

> On May 12, 2015, at 3:40 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: TPA Updates
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:09:39 PM

Luke Russert @LukeRussert · 1m1 minute ago

I gave de Blasio opportunity to publicly call out HRC on TPP, he declined to give definitive progressive soundbite.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:58 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: TPA Updates

Ben Siegel @benyc

More than a dozen cameras here for de Blasio's progressive agenda announcement

2:56 PM - 12 May 2015

From: Gunaratna, Mahen

Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:51 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: TPA Updates

Mara Gay @MaraGay 27s27 seconds ago Washington DC

Carriage driver Christina Hansen has followed Mayor @BilldeBlasio to Washington. He's a hypocrite," she says.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 2:43 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: TPA Updates

Website is live...so might as well get the Twitter updates going!

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti 7m7 minutes ago

Howard Dean just walked up to the site of the de Blasio press conference on the Hill half an hour early.

—
Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: FYI - am aiming to have Q&A transcribed by 5:00 p.m.
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:18:08 PM

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Williams, Dominic; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean \(OMB\)
Subject: RE: paid family leave
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:26:53 PM

+JFDC on thoughts on how to msg this

From: Williams, Dominic
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:19 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

This is exactly why we shouldn't be saying we're limited by external factors.

We aren't limited on leave for our own folks — we just need to figure out the best way to do it.

We are limited on doing paid family leave for all private employees in New York City.

Helpful to have a national policy so that what we do can mirror or harmonize with that eventual solution, but can be done by Mayoral Personnel Order — isn't something we can't do now, just something we're not doing yet.

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 4:10 PM
To: Amy Spitalnick <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FW: paid family leave

Is there some policy piece these folks are missing

From: Yoav Gonen [<mailto:ygonen@nypost.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:09 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: paid family leave

NYCLU and a Better Balance are both saying of course the city, as employer, can unilaterally give its employees paid family leave. So the question is why hasn't mayor done so if he's touting it nationally?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:52 PM, Yoav Gonen <ygonen@nypost.com> wrote:
if you could double-check would be great.

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:44 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

I don't believe anything can be done unilaterally between Albany (and potentially Council) requirements and collective bargaining requirements. I can try to check. But, again, a national policy avoids these issues and ensures everyone is covered.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:41 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

What does he need from Albany as far as paid family leave? Is there any aspect of it city can do unilaterally?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:05 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Again, national policy is the comprehensive way to do this. It's not "luck," it's logic - of course the preference is a policy that avoids local hurdles and covers everyone. But, as the comment I provided says, we are continuing to pursue this on the local level too.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:01 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Has he lobbied Albany on this issue since becoming mayor? And given the political divide in Congress, why would he think he'd had more luck in DC than in Albany?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 12:59 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Yes he has, including during the campaign, when he made clear it would require Albany action and the City can't do it alone. Which, again, is why a comprehensive national policy is the best bet, rather than trying to do this piecemeal with various levels of governments or groups of workers.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:36 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Thanks. Has he put anything forward publicly on the local paid family leave? Or advocated publicly?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 12:35 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Background -- as the WaPo story made clear, the Mayor supports giving paid family leave to city employees but there are Albany-related requirements and other factors that mean he can't do it unilaterally. That's why a national policy is the best way to do it, since that would bypass the local hurdles (and be much more universal than city employees alone).

Regardless, we have been studying and working on how we can do this locally.

Comment from me:

“Mayor de Blasio supports a national paid family leave policy as the most comprehensive way to achieve this vital goal. We are also studying what we can do locally, including how best to provide paid family leave to City employees.”

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:20 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: paid family leave

hi there,

Prompted by Wapo blog post, curious whether city workers get paid family leave, what de Blasio has proposed as far as this is concerned, and what the current status of said proposal is.

Deadline is 5 p.m.

Thanks.

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post

\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
(646) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

From: John Del Cecato
To: Snyder, Thomas
Cc: B
Subject: Re: TPA event
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:33:15 PM

It was really fantastic. Thanks for helping keep it on track all along the way!

On May 12, 2015, at 4:31 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

My sources tell me the event was successful. Good attendance, lots of media, good Mayoral performance. Congrats.

From: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
To: Williams, Dominic; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean \(OMB\)
Subject: Re: paid family leave
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:37:57 PM

To be clear - we only discussed potential Albany and collective bargaining pieces on background. Comment was focused on our support for national action and us looking into local action.

But there are Albany or collective bargaining requirements for most proposals... right?

From: Williams, Dominic
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:37 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Resending what I sent yesterday:

Wrong to highlight the old proposal, as I don't think we currently hold any brief for it, and we haven't moved in any way to forward it.

We are working on a paid family leave proposal for City workers, but I wouldn't announce that we're doing more than studying the issue.

Unclear what the reference is to comprehensive action.

We support a national policy, but I don't think we necessarily would cite a level playing field as a reason for us not to take action here.

Would rather simplify this, say supporting a national policy, and studying what can be done locally.

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 4:27 PM
To: Amy Spitalnick <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Anthony Shorris <ashorris@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dean Fuleihan <FuleihanD@omb.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: paid family leave

++

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:24 PM
To: Williams, Dominic; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Our public proposal from 2013 said it would require Albany approval. And yesterday I was told it would also need to be part of the collective bargaining process....

From: Williams, Dominic
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:20 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

This is exactly why we shouldn't be saying we're limited by external factors.

We aren't limited on leave for our own folks — we just need to figure out the best way to do it.

We are limited on doing paid family leave for all private employees in New York City.

Helpful to have a national policy so that what we do can mirror or harmonize with that eventual solution, but can be done by Mayoral Personnel Order — isn't something we can't do now, just something we're not doing yet.

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 4:10 PM
To: Amy Spitalnick <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FW: paid family leave

Is there some policy piece these folks are missing

From: Yoav Gonen [<mailto:ygonen@nypost.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:09 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: paid family leave

NYCLU and a Better Balance are both saying of course the city, as employer, can unilaterally give its employees paid family leave. So the question is why hasn't mayor done so if he's touting it nationally?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:52 PM, Yoav Gonen <ygonen@nypost.com> wrote:
if you could double-check would be great.

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:44 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

I don't believe anything can be done unilaterally between Albany (and potentially Council) requirements and collective bargaining requirements. I can try to check. But, again, a national policy avoids these issues and ensures everyone is covered.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:41 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

What does he need from Albany as far as paid family leave? Is there any aspect of it city can do unilaterally?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:05 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Again, national policy is the comprehensive way to do this. It's not "luck," it's logic - of course the preference is a policy that avoids local hurdles and covers everyone. But, as the comment I provided says, we are continuing to pursue this on the local level too.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:01 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Has he lobbied Albany on this issue since becoming mayor? And given the political divide in Congress, why would he think he'd had more luck in DC than in Albany?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 12:59 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Yes he has, including during the campaign, when he made clear it would require Albany action and the City can't do it alone. Which, again, is why a comprehensive national policy is the best bet, rather than trying to do this piecemeal with various levels of governments or groups of workers.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:36 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Thanks. Has he put anything forward publicly on the local paid family leave? Or advocated publicly?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 12:35 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Background -- as the WaPo story made clear, the Mayor supports giving paid family leave to city employees but there are Albany-related requirements and other factors that mean he can't do it unilaterally. That's why a national policy is the best way to do it, since that would bypass the local hurdles (and be much more universal than city employees alone). Regardless, we have been studying and working on how we can do this locally.

Comment from me:

“Mayor de Blasio supports a national paid family leave policy as the most comprehensive way to achieve this vital goal. We are also studying what we can do locally, including how best to provide paid family leave to City employees.”

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:20 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: paid family leave

hi there,

Prompted by Wapo blog post, curious whether city workers get paid family leave, what de Blasio has proposed as far as this is concerned, and what the current status of said proposal is.

Deadline is 5 p.m.

Thanks.

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
(646) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Good stuff from Social Security advocates
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:21:35 PM

SocialSecurityWorks@SSWorks

Proud to join @BilldeBlasio today in support of a progressive agenda, including #SocialSecurity expansion #p2Agenda

5:17 PM - 12 May 2015

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Leopold, Elana
Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Donovan
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:31:28 PM

Tho shold we tweet a congrats to him?

-----Original Message-----

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:32 PM
To: Leopold, Elana
Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Walzak, Phil
Subject: RE: Donovan

Regardless, if we haven't confirmed - his people should not be talking to press! IGA, can you talk to them please?

From: Leopold, Elana [LEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:29 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Phillip Walzak
Subject: Re: Donovan

We don't have time for this

Mayor still needs to prep for USCM and has dinner at 7- not to mention he's been going non stop since 7 this morning and has a long day ahead of him tomorrow

Would be great if we could skip- Unless this is completely mission critical

Sent from my iPhone

> On May 12, 2015, at 5:27 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> Donovan's people are saying we're going??
>
> Anna Sanders @AnnaESanders
> .@dandonovan_ny's people are saying that Mayor de Blasio is attending his swearing in on the House floor tonight, per @Writingrachel.
>
>
>

From: Gann, Georgia [GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov]
> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:26 PM
> To: Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
> Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina;
> Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
> Subject: Re: Donovan
>
> + Amy
>
>
> Georgia B. Gann
> Senior Legislative Advisor
> Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist New York City Office of

> Federal Affairs
> 1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
> Tel. (202) 624-5912
> Cell. (347) 497-1740
> ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

>
>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: Fink, Avi
> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 04:39 PM
> To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
> Cc: Gann, Georgia; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Leopold,
> Elana; Schwartz, Regina
> Subject: Re: Donovan

>
> Update:
>
> -Donovan will be in speakers chamber at 630 for ceremonial swearing > in. Mayor welcome to come to this
>
> -Donovan sworn in on House floor at 6:45 for real swearing in.
>
> -He has votes until approximately 7:30
>
> -He will then go to restaraunt/establishment TBD with Family and Friends, Mayor welcome to drop by this.

>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: Fink, Avi
> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:59 PM
> To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
> Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Leopold,
> Elana; Schwartz, Regina
> Subject: RE: Donovan

>
> He's getting sworn in on the house floor at 6:45 (congress only back > in session at 6:30) They will not be having a formal reception but are > likely going to have something informal right after in a house office > building They don't know what office they are getting yet but will > know more by 3:30 and let me know

>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Wolfe, Emma
> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM
> To: Carey, Michael
> Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana; Fink, Avi;
> Schwartz, Regina
> Subject: Re: Donovan

>
> I just got this Intel -- we should try to track it down with his folks > if possible

>
>
>
>> On May 12, 2015, at 12:44 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>
>> + EL
>>
>> IS he doing a reception?
>>

>>> On 5/12/15, 12:43 PM, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> Getting sworn in in dc this evening if we want to stop by and shake >>> hand

From: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
To: Walzak, Phil; Fink, Avi; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Donovan
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:31:36 PM

This is so inappropriate - they shouldn't be talking publicly about this:

Jessica Proud @jessicaproud
@AnnaESanders @Writingrachel it's not confirmed yet but he reached out about possibly trying to attend if his schedule permits.

From: Walzak, Phil [PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:30 PM
To: Fink, Avi; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Donovan

Pls
This is th2 2nd time she has pulled this
Ask them to clarify

-----Original Message-----

From: Fink, Avi
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:30 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: Donovan

Will call and ask them to correct.

----- Original Message -----

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 05:28 PM
To: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina; Walzak, Phil
Subject: RE: Donovan

Donovan's people are saying we're going??

Anna Sanders @AnnaESanders
.@dandonovan_ny's people are saying that Mayor de Blasio is attending his swearing in on the House floor tonight, per @Writingrachel.

From: Gann, Georgia [GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:26 PM
To: Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: Re: Donovan

+ Amy

Georgia B. Gann

Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

----- Original Message -----

From: Fink, Avi
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 04:39 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: Gann, Georgia; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Donovan

Update:

-Donovan will be in speakers chamber at 630 for ceremonial swearing in. Mayor welcome to come to this

-Donovan sworn in on House floor at 6:45 for real swearing in.

-He has votes until approximately 7:30

-He will then go to restaraunt/establishment TBD with Family and Friends, Mayor welcome to drop by this.

----- Original Message -----

From: Fink, Avi
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:59 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Donovan

He's getting sworn in on the house floor at 6:45 (congress only back in session at 6:30) They will not be having a formal reception but are likely going to have something informal right after in a house office building They don't know what office they are getting yet but will know more by 3:30 and let me know

-----Original Message-----

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana; Fink, Avi; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Donovan

I just got this Intel -- we should try to track it down with his folks if possible

> On May 12, 2015, at 12:44 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

> + EL

>

> IS he doing a reception?

>

>> On 5/12/15, 12:43 PM, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>

>> Getting sworn in in dc this evening if we want to stop by and shake

>> hand

>

From: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
To: Williams, Dominic; John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean \(OMB\)
Subject: RE: paid family leave
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:39:08 PM

That's fine - we aren't claiming we are moving this proposal forward. But I want to cover ourselves on the fact that some ways to do this could require Albany action, which is why federal action that avoids these sorts of hurdles is so important.

From: Williams, Dominic [DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:37 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); John Del Cecato; Phillip Walzak
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

The things said below about the plan offered in the campaign are true — but we haven't embraced that proposal since the day it was made, and can't claim to have taken any action to move the policy forward, or even to be currently working to move that policy forward.

From: <Spitalnick>, Amy Spitalnick <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 5:16 PM
To: John Cecato <jfdc@akpdmmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Anthony Shorris <ashorris@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dean Fuleihan <FuleihanD@omb.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: paid family leave

Yes, this is basically what we have said re: City staff. But just want to make sure we're tight on the facts -- Dom, there are some city employee-related proposals that would require Albany b/c of disability insurance?

Here's what the 2013 proposal said -

De Blasio's plan would:

- Cover every New York City worker currently covered by the State's disability insurance system.
- Would cover mothers or fathers seeking to bond with a new baby within 12 months of birth or adoption.
- Would cover caregivers with proof of a very serious or terminal illness afflicting a child, spouse, or parent.
- Pay 50% of a New Yorker's average weekly salary for up to 12 weeks, up to a maximum of $340/week (double the current benefit levels for temporary disability).
- Be financed through a small increase in worker's temporary disability insurance premium determined by an actuary each year. In New Jersey, a similar program, covering 2/3 of participating employees salary for six weeks up to a maximum of $524/week cost just 60 cents per worker per week in 2013.[3]

This proposal would require legislation in Albany.

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:41 PM
To: Phillip Walzak
Cc: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea; Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

My two cents. We are looking to do what we can at the city level. There are a number of factors, including contract negotiations with public unions and needing Albany to cover those in private sector. National legislation would be a huge and meaningful step, due to resources and scope of federal government.

As far as City Staff goes, not sure what to say about that specifically - other than we are working towards a way to make it work?

On May 12, 2015, at 4:29 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

++

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:24 PM
To: Williams, Dominic; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Our public proposal from 2013 said it would require Albany approval. And yesterday I was told it would also need to be part of the collective bargaining process....

From: Williams, Dominic
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:20 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

This is exactly why we shouldn't be saying we're limited by external factors.

We aren't limited on leave for our own folks — we just need to figure out the best way to do it.

We are limited on doing paid family leave for all private employees in New York City.

Helpful to have a national policy so that what we do can mirror or harmonize with that eventual solution, but can be done by Mayoral Personnel Order — isn't something we can't do now, just something we're not doing yet.

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 4:10 PM

To: Amy Spitalnick <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FW: paid family leave

Is there some policy piece these folks are missing

From: Yoav Gonen [<mailto:ygonen@nypost.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:09 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: paid family leave

NYCLU and a Better Balance are both saying of course the city, as employer, can unilaterally give its employees paid family leave. So the question is why hasn't mayor done so if he's touting it nationally?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:52 PM, Yoav Gonen <ygonen@nypost.com> wrote:
if you could double-check would be great.

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:44 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

I don't believe anything can be done unilaterally between Albany (and potentially Council) requirements and collective bargaining requirements. I can try to check. But, again, a national policy avoids these issues and ensures everyone is covered.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:41 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

What does he need from Albany as far as paid family leave? Is there any aspect of it city can do unilaterally?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:05 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Again, national policy is the comprehensive way to do this. It's not "luck," it's logic - of course the preference is a policy that avoids local hurdles and covers everyone. But, as the comment I provided says, we are continuing to pursue this on the local level too.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:01 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Has he lobbied Albany on this issue since becoming mayor? And given the political divide in Congress, why would he think he'd had more luck in DC than in Albany?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 12:59 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
<SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Yes he has, including during the campaign, when he made clear it would require Albany action and the City can't do it alone. Which, again, is why a comprehensive national policy is the best bet, rather than trying to do this piecemeal with various levels of governments or groups of workers.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:36 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Thanks. Has he put anything forward publicly on the local paid family leave? Or advocated publicly?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 12:35 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
<SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Background -- as the WaPo story made clear, the Mayor supports giving paid family leave to city employees but there are Albany-related requirements and other factors that mean he can't do it unilaterally. That's why a national policy is the best way to do it, since that would bypass the local hurdles (and be much more universal than city employees alone). Regardless, we have been studying and working on how we can do this locally.

Comment from me:

“Mayor de Blasio supports a national paid family leave policy as the most comprehensive way to achieve this vital goal. We are also studying what we can do locally, including how best to provide paid family leave to City employees.”

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:20 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: paid family leave

hi there,

Prompted by Wapo blog post, curious whether city workers get paid family leave, what de Blasio has proposed as far as this is concerned, and what the current status of said proposal is.

Deadline is 5 p.m.

Thanks.

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322229-8322)
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322229-8322)
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322229-8322)
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322229-8322)
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322229-8322)
@yoavgonen

--

Yoav Gonen

City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
(646) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

From: Grybauskas, Stefan
To: Leopold, Elana
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Freeman, Demetrius; Gann, Georgia; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Tuesday SOP- DC
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 6:58:35 PM

There is like 5 people here so we will prep in the lobby

Stefan Grybauskas
Associate Director of Advance
Office of the Mayor
City of New York
C: 347-515-5874

----- Original Message -----

From: Leopold, Elana
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 06:55 PM
To: Grybauskas, Stefan
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea; Freeman, Demetrius; Gann, Georgia; [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]> @EO; Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: Tuesday SOP- DC

En route to st Regis

Sent from my iPhone

> On May 12, 2015, at 2:45 PM, Grybauskas, Stefan <SGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> They are still setting up. We will hold in cars until set.
>
>
> Stefan Grybauskas
> Associate Director of Advance
> Office of the Mayor
> City of New York
> C: 347-515-5874
>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: Grybauskas, Stefan
> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 02:37 PM
> To: Leopold, Elana
> Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea; Freeman, Demetrius; Gann, Georgia; [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]> @EO
> Subject: Re: Tuesday SOP- DC
>
> We have a sticker to put on him as well.
>
> Says "the progressive agenda"
>
>
> Stefan Grybauskas
> Associate Director of Advance
> Office of the Mayor
> City of New York
> C: 347-515-5874
>

> ----- Original Message -----
> From: Leopold, Elana
> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 02:36 PM
> To: Grybauskas, Stefan
> Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea; Freeman, Demetrius; Gann, Georgia; [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]> @EO
> Subject: Re: Tuesday SOP- DC
>
> He did
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
>> On May 12, 2015, at 2:36 PM, Grybauskas, Stefan <SGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>
>> Put sunscreen on
>>
>>
>> Stefan Grybauskas
>> Associate Director of Advance
>> Office of the Mayor
>> City of New York
>> C: 347-515-5874
>>
>> ----- Original Message -----
>> From: Grybauskas, Stefan
>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 02:35 PM
>> To: Leopold, Elana
>> Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea; Freeman, Demetrius; Gann, Georgia; [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]> @EO
>> Subject: Re: Tuesday SOP- DC
>>
>> No one can exit cars until after sweep
>>
>>
>> Stefan Grybauskas
>> Associate Director of Advance
>> Office of the Mayor
>> City of New York
>> C: 347-515-5874
>>
>> ----- Original Message -----
>> From: Grybauskas, Stefan
>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 02:34 PM
>> To: Leopold, Elana
>> Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea; Freeman, Demetrius; Gann, Georgia; [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]> @EO
>> Subject: Re: Tuesday SOP- DC
>>
>> Howard Dean has arrived. Plan is for Mayor to pull in, cars will be swept(everyone remains), he holds in car until presser is ready.
>>
>>
>> Stefan Grybauskas
>> Associate Director of Advance
>> Office of the Mayor
>> City of New York
>> C: 347-515-5874
>>
>> ----- Original Message -----
>> From: Leopold, Elana

>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 09:57 AM
>> To: Grybauskas, Stefan
>> Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea; Freeman, Demetrius; Gann, Georgia; [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]> @EO
>> Subject: Re: Tuesday SOP- DC
>>
>> Coming up in elevator
>>
>> Sent from my iPhone
>>
>>> On May 12, 2015, at 9:46 AM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> En route
>>>
>>> Sent from my iPhone
>>>
>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 9:41 AM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> Off plane
>>>> Will be en route shortly
>>>>
>>>> Sent from my iPhone
>>>>
>>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 9:40 AM, Grybauskas, Stefan <SGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>> Pls let me know when you are en route. I am in the back printing
>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>> Stefan Grybauskas
>>>>> Associate Director of Advance
>>>>> Office of the Mayor
>>>>> City of New York
>>>>> C: 347-515-5874
>>>>>
>>>>> ----- Original Message -----
>>>>> From: Leopold, Elana
>>>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 09:29 AM
>>>>> To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea; Freeman, Demetrius; Gann, Georgia; Grybauskas, Stefan; [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]> @EO
>>>>> Subject: Re: Tuesday SOP- DC
>>>>>
>>>>> Still on plane
>>>>>
>>>>> We're having issues getting to the gate
>>>>>
>>>>> Sent from my iPhone
>>>>>
>>>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 9:08 AM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>>
>>>>>> We have landed
>>>>>>
>>>>>> Sent from my iPhone
>>>>>>
>>>>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 8:18 AM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Wheels up
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Sent from my iPhone
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 7:55 AM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Boarded plane
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Apparently there's no power or something but hopefully we will be taking off shortly
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Sent from my iPhone
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 7:25 AM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Good morning!
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> En route to the airport
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Sent from my iPhone

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Pls call
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 6:58:58 PM

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:14:13 PM

Forgot to mention that you leading the press conference really showed that you were in charge of the event. Usually there's a lot more elbowing and stuff.

That's not to say we fell down on not telling you in advance that you were gonna end up MC'ing. But the advance team thinks you not only did well, you did yourself good.

From: Singleton, Jessica
To: Fink, Avi
Cc: Leopold, Elana; Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Rodriguez, Tobias \(Media\)
Subject: Re: Donovan
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:30:36 PM

Sorry I just left an event. Pinging Tobias now.

> On May 12, 2015, at 19:28, Fink, Avi <AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

> Checking in - team digi?

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Leopold, Elana

> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:10 PM

> To: Fink, Avi

> Cc: Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;
jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Rodriguez, Tobias (Media); Singleton, Jessica

> Subject: Re: Donovan

>

> Also a reminder that mayor placed a congratulatory call yesterday

>

> Sent from my iPhone

>

>> On May 12, 2015, at 7:08 PM, Fink, Avi <AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>

>> Yes. Adding digital.

>>

>>

>> How about

>> "Congrats on getting sworn in @dandonovan_ny, I look forward to working with you on behalf of all NY'ers in the 11th Congressional District"

>>

>> -----Original Message-----

>> From: Walzak, Phil

>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:31 PM

>> To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Leopold, Elana

>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;

>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina

>> Subject: RE: Donovan

>>

>> Tho shold we tweet a congrats to him?

>>

>> -----Original Message-----

>> From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]

>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:32 PM

>> To: Leopold, Elana

>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;

>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Walzak, Phil

>> Subject: RE: Donovan

>>

>> Regardless, if we haven't confirmed - his people should not be talking to press! IGA, can you talk to them please?

>>

>> _____

>> From: Leopold, Elana [LEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov]
>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:29 PM
>> To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;
>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Phillip Walzak
>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>
>> We don't have time for this
>>
>> Mayor still needs to prep for USCM and has dinner at 7- not to mention
>> he's been going non stop since 7 this morning and has a long day ahead >> of him tomorrow
>>
>> Would be great if we could skip- Unless this is completely mission >> critical
>>
>> Sent from my iPhone
>>
>>> On May 12, 2015, at 5:27 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> Donovan's people are saying we're going??
>>>
>>> Anna Sanders @AnnaESanders
>>> .@dandonovan_ny's people are saying that Mayor de Blasio is attending his swearing in on the House floor tonight, per @Writingrachel.
>>>
>>>
>>> From: Gann, Georgia [GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov]
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:26 PM
>>> To: Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina;
>>> Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>>
>>> + Amy
>>>
>>>
>>> Georgia B. Gann
>>> Senior Legislative Advisor
>>> Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist New York City Office of >>> Federal Affairs
>>> 1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
>>> Tel. (202) 624-5912
>>> Cell. (347) 497-1740
>>> ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov
>>>
>>>
>>> ----- Original Message -----
>>> From: Fink, Avi
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 04:39 PM
>>> To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>;
>>> Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>>
>>> Update:
>>>
>>> -Donovan will be in speakers chamber at 630 for ceremonial swearing
>>> in. Mayor welcome to come to this
>>>

>>> -Donovan sworn in on House floor at 6:45 for real swearing in.
>>>
>>> -He has votes until approximately 7:30
>>>
>>> -He will then go to restaraunt/establishment TBD with Family and Friends, Mayor welcome to drop by this.
>>>
>>> ----- Original Message -----
>>> From: Fink, Avi
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:59 PM
>>> To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: RE: Donovan
>>>
>>> He's getting sworn in on the house floor at 6:45 (congress only back in session at 6:30) They will not be having a formal reception but are likely going to have something informal right after in a house office building They don't know what office they are getting yet but will know more by 3:30 and let me know
>>>
>>> -----Original Message-----
>>> From: Wolfe, Emma
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM
>>> To: Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana; Fink, Avi; Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>>
>>> I just got this Intel -- we should try to track it down with his folks if possible
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 12:44 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> + EL
>>>>
>>>> IS he doing a reception?
>>>>
>>>>> On 5/12/15, 12:43 PM, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>> Getting sworn in in dc this evening if we want to stop by and shake >>>>> hand
>>

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Williams, Dominic; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
Cc: John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea; Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean \(OMB\)
Subject: RE: paid family leave
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:30:54 PM

Can we just send this back to him:

Background-

We cannot do unilaterally for workers who have collective bargaining relationships

From: Williams, Dominic
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:30 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

For some workers, but not comprehensively. We cannot do unilaterally for workers who have collective bargaining relationships. We can do unilaterally for managers and unrepresented workers.

From: <Spitalnick>, Amy Spitalnick <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 7:24 PM
To: Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: John Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Anthony Shorris <ashorris@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dean Fuleihan <FuleihanD@omb.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Is it factually accurate for the Post to say we could do this by exec order if we wanted?

On May 12, 2015, at 5:39 PM, Williams, Dominic <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

The things said below about the plan offered in the campaign are true — but we haven't embraced that proposal since the day it was made, and can't claim to have taken any action to move the policy forward, or even to be currently working to move that policy forward.

From: <Spitalnick>, Amy Spitalnick <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 5:16 PM
To: John Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Anthony Shorris <ashorris@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dean Fuleihan <FuleihanD@omb.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: paid family leave

Yes, this is basically what we have said re: City staff. But just want to make sure we're tight on the facts -- Dom, there are some city employee-related proposals that would require Albany b/c of disability insurance?

Here's what the 2013 proposal said -

De Blasio's plan would:

- Cover every New York City worker currently covered by the State's disability insurance system.
- Would cover mothers or fathers seeking to bond with a new baby within 12 months of birth or adoption.
- Would cover caregivers with proof of a very serious or terminal illness afflicting a child, spouse, or parent.
- Pay 50% of a New Yorker's average weekly salary for up to 12 weeks, up to a maximum of $340/week (double the current benefit levels for temporary disability).
- Be financed through a small increase in worker's temporary disability insurance premium determined by an actuary each year. In New Jersey, a similar program, covering 2/3 of participating employees salary for six weeks up to a maximum of $524/week cost just 60 cents per worker per week in 2013.[3]

This proposal would require legislation in Albany.

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmmedia.com]

Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:41 PM

To: Phillip Walzak

Cc: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea; Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)

Subject: Re: paid family leave

My two cents. We are looking to do what we can at the city level. There are a number of factors, including contract negotiations with public unions and needing Albany to cover those in private sector. National legislation would be a huge and meaningful step, due to resources and scope of federal government.

As far as City Staff goes, not sure what to say about that specifically - other than we are working towards a way to make it work?

On May 12, 2015, at 4:29 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

++

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]

Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:24 PM

To: Williams, Dominic; Walzak, Phil

Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)

Subject: Re: paid family leave

Our public proposal from 2013 said it would require Albany approval. And yesterday I was told it would also need to be part of the collective bargaining process....

From: Williams, Dominic
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:20 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Shorris, Anthony; Fuleihan, Dean (OMB)
Subject: Re: paid family leave

This is exactly why we shouldn't be saying we're limited by external factors.

We aren't limited on leave for our own folks — we just need to figure out the best way to do it.

We are limited on doing paid family leave for all private employees in New York City.

Helpful to have a national policy so that what we do can mirror or harmonize with that eventual solution, but can be done by Mayoral Personnel Order — isn't something we can't do now, just something we're not doing yet.

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 at 4:10 PM
To: Amy Spitalnick <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FW: paid family leave

Is there some policy piece these folks are missing

From: Yoav Gonen [<mailto:ygonen@nypost.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 4:09 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: paid family leave

NYCLU and a Better Balance are both saying of course the city, as employer, can unilaterally give its employees paid family leave. So the question is why hasn't mayor done so if he's touting it nationally?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:52 PM, Yoav Gonen <ygonen@nypost.com> wrote:
if you could double-check would be great.

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:44 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:
I don't believe anything can be done unilaterally between Albany (and potentially Council) requirements and collective bargaining requirements. I can try to check. But, again, a national policy avoids these issues and ensures everyone is covered.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:41 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

What does he need from Albany as far as paid family leave? Is there any aspect of it city can do unilaterally?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 1:05 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Again, national policy is the comprehensive way to do this. It's not "luck," it's logic - of course the preference is a policy that avoids local hurdles and covers everyone. But, as the comment I provided says, we are continuing to pursue this on the local level too.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 1:01 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Has he lobbied Albany on this issue since becoming mayor? And given the political divide in Congress, why would he think he'd had more luck in DC than in Albany?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 12:59 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Yes he has, including during the campaign, when he made clear it would require Albany action and the City can't do it alone. Which, again, is why a comprehensive national policy is the best bet, rather than trying to do this piecemeal with various levels of governments or groups of workers.

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:36 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Re: paid family leave

Thanks. Has he put anything forward publicly on the local paid family leave? Or advocated publicly?

On Tue, May 12, 2015 at 12:35 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

Background -- as the WaPo story made clear, the Mayor supports giving paid family leave to city employees but there are Albany-related requirements and other factors that mean he can't do it unilaterally. That's why a national policy is the best way to do it, since that would bypass the local hurdles (and be much more universal than city employees alone). Regardless, we have been studying and working on how we can do this locally.

Comment from me:

“Mayor de Blasio supports a national paid family leave policy as the most comprehensive way to achieve this vital goal. We are also studying what we can do locally, including how best to provide paid family leave to City employees.”

From: Yoav Gonen
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:20 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; Mayor's Press Office; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: paid family leave

hi there,

Prompted by Wapo blog post, curious whether city workers get paid family leave, what de Blasio has proposed as far as this is concerned, and what the current status of said proposal is.

Deadline is 5 p.m.

Thanks.

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
\(646\) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

--
Yoav Gonen
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Post
(646) 229-8322
@yoavgonen

From: Singleton, Jessica
To: Fink, Avi
Cc: Leopold, Elana; Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Rodriguez, Tobias \(Media\); Gindler, Maria \(Media\)
Subject: Re: Donovan
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:41:50 PM

Adding Masha who can tweet

> On May 12, 2015, at 19:28, Fink, Avi <AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

> Checking in - team digi?

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Leopold, Elana

> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:10 PM

> To: Fink, Avi

> Cc: Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;

> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Rodriguez, Tobias (Media); Singleton, Jessica

> Subject: Re: Donovan

>

> Also a reminder that mayor placed a congratulatory call yesterday

>

> Sent from my iPhone

>

>> On May 12, 2015, at 7:08 PM, Fink, Avi <AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>

>> Yes. Adding digital.

>>

>>

>> How about

>> "Congrats on getting sworn in @dandonovan_ny, I look forward to working with you on behalf of all NY'ers in the 11th Congressional District"

>>

>> -----Original Message-----

>> From: Walzak, Phil

>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:31 PM

>> To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Leopold, Elana

>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;

>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina

>> Subject: RE: Donovan

>>

>> Tho shold we tweet a congrats to him?

>>

>> -----Original Message-----

>> From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]

>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:32 PM

>> To: Leopold, Elana

>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;

>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Walzak, Phil

>> Subject: RE: Donovan

>>

>> Regardless, if we haven't confirmed - his people should not be talking to press! IGA, can you talk to them please?

>>

>>

>> From: Leopold, Elana [LEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov]

>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:29 PM
>> To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;
>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Phillip Walzak
>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>
>> We don't have time for this
>>
>> Mayor still needs to prep for USCM and has dinner at 7- not to mention
>> he's been going non stop since 7 this morning and has a long day ahead
>> of him tomorrow
>>
>> Would be great if we could skip- Unless this is completely mission >> critical
>>
>> Sent from my iPhone
>>
>>> On May 12, 2015, at 5:27 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> Donovan's people are saying we're going??
>>>
>>> Anna Sanders @AnnaESanders
>>> .@dandonovan_ny's people are saying that Mayor de Blasio is attending his swearing in on the House floor tonight, per @Writingrachel.
>>>
>>> _____
>>> From: Gann, Georgia [GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov]
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:26 PM
>>> To: Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina;
>>> Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>>
>>> + Amy
>>>
>>>
>>> Georgia B. Gann
>>> Senior Legislative Advisor
>>> Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist New York City Office of >>> Federal Affairs
>>> 1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
>>> Tel. (202) 624-5912
>>> Cell. (347) 497-1740
>>> ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov
>>>
>>>
>>> ----- Original Message -----
>>> From: Fink, Avi
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 04:39 PM
>>> To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>;
>>> Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>>
>>> Update:
>>>
>>> -Donovan will be in speakers chamber at 630 for ceremonial swearing
>>> in. Mayor welcome to come to this
>>>
>>> -Donovan sworn in on House floor at 6:45 for real swearing in.

>>>
>>> -He has votes until approximately 7:30
>>>
>>> -He will then go to restaraunt/establishment TBD with Family and Friends, Mayor welcome to drop
by this.
>>>
>>> ----- Original Message -----
>>> From: Fink, Avi
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:59 PM
>>> To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Leopold,
>>> Elana; Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: RE: Donovan
>>>
>>> He's getting sworn in on the house floor at 6:45 (congress only back >>> in session at 6:30) They will not be having a formal reception but >>> are likely going to have something informal right after in a house >>> office building They don't know what office they are getting yet but >>> will know more by 3:30 and let me know
>>>
>>> -----Original Message-----
>>> From: Wolfe, Emma
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM
>>> To: Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana; Fink, Avi;
>>> Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>>
>>> I just got this Intel -- we should try to track it down with his >>> folks if possible
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 12:44 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> + EL
>>>>
>>>> IS he doing a reception?
>>>>
>>>>> On 5/12/15, 12:43 PM, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>> Getting sworn in in dc this evening if we want to stop by and shake >>>>> hand
>>>>>
>>

From: Tobias Rodriguez
To: Singleton, Jessica
Cc: Fink, Avi; Leopold, Elana; Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Donovan
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:47:07 PM

Sorry, was away from phone. Ok to tweet now?

Congrats on getting sworn in @dandonovan_ny, I look forward to working with you on behalf of all NY'ers in the 11th Congressional District.

Sent from my iPhone

On May 12, 2015, at 7:32 PM, Singleton, Jessica <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>>> wrote:

Sorry I just left an event. Pinging Tobias now.

On May 12, 2015, at 19:28, Fink, Avi <AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov>>> wrote:

Checking in - team digi?

-----Original Message-----

From: Leopold, Elana
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:10 PM
To: Fink, Avi
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>; Schwartz, Regina; Rodriguez, Tobias \(Media\); Singleton, Jessica
Subject: Re: Donovan

Also a reminder that mayor placed a congratulatory call yesterday

Sent from my iPhone

On May 12, 2015, at 7:08 PM, Fink, Avi <AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov>>> wrote:

Yes. Adding digital.

How about

"Congrats on getting sworn in @dandonovan_ny, I look forward to working with you on behalf of all NY'ers in the 11th Congressional District"

-----Original Message-----

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:31 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Leopold, Elana
Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Donovan

Tho should we tweet a congrats to him?

-----Original Message-----

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:32 PM
To: Leopold, Elana
Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;
jfdc@akpdmedia.com<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>; Schwartz, Regina; Walzak, Phil
Subject: RE: Donovan

Regardless, if we haven't confirmed - his people should not be talking to press! IGA, can you talk to them please?

From: Leopold, Elana [LEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:LEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:29 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;
jfdc@akpdmedia.com<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>; Schwartz, Regina; Phillip Walzak
Subject: Re: Donovan

We don't have time for this

Mayor still needs to prep for USCM and has dinner at 7- not to mention he's been going non stop since 7 this morning and has a long day ahead of him tomorrow

Would be great if we could skip- Unless this is completely mission critical

Sent from my iPhone

On May 12, 2015, at 5:27 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
<SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov<<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>>> wrote:

Donovan's people are saying we're going??

Anna Sanders @AnnaESanders
.@dandonovan_ny's people are saying that Mayor de Blasio is attending his swearing in on the House floor tonight, per @Writingrachel.

From: Gann, Georgia [GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:26 PM
To: Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'<<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: Re: Donovan

+ Amy

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov<<mailto:ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov>>

----- Original Message -----

From: Fink, Avi
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 04:39 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: Gann, Georgia; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>> <jfdc@akpdmedia.com <<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>>; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Donovan

Update:

-Donovan will be in speakers chamber at 630 for ceremonial swearing in. Mayor welcome to come to this

-Donovan sworn in on House floor at 6:45 for real swearing in.

-He has votes until approximately 7:30

-He will then go to restaraunt/establishment TBD with Family and Friends, Mayor welcome to drop by this.

----- Original Message -----

From: Fink, Avi
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:59 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>> <jfdc@akpdmedia.com <<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>>; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Donovan

He's getting sworn in on the house floor at 6:45 (congress only back in session at 6:30) They will not be having a formal reception but are likely going to have something informal right after in a house office building They don't know what office they are getting yet but will know more by 3:30 and let me know

-----Original Message-----

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>>; Leopold, Elana; Fink, Avi; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Donovan

I just got this Intel -- we should try to track it down with his folks if possible

On May 12, 2015, at 12:44 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov <<mailto:MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>>> wrote:

+ EL

IS he doing a reception?

On 5/12/15, 12:43 PM, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov <<mailto:EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>>> wrote:

Getting sworn in in dc this evening if we want to stop by and shake

hand

From: Gindler, Maria
To: Walzak, Phil; Singleton, Jessica; Fink, Avi
Cc: Leopold, Elana; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Rodriguez, Tobias \(Media\)
Subject: RE: Donovan
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:52:17 PM

Great, sending out as is.

From: Walzak, Phil [PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:47 PM
To: Gindler, Maria; Singleton, Jessica; Fink, Avi
Cc: Leopold, Elana; Amy Spitalnick; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Tobias Rodriguez
Subject: RE: Donovan

Im ok
He is a congressman from the city

-----Original Message-----

From: Gindler, Maria [<mailto:mgindler@digital.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:47 PM
To: Singleton, Jessica; Fink, Avi
Cc: Leopold, Elana; Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Rodriguez, Tobias (Media)
Subject: RE: Donovan

Hi guys,

So in 5 min I am tweeting this from Bill de Blasio's Twitter: "Congrats on getting sworn in @dandonovan_ny, I look forward to working with you on behalf of all NY'ers in the 11th Congressional District"

Get all flags in before then!

From: Singleton, Jessica [JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:41 PM
To: Fink, Avi
Cc: Leopold, Elana; Walzak, Phil; Amy Spitalnick; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Tobias Rodriguez; Gindler, Maria
Subject: Re: Donovan

Adding Masha who can tweet

> On May 12, 2015, at 19:28, Fink, Avi <AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> Checking in - team digi?
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Leopold, Elana
> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 7:10 PM
> To: Fink, Avi
> Cc: Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma;
> Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Rodriguez,
> Tobias (Media); Singleton, Jessica
> Subject: Re: Donovan
>

> Also a reminder that mayor placed a congratulatory call yesterday
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
>> On May 12, 2015, at 7:08 PM, Fink, Avi <AFink@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>
>> Yes. Adding digital.
>>
>>
>> How about
>> "Congrats on getting sworn in @dandonovan_ny, I look forward to working with you on behalf of all NY'ers in the 11th Congressional District"
>>
>> -----Original Message-----
>> From: Walzak, Phil
>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:31 PM
>> To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Leopold, Elana
>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;
>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina
>> Subject: RE: Donovan
>>
>> Tho shold we tweet a congrats to him?
>>
>> -----Original Message-----
>> From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]
>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:32 PM
>> To: Leopold, Elana
>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;
>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Walzak, Phil
>> Subject: RE: Donovan
>>
>> Regardless, if we haven't confirmed - his people should not be talking to press! IGA, can you talk to them please?
>>
>> _____
>> From: Leopold, Elana [LEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov]
>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:29 PM
>> To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael;
>> jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schwartz, Regina; Phillip Walzak
>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>
>> We don't have time for this
>>
>> Mayor still needs to prep for USCM and has dinner at 7- not to >> mention he's been going non stop since 7 this morning and has a long >> day ahead of him tomorrow
>>
>> Would be great if we could skip- Unless this is completely mission >> critical
>>
>> Sent from my iPhone
>>
>>> On May 12, 2015, at 5:27 PM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> Donovan's people are saying we're going??
>>>
>>> Anna Sanders @AnnaESanders
>>> .@dandonovan_ny's people are saying that Mayor de Blasio is attending his swearing in on the House floor tonight, per @Writingrachel.

>>>

>>>

>>> From: Gann, Georgia [GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov]
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 5:26 PM
>>> To: Fink, Avi; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina;
>>> Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan

>>>

>>> + Amy

>>>

>>>

>>> Georgia B. Gann
>>> Senior Legislative Advisor
>>> Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist New York City Office of >>> Federal Affairs
>>> 1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
>>> Tel. (202) 624-5912
>>> Cell. (347) 497-1740
>>> ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

>>>

>>>

>>> ----- Original Message -----

>>> From: Fink, Avi
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 04:39 PM
>>> To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>;
>>> Leopold, Elana; Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan

>>>

>>> Update:

>>>

>>> -Donovan will be in speakers chamber at 630 for ceremonial swearing >>> in. Mayor welcome to come to this

>>>

>>> -Donovan sworn in on House floor at 6:45 for real swearing in.

>>>

>>> -He has votes until approximately 7:30

>>>

>>> -He will then go to restaraunt/establishment TBD with Family and Friends, Mayor welcome to drop
>>> by this.

>>>

>>> ----- Original Message -----

>>> From: Fink, Avi
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:59 PM
>>> To: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Leopold,
>>> Elana; Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: RE: Donovan

>>>

>>> He's getting sworn in on the house floor at 6:45 (congress only back >>> in session at 6:30) They will not be having a formal reception but >>> are likely going to have something informal right after in a house >>> office building They don't know what office they are getting yet but >>> will know more by 3:30 and let me know

>>>

>>> -----Original Message-----

>>> From: Wolfe, Emma
>>> Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 12:45 PM
>>> To: Carey, Michael

>>> Cc: Gann, Georgia; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana; Fink, Avi;
>>> Schwartz, Regina
>>> Subject: Re: Donovan
>>>
>>> I just got this Intel -- we should try to track it down with his >>> folks if possible
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>> On May 12, 2015, at 12:44 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> + EL
>>>>
>>>> IS he doing a reception?
>>>>
>>>>> On 5/12/15, 12:43 PM, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>> Getting sworn in in dc this evening if we want to stop by and >>>>> shake hand
>>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
Subject: Re: Meeting Readout
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 10:13:39 PM

Correct

> On May 12, 2015, at 9:55 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>

> They sent this out, correct?

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Valerie Jarrett

> To: Bill de Blasio

> Subject: Meeting Readout

> Sent: May 12, 2015 7:23 PM

>

> Here's what we are planning on sending out this evening. We've gotten several inquiries from New York papers. Please let me know if you have any concerns.

>

> On background, from a White House official:

>

> This evening, President Obama met with New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio at the White House. The President and the Mayor discussed a range of issues, and this meeting is part of the President's continued engagement with mayors from around the country on ensuring we are expanding opportunity for all Americans, which includes expanding access to early childhood education like Pre-K, and his My Brother's Keeper Initiative. The President and the Mayor also discussed the President's participation in the Catholic-Evangelical Leadership Summit on Overcoming Poverty today at Georgetown University.

>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Ha
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 10:49:14 PM

Readout

On background, from a White House official:

This evening, President Obama met with New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio at the White House. The President and the Mayor discussed a range of issues, and this meeting is part of the President's continued engagement with mayors from around the country on ensuring we are expanding opportunity for all Americans, which includes expanding access to early childhood education like Pre-K, and his My Brother's Keeper Initiative. The President and the Mayor also discussed the President's participation in the Catholic-Evangelical Leadership Summit on Overcoming Poverty today at Georgetown University.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma Subject: The Hill: De Blasio: The left's new star in Washington
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 10:53:00 PM

De Blasio: The left's new star in Washington

By Mike Lillis - 05/12/15 09:05 PM EDT

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio on Tuesday launched a liberal policy agenda he's hoping will guide the political debate — and heighten his national profile — heading into 2016.

Speaking outside the Capitol on a sweltering day, de Blasio announced an economic plan designed to alleviate income inequality through 13 specific policy prescriptions favored by the left, including a $15 federal minimum wage, comprehensive immigration reform and universal child care for working mothers.

The mayor — flanked by a host of Democratic lawmakers, labor leaders, immigration reformers and other liberal activists — said the agenda turns on a simple notion: "We need to reward work," he said, "not wealth."

"Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystallize it into an agenda that will make a difference," he said. "We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear and to champion these progressive policies."

The launch came just hours after de Blasio appeared with Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) at a separate economic event in Washington, bolstering his status as an influential liberal voice who might hold sway on the presidential campaign of Hillary Clinton — the Democratic favorite he has refused to endorse.

The unveiling of the liberal agenda on the Capitol steps brought to mind the GOP's 1994 Contract with America and highlighted de Blasio's desire to expand his influence beyond the five boroughs.

Some Democrats pushed back against the notion that the mayor was seeking to nudge Clinton, a former New York senator, to the left.

"There's gossip in Washington that this is about trying to move a certain candidate in a certain direction," said former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean (D), who once headed the Democratic National Committee. "If you look at that candidate's record, you'll find that she's embraced a lot of this already."

Still, Clinton has yet to weigh in on President Obama's trade agenda, which liberals have attacked relentlessly as a job killer. And de Blasio wasted no time Tuesday joining those critics.

"I couldn't agree more with Elizabeth Warren and progressives who are saying that they're deeply concerned about this trade deal," he said.

De Blasio also suggested Clinton should break her silence on Obama's trade agenda.

"All leaders need to address the issue in their own way," he said. "But it does have to be addressed."

Flanking de Blasio at Tuesday's press conference, liberal Democrats from both chambers of Congress framed income inequality as the central economic issue of the modern era and were quick to endorse the mayor's nascent policy campaign.

Rep. Charles Rangel (D-N.Y.) said the push "could be the beginning of a revolution." Rep. Mark Pocan (D-Wis.) said the mayor's policy prescription represents "the meat on the bones of a progressive agenda." And Rep. Yvette Clarke (D-N.Y.) said, "The cavalry has arrived."

Among the other central provisions of de Blasio's plan are proposals to establish universal pre-kindergarten options, adopt national paid sick leave and end tax breaks for businesses that send jobs abroad.

The mayor emphasized that his liberal coalition will be adding to the list in the weeks and months ahead. He said he's eyeing proposals to expand Social Security, establish debt-free college educations and push investments in schools rather than in prisons.

"This is a beginning," he said, "and there's more to come."

De Blasio pushed back hard against the notion that he should stay focused on New York, rather than taking the fight to Washington and across the country.

"A lot of things my city needs happen right here. And right now, the political environment here will not allow us to get the support we need and the changes we need," he said. "We've got to change the debate, change the political environment."

In the midst of the press conference, Senate Democrats blocked legislation providing Obama with new authority to move his controversial trade agenda. It was, perhaps, fitting that Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-Conn.), among the loudest of Obama's trade critics, made the announcement to the assembled crowd.

"Just now, the Senate has just voted to block fast-track," DeLauro said to cheers. "But, my friends, the fight is not over. The Trans-Pacific Partnership threatens American jobs, wages and regulations. That is exactly why we must set our public policy on a new path. And the progressive agenda is that path."

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; B; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: Fwd: Amtrak crash
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 11:04:15 PM

Former PA rep patrick murphy was on but is ok according to news reports

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 10:37 PM
To: B; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Fwd: Amtrak crash

FYI

Begin forwarded message:

From: Rebecca Katz <rkatz@hilltoppublicsolutions.com>
Date: May 12, 2015 at 10:20:20 PM EDT
To: jeani murray <[REDACTED]> John Del Cecato
<jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, John Davis <[REDACTED]> Hayley
Prim <[REDACTED]> Aaron Pickrell
<[REDACTED]>
Subject: Amtrak crash

Worried about our friends who may have been on train that crashed.

Not sure who all was headed back to NYC tonight.

Sent from my iPhone

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: jfdc@akpdmmedia.com; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Berger, Henry; Wiley, Maya
Subject: NY Times: Group Supporting de Blasio's Agenda Is Said to Draw Interest of Ethics Panel
Date: Tuesday, May 12, 2015 11:08:56 PM

Group Supporting de Blasio's Agenda Is Said to Draw Interest of Ethics Panel

By MICHAEL M. GRYNBAUM and WILLIAM K. RASHBAUM

MAY 12, 2015

A political group run by close allies of Mayor Bill de Blasio has attracted the interest of a New York State ethics panel, which is concerned that the group could be violating lobbying rules, according to two people familiar with the inquiry.

Representatives from the state's Joint Commission on Public Ethics have contacted the group in recent weeks to ask why it has not yet registered as a lobbyist, in possible violation of rules requiring it to do so if it plans on influencing the outcome of pending legislation.

The two people who requested anonymity described communications that were meant to be confidential.

The group, the Campaign for One New York, was created by the mayor's political consultants to raise money and attention for Mr. de Blasio's political agenda while operating outside the city's limits on campaign contributions. The group is paying for the mayor's trips to California and for a previous one to the Midwest; on Thursday, Mr. de Blasio is to speak with technology moguls at a fund-raiser for the group in San Francisco. Tickets are selling for up to $10,000.

Under New York's ethics rules, groups that "reasonably anticipate" spending more than $5,000 on lobbying activities are required to register with the ethics commission, known as JCOPE, within 15 days.

A spokesman for the campaign, Dan Levitan, said that so far this year the group had been engaged only in "potential public education campaigns" and assisting in Mr. de Blasio's national efforts.

But in some of their materials, including two fund-raising letters obtained by The New York Times, the group has said it will work to ensure that Mr. de Blasio can retain control of the New York City school system, a goal that requires the approval of the State Legislature.

In March, a solicitation letter mailed to potential donors stated, “The Campaign for One New York will continue to support the mayor as he works for renewal of mayoral control of schools.” The letter also refers to securing “fair funding for New York City schools,” also a legislative matter, and supporting the mayor’s affordable housing plan, including “approvals at the state level.”

More recently, an invitation to the fund-raiser in San Francisco said that the group was focused on “fighting for mayoral control of schools.” The invitation was sent by email on May 3 by Ron Conway, a California-based venture capitalist; at a tech conference in New York last week, Mr. de Blasio described himself as “a big fan” of Mr. Conway.

A spokesman for Jcope, John Milgrim, declined to comment on Tuesday about whether the ethics commission had contacted the Campaign for One New York.

Last year, the group, under the name UPKNYC, did register as a lobbyist with Jcope while working to secure passage in Albany of Mr. de Blasio’s universal prekindergarten plan.

Members of the Campaign For One New York say that this year is different, and that the language in the fund-raising letters regarding mayoral control and other legislative matters did not amount to a formal commitment to engage in lobbying on those issues.

“At this time we don’t contemplate conducting any lobbying activity in 2015,” the spokesman, Mr. Levitan, said in a statement on Tuesday. “If that were to change we would, of course, register as we have in the past. Regardless, we continue to voluntarily disclose all of our donors and expenses to the public.”

Crain’s New York Business reported last month that the group had not yet registered as a lobbyist this year.

Mr. de Blasio and his aides have already raised hundreds of thousands of dollars for the group, mostly from traditional allies like labor unions. Late last month, the mayor spoke at a fund-raiser for the group in Lower Manhattan, hosted by a prominent city lobbying firm, Constantinople & Vallone. Among the attendees were representatives of city-based construction and real estate firms.

Although it is primarily funding political activities, the Campaign for One New York is registered as a nonprofit, allowing it to accept unlimited contributions from donors who would otherwise be limited by New York City’s strict campaign finance laws.

Lawyers familiar with New York’s ethics guidelines said the Campaign for One New York could avoid registering as a lobbyist if it genuinely did not plan to engage in influencing pending legislation.

But Blair Horner, legislative director at the New York Public Interest Research Group, said the fund-raising materials alone, with their implication of future lobbying activity, “should trigger a JCOPE review.”

If the group does not plan to pursue those legislative goals, Mr. Horner added, then the fund-raising materials could be construed as misleading to potential contributors.

Still, Mr. Horner conceded that the state’s ethics guidelines were written in ways that could be subject to interpretation.

“There’s an incentive for groups to try to play fast and loose, where they might be dancing around the spirit of the law.”

“If this group is being organized to help the mayor advance his agenda, the mayor bears some responsibility for what this group does,” Mr. Horner added. “They shouldn’t have to be dragged kicking and screaming to comply with the state lobbying law.”

A version of this article appears in print on May 13, 2015, on page A23 of the New York edition with the headline: Group Supporting de Blasio’s Agenda Is Said to Draw Interest of Ethics Panel.

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: UPDATED: Mini Schedule for Wednesday, May 13, 2015
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 12:16:41 AM

Yup but needed an R

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

On May 12, 2015, at 7:49 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

You know Inhofe is a complete and utter lunatic right?

On May 12, 2015, at 8:39 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

UPDATED – Morning Joe appearance @ 8:20 AM

SCHEDULE FOR MAYOR BILL DE BLASIO
CITY OF NEW YORK
Wednesday, May 13, 2015

WEATHER DC: Hi of 71. Low of 51. Sunny.
CA: Hi of 67. Low of 50. Cloudy.

ATTIRE: Business, Sunscreen for outdoor press conference

NOTES: - [REDACTED]
- [REDACTED]
- FLONYC flies to San Francisco at 3:30PM

7:45 - 8:00 TRAVEL FROM [REDACTED] HOTEL EN ROUTE 400 N CAPITOL
ST NW
Travel Time: 15 mins.

7:45 - 8:00 COMMUNICATIONS CALL
Press Contact: Monica Klein

8:20 - 8:45 APPEAR ON MORNING JOE WITH MAYOR CORNETT
Location: 400 N Capitol St NW, Washington, D.C.
20001, United States

8:45 - 8:55 TRAVEL FROM 400 N CAPITOL ST NW EN ROUTE RUSSELL

SENATE OFFICE BUILDING

Travel Time: 10 mins.

9:00 - 9:30 MEETING WITH SENATOR JAMES INHOFE AND MAYOR
MICK CORNETT

Location: 205 Russell Senate Office Building

9:40 - 9:50 TRAVEL FROM RUSSELL SENATE OFFICE BUILDING EN ROUTE 445 12TH ST SW

Travel Time: 10 mins.

10:00 - 10:30 MEETING WITH CHAIRMAN TOM WHEELER

Location: FCC, 445 12th St SW, Washington, DC
20536

Note: Maya will meet you at the FCC

10:40 - 10:50 TRAVEL FROM 445 12TH ST SW EN ROUTE UNITED STATES CAPITOL

Travel Time: 10 mins.

11:00 - 11:30 LEADERSHIP MEETING WITH U.S. SENATE DEMOCRATIC LEADER HARRY REID

Location: S-221 U.S Capitol Building, Washington, DC 20510

11:30 - 11:40 TRAVEL FROM U.S. CAPITOL BUILDING EN ROUTE
RAYBURN HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING

Travel Time: 10 mins.

11:45 - 12:15 LEADERSHIP MEETING WITH CONGRESSMAN BILL
SHUSTER

Location: 2251 Rayburn House Office Building

12:15 - 12:45 LUNCH // PREP

Location: 2251 Rayburn House Office Building -
Cafeteria

12:45 - 12:50 TRAVEL FROM RAYBURN HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING EN ROUTE PRESS CONFERENCE

Travel Time: 10 mins.

1:00 - 2:00 USCM PRESS CONFERENCE

Location: U.S. Capitol - Area 10 (Corner of First Street N.E. & Independence Ave. S.E.)

2:15 - 2:45 PREP CALL FOR TECH ROUNDTABLE EN ROUTE
Dial-in: [REDACTED]
ID: [REDACTED]

2:30 - 3:15 TRAVEL FROM TBD EN ROUTE DULLES INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT
Travel Time: 45 mins.

3:00 - 3:30 CALL WITH CARDINAL DOLAN
Notes: Cardinal calls YOU

3:30 - 7:15 FYI: FLONYC EN ROUTE SFO AMERICAN AIRLINES 85
Travel Time: 6 hours 45 mins (-3 hours upon arrival)

4:45 - 8:00 TRAVEL FROM IAD EN ROUTE SFO - UNITED AIRLINES
1401
Travel Time: 5 hours 15 mins. (-3 hours upon arrival)

8:00 - 8:20 TRAVEL FROM SFO EN ROUTE [REDACTED]
Travel Time: 20 mins.

RON

SAN FRANCISCO [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]
SAN FRANCISCO, CA 94103

FLONYC SCHEDULE

11:30 - 12:30 WABC INTERVIEW
3:30 - 7:15 EN ROUTE SFO AMERICAN AIRLINES 85

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 8:13:45 AM

Oh my god!

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 8:13 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)" <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

When my flight was cancelled I almost tried to get on that train.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 08:10 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

That's great. And if MBDB can call at some point this AM, that would be good too. What a complete nightmare. We've all taken that train so many times.

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 8:06 AM
To: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)" <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

Fwiw I talked to her last nite over email so we have had one contact from us

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 07:53 AM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

Pls remind him to assume all "on the record". He has asked for that reminder previously

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 07:53 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

Yes, I will flag for him after Morning Joe.

From: John Del Cecato
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 7:53 AM
To: Phillip Walzak; Hagelgans, Andrea; Leopold, Elana; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

If he hasn't already?

Jillian Jorgensen (@Jill_Jorgensen)

5/13/15, 12:21 AM

Hi folks. I was on the Amtrak that derailed. I am in a hospital getting checked out and it was the worst experience of my life but I'm OK.

From: Carey, Michael
To: Liz Hegarty
Subject: Hotel in Sf
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 9:38:47 AM

He is at marriott?

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

From: Carey Michael
To: Liz Hegarty
Subject: Re: Reservation Confirmation #90891112 for San Francisco Marriott Marquis
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 9:50:56 AM

Thx

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

On May 13, 2015, at 6:48 AM, Liz Hegarty <lhegarty@akpdmmedia.com> wrote:

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Marriott Hotels & Resorts Reservations <reservations@marriott-res.com>
Date: May 11, 2015 at 12:54:33 PM CDT
To: LHEGARTY@AKPDMEDIA.COM
Subject: Reservation Confirmation # [REDACTED] for San Francisco Marriott Marquis
Reply-To: "Marriott Hotels & Resorts Reservations" <reservations.reply@marriott.com>

Please review your reservation details and keep for your records

San Francisco Marriott Marquis

780 Mission Street . San Francisco, California 94103 USA

1-415-896-1600 Hotel Website Map & Directions Plan Your Stay

Reservation Confirmation: [REDACTED]

For Mr. John DelCecato

CHECK-IN DATE Wednesday, May 13, 2015

CHECK-OUT DATE Friday, May 15, 2015

CHECK-IN TIME 04:00 PM

CHECK-OUT TIME 12:00 PM

Modify your reservation

Cancel your reservation

Dear Mr. John DelCecato,

We are pleased to confirm your reservation with the San Francisco Marriott Marquis. We look forward to making your stay memorable and uncomplicated.

Travel Brilliantly,
San Francisco Marriott Marquis

Plan Your Stay

Quick Bites or Leisurely Dining

We have fresh snacks and delicious meals to fit your needs.

Learn More

Relax and Recharge

Make a spa or beauty treatment part of your stay.

Make an Appointment

Mobile Check-In & Out

Get to your room faster & receive instant updates.

Download our app

Room Details

ROOM TYPE	Guest room, 1 King or 2 Double, City view
NUMBER OF ROOMS	1
GUESTS PER ROOM	1
GUARANTEED METHOD	Credit Card Guarantee, Visa
SPECIAL REQUESTS

Room 1

Not Guaranteed/Sold Out

* 1 King Bed

Hotel Alert

Hotel moving away from traditional room service as of 4/25/15. See our Marriott.com dining page for options or call us.

Summary of Charges

RATES ARE PER ROOM, PER NIGHT (USD)

Wednesday, May 13, 2015-Friday, May 15, 2015	2 nights	384.00 USD
Regular rate
ESTIMATED GOVERNMENT TAXES & FEES		63.15 USD
Total for stay (for all rooms)		894.30 USD

Parking Information

* Off-site parking, fee: 3.50 USD hourly, 34 USD daily * Valet parking, fee: 65 USD daily

* On-site parking, fee: 21.25 USD hourly, 65 USD daily

Modify or cancel your reservation

Book Another Reservation

Rate and Cancellation Details

- Please note that a change in the length or dates of your reservation may result in a rate change.
- You may cancel your reservation for no charge until Monday, May 11, 2015 (2 day[s] before arrival).
- Please note that we will assess a fee of 384.00 USD if you must cancel after this deadline.

If you have made a prepayment, we will retain all or part of your prepayment. If not, we will charge your credit card.

RATE GUARANTEE LIMITATION(S)

- Changes in taxes or fees implemented after booking will affect the total room price.
- Please note that a change in the length or dates of your reservation may result in a rate change.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

- The Responsible Tourist and Traveler
A practical guide to help you make your trip an enriching experience

Marriott Rewards

Get free in-room Wi-Fi when you join Marriott Rewards and book direct. Sign up and enjoy at 3,800+ hotels worldwide.

Join Marriott Rewards

Contact Us

Call 1-800-228-9290 in the US and Canada.
Elsewhere, call our worldwide telephone numbers.

Contact us if you have questions about your reservation

Get Up to 35% off + 500 Marriott Rewards Points

Book with Hertz & get exclusive discounts

Search Now

Book Transportation, Tours & More

Get great rates on local tours & attractions

Book Now

DOWNLOAD MARRIOTT MOBILE APP

STAY CONNECTED

Privacy, Authenticity and Opting Out

Your privacy is important to us. Please visit our Privacy Statement for full details.

This email confirmation is an auto-generated message. Replies to automated messages are not monitored. Our Internet Customer Care team is available to assist you 24 hours per day, 7 days per week. Contact Internet Customer Care.

Promotional Email Unsubscribe

If you provided us with your email address for the first time, we will send you a follow-up email to welcome you. We will also send you periodic emails with information about your account balance, member status, special offers and promotions. An opt-out link will be included in each of these emails so that you can change your mind at any time.

If you would prefer to opt out of such emails from Marriott International, Marriott Rewards or The Ritz-Carlton Rewards, you may do so here. In addition, you may unsubscribe from The Ritz-Carlton email community here.

Please note: Should you unsubscribe from promotional email, we will continue to send messages for transactions such as reservation confirmation, point redemption, etc.

Confirmation Authenticity

We're sending you this confirmation notice electronically for your convenience. Marriott keeps an official record of all electronic reservations. We honor our official record only and will disregard any alterations to this confirmation that may have been made after we sent it to you.

If you have received this email in error, please let us know.

© 1996 - 2015 MARRIOTT INTERNATIONAL, INC. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED. MARRIOTT PROPRIETARY INFORMATION
TERMS OF USE + INTERNET PRIVACY STATEMENT

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
Subject: Joan Walsh and Molly Ball interviews
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 10:11:28 AM

Can someone send me audio of all his DC interviews? He did Amanda Terkel too, right?

Sent from my iPhone

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato; Wolfe, Emma Subject: Howard Dean
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 10:12:22 AM

Brian Lehrer Show (@BrianLehrer)

5/13/15, 10:05 AM

"It's not very liberal; this is middle-of-the-road stuff," says @GovHowardDean on the Contract With America, specifically Universal Pre-K.

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Huffington Post: Here's How Hillary Clinton Measures Up On Bill De Blasio's 13-Point Progressive Litmus Test
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 11:35:33 AM

Here's How Hillary Clinton Measures Up On Bill De Blasio's 13-Point Progressive Litmus Test

Posted: 05/13/2015 7:39 am EDT Updated: 33 minutes ago

WASHINGTON -- New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) traveled more than 200 miles south on Tuesday to debut what he hopes will be a unifying progressive agenda for the upcoming presidential election.

Formally known as "The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality," de Blasio's plan consists of 13 principles, largely addressing issues of family well-being and economic fairness.

"It's a marker for all current leaders and all aspirants to different offices to use as a way of addressing these issues," de Blasio told The Huffington Post in an interview Tuesday in Washington, shortly before he unveiled the platform on Capitol Hill. "We're putting forward a tangible set of things that can change the economic reality for millions and millions of Americans."

De Blasio's principles could prove a useful tool for holding Democratic candidates accountable if they start to drift philosophically during the 2016 campaign. But at this point, the candidates eyeing the nomination seem to be largely in step with the New York City mayor's vision.

Of those Democrats running or expected to run for president, de Blasio's agenda would seem to present the toughest challenge to former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. Clinton, after all, bears the reputation of the centrist front-runner having her heels nipped at by lesser-known progressive rivals. And though de Blasio managed her 2000 Senate campaign in New York, he has not yet endorsed Clinton's presidential candidacy, saying he's waiting to see her vision of governance.

On Tuesday, however, de Blasio had only kind words for Clinton, saying he was "optimistic" so far about her direction on issues like immigration, mass incarceration and income inequality.

"We're obviously only weeks into her campaign, but I think she's said some very positive things directly on income inequality -- in Iowa, certainly," de Blasio said. "I think we see a strong beginning from her as she fleshes out her vision."

Indeed, a closer look at de Blasio's progressive agenda further complicates the narrative that Clinton is out of step. HuffPost examined Clinton's position on each of the elements de Blasio's agenda, and found that she is philosophically supportive of all 13 of the principles. Where we couldn't find an answer, we noted it. When she comes up short, it's largely a matter of degree or because she hasn't made her current stance fully known (whether intentionally or not). There are places here where she may be vulnerable to attacks from her primary opponents, who have records with fewer blanks to fill in. But Clinton has her defenders when it comes to her progressivism, including at least one person who has signed onto de Blasio's platform.

"I wouldn't be in this process if I thought it was an attempt to move Hillary Clinton to the left," said former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean (D), a former presidential candidate who supports Clinton and has signed on to de Blasio's statement of principles. "I view this as a way of setting a marker for Democrats so they don't stray as the way they did in the year before I ran."

Reached for comment, Clinton's campaign declined to make any new policy pronouncements, citing a desire to stick to its own schedule. But her spokesman Brian Fallon sent over the following statement: "For her entire career, Hillary Clinton has championed many of the issues included in this contract. She has a long record of pushing for progress on issues like family leave, income inequality and education. She looks forward to continuing the conversation around these important topics as she lays out her own ideas over the coming months of the campaign."

A look at Clinton's position on each of de Blasio's agenda items:

1. Raise the federal minimum wage to $15 per hour. Clinton has called for raising the federal minimum wage, though she hasn't explicitly come out in favor of $15 an hour, as former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, a likely Democratic challenger, has done. That said, though, the bill currently being pushed by Senate Democrats doesn't call for that level either, settling instead for $12.

2. Reform the National Labor Relations Act to enhance workers' rights. Clinton hasn't made statements on this issue recently, but in the past she has sponsored the Employee Free Choice Act, which would have expanded avenues for unionization. And in 2008, she pledged to make "pro-labor" nominations to the NLRB.

3. Pass comprehensive immigration reform. Clinton basically stunned immigration advocates recently by going further than President Barack Obama on deportation relief. She supports comprehensive reform, too.

4. Oppose trade deals that “move power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers’ rights, and the environment.” This is probably the biggest TBD on the list. Clinton has avoided discussing the specifics of the trade deal currently being negotiated, but her past statements suggest she's relatively in line with de Blasio.

5. Pass national paid sick leave. Clinton has spoken out repeatedly in favor of paid sick leave policies, calling it "outrageous" that the United States doesn't have a guarantee for mothers of newborns and recently calling out the state of Pennsylvania for potentially interfering with Philadelphia's paid sick leave law.

6. Pass national paid family leave. Clinton's campaign launch video showcased her advocacy for this policy.

7. Make pre-K, after-school programs and child care universal. In 2007, Clinton unveiled a \$5 billion plan to make child care universal and affordable, matched dollar for dollar by state funding. As first lady, she pushed for more federal funding for after-school programs. And Clinton's history of advocating for dramatic expansions of child care (Head Start, frequently) is too long to detail here.

8. Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit. The EITC was expanded under the 2009 stimulus and those expansions were extended through 2017 under the American Taxpayer Relief Act. Clinton hasn't offered an opinion on this recently. But in 2007, she called for expanding and simplifying the EITC.

9. Allow students to refinance student loan debt. Clinton has said she supports this measure, arguing that "the interest rates are still so low for most other debt and they're still fixed at too high a rate for student loans."

10. Close the carried interest loophole. She has said she wants to close it.

11. End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas. Clinton wants to do this too.

12. Implement the "Buffett Rule" so millionaires pay their fair share. Nothing notable from Clinton on this specific proposal (it came into being while she was at the State Department). But she supported raising the top-end Bush tax rates (which did get raised), and Buffett himself supports her candidacy.

13. Closing the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of "performance pay" write-offs. Again, it's pretty clear where Clinton stands. In April, she wrote in The Des Moines Register: "Something is wrong when CEOs earn 300 times more than a typical American worker and hedge fund managers pay a lower tax rate than a truck driver or a nurse."

Now, there is a major caveat to all of this: Platforms are written in broad strokes, while governance is done with more precision. And a common critique of Clinton is that she might be more inclined to cut deals at odds with this progressive agenda, due to her proximity to Wall Street donors and the record compiled by her husband's administration.

Clinton's ability to fend off this skepticism could very well determine how serious a primary she actually has to grapple with in the coming year. Still, it's worth remembering that her real problem in 2008 was not her domestic agenda -- in fact, on some critical issues she struck decidedly more progressive notes than Obama -- but her hawkish foreign policy leanings.

Have a tip or story idea to share with us? Email us at scoops@huffingtonpost.com. We'll keep your identity private unless you tell us otherwise.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato; Snyder, Thomas; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea; Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: TPA opening remarks
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 11:44:14 AM

<http://www.nbcnews.com/meet-the-press/bill-de-blasio-treads-carefully-washington-dc-n358056>

"It's great news that Mayor de Blasio is adding his powerful voice to the growing movement to make big ideas like debt-free college and expanding Social Security central to the 2016 presidential debate," Adam Green, co-founder of the Progressive Change Campaign Committee, said in a statement.

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Monday, May 11, 2015 9:43 PM
To: John Del Cecato; Snyder, Thomas; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: TPA opening remarks

yeah he is ridiculous made tammy baldwin -- madison wi liberal tammy baldwin, first LGBT in senate! -- jump thru all kinds of hoops in '12...

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Monday, May 11, 2015 9:43 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: TPA opening remarks

No kidding! Who the fuck IS this guy? I can't wait to meet him face-to-face...

Meanwhile, her campaign has remained in contact with liberal groups like the Progressive Change Campaign Committee, which is encouraging Clinton to embrace expanding Social Security and a debt-free college plan.

SNIP

"Two areas where words alone do make a difference are expanding social security and debt-free college," explained the PCCC's Adam Green, pointing to a recent interview where her campaign manager mentioned the latter. "If she were to give a speech or even send a tweet mentioning them, that would shift the entire national discussion."

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, May 11, 2015 at 9:37 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Gunaratna, Mahen"

<MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Leopold, Elana" <LEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: RE: TPA opening remarks

ok cool

don wanna mess with your politics, not a huge deal, and your coalition bldg needs proly more impt plus those are all good issues!

adam green will be happy....

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]

Sent: Monday, May 11, 2015 9:36 PM

To: Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael

Subject: Re: TPA opening remarks

Part of the issue is that we cut a deal with Van Jones today - long story... But the promised goal is that we'd get mass incarceration, SS, and debt-free college on TPA very soon - maybe by end of week...

Still could tweak language - just wanted you to know the last minute deals to keep the bad actors from blowing up our thing

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Monday, May 11, 2015 at 9:10 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Leopold, Elana" <LEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: Re: TPA opening remarks

Instead of saying what its not...why not call this the first installment on income inequality with room to cover more ground on other issues in future

Just the emphasis on 'not' strikes me as limiting

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]

Sent: Monday, May 11, 2015 08:14 PM

To: Snyder, Thomas; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael

Subject: TPA opening remarks

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: FYI, trying to figure out what she said on NYC nail salons
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 12:45:03 PM

Don't think she said it publicly, but am double checking:

Sarah Nir Verified account @SarahMaslinNir

.@HillaryClinton Nice bumping into you! Thank you for your kind words about my investigation "The Price of Nice Nails" nytimes.com/2015/05/10/nyr ...

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re:
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 1:25:57 PM

we wont have time for interviews
will send once back to hotel

> On 13 May 2015, at 10:23 am, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Can you send me latest mini Sked for CA when you get a chance?
>
> Also trying to figure out interviews via Ragone.
>
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 1:31:21 PM

I'm sure you're hearing the same, but all of the folks I've spoken to today have been amazed at what you pulled off yesterday. I know Washington isn't exactly a representative sample of the country - but these folks all know how incredibly hard it is to do something like that - and, frankly, I think people were shocked that we not only "didn't fail" - but really succeeded. I know you're never one to sit and contemplate success - you're always on to what needs to happen next - but take 5 minutes today to feel really good.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Reich talking points
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 3:01:38 PM
Attachments: ReichConversationTalkingPoints.docx

I'm sure we'll rewrite on the plane - but here's a starter.

GOALS:

1. Talk about income inequality as the crisis of our time, and The Progressive Agenda as a tangible way to combat it.
2. Highlight successful events this week in DC, especially TPA signing, with 85 top progressive leaders (including Secretary Reich) already signed on.
3. Discuss the signing of the agenda as only a first step – now signees are engaging everyday Americans across the country to build a grassroots movement.
4. Drive audience to TPA website to sign on and get involved: progressiveagenda.us [Progressive Agenda DOT U-S].

BERKLEY-SPECIFIC POINTS:

- It is an honor to be speaking at this institution -- thank you Secretary Reich for the invitation.
- The very name Berkley is synonymous worldwide with progressivism and justice.

- Today, there's critical work being done here towards ECONOMIC progress and justice.
- No one embodies the idea that defines this school's history more than Secretary Reich.
- For him – and for you – higher education is not a passive experience. What defines this institution is the idea that learning about the world means little unless you work aggressively to change it for the better.
- On the topic of our conversation today, Secretary Reich said QUOTE “we don't have to sit by and watch our meritocracy be replaced by a permanent aristocracy, and our democracy be undermined by dynastic wealth.” END QUOTE
- And he's just one of many bright stars of progressive economics here. Great minds like Professor Emmanuel Saez [Cy-Ez] are providing the lens through which we can accurately see the modern economy.

INEQUALITY STATISTICS

- We have now worse income inequality than at the time of the stock market crash in 1929.
- In America, the wealthiest 160,000 families own as much wealth as the poorest 145 million families.
- According to OxFam, by next year, the top one percent in the world will possess more wealth than the bottom 99 percent.
- Between 2009 and 2012 overall income per family grew 6.9 percent. The gains weren't shared evenly, however. The top 1 percent saw their real income grow by 34.7 percent while the bottom 99 percent only saw a 0.8 percent gain, meaning that the 1 percent captured 91 percent of all real income.

- A report covered by the New York Times recently found that the top 25 hedge fund managers earned nearly $12 BILLION in compensation in 2014 – even while their funds were not so hot. 25 people. $12 billion. Think about that.
 - Should those folks really be paying a lower tax rate than the woman who cleans their beach house...or the guy who pilots their private plane? That's what our current tax system allows. And that MUST change.

TPA POINTS

- Six weeks ago, I convened a small group of progressive leaders in New York City to discuss the central crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.
 - Secretary Reich couldn't make the trip to New York because he was teaching his class...and helping educate his students on some of these very issues.
- But out of that meeting, we reached out to other fellow progressives – including Secretary Reich, of course -- and worked together to generate a serious, bold set of solutions to that crisis.

- And two days ago in Washington, we introduced “The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality.”
 - 85 top progressive leaders have already signed on, including Secretary Reich, who now shares a distinction with both Howard Dean and Toni Morrison. Not too bad, huh?
- These 13 progressive ideas will make an enormous difference in combatting income inequality:
 - BOLD steps like a $15 minimum wage;
 - National paid sick and family leave laws
 - Universal Pre-K, after-school and child care
 - Closing the tax loopholes that CEOs, hedge fund managers, and billionaires use to avoid paying their fair share.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept. America needs economic policies that reward WORK...and not just wealth.

- There's something happening out there...an urgent call for change...given voice by everyday people across this country.
 - Just last month, more than 60,000 people took to the streets in 200 cities – all fighting for a higher minimum wage.
- This isn't business as usual. It's a new politics that puts PEOPLE ahead of profits...that values WORK instead of wealth.
- We'll be calling on candidates and elected officials to stiffen their backbones, champion the progressive policies that our nation needs...and join our growing cause.
- The Progressive Agenda is a bold first step. And there will be more to come.
- We're asking everyday people across America to join us...to sign up at our website – Progressive Agenda DOT U-S.
 - If the esteemed professor here with me doesn't think it would be rude, I'd like to encourage all of you with smart phones to go to the site right now and sign up: Progressive Agenda DOT U-S.

- And spread the word to your friends and on social media.
- If ANYONE knows the power of everyday activism to bring about change, it's the people on this campus. We're counting on you.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Is Santa Clara U talked being filmed?
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 3:12:42 PM

I'll see what I can do

On 5/13/15, 2:51 PM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>We should for our own protection

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 3:15:30 PM

yes

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 3:13 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: <no subject>

Also - is tech roundtable closed press?

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Is Santa Clara U talked being filmed?
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 3:16:45 PM

Yes, will be filmed & posted right after - per Michael Carey

On 5/13/15, 2:51 PM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>We should for our own protection

From: Leopold, Elana
To: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
Cc: John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 3:56:38 PM

This call is done

Mayor lvm

Sent from my iPhone

On May 13, 2015, at 8:23 AM, Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov> wrote:

I've been asking. Most reporters still here luckily.

From: John Del Cecato
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 8:16 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Phillip Walzak; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

Is there any way to find out whether any of our other TPA participants/reporters/ were on board or injured.

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 8:13 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)" <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

When my flight was cancelled I almost tried to get on that train.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 08:10 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

That's great. And if MBDB can call at some point this AM, that would be good too. What a complete nightmare. We've all taken that train so many times.

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 8:06 AM
To: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)" <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

Fwiw I talked to her last nite over email so we have had one contact from us

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 07:53 AM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

Pls remind him to assume all "on the record". He has asked for that reminder previously

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [<mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 07:53 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

Yes, I will flag for him after Morning Joe.

From: John Del Cecato
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 7:53 AM
To: Phillip Walzak; Hagelgans, Andrea; Leopold, Elana; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: Can we make sure MBDB calls Jill?

If he hasn't already?

Jillian Jorgensen (@Jill_Jorgensen)

5/13/15, 12:21 AM

Hi folks. I was on the Amtrak that derailed. I am in a hospital getting checked out and it was the worst experience of my life but I'm OK.

From: Carey, Michael
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Singleton, Jessica
Subject: Re: Friday event
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:00:35 PM

We need to be careful here.
This is part political part official

From: <Hagelgans>, Andrea Hagelgans <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 12:59 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: Friday event

Hi- do you have details on friday roundtable?

From: Davis, Tanyanika
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 03:56 PM
To: Chow, Eugene; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gross, Dan
Subject: Friday event

For your awareness:

I'm working on remarks for a roundtable Friday but hitting a snag.

The invite suggests we should go in there with an "ask." So far, no one seems to know what that "ask" is.

I've been working with Jessie over the last two days and did get some background material. But as my deadline looms, I still have no clear idea of the "why" behind this event.

I'm sending in my draft (basically a scaled down version of this last tech remarks) but know that I'm flying blind on this one.

Just a little background for the inevitable confusion.

Thanks, Tanyanika

From: Singleton, Jessica
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: Friday event
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:02:08 PM

Oh ok then I can brief you. But mpc, I just spoke to RO again and he says mayor does not know the Friday meeting includes an ask, which is the most important part to make sure he is comfortable with.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:01 PM
To: Singleton, Jessica; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Carey, Michael Subject: Re: Friday event

Mpc is in san fran :(

From: Singleton, Jessica
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 04:00 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: Friday event

AH, let's huddle in person with MPC.

From: Singleton, Jessica
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:01 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: Friday event

Yes, I've given everything to Tananika. The missing piece is what ask the mayor will make of these folks, which I need to ask him about when we talk. Our call was canceled today and rescheduled for tomorrow so we'll know then.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:00 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Carey, Michael; Singleton, Jessica
Subject: Fw: Friday event

Hi- do you have details on friday roundtable?

From: Davis, Tanyanika
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 03:56 PM
To: Chow, Eugene; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gross, Dan
Subject: Friday event

For your awareness:

I'm working on remarks for a roundtable Friday but hitting a snag.

The invite suggests we should go in there with an "ask." So far, no one seems to know what that "ask" is.

I've been working with Jessie over the last two days and did get some background material. But as my deadline looms, I still have no clear idea of the "why" behind this event.

I'm sending in my draft (basically a scaled down version of this last tech remarks) but know that I'm flying blind on this one.

Just a little background for the inevitable confusion.

Thanks, Tanyanika

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: Re: tomorrow
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:02:29 PM

ok

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 1:03 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: tomorrow

Update - he now says he can handle 30 minutes with riffing.. So we won't have to cut THAT much.

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 3:56 PM
To: "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: tomorrow

Okay, I'll spend time on plane cutting

From: <Carey>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 3:21 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: tomorrow

He was pretty insistent with me about 15

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 12:21 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: tomorrow

How intent are you at him sticking to 15 minutes? Speech would be 15 minutes if he didn't riff - but more like 35 if/when he does... not sure how much chopping i should do on the plane...

From: <Carey>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 3:17 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: tomorrow

I asked for stream, but that is $$ and didn't want it to look bad for us on his daughters campus

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 12:18 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: tomorrow

Did i ever tell you that you rock?

From: <Carey>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 3:14 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: tomorrow

It is being filmed and ready to be posted post event per my request ☺

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 3:12 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: tomorrow

Roger.

MBDB just asked if we could have Santa Clara speech filmed... Is that something you could arrange? If not, I can get our producer to work some quick magic

From: <Carey>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 3:07 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: tomorrow

No, I want it actually prep time. This is BERKELY. And open to the public. He is going to get asked a lot of questions.

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 12:07 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: tomorrow

Wait - I don't gotcha. Do you want me to try to fill that time with something?

From: <Carey>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 2:48 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: tomorrow

So we have a bit of time in Berkley on site to prep tomorrow, which I really do think he will need. So didn't want you to think it will be fun time.

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE:
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:15:47 PM

sure

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:16 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: Re:

How about doing NPR (or the Bay Area's version of that, according to Peter) from 9 to 930am on Friday morning, in studio?

On 5/13/15, 2:38 PM, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>9:15 - 9:30 Travel from [REDACTED] En Route City Hall
>9:20 - 9:30 Communications Call
>9:30 - 10:30 Meeting with Mayor Lee
>10:45 - 11:30 Travel from City Hall En Route 2020 Addison St, Berkeley, >CA
>11:00 - 11:15 Call with Nicholas Gravante
>11:30 - 12:00 Hold/Prep
>12:00 - 12:30 Greet/Meet with Former Secretary Reich
>12:30 - 1:30 Conversation with Former Secretary Robert Reich
>1:30 - 2:15 Pick Up FLONYC // Travel from 2020 Addison Avenue,
>Berkeley, CA En Route 500 El Camino Real, Santa Clara, CA
>2:15 - 2:30 Lunch
>2:30 - 3:10 Meeting with Advisor
>3:15 - 3:30 Meeting with Advisor
>3:45 - 4:05 Meeting with Father Michael Engh, President of Santa Clara >University
>4:05 - 4:10 Travel from President's Office en route Recital Hall on >foot
>4:30 - 5:45 Remarks at Santa Clara University
>6:00 - 7:10 Travel from Santa Clara University En Route Old Skool Cafe,
>1429 Mendell St. San Francisco, CA 94124
>7:15 - 8:45 Event in Honor of Campaign for One New York with FLONYC
>8:45 - 9:00 Travel from 1652 Stockton Street en route [REDACTED]
>9:00 - 9:30 RON: San Francisco [REDACTED],
>San Francisco, CA 94103
>
>Friday
>10:00 - 10:15 Travel from [REDACTED] en route Max's Opera Cafe
>10:00 - 10:15 Communications Call
>10:30 - 11:30 Meeting with Mayor Schaaf (Reservations under: Tomiquia >Moss)
>11:30 - 11:45 Travel from Max's Opera Cafe en route 414 Brannan Street
>12:00 - 1:30 Tech Roundtable Luncheon

>1:30 - 2:30 Travel from 414 Brannan Street en route
>2:30 - 3:30 Meeting with Sam Liccardo, Mayor of San Jose
>
>Michael Paul Carey
>City Hall
>New York, New York
>
>-----Original Message-----
>From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
>Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 1:34 PM
>To: Carey, Michael
>Subject: Re:
>
>Okie dokie
>
>
>
>> On May 13, 2015, at 1:27 PM, Carey, Michael >><MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>wrote:
>>
>> we wont have time for interviews
>> will send once back to hotel
>>
>>
>>> On 13 May 2015, at 10:23 am, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
>>>wrote:
>>>
>>> Can you send me latest mini Sked for CA when you get a chance?
>>>
>>> Also trying to figure out interviews via Ragone.
>>>
>>>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: FW: Capital Data: De Blasio's historically low deficits
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:16:20 PM

From: Capital Pro <info@capitalnewyork.com>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 4:16 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Capital Data: De Blasio's historically low deficits

Capital Data: De Blasio's historically low deficits

By Brendan Cheney

4:15 p.m. | May. 13, 2015

Mayor Bill de Blasio's projected budget deficits for the final three years of his budget plan are the smallest combined deficits since 2002, according to an analysis by Capital.

De Blasio released his executive budget last week and projected a balanced budget for Fiscal Year 2015 and Fiscal Year 2016. He projected a surplus of $1.6 billion for Fiscal Year 2017, and deficits of $2 billion and $2.9 billion for fiscal years 2018 and 2019, respectively.

Added together, de Blasio projected a net deficit of $3.3 billion over the next four years. None of former mayor Michael Bloomberg's executive budgets had smaller combined deficits.

De Blasio is benefiting from a growing economy and strong revenue growth. City revenues increased by 6 percent in 2013 and 2.6 percent in 2014. And he projected revenue growth of 8.5 percent in 2015, a decrease of 1.7 percent in 2016, but increases of between 2.4 percent and 2.8 percent in 2017, 2018 and 2019.

Gross domestic product has increased by more than 2 percent in 2012, 2013, and 2014 and is projected to grow by between 2.5 percent and 3 percent in 2015, 2016, and 2017.

The largest projected total deficits were during the recent recession. Bloomberg projected a combined deficit in the 2009 executive plan of $15.2 billion. In the 2010 executive budget, his total projected deficit was $13.8 billion and in 2011 he projected a $15.1 billion deficit.

In the face of these large deficits, Bloomberg enacted budget cuts, called the Program to Eliminate the Gap or PEGs, so that the 2014 budget was $6.5 billion less than it otherwise would have been, according to his budget documents.

But there were also large budget deficits projected in the years before the recession. In the 2004 executive budget plan, Bloomberg projected an $11.5 billion deficit. In 2005 he projected a $12.4 billion deficit and in 2006 projected an $11.4 billion deficit.

Below is a chart showing the same budget plans but breaking out the projection for each year. We only show years 2, 3, and 4 because there were balanced budgets projected for the current year and year 1 in all of the plans we reviewed. For example, in the most recent executive budget, de Blasio projected a balanced budget in the current year (2015) and year 1 (2016), a surplus in year 2 (2017), and deficits in year 3 (2018) and year 4 (2019).

The story is the same in this chart, showing larger deficits in 2009, 2010 and 2011.

The city's fiscal year runs from July 1 through June 30. So the 2015 fiscal year started July 1, 2014 and will end June 30, 2015. The 2016 fiscal year will start on July 1, 2015 and end June 30, 2016.

You've received this Capital Pro content because your customized settings include: City Hall (all articles) or one of the following City Hall topics: Bill de Blasio.

To change your alert settings, please go to your Pro settings page.

This email alert has been sent for the exclusive use of Capital Pro subscriber jfdc@akpdmedia.com. Forwarding or reproducing the alert without the express, written permission of Capital Pro is a violation of federal law and the Capital Pro subscription agreement. Copyright © 2015 by CapNY LLC. To subscribe to Pro, please go to <http://www.capitalnewyork.com/page/why-pro>.

If you believe this has been sent to you in error, please safely unsubscribe.

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: KQED
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:34:22 PM

Yes

But you will have wifi on this flight.... I already checked :)

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 1:34 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fwd: KQED

Do you wanna lock down? We are wheels up in a bit

Begin forwarded message:

From: Peter Ragone <[REDACTED]>
Date: May 13, 2015 at 4:24:18 PM EDT
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: KQED

See below. Still haven't heard anything on times for anything else.

I produce the morning show "Forum" hosted by Michael Krasny here at KQED, the NPR in San Francisco. (We're the equivalent of the "The Brian Lehrer Show" in SF.)

When he's in town later this week, would Mayor de Blasio be available to join us for an interview at our SF studios – either 9-9:30 or 9:30-10 am, either Thursday or Friday morning?

Thank you,

Irene Noguchi
Producer
KQED's Forum
\(415\) 553-2368553-2368)
inoguchi@kqed.org

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Carey, Michael; John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: Tomorrow's Events
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:39:12 PM

Love it!

From: Carey, Michael
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:38 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea Subject: Re: Tomorrow's Events

Mahen,

You would be wicked proud of MPC — I told Reich folks that I need audio as soon as it is over and have drop box already for them.

And Santa Clara is the same. Santa Clara video will also be avail.

From: <Gunaratna>, Mahen Gunaratna <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 1:36 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmmedia.com>, Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Phil Walzak <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Andrea Hagelgans <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Tomorrow's Events

For tomorrow's events, since the first one is panel discussion-style and the second is a more formal delivery followed by Q&A, I would recommend that, in the interests of amplification, we focus on transcribing his remarks at the top for the Reich event and his speech at Santa Clara. We can then blast out those portions so we're hitting on our core message.

For the discussion part with Professor Reich and the Q&A with students at Santa Clara, I can get those transcripts outsourced and hopefully completed by COB Friday – am assuming they will drag on for a while.

Let me know if any objections.

Mahen

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Good stuff from Errol Louis
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:49:44 PM

<http://www.vice.com/read/why-does-bill-de-blasio-think-he-can-save-the-democratic-party-512>

Errol Louis, the host of NY1's Inside City Hall, a nightly news show that covers all things de Blasio, disagreed, saying that while the mayor visited Washington to amplify his own spotlight, there is also real change he can effect in the city.

"De Blasio needs $14 billion for NYCHA [New York's public housing agency], $15 billion to keep mass transit running, and a higher minimum wage and more favorable unionization rules to slow and reverse a surge of poverty and homelessness," Louis told me over email. "Given the hostility of the GOP-controlled Congress, changing the national conversation is the only way to make progress."

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Carey, Michael
To: P RAGONE
Cc: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: KQED
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:52:35 PM

yup

From: Peter Ragone <[REDACTED]>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 1:53 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: KQED

In studio?

On May 13, 2015, at 1:50 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

NPR

From: Peter Ragone <[REDACTED]>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 1:50 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: KQED

For this or for Ferlinghetti?

On May 13, 2015, at 1:34 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Ragone!!!!

We can do 9-930 on Friday if that works?

Begin forwarded message:

From: Peter Ragone <[REDACTED]>
Date: May 13, 2015 at 4:24:18 PM EDT

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Subject: KQED

See below. Still haven't heard anything on times for anything else.

I produce the morning show "Forum" hosted by Michael Krasny here at KQED, the NPR in San Francisco. (We're the equivalent of the "The Brian Lehrer Show" in SF.)

When he's in town later this week, would Mayor de Blasio be available to join us for an interview at our SF studios – either 9-9:30 or 9:30-10 am, either Thursday or Friday morning?

Thank you,

Irene Noguchi
Producer
KQED's Forum
\(415\) 553-2368553-2368)
inoguchi@kqed.org

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
To: Leopold, Elana; B; John Del Cecato; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Rep. Keith Ellison
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 5:08:57 PM

Rep. Keith Ellison

Great show yesterday and I was really excited about it. Today is our progressive caucus meeting and we are going to take up the issue of where we go from here. And I would like to talk to you to get some ideas on implementation and also wanted to invite you to our next meeting when you are in D.C. Next. So please give me a call back.

Sent from my iPhone

From: Carey, Michael
To: Peter Ragone
Cc: inoguchi@KQED.org; John Del Cecato
Subject: Re:
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 5:53:22 PM

We would love to do 9 am. Where is the studio?

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 13, 2015, at 2:51 PM, Peter Ragone [REDACTED] wrote:
>
> Hi Irene, I believe that Friday will work for the Mayor. Michael and John here will be your point of contact.
>
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Klein, Monica; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Why Does Bill de Blasio Think He Can Save the Democratic Party? | VICE | United States
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 6:11:03 PM

Good quotes by Errol. We should thank him.

Wayne needs to be reminded of our tweet and opening statement at 3pm event - both of which spelled out criminal justice reform being added to TPA.
<http://www.vice.com/read/why-does-bill-de-blasio-think-he-can-save-the-democratic-party-512>

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: 2 things
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 6:14:16 PM

Yes. Chancellor office already reached out.

Yeah he emailed me about this poet. We need to do some real meetings though.

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 13, 2015, at 3:13 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Ragone says Pres of Berkeley would like to do quick meet and greet with MBDB - 2 min.
>
> And BdB mentioned that there's a slight chance this poet or something might be taking visitors? Not sure what that is - just flagging
>
>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea
Subject: RE: Think it's unfair...
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 7:31:01 PM

Can we pls ask this reporter to amend her story? SKDK is literally promoting it on their website...

<http://www.skdknick.com/nbc-quotes-mike-morey-on-mayor-de-blasio/>

SKDK's Mike Morey on Mayor de Blasio's Trip to Washington

Posted May 13, 2015

 SKDK's Mike Morey was quoted in NBC political analyst Leigh Ann Caldwell's story on Mayor de Blasio's DC trip to talk about progressive issues:

Michael Morey, a Democratic political strategist in New York City who has worked for numerous New York Democrats including Sen. Chuck Schumer said it's probably too early in his first term for de Blasio to start traveling the country and focusing his attention elsewhere. He said that while de Blasio has implemented some policies such as universal pre-school for some New York children and pledged 200,000 additional units of affordable housing, he hasn't yet completely established himself well enough to tout accomplishments.

"That being said, you have to be in the right place at the right time, and right now the country is talking about income inequality, so he's seizing an opportunity as it emerges, and sometimes that means you can't wait until you're more sure footed back home," Morey said.

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 12:21 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Think it's unfair...

Can someone make that note to the NBC reporter?

From: <Gunaratna>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 11:43 AM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: Think it's unfair...

...for NBC National to quote Mike Morey as a pundit and not mention that he served as Quinn's spox during the campaign and attacked us constantly (and continues to do so well into our mayoralty).

Reporter's email address is [REDACTED]

--

<http://www.nbcnews.com/meet-the-press/bill-de-blasio-treads-carefully-washington-dc-n358056>

Michael Morey, a Democratic political strategist in New York City who has worked for numerous New York Democrats including Sen. Chuck Schumer said it's probably too early in his first term for de Blasio to start traveling the country and focusing his attention elsewhere. He said that while de Blasio has implemented some policies such as universal pre-school for some New York children and pledged 200,000 additional units of affordable housing, he hasn't yet completely established himself well enough to tout accomplishments.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Carey, Michael
Bcc: @EventsWorkingGroup; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: CONFIRMED: Live on KQED with Scott Shafer 05/15/2015
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 7:33:20 PM

Title Live on KQED with Scott Shafer
All Day Event
Start Time 5/15/2015 9:06 AM
End Time 5/15/2015 9:20 AM
Location 2601 Mariposa Street, SF 94110
Borough
Travel Time
Car
Follow Up
Attendees
Site Contact
Site Contact Phone
Staff Contact
Press Contact
Site Advance
Set Up
Podium No
Remarks
Press
Format
Note
Background
Recurrence
Site Advance:Email
Address
Site Advance:Mobile
Number
Staff Contact:Mobile
Number
Press Contact:Mobile
Number

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 7:55:49 PM

and pushing for the stupid poet meeting over a meeting with a mayor

On 5/13/15, 4:56 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>What's he doing??

>

>

>

>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:54 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>>wrote:

>>

>> Argh

>> Ragone is like pushing his own agenda

>> Not cute.

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 8:15:00 PM

WOT- Waste of Time

On 5/13/15, 5:15 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>A WOT is a loose cannon?

>

>Also - Bdb asking for a little more info on how Reich event will work?

>

>

>

>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:57 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>wrote:

>>

>> The Berkley Chancellor is a WOT and putting us in the middle of their >>own

>> politics.

>>

>>> On 5/13/15, 4:56 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>>

>>> What's he doing??

>>>

>>>

>>>

>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:54 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>>> wrote:

>>>>

>>>> Argh

>>>> Ragone is like pushing his own agenda

>>>> Not cute.

>>

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 8:21:30 PM

Are u sitting next to him

On 5/13/15, 5:15 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>A WOT is a loose cannon?

>

>Also - Bdb asking for a little more info on how Reich event will work?

>

>

>

>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:57 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>>wrote:

>>

>> The Berkley Chancellor is a WOT and putting us in the middle of their >>own

>> politics.

>>

>>> On 5/13/15, 4:56 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>>

>>> What's he doing??

>>>

>>>

>>>

>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:54 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>>>> wrote:

>>>>

>>>> Argh

>>>> Ragone is like pushing his own agenda

>>>> Not cute.

>>

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: Hayley Prim
Cc: John Del Cecato; Aaron PickrellEmail; John Davis; jeani murray; Rebecca Katz
Subject: Re: Follow-up
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 8:28:40 PM

Much better

Sent from my iPhone

On May 13, 2015, at 8:26 PM, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]> wrote:

hows this?

Thanks for joining me yesterday in announcing The Progressive Agenda. Your presence added significant weight and reach to the cause.

As you know, that was only the first step in the process. We are going to continue to build on this success, and I look forward to collaborating with you on that process.

On Wed, May 13, 2015 at 5:04 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Given that most of these folks are persons of stature quite apart from our Mayor, I don't think you should have him telling them that they are "real progressive leaders." It may strike some as patronizing. And he doesn't like to say "I hope" - he likes to be more assertive, more like, "we are going to continue collaborating..." Please try to rework it and let me see it again.

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:[REDACTED]]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:23 PM
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; Aaron PickrellEmail; John Davis; jeani murray; Rebecca Katz
Subject: Re: Follow-up

We are waiting on some emails for him to send directly, but this is the language:

Thanks for joining me yesterday in announcing The Progressive Agenda. You are a real progressive leader, and your presence added significant weight and reach to the cause.

As you know, that was only the first step in the process, and I hope we can continue to collaborate as we decide where we go next. Please reach out to me directly or have our teams connect with one another on additional thoughts as we move forward.

Thanks,

Bill

They might end up going out tomorrow

On Wednesday, May 13, 2015, John Del Cecato
<jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Yes - hayley has

From: <Snyder>, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 4:15 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Aaron PickrellEmail

<[REDACTED]> John Davis <[REDACTED]> Hayley Prim

<[REDACTED]> jeani murray <[REDACTED]> Rebecca Katz

<[REDACTED]>

Subject: RE: Follow-up

Good. Can I see the thank you email message before it goes out?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 4:14 PM

To: Aaron PickrellEmail; John Davis; Hayley Prim; jeani murray; Rebecca Katz; Snyder, Thomas

Subject: Follow-up

I think we're good to send out the Thank You emails to: a) attendees; b) signers. That should be enough for today.

Then tomorrow, I'll hopefully have the agreed-upon language re: debt-free college, SS, and mass incarceration - and we can send that around to group then.

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

From: Carey Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: Reich Layout and ROS
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 8:54:07 PM
Attachments: Screen Shot 2015-05-13 at 5.18.00 PM.png

I am nervous about this one, BUT think it could be the coolest one we have done

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 at 5:42 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Reich Layout and ROS

Thanks for this. I have wifi and he doesn't (don't ask) but I showed him this and he feels better

On May 13, 2015, at 7:23 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

About 300 Attendees

Being Filmed for Documentary— four cameras - two on stage. Two in the Audience

Attire: The documentary crew would like you to NOT wear a WHITE Shirt, but I told them I was unsure if you packed anything but White and they were okay.

Overall it is made for an intimate conversation around income inequality (the working title of the documentary is something like "Fixing the Income Inequality Gap")

ROS:

- [12:00 -12:30] YOU will prep with Secretary Reich
- [12:20] YOU are put with a Lav Microphone set up
- 12:30 Dean Henry introduces Secretary Reich on Stage
- Reich introduces YOU
- YOU and Secretary Reich move to chairs on stage
- [12:45-1:15] Secretary Reich leads a conversation with YOU
- [1:15] Secretary Reich opens up to questions from the audience
- [1:30] Secretary Reich concludes
- YOU and Secretary Riech depart backstage
- (T) YOU hold press gaggle
- YOU depart

Not sure you can see picture attached but it is the set up of the room.

<Screen Shot 2015-05-13 at 5.18.00 PM.png>

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 8:57:40 PM

Also are you updating TP for Riech
Does he want a book?

On 5/13/15, 4:56 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>What's he doing??

>

>

>

>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:54 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>>wrote:

>>

>> Argh

>> Ragone is like pushing his own agenda

>> Not cute.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Carey, Michael; Jon Fromowitz; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Santa Clara Remarks
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 9:43:00 PM
Attachments: SantaClaraRemarksSHORTERWedEvening.docx

With riffing, this should be 15-20 minutes.

I aligned it much more with your Roosevelt remarks, rather than Iowa/Nebraska.

If you WANTED to talk longer, you could go into The Progressive Agenda we unveiled on Tuesday. But that may be a little too stuffy for this crowd.

Let me know, though, and I can add more substance in.

===

EMBARGOED UNTIL DELIVERY

DRAFT REMARKS Mayor Bill de Blasio Santa Clara University

Thank you Father Engh [Ing] for that warm introduction.

Thanks to Molly McDonald in the Office of the President for all of her support in making today possible.

It's such an honor to be here at this great institution.

This university is a special place, defined by academic excellence, world-class innovation, a spirit of community, and a stunningly beautiful campus.

But for me, it's special for a personal reason.

As many of you know, New York's inspiring First Lady and I are very proud parents of a current Santa Clara student.

Now, I won't say TOO much about Chiara. I don't want to be THAT dad. Poor Chiara probably thought the last time I'd speak in her class was at Career Day in elementary school.

But I will say this – she is one of the brightest, boldest most compassionate people I know, and she feels like she fits right in at this school. So to me, that says more about all of you than just about anything could.

The area that surrounds this campus has been one of modern history's most important cradles of innovation.

As the mayor of a city with its OWN booming tech sector, I can tell you how much I appreciate all the power that comes from a culture of forward-looking creativity.

But so much of that power is dependent on the idea that the best and brightest come from every neighborhood. The next great coders could be born in any zip code.

If we become a country where opportunity for all is precluded by heavily concentrated wealth at the very top, then we'd lose so much.

That's why I'm here today -- to speak to you about what I see as the biggest economic challenge we face: income inequality.

I ran for mayor in 2013 with a promise to tackle what I believed then – and still believe today – is the crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.

I often spoke of the Tale of Two Cities that New York had become, particularly since the Great Recession had ended. We're home to Wall Street, which has come roaring back – breaking record after record. At the same time, 46 percent of our population was living at or near the poverty line.

I said that needed to change – not just become this vast inequality posed a threat to those who were struggling...not simply because those in the middle class felt more and more anxious about staying IN the middle class...but because living in a Gilded City was a threat to EVERY New Yorker...a threat to what made New York so great for so many generations prior.

So we set out to do something about it, and we achieved some real successes – universal, full-day Pre-K...for every single child who wants it. We more than DOUBLED the number of young people with access to after-school programs.

We secured paid sick leave for 500,000 additional New Yorkers. We extended the living wage to thousands more. More than 190,000 New Yorkers now have a municipal ID – and that number is rapidly growing.

And this year, we're pushing the most ambitious municipal affordable housing plan in U.S. history – committing ourselves to building or preserving 200,000 units of affordable housing, and requiring – for the first time ever – that developers include affordable housing as a CONDITION of building in New York.

AND we have pledged to end poverty for 800,000 New Yorkers over the next ten years. Nothing defines the fight against inequality more than lifting people out of poverty.

We've got a very long way to go, but we're tackling inequality every way we know how – with every tool at our disposal.

I'm here today because the fight to lift up struggling New Yorkers, and to help rebuild New York's middle class, doesn't end at the borders of my city.

When Franklin Roosevelt created the New Deal, he relied upon many policies first developed in states and cities across America. His collaboration with my predecessor, New York Mayor Fiorello

LaGuardia, defined that era's commitment to solving the challenge of economic inequality at every level of government.

Governors, mayors, city and state legislatures – we all have the opportunity to incubate ideas at the local level, and create momentum for real, progressive national change.

Today, the economic moment -- and the political momentum -- have converged. And NOW is the time for our country to enact bold structural changes to rebuild our middle class.

In a word, we need an economy that rewards WORK and not just wealth.

That means lifting the floor for working people – raising the minimum wage, strengthening the rights of workers to organize, and cracking down on wage theft.

It means supporting working parents and their families – with paid sick and paid family leave; providing Pre-K and after-school programs and child care; and helping students graduate from college without a mountain of debt hanging over their heads.

And yes, it means REAL, BOLD efforts to make our tax system more fair – closing tax loopholes that big corporations and the wealthy use to take their massive profits and wealth...and simply pile up greater profits and wealth for themselves.

Just one example: the carried interest loophole that allows billionaire hedge fund managers to pay a lower overall tax rate than the hardworking men and women who clean their summer homes, or pilot their private jets. That loophole needs to be closed NOW.

Now, you may ask yourself how loopholes like this are even possible. It's because the system is rigged to benefit those at the top – and to leave everybody else behind.

We want to rewrite those rules – not to punish success, but to create more success stories.

We want every child to grow up in a society that says: “if you’re willing to work hard, you’ve got a chance to live your dreams.”

For generations, that was the promise of my city of New York. It was the definition of the American dream. But for too many, that promise...that dream...has steadily slipped away.

And that’s why we have to stand together.

Elected officials at every level – the federal, state, and local level. Progressive economists like Robert Reich, and Joe Stiglitz – with whom Elizabeth Warren and I appeared earlier this week. Civil rights leaders. Cultural leaders. Heads of progressive groups.

And YOU. Young people who have the passion and drive and ideas and energy to demand MORE from your government. Here in California, and all over the country.

Because...you know what? The American people are already there.

In 2014, four so-called “Red States” passed a minimum wage increase.

Just look at the Fight for 15 – a massive movement in 200 cities, with more than 60,000 people taking to the streets to fight for a minimum wage.

It’s time for those of us in elected office to hear THEIR voices...and to follow THEIR lead.

And we need YOUR help to make that happen.

Franklin Roosevelt said QUOTE: “Let us not be afraid to help each other. Let us never forget that government is ourselves and not an alien power over us. The ultimate rulers of our democracy are not a President and Senators and Congressmen and government officials but the voters of this country. END QUOTE.

So as one government official – let me say this. The crisis of economic inequality is massive. But it is well within our power to take it head on, and a make a real difference.

And we won't do it from the top-down. That never works.

We'll do it as a progressive force...city by city, neighborhood by neighborhood...listening to the people who sent us to make the change for which they hunger.

Answering THEIR call...their DEMAND...that we create a more just nation, and an economy that works for EVERYONE again.

Thank you so much.

###

EMBARGOED UNTIL DELIVERY

DRAFT REMARKS
Mayor Bill de Blasio
Santa Clara University

Thank you Father Engh [Ing] for that warm introduction.

Thanks to Molly McDonald in the Office of the President for all of her support in making today possible.

It's such an honor to be here at this great institution.

This university is a special place, defined by academic excellence, world-class innovation, a spirit of community, and a stunningly beautiful campus.

But for me, it's special for a personal reason.

As many of you know, New York's inspiring First Lady and I are very proud parents of a current Santa Clara student.

Now, I won't say TOO much about Chiara. I don't want to be THAT dad. Poor Chiara probably thought the last time I'd speak in her class was at Career Day in elementary school.

But I will say this – she is one of the brightest, boldest most compassionate people I know, and she feels like she fits right in at this school. So to me, that says more about all of you than just about anything could.

The area that surrounds this campus has been one of modern history's most important cradles of innovation.

As the mayor of a city with its OWN booming tech sector, I can tell you how much I appreciate all the power that comes from a culture of forward-looking creativity.

But so much of that power is dependent on the idea that the best and brightest come from every neighborhood. The next great coders could be born in any zip code.

If we become a country where opportunity for all is precluded by heavily concentrated wealth at the very top, then we'd lose so much.

That's why I'm here today -- to speak to you about what I see as the biggest economic challenge we face: income inequality.

I ran for mayor in 2013 with a promise to tackle what I believed then – and still believe today – is the crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.

I often spoke of the Tale of Two Cities that New York had become, particularly since the Great Recession had ended. We're home to Wall Street, which has come roaring back – breaking record after record. At the same time, 46 percent of our population was living at or near the poverty line.

I said that needed to change – not just become this vast inequality posed a threat to those who were struggling...not simply because those in the middle class felt more and more anxious about staying IN the middle class...but because living in a Gilded City was a threat to EVERY New Yorker...a threat to what made New York so great for so many generations prior.

So we set out to do something about it, and we achieved some real successes – universal, full-day Pre-K...for every single child who wants it. We more than DOUBLED the number of young people with access to after-school programs.

We secured paid sick leave for 500,000 additional New Yorkers. We extended the living wage to thousands more. More than 190,000 New Yorkers now have a municipal ID – and that number is rapidly growing.

And this year, we're pushing the most ambitious municipal affordable housing plan in U.S. history – committing ourselves to building or preserving 200,000 units of affordable housing, and requiring – for the first time ever – that developers include affordable housing as a CONDITION of building in New York.

AND we have pledged to end poverty for 800,000 New Yorkers over the next ten years. Nothing defines the fight against inequality more than lifting people out of poverty.

We've got a very long way to go, but we're tackling inequality every way we know how – with every tool at our disposal.

I'm here today because the fight to lift up struggling New Yorkers, and to help rebuild New York's middle class, doesn't end at the borders of my city.

When Franklin Roosevelt created the New Deal, he relied upon many policies first developed in states and cities across America. His collaboration with my predecessor, New York Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, defined that era's commitment to solving the challenge of economic inequality at every level of government.

Governors, mayors, city and state legislatures – we all have the opportunity to incubate ideas at the local level, and create momentum for real, progressive national change.

Today, the economic moment -- and the political momentum -- have converged. And NOW is the time for our country to enact bold structural changes to rebuild our middle class.

In a word, we need an economy that rewards WORK and not just wealth.

That means lifting the floor for working people – raising the minimum wage, strengthening the rights of workers to organize, and cracking down on wage theft.

It means supporting working parents and their families – with paid sick and paid family leave; providing Pre-K and after-school programs and child care; and helping students graduate from college without a mountain of debt hanging over their heads.

And yes, it means REAL, BOLD efforts to make our tax system more fair – closing tax loopholes that big corporations and the wealthy use to take their massive profits and wealth...and simply pile up greater profits and wealth for themselves.

Just one example: the carried interest loophole that allows billionaire hedge fund managers to pay a lower overall tax rate than the hardworking men and women who clean their summer homes, or pilot their private jets. That loophole needs to be closed NOW.

Now, you may ask yourself how loopholes like this are even possible. It's because the system is rigged to benefit those at the top – and to leave everybody else behind.

We want to rewrite those rules – not to punish success, but to create more success stories.

We want every child to grow up in a society that says: “if you’re willing to work hard, you’ve got a chance to live your dreams.”

For generations, that was the promise of my city of New York. It was the definition of the American dream. But for too many, that promise...that dream...has steadily slipped away.

And that’s why we have to stand together.

Elected officials at every level – the federal, state, and local level. Progressive economists like Robert Reich, and Joe Stiglitz – with whom Elizabeth Warren and I appeared earlier this week. Civil rights leaders. Cultural leaders. Heads of progressive groups.

And YOU. Young people who have the passion and drive and ideas and energy to demand MORE from your government. Here in California, and all over the country.

Because...you know what? The American people are already there.

In 2014, four so-called “Red States” passed a minimum wage increase.

Just look at the Fight for 15 – a massive movement in 200 cities, with more than 60,000 people taking to the streets to fight for a minimum wage.

It’s time for those of us in elected office to hear THEIR voices...and to follow THEIR lead.

And we need YOUR help to make that happen.

Franklin Roosevelt said QUOTE: “Let us not be afraid to help each other. Let us never forget that government is ourselves and not an alien power over us. The ultimate rulers of our democracy are not a President and Senators and Congressmen and government officials but the voters of this country. END QUOTE.

So as one government official – let me say this. The crisis of economic inequality is massive. But it is well within our power to take it head on, and a make a real difference.

And we won't do it from the top-down. That never works.

We'll do it as a progressive force...city by city, neighborhood by neighborhood...listening to the people who sent us to make the change for which they hunger.

Answering THEIR call...their DEMAND...that we create a more just nation, and an economy that works for EVERYONE again.

Thank you so much.

###

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: Tonight
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 9:46:36 PM

Well it will be midnight on your body clock fyi

On 5/13/15, 6:46 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>Are you gonna go with me to see the house the Grateful Dead used to live >in? Kidding - I will probably go to hotel & chill/crash early

>
>On 5/13/15, 9:16 PM, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>
>>We are in the heart of SF

>>
>>>On 5/13/15, 6:15 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>
>>>I showed him - BUT be aware that he is thinking he doesn't want to go to >>>hotel and instead wants to hang in SF a bit.

>>>
>>>
>>>

>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 7:55 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>>>wrote:

>>>>
>>>> FLONYC is arriving much later now.
>>>> YOU will be escorted out of airport as always and then come to hotel.
>>>> Some of detail is staying back to pick up FLONYC.
>>>> I will be at hotel to welcome you all
>>>> And then welcome FLONYC

>>>>
>>>>> On 5/13/15, 5:44 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>>>>
>>>>> And yes - sitting next to him

>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>>

>>>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 7:23 PM, Carey, Michael >>>>>><MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>>>>>> wrote:

>>>>>>
>>>>>> Are u sitting next to him

>>>>>>
>>>>>>> On 5/13/15, 5:15 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> A WOT is a loose cannon?

>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Also - Bdb asking for a little more info on how Reich event will >>>>>>>work?

>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>

>>>>>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:57 PM, Carey, Michael >>>>>>>><MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>>>>>>>> wrote:

>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> The Berkley Chancellor is a WOT and putting us in the middle of >>>>>>>their >>>>>>> own

>>>>>>> politics.
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> On 5/13/15, 4:56 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
>>>>>>>>wrote:
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> What's he doing??
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:54 PM, Carey, Michael >>>>>>>>> <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>>>>>>>> wrote:
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> Argh
>>>>>>>>> Ragone is like pushing his own agenda
>>>>>>>>> Not cute.
>>>>
>>
>

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: Tonight
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 9:46:57 PM

More importantly we need to visit the house where FULL HOUSE was filmed at

On 5/13/15, 6:46 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>Are you gonna go with me to see the house the Grateful Dead used to live >in? Kidding - I will probably go to hotel & chill/crash early

>

>On 5/13/15, 9:16 PM, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>>We are in the heart of SF

>>

>>On 5/13/15, 6:15 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>

>>>I showed him - BUT be aware that he is thinking he doesn't want to go to >>>hotel and instead wants to hang in SF a bit.

>>>

>>>

>>>

>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 7:55 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>>>wrote:

>>>>

>>>> FLONYC is arriving much later now.

>>>> YOU will be escorted out of airport as always and then come to hotel.

>>>> Some of detail is staying back to pick up FLONYC.

>>>> I will be at hotel to welcome you all

>>>> And then welcome FLONYC

>>>>

>>>>> On 5/13/15, 5:44 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>>>>

>>>>> And yes - sitting next to him

>>>>>

>>>>>

>>>>>

>>>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 7:23 PM, Carey, Michael

>>>>>><MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>>>>>> wrote:

>>>>>>

>>>>>> Are u sitting next to him

>>>>>>

>>>>>>> On 5/13/15, 5:15 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>>>>>>

>>>>>>> A WOT is a loose cannon?

>>>>>>>

>>>>>>> Also - Bdb asking for a little more info on how Reich event will >>>>>>>work?

>>>>>>>

>>>>>>>

>>>>>>>

>>>>>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:57 PM, Carey, Michael

>>>>>>>><MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>>>>>>>> wrote:

>>>>>>>>

>>>>>>>>> The Berkley Chancellor is a WOT and putting us in the middle of >>>>>>>their >>>>>>> own

>>>>>>> politics.
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> On 5/13/15, 4:56 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
>>>>>>>>wrote:
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> What's he doing??
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> On May 13, 2015, at 6:54 PM, Carey, Michael >>>>>>>>> <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>>>>>>>> wrote:
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> Argh
>>>>>>>>> Ragone is like pushing his own agenda
>>>>>>>>> Not cute.
>>>>
>>
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Carey, Michael; Jon Fromowitz; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Reich Event talking points
Date: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 10:16:21 PM
Attachments: ReichConversationTalkingPoints.docx

GOALS:

1. Talk about income inequality as the crisis of our time, and The Progressive Agenda as a tangible way to combat it.

2. Highlight successful events this week in DC, especially TPA signing, with 85 top progressive leaders (including Secretary Reich) already signed on.

3. Discuss the signing of the agenda as only a first step – now signees are engaging everyday Americans across the country to build a grassroots movement.

4. Drive audience to TPA website to sign on and get involved: progressiveagenda.us [Progressive Agenda DOT U-S].

BERKLEY-SPECIFIC POINTS:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->It is an honor to be speaking at this institution -- thank you Secretary Reich for the invitation.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->The very name Berkley is synonymous worldwide with progressivism and justice.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Today, there's critical work being done here towards ECONOMIC progress and justice.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->No one embodies the idea that defines this school's history more than Secretary Reich.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->For him – and for you – higher education is not a passive experience. What defines this institution is the idea that learning about the world means little unless you work aggressively to change it for the better.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->On the topic of our conversation today, Secretary Reich said QUOTE “we don't have to sit by and watch our meritocracy be replaced by a permanent aristocracy, and our democracy be undermined by dynastic wealth.” END QUOTE

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->And he's just one of many bright stars of progressive economics here. Great minds like Professor Emmanuel Saez [Cy-Ez] are providing the lens through which we can accurately see the modern economy.

INEQUALITY STATISTICS

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->We have now worse income inequality than at the time of the stock market crash in 1929.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->In America, the wealthiest 160,000 families own as much wealth as the poorest 145 million families.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->According to OxFam, by next year, the top one percent in the world will possess more wealth than the bottom 99 percent.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Between 2009 and 2012 overall income per family grew 6.9 percent. The gains weren't shared evenly, however. The top 1 percent saw their real income grow by 34.7 percent while the bottom 99 percent only saw a 0.8 percent gain, meaning that the 1 percent captured 91 percent of all real income.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->A report covered by the New York Times recently found that the top 25 hedge fund managers earned nearly $12 BILLION in compensation in 2014 – even while their funds were not so hot. 25 people. $12 billion. Think about that.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->Should those folks really be paying a lower tax rate than the woman who cleans their beach house...or the guy who pilots their private plane? That's what our current tax system allows. And that MUST change.

TPA POINTS

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Six weeks ago, I convened a small group of progressive leaders in New York City to discuss the central crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->Secretary Reich couldn't make the trip to New York because he was teaching his class...and helping educate his students on some of these very issues.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->But out of that meeting, we reached out to other fellow progressives – including Secretary Reich, of course -- and worked together to generate a serious, bold set of solutions to that crisis.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->And two days ago in Washington, we introduced “The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality.”

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->85 top progressive leaders have already signed on, including Secretary Reich, who now shares a distinction with both Howard Dean and Toni Morrison. Not too bad, huh?

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->These 13 progressive ideas will make an enormous difference in combatting income inequality:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->BOLD steps like a $15 minimum wage;

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->National paid sick and family leave laws

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->Universal Pre-K, after-school and child care

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->Closing the tax loopholes that CEOs, hedge fund managers, and billionaires use to avoid paying their fair share.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept. America needs economic policies that reward WORK... and not just wealth.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->There's something happening out there...an urgent call for change... given voice by everyday people across this country.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->Just last month, more than 60,000 people took to the streets in 200 cities – all fighting for a higher minimum wage.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->This isn't business as usual. It's a new politics that puts PEOPLE ahead of profits...that values WORK instead of wealth.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->We'll be calling on candidates and elected officials to stiffen their backbones, champion the progressive policies that our nation needs...and join our growing cause.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->The Progressive Agenda is a bold first step. And there will be more to come.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->We're asking everyday people across America to join us...to sign up at our website – Progressive Agenda DOT U-S.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->○ <!--[endif]-->If the esteemed professor here with me doesn't think it would be rude, I'd like to encourage all of you with smart phones to go to the site right now and sign up: Progressive Agenda DOT U-S.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->And spread the word to your friends and on social media.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->If ANYONE knows the power of everyday activism to bring about change, it's the people on this campus. We're counting on you.

GOALS:

1. Talk about income inequality as the crisis of our time, and The Progressive Agenda as a tangible way to combat it.
2. Highlight successful events this week in DC, especially TPA signing, with 85 top progressive leaders (including Secretary Reich) already signed on.
3. Discuss the signing of the agenda as only a first step – now signees are engaging everyday Americans across the country to build a grassroots movement.
4. Drive audience to TPA website to sign on and get involved: progressiveagenda.us [Progressive Agenda DOT U-S].

BERKLEY-SPECIFIC POINTS:

- It is an honor to be speaking at this institution -- thank you Secretary Reich for the invitation.
- The very name Berkley is synonymous worldwide with progressivism and justice.

- Today, there's critical work being done here towards ECONOMIC progress and justice.
- No one embodies the idea that defines this school's history more than Secretary Reich.
- For him – and for you – higher education is not a passive experience. What defines this institution is the idea that learning about the world means little unless you work aggressively to change it for the better.
- On the topic of our conversation today, Secretary Reich said QUOTE “we don't have to sit by and watch our meritocracy be replaced by a permanent aristocracy, and our democracy be undermined by dynastic wealth.” END QUOTE
- And he's just one of many bright stars of progressive economics here. Great minds like Professor Emmanuel Saez [Cy-Ez] are providing the lens through which we can accurately see the modern economy.

INEQUALITY STATISTICS

- We have now worse income inequality than at the time of the stock market crash in 1929.
- In America, the wealthiest 160,000 families own as much wealth as the poorest 145 million families.
- According to OxFam, by next year, the top one percent in the world will possess more wealth than the bottom 99 percent.
- Between 2009 and 2012 overall income per family grew 6.9 percent. The gains weren't shared evenly, however. The top 1 percent saw their real income grow by 34.7 percent while the bottom 99 percent only saw a 0.8 percent gain, meaning that the 1 percent captured 91 percent of all real income.

- A report covered by the New York Times recently found that the top 25 hedge fund managers earned nearly $12 BILLION in compensation in 2014 – even while their funds were not so hot. 25 people. $12 billion. Think about that.
 - Should those folks really be paying a lower tax rate than the woman who cleans their beach house...or the guy who pilots their private plane? That's what our current tax system allows. And that MUST change.

TPA POINTS

- Six weeks ago, I convened a small group of progressive leaders in New York City to discuss the central crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.
 - Secretary Reich couldn't make the trip to New York because he was teaching his class...and helping educate his students on some of these very issues.
- But out of that meeting, we reached out to other fellow progressives – including Secretary Reich, of course -- and worked together to generate a serious, bold set of solutions to that crisis.

- And two days ago in Washington, we introduced “The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality.”
 - 85 top progressive leaders have already signed on, including Secretary Reich, who now shares a distinction with both Howard Dean and Toni Morrison. Not too bad, huh?
- These 13 progressive ideas will make an enormous difference in combatting income inequality:
 - BOLD steps like a $15 minimum wage;
 - National paid sick and family leave laws
 - Universal Pre-K, after-school and child care
 - Closing the tax loopholes that CEOs, hedge fund managers, and billionaires use to avoid paying their fair share.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept. America needs economic policies that reward WORK...and not just wealth.

- There's something happening out there...an urgent call for change...given voice by everyday people across this country.
 - Just last month, more than 60,000 people took to the streets in 200 cities – all fighting for a higher minimum wage.

- This isn't business as usual. It's a new politics that puts PEOPLE ahead of profits...that values WORK instead of wealth.

- We'll be calling on candidates and elected officials to stiffen their backbones, champion the progressive policies that our nation needs...and join our growing cause.

- The Progressive Agenda is a bold first step. And there will be more to come.

- We're asking everyday people across America to join us...to sign up at our website – Progressive Agenda DOT U-S.
 - If the esteemed professor here with me doesn't think it would be rude, I'd like to encourage all of you with smart phones to go to the site right now and sign up: Progressive Agenda DOT U-S.

- And spread the word to your friends and on social media.
- If ANYONE knows the power of everyday activism to bring about change, it's the people on this campus. We're counting on you.

From: Hayley Prim
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com
Subject: Re: Toni
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 8:25:47 AM

This is Toni's home phone number: [REDACTED]

On Wed, May 13, 2015 at 10:28 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

1. Pls figure out when I can call to thank her
2. Pls figure out how to get some focused attention on what she wrote -- it's beautiful and powerful. We need to get attention for it

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

From: John Del Cecato
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: RE:
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 12:14:43 PM

Ok - thanks much

On May 14, 2015, at 9:01 AM, Gunaratna, Mahen <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Here are some MSNBC hits that were favorable:

MSNBC: <http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=d5763898-2583-4392-af4f-187a079c3c0f>

MSNBC – The Cycle: <http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=7fbd53e6-381d-4fd6-9385-bed92a499847>

MSNBC – NOW with Alex Wagner: <http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=57c502b9-ba29-4cd6-9c71-b483590a0751>

In addition to the stories you cited, you could also point to any of the following:

http://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/the-emerging-populist-agenda/2015/05/12/525ad83e-f7f9-11e4-a13c-193b1241d51a_story.html

<http://www.ibtimes.com/bill-de-blasio-income-inequality-nyc-mayor-slams-washington-not-helping-middle-class-1918572>

<http://www.dailykos.com/story/2015/05/12/1384178/-Warren-DeBlasio-Stiglitz-Reveal-Liberal-Manifesto-Rewriting-the-Rules-at-9am-Livestream>

<http://www.bloomberg.com/politics/articles/2015-05-12/de-blasio-stiglitz-and-warren-team-up-as-avengers-of-inequality>

<http://www.usatoday.com/videos/news/nation/2015/05/12/27199361/>

<http://apr.org/post/nyc-mayor-seeks-national-spotlight-new-contract-america>

<http://www.wnyc.org/story/de-blasio-seeks-support-progressive-agenda/>

<http://www.msnbc.com/msnbc/the-democratic-partys-new-do-list>

<http://www.nydailynews.com/news/politics/de-blasio-pushes-progressive-line-article-1.2219236>

Not seeing any mentions on national evening news.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 7:56 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re:

Awesome - thanks so much

On May 13, 2015, at 6:53 PM, Gunaratna, Mahen
<MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Will do a full scan - including national TV and liberal outlets - and get you the best hits by tomorrow morning

Sent from my iPhone

On May 13, 2015, at 7:47 PM, John Del Cecato
<jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Boss feeling a little uncertain about whether we made real impact yet. I showed him The Hill, Vice, Times.

Will show CNN and such. Any readout on how national evening news played it? Or how liberal outlets played yesterday? Trying to buck him up. Train thing seems to be only story (understandably) all day today

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: Reich film
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 12:15:23 PM

Will do!

> On May 14, 2015, at 8:56 AM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
>
> Pls share it with chirlane when you can

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: Re: CA docs to fact check
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 12:24:26 PM

I need actual document and the changes since I put them on cards already for him.

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

On May 14, 2015, at 9:20 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Begin forwarded message:

From: Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
Date: May 14, 2015 at 8:38:03 AM PDT
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Andrea Hagelqans <[REDACTED]> Mahen
Gunaratna <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: CA docs to fact check

Thanks much, Mahen! JDC — use attached for Reich. Has that typo corrected (just in case) and also added a thank you bullet to Goldman School of pub policy, who are the listed sponsors. Everything else is the same.

On May 14, 2015, at 11:30 AM, Mahen Gunaratna <[REDACTED]> wrote:

This is fine, but small typo - "Berkley" should be "Berkeley".

On Wed, May 13, 2015 at 10:25 PM, Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
Hey Mahen — two things attached for CA events tomorrow.

First is TPs for Reich event (which is a conversation); second is Santa Clara speech.

Lot of content here is from other recent events,
but let us know if you see any issues.

Thanks much ~Jon

From: Carey, Michael
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato
Subject: Prep for Tech
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 1:30:05 PM

Sir,

When you are ready, folks will dial in for your prep for Tech Roundtable tomorrow:

Dial-in Number: [REDACTED] Meeting ID: [REDACTED]

From: B
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Meeting with UCB Chancellor
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 1:37:05 PM

Very helpful. Thanks

From: Carey, Michael
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 10:34 AM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Meeting with UCB Chancellor

Some Quick Background for your short meeting with Chancellor

- NICHOLAS B. DIRKS became the 10th chancellor of the University of California, Berkeley on June 1, 2013.
- Before coming to Berkeley, Dirks was the executive vice president for the arts and sciences and dean of the faculty at Columbia University, where, in addition to his work on behalf of undergraduate programs, he improved and diversified the faculty, putting special emphasis on interdisciplinary and international initiatives.
- Dirks joined Columbia in 1997 as chair of the anthropology department.
- Prior to his appointment at Columbia, he was a professor of history and anthropology at the University of Michigan for 10 years, before which he taught Asian history and civilization at the California Institute of Technology.
- He is also a Fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations.
- His relationship with Reich is mixed – just a heads up.
- His COS - David Chai- worked with YOU during Clinton/Gore 1996 and then when he worked for Joe Klein at Education.

From: B
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Prep for Tech
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 1:40:18 PM

Have them dial in pls

From: Carey, Michael
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 10:30 AM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Prep for Tech

Sir,

When you are ready, folks will dial in for your prep for Tech Roundtable tomorrow:

Dial-in Number: [REDACTED] Meeting ID: [REDACTED]

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Fw: Sched
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 1:44:47 PM

From: B
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 10:44 AM
To: P RAGONE; Carey, Michael
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: Sched

Beautiful and perfectly pertinent

From: Peter Ragone [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 09:02 AM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: B; FLONYC
Subject: Re: Sched

This one seem particularly apt for our times...

"Two Scavengers in a Truck, Two Beautiful People in a Mercedes"

At the stoplight waiting for the light nine a.m. downtown San Francisco a bright yellow garbage truck with two garbagemen in red plastic blazers standing on the back stoop one on each side hanging on and looking down into an elegant open Mercedes with an elegant couple in it
The man
in a hip three-piece linen suit with shoulder-length blond hair and sunglasses
The young blond woman so casually coifed with short skirt and coloured stockings on the way to his architect's office

And the two scavengers up since four a.m.
grungy from their route
on the way home
The older of the two with grey iron hair and hunched back
looking down like some gargoyle Quasimodo
And the younger of the two also with sunglasses and long hair about the same age as the Mercedes driver

And both scavengers gazing down as from a great distance at the cool couple
as if they were watching some odourless TV ad in which everything is always possible

And the very red light for an instant holding all four close together as if anything at all were possible between them
across that small gulf
in the high sea
of this democracy.

Lawrence Ferlinghetti

On May 14, 2015, at 8:42 AM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

We have an NPR interview at 9.

Meeting with Mayor of Oakland

Tech Roundtable Luncheon

Meeting with Mayor of San Jose

Then you are done!!!

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

On May 14, 2015, at 8:39 AM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
wrote:

What's the latest on ferlinghetti? And if that doesn't work or if there's extra time, I'm certainly still interested in a mtg with the mayor of oakland at her office tmrw. Thanks

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma; Yazgi, Stephanie; Williams, Dominic; Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: B
Subject: Quick takes from Ed Lee meeting
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 2:07:47 PM

1. TPA. Ed Lee digs all of it but trade bullet. Not opposed outright, but wants to discuss with Microsoft and other tech leaders to see exactly how they view this. So not signing on, but still common ground.
2. Homelessness. SF has Homeless Navigation Center that offers all sorts of services - mental, social, 24 hour food. Helps lead them from shelters to long term housing. What's great about it is that it creates a buzz among homeless individual themselves - they say "what a great place."
3. Wants to continue working on MUNI ID, immigration path to citizenship, etc. Very kindred.
4. Transportation. Lee is all about this. Can help move business leaders to pressure DC. Key point will also be pushing GOP mayor from Fresno to push Cong. McCarthy to get this done.

From: Singleton, Jessica
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Walzak, Phil
Subject: In re: Uber and Internet Giants Assail New York City's Plan to Bolster Rules for Car-Hire Apps
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 2:49:34 PM

Mayor:

Here are two examples of app modification that would require TLC review. Important to stress that this is not about TLC reviewing the software or technology. TLC is looking to review substantial changes that could impact the fundamental ways the service is provided (what the customer and driver see on the screen), which is at the core of TLC's function as a regulator.

- An app works with a base that changes its rate. TLC would want to ensure that the rates the passengers see on the app are consistent with the rates TLC has on file for the base. Basic consumer protection.
- An app that has worked exclusively with black cars, for the first time starts working with a livery base to dispatch livery rides. Livery bases are required to give passengers a binding fare quote at the time of the request, but Black Car bases aren't. If they use the same passenger interface, the dispatch could occur without the binding quote, which a) inadvertently puts both the base and the app in violation of the rules, and b) doesn't serve the passenger appropriately. TLC would want to simply prevent that from happening.

Thanks,
Jessie

Uber and Internet Giants Assail New York City's Plan to Bolster Rules for Car-Hire Apps

By MATT FLEGENHEIMER MAY 13, 2015

From the stage of a Midtown Manhattan ballroom last week, Mayor Bill de Blasio indulged in “a little bit of positive bragging” about the success of start-ups in the city.

On Thursday, Mr. de Blasio is scheduled to be honored at a reception in California, hosted by several tech moguls, to raise money for a political group run by the mayor's close allies.

But as Mr. de Blasio moves to court Silicon Valley, Internet titans including Facebook, Google and Twitter this week have issued a public rebuke of the de Blasio administration on an ostensibly obscure subject: municipal taxi policy.

At issue is a rule, proposed by the city's Taxi and Limousine Commission, aimed at bolstering its regulation over the fledgling app market that has helped reshape the taxi industry. Under the proposal, smartphone app operators “must apply for approval of a modification” for certain changes to any app used to arrange vehicle rides for hire.

Opponents have said the proposal, which is scheduled to be discussed at a hearing in two weeks, could effectively grant the commission veto power over software updates, though the administration has disputed this characterization.

“We are troubled by the substance of the draft, which appears to indicate a significant departure from this administration’s policy of encouraging innovation, one that risks undermining New York’s progress and status as a global leader,” reads a letter from the Internet Association, a lobbying and advocacy group in Washington, and several of the technology companies it represents. Yahoo, AOL and eBay are also among those who signed.

The company Uber, which is named in neither the proposal nor the letter, is widely considered the focus of both. Uber operates nearly 16,000 affiliated black cars in New York, according to the commission, roughly 63 percent of the citywide total.

City officials played down the scope of the proposed rules.

Meera Joshi, the city’s taxi commissioner, said in a statement that the measure would “codify basic safety and consumer protection requirements that most apps have already adopted, and, to a large extent, it is their best practices that are the backbone of the rules.”

The commissioner said it was only logical that “material changes to driver and passenger interfaces” receive review from the commission to ensure compliance. But officials insisted that they were not seeking to review every app upgrade, only changes that might significantly affect passengers or drivers. The commission said equivalent provisions had already been in place for a successful “e-hail pilot” for yellow taxis.

The politics of the taxi industry, which has donated hundreds of thousands of dollars to Mr. de Blasio, have long been fraught for the mayor. Many industry officials, startled by decreases in medallion values, have called for the de Blasio administration to place stricter oversight over apps like Uber.

One prominent medallion owner, Evgeny Freidman, helped arrange a pivotal private meeting between Mr. de Blasio and the leader of the city’s sergeants union amid the public rift between City Hall and police unions this year. Mr. Freidman, one of the mayor’s top fund-raisers, recently asked the city to pursue a bailout of sorts for fleet owners, urging officials to guarantee taxi medallion loans. (The city has brushed off the suggestion.)

Yet since their entry into the city’s taxi market in 2012, app providers have themselves chafed at city policies at times. In a statement on Wednesday, Matthew Wing, a spokesman for Uber, said the proposed rules “threaten the options” riders and drivers have come to rely on.

Wiley Norvell, a spokesman for the mayor, said the city’s approach aimed to “foster innovation, while maintaining our responsibility to protect the public interest.”

City officials defended their tech-friendliness in general, noting several initiatives the mayor has undertaken to date. These have included a bid to convert former pay phone hubs into Wi-Fi hot spots and a $70 million investment over the next decade to improve broadband infrastructure, with an eye toward expanding access in low-income neighborhoods.

At a technology conference last week, Mr. de Blasio said he hoped to build on the previous administration's work on technology issues, but added, "We take a more populist approach."

-
Full letter from Internet Association (<http://internetassociation.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/05/Letter-to-de-Blasio-1.pdf>)

Dear Mayor de Blasio,

The below developers and organizations write to express our concern over the New York City Taxi & Limousine Commission's proposed FHV Dispatch Application Rules.

New York City is facing an important choice about how to approach its future as a global hub of innovation: whether to encourage and harness developments that create more opportunity for more New Yorkers, or to slow the pace of progress and discourage investment in our city.

Over the past decade, New York City has transformed itself into a global center of tech innovation with Silicon Alley in Manhattan, DUMBO in Brooklyn and Long Island City in Queens becoming anchors of their communities and diversifying New York's economic engine. Homegrown companies have become international success stories, while companies from further afield have established major presences here.

We are troubled by the substance of the draft, which appears to indicate a significant departure from this administration's policy of encouraging innovation, one that risks undermining New York's progress and status as a global leader.

The draft would prohibit use of any build of an application not inspected and approved by the TLC, giving an agency tasked with regulation of taxis and for-hire vehicles veto authority over software updates. It would also impose an arbitrary $1,000 fee on any developer wanting to offer their software; a cost bearable to established players but not to new market entrants. While we do not develop software for transportation providers, we are gravely concerned by the unprecedented decision to subject software available around the world to pre-release review by a city agency.

City agencies can and should encourage innovation and new entrants to the market. We strongly encourage you to reconsider these rules, and to invite leaders from the New York software community to participate in a more deliberate consultation process. The choice we face is an important one, and we look forward to working with you to elevate New York's place as a global technology leader.

Sincerely,
Internet Association

Facebook
Google
Twitter
Yahoo!
AOL
Yelp
IAC
Ebay, Inc.
Expedia, Inc.
TechNet
Travel Tech (The Travel Technology Association)
Techstars
Application Developers Alliance
Consumer Electronics Association
Internet Coalition
New York Tech Meet-Up
Coalition for Queens
Transmosis
Avetta
Button
Metta
Purchia Communications
Metromile
srfr
Portal A
Velocity Venture Capital
State Privacy and Security Coalition, Inc
-
-

Jessica Singleton
Digital Director @nycgov
@jessay286

From: Singleton, Jessica
To: B
Cc: Carey, Michael; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Tantoco, Minerva; Wiley, Maya
Subject: Tech notes for tonight/tomorrow
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 3:38:53 PM

Mayor,

Here are notes about Ron Conway's Pledge 1% campaign, suggested asks for your TechTable conversation tomorrow, and your remarks from TechCrunch. I sent examples about the TLC regulation under separate cover.

Ron's Pledge 1% Campaign:

- Last week in New York City, Ron Conway announced the launch of the Pledge 1% Campaign (with Robin Hood). This campaign asks tech companies to pledge 1% of their time and equity to philanthropy. The company decides what charity they want to commit to.
- This campaign encourages the kind of civic engagement from the tech community that the City of New York is committed to fostering through our programs:
 - Center for Youth Employment (jobs and internships)
 - Tech Talent Pipeline (industry partnerships for training, mentorships, job placement, and real-time feedback about skills)
 - Broadband Taskforce (experts from private sector and academia who are advising the City on our broadband strategy to ensure universal, affordable, high-speed Internet access)

Suggested "asks" for t4a.org TechTable conversation:

- Economic empowerment: Help us make tech a five-borough industry, cultivating local talent in neighborhoods across the five-boroughs.
 - Sample solution: Tech companies partner with community-based organizations to empower residents with skills and exposure to opportunities in the industry
- How can we attract the best tech talent to the city – as partners outside government or talent who works for the City – to help solve pressing urban challenges?
 - Sample solution: Peace Corps for Techies

Your remarks from Tech Crunch: Our three-part policy framework to support the tech ecosystem's growth broke through with precision and clarity, and your conversation with Kim sharply defined the connections between inequity, access, and growth.

Thank you. Well, I want to say it's a great honor to be at TechCrunch Disrupt. This conference everyone knows is an extraordinary opportunity to talk about not just what's happening today in our tech community, but to talk about where we are, going forward, and what it means for New York City. And we are so energized by the growth of the tech community in this city. We think it is quintessential to the future of this city. I believe there's tremendous opportunity for further growth here, and great opportunity for the tech community not only to make us a stronger city economically, but also to make us a fairer and better city. So I'm thrilled to talk to you about some of the things we're doing and some of the ways I look forward to working together.

I'm going to take a moment, though, to acknowledge some folks who have done a lot of great work, and are part of this growing community and deepening of the tech community's involvement with the city as a whole. First of all, I think a great example are some of the schools represented today from our public school system. So, I'd like to shout-out the Academy for Software Engineering and the Ralph McKee CTE School on Staten Island. Give them a round of applause.

[Applause]

An extraordinary effort being made to pilot efforts in our schools around software engineering, and it is great to have young people from these schools here to connect with this industry and deepen their opportunities ahead because they, of course, will be the leaders of the tech industry in this city in the future.

I know you had the chairman of the FCC here earlier, Tom Wheeler, who I think has done extraordinary things to protect the freedom of the internet. And I give him a lot of credit for standing up for open access.

I also want to thank the members of my team – and we are very, very proud of the team that we have put together at City Hall who focus on the tech community and what it means for this city. I want to thank my counsel, Maya Wiley, who has spearheaded our broadband access efforts that we are very proud of. I want to thank our new CTO, Minerva Tantoco. I want to thank Jessie Singleton, our digital director, and the director of our Tech Talent Pipeline, Kristen Titus. They are all doing an extraordinary job linking this community to the broader work of the city.

Now, I will be quick, but I must start with a little bit of positive bragging. I like to brag about the glories of my city. Sometimes it's tempting to feel a little competitive with other places that are well known for a technology presence. Maybe California would be an example? Well, this year, New York has surpassed California in startup funding requests, and we are very proud of that fact.

[Applause]

The tech ecosystem here provides nearly 300,000 jobs, making it one of the very biggest employers in our economy – generates over $30 billion in wages annually. And it's having a transformative effect on other quintessential New York City industries, including food, fashion and entertainment. So the impact is great and the speed with which this has happened is breathtaking and incredibly energizing, and a positive example of good change happening in this city. And I know, again, there's a lot more where that came from.

I see the strength of this community as being the ability to open up opportunity for more and more New Yorkers, including many New Yorkers who have not had opportunity for the kind of quality of jobs that you provide, and have not had opportunity for the kind of career paths that you provide. I think that's why this community is transcendent – not only the way we think and the way we do things – and helping us do things better, but also in creating a different economic paradigm that could open doors to so many more of our people.

From the beginning, we knew in our administration that we had to work with the tech community to make it truly a five-borough community – and I love what I'm seeing already in terms of the growth of this community all over the five boroughs. We knew we had to expand access to tech education in our public schools and universities. And we knew that if we were going to achieve our larger goals of combating income inequality, that the tech community would be a crucial ally – and from all I have seen, a willing and energized ally in the fight against income inequality.

Let me talk very briefly – three key areas that we're working on – talent first.

Our goal is to help this community by building an extraordinary pipeline of talent for the ever-growing needs of the community. Our hope and our belief is that if we do our work well and if we partner with you properly, over the next decade, a majority of tech jobs in the city will be filled by graduates of our public schools and universities – and that will be transcendent for this city.

We know, again, these are quality jobs that you create – jobs that actually define a middle class lifestyle, and that's what we want for our people. And we want to make sure every kind of New Yorker knows that this community is for them in all five boroughs. We've been investing $10 million in public-private partnership to create the Tech Talent Pipeline – working directly with the industry to understand the industry's needs so we can shape training programs that get young people the right skills and get them to the jobs.

We are about to announce in our city budget on Thursday an additional investment in CUNY – in STEM programs for CUNY, especially for our two-year community colleges. $29 million will be invested in this upcoming year, and that will increase to $51 million the year after for STEM programs at CUNY. And we are very excited about what that will mean.

And I have to tell you, so much of the impetus for those investments came from leaders of this community who said, “We love some of the tremendous things that are happening, like Cornell-Technion – we need them. But we also need a broader approach that gets more and more people, especially young people, the skills that would give them opportunities of all kinds in this industry.” And CUNY is the perfect tool for realizing that vision quickly.

Second, we’re focused on giving all New Yorkers – I want to emphasize the word all New Yorkers – broadband access. We want to defeat the digital divide. So we are investing $70 million over the next ten years in broadband infrastructure – a much greater investment than you’ve seen in other places. We believe this is necessary.

One of the key realities is that we know this city can’t be a place of inclusion, can’t be successful if so many of our fellow New Yorkers don’t have access to the internet. So we’re building the world’s largest, fastest free municipal Wi-Fi network, in terms of the number of people who will have access, in terms of the devices that will be out there to connect people, in terms of the speed that it will allow them to connect. It will be the largest and fastest in the world – over 10,000 hotspots obviously connecting potentially all 8.5 million of us and growing.

We know this is something that has to happen.

To realize our vision, we just put out a plan in the last ten days called One New York. It is a plan for the future of the city, and it’s a plan that looks at everything from economic growth to resiliency to sustainability, but adds to that notion that we must also address income inequality – that a truly sustainable city is one that’s physically, environmentally sustainable, but also economically sustainable for its people. We need to hit both notes at once, and that’s what our plan addresses, and that’s why broadband is such a crucial piece of the equation.

Third, innovation – this community understands in a particularly powerful way that innovation has to be a constant. It can never be feared. It must be embraced. Well, I can safely say in government, we have not always had the best track record when it comes to innovation. In fact, a lot of us have been frustrated over the years with some of the bureaucratic roadblocks to necessary change – not just on a macro-policy level, but literally on how we do the work day to day. What we’ve found is, working with the tech community, we are figuring out quickly ways to do things a lot better, and we’re listening to the community when people say here’s how government can work better, but here’s how the community can help the government work better, and can be more of a partner. We're trying to respond to that energetically, which is why we appointed the first-ever CTO for New York City, Minerva Tantoco; which is why my counsel, Maya Wiley, is spearheading our broadband expansion efforts – because we understand that we could do something different and better – and we want to be pushed by this community to be different and better, and to innovate.

The fact is, there are so many examples already – remember, the tech community have helped us to find a better way of doing things. We've pulled together a broadband taskforce, which we are really excited about – and we thank all the members of the taskforce who may be here or may be watching right now, because this is a group of experts who are going to help us close that digital divide. We've put out calls for innovation – places where we believe the community can help us to specifically solve nagging problems that government has not resolved.

We believe all of these efforts will help us reshape the city.

So, I'll end where I began – the goal is a stronger city. Economically, the goal is a better city, and a city where this community grows, but we have to do it in a way that is more inclusive and more fair than the New York City of today or yesterday. That is our vision, and we see this community as one of the great allies in that effort to create a better city for all.

Thank you very much.

[Applause]

I'll go there –

Unknown: Why don't you have a seat?

Mayor: All right!

Unknown: Yeah, another big round of applause for Mr. Mayor Bill de Blasio. We're going to bring out Kim-Mai Cutler. She's going to sit down with him for about 15, chat, and we'll move on from there. You guys have fun.

Kim-Mai Cutler: Wow, thank you for coming.

Mayor: You're very welcome.

Cutler: So mayor – former mayor Bloomberg was a big proponent of tech in New York, and after the financial industry [inaudible], after the crisis, you know, that strategy helped pay off in terms of the job markets in the rebound. How – what is your – what kind of mark do you want to leave on tech in New York, and how is that different from the Bloomberg Administration?

Mayor: I think Mayor Bloomberg built a good foundation.

Cutler: Yeah.

Mayor: I think he was focused. Obviously, it was very native to him with the work he had done previously in the private sector, but he built a strong foundation. He reoriented government policies towards the tech community and towards the growth of the community. I think that was fantastic and he certainly gets tremendous credit for Cornell-Technion, which we're very excited about. But I think at the same time, we take a more populist approach. We are trying to build on that on foundation, but build out. Build to all five boroughs. Build to people who have not yet been included. We want to see a much more diverse tech sector in every sense. We want to see the opportunities that are in the tech sector available to every kind of New Yorker. So we have a muscular effort in terms of training, in terms of the efforts we want to undertake in our public schools and universities. It all adds up to creating a much bigger talent pool. And we're proud of the fact that we believe the only way we get there is with a strong government role working with the industry. But the goal is to make this industry – this community, this industry – a transcendent part of the efforts to fight income inequality, and that's a supreme focus for us.

Cutler: One of the things that – one of the differences between the finance industry and the tech industry is the finance industry favors, like, a lot of office space, maybe in the Midtown area, but tech tends to, like, you know, there's tech offices popping up in, like, Bushwick and Gowanus – and how much are you thinking about rezoning these other boroughs for commercial office development?

Mayor: I think, to begin with, it's crucial to be truly a five-borough industry, and that is it's – one of the things I'm thrilled with is that's idea. That's becoming, as you say, a really present reality, and we want to support that. I think in the first instance there's a lot we can do within our current rezoning. I think there may be some specific areas where there'd be smart be rezoning around, for example, live-work space, which there's been a great demand for. And we're trying to build a superstructure around that in terms of the creation of affordable housing, and creating better transit options. But I would say, right now, we can accommodate a great expansion of this industry in a lot of our communities without even needing to get to a rezoning.

Cutler: Okay. So, speaking about this populist approach to tech, I mean, since Google released its diversity numbers basically this month a year ago – I mean, we've seen the data for lots and lots of companies. It's very obvious – it's predominantly – it's predominantly white, it's predominantly male. And when I talk to tech industry leaders, you know, the sort of truism is that, well, it's a pipeline problem. To what extent do you think that the racial make-up of the tech industry and gender make-up of the tech industry has to do with, you know, cultural short-comings of the industry itself in the way that it hires and promotes people, versus what's coming out of our K through 12 system?

Mayor: Look, I think that – that moment a year ago was a wake-up call for all of us. And I think it was – a lot of soul-searching occurred, which is good and healthy. I think part of the approach we've taken in government, where you could argue some of the same historic issues have been raised, in terms of pipeline – you know, I'm very much in the if-you-build-they-will-come school, meaning if you send a message from the beginning of inclusion, if you insist in the hiring process that there be maximum opportunity for inclusion, you find a lot more success at inclusion. Our entire tech team happens to be women, including some women of color. Our administration –

[Applause]

Thank you. Our administration as a whole, in terms of senior jobs in our administration, across all agencies, is 53 percent women in senior management roles, for the entire New York City government. So I think it is quite available if the mindset of what is valued changes. I would argue this is not just about social responsibility or building a more inclusive society. I think it's smart in terms of recognition of markets. Who are going to be the biggest markets going forward? The majority of our people are women, obviously. We are in a society that is increasingly people of color – increasing percentage of our communities. So I think the further integration of the sector is good for everyone in every sense. We're going to try and do all we can through our public schools, our public universities, our training programs to really improve that pipeline, but I think one of the things that people in the tech community can do is meet us in that process, help us figure out how we can do that well, but then really lean in to hiring people that come out of our public schools, our public universities, and our training programs.

Cutler: So you've done this Tech Talent Pipeline. It's a $10 million dollar effort. When I – when I look at a lot of the – over the past several months in the year, I've gotten to know a lot of different community groups and organizations in different parts of the San Francisco Bay area, and then also organizations here, like Coalition for Queens, and they're often run by really dedicated, invested, wonderful community leaders, but the [inaudible] they're graduating seem so small relative to, you know, the kinds of needs of needs and the skills that these employers have. Like, I mean, $10 million seems small in the face of what tech companies want to hire, if you're going to, you know, ask them to hire locally.

Mayor: I think it's one of a number of pieces we're putting into play. Look, the – the investment in CUNY – again, $29 million this coming year, $51 million the year after that – and it continues – we continue investing more deeply to ensure that the City University system is a constant generator of talent for this community. I would say, if you think about all of our private universities, if you think about all the training programs, not just the ones that we're sponsoring, but others as well, if you think about the impact that mentorship programs would have, internship programs, summer jobs – and we're really going to emphasize we want people in the community to participate in all those – I think it builds a very healthy and sizeable pipeline. Now, one of the things we want to do, in the spirit of this community and in the best sense of the word disruption, is we want to constantly see if it's working, because this is really one of the greatest opportunities to get our people good, quality jobs. If we think there's more investment necessary to achieve that goal, you know, that's going to be something we're very open to.

Cutler: How – how are you looking to get that feedback? What's the best way that tech companies can do that?

Mayor: Well, certainly the Tech Talent Pipeline is an example, and the working groups we've put together with the community to give us that constant feedback about what kind of training is needed that will actually maximize the likelihood that people going through the training will get to a job. So we're thrilled that our tech team is in constant dialogue with the folks doing the hiring, and we want to constantly adjust the training approach to the literal and specific needs of the community. And that's something I think was not the way government handled things in the past. We – I am a firm believer – look at the jobs of today and try and look at the jobs of tomorrow and reorient – I mean, we do a half-billion in training, so, just to give you a little perspective – each year, a half-billion dollars in training programs previously not well enough oriented to the real economy. We want to do that now.

Cutler: So I actually – so I grew up in the Bay area, I grew up in the tech industry. I've been reporting in tech for many, many years. And I think about, you know, when I started I remember, you know – when I started coming and working in tech journalism, it was about, like, real-time search and social, and every year it's literally changed so much. I mean, it's – you know, one year, it's drones and Bitcoin, and the next it's the on-demand economy. And I have a hard time understanding, like, how public educational institutions can be as flexible as, say, some of the vocational schools that have come up, like General Assembly or Flatiron. Like, how much – how do you think about your allocation of time and resources between some of these, like, boot-camp like programs versus the CUNY system?

Mayor: Well, I think it's a great point, and I – I don't pretend that we will always be, you know, at the exact cutting edge, but I think the question is how we are increasingly improving our approach. I think if you look at it in terms of the core skills people need and the connection to the tech community they need, that does not necessarily imply that we're doing everything perfectly or we've got people calibrated to the exact most recent trend. It does suggest, if you churn out, you know, generation upon generation of young people with the basic skills and the orientation in the community and the sense that they belong and the exposure, which is why I emphasize internships and mentorship and summer jobs, I think that will achieve a lot of the outcome. I think within the community itself, what I would call the fine-tuning can occur.

Cutler: One of the other things that has been a central piece of your administration is this focus on affordable housing.

Mayor: Yes.

Cutler: You have this incredibly ambitious plan – 200,000 units preserved or built. Both our cities – I'm from San Francisco – have this incredibly crazy, crazy, crazy housing crisis.

Mayor: Yes.

Cutler: Can you tell me a little bit about that?

Mayor: Sure. You know, San Francisco, obviously, had to deal with some of these challenges ahead of us, and we have learned from some of the struggles. We have the most ambitious affordable housing program in the history of any city – 200,000 units built and preserved over the next ten years. That's enough for about half of a million people. So far, we're actually very much on schedule to achieve that. It's wildly ambitious, but what we're finding is we're getting a great response from the private sector meeting us, and also our investments, as we're going to show in a few days, are going to continue to increase to support that plan. I think if you find enough housing for half-a-million people in the five boroughs, it's one of the transcendent pieces in terms of keeping this a city for everyone, a city for every kind of economic group. But the work, in effect, never ends, because we – we need a lot more market-rate housing as well, which we’re working on. And one of the challenges is we have to make sure that the highest percentage possible is for folks at the lowest income level, because a very substantial quantity of people in this city are living below the poverty level, and we need to ensure they have affordable housing options. But again, I’d like to get them out of poverty, which is why our plan – our OneNYC plan, just published – literally puts a goal to that. We say we want 800,000 people out of poverty in the next ten years. It will require a substantial increase in the minimum wage, which I think is long overdue, and I think the state needs to work more aggressively on that front, plus the affordable housing programs, plus the training programs – a whole host of things. But as a city, we are committed not only to building the affordable housing, but to matching it with a specific poverty reduction goal.

Cutler: Inclusionary housing is a key component of your platform. It’s also a practice that we have in San Francisco, and we’re always debating about what’s the appropriate share that we say is devoted, you know, to being permanently affordable. But it – you know, it seems to me, like, I get why we’re doing it, there’s just not as much federal or state funding for affordable housing as there used to be, but it seems to exacerbate the preexisting trend in the job market, which is a hollowing-out of the middle class. And when you do inclusionary, the cost of those permanently affordable units gets passed onto the market-rate buyers. And so I – it just feels like there’s a tension – there’s a tension there, and we’re grappling with it in SF – should we do 12 percent? 20 percent? 25, 35 percent? And what does that do to our housing stock, and –

Mayor: It – these are real issues, but I’d say, given the income inequality crisis and the depth of it – one of the statistics I cite is that, you know, effectively, since the end – quote-unquote “end” of the Great Recession, which is quote-unquote because it’s still being deeply felt by so many Americans – but since the recovery officially began, the vast, vast majority of the gains of the recovery have gone to the top 1 percent in terms of income. And I think what it means is that we – we have to recognize how intensive our efforts are going to have to be to address income inequality. So we have a very aggressive approach to inclusionary zoning, and if some of those costs are passed on to the private sector and to the highest-income buyers, I don’t think that’s unfair, because we don’t have the federal funding – I agree with you, it’s going to be a long time before we see fair federally – fair federal funding again – it’s something – say that ten times fast – it’s something we’re going to work on very energetically in Washington. But right now, you know, a society that stops working for middle class people and for hardworking, lower-income people, that society stops working. If people literally have nowhere to go, it’s just not a healthy society. We think that the affordable housing efforts done aggressively can actually be a profoundly powerful solution. It’s the number one expense in people’s lives, but we think we have to address it aggressively.

Cutler: Last thing – so, earlier today, Fred Wilson and Ron Conway were talking about ways that the tech industry can get involved and how they can work with local government. And do you have specific recommendations or asks for the tech industry here today?

Mayor: I sure do. Thanks for asking. Well, I really appreciate what Fred Wilson has done, particularly in terms of education. I'm a big fan of Ron Conway and I appreciate that they are putting forward real models for this community, and real community-wide levels of commitment that they think make sense. I think that's healthy. That shows an engagement. If you think in terms of economic sectors, that shows a level, if you will, of enlightenment and engagement from the tech community we don't see from every sector of our communities. So I think it's very, very healthy. But I would say this – two things – we have our center for youth employment as part of the mayor's office – it's part of the Mayor's Fund to Advance New York City, which my wife chairs. The idea is to, over the next few years, by 2020, reach a level of 100,000 high school students each year who are either in a summer job or an internship or a mentorship program – 100,000 each year. We want to start that aggressively this summer, and we'll give you a quick deadline of May 15 – we're asking –

[Applause]

– no time like the present. We want to start that this summer, reaching towards that bigger goal. But this summer, what we're asking everyone in this room to do, and everyone who's watching to do is, if you can create a summer job for a young person, if you can create an internship or a mentorship effort, we want you to start doing that now so we can plug in a lot of our young people this summer and then build out over the next few years. That's one. Second, in terms of our Tech Talent Pipeline and all of the efforts to train young people, and not necessarily young people for opportunity in the community, we really beseech you to work with us to ensure you're hiring the maximum number of employees who come out of those efforts. So we're, you know, constantly adding training resources and we're aligning the training to the community's needs, but we really want to push people to engage us in how to do it best, but then be very focused on hiring those who come through these training and these educational efforts.

Cutler: Okay. Thank you so much.

Mayor: Thank you. Thanks, everyone.

[Applause]

Jessica Singleton
Digital Director @nycgov
@jessay286

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: RE: NPR Affiliate Interview
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 3:45:31 PM

FYI, saw that he's taking call-in questions from listeners tomorrow during the radio interview.

Anticipate that we could get criticized back here, especially given the recent Newsday story that he doesn't do town halls or take questions from everyday New Yorkers (i.e. - "Mayor takes questions on the radio from Californians, but has never done so from New Yorkers during his 17 months in office...")

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 12:16 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: NPR Affiliate Interview

Will do!

On May 14, 2015, at 9:13 AM, Gunaratna, Mahen <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Ahh, got it. But if you could still record, that would be helpful, because the station livestream isn't working.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 12:12 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: NPR Affiliate Interview

Actually that's tomorrow AM

On May 14, 2015, at 9:03 AM, Gunaratna, Mahen <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Can you record his radio interview that's starting in a few minutes? We're having difficulty live-streaming it from here and it's not working from the station's website.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Irene Noguchi
To: Mayor's Press Office; Carey, Michael; P RAGONE; [REDACTED] "ifdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Daniel Zoll
Subject: KQED Forum Confirmation: Mayor Bill de Blasio
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:59:11 PM
Attachments: Directions to KQED.doc

Dear Mayor de Blasio,

Thank you for agreeing to appear on Forum TOMORROW (Friday). We are looking forward to having you on the show. Please arrive at the studio no later than 15 minutes before show time. If you are on any social networks such as Twitter or Facebook, please send us a link to your profile(s) so that we can mention them in our engagement efforts. Feel free to mention us in your promotion efforts - we're @KQEDForum on Twitter, KQED Forum on Facebook and kqed_forum on Instagram. Additionally, PLEASE CONFIRM that you received this e-mail, and that all the below information is correct.
PARKING INFO IS BELOW.

Interview Date: 5/15/2015

Name: Bill de Blasio

Title: Mayor

Organization: New York City

Studio Address: 2601 Mariposa St., SF, CA 94110

Interview Time: From: 9:00 AM PT to 9:30 AM PT

Arrival Time: 8:45 AM PT

Studio Directions (Attached)

CELL Phone or Escort Number:

Forum Office Line: (415) 553-2320

Parking Instructions: The studio is located between Bryant and York and Mariposa and 18th St. Our parking garage entrance is on York, second entrance on the right when turning off of Mariposa.
PULL UP TO THE METAL GRATE AND TELL THE PARKING ATTENDANT YOU ARE A GUEST ON FORUM.

Note: In case you are early, there is a Starbucks across the street on the corner of Bryant and Mariposa and a café called Coffee Bar on the corner of Florida and Mariposa.

Directions to KQED

2601 Mariposa St., San Francisco 94110

FROM EAST BAY (I-80 WEST)

Exit at Ninth Street/Civic Center.

Get into the left lane.

Turn left on 8th Street and merge into right lane.

Go down one block past Bryant Street and turn right onto Brannan Street.

Under the overpass, cross Division Street, veering left onto Potrero Avenue.

Turn right onto Mariposa Street.

Go two blocks down Mariposa Street.

FROM SOUTH BAY (101 NORTH)

Exit at Cesar Chavez (Army)/Potrero.

Follow Potrero Avenue north (for several blocks).

Turn left onto Mariposa; go two blocks.

FROM GOLDEN GATE BRIDGE (101 SOUTH)

Exit at Lombard/Downtown.

Take Lombard Street to Van Ness Avenue and turn right.

Take Van Ness Avenue until it becomes South Van Ness, then stay on South Van Ness.

Turn left on 16th Street.

Turn right on Bryant to Mariposa.

Turn left on Mariposa.

FROM THE 16TH ST./MISSION BART STATION

Walk eight blocks on 16th to Bryant and turn right.

Walk two blocks to Mariposa Street.

OR

On 16th Street at Mission, take the 22 Fillmore East bus. Get off at 16th and Bryant.

Walk two blocks south on Bryant to Mariposa.

BUS INFO: To verify routes, please call MUNI (415) 673-MUNI.

- 33 Stanyan from Laurel Heights, Richmond, Haight, Castro, Eureka Valley, Mission District or Potrero Hill. Stops at 16th & Bryant or Mariposa & Bryant.
- 22 Fillmore from Marina, Union Street, Pacific Heights, Western Addition, Fillmore & Mission District. Stops at 16th & Bryant.
- 53 Southern Heights from Potrero Hill and Mission District. Stops at 16th & Bryant.
- 27 Bryant from Chinatown, Downtown, Powell St. BART Station and Soma. Stops at Mariposa and Bryant.
- 9 San Bruno from Embarcadero, Downtown/Market, Visitation Valley & Bernal Heights. Stops at Potrero & 16th.
- Lines 14, 14L (Mission) and 49 (Van Ness/Mission) intersect with 33, 22 & 53 at 16th Street & Mission.

From the train station (4th and Townsend) cross the street and take #42 to 11th at Harrison. At the bus stop diagonally across, take the 27 Bryant to Mariposa & Bryant.

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "John Del Cecato"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: NYT Gaggle
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:59:39 PM

Also flagging in this EW he says Albany doesn't want to do Min Wage.....

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:57 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: NYT Gaggle

It was only one reporter at Berkeley... Stringer for the NYT...

I'm fine having no gaggle at Santa Clara...

No hecklers... only fawning crazy liberals at Berkeley... Reich called BDB his hero...

One flag on policy front (adding others)... Boss was asked about nail salon story & tipped workers, & MBDB said that everyone - even tipped workers - should make at least the min wage - before tips...

It seems just & fair & in our lane to me - just wasn't sure if he'd said that publicly before

On 5/14/15, 1:49 PM, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>We don't need another gaggle at the 2nd event

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
>Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:51 PM
>To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael >Subject: NYT Gaggle

>

>Short and standard

>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic
Subject: FW: NYT Gaggle
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:01:31 PM
Attachments: NYT Gaggle.m4a
ATT00001.txt

here's audio

On 5/14/15, 1:50 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>Short and standard
>

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Rebecca Katz
Subject: Re: Sunday shows
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:09:15 PM

Plus we are doing community event on Sunday in Harlem. With the people!!

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 14, 2015, at 2:07 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> MBDB goes a little back & forth over whether to do Sunday shows, but my recommendation now is to NOT do so.
>
> His energy level is good - but the trip has only begun. And I'm guessing that by the time he gets back home, he's going to be really drained - and more likely to come off as defensive/prone to make a mistake.
>
> Instead, I would go with our original game plan & try to schedule Fusion/Jorge Ramos for sometime mid-next week.
>

From: Carey, Michael
To: Rebecca Katz
Cc: Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Sunday shows
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:12:22 PM

We don't get back into NYC until almost 11 pm on Saturday. He will be a mess on Sunday AM.

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

On May 14, 2015, at 2:11 PM, Rebecca Katz <[REDACTED]> wrote:

Ok. No to all. final call?

Sent from my iPhone

On May 14, 2015, at 5:08 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I tend to agree

Id like to have him do something New Yorky on SUNDAY

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:10 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Rebecca Katz; Carey, Michael
Subject: Sunday shows

MBDB goes a little back & forth over whether to do Sunday shows, but my recommendation now is to NOT do so.

His energy level is good - but the trip has only begun. And I'm guessing that by the time he gets back home, he's going to be really drained - and more likely to come off as defensive/prone to make a mistake.

Instead, I would go with our original game plan & try to schedule Fusion/Jorge Ramos for sometime mid-next week.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Santa Clara remarks
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:16:37 PM

EMBARGOED UNTIL DELIVERY

DRAFT REMARKS Mayor Bill de Blasio Santa Clara University

Thank you Father Engh [Ing] for that warm introduction.

Thanks to Molly McDonald in the Office of the President for all of her support in making today possible.

It's such an honor to be here at this great institution.

This university is a special place, defined by academic excellence, world-class innovation, a spirit of community, and a stunningly beautiful campus.

But for me, it's special for a personal reason.

As many of you know, New York's inspiring First Lady and I are very proud parents of a current Santa Clara student.

Now, I won't say TOO much about Chiara. I don't want to be THAT dad. Poor Chiara probably thought the last time I'd speak in her class was at Career Day in elementary school.

But I will say this – she is one of the brightest, boldest most compassionate people I know, and she feels like she fits right in at this school. So to me, that says more about all of you than just about anything could.

The area that surrounds this campus has been one of modern history's most important cradles of innovation.

As the mayor of a city with its OWN booming tech sector, I can tell you how much I appreciate all the power that comes from a culture of forward-looking creativity.

But so much of that power is dependent on the idea that the best and brightest come from every neighborhood. The next great coders could be born in any zip code.

If we become a country where opportunity for all is precluded by heavily concentrated wealth at the very top, then we'd lose so much.

That's why I'm here today -- to speak to you about what I see as the biggest economic challenge we face: income inequality.

I ran for mayor in 2013 with a promise to tackle what I believed then – and still believe today – is the crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.

I often spoke of the Tale of Two Cities that New York had become, particularly since the Great Recession had ended. We're home to Wall Street, which has come roaring back – breaking record after record. At the same time, 46 percent of our population was living at or near the poverty line.

I said that needed to change – not just because this vast inequality posed a threat to those who were struggling...not simply because those in the middle class felt more and more anxious about staying IN the middle class...but because living in a Gilded City was a threat to EVERY New Yorker...a threat to what made New York so great for so many generations prior.

So we set out to do something about it, and we achieved some real successes – universal, full-day Pre-K...for every single child who wants it. We more than DOUBLED the number of young people with access to after-school programs.

We secured paid sick leave for 500,000 additional New Yorkers. We extended the living wage to thousands more. More than 190,000 New Yorkers now have a municipal ID – and that number is rapidly growing.

And this year, we're pushing the most ambitious municipal affordable housing plan in U.S. history – committing ourselves to building or preserving 200,000 units of affordable housing, and requiring – for the first time ever – that developers include affordable housing as a CONDITION of building in New York.

AND we have pledged to end poverty for 800,000 New Yorkers over the next ten years. Nothing defines the fight against inequality more than lifting people out of poverty.

We've got a very long way to go, but we're tackling inequality every way we know how – with every tool at our disposal.

I'm here today because the fight to lift up struggling New Yorkers, and to help rebuild New York's middle class, doesn't end at the borders of my city.

When Franklin Roosevelt created the New Deal, he relied upon many policies first developed in states and cities across America. His collaboration with my predecessor, New York Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, defined that era's commitment to solving the challenge of economic inequality at every level of government.

Governors, mayors, city and state legislatures – we all have the opportunity to incubate ideas at the local level, and create momentum for real, progressive national change.

Today, the economic moment -- and the political momentum -- have converged. And NOW is the time for our country to enact bold structural changes to rebuild our middle class.

In a word, we need an economy that rewards WORK and not just wealth.

That means lifting the floor for working people – raising the minimum wage, strengthening the rights of workers to organize, and cracking down on wage theft.

It means supporting working parents and their families – with paid sick and paid family leave; providing Pre-K and after-school programs and child care; and helping students graduate from college without a mountain of debt hanging over their heads.

And yes, it means REAL, BOLD efforts to make our tax system more fair – closing tax loopholes that big corporations and the wealthy use to take their massive profits and wealth...and simply pile up greater profits and wealth for themselves.

Just one example: the carried interest loophole that allows billionaire hedge fund managers to pay a lower overall tax rate than the hardworking men and women who clean their summer homes, or pilot their private jets. That loophole needs to be closed NOW.

Now, you may ask yourself how loopholes like this are even possible. It's because the system is rigged to benefit those at the top – and to leave everybody else behind.

We want to rewrite those rules – not to punish success, but to create more success stories.

We want every child to grow up in a society that says: “if you're willing to work hard, you've got a chance to live your dreams.”

For generations, that was the promise of my city of New York. It was the definition of the American dream. But for too many, that promise...that dream...has steadily slipped away.

And that's why we have to stand together.

Elected officials at every level – the federal, state, and local level. Progressive economists like Robert Reich, and Joe Stiglitz – with whom Elizabeth Warren and I appeared earlier this week. Civil rights leaders. Cultural leaders. Heads of progressive groups.

And YOU. Young people who have the passion and drive and ideas and energy to demand MORE from your government. Here in California, and all over the country.

Because...you know what? The American people are already there.

In 2014, four so-called “Red States” passed a minimum wage increase.

Just look at the Fight for 15 – a massive movement in 200 cities, with more than 60,000 people taking to the streets to fight for a minimum wage.

It's time for those of us in elected office to hear THEIR voices...and to follow THEIR lead.

And we need YOUR help to make that happen.

Franklin Roosevelt said QUOTE: “Let us not be afraid to help each other. Let us never forget that government is ourselves and not an alien power over us. The ultimate rulers of our democracy are not a President and Senators and Congressmen and government officials but the voters of this country. END QUOTE.

So as one government official – let me say this. The crisis of economic inequality is massive. But it is well within our power to take it head on, and make a real difference.

And we won't do it from the top-down. That never works.

We'll do it as a progressive force...city by city, neighborhood by neighborhood...listening to the people who sent us to make the change for which they hunger.

Answering THEIR call...their DEMAND...that we create a more just nation, and an economy that works for EVERYONE again.

Thank you so much.

###

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:17:58 PM

No
It's with me behind u in follow up

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 14, 2015, at 2:15 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Do we have a hard copy of Santa Clara speech in BDB's car? If not I can just give him my laptop

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: KQED Forum Confirmation: Mayor Bill de Blasio
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:18:18 PM

Yes

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 14, 2015, at 2:18 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Can you give them ProgressiveAgenda.us as the site we want to promote?
>
>> On 5/14/15, 1:57 PM, "Irene Noguchi" <inoguchi@KQED.org> wrote:
>>
>> Dear Mayor de Blasio,
>>
>> Thank you for agreeing to appear on Forum TOMORROW (Friday). We are >> looking forward to having you on the show. Please arrive at the studio no >> later than 15 minutes before show time. If you are on any social >> networks such as Twitter or Facebook, please send us a link to your >> profile(s) so that we can mention them in our engagement efforts. Feel >> free to mention us in your promotion efforts - we're @KQEDForum on >> Twitter, KQED Forum on Facebook and kqed_forum on Instagram.
>> Additionally, PLEASE CONFIRM that you received this e-mail, and that all >> the below information is correct. PARKING INFO IS BELOW.
>>
>> Interview Date: 5/15/2015
>>
>> Name: Bill de Blasio
>>
>> Title: Mayor
>>
>> Organization: New York City
>>
>>
>> Studio Address: 2601 Mariposa St., SF, CA 94110
>>
>> Interview Time: From: 9:00 AM PT to 9:30 AM PT
>>
>> Arrival Time: 8:45 AM PT
>>
>> Studio Directions (Attached)
>>
>> CELL Phone or Escort Number:
>>
>> Forum Office Line: (415) 553-2320
>>
>> Parking Instructions: The studio is located between Bryant and York and >> Mariposa and 18th St.
>> Our parking garage entrance is on York, second entrance on the right when >> turning off of Mariposa. PULL UP TO THE METAL GRATE AND TELL THE >> PARKING ATTENDANT YOU ARE A GUEST ON FORUM.
>>

>> Note: In case you are early, there is a Starbucks across the street on >> the corner of Bryant and Mariposa and a café called Coffee Bar on the >> corner of Florida and Mariposa.
>
> <Directions to KQED.doc>

From: Carey, Michael
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: Mayor's Press Office; @Incoming; John Del Cecato; InviteTheMayor
Subject: Re: KQED Forumfirmation: Mayor Bill de Blasio?
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:26:14 PM

On it

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 14, 2015, at 2:25 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> +MPC, JFDC
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Mayor's Press Office
> Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:25 PM
> To: @Incoming
> Cc: InviteTheMayor
> Subject: FW: KQED Forum Confirmation: Mayor Bill de Blasio?
>
> Anyone handling an appearance for the Mayor tomorrow to be on Forum?
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Irene Noguchi [<mailto:inoguchi@KQED.org>]
> Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:58 PM
> To: Mayor's Press Office; Carey, Michael; P RAGONE; [REDACTED] 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
> Cc: Daniel Zoll
> Subject: KQED Forum Confirmation: Mayor Bill de Blasio
>
> Dear Mayor de Blasio,
>
> Thank you for agreeing to appear on Forum TOMORROW (Friday). We are looking forward to having you on the show. Please arrive at the studio no later than 15 minutes before show time. If you are on any social networks such as Twitter or Facebook, please send us a link to your profile(s) so that we can mention them in our engagement efforts. Feel free to mention us in your promotion efforts - we're @KQEDForum on Twitter, KQED Forum on Facebook and kqed_forum on Instagram. Additionally, PLEASE CONFIRM that you received this e-mail, and that all the below information is correct.
> PARKING INFO IS BELOW.
>
> Interview Date: 5/15/2015
>
> Name: Bill de Blasio
>
> Title: Mayor
>
> Organization: New York City
>
>
>
> Studio Address: 2601 Mariposa St., SF, CA 94110
>
> Interview Time: From: 9:00 AM PT to 9:30 AM PT
>
> Arrival Time: 8:45 AM PT

- >
- > Studio Directions (Attached)
- >
- > CELL Phone or Escort Number:
- >
- > Forum Office Line: (415) 553-2320
- >
- > Parking Instructions: The studio is located between Bryant and York and Mariposa and 18th St.
- > Our parking garage entrance is on York, second entrance on the right when turning off of Mariposa.
- PULL UP TO THE METAL GRATE AND TELL THE PARKING ATTENDANT YOU ARE A GUEST ON FORUM.
- >
- > Note: In case you are early, there is a Starbucks across the street on the corner of Bryant and Mariposa and a café called Coffee Bar on the corner of Florida and Mariposa.
- >
- >

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: NYT Gaggle
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 5:37:19 PM

Believe that's the first time he said that.

Barring objections, will transcribe and post on our website, per usual protocol.

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:57 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: NYT Gaggle

It was only one reporter at Berkeley... Stringer for the NYT...

I'm fine having no gaggle at Santa Clara...

No hecklers... only fawning crazy liberals at Berkeley... Reich called BDB his hero...

One flag on policy front (adding others)... Boss was asked about nail salon story & tipped workers, & MBDB said that everyone - even tipped workers - should make at least the min wage - before tips...

It seems just & fair & in our lane to me - just wasn't sure if he'd said that publicly before

On 5/14/15, 1:49 PM, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>We don't need another gaggle at the 2nd event

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

>Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:51 PM

>To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael

>Subject: NYT Gaggle

>

>Short and standard

>

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: any updates to remarks?
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 6:00:07 PM

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: NYT Gaggle
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 6:33:00 PM

Christina Hansen @CarriageCavalry

CA @Teamsters handbilling @BilldeBlasio's appearance w/ @RBReich in Berkeley. #1u #p2
#ProgressiveAgenda #carriageon

What's so progressive about taking good jobs from working families?

Mayor Bill de Blasio is here today to share his vision of "progressive" government with the nation. Unfortunately in New York, that vision includes taking good-paying, union jobs from 300 mostly immigrant families.

These families work in the Central Park horse carriage industry, and Mayor de Blasio has sided with real-estate developers and extreme special interest groups like PETA who want to close them down. Opponents of the carriage industry just happen to have made extensive contributions to the Mayor's 2013 election through shadowy "independent" expenditure groups.

Meanwhile, the overwhelming majority of New Yorkers want to protect this beloved iconic industry and its small businesses. (Source: Quinnipiac)

While he starts this conversation with America about income inequality, Mayor de Blasio still hasn't met with these working New Yorkers and their union representatives about why he thinks their livelihoods are not worth protecting. Carriage drivers, like all New Yorkers, deserve a fair shot and a chance to be heard.

We hope Mayor de Blasio can take this progressive lesson back to New York:
Before you talk to America, listen to your constituents. They're telling you they want you to...

Keep the carriage horses and 300 good jobs in New York City.

Carriage driver Angel Hernandez supports his two young daughters by driving a carriage in Central Park. Through his union job, he's saving to send his girls to college. Why does Mayor de Blasio refuse to meet with Angel and his co-workers, even as he pushes to pass a bill to take away Angel's livelihood?

Ariel Fintzi and his horse Rebecca marched with labor in the People's Climate March in NYC in September. The historic carriage industry is eco-friendly, and has provided Ariel, an immigrant from Israel, a good living through his small owner-operated business for 34 years.

6:33 PM - 14 May 2015

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]

Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:57 PM

To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma

Subject: Re: NYT Gaggle

It was only one reporter at Berkeley... Stringer for the NYT...

I'm fine having no gaggle at Santa Clara...

No hecklers... only fawning crazy liberals at Berkeley... Reich called BDB his hero...

One flag on policy front (adding others)... Boss was asked about nail salon story & tipped workers, & MBDB said that everyone - even tipped workers - should make at least the min wage - before tips...

It seems just & fair & in our lane to me - just wasn't sure if he'd said that publicly before

On 5/14/15, 1:49 PM, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>We don't need another gaggle at the 2nd event

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

>Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:51 PM

>To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael

>Subject: NYT Gaggle

>

>Short and standard

>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma
Subject: FW: Connecting
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 7:17:52 PM

Ugh

From: Eric Schmeltzer <eric@schmeltzerpr.com>
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 at 6:57 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: Connecting

Hey man, assume you saw. Ouch.

<http://www.thedailybeast.com/articles/2015/05/14/de-blasio-s-new-plan-to-combat-inequality-stiffs-vets.html?via=mobile&source=facebook>

From: Eric Schmeltzer [<mailto:eric@schmeltzerpr.com>]
Sent: Monday, May 11, 2015 7:28 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'
Subject: RE: Connecting

Hey dude, yeah, absolutely. Have Emma just ping me. I think it's pretty unfair, how he's getting hammered on the vets stuff. I don't have a ton of background on it, but maybe she can get me up to speed and I can see if it makes sense for VoteVets to step in to help out.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Saturday, May 9, 2015 4:26 PM
To: Eric Schmeltzer
Subject: Re: Connecting

Thanks man! Very excited...

And would love your help on the vets stuff... can i connect you with Emma Wolfe on that?

From: Eric Schmeltzer <eric@schmeltzerpr.com>
Date: Friday, May 8, 2015 at 3:09 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: Connecting

Hi, hey man! Funny as hell. I've known Jeani forever, and someone connected me to her on this Contract for America stuff and then she connects me to you. How're things? I was asking Jeani if you all needed help on vets stuff. Seems like BdB is getting a bit of heat. How's everything else?

This progressive agenda looks awesome, by the way. Really stoked!

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, May 8, 2015 2:09 PM
To: Eric Schmeltzer
Subject: Re: Connecting

Jeani to BCC

Eric!! How the fuck are you, my man?

From: jeani murray <[REDACTED]>
Reply-To: "[REDACTED]" <[REDACTED]>
Date: Friday, May 8, 2015 at 2:05 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Eric Schmeltzer <eric@schmeltzerpr.com>
Subject: Connecting

Eric - meet John
John - meet Eric

Wanted to connect you both about Mayor de Blasio's effort and VoteVets.

This email has been checked for viruses by Avast antivirus software.
www.avast.com

| |

 This email has been checked for viruses by Avast antivirus software.
www.avast.com

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Jon Fromowitz; Carey, Michael
Subject: Remarks as prepared
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 7:43:07 PM
Attachments: SantaClaraRemarksFINAL.docx

He started 5 min ago, and I'm feeling like he might not use the text at all - but will let you know.

EMBARGOED UNTIL DELIVERY

DRAFT REMARKS
Mayor Bill de Blasio
Santa Clara University

Thank you Father Engh [Ing] for that warm introduction.

Thanks to Molly McDonald in the Office of the President for all of her support in making today possible.

It's such an honor to be here at this great institution.

This university is a special place, defined by academic excellence, world-class innovation, a spirit of community, and a stunningly beautiful campus.

But for me, it's special for a personal reason.

As many of you know, New York's inspiring First Lady and I are very proud parents of a current Santa Clara student.

Now, I won't say TOO much about Chiara. I don't want to be THAT dad. Poor Chiara probably thought the last time I'd speak in her class was at Career Day in elementary school.

But I will say this – she is one of the brightest, boldest most compassionate people I know, and she feels like she fits right in at this school. So to me, that says more about all of you than just about anything could.

The area that surrounds this campus has been one of modern history's most important cradles of innovation.

As the mayor of a city with its OWN booming tech sector, I can tell you how much I appreciate all the power that comes from a culture of forward-looking creativity.

But so much of that power is dependent on the idea that the best and brightest come from every neighborhood. The next great coders could be born in any zip code.

If we become a country where opportunity for all is precluded by heavily concentrated wealth at the very top, then we'd lose so much.

That's why I'm here today -- to speak to you about what I see as the biggest economic challenge we face: income inequality.

I ran for mayor in 2013 with a promise to tackle what I believed then – and still believe today – is the crisis of our times – and that is income inequality.

I often spoke of the Tale of Two Cities that New York had become, particularly since the Great Recession had ended. We're home to Wall Street, which has come roaring back – breaking record after record.

Want an example of the excesses of The One Percent?

In Manhattan, a single apartment sold for a jaw-dropping $100 million. Another apartment RENTED for $500,000 – per MONTH. Per MONTH.

I can just imagine the guy who bought the first apartment running into the guy who rented the second place and saying “Oh - you're just renting, huh? Don't worry – things are gonna get better for you!”

At the same time, 46 percent of our population was living at or near the poverty line.

And I'm not the only one who sees the problem.

Lloyd Blankfein, the CEO of Goldman Sachs called income inequality in America QUOTE “destabilizing” and said that if we as a country can't deal with inequality then QUOTE "you can't drive growth and you can't drive the success of the country.” END QUOTE

When Lloyd Blankfein says that, you KNOW the issue is getting noticed!

I said that needed to change – not just become this vast inequality posed a threat to those who were struggling...not simply because those in the middle class felt more and more anxious about staying IN the middle class...but because living in a Gilded City was a threat to EVERY New Yorker...a threat to what made New York so great for so many generations prior.

So we set out to do something about it, and we achieved some real successes – universal, full-day Pre-K...for every single child who wants it. We more than DOUBLED the number of young people with access to after-school programs.

We secured paid sick leave for 500,000 additional New Yorkers. We extended the living wage to thousands more. More than 190,000 New Yorkers now have a municipal ID – and that number is rapidly growing.

And this year, we're pushing the most ambitious municipal affordable housing plan in U.S. history – committing ourselves to building or preserving 200,000 units of affordable housing, and requiring – for the first time ever – that developers include affordable housing as a CONDITION of building in New York.

AND we have pledged to end poverty for 800,000 New Yorkers over the next ten years. Nothing defines the fight against inequality more than lifting people out of poverty.

We've got a very long way to go, but we're tackling inequality every way we know how – with every tool at our disposal.

I'm here today because the fight to lift up struggling New Yorkers, and to help rebuild New York's middle class, doesn't end at the borders of my city.

When Franklin Roosevelt created the New Deal, he relied upon many policies first developed in states and cities across America. His collaboration with my predecessor, New York Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, defined that era's commitment to solving the challenge of economic inequality at every level of government.

Governors, mayors, city and state legislatures – we all have the opportunity to incubate ideas at the local level, and create momentum for real, progressive national change.

Today, the economic moment -- and the political momentum -- have converged. And NOW is the time for our country to enact bold structural changes to rebuild our middle class.

In a word, we need an economy that rewards WORK and not just wealth.

That means lifting the floor for working people – raising the minimum wage, strengthening the rights of workers to organize, and cracking down on wage theft.

It means supporting working parents and their families – with paid sick and paid family leave; providing Pre-K and after-school programs and child care; and helping students graduate from college without a mountain of debt hanging over their heads.

And yes, it means REAL, BOLD efforts to make our tax system more fair – closing tax loopholes that big corporations and the wealthy use to take their massive profits and wealth...and simply pile up greater profits and wealth for themselves.

Just one example: the carried interest loophole that allows billionaire hedge fund managers to pay a lower overall tax rate than the hardworking men and women who clean their summer homes, or pilot their private jets. That loophole needs to be closed NOW.

Now, you may ask yourself how loopholes like this are even possible. It's because the system is rigged to benefit those at the top – and to leave everybody else behind.

We want to rewrite those rules – not to punish success, but to create more success stories.

We want every child to grow up in a society that says: “if you're willing to work hard, you've got a chance to live your dreams.”

For generations, that was the promise of my city of New York. It was the definition of the American dream. But for too many, that promise...that dream...has steadily slipped away.

And that's why we have to stand together.

Elected officials at every level – the federal, state, and local level. Progressive economists like Robert Reich, and Joe Stiglitz – with whom Elizabeth Warren and I appeared earlier this week. Civil rights leaders. Cultural leaders. Heads of progressive groups.

And YOU. Young people who have the passion and drive and ideas and energy to demand MORE from your government. Here in California, and all over the country.

Because...you know what? The American people are already there.

In 2014, four so-called “Red States” passed a minimum wage increase.

Just look at the Fight for 15 – a massive movement in 200 cities, with more than 60,000 people taking to the streets to fight for a minimum wage.

It’s time for those of us in elected office to hear THEIR voices...and to follow THEIR lead.

And we need YOUR help to make that happen.

Franklin Roosevelt said QUOTE: “Let us not be afraid to help each other. Let us never forget that government is ourselves and not an alien power over us. The ultimate rulers of our democracy are not a President and Senators and Congressmen and government officials but the voters of this country. END QUOTE.

So as one government official – let me say this. The crisis of economic inequality is massive. But it is well within our power to take it head on, and a make a real difference.

And we won’t do it from the top-down. That never works.

We’ll do it as a progressive force...city by city, neighborhood by neighborhood...listening to the people who sent us to make the change for which they hunger.

Answering THEIR call...their DEMAND...that we create a more just nation, and an economy that works for EVERYONE again.

Thank you so much.

###

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael
Subject: Tweet by Berkeleyside on Twitter
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 7:54:33 PM

Berkeleyside (@berkeleyside)

5/14/15, 7:01 PM

Bill de Blasio talks inequality with Robert Reich in Berkeley berkeleyside.com/2015/05/14/bil...

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Carey, Michael; John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Tweet by Santa Clara Univ on Twitter
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 7:56:14 PM

Santa Clara Univ (@SantaClaraUniv)

5/14/15, 7:30 PM

Full house here at the Recital Hall. Getting ready for NY Mayor @BilldeBlasio.
pic.twitter.com/At5jkdVX4d

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: NYT Gaggle
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 8:00:39 PM

RUSH TRANSCRIPT:

Question: [inaudible]

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I've been getting the question over and over. It's the same answer – we need to make the changes we need for the people of New York City. We have to change national policies. I think it's as simple as that. I mean, yesterday in Washington was one example to get a transportation bill out of the Congress. That could mean billions for New work City and the metropolitan region. You know, we've got 160 –

Unknown: [inaudible]

Mayor: Thank you – 160 bridges in New York City that are over 100 years old. We can't fix all that without [inaudible]. So that's one example of using the bully pulpit and gathering fellow mayors to change national policy. But when it comes to this larger discussion of income inequality, look at the things we're talking about – progressive taxation. The Buffet Rule is estimated to bring in $70 billion a year more in federal revenue. That's the context we're [inaudible] the changes we need in a place like New York City. Historically, we had a very energetic federal role in terms of affordable housing and mass transit infrastructure. We don't have that anymore, and it's part of what's holding us back. So, we're not going to achieve that without progressive taxation. And, you know, we can't help a lot of our people without improving the minimum wage. So, I would love to raise the minimum wage in New York City. I would do it myself if I had the power. But the only places I can get that change are either Washington or Albany. And Albany obviously at this moment is not interested in making a change. So we have to change the politics in order the change the policies that affect our people, and that's worth building momentum and building a moment for.

Unknown: We've got to go.

Mayor: Thank you.

###

Sent from my iPhone

On May 14, 2015, at 5:37 PM, Gunaratna, Mahen <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Believe that's the first time he said that.

Barring objections, will transcribe and post on our website, per usual protocol.

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:57 PM

To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma

Subject: Re: NYT Gaggle

It was only one reporter at Berkeley... Stringer for the NYT...

I'm fine having no gaggle at Santa Clara...

No hecklers... only fawning crazy liberals at Berkeley... Reich called BDB his hero...

One flag on policy front (adding others)... Boss was asked about nail salon story & tipped workers, & MBDB said that everyone - even tipped workers - should make at least the min wage - before tips...

It seems just & fair & in our lane to me - just wasn't sure if he'd said that publicly before

On 5/14/15, 1:49 PM, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

We don't need another gaggle at the 2nd event

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 4:51 PM

To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael

Subject: NYT Gaggle

Short and standard

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Jon Fromowitz
Subject: Re:
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 8:30:44 PM

His line keeps changing on this one:

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

On May 14, 2015, at 8:22 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Not at all.

In Q&A he used the Henry Ford quote and said if adjusted for inflation, workers would make nearly $100 an hour. (It's actually $118 per DAY). I think we could explain that one away to reported - just need to make sure he knows the actual fact.

On May 14, 2015, at 5:14 PM, Walzak, Phil
<PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Did he use remarks

----- Original Message -----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 08:13 PM

To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen

Subject:

34 minutes. Pretty flat and boring

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Tweet by Vox on Twitter
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 9:13:32 PM

Vox (@voxdotcom)

5/14/15, 8:15 PM

Elizabeth Warren has a powerful new frame for the liberal agenda bit.ly/1JhRweN pic.twitter.com/iFCJ3YsM5W

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Date: Thursday, May 14, 2015 9:20:43 PM

Mayor de Hypocrite's family-leave crusade

Mayor Bill de Blasio speaks on the "Progressive Agenda" on Capitol Hill in Washington. Photo: AP

Forcing bosses to grant workers paid maternity leave is an absolutely "urgent" matter, Mayor de Blasio says — unless, of course, the boss happens to be . . . him.

De Blasio is gallivanting around the country pushing his "progressive agenda," which includes a call for "national paid family leave." But as The Post's Yoav Gonen reports, the mayor himself doesn't offer the benefit to most of his own employees.

Instead, these city workers must use accumulated sick days — or go without pay — if they want time off for maternity leave or to care for a sick family member.

Here's the thing: If paid family leave is as critical as the mayor says, he could have granted it to all non-union city employees with the stroke of a pen — but he hasn't.

And he could have included it for unionized employees in the contracts he signed with the city's unions — but he didn't.

Good thing, too.

Those contracts are fat enough without any extra perks. City employees, for example, get health plans and pensions that blow away the benefits most other public-sector workers get, let alone those without government jobs.

And it would cost taxpayers a mint if de Blasio were to suddenly offer paid family leave. By not granting it, he implicitly admits the city can't afford it.

So why is he racing around America pushing it for the rest of the nation when he hasn't offered it to his own employees?

"You can't go to Washington advocating for a core value that you don't implement at home," says Rudy Giuliani's Deputy Mayor Joe Lhota. He's right — unless, of course, your goal is mainly to boost your image as the nation's top "progressive" (and you don't care about the hypocrisy).

De Blasio-think boils down to this: If private employers foot the bill, paid family leave is a matter of social justice. But if it taps into his budget, then it's a question of affordability. Nice.

In fairness, a mayoral aide says the city is studying "how best to provide paid family leave to city employees." Yikes. If the mayor winds up granting them this pricey new perk, he'd better get something back from the unions to offset the cost.

As for the rest of the nation, Mayor de Hypocrite should just butt out.

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: San Jose paper
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 12:02:41 AM

Not bad!

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 08:38 PM
To: B
Subject: San Jose paper

I dig it... I take back what I said about you not being edgy enough...

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio addresses income inequality at Santa Clara University

SANTA CLARA -- Touting his stop at Santa Clara University as "a call to arms," New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio told an auditorium overflowing with students and faculty that the failure to address widening income inequality could lead the nation into a second Great Depression.

De Blasio is on a speaking tour across the country to address the growing income gap. While he said he did believe there were solutions to income inequality, he told the audience of 300 students, faculty and others -- among them his wife Chirlane McCray and daughter Chiara de Blasio -- that they had inherited a nation that "took the formula for success and threw it away."

"You think about the history of this country you think about the greatest economic crisis and the years leading right up to it," de Blasio said of the Great Depression. "The lust for wealth was out of control. There were no set boundaries or ground rules to stop us from veering into dangerous path going over the cliff."

"This year we once again have the level of income inequality we had in 1929. Now, this year, we have for the first time ... the average American has literally been going backward."

De Blasio said solutions existed, among them "honest outrage." He said early recognition and a call to action would help to prevent the growing concentration on wealth, instead encouraging a push to improve the middle class' standing.

He said that wealth in the hands of the few does not stimulate economic development, saying the rich do not pump money back into the economy the way most average Americans do. De Blasio referenced on several occasions the Big Apple, saying while apartments sell for $100 million or rent for $500,000 a month, 46 percent of the 8.5 million New York City residents live at or near the poverty line.

"This is a city that could turn into a gilded city, a gated community," he said. "But we don't work as a gated community or a society with exclusion. What has made New York City so great was that it was open to everyone."

De Blasio also addressed his recent travel and the criticism by some that he is ignoring the needs of his own constituents. He insisted that his cross-country tour can help those at home by influencing national policies, referencing several times the work done by former Mayor Fiorello La Guardia and his help in launching the United States Conference of Mayors onto a national platform during the Great Depression.

In a brief Q&A with mediator Dr. Elsa Chen, de Blasio coyly avoided discussing his political ambitions, saying that his only immediate plan was to run for re-election as mayor.

Contact Katie Nelson at 408-920-5006 and follow her at Twitter.com/katienelson210.

From: Hayley Prim
To: B; John Del Cecato
Subject: Follow up from TPA Announcement
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 11:19:33 AM

Good Morning,

I wanted to send you an updated note in hopes that you have time to send some quick emails of thanks today or this weekend. Also, a reminder to call Toni Morrison. Her home phone is [REDACTED]

Here is a draft of the email:

NAME,

Thanks for joining me on Tuesday to announce The Progressive Agenda. Your presence added significant weight and reach to the cause.

As you know, that was only the first step in the process. We are going to continue to build on this success, and I look forward to collaborating with you on that process.

*Thanks,
- Bill*

Howard Dean: [REDACTED]
Jeff Merkley: He only texts: [REDACTED]
Mark Pocan: [REDACTED]
Keith Ellison: kme@mail.house.gov
Larry Cohen: lcohen@cwa-union.org
Mary Kay Henry: marykay.henry@seiu.org
Lee Saunders: lsaunders@afscme.org
Randi Weingarten: [REDACTED]
Rev Sharpton: [REDACTED]
Mayor Nan Whaley: Nan.whaley@daytonohio.gov
George Gresham: georgeg@1199.org
Maria Elana Durazo: mdurazo@unitehere.org
Janet Murguia: jmurguia@nclr.org
Van Jones: vanjones68@dreamcorps.us
Heather McGhee: hmcghee@demos.org
Barbara Lee: [REDACTED]
Leo Gerard: lgerard@usw.org
Raul Grijalva: Doesn't email, but you can send to COS: amy.emerick@mail.house.gov

--

Hayley Prim

c: [REDACTED]

From: Carey, Michael
To: Redmond, Howard Capt.; Pfeffer, Karl Lt.; John Del Cecato; Ventre, Joseph Det.
Subject: Next appointment
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 12:15:16 PM

Max cafe does not open until 10. There is a Peets coffee here as well instead of going back to hotel. I got calls he can do too :)

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Sending to team
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 12:37:41 PM

Hello everyone. Thanks again for being part of the coalition supporting The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality.

In just three days, we've already had 1,009 people sign onto The Progressive Agenda at our website - ProgressiveAgenda.us.

As Mayor de Blasio mentioned at Tuesday's event, he's heard from a number of you about adding three pieces to the agenda:

- * Expanding Social Security
- * Supporting debt-free college
- * Investing in schools, not jails - and giving a second chance to those coming home from prison.

We believe these additions to TPA are consistent with our values and organizing objectives, and the strong support from so many of you demonstrates that these additions would help us expand our coalition even more aggressively.

If you have any questions, concerns, or objections to adding these pieces, please let us know as soon as possible.

If there are no objections, we will be adding these three planks to the Agenda on Tuesday, May 19th.

Thanks so much for all of your help - and we'll be following up next week with a plan for building our movement even larger!

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; "John Del Cecato"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Radio Interview
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 12:42:22 PM

ok

-----Original Message-----

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 12:42 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Wolfe, Emma Subject: RE: Radio Interview

Lets get a transcription

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 12:34 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; Wolfe, Emma Subject: Radio Interview

From: Walzak, Phil
To: B; Carey, Michael; "John Del Cecato"
Subject: FOR BdB - cupl of quick items
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 12:57:10 PM

- 1) Vinnie Ignizio is resigning to take a job at Catholic Charities of Staten Island. Effective this summer. Quote below:

I've known and worked with Vinnie for many years, and he's always been a strong voice for Staten Island and an honest colleague in government. From helping Staten Islanders rebuild after Sandy to putting more resources into resurfacing our streets, we've always found good common ground to work on together. He'll be missed by his friends here at City Hall, and by the families he's represented so well.

- 2) The Alliance for a Healthier Generation, along with the American Beverage Association, is launching a three-city (NYC, LA and Little Rock) pilot effort as part of THEIR community-based initiative to help reduce beverage calories consumed by 20% per person by 2025.

The effort aims to reduce calories in S. Bronx, Bed-Stuy and Crown Heights --neighborhoods where avail and demand for no and lower calorie beverages fall below the national average. Their program will increase education, marketing and availability of bottle water, lower caloric and smaller portion beverage choices in stores, bodegas, restaurants. Effort begins next month.

Given your position on large sugary drinks and that New York City is part of the pilot, the organizers are requesting a supportive quote for the story they are placing in the NYT tmrw to launch the initiative.

While our team doesn't recommend a full-on embrace of the initiative], a supportive quote is deemed appropriate. IGA, Lilliam and Dr Bassett have been in discussions with their efforts and concur.

Quote below:

"Our communities are suffering the adverse health effects of highly caloric and non-nutritious diets – we welcome all initiatives that will help improve the health of New Yorkers. I thank the Alliance for a Healthier Generation and the beverage companies for including New York City in this effort, and look forward to seeing the results of this campaign."

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Fwd: My interview
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 1:05:12 PM

Begin forwarded message:

From: Eric Alterman <[REDACTED]>
Date: May 15, 2015 at 9:52:50 AM PDT
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: My interview

<http://www.thenation.com/article/207377/bill-de-blasio-crisis-inequality-and-blind-spots-democratic-party>

--

Eric Alterman
[REDACTED]

CUNY Distinguished Professor of English and Journalism, Brooklyn College
"Liberal Media" Columnist, The Nation,
Senior Fellow, Center for American Progress, The Nation Institute
305 W.98th Street, 2 C-S, New York, New York, 10025
(917)538-9726 www.ericalterman.com

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; FLONYC
Subject: Fw: Congratulations! + A useful link
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 1:33:18 PM

Fyi

-----Original Message-----

From: Van Jones
To: Bill de Blasio
Subject: Congratulations! + A useful link
Sent: May 15, 2015 10:26 AM

I greatly appreciate the courage you are showing and the risks you are taking. You are proceeding with remarkable good grace. And I was very happy to hear from your colleague yesterday, regarding the improvements you promised. We will propose some next steps, next weeks.

In the meantime, I found this article to be imperfect, but fascinating and useful:
<http://letstalkmovementbuilding.org/solutions-emerging-from-the-movement-for-black-lives/>
I am not sure how it impacts our work together, but I wanted this to be on your radar screen. Let's stay in touch.

Courageous quarterbacks need and deserve good linebackers. I am happy to be one of yours.
van

--

Check out our work: www.thedreamcorps.org
#YesWeCode: www.yeswecode.org #cut50: www.cut50.org #GreenForAll: www.greenforall.org Follow
ME: <http://twitter.com/VanJones68>
You are a miracle. Nothing is impossible.

From: Walzak, Phil
To: B
Cc: "John Del Cecato"; Carey, Michael
Subject: FW: FINAL Nails release for send in 30
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 1:47:32 PM
Attachments: image001.png

Moving out nail salon stuff today
Landed story to kick it off today:

De Blasio Says New York Will Investigate Nail Industry Practices

NY TIMES - Sarah Maslin Nir

http://www.nytimes.com/2015/05/16/nyregion/nail-salon-conditions-for-workers-in-new-york-draw-city-officials-attention.html?_r=1

Mayor Bill de Blasio announced Friday that his administration would take steps to address what he described as “deplorable conditions” confronted by workers in the nail salon industry, including several investigations by New York City agencies and a “day of action” next week to inform manicurists of their rights.

The city’s efforts come in response to a series of articles published in The New York Times examining widespread exploitation of nail salon workers and the health risks they face from the chemicals they use on the job.

City officials have a dilemma: Their ability to regulate nail salons is circumscribed because state, not city, agencies are responsible for monitoring wage violations, as well as ensuring salons and workers are properly licensed. The city’s efforts, therefore, are for the most part limited to advocacy, with some exceptions.

A manicurist practicing at a Long Island salon. Many manicurists have illnesses that some scientists and health advocates say are caused by the chemicals with which they work. Cuomo Orders Emergency Measures to Protect Workers at Nail Salons MAY 11, 2015

A pedicure at a salon on the Upper East Side of Manhattan. Q&A: Readers Ask About the Exploitation of Nail Salon Workers MAY 11, 2015

The city’s Department of Consumer Affairs will begin an investigation into employment agencies used by some manicurists. It is illegal for agencies to knowingly place workers in jobs that pay less than minimum wage.

For the past week, department personnel have also been surreptitiously visiting salons, collecting nail products that are labeled nontoxic or free of chemicals like toluene, formaldehyde and dibutyl phthalate, ingredients that have been linked to cancer and miscarriage. The department said it would test the products to check the veracity of the claims and issue subpoenas to the manufacturers if the products, in fact, contain the chemicals. A similar study was conducted in 2012 in by the California Environmental Protection Agency’s Department of Toxic Substances Control. That study found that many products claiming to be free of certain chemicals were not.

“We will use all available powers to shield nail salon workers from deplorable conditions, empower them with awareness of their rights,” the mayor said in a statement, “and offer every other support we can to ensure the safety and dignity of our hardworking fellow New Yorkers.”

The city’s initiatives are not designed, for the most part, to be punitive, according to Julie Menin, the commissioner of consumer affairs. “In the absence of regulatory jurisdiction, our role here is to advocate and not regulate,” she said. “To equip workers and consumers with the information they need.”

Along these lines, the most visible step being taking by the de Blasio administration is what is being described by officials as a day of action on Thursday in which 500 volunteers and city personnel, including several elected officials, will canvass salons around New York, distributing information to educate workers about their rights and to tell owners about their legal obligations.

Starting at 7:30 a.m., for an hour and a half, volunteers will stand at subway stops and other places in neighborhoods including Flushing, Queens, and Sunset Park, Brooklyn, where many nail salon workers live and congregate, passing out information in seven languages about job training programs, workers’ rights and tips for consumers. Later they will visit shops in areas with a high concentration of salons, like the Upper East Side and Upper West Side of Manhattan and Forest Hills in Queens. The goal is to drop in on 800 to 1,000 businesses, city officials said. There were nearly 2,000 salons in New York City in 2012, according to census data from that year, the most recent statistics available.

Letters will also be mailed to salon owners reminding them of their obligation to provide paid sick leave. The letters are in English with sentences in other languages directing readers to a government website with more information. About 70 to 80 percent of nail salon owners in the city are of Korean descent, according to the Korean American Nail Salon Association.

Sunjung Yuk, 40, a former manicurist who worked in the industry for about 20 years, said that paying workers for days they were out sick would be nearly impossible for bosses already struggling because of fierce competition, and that the message is out of touch with the reality of salon life. “It’s not a white-collar job,” she said.

Nevertheless, Ms. Menin said the city was committed to protecting workers. “We just want people to confidentially tell us when these rights are being violated so we can take educational action at the businesses that need it, and ultimately enforcement action if need be,” she said.

The Department of Consumer Affairs has started a petition directed at the Personal Care Products Council, the main trade group for the cosmetic chemical industry, urging its members to ban ingredients that have been linked to serious ailments. It has also sent similar letters to the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration and the Food and Drug Administration.

“Every New Yorker,” Mr. de Blasio said in a statement, “must be protected from predatory workplace practices that threaten their health and exploit their labor.”

DE BLASIO ADMINISTRATION ANNOUNCES MULTIFACETED EFFORT TO ADDRESS LABOR ABUSES AND HEALTH RISKS AT CITY’S NAIL SALONS

Comprehensive advocacy and outreach efforts to businesses, workers and consumers is part of City's dedicated efforts to protect vulnerable New Yorkers

Immediate steps include investigations of the industry's products; May 21 'Day of Action' to educate New Yorkers about their rights and responsibilities; letter to FDA and petition to salon industry to ban use of 'Toxic Trio' of chemicals in nail products; and more

City partnering with key elected officials to maximize outreach across the city

NEW YORK—Mayor Bill de Blasio today announced an aggressive advocacy and educational initiative by the City to immediately address labor and health issues at local salons, support salon workers, and educate businesses and consumers.

The State of New York licenses salons and the City of New York has limited jurisdiction over labor and wage laws. The City is executing a wide variety of actions within its powers to address allegations of disturbing conditions in nail salons uncovered by a recent New York Times investigation. This effort, led by the Department of Consumer Affairs with support from the Department of Small Business Services, the Mayor's Office of Immigrant Affairs, the Mayor's Office to Combat Domestic Violence, and others, will include dedicated outreach to and education of workers, employers and consumers, legal investigations and direct actions for New Yorkers to take. Additionally, the Administration is collaborating with City elected officials who have previously initiated action to address these workplace threats, including Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito, Public Advocate Letitia James, Bronx Borough President Ruben Diaz Jr., and Council Members Rafael Espinal, Consumer Affairs Chair and Corey Johnson, Health Committee Chair. These partnerships will maximize outreach, education, and technical assistance across the city for business owners, employees, patrons and more regarding potential health hazards and workplace safety.

"Every New Yorker must be protected from predatory workplace practices that threaten their health and exploit their labor," said Mayor Bill de Blasio. "We will use all available powers to shield nail salon workers from deplorable conditions, empower them with awareness of their rights, and offer every other support we can to ensure the safety and dignity of our hardworking fellow New Yorkers."

"We cannot stand by while the most vulnerable workers among us are exposed to toxic chemicals and equally toxic conditions of employment," DCA Commissioner Julie Menin said. "We will harness all the means at our disposal to make sure that salon workers and customers are protected."

Immediate steps include:

- Investigative subpoenas:
 - DCA's Legal Department will investigate, test products, and send subpoenas to manufacturers that make environmental and product claims that may not be valid. DCA will test additional nail products to identify potential harm to consumers.
 - DCA's Legal Department will investigate employment agencies that place workers in nail salons to ensure all such placements are made in jobs that pay at least minimum wage.
- Day of Action, Thursday, May 21:

- ‘Worker and Consumer Awareness Outreach’: 500 volunteers and City representatives, including the Commissioners of DCA, MOIA and SBS, and other officials, will spread out across the five boroughs to distribute information in multiple languages about workers’ rights, the City’s training and job connection programs, employer obligations and business support services, and consumer tips.
- ‘Business Education Canvass’: In conjunction with the ‘Day of Action,’ City representatives will stop by 800-1000 salons citywide to inform owners about their responsibilities and resources available to help them.
- Letters to federal regulatory agencies:
 - The City sent a letter to the US Food and Drug Administration calling for a ban on the use of the so-called ‘Toxic Trio’ of chemicals – Formaldehyde, Dibutyl Phthalate and Toluene – in all nail products.
 - The City sent a letter to the Occupational Safety & Health Administration urging the agency to take immediate steps to protect salon workers by providing safety and health consultation services to nail salon owners, reviewing and revising the permissible exposure limits (“PELS”) of toxins in the workplace and by conducting inspections.
- Consumer Petition: This petition tells the Personal Care Products Council, the leading national trade association for the cosmetics industry, that the “price of beauty shouldn’t be your and your manicurist’s health.” The petition can be found here.
- Letter to Salons: A letter is being issued Monday to nearly 3,000 nail salons informing them of their responsibilities under New York’s Paid Sick Leave Law.

Nail salons, hair salons, and related businesses have also been identified as hotspots for labor and sex trafficking of workers, and where employees may also experience domestic violence at home. The City’s Office to Combat Domestic Violence has conducted proactive outreach to more than 1,250 hair and nail salons and related businesses over the past three years, reaching thousands of workers to raise awareness about domestic violence and trafficking, and to connect victims to the services at the NYC Family Justice Centers.

“All New Yorkers have the right to good jobs and healthy work conditions, and we will be working aggressively with our partners in government to ensure nail salon workers are aware of their rights and business owners are aware of their responsibilities,” said Small Business Services Commissioner Maria Torres-Springer.

“Too often, immigrant workers face exploitation in a broad range of industries, including nail salons,” said Commissioner of Immigrant Affairs Nisha Agarwal. “We are committed to addressing the violation of workers’ rights and supporting the workforce development of immigrant New Yorkers.”

“A coordinated approach by city government such as this will help to strengthen the safety net for trafficking victims who are quite often visible and in plain sight,” said OCDV Commissioner Rose Pierre-Louis. “As part of this effort, we will expand targeted outreach to nail salons to ensure workers who may be victims of human trafficking or intimate partner violence are aware of the comprehensive resources available through the Mayor’s

Office.”

“The New York City Council is proud to lead the way in the fight for justice in the nail salon industry, promoting policies such as increasing the minimum wage and fighting for authority to enforce State labor laws. The Administration’s commitment to raise awareness and investigate potential health concerns are important steps in our shared mission to combat deplorable and widespread abuse of nail salon employees,” said Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito. “New York City has a clear obligation to ensure that these workers are treated with the respect and dignity they deserve, and we are committed to working with business owners, employees, and consumers to meet this crucial goal.”

“I applaud Mayor de Blasio for taking these important steps to protect workers at nail salons against harsh working conditions and wage theft. At a recent Consumer Affairs Committee hearing I held discussing the industry, we heard why better regulations need to be in place. I look forward to working with the Mayor and DCA Commissioner Menin to ensure that all New Yorkers are protected from the potential risks posed by unsanitary nail salons and the products they use,” said Council Member Rafael Espinal, Chair of the Committee on Consumer Affairs.

“We cannot allow any New Yorkers to work in the shadows, subject to inexcusable abuse and exposed to harmful conditions on a daily basis,” said Council Member Corey Johnson, Chair of the Committee on Health. “No one should ever be sacrificing their safety to make a living for themselves and their families, yet this has been the case for many of our City’s most vulnerable who have immigrated here with few resources, language barriers and a desperate need for work. I commend the Department of Consumer Affairs, the Department of Small Business Services and the Mayor’s Office of Immigrant Affairs for leading the effort to ensure that those who work in New York City’s nail salons are no longer at risk of exploitation, abuse and harmful substances in their work places.”

Information and tips on what consumers, salon workers and salon owners need to know can be found on DCA’s website.

###

From: Niuniu Teo
To: Mayor's Press Office; Carey, Michael; P RAGONE; [REDACTED] jfdc@akpdmedia.com
Subject: KQED Forum - Today's Show; Please Forward to Mayor de Blasio
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 2:50:05 PM

Dear Mayor de Blasio,

Thank you again for appearing on today's show. I just wanted to let you know that an audio archive of the show is now posted online at <http://www.kqed.org/a/forum/R201505150900>. We encourage you to share the link with your community and on your social media accounts. Our Twitter handle is @kqedforum and our Facebook page can be found at <https://www.facebook.com/KQEDForum>.

Thanks again for the great conversation! It was an honor to meet you.

Best,

Niuniu Teo
KQED Forum Intern

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Carey, Michael; "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Chancellor Dirks
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 3:12:18 PM
Attachments: image008.png

Nicholas B. Dirks @nickdirks

Lunch yesterday with New York City mayor
@BilldeBlasio here in Berkeley!

RETWEETS 7
FAVORITES 13

1:39 PM - 15 May 2015

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re:
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 4:03:47 PM

It was on the public schedule that he meet with them

On 5/15/15, 1:04 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>You have any problem with me telling WSJ that MBDB met with mayor of >Oakland and is meeting with mayor of San Jose today? Got him off his >misinfo on "fundraiser" today - but helps to give him mayor meetings I >think
>
>

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; "John Del Cecato"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO APPEARS LIVE ON "THE CALIFORNIA REPORT" WITH HOST SCOTT SHAFER
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 5:57:36 PM
Attachments: image001.png

No

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 5:45 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO APPEARS LIVE ON "THE CALIFORNIA REPORT" WITH HOST SCOTT SHAFER

This is an unchecked transcript of his radio interview this morning. For internal consumption – if you want to circulate outside we can of course brush up.

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: May 15, 2015
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO APPEARS LIVE ON "THE CALIFORNIA REPORT" WITH HOST SCOTT SHAFER

Host Scott Shafer: Blasio, he took over for Mayor Michael Bloomberg about a year and a half ago. An unabashed liberal, first Democrat to win that office in nearly a quarter of a century. Some are calling him the new star of the party's left wing, but he's also run into some stiff opposition over comments he made about cops and communities of color. He's here with us now to talk about all that and more. Mayor de Blasio, welcome to San Francisco.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you very much Scott.

Host Scott Shafer: There's no explanation needed for being a liberal.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: You know, this is a wonderful progressive town. I salute the people of San Francisco.

Host Scott Shafer: I'm sure you do. I want to get off the phone, right at the top. You're here generously for a half an hour, but I want to give folks the chance to call in. The number is 866-733-6786, 866-733-6786, if you have a question or comment for Mayor de Blasio. You're doing a national tour, when you're calling the progressive agenda, to address income inequality. Do you see that as the defining issue of our time?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I do. I also see it as the issue that is going the most unaddressed in our times. We have a crisis of income inequality that at this point is potentially destabilizing this country. I think that is the blunt way it has to be put. By the way, that exact phrase, destabilizing, was used, not just by progressives like me, but by Lloyd Blankfein, the CEO of Goldman Sachs, a few months ago. I think even folks in the business community are increasingly understanding that a country in which working people simply can't get ahead, and the middle class is increasingly tenuous, is not a strong country, and the sphere between the wealthy and the rest of us is growing without any policies to address what is increasingly an opportunity gap for our people.

I'm trying to crystallize focus on this, get it front and center in the national debate, obviously, and all the discussions around the elections to come. I want to urge your listeners to go to progressiveagenda.us, to learn more about what we're doing. It's a blunt, straight forward, bold agenda. It says exactly the kinds of things that would start to address the income inequality crisis.

Host Scott Shafer: Among other things you're calling for a national minimum wage increase to what?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Fifteen dollars an hour. The fight for fifteen movement around the country I think has been one of the real indicators of how much people on the ground are demanding change, and a fifteen dollar minimum wage is something that would be transcendent around this country. We believe this is one of the rallying cries progressives have to put forward, particularly again as we go through this national discussion around the election. You can't have a minimum wage that people literally cannot make ends meet on. That's what's true on my state, that's what's true in states all over the country. Interestingly, not only do you see this fight for fifteen movement, 200 cities had rallied simultaneously a couple of weeks ago for the fifteen dollar minimum wage, but you see even in red states a movement towards a better minimum wage. Four red states in 2014 election, including Arkansas and Nebraska, passed referendum in favor for a higher minimum wage. This is becoming something felt deeply at the grassroots.

Host Scott Shafer: You were in DC, I think earlier this week, announcing this agenda. One of the things you said is that this is a plan that rewards work, not wealth. You said it's time for leaders and candidates to stiffen their backbones, to be clear and to champion these progressive policies. A lot of people took that as directed toward Hillary Clinton.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: True. It's directed towards candidates across the board, and leaders across the board. Look, I ...

Host Scott Shafer: She's the preeminent leader, really.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: At the presidential level, but a lot of what I'm talking about is not just the presidential level. I have to be very clear about that. I watched the 2014 elections with great dismay. I say this as a Democrat and a progressive, but I also say this as an American citizen. I think the core issue we're facing, of the lack of economic opportunity for our people, went unaddressed in that election cycle and that debate. I certainly saw a lot of democrats running away from the discussion of progressive economic policy.

My message is to leaders across the board, but certainly there is a message to my fellow democrats, we need to be true to our values and our people. The people we hope will come out and vote will not be inspired unless they hear a blunt and bold vision of progressive change.

Host Scott Shafer: You got a lot of attention a few weeks ago when you declined to endorse Hillary Clinton. I'm wondering, what do you want to hear from her before you're ready to endorse her?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I want to hear a vision for how we address income inequality. I want it, of course, as I would with any candidate, to be sufficiently specific.

Host Scott Shafer: What has to be on that list?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I want to first of all say that I have immense respect for Secretary Clinton. Obviously I've worked with her. I think she has a very impressive progressive background. I always use the example of the fight for healthcare reform in 1993, where she took on the insurance companies at no small cost. I think that is the kind of boldness we need today.

I'm optimistic based on what she said in Iowa, in her first trip as a candidate, and certainly her speeches recently on criminal justice reform, and immigration reform, suggest a very progressive platform. Look at what we have in the progressive agenda. I'll plug it one more time, progressiveagenda.us, to look at the 13 points. I'd like to see her and all candidates speak to the minimum wage level, benefits like paid sick leave, progressive taxation, ideas like the Buffet rule, which simply says that millionaires and billionaires should not pay less as a tax rate than the people that work for them like their secretaries. Closing the carried interest loopholes. Hedge fund managers pay a fair share of tax. I'd like to hear a specific vision that touches on those kinds of issues.

Host Scott Shafer: Sounds very much like the agenda for Elizabeth Warren, who is not running for president, or Bernie Sanders who is. Philosophically, do you find yourself in tune with them?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I think the world of both of them. I think they've been very powerful and important progressive voices. I think part of what's happening here is a conversation which progressives are raising the demand level, not just on our fellow democrats but on leaders across the board. We've gone through a fundamental political shift, and I think it's gone under-recognized. The great recession was a game changer in our lives, in our politics, in our society. Only now I think some of the fullness of that reality is being felt. Certainly it's being felt in the fight for fifteen movement. I think it's being seen in voices like Elizabeth, and Bernie, and others who are speaking up.

Joe Stiglitz came out with a great report earlier in the week with the Roosevelt institute talking about fundamental changes we have to make in our economy to make it fair. I think something is happening here that is bigger, and it has a growing momentum.

Host Scott Shafer: Do you feel that this in some ways is a fight for the soul of the party?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I've been asked that and I say it a little differently. I think the soul of the party was defined a long time ago. I loved when my good friend Howard Dean who appeared with us when we announced the progressive agenda, he said ten years ago the famous line, he was from the democratic wing of the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party has been progressive for the better part of a century, in terms of its core orientation. The majority of democrats believe fundamentally in a progressive populist vision of economic change. Some of our leaders I think lost track of that. Some of our leaders ran away from it. Even as recently as a 2014 election, we saw that. I think what's happening now is that the core of the party, the majority is speaking again.

Host Scott Shafer: President Obama took a look at that 13 point agenda ... Is it 13? Why 13?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: It just happens to be. I will say there's a few more in the process of being added. There's a great deal of desire among the folks who make up the coalition to build it out a little more. We're going to be doing that shortly.

Host Scott Shafer: The president said, "Hey, that's my agenda," except for trade. We disagree on trade. Is that fair to say? You said, "No one's addressing it," but he's saying, "Hey, I've been trying to address these things for as long as I've been in the White House."

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Let's have some perspective. I think the president's last State of the Union speech was extraordinary on this front. I think it was a great prescription for what we have to do. I think the president, to his great credit, probably has done the most that anyone has done in the last decade by passing the Affordable Care Act, which fundamentally changed the economic reality for millions of Americans.

That being said, I think we have to go farther. The difference on trade is obviously a major one. Beyond that, I think we now need to get to a much more grassroots, 50 state, consistent approach for trying to apply these changes. I don't think it's a question of whether any of our leaders had said some of the right things. I think there are a number of people who have subscribed to some of these ideas. I think at this point there has to be greater urgency to actually achieve the changes. Part of what we're trying to do with this agenda is say, "Here are tangible things that can be worked on right now," and we need to gather a coalition of people who are serious about moving this now, and that's what the impetus is.

Host Scott Shafer: New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio is with us for the first half of the hour. If you'd like to join us the number is 866-733-6786. Let's get a call in here. Let's go to Emeryville, and Patrick is on the line. Welcome.

Caller: Hello mister mayor, I want to thank you for talking to us. You deal with some of the wealthiest companies in the nation, and the world. I wanted to ask how you can feel we can change it ... A progressive, policy change in our country, when some of the worst legislation is influenced heavily by lobbying, for instance Medicare not being able to negotiate prices ... How do you think we can change finance reform in a genuine way, knowing what you know about the opposition you'll get?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you for the question, Patrick. I think, first of all, the American people ... I believe this fundamentally, and we have a lot of opinion research to back it up, the American people want campaign finance reform on a very grand scale. I think the notion of a constitutional amendment to rescind the impact of the Citizen's United decision by the Supreme Court is a much more viable approach than it's given credit for, and I think it's going to become a real issue in this election cycle, which is good.

The American people are actually quite bipartisan, are shocked and disgusted by the presence of big money in the political system. We can go at that both with a constitutional amendment nationally, I also think we can do a lot more at the state level to have things like public financing of elections, we had that in New York City, it makes a huge difference.

I think the last point would be, there is I believe a gathering movement around the country to address economic inequality, and the more we build that, the more it holds everyone accountable to create policies that actually respond to the economic reality of our majority.

Host Scott Shafer: All right, Patrick, thanks for the call. Let's go down to Oakland, and Brad is on the line, welcome.

Caller: Welcome mayor, welcome to San Francisco. As you know, one of the things we share with you is the highest housing costs in the country. My question is in general, how do you think we can make housing more affordable for the 99%, and specifically, how do you feel about the growing concern in both San Francisco and New York about Air B and B, how they're converting potentially tens of thousands of rental housing units? Thank you.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thanks Brad. On the first point, what we've tried to do in New York City is change the rules of engagement with the real estate development community. We have the most aggressive affordable housing plan anywhere in the country. We are going to build and preserve 200 000 units of housing. That's enough for almost half a million people. We're doing that over the next decade. The central way we're doing that, first of course is we're devoting a huge amount of our city's capital dollars to that process, but we're also driving a much harder bargain with developers. I've been very blunt about this fact.

I'm someone who believes that in urban areas you do need more height and density. We are an increasingly urbanized society. We should not be afraid to embrace height and density in the right places and right ways. In exchange, a very high level of demand on developers to create affordable housing. What we said in New York City, and in a number of our rezonings and other land use actions, is unless the amount of affordable housing is sufficient, we simply won't agree to the development.

Host Scott Shafer: What is the percentage of units in a development that should be affordable?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: It obviously depends literally on the location, the market value, the financing, but we have tried to take the old model in our city, which was 20%, and up that consistently to 25, 30, in some cases 50.

Host Scott Shafer: The developers will say that just doesn't pencil out without a lot of public money.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Well, it pencils out ... A broad answer would be, depending on the value of the site, and the height and density of the building, a lot of public value is being provided to a developer and we need a lot in exchange. Yes, there will obviously be cases where we have to have subsidies as well, but I think the point is to see the development process as a tool to get to affordable housing, not something that simply allows the market to dominate the process.

Host Scott Shafer: I want to come back to Air B and B. New York State has been very tough on Air B and B. The Attorney General and also New York City. You've also been tough on Uber. In fact, this week Facebook, Twitter, and Google among others criticized a taxi policy being proposed by your administration that would require essentially that smart phone apps for companies like Uber get signed off, get approval from the taxi and limousine commission. How do you feel about technology? You're here courting Silicon Valley, and at the same time there are some policies in your city that big players like Air B and B, and Uber, and Twitter might not be so happy with.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Let me start with the first part of the equation. We have a strong and very important tech community in our city. Almost 300 000 jobs. It's a wonderful part of the reality of New York City today, is that the tech community is growing rapidly, and I think ... No disrespect to the valley, it's wonderful here too, but people have found a home in New York City that they're very comfortable with as a place to develop the tech community. We want to consistently build that.

A lot of good citizenship and social responsibility has been a part of that as well, which I deeply appreciate. I think that the specific question of sharing economy obviously brings both very positive realities and huge challenges, and we have to find the balance point. I think people are working on that all over the country and around the world. Everything from, in the case of Air B and B, making sure that the units that people use for their stays are safe and secure for the people who live in the same building, who are the permanent residents of those buildings, to issues like insurance, to issues like taxation. Obviously protecting the affordable housing stock of our city is a big issue.

We're working on trying to find that balance point. Part of the economy that's obviously important and that has a real customer base can coexist with the needs of our city. I'm an optimist, and believe there's a way forward, but it will take some real work. I never belittle issues like the safety of our communities. That has to be accommodated first and foremost. I think on the taxi and limousine commission, there has been a bit of overstatement of what we've done. What we've said, simply, is we want to make sure that our customers and our citizens are being addressed properly. We're not asking to micromanage the process, but we do need more information and more opportunity to work with these companies.

Remember, we have a very developed transportation network in New York City ...

Host Scott Shafer: The Taxi industry is very powerful, they've given you a lot of money for example.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I'd say this. It's more about the question of how do you balance both transportation people have had available to them historically through the taxi industry, with these new options? How do you make sure all the pieces are working for the larger community? So far we've seen some things that work well, and some things that haven't worked so well. I think, the last point I'd make, is the role of government in anything involving the private sector ... The government is here to create balance, and to create some regulations and rules for everyone. The sharing economy has created a set of new dynamics the government is still catching up with.

Host Scott Shafer: I've got to ask you about policing. There was a big issue of course, the death of Eric Garner in Staten Island. A man selling cigarettes famously said, "I can't breathe" eleven times. He died. The medical examiner there ruled it a homicide. No charges brought against the police officers involved in that. What's the takeaway for you from all of that, and were you disappointed that there wasn't some action against the officers? It seemed to many like a very clear cut case of excessive force.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I think that case and many others have taught us why it's so important to change the relationship between police and community. We have instituted a series of reforms that we believe will be transcendent. The retraining of our entire police force in how to de-escalate situations of conflict, and minimize the use of force wherever possible.

Host Scott Shafer: Was there not that kind of training previously?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I would say pretty bluntly that that training was lacking the past. Commissioner Bratton I think has done an extraordinary job ... Remember, I'm someone who came in to office saying we need to reform police, and change the relationship between police and community. A lot of critics said that there is no way that could be done without crime going up. In fact, what's happened on our watch, and the credit goes to the men and women of the NYPD, is crime has continued to go down. In most areas, not all, but in most areas. While we have drawn police and community closer.

Reforms like retraining, reforms like the beginning of body cameras, a stronger civilian complaint review process, are all helping. Obviously, reduction in the stop and frisk policy, and low level marijuana arrests ... All of these pieces are helping. Here is a powerful statistic. We have 25% fewer complaints about the police today than we did a year ago. Something is changing for the better in New York City, but we have obviously a long way to go.

Host Scott Shafer: You spoke out after charges were not brought against that police officer. You talked very personally about how you and your wife, who is African American, had talked to your son Dante about how to deal with a stop by police, and what to do to make sure he wasn't disrespectful, and was safe, so that something tragic didn't happen to him. It caused a real furor among the NYPD and the union. What's your takeaway from that? Why do you think what you said hit such a raw nerve?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: It's the history of our country, and it has to be addressed. I have the greatest respect for the men and women of the NYPD and for all police, and I've worked very closely with them for decades. We all had delivered unto us a history, and it's a painful history, and we have to overcome it. It's our generation's responsibility to overcome it. I think, as with most things in life, recognition of the problem is the beginning of a solution. I've talked to parents of color all over New York City and beyond, who all have had to have that conversation, particularly with young men.

Host Scott Shafer: Do you think that the police officers ... That the leader of the city, by saying that it was that you were somehow impugning their integrity, or what was it?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I don't want to talk to perception or other people's interpretation. I think that since then a lot more dialogue has happened, a lot greater understanding of what I was saying is meant with the greatest respect and with an understanding that the police are there to protect us, worthy of our respect, but that history has caused a dynamic, where for so many parents there is a fear, and that has caused, in effect, a need to train, particularly again young men, in how to interact with the police and how to understand, "Yes the police are there to protect you, but you have to be careful that there's not a misunderstanding."

This is something that just needs to be talked about in the cool light of day as a gateway to the changes we have to make. I believe fundamentally that things like retraining the police, things like body cameras, are going to change the paradigm.

Host Scott Shafer: How big a problem is ... You talked about that painful history. How big a problem is racism, not just in the NYPD, but in police departments across the country?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: It's a problem in our society as a whole. I think it still pervades our society.

Host Scott Shafer: But we don't all walk around with badges and guns.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Well, true, but I think that I would say we all need to be very respectful of the fact that police officers are like all the rest of us, and live the lives we live. If we are in a society that still has not come fully to grips with a number of the divisions that exist amongst us. That's bigger work we have to do.

I actually believe ... I'll wrap it back to where we started. I believe the work we need to do to address income inequality actually will be a source of unity, I truly do. I think economics is where people find a common ground that transcends race, geography, and language. I think here is an opportunity for working people all over the country, middle class people, to say, "We've got to change the rules of the game." I think that's where people are going to find an opportunity to work together in a new way.

Host Scott Shafer: Real quick, we have a number of email from folks pushing back on the minimum wage. Here is just one example. "How does it make any sense to have the same minimum wage in Manhattan and San Francisco as in upstate New York or the central valley?" Where obviously the cost of living is less.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: First of all, this is a point about what we should use as a goal that will change people's lives. I would say in much of this country, short of 15 dollars is not going to allow people to lead a decent life economically. I understand, in fact in my state I advocate for the notion of letting localities have flexibility depending on their local conditions. Here's a way to say it. Right now we have a minimum wage that isn't enough to live on. That literally doesn't fit the definition, and we have to change that.

Host Scott Shafer: All right, that's the beginning of the conversation. Mayor Bill de Blasio, thanks so much for coming in.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you.

Host Scott Shafer: All right. Coming up in the next half hour, we're going to be talking about Governor Brown's new budget.

###

From: Hayley Prim
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 6:03:50 PM

Sorry-- This is the final agenda, with the new language highlighted:

1. Lift the Floor for Working People

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails -- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.

2. Support Working Families

- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit, and protect and expand Social Security.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.

3. Tax Fairness

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the "Buffett Rule" so millionaires pay their fair share.
- Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of "performance pay" write-offs.

On Fri, May 15, 2015 at 6:00 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

And I'm assuming you didn't miss my point on item 1: send the language you've circulated on the other points

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 03:00 PM
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

She suggests including something along these lines:

- Eliminate racism
- Supporting racial and economic justice
- Supporting racial justice

On Fri, May 15, 2015 at 5:52 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I will certainly talk to her on sunday or monday, but I need to see 2 things:

1. The new language we proposed -- and let me be blunt that it is a real foul that you and John didn't show it to ME first before sending it around
2. The language Barbara proposes

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 02:49 PM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Barbara Lee

We emailed all of our current signers the updated language on SS, mass incarceration, and debt free college today, and almost everyone was totally fine with it.

Barbara Lee, however, is being adamant about us including language addressing racial equity in our next draft, and sent over sample language and stats to me a little while ago. She thinks its a mistake if our next rollout of this doesn't include this language, that it was a mistake that the original version didn't include it, and thinks she can get backing from other African Americans saying this is necessary.

I explained that this is something we will be talking about every time we discuss the progressive agenda, and this document is going to continue to grow, and that could be added later on, but she was not okay with that.

We thought you might need to give her a call before she starts getting traction on this. Her cell is ██████████.

Thanks,
Hayley

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; "John Del Cecato"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO APPEARS LIVE ON "THE CALIFORNIA REPORT" WITH HOST SCOTT SHAFER
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 6:09:50 PM
Attachments: image001.png

pass

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 5:45 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO APPEARS LIVE ON "THE CALIFORNIA REPORT" WITH HOST SCOTT SHAFER

This is an unchecked transcript of his radio interview this morning. For internal consumption – if you want to circulate outside we can of course brush up.

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: May 15, 2015
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO APPEARS LIVE ON "THE CALIFORNIA REPORT" WITH HOST SCOTT SHAFER

Host Scott Shafer: Blasio, he took over for Mayor Michael Bloomberg about a year and a half ago. An unabashed liberal, first Democrat to win that office in nearly a quarter of a century. Some are calling him the new star of the party's left wing, but he's also run into some stiff opposition over comments he made about cops and communities of color. He's here with us now to talk about all that and more. Mayor de Blasio, welcome to San Francisco.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you very much Scott.

Host Scott Shafer: There's no explanation needed for being a liberal.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: You know, this is a wonderful progressive town. I salute the people of San Francisco.

Host Scott Shafer: I'm sure you do. I want to get off the phone, right at the top. You're here generously for a half an hour, but I want to give folks the chance to call in. The number is 866-733-6786, 866-733-6786, if you have a question or comment for Mayor de Blasio. You're doing a national tour, when you're calling the progressive agenda, to address income inequality. Do you see that as the defining issue of our time?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I do. I also see it as the issue that is going the most unaddressed in our times. We have a crisis of income inequality that at this point is potentially destabilizing this country. I think that is the blunt way it has to be put. By the way, that exact phrase, destabilizing, was used, not just by progressives like me, but by Lloyd Blankfein, the CEO of Goldman Sachs, a few months ago. I think even folks in the business community are increasingly understanding that a country in which working people simply can't get ahead, and the middle class is increasingly tenuous, is not a strong country, and the sphere between the wealthy and the rest of us is growing without any policies to address what is increasingly an opportunity gap for our people.

I'm trying to crystallize focus on this, get it front and center in the national debate, obviously, and all the discussions around the elections to come. I want to urge your listeners to go to progressiveagenda.us, to learn more about what we're doing. It's a blunt, straight forward, bold agenda. It says exactly the kinds of things that would start to address the income inequality crisis.

Host Scott Shafer: Among other things you're calling for a national minimum wage increase to what?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Fifteen dollars an hour. The fight for fifteen movement around the country I think has been one of the real indicators of how much people on the ground are demanding change, and a fifteen dollar minimum wage is something that would be transcendent around this country. We believe this is one of the rallying cries progressives have to put forward, particularly again as we go through this national discussion around the election. You can't have a minimum wage that people literally cannot make ends meet on. That's what's true on my state, that's what's true in states all over the country. Interestingly, not only do you see this fight for fifteen movement, 200 cities had rallied simultaneously a couple of weeks ago for the fifteen dollar minimum wage, but you see even in red states a movement towards a better minimum wage. Four red states in 2014 election, including Arkansas and Nebraska, passed referendum in favor for a higher minimum wage. This is becoming something felt deeply at the grassroots.

Host Scott Shafer: You were in DC, I think earlier this week, announcing this agenda. One of the things you said is that this is a plan that rewards work, not wealth. You said it's time for leaders and candidates to stiffen their backbones, to be clear and to champion these progressive policies. A lot of people took that as directed toward Hillary Clinton.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: True. It's directed towards candidates across the board, and leaders across the board. Look, I ...

Host Scott Shafer: She's the preeminent leader, really.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: At the presidential level, but a lot of what I'm talking about is not just the presidential level. I have to be very clear about that. I watched the 2014 elections with great dismay. I say this as a Democrat and a progressive, but I also say this as an American citizen. I think the core issue we're facing, of the lack of economic opportunity for our people, went unaddressed in that election cycle and that debate. I certainly saw a lot of democrats running away from the discussion of progressive economic policy.

My message is to leaders across the board, but certainly there is a message to my fellow democrats, we need to be true to our values and our people. The people we hope will come out and vote will not be inspired unless they hear a blunt and bold vision of progressive change.

Host Scott Shafer: You got a lot of attention a few weeks ago when you declined to endorse Hillary Clinton. I'm wondering, what do you want to hear from her before you're ready to endorse her?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I want to hear a vision for how we address income inequality. I want it, of course, as I would with any candidate, to be sufficiently specific.

Host Scott Shafer: What has to be on that list?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I want to first of all say that I have immense respect for Secretary Clinton. Obviously I've worked with her. I think she has a very impressive progressive background. I always use the example of the fight for healthcare reform in 1993, where she took on the insurance companies at no small cost. I think that is the kind of boldness we need today.

I'm optimistic based on what she said in Iowa, in her first trip as a candidate, and certainly her speeches recently on criminal justice reform, and immigration reform, suggest a very progressive platform. Look at what we have in the progressive agenda. I'll plug it one more time, progressiveagenda.us, to look at the 13 points. I'd like to see her and all candidates speak to the minimum wage level, benefits like paid sick leave, progressive taxation, ideas like the Buffet rule, which simply says that millionaires and billionaires should not pay less as a tax rate than the people that work for them like their secretaries. Closing the carried interest loopholes. Hedge fund managers pay a fair share of tax. I'd like to hear a specific vision that touches on those kinds of issues.

Host Scott Shafer: Sounds very much like the agenda for Elizabeth Warren, who is not running for president, or Bernie Sanders who is. Philosophically, do you find yourself in tune with them?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I think the world of both of them. I think they've been very powerful and important progressive voices. I think part of what's happening here is a conversation which progressives are raising the demand level, not just on our fellow democrats but on leaders across the board. We've gone through a fundamental political shift, and I think it's gone under-recognized. The great recession was a game changer in our lives, in our politics, in our society. Only now I think some of the fullness of that reality is being felt. Certainly it's being felt in the fight for fifteen movement. I think it's being seen in voices like Elizabeth, and Bernie, and others who are speaking up.

Joe Stiglitz came out with a great report earlier in the week with the Roosevelt institute talking about fundamental changes we have to make in our economy to make it fair. I think something is happening here that is bigger, and it has a growing momentum.

Host Scott Shafer: Do you feel that this in some ways is a fight for the soul of the party?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I've been asked that and I say it a little differently. I think the soul of the party was defined a long time ago. I loved when my good friend Howard Dean who appeared with us when we announced the progressive agenda, he said ten years ago the famous line, he was from the democratic wing of the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party has been progressive for the better part of a century, in terms of its core orientation. The majority of democrats believe fundamentally in a progressive populist vision of economic change. Some of our leaders I think lost track of that. Some of our leaders ran away from it. Even as recently as a 2014 election, we saw that. I think what's happening now is that the core of the party, the majority is speaking again.

Host Scott Shafer: President Obama took a look at that 13 point agenda ... Is it 13? Why 13?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: It just happens to be. I will say there's a few more in the process of being added. There's a great deal of desire among the folks who make up the coalition to build it out a little more. We're going to be doing that shortly.

Host Scott Shafer: The president said, "Hey, that's my agenda," except for trade. We disagree on trade. Is that fair to say? You said, "No one's addressing it," but he's saying, "Hey, I've been trying to address these things for as long as I've been in the White House."

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Let's have some perspective. I think the president's last State of the Union speech was extraordinary on this front. I think it was a great prescription for what we have to do. I think the president, to his great credit, probably has done the most that anyone has done in the last decade by passing the Affordable Care Act, which fundamentally changed the economic reality for millions of Americans.

That being said, I think we have to go farther. The difference on trade is obviously a major one. Beyond that, I think we now need to get to a much more grassroots, 50 state, consistent approach for trying to apply these changes. I don't think it's a question of whether any of our leaders had said some of the right things. I think there are a number of people who have subscribed to some of these ideas. I think at this point there has to be greater urgency to actually achieve the changes. Part of what we're trying to do with this agenda is say, "Here are tangible things that can be worked on right now," and we need to gather a coalition of people who are serious about moving this now, and that's what the impetus is.

Host Scott Shafer: New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio is with us for the first half of the hour. If you'd like to join us the number is 866-733-6786. Let's get a call in here. Let's go to Emeryville, and Patrick is on the line. Welcome.

Caller: Hello mister mayor, I want to thank you for talking to us. You deal with some of the wealthiest companies in the nation, and the world. I wanted to ask how you can feel we can change it ... A progressive, policy change in our country, when some of the worst legislation is influenced heavily by lobbying, for instance Medicare not being able to negotiate prices ... How do you think we can change finance reform in a genuine way, knowing what you know about the opposition you'll get?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you for the question, Patrick. I think, first of all, the American people ... I believe this fundamentally, and we have a lot of opinion research to back it up, the American people want campaign finance reform on a very grand scale. I think the notion of a constitutional amendment to rescind the impact of the Citizen's United decision by the Supreme Court is a much more viable approach than it's given credit for, and I think it's going to become a real issue in this election cycle, which is good.

The American people are actually quite bipartisan, are shocked and disgusted by the presence of big money in the political system. We can go at that both with a constitutional amendment nationally, I also think we can do a lot more at the state level to have things like public financing of elections, we had that in New York City, it makes a huge difference.

I think the last point would be, there is I believe a gathering movement around the country to address economic inequality, and the more we build that, the more it holds everyone accountable to create policies that actually respond to the economic reality of our majority.

Host Scott Shafer: All right, Patrick, thanks for the call. Let's go down to Oakland, and Brad is on the line, welcome.

Caller: Welcome mayor, welcome to San Francisco. As you know, one of the things we share with you is the highest housing costs in the country. My question is in general, how do you think we can make housing more affordable for the 99%, and specifically, how do you feel about the growing concern in both San Francisco and New York about Air B and B, how they're converting potentially tens of thousands of rental housing units? Thank you.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thanks Brad. On the first point, what we've tried to do in New York City is change the rules of engagement with the real estate development community. We have the most aggressive affordable housing plan anywhere in the country. We are going to build and preserve 200 000 units of housing. That's enough for almost half a million people. We're doing that over the next decade. The central way we're doing that, first of course is we're devoting a huge amount of our city's capital dollars to that process, but we're also driving a much harder bargain with developers. I've been very blunt about this fact. I'm someone who believes that in urban areas you do need more height and density. We are an increasingly urbanized society. We should not be afraid to embrace height and density in the right places and right ways. In exchange, a very high level of demand on developers to create affordable housing. What we said in New York City, and in a number of our rezonings and other land use actions, is unless the amount of affordable housing is sufficient, we simply won't agree to the development.

Host Scott Shafer: What is the percentage of units in a development that should be affordable?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: It obviously depends literally on the location, the market value, the financing, but we have tried to take the old model in our city, which was 20%, and up that consistently to 25, 30, in some cases 50.

Host Scott Shafer: The developers will say that just doesn't pencil out without a lot of public money.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Well, it pencils out ... A broad answer would be, depending on the value of the site, and the height and density of the building, a lot of public value is being provided to a developer and we need a lot in exchange. Yes, there will obviously be cases where we have to have subsidies as well, but I think the point is to see the development process as a tool to get to affordable housing, not something that simply allows the market to dominate the process.

Host Scott Shafer: I want to come back to Air B and B. New York State has been very tough on Air B and B. The Attorney General and also New York City. You've also been tough on Uber. In fact, this week Facebook, Twitter, and Google among others criticized a taxi policy being proposed by your administration that would require essentially that smart phone apps for companies like Uber get signed off, get approval from the taxi and limousine commission. How do you feel about technology? You're here courting Silicon Valley, and at the same time there are some policies in your city that big players like Air B and B, and Uber, and Twitter might not be so happy with.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Let me start with the first part of the equation. We have a strong and very important tech community in our city. Almost 300 000 jobs. It's a wonderful part of the reality of New York City today, is that the tech community is growing rapidly, and I think ... No disrespect to the valley, it's wonderful here too, but people have found a home in New York City that they're very comfortable with as a place to develop the tech community. We want to consistently build that.

A lot of good citizenship and social responsibility has been a part of that as well, which I deeply appreciate. I think that the specific question of sharing economy obviously brings both very positive realities and huge challenges, and we have to find the balance point. I think people are working on that all over the country and around the world. Everything from, in the case of Air B and B, making sure that the units that people use for their stays are safe and secure for the people who live in the same building, who are the permanent residents of those buildings, to issues like insurance, to issues like taxation. Obviously protecting the affordable housing stock of our city is a big issue.

We're working on trying to find that balance point. Part of the economy that's obviously important and that has a real customer base can coexist with the needs of our city. I'm an optimist, and believe there's a way forward, but it will take some real work. I never belittle issues like the safety of our communities. That has to be accommodated first and foremost. I think on the taxi and limousine commission, there has been a bit of overstatement of what we've done. What we've said, simply, is we want to make sure that our customers and our citizens are being addressed properly. We're not asking to micromanage the process, but we do need more information and more opportunity to work with these companies.

Remember, we have a very developed transportation network in New York City ...

Host Scott Shafer: The Taxi industry is very powerful, they've given you a lot of money for example.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I'd say this. It's more about the question of how do you balance both transportation people have had available to them historically through the taxi industry, with these new options? How do you make sure all the pieces are working for the larger community? So far we've seen some things that work well, and some things that haven't worked so well. I think, the last point I'd make, is the role of government in anything involving the private sector ... The government is here to create balance, and to create some regulations and rules for everyone. The sharing economy has created a set of new dynamics the government is still catching up with.

Host Scott Shafer: I've got to ask you about policing. There was a big issue of course, the death of Eric Garner in Staten Island. A man selling cigarettes famously said, "I can't breathe" eleven times. He died. The medical examiner there ruled it a homicide. No charges brought against the police officers involved in that. What's the takeaway for you from all of that, and were you disappointed that there wasn't some action against the officers? It seemed to many like a very clear cut case of excessive force.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I think that case and many others have taught us why it's so important to change the relationship between police and community. We have instituted a series of reforms that we believe will be transcendent. The retraining of our entire police force in how to de-escalate situations of conflict, and minimize the use of force wherever possible.

Host Scott Shafer: Was there not that kind of training previously?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I would say pretty bluntly that that training was lacking the past. Commissioner Bratton I think has done an extraordinary job ... Remember, I'm someone who came in to office saying we need to reform police, and change the relationship between police and community. A lot of critics said that there is no way that could be done without crime going up. In fact, what's happened on our watch, and the credit goes to the men and women of the NYPD, is crime has continued to go down. In most areas, not all, but in most areas. While we have drawn police and community closer.

Reforms like retraining, reforms like the beginning of body cameras, a stronger civilian complaint review process, are all helping. Obviously, reduction in the stop and frisk policy, and low level marijuana arrests ... All of these pieces are helping. Here is a powerful statistic. We have 25% fewer complaints about the police today than we did a year ago. Something is changing for the better in New York City, but we have obviously a long way to go.

Host Scott Shafer: You spoke out after charges were not brought against that police officer. You talked very personally about how you and your wife, who is African American, had talked to your son Dante about how to deal with a stop by police, and what to do to make sure he wasn't disrespectful, and was safe, so that something tragic didn't happen to him. It caused a real furor among the NYPD and the union. What's your takeaway from that? Why do you think what you said hit such a raw nerve?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: It's the history of our country, and it has to be addressed. I have the greatest respect for the men and women of the NYPD and for all police, and I've worked very closely with them for decades. We all had delivered unto us a history, and it's a painful history, and we have to overcome it. It's our generation's responsibility to overcome it. I think, as with most things in life, recognition of the problem is the beginning of a solution. I've talked to parents of color all over New York City and beyond, who all have had to have that conversation, particularly with young men.

Host Scott Shafer: Do you think that the police officers ... That the leader of the city, by saying that it was that you were somehow impugning their integrity, or what was it?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I don't want to talk to perception or other people's interpretation. I think that since then a lot more dialogue has happened, a lot greater understanding of what I was saying is meant with the greatest respect and with an understanding that the police are there to protect us, worthy of our respect, but that history has caused a dynamic, where for so many parents there is a fear, and that has caused, in effect, a need to train, particularly again young men, in how to interact with the police and how to understand, "Yes the police are there to protect you, but you have to be careful that there's not a misunderstanding."

This is something that just needs to be talked about in the cool light of day as a gateway to the changes we have to make. I believe fundamentally that things like retraining the police, things like body cameras, are going to change the paradigm.

Host Scott Shafer: How big a problem is ... You talked about that painful history. How big a problem is racism, not just in the NYPD, but in police departments across the country?

Mayor Bill de Blasio: It's a problem in our society as a whole. I think it still pervades our society.

Host Scott Shafer: But we don't all walk around with badges and guns.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Well, true, but I think that I would say we all need to be very respectful of the fact that police officers are like all the rest of us, and live the lives we live. If we are in a society that still has not come fully to grips with a number of the divisions that exist amongst us. That's bigger work we have to do.

I actually believe ... I'll wrap it back to where we started. I believe the work we need to do to address income inequality actually will be a source of unity, I truly do. I think economics is where people find a common ground that transcends race, geography, and language. I think here is an opportunity for working people all over the country, middle class people, to say, "We've got to change the rules of the game." I think that's where people are going to find an opportunity to work together in a new way.

Host Scott Shafer: Real quick, we have a number of email from folks pushing back on the minimum wage. Here is just one example. "How does it make any sense to have the same minimum wage in Manhattan and San Francisco as in upstate New York or the central valley?" Where obviously the cost of living is less.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: First of all, this is a point about what we should use as a goal that will change people's lives. I would say in much of this country, short of 15 dollars is not going to allow people to lead a decent life economically. I understand, in fact in my state I advocate for the notion of letting localities have flexibility depending on their local conditions. Here's a way to say it. Right now we have a minimum wage that isn't enough to live on. That literally doesn't fit the definition, and we have to change that.

Host Scott Shafer: All right, that's the beginning of the conversation. Mayor Bill de Blasio, thanks so much for coming in.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you.

Host Scott Shafer: All right. Coming up in the next half hour, we're going to be talking about Governor Brown's new budget.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 6:10:36 PM

She needs to know, in my view, that:

A) Sharpton, Van, Heather, and Keith are on board.

B) This is about policies, not just values. And we get at racial justice in our POLICIES.

C) Progressive Change Campaign Committee is on board. (I can ask Adam to talk to her, as he seems to have so much sway!)

I think it would also be good to have Van talk to her - time for the Linebacker to help us keep the game going in a winning direction.

That one should probably come from you. But we shouldn't deploy those forces until you chat with her.

On May 15, 2015, at 4:02 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

And I'm assuming you didn't miss my point on item 1: send the language you've circulated on the other points

From: Hayley Prim [[mailto:\[REDACTED\]](mailto:[REDACTED])]
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 03:00 PM
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

She suggests including something along these lines:

- Eliminate racism
- Supporting racial and economic justice
- Supporting racial justice

On Fri, May 15, 2015 at 5:52 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I will certainly talk to her on Sunday or Monday, but I need to see 2 things:

1. The new language we proposed -- and let me be blunt that it is a real foul that you and John didn't show it to ME first before sending it around

2. The language Barbara proposes

From: Hayley Prim [mailto: [REDACTED]]
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 02:49 PM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Barbara Lee

We emailed all of our current signers the updated language on SS, mass incarceration, and debt free college today, and almost everyone was totally fine with it.

Barbara Lee, however, is being adamant about us including language addressing racial equity in our next draft, and sent over sample language and stats to me a little while ago. She thinks its a mistake if our next rollout of this doesn't include this language, that it was a mistake that the original version didn't include it, and thinks she can get backing from other African Americans saying this is necessary.

I explained that this is something we will be talking about every time we discuss the progressive agenda, and this document is going to continue to grow, and that could be added later on, but she was not okay with that.

We thought you might need to give her a call before she starts getting traction on this. Her cell is [REDACTED]

Thanks,
Hayley

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: B; Carey, Michael; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Mayor of san jose
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 7:02:38 PM

This is amazing news!

Original Message

From: B
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 7:01 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Carey, Michael; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Mayor of san jose

We have a new ally! Liccardo is very impressive and quite progressive. Will try to sell him on the TPA as well

----- Original Message -----

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 02:33 PM
To: B; Carey, Michael; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Mayor of san jose

Great! We have time on your schedule Monday morning to debrief DC and discuss this. Thank you.

-----Original Message-----

From: B
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 5:33 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Carey, Michael; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Mayor of san jose

Very helpful. But going forward we need more tracking of where they stand on issues and basic worldview. I don't assume he's a TPA type from this, but I'd like to know more. So let's discuss when I'm back a real system for figuring out who our natural allies are and how to activate them. Thanks

----- Original Message -----

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 02:29 PM
To: Carey, Michael; B; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Mayor of san jose

More info here from Georgia Gann:

Immigration: Mayor Liccardo joined MBdB on the 5th Circuit amicus brief in support of the President's Executive Action on Immigration

Transportation: He is viewed as a leader in transportation in his region, currently serving on the regional transportation planning board (Metropolitan Transportation Commission) with Oakland Mayor Libby Schaaf. As a city councilmember, he served as the Chair of the Santa Clara Valley Transportation Authority where he advocated for two successful countywide transit ballot measures responsible for bringing BART to San José. He participated in the April 9th Stand Up for Transportation Day, leading a large regional event at San Jose University, and signed on as an in-district supporter to the May 13th Mayors Transportation Advocacy Day.

Affordable housing and other:

From 2007-2014, he represented San José's Third District on the San José City Council, one of the most diverse communities in the city, where he focused on improving public safety, revitalizing the Downtown, expanding affordable housing, and making San José an environmental leader.

Prior to winning election to City Council, Sam served in the Santa Clara County District Attorney's Office as a prosecutor of sexual assault and child exploitation crimes and as a federal prosecutor. His work in the community includes teaching political science at San José State University, co-founding a program ("1,000 Hearts for 1,000 Minds") to expand tutoring for low-income elementary school students, supporting the launch of the innovative college preparatory school (Cristo Rey San José) to launch low-income students to a college-going path and serving on the boards of several affordable housing organizations.

Note: Mayor Liccardo went to Harvard from 1993-1996 where he earned a law degree and a master's in public policy.

-----Original Message-----

From: Carey, Michael
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 5:19 PM
To: B; Yazgi, Stephanie; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Mayor of san jose

BACKGROUND

Sam Liccardo (Democrat) was elected the 65th mayor of San José on Nov. 4, 2014. From 2007-2014, he represented San José's third district on the San José city council, one of the most diverse communities in the city, where he focused on improving public safety, revitalizing the downtown, expanding affordable housing, and making San José an environmental leader.

Prior to winning election to city council, Sam served in the Santa Clara county district attorney's office as a prosecutor of sexual assault and child exploitation crimes and as a federal prosecutor.

His work in the community includes teaching political science at San José state University, co-founding a program ("1,000 hearts for 1,000 minds") to expand tutoring for low-income elementary school students, supporting the launch of the innovative college preparatory school (Cristo Rey San José) to launch low-income students to a college-going path, serving on the boards of several affordable housing organizations, and advocating for two successful countywide transit ballot measures responsible for bringing BART to San José.

Sam attended Georgetown University and graduate magna cum laude in 1991. Two years later, he enrolled at Harvard Law School and Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, and graduated with a law degree and a master's degree in public policy in 1996, when he returned to the bay area.

RECENT NEWS

LICCARDO ANNOUNCES INITIATIVES TO INCREASE POLICE ACCOUNTABILITY AND INCREASE PUBLIC TRUST³In response to concerns arising from San Jose Police Department data suggesting to racially disparate detention and search rates, San Jose Mayor Sam Liccardo has announced his intention to push forward with several initiatives to assure additional accountability and maintain public trust in the Department's actions. ³We have the nation's most professional, highly-trained police officers,² Liccardo noted, ³but we can do better, and when it comes to issues of race and policing, we must vigilantly seek every opportunity to do so.² Specifically, Liccardo advocates a four-point plan to address concerns about bias and policing. ³First,² he proposes, ³I will identify the funding in my June Budget Message to purchase and fully deploy body-worn cameras on every patrol officer in this coming fiscal year.² Liccardo first publicly proposed use of body-worn cameras in 2012, and has urged the SJPD to accelerate its extensive study and repeated pilot efforts.²

MAYOR LICCARDO JOINS NATIONAL BIPARTISAN CAMPAIGN TO CALL ON CONGRESS TO PASS TRANSPORTATION BILL

³San José faces a $504 million backlog just to bring our local roads into a state of good repair. Moreover, the lack of a long-term federal funding bill jeopardizes San José's effort to complete the BART project, thereby discouraging private sector investment. With a lack of a commitment on the federal level, the local business investment and job creation is stifled in San José and nationwide. To be sure, a long-term, fully funded transportation bill must include robust investment for all modes of transportation.²

OAKLAND, SAN JOSE MAYORS, AWARDED GRANTS TO REDUCE POVERTY ³The Cities for Financial Empowerment Fund has awarded the Next Generation Municipal Empowerment Award to San Jose Mayor Sam Liccardo, Oakland Mayor Libby Schaaf and leaders of three other cities: Boston; New Haven, Connecticut; and Shreveport, Louisiana. Liccardo said the money would go toward the San Jose Works program, which is set to launch this summer. The $1 million program employs teenagers from ages 15 to 21 at local retailers and businesses.

The mayor said the city was working with private employers to give the teens jobs. Many companies also made financial donations to the program, which is expected to employ 800 teens this summer.²

On 5/15/15, 2:08 PM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>I need a briefing or profile asap. Seeing him in one hour. Especially >want to know how he sets up philosophically and on issues we focus on.
>Thanks

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Yazgi, Stephanie; Carey, Michael; Schwartz, Regina; [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Mayor of san jose
Date: Friday, May 15, 2015 7:06:58 PM

Right on

> On May 15, 2015, at 6:03 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>

> We have a new ally! Liccardo is very impressive and quite progressive. Will try to sell him on the TPA as well

>

>

> ----- Original Message -----

> From: Yazgi, Stephanie

> Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 02:33 PM

> To: B; Carey, Michael; Schwartz, Regina

> Subject: RE: Mayor of san jose

>

> Great! We have time on your schedule Monday morning to debrief DC and discuss this. Thank you.

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: B

> Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 5:33 PM

> To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Carey, Michael; Schwartz, Regina

> Subject: Re: Mayor of san jose

>

>

> Very helpful. But going forward we need more tracking of where they stand on issues and basic worldview. I don't assume he's a TPA type from this, but I'd like to know more. So let's discuss when I'm back a real system for figuring out who our natural allies are and how to activate them. Thanks

>

>

> ----- Original Message -----

> From: Yazgi, Stephanie

> Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 02:29 PM

> To: Carey, Michael; B; Schwartz, Regina

> Subject: RE: Mayor of san jose

>

> More info here from Georgia Gann:

>

> Immigration: Mayor Liccardo joined MBdB on the 5th Circuit amicus brief in support of the President's Executive Action on Immigration

>

> Transportation: He is viewed as a leader in transportation in his region, currently serving on the regional transportation planning board (Metropolitan Transportation Commission) with Oakland Mayor Libby Schaaf. As a city councilmember, he served as the Chair of the Santa Clara Valley Transportation Authority where he advocated for two successful countywide transit ballot measures responsible for bringing BART to San José. He participated in the April 9th Stand Up for Transportation Day, leading a large regional event at San Jose University, and signed on as an in-district supporter to the May 13th Mayors Transportation Advocacy Day.

>

> Affordable housing and other:

>

> From 2007-2014, he represented San José's Third District on the San José City Council, one of the most diverse communities in the city, where he focused on improving public safety, revitalizing the Downtown, expanding affordable housing, and making San José an environmental leader.

>

> Prior to winning election to City Council, Sam served in the Santa Clara County District Attorney's Office as a prosecutor of sexual assault and child exploitation crimes and as a federal prosecutor. His work in the community includes teaching political science at San José State University, co-founding a program ("1,000 Hearts for 1,000 Minds") to expand tutoring for low-income elementary school students, supporting the launch of the innovative college preparatory school (Cristo Rey San José) to launch low-income students to a college-going path and serving on the boards of several affordable housing organizations.

>

> Note: Mayor Liccardo went to Harvard from 1993-1996 where he earned a law degree and a master's in public policy.

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Carey, Michael

> Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 5:19 PM

> To: B; Yazgi, Stephanie; Schwartz, Regina

> Subject: Re: Mayor of san jose

>

> BACKGROUND

> Sam Liccardo (Democrat) was elected the 65th mayor of San José on Nov. 4, 2014. From 2007-2014, he represented San José's third district on the San José city council, one of the most diverse communities in the city, where he focused on improving public safety, revitalizing the downtown, expanding affordable housing, and making San José an environmental leader.

>

> Prior to winning election to city council, Sam served in the Santa Clara county district attorney's office as a prosecutor of sexual assault and child exploitation crimes and as a federal prosecutor.

>

> His

> work in the community includes teaching political science at San José state University, co-founding a program ("1,000 hearts for 1,000 minds") to expand tutoring for low-income elementary school students, supporting the launch of the innovative college preparatory school (Cristo Rey San José) to launch low-income students to a college-going path, serving on the boards of several affordable housing organizations, and advocating for two successful countywide transit ballot measures responsible for bringing BART to San José.

>

> Sam attended Georgetown University and > graduate magna cum laude in 1991. Two years later, he enrolled at Harvard Law School and Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, and graduated with a law degree and a master's degree in public policy in 1996, when he returned to the bay area.

>

>

> RECENT NEWS

>

> LICCARDO ANNOUNCES INITIATIVES TO INCREASE POLICE ACCOUNTABILITY AND INCREASE PUBLIC TRUST ³In response to concerns arising from San Jose Police Department data suggesting to racially disparate detention and search rates, San Jose Mayor Sam Liccardo has announced his intention to push forward with several initiatives to assure additional accountability and maintain public trust in the Department's actions. ³We have the nation's most professional, highly-trained police officers,² Liccardo noted, ³but we can do better, and when it comes to issues of race and policing, we must vigilantly seek every opportunity to do so.² Specifically, Liccardo advocates a four-point plan to address concerns about bias and policing. ³First,² he proposes, ³I will identify the funding in my June Budget Message to purchase and fully deploy body-worn cameras on every patrol officer in this coming fiscal year.² Liccardo first publicly proposed use of body-worn cameras in 2012, and has urged the SJPD to accelerate its extensive study and repeated pilot efforts.²

>

> MAYOR LICCARDO JOINS NATIONAL BIPARTISAN CAMPAIGN TO CALL ON CONGRESS TO PASS TRANSPORTATION BILL

>

> ³San José faces a $504 million backlog just to bring our local roads into a state of good repair. Moreover, the lack of a long-term federal funding bill jeopardizes San José's effort to complete the BART project, thereby discouraging private sector investment. With a lack of a commitment on the federal level, the local business investment and job creation is stifled in San José and nationwide. To be sure, a long-term, fully funded transportation bill must include robust investment for all modes of transportation.²

>

> OAKLAND, SAN JOSE MAYORS, AWARDED GRANTS TO REDUCE POVERTY ³The Cities for Financial Empowerment Fund has awarded the Next Generation Municipal Empowerment Award to San Jose Mayor Sam Liccardo, Oakland Mayor Libby Schaaf and leaders of three other cities: Boston; New Haven, Connecticut; and Shreveport, Louisiana. Liccardo said the money would go toward the San Jose Works program, which is set to launch this summer. The $1 million program employs teenagers from ages 15 to 21 at local retailers and businesses.

>

> The mayor said the > city was working with private employers to give the teens jobs. Many companies also made financial donations to the program, which is expected to employ > 800

> teens this summer.²

>

>

>

>

>

>> On 5/15/15, 2:08 PM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>

>>

>> I need a briefing or profile asap. Seeing him in one hour. Especially >> want to know how he sets up philosophically and on issues we focus on.

>> Thanks

>

From: Anthony Shorris
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Nice Point
Date: Saturday, May 16, 2015 11:57:54 AM

The top 25 hedge fund managers earn more than all kindergarten teachers in U.S. combined - The Washington Post

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 11:31:14 AM

Sorry I didn't call earlier... I know you're in a meeting now, but free when you are

From: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Sunday, May 17, 2015 at 10:17 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

Call me in the AM to discuss. I think the preamble will do the trick

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Sunday, May 17, 2015 10:00 PM
To: Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Cc: B
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

Answer - our agenda directly tackles racial injustice - even if we don't say the words.

Or we can just add words to preamble, as Mayor suggested we do for website.

On May 17, 2015, at 9:33 PM, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]> wrote:

This is the sample language:

- Eliminate racism
- Supporting racial and economic justice
- Supporting racial justice

And these are the stats:

- More than one in four (27.2 percent) African Americans live in poverty, that's twice the rate of white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- Nearly one in four (23.5 percent) Latinos live in poverty, that's more than two and half times the rate of white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- The poverty rate for the AAPI community is nearly a full point higher than the rate for white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- The unemployment rates in communities of color are disproportionately higher than the rate for white Americans. The African American unemployment rate is more than twice the rate of white Americans. (Bureau of Labor Statistics)

- Median household income for African Americans is nearly $24,000 less than income for white households. (JEC report)
- White median net wealth is 13 times the median net wealth of African American households. (JEC report)
- For every dollar in wealth owned by a white household, an African American household, on average, has only 6 cents of wealth (Center for Global Policy Solutions)

On Sun, May 17, 2015 at 9:28 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Calling barbara now. Pls send now the specific "sample language and stats" she sent

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 05:49 PM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Barbara Lee

We emailed all of our current signers the updated language on SS, mass incarceration, and debt free college today, and almost everyone was totally fine with it.

Barbara Lee, however, is being adamant about us including language addressing racial equity in our next draft, and sent over sample language and stats to me a little while ago. She thinks its a mistake if our next rollout of this doesn't include this language, that it was a mistake that the original version didn't include it, and thinks she can get backing from other African Americans saying this is necessary.

I explained that this is something we will be talking about every time we discuss the progressive agenda, and this document is going to continue to grow, and that could be added later on, but she was not okay with that.

We thought you might need to give her a call before she starts getting traction on this. Her cell is ██████████.

Thanks,
Hayley

--
Hayley Prim
c: ██████████

--
Hayley Prim
c: ██████████

From: John Del Cecato
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; Jon Fromowitz
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: Immigration project
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 12:38:47 PM

The 2012-2014 thing is an interesting play... Obviously turnout is always lower overall in midterms - BUT, you could make the case that GOP turnout was strong & if Dems didn't have a presidential race to excite the base, we could have substituted that with some bold progressive policies/positions

From: <Gunaratna>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 at 12:24 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Immigration project

I looked into this shortly before his Meet the Press appearance – below are a couple of talking points. It seems that FL-GOV and NC-SEN are both solid examples:

Talking Points - Low Democratic Turnout in 2014:

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]--> In 2014, overall voter turnout was the worst it's been since World War II.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]--> Nationally, the share of the vote of core Democratic constituencies – including African Americans, Hispanics, unmarried women, and young voters – dropped from 2012 to 2014. Low turnout among our base was a key factor in our losses. Many Democrats stayed at home and didn't bother to vote.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]--> In North Carolina in 2014, Democrats did not turn out to vote at the same levels as 2012. If we had a higher turnout among base Democrats in North Carolina in 2014, we would have held onto our Senate seat instead of narrowly losing. President Obama received more than 800,000 votes in 2012 than the Democratic Senate candidate did in 2014.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]--> In Florida, we narrowly lost the Governor's race because we failed to nominate a true progressive as our candidate. Well over a million Florida Democrats who voted in 2012 decided to stay at home in 2014.

Also...how about Udall in Colorado? He numbers among Latinos weren't close to what Bennet got in 2010 (80%+, I believe).

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 12:14 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; Jon Fromowitz
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Immigration project

Hey Mahen/Fromo.

MBDB, Phil, and I were doing NYT Ed Board prep, and came to the question of whether bold progressive politics would have created a different dynamic in 2014.

Phil had the idea that if POTUS had introduced immigration reform before the '14 elections, turnout among Latinos would have increased - and potentially won states like Florida (Gov race was lost by one point).

Could you do a little research & see if there are any other states (whether Senate or Gov races) that might have benefitted from greater turnout of core Dem constituencies?

Here's one place that might make sense to start looking (although one note - turnout was slightly higher in FL in 2014 than in 2010 - although might have been even higher if immigration had been on the table).

<http://www.pbs.org/newshour/updates/2014-midterm-election-turnout-lowest-in-70-years/>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; "John Del Cecato"
Subject: FW: Inaugural Address of Mayor Rahm Emanuel - May 18, 2015
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 12:40:40 PM
Attachments: Inaugural Address of Mayor Rahm Emanuel.pdf

From: Mayor's Press Office [mailto:Mayor's.PressOffice@cityofchicago.org]
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 12:41 PM
Subject: Inaugural Address of Mayor Rahm Emanuel - May 18, 2015

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
CITY OF CHICAGO

INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Mayor Rahm Emanuel

May 18, 2015
Chicago Theater

As prepared for delivery

Honored guests, Clerk Mendoza, Treasurer Summers, Members of the new City Council, neighbors and friends.

I want to thank the residents of the City of Chicago for the opportunity to serve our city for another four years. More importantly, I want to take this opportunity to thank Amy, my first love and our city's First Lady as well as our three children, Zachariah, Ilana, and Leah for their love, their support, and their patience.

I want to thank my parents for giving me a good education and the values that have guided me throughout my life.

I also want to thank President Clinton for being here. It was a privilege to work for him but also to have learned so much from him. I am honored to call him both a friend and a mentor as well.

I want to thank Mayor Daley – who has served Chicago with passion and dedication throughout his time in public life.

I want to also congratulate the members of the new City Council. We have a lot of important work to do together.

Four years ago, I was privileged and humbled to take the oath of office as the 55th Mayor of the City of Chicago.

In my Inaugural Address, I told the people of Chicago that it was time to take on the challenges that threatened our future: from strong schools to safe streets to stable finances, to the urgent need to create more jobs and economic growth.

While we have made progress in each of these areas, we have more work to do.

Each of these issues will receive plenty of attention on a daily basis over the next four years. That we can be assured of.

They will be the subject of major stories, press conferences, and commentary. And I will continue to spell out specific ideas on how to address them, just as I have done over the past four years.

This includes continuing to address our pressing pension and fiscal challenges. While we address these challenges from the past head-on, I will not lose sight nor the will to continue to build a stronger future.

Building that stronger future for Chicago requires us to focus on a difficult subject that is too often ignored in our civic conversation. It is ignored precisely because it is so hard to talk about.

So today, as we inaugurate the stewards of our city for the next four years, I want to use this moment to shine a spotlight on preventing another lost generation of our city's youth.

We all know who they are, although it is easier and sometimes more convenient to ignore them.

Many are born into poverty. Many come from broken homes. And many have been on their own from early on.

As a result, many of them drop out of school and are jobless. I have met these young men and women throughout the city. Many of them lack the spark of hope in their eyes that we would never accept in our own children.

But I have also met and talked to young men and women who are changing the direction of their lives with help from mentoring programs like One Summer Chicago, After School Matters, and Becoming a Man – known as BAM.

I first encountered the youth participating in BAM during a visit to Harper High School in February of 2013. I participated in the BAM circle. Since then, I have become a believer in BAM's work because I have seen its lasting impact.

I told President Obama about it. Nine days later, when the President was visiting Chicago, I joined him at Hyde Park Academy where he sat in his own BAM circle.

I have met participants in a similar program for young women called Working on Womanhood – or WOW – at Bowen High School.

BAM and WOW work with young men and women on basic values and behaviors that most of us take for granted – things we learned from our families, from our teachers, from our coaches, and from our mentors.

BAM has had remarkable success. Participating youth are far less likely to enter or re-enter the criminal justice system. And they stand a far better chance of staying in school and reaching graduation day.

But it touches only a small fraction of the young men looking for role models and families in their lives.

The faces of these lost and unconnected young men are often invisible – until we see them in a mug shot as the victim or perpetrator of a senseless crime.

Their existence is avoided rather than confronted. They live in the shadows of our cities – and in the recesses of our minds. But we must make them ever-present in our conversation.

Too many of them become the victims of their circumstances. They lack connection to the values and experiences that most of us treasure: a parent's affection, a teacher's praise, a coach's encouragement, and an employer's appreciation.

They have to make their own way in life, and their options are limited.

But what we know is that their circumstances do not have to define them. In each of them is the spark of the Divine.

Because of their circumstances, we often fail to recognize their humanity and their potential. And worse, they often fail to recognize it in themselves.

Therefore the question for all of us is how to provide these young men and women with a sense of godliness, a sense of purpose, and a sense of their potential.

Some argue that the answer is more money for more government programs. Others argue that the answer is better values through more parental involvement and spiritual guidance.

It is time we stop talking past each other and join together for solutions. The young people that we are losing cannot wait for an endless political debate to be resolved.

As someone who has dedicated much of his life to public service and believes in government as an affirmative force, I readily admit that government is no substitute for involved parents or other role models. Government is not set up to provide a moral compass to our lives.

Nonetheless, many of us have supported these programs over the years because we have seen their impact.

From Head Start to quality early childhood education. From neo-natal care to nutritional support. From the children's health insurance program to Obamacare. From strong schools to strong after-school and summer jobs programs.

While they are not a replacement for involved parents, at best, they provide working parents with the confidence of knowing that their children are safe and supervised by responsible adults who care about them.

The adolescents I am addressing are often untouched by government programs. Their school is the street and their teachers are the gangs.

When young men and women join gangs in search of self-worth, we as a city must and can do better. When young men and women turn to lives of crime for hope, we as a city must and can do better. When prison is the place we send young boys to become men, we as a city must and can do better.

And when too many of our neighborhoods see a sign on the American Dream that says "Do Not Enter", we as a city must and can do better. We cannot afford to deny another generation of adolescents the values, expectations, and opportunities that the rest of society and the rest of our city share as a common foundation.

We see broken families and broken communities, broken politics and broken spirits across the land – and too often, we turn the other way. These problems did not originate in Chicago, but because of our unique history of civic engagement, Chicago is uniquely positioned to point the way to the solution.

But the answer will not be found alone in the programs I have mentioned. Above all, these young lives cry out for hope, purpose, and faith.

These disconnected youth must believe that there is a place for them, too – in a family, a place of worship, a school, or on any porch or in any office in our city. They deserve the chance to prove that they are not defined by their circumstance or station. They may have been born in poverty, but poverty was not born in them.

They deserve to know that we can see their value and potential. And, even more important for their own success, they must learn to see it in themselves. They deserve a city that has great expectations for them – something beyond an endless cycle of poverty, violence and despair around them.

This is our challenge as a society – and as a city. No longer can we tolerate leaving so many young people behind.

I do not pretend to have all of the answers. The solution though starts in each of us.

Over the next four years, I will do everything in my power to spark hope in the eyes of every Chicagoan. We will keep increasing wages and attracting more jobs. We will continue working to make our streets safer, our schools stronger, and provide more opportunities for our families.

We will work harder than ever to restore trust where it is broken and opportunity where it is lost.

But today I challenge every citizen of this great city: You must do your part, too.

Be a role model for the young people in your life. Share the values that made you who you are with someone who wants to grow up to be like you. Give an adolescent who was born without a prayer his first prayer at getting ahead. Find a way to let young men, invisible for too long, see hope, belief, and expectation in your eyes.

I hope you will join me this Friday by participating in our citywide Night of Faith and Action to reclaim our streets for our families.

I am confident that we can do these things – even in a time of fiscal challenges.

We all need to do more for our young people who are economically and spiritually hungry.

And we must come to realize that this is not just a problem for certain communities. Anything that stunts the hopes and opportunities of thousands of young Chicagoans undermines our entire city's future.

The truth is that years of silence and inaction have walled off a portion of our city. It is time to stop turning our heads and turning the channel. It is time for each of us to start breaking down those walls.

We cannot abandon our most vulnerable children to the gang and the gun. They have the potential and the desire to be so much more.

So let me say a word to young people growing up in Chicago:

We owe you a better chance – and you owe it to yourself and your family to make the most of it. We will never give up on you, so do not give up on yourself.

Some may say that these children cannot be saved or it is their fate in life to fail.

I refuse to accept that we cannot help these children create a stronger future – and neither should you. Because I have seen successes along the way.

We can be inspired by the examples of these young men, themselves – young men like Marcus Norris.

When he was nine years old, Marcus was sitting in his house, watching TV. A random gunshot came through the window and knocked out four of his teeth.

For the next nine years, Marcus went through life too embarrassed to smile. He never told his teachers what had happened to him. When Marcus joined BAM, his mentor, Timothy Jackson, finally got Marcus to share his secret. Timothy took it upon himself to raise money for dental surgery for Marcus.

Already, Marcus was able to smile for his graduation photo. And he will be wearing a big smile at his upcoming graduation ceremony at Fulton High School. His dream is to enter a college culinary program and one day to become a chef.

Marcus – all of Chicago is smiling with you today.

Or we can take a page from the young men of Phillips Academy, a Chicago public high school with 600 students in Bronzeville.

Seven members of the football team were homeless. Yet, despite these odds, the Wildcats became the first team from CPS to make the state title game in 32 years.

Or we can look to the young men at Urban Prep Academy. Just the other day, I went to Urban Prep to celebrate their sixth straight year of having 100 percent four-year college acceptance for their students.

This year, they have six Gates Millennium Scholars, making them the school with the most African American male Gates Scholars in the country.

To all of those cynics who only show up when there is a basketball shot or a gunshot, either in triumph or in tragedy, the young men of Urban Prep prove you wrong. They prove why you should never bet against the children of the City of Chicago.

These and other stories are about unremarkable people doing remarkable things. They should persuade us that there is nothing wrong with Chicago that cannot be fixed by what is right with Chicago.

With a little show of love, a little attention and support, we can help our young people to make better choices in life.

So today, as stewards of our city's future, let us rededicate ourselves to that purpose. With Spring upon us, let this be our season of renewal.

A generation of children needs our city to stand up for them. For those children, and for our city, let us today answer that call.

Thank you. God bless you, and God bless Chicago.

This e-mail, and any attachments thereto, is intended only for use by the addressee(s) named herein and may contain legally privileged and/or confidential information. If you are not the intended recipient of this e-mail (or the person responsible for delivering this document to the intended recipient), you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, printing or copying of this e-mail, and any attachment thereto, is strictly prohibited. If you have received this e-mail in error, please respond to the individual sending the message, and permanently delete the original and any copy of any e-mail and printout thereof.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
CITY OF CHICAGO

INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Mayor Rahm Emanuel

May 18, 2015
Chicago Theater

As prepared for delivery

Honored guests, Clerk Mendoza, Treasurer Summers, Members of the new City Council, neighbors and friends.

I want to thank the residents of the City of Chicago for the opportunity to serve our city for another four years. More importantly, I want to take this opportunity to thank Amy, my first love and our city's First Lady as well as our three children, Zachariah, Ilana, and Leah for their love, their support, and their patience.

I want to thank my parents for giving me a good education and the values that have guided me throughout my life.

I also want to thank President Clinton for being here. It was a privilege to work for him but also to have learned so much from him. I am honored to call him both a friend and a mentor as well.

I want to thank Mayor Daley – who has served Chicago with passion and dedication throughout his time in public life.

I want to also congratulate the members of the new City Council. We have a lot of important work to do together.

Four years ago, I was privileged and humbled to take the oath of office as the 55th Mayor of the City of Chicago.

In my Inaugural Address, I told the people of Chicago that it was time to take on the challenges that threatened our future: from strong schools to safe streets to stable finances, to the urgent need to create more jobs and economic growth.

While we have made progress in each of these areas, we have more work to do.

Each of these issues will receive plenty of attention on a daily basis over the next four years. That we can be assured of.

They will be the subject of major stories, press conferences, and commentary. And I will continue to spell out specific ideas on how to address them, just as I have done over the past four years.

121 NORTH LASALLE STREET, ROOM 507, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS 60602

This includes continuing to address our pressing pension and fiscal challenges. While we address these challenges from the past head-on, I will not lose sight nor the will to continue to build a stronger future.

Building that stronger future for Chicago requires us to focus on a difficult subject that is too often ignored in our civic conversation. It is ignored precisely because it is so hard to talk about.

So today, as we inaugurate the stewards of our city for the next four years, I want to use this moment to shine a spotlight on preventing another lost generation of our city's youth.

We all know who they are, although it is easier and sometimes more convenient to ignore them.

Many are born into poverty. Many come from broken homes. And many have been on their own from early on.

As a result, many of them drop out of school and are jobless. I have met these young men and women throughout the city. Many of them lack the spark of hope in their eyes that we would never accept in our own children.

But I have also met and talked to young men and women who are changing the direction of their lives with help from mentoring programs like One Summer Chicago, After School Matters, and Becoming a Man – known as BAM.

I first encountered the youth participating in BAM during a visit to Harper High School in February of 2013. I participated in the BAM circle. Since then, I have become a believer in BAM's work because I have seen its lasting impact.

I told President Obama about it. Nine days later, when the President was visiting Chicago, I joined him at Hyde Park Academy where he sat in his own BAM circle.

I have met participants in a similar program for young women called Working on Womanhood – or WOW – at Bowen High School.

BAM and WOW work with young men and women on basic values and behaviors that most of us take for granted – things we learned from our families, from our teachers, from our coaches, and from our mentors.

BAM has had remarkable success. Participating youth are far less likely to enter or re-enter the criminal justice system. And they stand a far better chance of staying in school and reaching graduation day.

But it touches only a small fraction of the young men looking for role models and families in their lives.

The faces of these lost and unconnected young men are often invisible – until we see them in a mug shot as the victim or perpetrator of a senseless crime.

Their existence is avoided rather than confronted. They live in the shadows of our cities – and in the recesses of our minds. But we must make them ever-present in our conversation.

Too many of them become the victims of their circumstances. They lack connection to the values and experiences that most of us treasure: a parent's affection, a teacher's praise, a coach's encouragement, and an employer's appreciation.

They have to make their own way in life, and their options are limited.

But what we know is that their circumstances do not have to define them. In each of them is the spark of the Divine.

Because of their circumstances, we often fail to recognize their humanity and their potential. And worse, they often fail to recognize it in themselves.

Therefore the question for all of us is how to provide these young men and women with a sense of godliness, a sense of purpose, and a sense of their potential.

Some argue that the answer is more money for more government programs. Others argue that the answer is better values through more parental involvement and spiritual guidance.

It is time we stop talking past each other and join together for solutions. The young people that we are losing cannot wait for an endless political debate to be resolved.

As someone who has dedicated much of his life to public service and believes in government as an affirmative force, I readily admit that government is no substitute for involved parents or other role models. Government is not set up to provide a moral compass to our lives.

Nonetheless, many of us have supported these programs over the years because we have seen their impact.

From Head Start to quality early childhood education. From neo-natal care to nutritional support. From the children's health insurance program to Obamacare. From strong schools to strong after-school and summer jobs programs.

While they are not a replacement for involved parents, at best, they provide working parents with the confidence of knowing that their children are safe and supervised by responsible adults who care about them.

The adolescents I am addressing are often untouched by government programs. Their school is the street and their teachers are the gangs.

When young men and women join gangs in search of self-worth, we as a city must and can do better. When young men and women turn to lives of crime for hope, we as a city must and can do better. When prison is the place we send young boys to become men, we as a city must and can do better.

And when too many of our neighborhoods see a sign on the American Dream that says “Do Not Enter”, we as a city must and can do better. We cannot afford to deny another generation of adolescents the values, expectations, and opportunities that the rest of society and the rest of our city share as a common foundation.

We see broken families and broken communities, broken politics and broken spirits across the land – and too often, we turn the other way. These problems did not originate in Chicago, but because of our unique history of civic engagement, Chicago is uniquely positioned to point the way to the solution.

But the answer will not be found alone in the programs I have mentioned. Above all, these young lives cry out for hope, purpose, and faith.

These disconnected youth must believe that there is a place for them, too – in a family, a place of worship, a school, or on any porch or in any office in our city. They deserve the chance to prove that they are not defined by their circumstance or station. They may have been born in poverty, but poverty was not born in them.

They deserve to know that we can see their value and potential. And, even more important for their own success, they must learn to see it in themselves. They deserve a city that has great expectations for them – something beyond an endless cycle of poverty, violence and despair around them.

This is our challenge as a society – and as a city. No longer can we tolerate leaving so many young people behind.

I do not pretend to have all of the answers. The solution though starts in each of us.

Over the next four years, I will do everything in my power to spark hope in the eyes of every Chicagoan. We will keep increasing wages and attracting more jobs. We will continue working to make our streets safer, our schools stronger, and provide more opportunities for our families.

We will work harder than ever to restore trust where it is broken and opportunity where it is lost.

But today I challenge every citizen of this great city: You must do your part, too.

Be a role model for the young people in your life. Share the values that made you who you are with someone who wants to grow up to be like you. Give an adolescent who was born without a prayer his first prayer at getting ahead. Find a way to let young men, invisible for too long, see hope, belief, and expectation in your eyes.

I hope you will join me this Friday by participating in our citywide Night of Faith and Action to reclaim our streets for our families.

I am confident that we can do these things – even in a time of fiscal challenges.

We all need to do more for our young people who are economically and spiritually hungry.

And we must come to realize that this is not just a problem for certain communities. Anything that stunts the hopes and opportunities of thousands of young Chicagoans undermines our entire city's future.

The truth is that years of silence and inaction have walled off a portion of our city. It is time to stop turning our heads and turning the channel. It is time for each of us to start breaking down those walls.

We cannot abandon our most vulnerable children to the gang and the gun. They have the potential and the desire to be so much more.

So let me say a word to young people growing up in Chicago:

We owe you a better chance – and you owe it to yourself and your family to make the most of it. We will never give up on you, so do not give up on yourself.

Some may say that these children cannot be saved or it is their fate in life to fail.

I refuse to accept that we cannot help these children create a stronger future – and neither should you. Because I have seen successes along the way.

We can be inspired by the examples of these young men, themselves – young men like Marcus Norris.

When he was nine years old, Marcus was sitting in his house, watching TV. A random gunshot came through the window and knocked out four of his teeth.

For the next nine years, Marcus went through life too embarrassed to smile. He never told his teachers what had happened to him. When Marcus joined BAM, his mentor, Timothy Jackson, finally got Marcus to share his secret. Timothy took it upon himself to raise money for dental surgery for Marcus.

Already, Marcus was able to smile for his graduation photo. And he will be wearing a big smile at his upcoming graduation ceremony at Fulton High School. His dream is to enter a college culinary program and one day to become a chef.

Marcus – all of Chicago is smiling with you today.

Or we can take a page from the young men of Phillips Academy, a Chicago public high school with 600 students in Bronzeville.

Seven members of the football team were homeless. Yet, despite these odds, the Wildcats became the first team from CPS to make the state title game in 32 years.

Or we can look to the young men at Urban Prep Academy. Just the other day, I went to Urban Prep to celebrate their sixth straight year of having 100 percent four-year college acceptance for their students.

This year, they have six Gates Millennium Scholars, making them the school with the most African American male Gates Scholars in the country.

To all of those cynics who only show up when there is a basketball shot or a gunshot, either in triumph or in tragedy, the young men of Urban Prep prove you wrong. They prove why you should never bet against the children of the City of Chicago.

These and other stories are about unremarkable people doing remarkable things. They should persuade us that there is nothing wrong with Chicago that cannot be fixed by what is right with Chicago.

With a little show of love, a little attention and support, we can help our young people to make better choices in life.

So today, as stewards of our city's future, let us rededicate ourselves to that purpose. With Spring upon us, let this be our season of renewal.

A generation of children needs our city to stand up for them. For those children, and for our city, let us today answer that call.

Thank you. God bless you, and God bless Chicago.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: FW: HUFFPO: Opinion: New Rules
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 1:11:36 PM

From: Clips
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 1:08 PM
Subject: HUFFPO: Opinion: New Rules

Opinion: New Rules

HUFFINGTON POST - Leo Gerard

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/leo-w-gerard/new-rules_b_7302396.html

Some of the biggest banks in the world are expected to plead guilty to felonies this week. Felonies! They are scandalous crimes, too: fraud and antitrust violations.

Finally, America will see members of the class that crashed the economy dressed in black and white suits that are hardly the Brooks Brothers pinstripes to which they've grown accustomed.

Oh, wait, no. The New York Times says these felons will just pay some fines and go about their business of playing roulette with the world economy. Of course they won't face prison like normal criminals. They're bankers! Members of the exclusive Too Big to Jail Club. They're protected. Just like millionaires and CEOs are. A CEO can, for example, be fired for failing to produce but still get $21 million in severance, then lose a well-financed race for U.S. Senate and still be considered a viable presidential candidate. That's because the rules are written for them. The economy currently is constructed to ensure their enrichment.

The felonious banks, Barclays, Citigroup, JPMorgan Chase and Royal Bank of Scotland will plead guilty to illegally making a bundle for themselves at the expense of travelers, businesses and others by manipulating the price of foreign currencies.

Even so, not one bank CEO will lose his million-dollar bonus, let alone his job. They'll laugh all the way to the, well, to the bank. Just like oil companies snicker as they grab government subsidies [welfare] even though they're among the most profitable corporations in the world. Just like hedge fund operators chuckle while luxuriating in their special, super-low tax rate.

Over the past 35 years, the rules have been written to facilitate trickle-up economics. The theory was that in a financial structure that guaranteed the rich received all income gains in the economy, millionaires and billionaires might let a couple of nickels slip out of their bulging pockets for workers to try to catch.

Unfortunately for workers, Brooks Brothers suits have really deep pockets. Almost nothing fell out of those pouches for workers. Their wages stagnated for decades while the rules facilitated the pinstriped boys getting richer and richer.

Last year, the pay gap between CEOs and typical workers widened to 373-to-1. That means for every $1 a worker earned, the CEO took $373. In just 7 minutes of slurping coffee or gazing out his penthouse office window, the typical CEO was handed more money than the average worker earned for 40 hours of labor.

Those numbers were very different before the dawn of trickle up. In 1965, the CEO-to-worker compensation ratio was 20-to-1. For every $1 a worker earned, the CEO got $20. And still, corporations made profits! And lots of people wanted to be CEOs! It was a time when the economic rules enabled workers to receive a larger share of the wealth that their labor helped create.

After trickle up, CEO compensation skyrocketed while worker pay languished. From 1978 to 2013, CEO compensation increased 937 percent, while the typical worker's pay rose 10.2 percent. That trend continued last year, when CEO pay jumped up 16 percent while worker wages inched up 2.9 percent, which is hardly at all considering the 2.1 percent inflation rate.

At a press conference in Washington, D.C., last week, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio explained this situation in simple terms: "The system is rigged to benefit those at the top and to leave everybody else behind."

De Blasio was surrounded by liberal lawmakers and leaders including former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean, Rev. Al Sharpton, U.S. Sen. Jeff Merkeley and me, all of whom spoke in favor of the Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality that the mayor presented. It is a 13-point plan to change the rules to ease the lives of workers and to increase opportunity for all Americans.

The same day, de Blasio spoke at the Roosevelt Institute, a nonprofit group devoted to restoring America's promise of opportunity for all. At that event, the institute released a report by its chief economist, the Nobel laureate Joseph Stiglitz. It's called Rewriting the Rules of the American Economy.

It begins with a damning statement: "The American economy no longer works for most Americans. We pride ourselves on being the land of opportunity and creating the first middle-class society, yet profound and largely overlooked changes have put the middle-class life increasingly out of reach for the majority of Americans. At the same time, we have enabled a small percentage of the population to take home the lion's share of economic gains."

"Until economic and social rules work for all Americans," it says, "they're not working."

The report examines the rules that have over the past several decades created the situation in which "the benefits of economic growth have disproportionately gone to the top 20 percent of the population while the share of national income going to the bottom 99 percent has fallen."

Stiglitz points out that the resulting income inequality, now at the highest level since the heyday of robber barons, is not an irrevocable destiny preordained by some goofy invisible hand of the market. It is, instead, a result of rules. Rules that can be changed.

The report recommends a comprehensive series of changes, and includes all of the points in The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality released by de Blasio.

Both seek to raise wages, support working families with policies like paid sick leave and universal child care and reverse some of the rules passed in homage to corporations and CEOs. That includes ending tax breaks for corporations that ship jobs overseas as well as the special break that hedge fund honchos get.

The promise of America is that anyone who works hard and plays by the rules can earn a middle-class life. That promise is betrayed when the system provides a tiny class of Americans with special treatment, including a get-out-of-jail-free card when they commit fraud to make untold millions.

De Blasio is right. The rules are rigged. Workers, families and communities – the vast majority – need new rules.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B: [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: HUFFPO: Opinion: New Rules
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 1:14:37 PM

Outstanding. They gave me a heads-up that they'd be doing this - just didn't know when it was going to pop (or the exact content)

From: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 at 1:09 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Fw: HUFFPO: Opinion: New Rules

Fyi

From: Clips
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 01:08 PM
Subject: HUFFPO: Opinion: New Rules

Opinion: New Rules

HUFFINGTON POST - Leo Gerard

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/leo-w-gerard/new-rules_b_7302396.html

Some of the biggest banks in the world are expected to plead guilty to felonies this week. Felonies! They are scandalous crimes, too: fraud and antitrust violations.

Finally, America will see members of the class that crashed the economy dressed in black and white suits that are hardly the Brooks Brothers pinstripes to which they've grown accustomed.

Oh, wait, no. The New York Times says these felons will just pay some fines and go about their business of playing roulette with the world economy. Of course they won't face prison like normal criminals. They're bankers! Members of the exclusive Too Big to Jail Club. They're protected. Just like millionaires and CEOs are. A CEO can, for example, be fired for failing to produce but still get $21 million in severance, then lose a well-financed race for U.S. Senate and still be considered a viable presidential candidate. That's because the rules are written for them. The economy currently is constructed to ensure their enrichment.

The felonious banks, Barclays, Citigroup, JPMorgan Chase and Royal Bank of Scotland will plead guilty to illegally making a bundle for themselves at the expense of travelers, businesses and others by manipulating the price of foreign currencies.

Even so, not one bank CEO will lose his million-dollar bonus, let alone his job. They'll laugh all the way to the, well, to the bank. Just like oil companies snicker as they grab government subsidies [welfare] even though they're among the most profitable corporations in the world. Just like hedge fund operators chuckle while luxuriating in their special, super-low tax rate.

Over the past 35 years, the rules have been written to facilitate trickle-up economics. The theory was that in a financial structure that guaranteed the rich received all income gains in the economy, millionaires and billionaires might let a couple of nickels slip out of their bulging pockets for workers to try to catch.

Unfortunately for workers, Brooks Brothers suits have really deep pockets. Almost nothing fell out of those pouches for workers. Their wages stagnated for decades while the rules facilitated the pinstriped boys getting richer and richer.

Last year, the pay gap between CEOs and typical workers widened to 373-to-1. That means for every $1 a worker earned, the CEO took $373. In just 7 minutes of slurping coffee or gazing out his penthouse office window, the typical CEO was handed more money than the average worker earned for 40 hours of labor.

Those numbers were very different before the dawn of trickle up. In 1965, the CEO-to-worker compensation ratio was 20-to-1. For every $1 a worker earned, the CEO got $20. And still, corporations made profits! And lots of people wanted to be CEOs! It was a time when the economic rules enabled workers to receive a larger share of the wealth that their labor helped create.

After trickle up, CEO compensation skyrocketed while worker pay languished. From 1978 to 2013, CEO compensation increased 937 percent, while the typical worker's pay rose 10.2 percent. That trend continued last year, when CEO pay jumped up 16 percent while worker wages inched up 2.9 percent, which is hardly at all considering the 2.1 percent inflation rate.

At a press conference in Washington, D.C., last week, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio explained this situation in simple terms: "The system is rigged to benefit those at the top and to leave everybody else behind."

De Blasio was surrounded by liberal lawmakers and leaders including former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean, Rev. Al Sharpton, U.S. Sen. Jeff Merkeley and me, all of whom spoke in favor of the Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality that the mayor presented. It is a 13-point plan to change the rules to ease the lives of workers and to increase opportunity for all Americans.

The same day, de Blasio spoke at the Roosevelt Institute, a nonprofit group devoted to restoring America's promise of opportunity for all. At that event, the institute released a report by its chief economist, the Nobel laureate Joseph Stiglitz. It's called Rewriting the Rules of the American Economy.

It begins with a damning statement: "The American economy no longer works for most Americans. We pride ourselves on being the land of opportunity and creating the first middle-class society, yet profound and largely overlooked changes have put the middle-class life increasingly out of reach for the majority of Americans. At the same time, we have enabled a small percentage of the population to take home the lion's share of economic gains."

"Until economic and social rules work for all Americans," it says, "they're not working."

The report examines the rules that have over the past several decades created the situation in which “the benefits of economic growth have disproportionately gone to the top 20 percent of the population while the share of national income going to the bottom 99 percent has fallen.”

Stiglitz points out that the resulting income inequality, now at the highest level since the heyday of robber barons, is not an irrevocable destiny preordained by some goofy invisible hand of the market. It is, instead, a result of rules. Rules that can be changed.

The report recommends a comprehensive series of changes, and includes all of the points in The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality released by de Blasio.

Both seek to raise wages, support working families with policies like paid sick leave and universal child care and reverse some of the rules passed in homage to corporations and CEOs. That includes ending tax breaks for corporations that ship jobs overseas as well as the special break that hedge fund honchos get.

The promise of America is that anyone who works hard and plays by the rules can earn a middle-class life. That promise is betrayed when the system provides a tiny class of Americans with special treatment, including a get-out-of-jail-free card when they commit fraud to make untold millions.

De Blasio is right. The rules are rigged. Workers, families and communities – the vast majority – need new rules.

From: Leopold, Elana
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 3:34:19 PM

Whoops Ya

Sent from my iPhone

On May 18, 2015, at 3:33 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Did you mean to add MPC?

From: <Leopold>, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 at 2:49 PM
To: Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: Barbara Lee

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Mayor
<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->+ MPC

From: Hayley Prim [[mailto:\[REDACTED\]](mailto:[REDACTED])]
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 1:35 PM
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

I just heard back from Toni's folks. Today isn't good, but she said tomorrow late morning or mid-afternoon are good times to try.

On Sun, May 17, 2015 at 9:42 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I had a good talk with Barbara. I understand her concern and think there's a way to accommodate it.

John, pls discuss in the AM.

Also, she would like me to visit her district and do an event with her at some point -- perhaps in June if I go to US conf of mayors in SF.

Finally, Hayley, make me call Toni Morrison tmrw to thank. Pls give me and elana guidance as to what time is good. Thanks

From: Hayley Prim [[mailto:\[REDACTED\]](mailto:[REDACTED])]
Sent: Sunday, May 17, 2015 09:33 PM

To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

This is the sample language:

- Eliminate racism
- Supporting racial and economic justice
- Supporting racial justice

And these are the stats:

- More than one in four (27.2 percent) African Americans live in poverty, that's twice the rate of white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- Nearly one in four (23.5 percent) Latinos live in poverty, that's more than two and half times the rate of white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- The poverty rate for the AAPI community is nearly a full point higher than the rate for white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- The unemployment rates in communities of color are disproportionately higher than the rate for white Americans. The African American unemployment rate is more than twice the rate of white Americans. (Bureau of Labor Statistics)
- Median household income for African Americans is nearly $24,000 less than income for white households. (JEC report)
- White median net wealth is 13 times the median net wealth of African American households. (JEC report)
- For every dollar in wealth owned by a white household, an African American household, on average, has only 6 cents of wealth (Center for Global Policy Solutions)

On Sun, May 17, 2015 at 9:28 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Calling barbara now. Pls send now the specific "sample language and stats" she sent

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 05:49 PM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Barbara Lee

We emailed all of our current signers the updated language on SS, mass incarceration, and debt free college today, and almost everyone was totally fine with it.

Barbara Lee, however, is being adamant about us including language addressing racial equity in our next draft, and sent over sample language and stats to me a little while ago. She thinks its a mistake if our next rollout of this doesn't include this language, that it was a mistake that the original version didn't include it, and thinks she can get backing from other African Americans saying this is necessary.

I explained that this is something we will be talking about every time we discuss the progressive agenda, and this document is going to continue to grow, and that could be added later on, but she was not okay with that.

We thought you might need to give her a call before she starts getting traction on this. Her cell is [REDACTED]

Thanks,
Hayley

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: CNN: Bernie Sanders casts Hillary Clinton as newcomer to income fight
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 4:06:40 PM
Attachments: image001.png

Bernie Sanders casts Hillary Clinton as newcomer to income fight

By Eric Bradner, CNN

Updated 9:05 AM ET, Mon May 18, 2015

Washington (CNN) -Democratic presidential contender Bernie Sanders is portraying his rival Hillary Clinton a newcomer to the left's fight against income inequality.

"It's one thing to talk about it. It's one thing to act on it," the Vermont senator said during an interview with CNN's Brianna Keilar aired Sunday on "State of the Union."

"You are looking at the most progressive member of the United States Senate," he said, touting his relationship as a "good friend" of firebrand Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren.

Sanders said he's led efforts to challenge Wall Street, push for universal health care, tackle climate change and combat "disastrous trade agreements."

He also said Clinton should take a position on the Trans-Pacific Partnership, a massive 12-country deal that President Barack Obama is pushing to the dismay of liberals.

"You can't be on the fence of this one," he said. "You're either for it or you're against it. No fence-sitting on this one."

Sanders said he personally likes Clinton. He said he's willing to challenger her on policy issues -- but that he hopes media will cover those differences without Sanders having to launch "reckless attacks."

"Are you in the media prepared to allow us to engage in that serious debate?" he said. "Or do I have to get media attention by simply making reckless attacks on Hillary Clinton or anybody else? I don't believe in that. I believe in serious debates on serious issues."

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Leopold, Elana
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; "HPrim@cityhall.nyc.gov"
Subject: Mayor on w keith ellison
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 4:35:57 PM

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re:
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 4:36:42 PM

I think Dom has the latest

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 at 4:12 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: <no subject>

Can you send me latest Q&A you have on TPA, TPP, etc? Just for the cbs briefing memo

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea
Subject: Income Inequality on the trail
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 4:39:36 PM

Gabriel DeBenedetti @gdebenedetti 14m14 minutes ago

Citing Warren Buffett, Clinton says, "There's something wrong when the avg CEO makes 300 times more than the typical American worker."

Alex Seitz-Wald @aseitzwald 16m16 minutes ago

Clinton cites stat: Top 25 hedge fund managers made more than all the kindergarten teachers in America combined.

—
Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: John Del Cecato
To: B: [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Keith Ellison
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 5:50:57 PM

That is fantastic !

On 5/18/15, 4:59 PM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>Very positive review of how Tues went. He and Raul want to help sustain >the energy, and want to know how. Very impressed by the breadth and >weight of the coalition we brought together. Wants to work together on >voter registration and mobilization. His effort is called "Voter First."
>He's sending me info on it. And he wants me to address a Progressive >Caucus mtg, either live in DC or via Skype. He also wants to get the >Caucus to vote formally to approve the TPA. I assume the new-and-improved >version will pass with flying colors

>

>

>

>

>

>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Hayley Prim
Subject: Revised language
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015 10:26:29 PM
Attachments: RevisedTPA.docx

Let us know your thoughts, and we will send to Cong. Lee's office.

Changes are highlighted in yellow. Nixed "help working parents" & inserted new line on racial/economic justice into preamble.

About Our Agenda

Income inequality is the crisis of our time, and we need bold, progressive solutions to address it. By harnessing the strength of a national progressive coalition, and using that to achieve success in the three pillars of The Progressive Agenda, we will make sure that the voice of every American is heard – not just those at the very top.

To do this, we must lift the floor for those who are struggling, fight for racial and economic justice, and champion a tax system that rewards work instead of just wealth.

The Progressive Agenda is a set of proposals that build upon the work of dozens of economists, lawmakers and progressive activists, with the aim of addressing income inequality right now.

Lift the Floor for Working People

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.

- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails -- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.

Support Working Families

- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit, and protect and expand Social Security.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.

Tax Fairness

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the "Buffett Rule" so millionaires pay their fair share.
- Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of "performance pay" write-offs.

###

About Our Agenda

Income inequality is the crisis of our time, and we need bold, progressive solutions to address it. By harnessing the strength of a national progressive coalition, and using that to achieve success in the three pillars of The Progressive Agenda, we will make sure that the voice of every American is heard – not just those at the very top.

To do this, we must lift the floor for working people, help working parents, fight for racial and economic justice, and champion a tax system that rewards work instead of just wealth.

The Progressive Agenda is a set of proposals that build upon the work of dozens of economists, lawmakers and progressive activists, with the aim of addressing income inequality right now.

Lift the Floor for Working People

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails -- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.

Support Working Families

- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit, and protect and expand Social Security.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.

Tax Fairness

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the “Buffett Rule” so millionaires pay their fair share.
- Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of “performance pay” write-offs.

###

From: Hayley Prim
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Leopold, Elana; jfdc@akpdmedia.com
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 8:34:54 AM

This is Toni's home phone number: [REDACTED]

On Monday, May 18, 2015, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

3 pm?

Michael Paul Carey

Director of Scheduling and Advance

City Hall

New York, New York 10007

212.341.5396

From: Leopold, Elana
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 3:35 PM
To: Hayley Prim
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

really + MPC

Sent from my iPhone

On May 18, 2015, at 2:49 PM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

- Mayor
- + MPC

From: Hayley Prim [<mailto:> [REDACTED]]
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 1:35 PM
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

I just heard back from Toni's folks. Today isn't good, but she said tomorrow late morning or mid-afternoon are good times to try.

On Sun, May 17, 2015 at 9:42 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I had a good talk with Barbara. I understand her concern and think there's a way to accommodate it.

John, pls discuss in the AM.

Also, she would like me to visit her district and do an event with her at some point -- perhaps in June if I go to US conf of mayors in SF.

Finally, Hayley, make me call Toni Morrison tmrw to thank. Pls give me and elana guidance as to what time is good. Thanks

From: Hayley Prim [<mailto:> [REDACTED]]
Sent: Sunday, May 17, 2015 09:33 PM
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Barbara Lee

This is the sample language:

- Eliminate racism
- Supporting racial and economic justice
- Supporting racial justice

And these are the stats:

- More than one in four (27.2 percent) African Americans live in poverty, that's twice the rate of white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- Nearly one in four (23.5 percent) Latinos live in poverty, that's more than two and half times the rate of white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- The poverty rate for the AAPI community is nearly a full point higher than the rate for white Americans. (Census Bureau)
- The unemployment rates in communities of color are disproportionately higher than the rate for white Americans. The African American unemployment rate is more than twice the rate of white Americans. (Bureau of Labor Statistics)
- Median household income for African Americans is nearly $24,000 less than income for white households. (JEC report)
- White median net wealth is 13 times the median net wealth of African American households. (JEC report)
- For every dollar in wealth owned by a white household, an African American household, on average, has only 6 cents of wealth (Center for Global Policy Solutions)

On Sun, May 17, 2015 at 9:28 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Calling barbara now. Pls send now the specific "sample language and stats" she sent

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Friday, May 15, 2015 05:49 PM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Barbara Lee

We emailed all of our current signers the updated language on SS, mass incarceration, and debt free college today, and almost everyone was totally fine with it.

Barbara Lee, however, is being adamant about us including language addressing racial equity in our next draft, and sent over sample language and stats to me a little while ago. She thinks its a mistake if our next rollout of this doesn't include this language, that it was a mistake that the original version didn't include it, and thinks she can get backing from other African Americans saying this is necessary.

I explained that this is something we will be talking about every time we discuss the progressive agenda, and this document is going to continue to grow, and that could be added later on, but she was not okay with that.

We thought you might need to give her a call before she starts getting traction on this. Her cell is [REDACTED]

Thanks,

Hayley

--

Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--

Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--

Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--

Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

From: B
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; "Jonathan@berlinrosen.com"
Subject: Fw: NYT: Opinion: What Bill de Blasio Can Learn From John Lindsay
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 9:15:38 AM

An interesting analysis

From: Clips
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 12:30 PM
Subject: NYT: Opinion: What Bill de Blasio Can Learn From John Lindsay

Opinion: What Bill de Blasio Can Learn From John Lindsay

NY TIMES - John Guida - 11:24 am

http://takingnote.blogs.nytimes.com/2015/05/18/what-bill-de-blasio-can-learn-from-john-lindsay/?_r=1

Fifty years ago this month, John V. Lindsay announced his candidacy for mayor with an ambitious vision to rejuvenate the city. One campaign poster read, “He is fresh, and everyone else is tired.”

For Joseph P. Viteritti, a professor of public policy at Hunter College and the editor of “Summer in the City: John Lindsay, New York and the American Dream,” Mr. Lindsay calls to mind today’s reform-minded mayor, Bill de Blasio. The two faced similar challenges, among them racial tensions, school flareups and conflicts with the police. And as Mr. de Blasio sets out a new “Contract With America” for the left, he may have something to learn from Mr. Lindsay’s tenure and his outspokenness on national issues.

Mr. Viteritti spoke to The Times about the two leaders’ ambitious agendas, taking on unpopular causes and why New York mayors often seek national attention.

What are some of the similarities and differences between the mayors’ agendas as they came into office?

Both came to City Hall with progressive social agendas, but each was a product of his own time. John Lindsay, who served at the height of the civil rights movement, defined his goals in terms of racial justice. Bill de Blasio, who came to office at a time of growing income inequality, defines his agenda more in terms of economic justice. For Lindsay this meant providing African-Americans and Hispanics (mostly Puerto Ricans at the time) with access to jobs and power. For de Blasio, it means fighting for equal pay and benefits, affordable housing, shelters for homeless people and a more redistributive tax policy. For his first major appointment Lindsay chose a black man, Robert Lowery, to lead the Fire Department, the most segregated agency in the government. De Blasio ran on a campaign pledge to support preschool programs by imposing higher taxes on the rich.

How did the mayors respond to significant challenges very early on in their first terms? (For Lindsay, upon taking office in 1966, a bruising confrontation with the transit-workers union and subsequent strike; for de Blasio, the dust-up with the police union after the death of Eric Garner.)

Lindsay succeeded Robert Wagner as mayor. Wagner, the son of the New Deal senator who was the darling of organized labor, introduced collective bargaining in municipal government and made unions and their leaders significant players in city politics. That would be a tough spot for any new chief executive. Lindsay's racial agenda was often at odds with the way unions protected the ethnic enclaves that existed in municipal agencies. The transit strike was just the beginning. He would later clash with the police and teacher unions in heated racial confrontations and suffer through strikes by sanitation men and bridge tenders. De Blasio's feud with the police was difficult but not defining. As the father of a biracial family he gained early credibility with minorities. Because of his broader economic agenda, de Blasio enjoys wide and deep support among labor leaders.

The mayors got a lot of media attention. But were their substantial accomplishments overlooked?

Both men had the courage to take on unpopular issues that other politicians ducked. Lindsay came out for a civilian review board to monitor the police in his first major campaign speech. He was one of the first elected officials to support the rights of women and gays. De Blasio ran against business, finance and real estate interests in a city that had elected the billionaire Michael Bloomberg for three consecutive terms.

Mayor Lindsay spoke out on national issues as mayor, including the Vietnam War. Mayor de Blasio is also staking out a national profile, especially on issues around economic fairness. Why do New York City mayors often seek a national scope?

New York mayors are opinion leaders. Lindsay became a national spokesman for cities at a time when urban issues were a national priority. He was elected in the same year that President Lyndon Johnson created the Department of Housing and Urban Development. His priorities drew support from Washington. President Johnson had put through almost 200 pieces of legislation under the Great Society program. At a time when "liberal Republican" was not an oxymoron, bipartisanship was the order of the day. De Blasio gets little help from Washington. It is deadlocked. The only time Democrats and Republicans consistently cooperate is to craft tax and regulatory schemes that protect the power and privileges of the rich at the expense of the poor.

What can de Blasio learn from Lindsay?

Beware of the school wars. Lindsay's instinct to decentralize governance and give parents a voice made sense. When he set up three experimental districts in minority neighborhoods, he racialized an issue that could have had broad support. When he failed to act after the Ocean Hill-Brownsville school board fired 18 Jewish teachers and administrators without cause, he left the city polarized and alienated many liberal supporters. Except for his pre-K proposal, de Blasio spent his first year carping at Bloomberg policies rather than articulating his own vision for education. In battling charter schools, he lost a chance to take ownership of a popular initiative that could enhance opportunity and advance his egalitarian goals.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea; "John Del Cecato"; Wolfe, Emma Subject: Banks
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 11:30:06 AM

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer now 15 seconds ago

. @HillaryClinton: big banks need more oversight, & community banks need relief. "We ought to be able to walk and chew gum at the same time."

Ruby Cramer @rubycramer 57s 58 seconds ago

. @HillaryClinton, at roundtable in Iowa, says she wants to roll back regs on community banks. "I want to be a small business president."

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti 1m 1 minute ago

"What was meant to reign in Too Big to Fail has really fallen actually harder on" community banks, Hillary says.

Amy Chozick @amychozick 5m 5 minutes ago Iowa USA

. @HillaryClinton says Republican roll back of Dodd-Frank & Wall Street regulation "cynical attempt to game the system for those at the top"

Alex Seitz-Wald @aseitzwald 5m 5 minutes ago

Clinton says small banks and businesses need relief from Washington, while Wall Street needs to be reigned in.

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti 8m 8 minutes ago

"We should not apply the same restrictions on community banks as those needed to regulate our big banks," says Clinton...

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti 8m8 minutes ago

... "It's not the big banks that need relief from Washington," she says.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Leopold, Elana
To: "Hayley Prim"
Cc: John Del Cecato
Subject: RE: Thank You Emails
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 11:54:04 AM

Well he's spoken with Barbara Lee- he went to dinner with Garcetti last night and saw Schaaf when he was in Cali

I know he's emailed with several others on different matters so I think we are good

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 11:54 AM
To: Leopold, Elana
Cc: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: Thank You Emails

Can the correspondence office send letters out for TPA?

I sent staff thank yous myself, so i think that's fine for now. just want him to maintain a relationship with these folks

On Tue, May 19, 2015 at 11:47 AM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
Did he respond to you? I would be really shocked if he did. I think it's best to have our correspondence office send out letters. I know- not as good- but it's something

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 2015 11:11 PM
To: B
Cc: Leopold, Elana; John Del Cecato
Subject: Thank You Emails

Hi Sir--

We think it's prudent for you to send some thank yous to the big names who came out yesterday. Can be short and sweet, but would go a long way. List of folks who we suggest emailing are listed at the bottom with direct contacts.

We are trying to track down direct emails for the following people, so let me know if you have stored: Raul Grijalva, Barbara Lee, Rosa DeLauro, Lily Garcia, Leo Gerard, Mayor Libby Schaaf. If you don't have, we can send to staff to forward.

Thanks,
Hayley

Here is a draft:

_____ /

Thanks for joining me yesterday in announcing The Progressive Agenda. Your presence added significant weight and reach to the cause.

As you know, that was only the first step in the process. We are going to continue to build on this success, and I look forward to collaborating with you on that process.

Howard Dean: [REDACTED]
Jeff Merkley: He only texts: [REDACTED]
Mark Pocan: [REDACTED]
Keith Ellison: kme@mail.house.gov
Larry Cohen: lcohen@cwa-union.org
Mary Kay Henry: marykay.henry@seiu.org
Lee Saunders: lsaunders@afscme.org
Randi Weingarten: [REDACTED]
Rev Sharpton: [REDACTED]
Mayor Nan Whaley: Nan.whaley@daytonohio.gov
George Gresham: georgeg@1199.org
Maria Elana Durazo: mdurazo@unitehere.org
Janet Murguia: jmurguia@nclr.org
Van Jones: vanjones68@dreamcorps.us
Heather McGhee: hmcghee@demos.org

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Kadushin, Peter; Walzak, Phil; Klein, Monica
Subject: Re: hilary
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 11:59:20 AM

Yes

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 12:00 PM
To: Kadushin, Peter; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Klein, Monica
Subject: Re: hilary

I can live with that for now... Meantime, can we backchannel & see if they're circulating any talking points?

From: <Kadushin>, Peter <pkadushin@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 11:22 AM
To: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Klein, Monica" <MKlein@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: hilary

So many details we just couldn't possibly know that I would recommend something like "Haven't read the story and don't know the details."

Work for everyone?

From: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tue, 19 May 2015 11:01:47 -0400
To: OOM MIS <pkadushin@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Phil Walzak <pwalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Monica Klein <mklein@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: hilary

What do we propose he says about the Blumenthal memos (Hillary) and the latest media claims of the blurred lines between foundation and govt?

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Liz Hegarty
To: John Del Cecato; Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: stephen lerner
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 12:08:08 PM

Yes, 1 PM on June 1 works. Did you have an exact location in mind? Thanks!

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 11:03 AM
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Liz Hegarty <lhegarty@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: stephen lerner

Yes, for sure... Adding Liz for my sked

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 11:43 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: stephen lerner

wanna meet and chat with him at 1pm on june 1 near city hall?

he went to roosevelt thing and used to work at seiu tom was telling you about him. might be interesting connection to have.

let me know.
steph

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Liz Hegarty
Cc: [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Meet Up
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 12:22:49 PM

Sounds good!

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 12:16 PM
To: Liz Hegarty <lhgart@akpdmedia.com>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "[REDACTED]" <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Meet Up

Stephen and John: I would like you two to meet and since Stephen is in town at 1PM thought it might be great time to do that! Both of you were present at the TPA event May 12. Here are the details for our meeting:

Church Publick, 78 Reade St, New York, NY 10007
1PM
June 1
Monday

Sound good to all?
Steph
[REDACTED]

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Mayor de Blasio interview
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 1:45:28 PM

U
Are Egghausting
How is June 5th

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 12:28 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Subject: FW: Mayor de Blasio interview

Just a heads-up... I told Mike Lux (who's been super helpful to us in herding cats/calming down the hot flashes from the professional left during TPA effort) that we'd record a little something for a video he's doing on inequality & the larger progressive movement... I can work on script & such... It won't be too big of a headache

From: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 12:24 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Lauren Windsor" <[REDACTED]> <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Mayor de Blasio interview

John,

Lauren and I will be in NYC the first week of June, can we figure out a time to do that de Blasio interview you and I have been talking about?

Mike Lux
1250 Eye St., N.W., Suite 250
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 628-7771
A Proud Member of Democracy Partners

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Kadushin, Peter; Klein, Monica
Subject: FW: Why Hillary Clinton's 'old friends' defense is deeply misguided
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 2:03:07 PM

From: <Cillizza>, Chris <Chris.Cillizza@washpost.com>
Reply-To: "Cillizza, Chris" <Chris.Cillizza@washpost.com>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 2:01 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Why Hillary Clinton's 'old friends' defense is deeply misguided

<http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/the-fix/wp/2015/05/19/why-hillary-clintons-old-friends-defense-is-deeply-misguided/>

Why Hillary Clinton's "old friends" defense is deeply misguided

By Chris Cillizza May 19 at 1:57 PM

Hillary Clinton answered a handful of questions from reporters today in Iowa -- after a mere 40,000 minute wait! What's drawing the most attention are her answers on Iraq (she regrets her Senate vote for the use of force) and the release of emails she sent as Secretary of State (she wants the State Department to make them public ASAP).

But, the most revealing thing she said wasn't about either of those topics. It came when she was asked about the New York Times story about Clinton's ongoing ties with longtime friend Sidney Blumenthal -- and memos he sent to her regarding Libya while she was serving as the nation's top diplomat.

Here's Clinton's full response -- courtesy of WaPo's Bob Costa who was on the ground in Iowa with her:

I have many, many old friends, and I always think that it's important when you get into politics to have friends you had before you got into politics, to understand what's on their minds. He's been a friend of mine for a long time. He's sent me unsolicited e-mails, which I passed on in some instances. I see that as part of the give and take. When you're in the public eye, when you're in an official position, I think you do have to work to ensure that you're not caught in a bubble. I hear from a certain small group of people and I'm going to continue to talk to my old friends, whoever they are.

That answer reminds of a similar answer that Georgetown hoops great Allen Iverson used to give to reporters when they asked him why he refused to break ties with some of his longtime friends who, in the minds of some, brought an unsavory element to the NBA and clouded Iverson's ability to focus on being the best basketball player he could be. Iverson's response was, and I am paraphrasing here, "These people were my friends before I got famous and they'll be my friends after I stop playing basketball. They are my true friends. I don't care what any of you think about me or them."

Ok. I wasn't sure -- and still am not sure -- that that was the right answer for Iverson. But I am absolutely certain it's not the right answer for Clinton.

Iverson didn't need anyone to elect him to anything to be successful in his chosen profession. So, the opinions of others could cost him money, potentially, but couldn't fundamentally impact his playing career. That's the exact opposite of the situation Clinton finds herself in. How she -- and the people she surrounds herself with -- are perceived matters in a very real way to her future career prospects.

So, jettisoning "old friends" who keep getting the Clintons into hairy territory perception-wise would seem to make all the sense in the world. And yet, her response when questioned about Blumenthal's role as a sort of ad hoc adviser on Libya, is, basically, Hey I've known this guy for a long time so I'm not going to say anything bad about him.

Her loyalty is, I guess, admirable at some level but remember that Hillary is not running to be voted "most loyal friend." She is running to be elected president. And, if that is truly her goal, then the politically savvy thing to have done would be to distance herself from Blumenthal (and his ilk) a long time ago and -- if she chose not to do that -- to make very clear when asked about his unofficial role in her orbit to downplay it like crazy.

Why didn't Clinton do either of those things? Who knows. But, the Clintons' past does provide some evidence that when it comes to friends and politics, they prize loyalty over all else.

When Bill got elected president in 1992, there were a number of people in the Clintons' Arkansas orbit who national Democrats assumed would be jettisoned when the duo came to Washington. Except they weren't. Perhaps the best known of this group is Webb Hubbell, a law partner of Hillary's and close confidante of the Clintons who was named Associate Attorney General by Bill Clinton. Less than two years later, Hubbell pled guilty to overbilling clients at the law firm and spent several years in prison. And now, according to this Daily Beast story from 2014, Webb Hubbell is back in the Clinton orbit, although, admittedly, far from its center.

Hubbell's story may be the best known but it is far from the only example of the Clintons' willingness to overlook mistakes in service of the all-important trait of loyalty. If you stand by the Clintons no matter what, they will almost never abandon you. (The converse is that if you are perceived as having betrayed them, they will never forgive you.) Again, admirable, perhaps, in a friend. But far less admirable -- or wise -- when running for office.

That goes double or even triple when the knock on you as a candidate is that you have too much baggage to be elected. As I have said before in this space, Hillary Clinton's greatest gift in the 2016 race is that she's Hillary Clinton. Her biggest weakness is also that she's Hillary Clinton.

Being someone who has lived in the national spotlight for decades means Clinton is totally known by the electorate and generally regarded as capable of doing the job she is running for. That's the good side. The bad side is that Clinton's name also brings with it lots of memories that people -- even those who like she and her husband -- would rather forget. The entire Monica Lewinsky scandal is at the top of that list but the cronyism of the Blumenthals and Hubbells of the world isn't far behind.

Given that, any storyline that makes the average voter think "Electing Hillary means bringing back all of these people?!?" is a bad one for her chances.

Clinton would do well to remember William Faulkner's great line from "Requiem for a Nun": "The past is never dead. It isn't even past." Getting distance from some of the dead weight from her past -- rather than defending them as her only real friends -- is the politically smart thing to do. But, when it comes to loyalty and friendship, the Clintons have always had a blind spot.

Chris Cillizza
The Fix
Washington Post
@thefix

Chris Cillizza
The Fix
Washington Post
@thefix

This email was sent to jfdc@akpdmedia.com
why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences
The Washington Post · 1150 15th Street NW · Washington, DC 20005 · USA

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 2:47:52 PM

Just watched the segment and didn't see any mention:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=y4iYBbmVpc>

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 2:37 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: <no subject>

Can you see if Heather McGhee said anything helpful re: TPA on Bill Maher last Thursday night ?

From: Wolfe, Emma
To: B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: FW: Gov Dayton veto due to lack of funds for universal pre-k
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 6:07:24 PM
Attachments: 2015_05_19_Speaker_Daudt_Veto_Letter.pdf

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 6:06 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Buery, Richard; Confer, Alexis; Fromberg, Rick; Sevilla, Max
Subject: Gov Dayton veto due to lack of funds for universal pre-k

Governor Dayton of Minnesota just vetoed the Minnesota's Legislature's education bill because it doesn't adequately fund universal pre-k.

His veto letter is attached, in which he writes, "Also unacceptable is the absence of any version of voluntary, universal prekindergarten which will help 47,000 4-year olds, which has been my number one priority in this session."

Thanks to Max for the heads up. MBdB might be interested in knowing.

http://www.southernminn.com/owatonna_peoples_press/article_63ea9571-1d66-57a0-ad70-3bc1285fddb7.html

Dayton continues to push for universal pre-k

Posted: Monday, May 18, 2015 5:25 pm | Updated: 7:50 pm, Mon May 18, 2015.

By KIM HYATT khyatt@owatonna.com

A bipartisan, omnibus K-12 education bill passed the Minnesota Legislature on Monday, but Gov. Mark Dayton is threatening to veto the bill if it doesn't include his pre-kindergarten initiative.

"It's very frustrating because there's a lot of good stuff in here. It would be a tragedy if the governor decides to veto," said Rep. Peggy Bennett, R-Albert Lea, from the Capitol on Monday afternoon.

"Good stuff" like $400 million in increased funding for K-12, teacher loan forgiveness, and $60 million invested in new, early learning pre-K scholarships and other school readiness aid, Bennett said.

Bennett, whose district includes Blooming Prairie, also noted another component of the omnibus bill would give authority to all school districts wanting to levy for facilities maintenance without voter approval. Currently, districts with more than 1 million square feet can qualify for alternative facilities bonding to tackle deferred maintenance. Only 25 districts in the state fall in that category. Owatonna, for example, is 200,000 square feet short.

After working through the night on Sunday, the House voted along party lines for the $17 billion education plan. The Democratic-controlled Senate followed suit Monday afternoon, readying the bill to head to the governor's desk.

Dayton, however, insisted he would veto it because the bill leaves out money — $171 million — for a preschool expansion initiative that is at the core of his agenda.

Commissioner of Education Brenda Cassellius and Commissioner of Management and Budget Myron Frans both issued statements listing the consequences of not enacting a bill that prepares 4-year-olds, such as layoffs and various shutdown scenarios.

But Bennett insisted that the provisions of the bill are not wanted.

"I hope [Gov. Dayton will] have a change in heart and realize that our schools don't want it. It's not that they don't want early childhood, but for many reasons they can't do it," Bennett said.

She added many schools aren't "prepared for it" in terms of finding the space, busing and curriculum prior to September. Meanwhile some are still dealing with Dayton's all-day kindergarten initiative that was enacted this school year.

"In principle, most people applaud the governor's vision of the importance of early childhood education and preparing young learners to be successful," wrote Tom Sager, director of finance and operations for the Owatonna school district. "The part that still needs to be determined is the actual implementation of such a program, given facility needs, current elementary crowding, and proper time to plan."

In total, the bill is $17 billion. The majority goes toward the per-pupil funding formula. The House passed a 1.5 percent increase to the formula for 2016 and a 2 percent increase the following year. Many districts, such as Owatonna and Medford, were asking for a 3 percent increase.

Dayton will either compromise or veto by the end of the week, Bennett said.

A veto of the education bill — or any other parts of the state's budget — could trigger the state's third special session in a decade. The next budget must be in place by July 1 to avoid a partial government shutdown.

The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Reach reporter Kim Hyatt at 507-444-2376. Follow her on Twitter @OPPKimHyatt

© 2015 Southernminn.com. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

STATE OF MINNESOTA

Office of Governor Mark Dayton

116 Veterans Service Building ♦ 20 West 12th Street ♦ Saint Paul, MN 55155

May 19, 2015

The Honorable Kurt Daudt
Speaker of the House
463 State Office Building
100 Rev Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Blvd
St. Paul, Minnesota 55155

Dear Mr. Speaker:

I have vetoed and am returning to you Chapter 72, House File 844, a bill related to education finance.

As I have said before, the bill's total investment of $400 million is insufficient given the state's large surplus. In 2013, with a projected budget deficit of $627 million, the spending increase above the base for E-12 education was $606 million. It is astonishing that with a $1.9 billion surplus, and more than $1 billion left on the bottom for future tax cuts, there would be less invested in our schools this year. And it is incomprehensible that estate tax cuts for millionaires and property tax relief for large corporations are higher priorities for your House Republican Caucus than investing adequately in our students and young children.

This bill omits the following funding, which I specified in my May 15th email to you and Senator Bakk (copy attached).

- No funding for eliminating the waiting list of 2500 low-income children for Head Start.
- No funding for the Northside Achievement Zone and St. Paul Promise Neighborhood.
- No funding for Bureau of Indian Education schools and only meager funding for American Indian students.
- No funding for Special Education.
- No funding for English Learning programs.
- No funding for free breakfasts for prekindergarten and first graders.
- No funding for Regional Centers which help our most struggling schools improve.

Also unacceptable is the absence of any version of voluntary, universal prekindergarten which will help 47,000 4-year olds, which has been my number one priority in this session. Despite my willingness to move from full-day to half-day prekindergarten, and despite my urging that we take a comprehensive approach to educating young children, your bill neglects the opportunity to make transformational changes for our 4-year olds.

Throughout this session, I have heard passionate rhetoric from your members about the urgent need to close the achievement gap. This bill belies that rhetoric, and instead chooses to shortchange our youngest students for future tax cuts.

Therefore, I am vetoing this bill.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink that reads "Mark Dayton". The signature is written in a cursive, flowing style with a large initial "M".

Mark Dayton
Governor

Attachment

cc: Senator Sandra Pappas, President of the Senate
Senator Tom Bakk, Senate Majority Leader
Senator David Hann, Senate Minority Leader
Senator Charles Wiger
Representative Paul Thissen, House Minority Leader
Representative Jenifer Loon
The Honorable Steve Simon, Secretary of State
Ms. Joanne Zoff, Secretary of the Senate
Mr. Patrick Murphy, Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives
Michele Timmons, Revisor of Statutes

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael; de Alwis, Ronalie; Leopold, Elana
Subject: CBS this Morning- additional topics
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 6:34:40 PM

I just spoke with the producer again. The peg will be marking the historic moment of opening of One World Observatory (public opening is May 29)—she confirms “feel good” on this hook. Looking forward (I’m getting the answers you requested on timeline)

They want to “tease” your presence in advance with shots of you looking at the space, so I negotiated us a bit more time but not much. Need to be there at 7:05 AM.

NOTE given that this will be your first time on the show, they have indicated they are likely to pivot to the following topics:

- Policing and communities
- Democratic party ahead of 2016
- Transportation and Infrastructure
- NYT nail salon investigation

I’ll pull info for you so you have awareness of the news of the day around these topics.

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: B
Subject: Re: Gov Dayton veto due to lack of funds for universal pre-k
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 6:38:00 PM

What a badass!

On May 19, 2015, at 6:09 PM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 6:06 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Buery, Richard; Confer, Alexis; Fromberg, Rick; Sevillea, Max
Subject: Gov Dayton veto due to lack of funds for universal pre-k

Governor Dayton of Minnesota just vetoed the Minnesota's Legislature's education bill because it doesn't adequately fund universal pre-k.

His veto letter is attached, in which he writes, "Also unacceptable is the absence of any version of voluntary, universal prekindergarten which will help 47,000 4-year olds, which has been my number one priority in this session."

Thanks to Max for the heads up. MBdB might be interested in knowing.

http://www.southernminn.com/owatonna_peoples_press/article_63ea9571-1d66-57a0-ad70-3bc1285fddb7.html

Dayton continues to push for universal pre-k

Posted: Monday, May 18, 2015 5:25 pm | Updated: 7:50 pm, Mon May 18, 2015.

By KIM HYATT khvatt@owatonna.com

A bipartisan, omnibus K-12 education bill passed the Minnesota Legislature on Monday, but Gov. Mark Dayton is threatening to veto the bill if it doesn't include his pre-kindergarten initiative.

"It's very frustrating because there's a lot of good stuff in here. It would be a tragedy if the governor decides to veto," said Rep. Peggy Bennett, R-Albert Lea, from the Capitol on Monday afternoon.

"Good stuff" like $400 million in increased funding for K-12, teacher loan forgiveness, and $60 million invested in new, early learning pre-K scholarships and other school readiness aid, Bennett said.

Bennett, whose district includes Blooming Prairie, also noted another component of the omnibus bill would give authority to all school districts wanting to levy for facilities maintenance without voter approval. Currently, districts with more than 1 million square feet can qualify for alternative facilities bonding to tackle deferred maintenance. Only 25 districts in the state fall in that category. Owatonna, for example, is 200,000 square feet short.

After working through the night on Sunday, the House voted along party lines for the $17 billion education plan. The Democratic-controlled Senate followed suit Monday afternoon, readying the bill to head to the governor's desk.

Dayton, however, insisted he would veto it because the bill leaves out money — $171 million — for a preschool expansion initiative that is at the core of his agenda.

Commissioner of Education Brenda Cassellius and Commissioner of Management and Budget Myron Frans both issued statements listing the consequences of not enacting a bill that prepares 4-year-olds, such as layoffs and various shutdown scenarios.

But Bennett insisted that the provisions of the bill are not wanted.

"I hope [Gov. Dayton will] have a change in heart and realize that our schools don't want it. It's not that they don't want early childhood, but for many reasons they can't do it," Bennett said.

She added many schools aren't "prepared for it" in terms of finding the space, busing and curriculum prior to September. Meanwhile some are still dealing with Dayton's all-day kindergarten initiative that was enacted this school year.

"In principle, most people applaud the governor's vision of the importance of early childhood education and preparing young learners to be successful," wrote Tom Sager, director of finance and operations for the Owatonna school district. "The part that still needs to be determined is the actual implementation of such a program, given facility needs, current elementary crowding, and proper time to plan."

In total, the bill is $17 billion. The majority goes toward the per-pupil funding formula. The House passed a 1.5 percent increase to the formula for 2016 and a 2 percent increase the following year. Many districts, such as Owatonna and Medford, were asking for a 3 percent increase. Dayton will either compromise or veto by the end of the week, Bennett said.

A veto of the education bill — or any other parts of the state's budget — could trigger the state's third special session in a decade. The next budget must be in place by July 1 to avoid a partial government shutdown.

The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Reach reporter Kim Hyatt at 507-444-2376. Follow her on Twitter @OPPKimHyatt

© 2015 Southermminn.com. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

<2015_05_19_Speaker_Daudt_Veto_Letter.pdf>

From: Hayley Prim
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com
Subject: Re: The Progressive Agenda
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 10:54:45 PM

Got it-- will send you clean email now

On Tuesday, May 19, 2015, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Excellent!! And pls send me a clean version in a new email that I can send to liccardo. Also, pls discuss keith ellison follow-up

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 10:54 PM
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: The Progressive Agenda

Sent it to Barbara and she signed off. All set here

On Tuesday, May 19, 2015, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Excellent. Get sign-off from barbara lee -- or tell me if you need my help

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 09:12 AM
To: B; ██████████ <████████████████████>
Subject: Re: The Progressive Agenda

Here's my proposed language

Changes are highlighted in yellow. Nixed "help working parents" & inserted new line on racial/economic justice into preamble.

About Our Agenda

Income inequality is the crisis of our time, and we need bold, progressive solutions to address it. By harnessing the strength of a national progressive coalition, and using that to achieve success in the three pillars of The Progressive Agenda, we will make sure that the voice of every American is heard – not just those at the very top.

To do this, we must lift the floor for those who are struggling, fight for racial and economic justice, and champion a tax system that rewards work instead of just wealth.

The Progressive Agenda is a set of proposals that build upon the work of dozens of economists, lawmakers and progressive activists, with the aim of addressing income inequality right now.

Lift the Floor for Working People

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails -- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.

Support Working Families

- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit, and protect and expand Social Security.

- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.

Tax Fairness

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the “Buffett Rule” so millionaires pay their fair share.
- Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of “performance pay” write-offs.

###

From: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 7:03 AM
To: Hayley Prim <[REDACTED]>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: The Progressive Agenda

Once we have the updated version, pls make me send it to mayor sam llicardo of san jose and make me follow up with him

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:[REDACTED]]
Sent: Monday, May 04, 2015 02:17 PM
To: B
Subject: The Progressive Agenda

Please join Bill de Blasio, Mayor of New York City, and declare your support for The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality on May 12, 2015 at 3:00pm at the U.S. Capitol Building’s House Triangle.

More and more progressive leaders are signing on every day. So far supporters include:

- Eileen Appelbaum, Senior Economist, Center for Economic and Policy Research
- Dean Baker, Co-Director, Center for Economic and Policy Research

- Deepak Bhargava, Executive Director, Center for Community Change
- Robert Borosage, Co-Director Campaign for America's Future
- Steve Buscemi, Actor
- Larry Cohen, President, Communication Workers of America
- Sheila Crowley, President and CEO, National Low Income Housing Coalition
- Bill de Blasio, Mayor of New York City
- Howard Dean, Former Governor of Vermont & Founder, Democracy for America
- Rosa DeLauro, U.S. Representative from Connecticut
- Abigail E. Disney, Filmmaker
- Keith Ellison, U.S. Representative from Minnesota
- Chaka Fattah, U.S. Representative from Pennsylvania
- Jeff Faux, Founder, Economic Policy Institute
- Lily Eskelsen García, President, National Education Association
- Leo Gerard, President, United Steelworkers
- Lisa Graves, Executive Director, Center for Media and Democracy/PRWatch/ALECexposed.org
- George Gresham, President, 1199SEIU
- Raúl Grijalva, U.S. Representative from Arizona, Co-Chair Congressional Progressive Caucus
- Arshad Hasan, Executive Director, ProgressNow
- Jeannette Huelzo, Executive Director, United for a Fair Economy
- Sheila Jackson Lee, U.S. Representative from Texas
- Mike Lux, Co-Founder and President, Progressive Strategies
- Chirlane McCray, First Lady of New York City
- Heather McGhee, Executive Director, DEMOS
- Lawrence Mishel, President, Economic Policy Institute
- Cynthia Nixon, Actor
- Atima Omara, President, Young Democrats of America
- James Parrott, Deputy Director and Chief Economist, Fiscal Policy Institute
- Robert Reich, Chancellor's Professor of Public Policy at University of California at Berkeley & Former U.S. Secretary of Labor
- Mark Ruffalo, Actor, Director, Producer & Activist
- Jeff Sachs, Economist & Director of the Earth Institute at Columbia University
- Bill Samuels, Chairman, EffectiveNY
- Susan Sarandon, Actress, Activist

- Lee Saunders, President, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees
- Reverend Al Sharpton, Founder and President of National Action Network
- D. Taylor, President, UNITE HERE!
- Richard L. Trumka, President, AFL-CIO
- Katrina vanden Heuvel, Editor, The Nation
- Randi Weingarten, President, American Federation of Teachers
- Michael Wessel, President, The Wessel Group
- Nan Whaley, Mayor of Dayton, Ohio
- Marjorie E. Wood, PhD, Senior Associate, Global Economy Project & Managing Editor, Inequality.org
- Marian Wright Edelman, Founder and President, Children's Defense Fund

The group of supporters will include federal and local elected officials, labor officials, cultural leaders, and progressive activists.

The Progressive Agenda – a progressive alternative, of sorts, to the 1994 Republican Contract with America – will include specific proposals to lift the floor for working people, support working parents, and promote tax fairness – policies that reward work rather than just wealth.

The event stems from a summit that Mayor de Blasio convened in New York City in early April, where a group of national progressive leaders gathered to discuss ways the country could combat the crisis of our time -- income inequality.

The Progressive Agenda builds upon the work of dozens of economists, lawmakers, think tanks, and progressive activists. It is not meant to be seen as a comprehensive set of proposals to combat income inequality, but rather a bold collection of core policy proposals around which progressives can organize and mobilize.

If you cannot attend in person, we'd still urge you to sign on to the document.

To sign on, please email me back as soon as possible, preferably no later than Monday, May 4.

Thanks for your consideration, and feel free to contact me with any questions or concerns.

The Progressive Agenda To Combat Income Inequality

1. Lift the Floor for Working People

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.

2. Support Working Families

- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates.

3. Tax Fairness

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the "Buffett Rule" so millionaires pay their fair share.
- Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of "performance pay" write-offs.

--

Hayley Prim

c: [REDACTED]

--

Hayley Prim

c: [REDACTED]

--

Hayley Prim

C: [REDACTED]

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 8:45:10 AM

I just watched the segment. I thought it was very well-executed.

Channeling MBDB: "John, why do you think that?"

1. Your tone on One World Trade was perfect - mindful of the past, respectful & somber in remembering the past, but hopeful and proud and genuinely uplifting about where we are today.
2. Your message on HRC was exactly right - waiting to see the full vision - not just her, but all candidates - going right to the problem of income inequality & giving real examples (Buffett rule, paid family & sick leave, wages/LA).

So...#WIN

And/but - we'll strive to give you a soundbite that's more in keeping with how you like to prep in the future.

But well done!

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Continuity
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 8:59:43 AM

Haven't heard anything back re: stephanopoulos, face the nation, cnn, etc

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Fw: Jacksonville Mayor's Race Results
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 10:22:17 AM

See below. This is what happens to D's who don't act like D's

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 09:45 AM
To: B
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Jacksonville Mayor's Race Results

Article 1: JACKSONVILLE, Fla. -

After a long, expensive and sometimes bruising campaign, Jacksonville voters elected a new mayor on Tuesday.

When the first early votes and absentee votes were reported just after 7 p.m., Republican Lenny Curry had a 1 percent lead over incumbent Mayor Alvin Brown. Two hours later, with 98 percent of the 200,000 votes counted, that lead was only slightly larger, but enough to declare victory.

"Soak it in," Curry told supporters in a ballroom of the Hyattt Regency Hotel.

After thanking his family, his volunteers, his donors and the Republican Party of Florida, Curry turned to the future.

"The work starts right now. This is about one Jacksonville and about one people and our future," Curry said. "The message that I carried through this campaign comes from deep within me. This is what I believe. This is what we're going to do."

Just 30 minutes earlier, Brown had stepped in front of supporters at his watch party to congratulate Curry.

"I want to thank all my supporters, who were there from the beginning, all the way to the end," Brown said. "I also want to thank my team for the last four years. I'm so proud of the progress we made. We left a strong foundation to build on."

UNCUT SPEECHES: Mayor Alvin Brown | Mayor elect Lenny Curry
ANALYSIS: Roundtable discussion breaks down the vote

At the end of the night, with all 201,227 votes counted, Republican Curry drew 51.3 percent of the vote -- a 5,285-vote margin over Brown.

For both men, Tuesday's election ends well over a year of campaigning and a campaign that cost millions of dollars.

Brown registered to run for a second term two years ago, and Curry filed his paperwork in January 2014. The two came out on top in a four-way primary in March and spent a record amount of money on this campaign.

"We have almost tripled what was (spent) in the previous mayoral race," Election Supervisor Jerry Holland said last week. "The dollars are just amazing."

Curry was able to tap into friendships he earned while leading the state GOP as well as party resources to defeat Brown, who four years ago became Jacksonville's first black mayor and the first Democrat to win the position in 20 years.

Brown narrowly won office then by positioning himself as a conservative Democrat who tried to avoid partisan politics. He said he wanted to work with Republican Gov. Rick Scott to bring jobs to the area and upset local Democrats by not appearing with President Barack Obama at a 2012 campaign rally.

Tuesday began with the candidates voting at their respective precincts with their families.

Curry voted at the Southside United Methodist Church off Hendricks Avenue and San Jose Boulevard about 9:30 a.m.

The former Florida GOP leader arrived with his wife and three children and said he was feeling good and is proud of what he said was a successful campaign.

Curry said since day one his biggest goal has been making Jacksonville a safer place to live. He said that remains his top priority.

Mayor

Won Candidate	Party	Votes	%
Lenny Curry	R	103256	51
Alvin Brown (i)	D	97971	49

Precincts Reporting - 199 of 199
100%

ARTICLE 2:

There's a reason why the Jacksonville mayoral race is drawing the attention of outsiders like former President Bill Clinton, former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, former Gov. Jeb Bush and U.S. Sen. Marco Rubio and it's about more than who wins on Tuesday.

It's because the state's largest city will also be a key to winning Florida in the 2016 presidential election, and having an ally in the mayor's office can only help.

Perry, Bush and Rubio have an eye on the White House next year and each are helping former state Republican Party Chairman Lenny Curry, who's challenging incumbent Democrat Alvin Brown. Clinton, whose wife Hillary Rodham Clinton is running for president, came to Jacksonville to raise money for Brown.

"It just shows you the stakes that the state Republican Party believes are here," said Matthew Corrigan, a University of North Florida political science professor. "Rick Perry and Marco Rubio and Jeb Bush — this is looking like a Republican operation not a Jacksonville mayor's race."

Florida is considered one of the most important pieces in winning the White House as the largest of swing states. While Miami is the state's largest metropolitan area, Jacksonville's mayor serves all of Duval County, which has about 900,000 residents. Duval County and has played a role in recent presidential elections. Without it, George W. Bush wouldn't have won in 2000, when he carried Florida by 537 votes and Duval County by 44,234 votes. He carried Duval in 2004 by 61,586 votes.

But President Barack Obama targeted Jacksonville in 2008 and 2012 with the goal of making a solidly Republican area more competitive. About 30 percent of the city is black, or roughly double the statewide average. Obama's campaign substantially increased black voter registration and turnout and cut the Republican margin of victory Bush saw here by tens of thousands of votes. John McCain won Duval by less than 8,000 in 2008 and Mitt Romney carried it by fewer than 15,000 in 2012. Obama carried the state.

One benefactor was Brown, who in 2011 became Jacksonville's first black mayor and first Democrat to win in 20 years. He's positioned himself as a conservative Democrat, saying he's willing to work with Republican Gov. Rick Scott to create jobs. His absence at an Obama 2012 campaign rally was noticed by the local media.

If Brown wins re-election, he'll be on a short list of Democrats seen as potential candidates for governor in 2018. Republicans want to stop that path while restoring Republican dominance to the region for 2016.

Perry has traveled to Jacksonville to help Curry, Bush has taped a video for him and Rubio is scheduled to appear at a rally Monday.

"In terms of what they see in 2016, I think Lenny has tried to make this a national issue. I focus on making this about Jacksonville. People in Jacksonville don't care what's happening in Washington, they care what's happening in Jacksonville," Brown said.

Curry wouldn't discuss the implication the race has on 2016, but he has no apologies for bringing in Republican heavy hitters.

"It's important for people in Jacksonville to know that I am a conservative Republican. I stand by conservative values — fiscally responsible government, free enterprise solutions," he said. "Asking for the support of those individuals was a statement to Jacksonville that this is who I am and I'm proud of it."

The race is considered too close to call and has been nasty. Curry, an accountant, is using a report that found more than $500 million in accounting errors to blame Brown for being fiscally irresponsible, though the report found the errors began long before Brown took office. Curry also blamed Brown for rising violent crime.

"We should all be angry, we should all be upset, we should all be mourning," Curry told a small group of business owners. "We had lost the distinction of the murder capital in the state of Florida. Our violent crime has now spiked over the last three years, the murder rate is now back up."

Brown says Curry is a hyper-partisan who won't govern in the best interests of all city residents. He's accused Curry of trying to suppress the black vote when he was the state GOP chairman, pointing at cuts in early voting days and other changes ahead of the 2012 presidential election that critics said made it more difficult for minorities to vote.

In flyers being hung on doorknobs, Brown's campaign calls Curry, "Divisive and dangerous." It led Curry to ask Brown during a televised debate, "Do you think I'm a racist?"

"He did everything he could to suppress our citizens' right to vote by taking away early voting. Why would he do that?" Brown said the next day. "He spent his entire adult life being divisive and dividing people instead of uniting them. I spent four years uniting this city."

Brown chose a bakery near downtown for an interview with The Associated Press to symbolize a city economy that's improving. When he took office, the area stood vacant. It now has stores, restaurants and new urban apartments.

"Downtown is on fire. It's thriving. It's doing well — more jobs, more opportunity," Brown said. "I'm the mayor who believes in opportunity for all. Period. No matter what side of town you live on. That's how I govern my city."

More here:

<http://www.news4jax.com/politics/mayoral-candidates-wind-up-long-campaign/33099920>

Article on National Importance of Jax Mayor's Race:

<http://abcnews.go.com/US/wireStory/jacksonville-mayoral-race-draws-national-political-interest-31105302>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Williams, Dominic
Cc: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Fact-Check - Crime Stats for Times Ed Board
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:51:40 AM

Thanks – will adjust per your recommendations

From: Williams, Dominic
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:52 AM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: 'John Del Cecato'
Subject: RE: Fact-Check - Crime Stats for Times Ed Board

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:41 AM
To: Williams, Dominic
Cc: 'John Del Cecato'
Subject: Fact-Check - Crime Stats for Times Ed Board

Hey Dom,

We're trying to fact-check the Mayor's notes for his sit-down with the Times ed board this afternoon. Can you quickly eyeball the following five lines?

Thanks,

Mahen

--

Crime down 8 percent overall since this point in 2013 – a banner year for low crime. Citywide down 8.1% vs 2013, as of monday

Murders down 3.5 percent since this point in 2013. FLAG: I have us flat as of Monday, and up one vs this moment in 2013 – 117 in 2013 vs 118 in 2015

40,000 stops and frisks versus 700,000 in 2011. Yes, but only a bit over 10,000 [10,528] through this year so far, so on track to cut that even further.

Marijuana arrests down 65 percent I don't have a straight number that matches that. So far this year, we are down 50% [48.3%] vs last year, as of this morning.

One million fewer police contacts by the fall. That sounds correct, but I don't have an independent source for it.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Sandy/transit
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:52:18 AM

Will incorporate

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB) [mailto:SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:54 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'
Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Sandy/transit

Let me know if you need more:

Sandy

*When BdB took office, Build it Back was totally stalled -- with no construction starts, no reimbursement checks, and virtually no offers made to homeowners.

*Today, as a result of our overhaul, nearly all active applicants have been made an offer – with about half already in construction or reimbursed.

*If he wants – now at 1,247 construction starts and 3,677 reimbursement checks.

Transit Capital $$

*This year, the City increased its capital contribution to the MTA to fully meet its request - $657 million, the largest level of general capital support to the MTA by the City since 2000.

*This is in addition to the $1 billion a year we provide in operating funds AND the $200 million more in capital we provide via the Vanderbilt Rezoning.

*Mayor has made clear, we're committed to working with the State and our regional partners to find a long-term plan for this vital State authority. That includes fighting for fair federal funds, as the Mayor did last week in DC.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com
Subject: FW: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 12:03:11 PM
Attachments: NYT Edit Board Prep-MGFactCheckEdits.docx

Adding Andrea

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:59 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; PhilWalzak [REDACTED] Walzak, Phil
Cc: 'Jon Fromowitz'
Subject: RE: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

Please use this version – see attached.

Everything has been fact-checked except for the part about snow storms.

Can you confirm receipt?

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:11 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; PhilWalzak [REDACTED]
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: RE: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

Give me half an hour and I'll bring this over the finish line

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 10:52 AM
To: PhilWalzak [REDACTED] Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: Re: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

Sorry for delay - here are my two cents... Need to be fact-checked...

From: Phillip Walzak <[REDACTED]>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 5:41 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

NYT Edit Board Prep

PART ONE: The Facts

In inaugural address, you promised two things:

1. Deliver what all mayors must.
2. Tackle inequality crisis.

We recognize a city government's first responsibilities: to keep our neighborhoods safe; to keep our streets clean; to ensure that those who live here – and those who visit – can get where they need to go in every boroughs. But we know that our mission reaches deeper. We are called to put an end to economic and social inequalities that threaten the city we love. And so today, we commit to a new progressive direction in New York.

The stats:

FIRST JOB

Crime down over 8 percent overall since this point in 2013 – a banner year for low crime.

~~Murders down 3.5 percent since this point in 2013.~~

~~Faced down 11 snowstorms – a record. (CHECK)~~

~~Last year was the safest year for pedestrians since recordkeeping began in 1910. So far this year, pedestrian fatalities are down another 17 percent from that historic low.~~

~~Vision Zero (DO WE HAVE A STAT HERE?)~~

~~When I took office, Build It Back was totally stalled. Today, nearly all active applicants have been made an offer – with about half already in construction or reimbursed (1,247 construction starts and 3,677 reimbursement checks).~~

~~Sandy Recovery (STAT?)~~

~~This year, the City increased its capital contribution to the MTA to fully meet its request - $657 million, the largest level of general capital support to the MTA by the City since 2000. Capital money for transit (NUMBER?)~~

Almost 80 percent of unionized workforce under contract versus ZERO in 2013.

INEQUALITY CRISIS

Full-day Pre-K ~~is will~~ now be truly universal – ~~we expect over 70,000 enrolled by this fall. 72,000 more kids included.~~

Over 100,000 middle schools kids in after-school programs.

Paid sick leave – 500,000 more covered.

Over 500,000 New Yorkers have made appointments applicants for ID NYC and over 200,000 have their ID cards in hand.

40,000 stops and frisks versus 700,000 in 2011, ~~– and on track to be even lower this year.~~

Marijuana arrests down 65 percent, nearly 50% this year compared to last year.

One million fewer police contacts by the fall.

Formatted: Not Highlight

Formatted: Highlight

Formatted: Not Highlight

Formatted: Not Highlight

Plan for 200,000 units of affordable housing – enough for 500,000 families.

Nearly 18,000 units ~~have been financed in our first year alone~~~~ready done.~~
(CHECK)

New rule for developers: affordable housing is required, not optional.

GOALS OUTLINED:

80x50 plan.

800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty or near-poverty in 10 years.

25 percent reduction in prison population in 10 years.

PART TWO: What's behind this?

It's all driven by a simple belief:

Government can make a positive difference in people's lives.

It happens when we deliver city services in an effective way – from trash pickup, to snow-clearing, to public safety, to transit.

It happens when we set big, bold goals for tackling inequality – from Pre-K/afterschool, to paid sick/living wage, to MUNI ID, to criminal justice reform, to affordable housing.

And/but – to do the WHOLE job – we need a partner in the federal government. We can use every tool at our disposal here – and we're fighting to get Albany to give us even more – but we need national shift to progressive priorities in order to do what NYC must do to lift up every neighborhood.

Enter: The Progressive Agenda.

There's something happening out there.

- 4 red states passed min wage hike in 2014.
- Fight for 15 – 200 cities, 60,000 people.
- LA just went to $15 min wage.
- Jim Kenney ran on Pre-K & ending stop-and-frisk – and I endorsed him – and he just won landslide victory in Philly.

Already seeing national political leaders shift their focus to progressive priorities.

A year and a half ago, not many folks were discussing the inequality crisis.

Now:

- HRC speaks out on CEO pay, carried interest, criminal justice reform, immigration.
- POTUS speaks out on carried interest with renewed interest.

- Top labor leaders, elected officials, progressive leaders, mayors – all joined together behind TPA in Washington – never been done before.
- Bipartisan group of mayors lobbied Washington for transportation bill. This is an urban priority that's also a progressive priority. Whether you're Republican or Democrat, if you represent a big city, you know the need for investing in transportation.

MISCELLANEOUS:

HRC will win New York State in 2016 no matter what.

BUT, we had the fifth worst voter participation rate in the country in 2014.

To energize/mobilize people to vote – she needs bold progressive vision.

Here in New York, that could make the difference between winning back the State Senate or not.

###

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Jon Fromowitz
Subject: RE: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 1:26:13 PM

Might be too late for this, but Vito tells me that correct number of snowstorms since he was sworn in is 18, not 11:

The total # of snowstorms since Jan 1, 2014 is 18.

2013-2014 Season (1/1/14) --- 7 storms

2014-2015 Season ---- 11 Storms

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 12:06 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Jon Fromowitz
Subject: Re: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

Got it - thank you!

From: <Gunaratna>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 at 12:03 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: FW: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

Adding Andrea

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:59 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; PhilWalzak [REDACTED] Walzak, Phil
Cc: 'Jon Fromowitz'
Subject: RE: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

Please use this version – see attached.

Everything has been fact-checked except for the part about snow storms.

Can you confirm receipt?

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:11 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; PhilWalzak [REDACTED]
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: RE: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

Give me half an hour and I'll bring this over the finish line

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 10:52 AM
To: PhilWalzak [REDACTED] Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: Re: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

Sorry for delay - here are my two cents... Need to be fact-checked...

From: Phillip Walzak <[REDACTED]>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 5:41 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: do you have NYT ed board notes you can share

From: Wiley, Maya
To: Leopold, Elana
Cc: Howe, Amanda; Fialkoff, Gabrielle; Fuleihan, Dean \(OMB\); Hagelgans, Andrea; nbaldick@hilltoppublicsolutions.com; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Jonathan@berlinrosen.com; John, Roxanne; Carey, Michael; Ko, Eunice; Thornton, Demetrius; Darlington, Mandy \(OMB\); lhegarty@akpdmedia.com; Chao, Raymond; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Schnake-Mahl, Gabriel; Griffith, Chantell; Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas; Shorris, Anthony
Subject: Re: MBDB: Weekly Planning Meeting
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 3:34:15 PM

Hi-

I will be diverting an award at the NYC Neighborhood Award ceremony, which starts at 6:30, so I'll miss the meeting, unfortunately.

Maya

Sent from my iPhone

On May 20, 2015, at 3:23 PM, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

This meeting will start at 6:30 sharp because of time constraints

Please be at Gracie by 6:30

MBDB: Weekly Planning Meeting

Scheduled: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 from 6:30 PM to 8:00 PM

Location: Gracie Mansion, The Parlor

Invitees: Howe, Amanda , Fialkoff, Gabrielle , Fuleihan, Dean (OMB) , Hagelgans, Andrea , 'Baldick Nicholas' , Wolfe, Emma , Wiley, Maya , Williams, Dominic , "Jonathan@berlinrosen.com" (Jonathan@berlinrosen.com)' , John, Roxanne , Carey, Michael , Ko, Eunice , Thornton, Demetrius , Darlington, Mandy (OMB) , 'Liz Hegarty' , Chao, Raymond , "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" (jfdc@akpdmedia.com)' , Schnake-Mahl, Gabriel , Griffith, Chantell , Walzak, Phil , Snyder, Thomas , Shorris, Anthony

Sent from my iPhone

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Tweet by Ann Coulter on Twitter
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 4:25:45 PM

Ann Coulter (@AnnCoulter)

5/20/15, 11:38 AM

Also: How do you like De Blasio's NYC??? THUG TELLS WHITES: BOW DOWN TO BLACKS, YOU'RE ALL GONNA DIE - bit.ly/1IPBJ6l

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Tweet by Abby Chastain on Twitter
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 4:37:29 PM

Abby Chastain (@ChastainAbby)

5/20/15, 12:09 AM

Mayor @BilldeBlasio joins the call for #DebtFreeCollege and expanding #SocialSecurity: share.boldprogressives.org/122613706t #UniteBlue
@BoldProgressive

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Subject: For tonight
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 5:42:55 PM
Attachments: TPAPlanSummer.docx

I was gonna bring copies of the following - let me know if anything seems out of whack

THE PROGRESSIVE AGENDA

5/20/15 through 7/31/15

EVENTS	DATE/HOURS REQ.
Blast updated TPA to lists	5/20
Build VIP and Grassroots lists	5/21-22
Begin Paid Online Recruitment Program	5/26
Launch Surrogates Media Blitz	5/27
Announce plans for Day of Action in July	5/28
Announce plans for Prez Forum (tentative)	6/1
Event with Reich around MoveOn videos	6/15
USCM in San Fran/event with Steyer	6/19-22
Premier of video re: hedge funders w/mayors	6/29
Day of Action on TPA	7/7
Gracie Confab, Part II	7/15
Produce state-by-state report on inequality	7/28
* Conversation with Gingrich via Politico	TBD
 MEDIA APPEARANCES
Reddit "Ask Me Anything"	5/24
Tavis Smiley	6/5
Face the Nation	6/21 (from SF)
Chris Matthews	6/25
60 Minutes	7/9 taping?
Today Show	7/15
VICE News/Talk Stoop	7/23
EJ Dionne, profile	7/29

From: Leopold, Elana
To: emmawolfe
Cc: JessieSingleton [REDACTED] Rebecca Katz; John Del Cecato; Regina Schwartz
Subject: Re: Tweet by Philly.com on Twitter
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 5:56:54 PM

Mayor Ivm

Sent from my iPhone

On May 19, 2015, at 10:40 PM, emmawolfe <[REDACTED]> wrote:

Bdb def wants both a tweet and a call plz this is a personal account - for official business please email at ewolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov

thanks
#

On May 19, 2015, at 10:26 PM, Jessica Singleton
<[REDACTED]> wrote:

Does that come from BDB tweet?

On Tuesday, May 19, 2015, Rebecca Katz
<[REDACTED]> wrote:

Cool

Sent from my iPhone

On May 19, 2015, at 9:30 PM, emmawolfe
<[REDACTED]> wrote:

Tweet and call plz

this is a personal account - for official business please email at ewolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov
thanks
#

On May 19, 2015, at 9:11 PM, Rebecca Katz
<[REDACTED]> wrote:

Boom.

Congrats tweet/ call?

Philly.com
(@phillydotcom)

5/19/15, 9:06 PM

AP confirms Jim Kenney wins Philadelphia's 2015 Democratic Primary #NextMayorPHL #PHL2015 Story to come

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

--

js / @jessay286

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: For tonight
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 6:08:40 PM

I would vote no - but not sure I get a vote

> On May 20, 2015, at 5:52 PM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

> I don't think we are Doing California

> ?

>

>

>> On May 20, 2015, at 5:42 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>

>> I was gonna bring copies of the following - let me know if anything seems out of whack

>> <TPAPlanSummer.docx>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 6:14:10 PM

CHICAGO (AP) — Improving child care needs to become a national priority, Hillary Rodham Clinton said on Wednesday, and she urged Republicans in Congress to provide more federal money to help working families care for their children.

The Democratic presidential front-runner said at a community center on Chicago's South Side that federal and state funding for child care has failed to keep up with the needs of families, many of whom have seen their costs soar during the past decade. Clinton said budget plans in Congress would pare back funding for child care even more.

"I am going to be putting forth plans to fix this," Clinton said. "We either want Republicans to get on board or get out of the way."

Clinton spoke for about 10 minutes at the start of a round table discussion on child care sponsored by the Service Employees International Union. Reporters were escorted from the event after her remarks.

The former secretary of state addressed issues closely watched by labor unions, telling the group that people must stand firm behind the right to organize and bargain collectively. She made her comments as union officials and fast food workers were holding demonstrations at McDonald's headquarters in suburban Chicago demanding increased hourly wages.

Clinton, who grew up in the nearby suburb of Park Ridge, Illinois, was attending two private fundraisers later in the day, appearing at media executive Fred Eychaner's home and at the home of billionaire entrepreneur J.B. Pritzker and his wife, M.K.

Eychaner has been one of Clinton's most loyal financial supporters and has been among the biggest donors to Priorities USA Action, the Democratic super PAC backing Clinton. Pritzker is a longtime Clinton donor and the brother of Commerce Secretary Penny Pritzker, who served as President Barack Obama's national finance chairwoman in 2008.

Clinton made her first visit to Chicago, also Obama's hometown, as a presidential candidate after two days of campaigning in Iowa, which holds the nation's leadoff presidential caucuses. The former first lady has been attending small events in early voting states like Iowa and New Hampshire to meet with local officials, campaign volunteers and voters as she begins her second presidential campaign.

Clinton returns to New Hampshire on Friday with small business events planned in state's Seacoast region.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: AP: Clinton says childcare needs to be a national priority.
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 6:26:10 PM

Clinton says childcare needs to be a national priority

By TAMMY WEBBER

May. 20, 2015 5:54 PM EDT

CHICAGO (AP) — Improving child care needs to become a national priority, Hillary Rodham Clinton said on Wednesday, and she urged Republicans in Congress to provide more federal money to help working families care for their children.

The Democratic presidential front-runner said at a community center on Chicago's South Side that federal and state funding for child care has failed to keep up with the needs of families, many of whom have seen their costs soar during the past decade. Clinton said budget plans in Congress would pare back funding for child care even more.

"I am going to be putting forth plans to fix this," Clinton said. "We either want Republicans to get on board or get out of the way."

Clinton spoke for about 10 minutes at the start of a round table discussion on child care sponsored by the Service Employees International Union. Reporters were escorted from the event after her remarks.

The former secretary of state addressed issues closely watched by labor unions, telling the group that people must stand firm behind the right to organize and bargain collectively. She made her comments as union officials and fast food workers were holding demonstrations at McDonald's headquarters in suburban Chicago demanding increased hourly wages.

Clinton, who grew up in the nearby suburb of Park Ridge, Illinois, was attending two private fundraisers later in the day, appearing at media executive Fred Eychaner's home and at the home of billionaire entrepreneur J.B. Pritzker and his wife, M.K.

Eychaner has been one of Clinton's most loyal financial supporters and has been among the biggest donors to Priorities USA Action, the Democratic super PAC backing Clinton. Pritzker is a longtime Clinton donor and the brother of Commerce Secretary Penny Pritzker, who served as President Barack Obama's national finance chairwoman in 2008.

Clinton made her first visit to Chicago, also Obama's hometown, as a presidential candidate after two days of campaigning in Iowa, which holds the nation's leadoff presidential caucuses. The former first lady has been attending small events in early voting states like Iowa and New Hampshire to meet with local officials, campaign volunteers and voters as she begins her second presidential campaign.

Clinton returns to New Hampshire on Friday with small business events planned in state's Seacoast region.

Associated Press writer Ken Thomas in Washington contributed to this report.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Leopold, Elana
To: Carey, Michael; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; "Jonathan@berlinrosen.com"; Ko, Eunice; Darlington, Mandy \(OMB\); Fuleihan, Dean \(OMB\); Chao, Raymond; Snyder, Thomas; Schnake-Mahl, Gabriel; "nbaldick@hilltoppublicsolutions.com"; Howe, Amanda; Hagelgans, Andrea; Shorris, Anthony; Wiley, Maya; Fialkoff, Gabrielle; "lhegarty@akpdmedia.com"; John, Roxanne; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Thornton, Demetrius; Griffith, Chantell
Subject: MBDB: Weekly Planning Meeting
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 6:31:57 PM

We have started this meeting

From: John Del Cecato
To: Klein, Monica
Subject: Re: 'Opt Out' Becomes Anti-Test Rallying Cry in New York State - NYTimes.com
Date: Thursday, May 21, 2015 8:03:47 AM

Oh duh - didn't realize it was A1. I only read online.

Significance is just that we were talking last night about education themes and opposition to testing came up

> On May 21, 2015, at 7:53 AM, Klein, Monica <MKlein@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> Yep I'm flagging for him just bc A1/edu related and mentions us but what's the specific relevance of this one? Just that opt outs getting national attention?
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
>> On May 21, 2015, at 7:50 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>
>> Important one for MBDB to see
>> <http://mobile.nytimes.com/2015/05/21/nyregion/opt-out-movement-against-common-core-testing-grows-in-new-york-state.html?referrer=>
>>
>>
>>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Jon Fromowitz
Subject: RE: How big government kills the American dream | The Seattle Times
Date: Thursday, May 21, 2015 1:09:47 PM

That works, but might not be proportional response. She's just a third-term congresswoman, although she is considering a rising GOP star (Latina, etc.)

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 21, 2015 1:09 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Jon Fromowitz
Subject: Re: How big government kills the American dream | The Seattle Times

Agreed. I was thinking it would be an op-Ed from MBDB and Mayor Murray though

> On May 21, 2015, at 1:03 PM, Gunaratna, Mahen <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> Can we get a surrogate to write an op-ed for the Seattle Times pushing back against the Congresswoman? There is a new state senator names Pramila Jayapal - she is a fave of progressives. This is a debate we want to have.
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
>> On May 21, 2015, at 12:51 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>
>>
>> <http://www.seattletimes.com/opinion/how-big-government-kills-the-american-dream/>
>>
>>
>>

From: Walzak, Phil
To: B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: RE: Harry Siegel
Date: Thursday, May 21, 2015 7:18:52 PM

I like Harry a lot, work w him a lot, sane voice over there to balance out Arthur Brownes crazy

Yes to both

From: B
Sent: Saturday, May 16, 2015 11:10 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: Harry Siegel

I think this is a very fair and thoughtful piece, including the ways it challenges me. I wonder if we should be cultivating this guy. What do you think -- both about the piece and about cultivating?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2015 11:13 AM
To: B
Subject: Harry Siegel

Mr. de Blasio goes to Washington: Sure, the mayor can be sanctimonious — but his national Progressive Agenda is actually a timely and important political play

Kevin Wolf/Kevin Wolf

Big ambitions

As Mayor de Blasio left the city this week to push his progressive contract with America based on what he's called his "historic," "transcendent" record here, his ego seemed to overshadow his accomplishments in the eyes of many New Yorkers. His approval rating fell to 44%, a new low, and more voters than not told Quinnipiac his involvement with national issues is distracting from his duties here.

It's indeed discordant to hear de Blasio in Washington — recycling his electioneering number about how 46% of New Yorkers lived in or near poverty at the end of the Bloomberg years, a number that hasn't budged under his watch — boasting about his record here even as his own police commissioner warns crime may be about to go up. As slow-motion crises at the city's jails, in its homeless shelters and at city housing continue under his watch.

But those gripes miss the point. De Blasio has political capital that must be spent now or squandered, and he's using his high profile with progressives to push an excellent agenda — one that could pay real dividends over time for New York City and the nation.

Here's what he's calling for, along with other left-leaning city, state and national Democrats: Paid sick leave. A higher minimum wage. Universal pre-k. An expanded Earned Income Tax Credit. And more.

In short, a national plan for making work pay and for helping working Americans who've been left behind as Wall Street's rising tide lifted only their own yachts .

In the absence of a real primary challenge to her candidacy, he's trying to push Hillary Clinton, who's taken just 13 questions from the press since announcing — six of them variations of “How do you feel about Iowa?” — to the left.

De Blasio was full of it to tell Rolling Stone that his election — effectively won in a five-way Democratic primary through a mix of smarts, luck, hard work and dark money — shows where New Yorkers' hearts are really at after 20 years of fluky non-Democratic rule. His whine in that same interview that his greatness hasn't been sufficiently appreciated at home was rightly mocked.

But for all that, he has good reason to talk himself up. It was by claiming an historic mandate that he was able to force Gov. Cuomo to give up the money for the universal pre-K program he promised and then delivered to New York. That had to happen in year one, when the mayor had just won office and the governor was running for reelection.

Similarly, de Blasio didn't schedule the presidential election or clear the Democratic field for Clinton. But that's opened a fortuitous window to jawbone on the national stage, and to earn some of the vastly valuable TV time already dedicated to the race.

That's smart politics.

Yes, de Blasio raises his own profile in the process, and uses some bandwidth he could otherwise dedicate to the city's immediate needs. But as he's said, we expect a mayor who can both walk and chew gum.

Even if Clinton ends up in lockstep with de Blasio's agenda, it's got no shot as long as Republicans control Congress. As we've seen over the last six years, a President can only do so much alone.

But in pressing Clinton, de Blasio is also doing the scut work of party and movement building, seeding a new generation of leaders who can press pols a step up, and some of whose members can eventually take that step themselves.

The idea, as longtime de Blasio ally Dan Cantor of the Working Families Party has explained, is to build power at the state level, knit that into a national network and use it all to push Democrats leftward.

Sure, de Blasio can be hectoring, sanctimonious and self-aggrandizing. What mayor hasn't been? The question is what his peacocking delivers.

He could indeed end up, as the News editorial page put it, becoming "America's public advocate," and repeating the Dinkins years, when the mayor went time and again to Washington, hat in hand, to plaintively plead with a Republican Congress for funds that were never going to come.

But he's not there yet. To his credit, he's plainly said inequality isn't a problem a mayor can solve alone, and that he won't wait for Washington to get things done here. None of that means he shouldn't try to influence the national conversation.

To do that, though, he needs to live up to his promises here. To prove a progressive Democrat can govern more equitably for New Yorkers who felt priced out of Bloomberg's "luxury city," without killing the golden goose.

I have my doubts, but here's hoping the master jawboner can keep his winning streak going. If he does, I'll live with him boasting about it endlessly thereafter.

hsiegel@nydailynews.com

Tags:

bill de Blasio

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea; jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com
Subject: NY Times Editorial Board Blog: The Vicious Cycle of High Inequality
Date: Friday, May 22, 2015 12:13:33 PM

Might be worth weaving this OECD report into future remarks

<http://takingnote.blogs.nytimes.com/2015/05/22/the-vicious-cycle-of-high-inequality/?smid=tw-nytopinion>

The Vicious Cycle of High Inequality

By VIKAS BAJAJ

MAY 22, 2015 12:10 PM

A homeless woman on Wall Street in Manhattan. Credit Mark Lennihan/Associated Press

Conservative political leaders and economists often say that we should not worry about growing inequality because it is not hurting growth or the ability of poor people to become richer by simply working harder. Many liberals have long rejected that argument and a report out Thursday provides fresh evidence that income inequality is indeed bad for the economy and appears to be self-perpetuating.

The report from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, a Paris-based group of industrialized nations, says that greater inequality is associated with slower economic growth. That is in large part because in more unequal societies the poorest people have less access to education, training and good jobs.

By the group's calculations, the rise in inequality in 19 of its members between 1985 and 2005 reduced economic growth in those countries by 4.7 percentage points between 1990 and 2010. The O.E.C.D. countries where inequality is the highest include the United States, Mexico, Turkey and Chile.

What's most interesting about the report is that it provides strong evidence that greater inequality hurts the economy by denying opportunities to the poorest people in society. In countries with high inequality, the O.E.C.D.

says that people at the bottom of the income distribution are less likely to graduate from a university, spend less time in school or college and are more likely to be unemployed. In other words, the report says, “in societies experiencing higher inequality, individuals might become less and less able to move outside the earnings class in which they were born.”

When American political leaders, including President Obama, talk about inequality they often take great pains to distinguish between what they call “inequality of outcomes,” or existing inequality between the rich and the poor, and “inequality of opportunity,” or the ability of poor people to become rich and vice versa. That is in large part because they do not want to be accused of engaging in “class warfare.” But the O.E.C.D. report shows that the distinction between outcomes and opportunity is false, or, at the very least, deeply flawed because high inequality today tends to lead to more inequality in the future.

The O.E.C.D. offers several suggestions for what governments can do about this: reduce the gender gap in employment and wages; increase access to better-quality jobs; invest in education and training; and provide more financial support to the poor. That’s an ambitious agenda and, sadly, one that lawmakers in Washington are unlikely to take up anytime soon.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor’s Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: quick favor
Date: Friday, May 22, 2015 7:54:51 PM

you sent out confirmation emails so that should work for them

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Friday, May 22, 2015 at 7:54 PM
To: Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: quick favor

Hmm. Ok thanks.

On May 22, 2015, at 7:28 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

You sent these invites out.... Not me.

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Friday, May 22, 2015 at 3:52 PM
To: John Davis <[REDACTED]> "Emerick, Amy"
<Amy.Emerick@mail.house.gov>, Michael Carey <mpcarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: quick favor

And I'm adding Michael Paul Carey, the Knower of All Things

From: John Davis <[REDACTED]>
Date: Friday, May 22, 2015 at 3:24 PM
To: "Emerick, Amy" <Amy.Emerick@mail.house.gov>, John Del Cecato
<jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: quick favor

Hi Amy, I'm adding John Del Cecato to this email as he may have a copy. Thanks!

John

On May 22, 2015, at 10:56 AM, Emerick, Amy <Amy.Emerick@mail.house.gov> wrote:

Hi john – my accountant is asking me for the original invite we got to come meet with your boss in NYC. I need this in order to process the expenses incurred. For the life of me, I cannot find the email. Would you me resending it to me? Thanks

--

AMY EMERICK CLERKIN
CHIEF OF STAFF | REP. RAÚL M. GRIJALVA (AZ-03)
202.225.2435 | amy.emerick@mail.house.gov

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Saturday, May 23, 2015 12:37:54 AM

Apologies, JDC. She apparently did mention TPA on the show and I missed it:

<http://www.demos.org/blog/5/22/15/real-time-bill-maher>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 2:47 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'
Subject: RE: <no subject>

Just watched the segment and didn't see any mention:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=y4iYBbmVpc>

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 2:37 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: <no subject>

Can you see if Heather McGhee said anything helpful re: TPA on Bill Maher last Thursday night ?

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Mayor de Blasio interview
Date: Saturday, May 23, 2015 2:02:24 PM

Can they do 5 pm on the 3rd?

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 11:29 AM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: FW: Mayor de Blasio interview

Whatcha think?

From: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 at 11:19 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Lauren Windsor" ([REDACTED]) <[REDACTED]>
Subject: RE: Mayor de Blasio interview

We were looking at being there Monday through Wednesday, is there any way to do it one of those days?

Mike Lux
1250 Eye St., N.W., Suite 250
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 628-7771
A Proud Member of Democracy Partners

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 10:59 AM
To: Michael Lux
Cc: 'Lauren Windsor' ([REDACTED])
Subject: Re: Mayor de Blasio interview

Would the morning of June 5th work?

From: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 12:24 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: "Lauren Windsor ([REDACTED]) <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Mayor de Blasio interview

John,

Lauren and I will be in NYC the first week of June, can we figure out a time to do that de Blasio interview you and I have been talking about?

Mike Lux
1250 Eye St., N.W., Suite 250
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 628-7771
A Proud Member of Democracy Partners

From: John Del Cecato
To: Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: OECD Report on Inequality
Date: Saturday, May 23, 2015 5:26:23 PM

Hot stuff - thanks for sending

From: <Shorris>, Anthony Shorris <AShorris@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Saturday, May 23, 2015 at 2:14 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: OECD Report on Inequality

Worth a look: this new OECD overall report makes clear that inequality hurts growth, and U.S. section of the report (link attached) has a very clear set of recommendations that align entirely with what we are proposing in TPA.

Here is the key section from summary of the overall report on inequality:

"Rising income inequality thus has a significant impact on economic growth, in large part because it reduces the capacity of the poorer segments – the poorest 40% of the population, to be precise – to invest in their skills and education. It has long been popular to say that while there is no social consensus around the desirability of tackling inequality of outcomes, for example by redistributing wealth, surely we can agree that it is necessary to ensure that we have equality of opportunities – i.e., that all should have the same life chances, regardless of their initial conditions. In reality, few societies come close to ensuring such equality of opportunities. However, the importance of research showing the links between family status and education shows that the distinction between opportunities and outcomes is not straightforward. Higher inequality of incomes of parents tends to imply higher inequality of life chances of their children. To achieve greater equality of opportunities without tackling increasing inequality in outcomes will be very difficult."

Here is the U.S. section:

www.oecd.org/unitedstates/OECD2015-In-It-Together-Highlights-UnitedStates-Embargo-21May11amParisTime.pdf

Anthony E. Shorris
First Deputy Mayor
City of New York
City Hall
New York, NY 10007
212-788-3191

From: Jonathan Rosen
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; FLONYC
Subject: Re: DN
Date: Saturday, May 23, 2015 10:51:39 PM

Would rather a liberal News to no News, but given that's probably wishful thinking I think it's good if it cuts back. Don't think it strengthens Post that much if at all and maybe raises questions about its continued viability .

Sent from my iPhone

On May 23, 2015, at 10:49 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

And that would be good for us, right? Or would that make the Post more dominant?
Or, conversely, would it hasten the demise of the Post -- prob just wishful thinking

From: Jonathan Rosen [<mailto:Jonathan@berlinrosen.com>]
Sent: Saturday, May 23, 2015 10:47 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; B; FLONYC
Subject: Re: DN

Total blank slate but agree probably better. Some rumor that his play is to cut back on the print paper and make it a web play. The Hill now only comes out in print three days a week on session days. Rest online.

Sent from my iPhone

On May 23, 2015, at 9:51 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

The Hill employed me as a columnist for a year - so that tells you something about their poor judgement!

On May 23, 2015, at 8:40 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Seems more reliable than cats, who seems both right wing and unpredictable

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Saturday, May 23, 2015 08:30 PM
To: B; Walzak, Phil; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; 'Jonathan@berlinrosen.com' <Jonathan@berlinrosen.com>

Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: DN

I have found the Hill to be balanced and decent to work with in the past

From: B
Sent: Saturday, May 23, 2015 07:58 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; 'Jonathan@berlinrosen.com' <Jonathan@berlinrosen.com>
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: DN

What would we think of him as an owner vs Catsimitides?

From: Klein, Monica
Sent: Saturday, May 23, 2015 07:41 PM
To: B
Subject: James Finkelstein

James Finkelstein

(you requested info on Finkelstein, who is considering purchasing the Daily News)

Finkelstein has been CEO and President of News Communications Inc. since June 2001.

He also serves as the Chief President of News Communications' subsidiaries, which owns Capitol Hill Publishing, the publisher of The Hill.

His father was Democratic powerbroker Jerry Finkelstein and his brother is former Manhattan Borough President Andrew Stein.

Finkelstein made a fortune when News Communications sold the New York Law Journal, National Law Journal and other publications to Steve Brill, who had started American Lawyer.

In 2009, Finkelstein put together a group of media powerhouses to join Guggenheim Partners in the acquisition of The Hollywood Reporter, Adweek and Billboard for about $70 million. The Finkelstein-led partners exited in 2013 and sold their shares to Guggenheim.

Finkelstein was a past owner of various weekly newspapers in Manhattan, as well as Dan's Papers in the Hamptons.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Unsolicited advice
Date: Sunday, May 24, 2015 12:56:20 PM

That's awesome.

> On May 24, 2015, at 12:02 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>

> See below. Thought you guys would appreciate his last comment

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Howard Dean

> To: Bill de Blasio

> Subject: Re: Unsolicited advice

> Sent: May 23, 2015 1:25 PM

>

> DC was great, and very positive for the country!! Well done!

> On Sat, May 23, 2015 at 1:17 PM, Bill de Blasio <[REDACTED]> wrote:

>

> Excellent advice and beautifully stated! And always feel free to offer advice. It is welcome. Thanks again for joining us in DC. It was an important moment that now we have to build on

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Howard Dean

> To: Bill de Blasio

> Subject: Unsolicited advice

> Sent: May 23, 2015 9:59 AM

>

> Do not engage with Eva. Ignore her and have your spokes person do it and be boring when she does. I like her charters even though they have their problems, but she is a press hound and you are the mayor.

> A friend once told me something similar in a more colorful way. "When you get in a mud wrestling match with a pig you both get dirty and the pig likes it."

>

> Not for attribution!!!!!!!

>

>

> Sent from my iPhone

> Sent via BlackBerry by AT&T

>

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: [REDACTED] Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Unsolicited advice
Date: Sunday, May 24, 2015 1:02:07 PM

I have done almost none. Unless there is a scheduled time, things like that just don't happen -- as you all should know by now, bluntly. We can send a formal mayoral thank you letter to all -- I welcome you guys doing that. If you want follow up calls or emails, you need to sched it. And we need a clearer message to them re: next steps

----- Original Message -----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Sunday, May 24, 2015 12:58 PM
To: B
Cc: [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: Unsolicited advice

Do you think you've connected via email with all or most of the speakers from 5/12 yet? We sent out thank you's on the staff level but were reserving speakers for you

> On May 24, 2015, at 12:02 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>

> See below. Thought you guys would appreciate his last comment

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Howard Dean

> To: Bill de Blasio

> Subject: Re: Unsolicited advice

> Sent: May 23, 2015 1:25 PM

>

> DC was great, and very positive for the country!! Well done!

> On Sat, May 23, 2015 at 1:17 PM, Bill de Blasio <[REDACTED]> wrote:

>

> Excellent advice and beautifully stated! And always feel free to offer advice. It is welcome. Thanks again for joining us in DC. It was an important moment that now we have to build on

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Howard Dean

> To: Bill de Blasio

> Subject: Unsolicited advice

> Sent: May 23, 2015 9:59 AM

>

> Do not engage with Eva. Ignore her and have your spokes person do it and be boring when she does. I like her charters even though they have their problems, but she is a press hound and you are the mayor.

> A friend once told me something similar in a more colorful way. "When you get in a mud wrestling match with a pig you both get dirty and the pig likes it."

>

> Not for attribution!!!!!!!

>

>

> Sent from my iPhone

> Sent via BlackBerry by AT&T
>

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: [REDACTED]
Subject: Re: TPA
Date: Sunday, May 24, 2015 1:56:34 PM

Ok, but since I'm not a mind-reader, how would I know about these "decent hits"???

----- Original Message -----

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Sunday, May 24, 2015 01:24 PM
To: B
Cc: [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: TPA

We did it on Thursday/Friday, as we discussed in planning meeting on Wed night.

We have actually had some decent hits since 5/14. You just weren't the originator. Idea is to have it be less about you and more about the movement.

> On May 24, 2015, at 1:08 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
>
> Classic abstract thinking, and not fully vetted with me. Double foul:
>
> 1. If you can produce others to do it, that's great. But that should have happened by now. I expect to see that this coming week. AND...
>
> 2. If you can't, you should put me out there. What are you guys afraid of, and why don't you let me make the ultimate decision. Our mission is to create momentum, and since may 14, we haven't done that
>
>
>
>

> ----- Original Message -----

> From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
> Sent: Sunday, May 24, 2015 12:57 PM
> To: B
> Cc: [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]>
> Subject: Re: TPA

>
> 1. We solicited our partners with big email lists to send sign-up request to their lists. Realistically won't know results of that until Tues.
>
> 2. Copy that.
>
> 3. I think Phil, Andrea, Emma, RKK, and I all agreed that Sunday shows weren't a good idea for the moment. Need to work to get our TPA members to do some lifting for us.

>
>
>
>> On May 24, 2015, at 12:28 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>

>>

>> 1. You guys have been way too quiet. Any news???

>>

>> 2. How's about a weekly written update re: new endorsers and other developments?

>>

>> 3. John, where do we stand with Stephanopoulos and Face The Nation? Feels like those ideas fell off the radar screen

>>

>> Thanks

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; jfdc@akpdmedia.com
Subject: Re: Vatican invite: July 21
Date: Sunday, May 24, 2015 2:17:06 PM

Bit of a mystery

Sent from my iPhone

On May 24, 2015, at 1:13 PM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Narrowed thread. Why is this mission critical?

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 24, 2015 08:00 PM
To: Abeywardena, Penny
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; FLONYC; John, Roxanne; Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: Vatican invite: July 21

This is very important. I lean to it, especially if we can knock off all overseas travel in one super-concentrated trip. Michael, pls discuss on sched call today

From: Abeywardena, Penny
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 09:59 AM
To: B
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; FLONYC; John, Roxanne; Carey, Michael
Subject: Vatican invite: July 21

Sir, the Pope has confirmed July 21st at the Vatican for the meeting with you and other leading global mayors to discuss how to address inequality. If your schedule permits, perhaps we add Milan Food Expo or Israel to this trip.

Penny Abeywardena
Commissioner
Mayor's Office for International Affairs

----- Forwarded message -----
From: Jeffrey Sachs <sachs@ei.columbia.edu>
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015
Subject: CONFIDENTIAL
To: Penny Abeywardena <

Pope Francis would like to meet Bill and other Mayors on July 21 in the Vatican.

Would that fit the schedule?

Jeff

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: TPA
Date: Sunday, May 24, 2015 4:24:15 PM

Sure

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 24, 2015, at 4:23 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> You think Pickrell, Hayley, RKK and me?
>
>
>
>> On May 24, 2015, at 2:28 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>
>> He wants to do a follow up call.
>> Who should be on it?

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Vatican invite: July 21
Date: Sunday, May 24, 2015 5:25:45 PM

12+ days out of nyc in July

Sent from my iPhone

On May 24, 2015, at 4:17 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I'm not reflexively opposed to this - think its high level and on merits. Just want to really reconcile this w fam vacay which is substantial

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 24, 2015 03:58 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Snyder, Thomas; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Vatican invite: July 21

So you guys want it? To show leadership and alliance with pope and Dolan? Or something else

On May 24, 2015, at 3:52 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Think dolan may also be going then too

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Sunday, May 24, 2015 03:42 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Vatican invite: July 21

Well, it is the Pope!

On May 24, 2015, at 2:19 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Bit of a mystery

Sent from my iPhone

On May 24, 2015, at 1:13 PM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Narrowed thread. Why is this mission critical?

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 24, 2015 08:00 PM
To: Abeywardena, Penny
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; FLONYC; John, Roxanne; Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: Vatican invite: July 21

This is very important. I lean to it, especially if we can knock off all overseas travel in one super-concentrated trip. Michael, pls discuss on sched call today

From: Abeywardena, Penny
Sent: Monday, May 18, 2015 09:59 AM
To: B
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; FLONYC; John, Roxanne; Carey, Michael
Subject: Vatican invite: July 21

Sir, the Pope has confirmed July 21st at the Vatican for the meeting with you and other leading global mayors to discuss how to address inequality. If your schedule permits, perhaps we add Milan Food Expo or Israel to this trip.

Penny Abeywardena
Commissioner
Mayor's Office for International Affairs

----- Forwarded message

From: Jeffrey Sachs
<sachs@ei.columbia.edu>
Date: Monday, May 18, 2015
Subject: CONFIDENTIAL
To: Penny Abeywardena
<

Pope Francis would like to meet Bill and other Mayors on July 21 in the Vatican.

Would that fit the schedule?

Jeff

From: B
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; "Jonathan@berlinrosen.com"
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Fw: NYT - Ginia Bellafante: De Blasio Is Not Insulting Enough to Be Popular
Date: Monday, May 25, 2015 12:44:06 PM

So I'm open to taking the challenge and starting to woo certain media, at least on an experimental basis. Let's start with alex burns. Then come up with a priority list and the limited hours we will devote to them, and let's see how it goes

From: Klein, Monica
Sent: Monday, May 25, 2015 09:18 AM
To: B
Subject: NYT - Ginia Bellafante: De Blasio Is Not Insulting Enough to Be Popular

De Blasio Is Not Insulting Enough to Be Popular
NEW YORK TIMES - Ginia Bellafante - May 22, 2015

In 1981, unless you were living in a cocaine-fueled delusion cultivated at Maxwell's Plum, there were plenty of reasons to find fault with the governance of New York City, by then under the direction of Mayor Edward Irving Koch for three years.

The mass transit system was a mess; streets and parks were famously filthy. While the mayor had a hand in rescuing the city from fiscal crisis, crime was soaring, making the year one of the most violent New York had experienced. Released in 1981, John Carpenter's cult film "Escape From New York" was steeped in the assumption that things were sure to get worse, imagining a not-too-distant future in which all of Manhattan had become a maximum-security prison.

Congenitally unable to assume the role of nursemaid administering consolation, Mr. Koch barreled through with a customary orneriness that left him offending one important constituency after another. Appearing at a synagogue late in his first term, he was asked to name a living statesman he greatly admired and responded by naming the Egyptian president, Anwar el-Sadat. When audience members booed him, the mayor told them to "shut up."

And yet, given all that, early in 1981 Mr. Koch's approval rating stood at 62 percent, making him one of the most popular politicians in the country. As Neil Barsky, who documented the mayor's career in the film "Koch," put it, he practiced street politics as virtually no one had or has. By the end of the year, Mr. Koch had won re-election in a landslide, taking all five boroughs.

Historically, New Yorkers have had a very high threshold for leaders who are blunt, theatrical, arrogant, intermittently or even consistently jerky — in possession of any combination of qualities that easily lend themselves to the shorthand "larger than life." Earnestness has played less successfully, in part because it is alienating, and doesn't inspire the kind of rage or impassioned disbelief that, directed at political figures, can be its own source of entertainment and pleasure. (There's no downside to the fun you can have complaining about a mayor who believes that people who like ferrets require psychotherapeutic treatment.) As happens so often in romantic life, craziness can keep you hooked while sanctimony just makes you stop paying attention.

Occasioning this reflection is the matter of Mayor Bill de Blasio's declining approval ratings. A Quinnipiac University poll released this month found that only 44 percent of voters approved of the job he was doing, a five-point drop since the beginning of the year and a nine-point drop since he took office in January 2014.

This is in spite of the facts that the city's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate fell in March, to 6.6 percent from 7.8 percent at the same point last year, and that the number of homeless families is shrinking for the first time in years. According to a March report from the advocacy group Coalition for the Homeless, the number of homeless families with children had declined by more than 300 since December. Last week, the mayor announced an ambitious plan to preserve and improve the city's public housing, so long ignored, which contains a population larger than Las Vegas's in deteriorating buildings, 60 percent of them more than 50 years old.

And yet still it is common to hear, among the educated liberals who helped elect him, that Mr. de Blasio hasn't lived up to his campaign rhetoric, that he hasn't done much, that he has been a disappointment, that inequality is still very much alive. Of course, if inequality could be rectified in a year, the mayor would be well positioned to run for Moses. The complaints are typically vague, but running through them are problems with style and affect: He's preachy; he's late; he lacks charisma; he's not around.

Among those who disapprove, there are certainly those who do so with greater intensity — preservationists who believe Mr. de Blasio's affordable-housing initiative will lead to overdevelopment; neighborhood people who believe there has been inadequate planning to support all the proposed construction; black civic leaders concerned that Mr. de Blasio's interest in criminal-justice reform is waning; rich people who feel offended that he doesn't involve himself in rich-people things.

In a matter of a several days, Mr. de Blasio managed to rankle both the Rev. Calvin O. Butts III and the event publicist Peggy Siegal. Ms. Siegal, prompted by the mayor's absence from the Metropolitan Museum of Art's Costume Institute Ball, told The Wall Street Journal that Mr. de Blasio "had disdain for the striving, successful New Yorkers," and that "it is a major shortcoming not to mingle with all classes," as if she were a regular at game night at the Walt Whitman Houses.

The criticism coming from the Upper East Side philanthropic community and the Harlem clerical community is strikingly similar though; both feel betrayed by a posture that suggests that the mayor doesn't need them. While it isn't uncommon to lose momentum during a second year in office — Michael R. Bloomberg's approval ratings fell sharply during his second year as mayor, before reaching a high of 75 percent in his second term — Mr. de Blasio seems to be having trouble making, and keeping, friends. That may have no consequence on his ability to be re-elected, but it could affect his trajectory as a national leader of the progressive movement, a role he seems to relish. Messiahs don't need voters; they need disciples.

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE:
Date: Monday, May 25, 2015 2:39:06 PM

THAT IS FINE. WHOEVER YOU WANT

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, May 25, 2015 2:41 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject:

I now think we should do a call with not only Pick, Hayley, RKK, and me - but also Fromo, Davis, and Jeani

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re:
Date: Monday, May 25, 2015 3:02:38 PM

U are a mess

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 25, 2015, at 3:01 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Can you resend to Fromo, Jeani, Davis? The latter two may not accept - > they don't work for me anymore... But we should try... The invite I forwarded > didn't go through & some thought it was right now
>
> Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
> jeani murray <[REDACTED]>
> John Davis <[REDACTED]>
>
>
>> On 5/25/15, 2:40 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>
>> I now think we should do a call with not only Pick, Hayley, RKK, and me - >> but also Fromo, Davis, and Jeani
>

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Video
Date: Monday, May 25, 2015 8:18:30 PM

Pls do

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Monday, May 25, 2015 08:08 PM
To: B
Subject: Re: Video

Roger. I can send you script too.

On May 25, 2015, at 7:51 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I can't look at it now, but I trust your judgment and I like anything that involves action and momentum-building

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Monday, May 25, 2015 07:09 PM
To: B
Subject: Video

Here's something we'd like our speakers to send to each of their lists tomorrow. The basic video would remain the same, but this one is tailored to DeLauro. Other videos would be tailored to individual speaker (so you'd see a line from Sharpton instead of Rosa for RAS, as an example).
https://dl.dropboxusercontent.com/u/16883534/P2Agenda_DeLauro_LR.mp4

From: Walzak, Phil
To: B; Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; "Jonathan@berlinrosen.com"; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: Confidential
Date: Monday, May 25, 2015 8:18:43 PM

We will process and discuss for the planning mtg

----- Original Message -----

From: B
Sent: Monday, May 25, 2015 08:16 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; 'Jonathan@berlinrosen.com' <Jonathan@berlinrosen.com>; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Fw: Confidential

See below. Some of us discussed this yesterday on the scheduling call, and we can make a final decision at the planning mtg Tues eve. Since the invitation is from the Pope and about fighting inequality, I think it is near impossible to turn down. So the current thinking is to compress all our overseas travel into a week or so, anchored by this Vatican event.

So that would mean one trip including Israel and the Vatican -- I wonder if the tabloids would be able to criticize THAT :) Michael, pls discuss what this would look like when we all meet Tues, and if there are any major conflicts. [REDACTED]. And no other trips planned out of town in August if we do the overseas trip this way. Food for thought.

-----Original Message-----

From: Jeffrey Sachs
To: Bill de Blasio
Subject: Confidential
Sent: May 25, 2015 9:37 AM

Dear Bill,
Greetings!

Congrats on the launch of the new progressive agenda. I've been traveling abroad (with Ban Ki-moon in Korea last week), but have been watching from afar!

The Vatican has confirmed to me again today that Pope Francis is indeed very keen to meet with you and other mayors on July 21 to discuss issues of social inclusion and sustainable development. (His encyclical on climate change will be issued in the next few weeks, before July 21).

They asked today whether you might be able to confirm your attendance. I've of course also been coordinating with Penny.

I have asked, and the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences has agreed, to host a symposium on Cities and Sustainable Development at the Vatican on July 22. I would love for you to present OneNYC to the other mayors on that occasion. I think it would have a HUGE impact.

I hope that we can get together soon. [REDACTED]

:~)

All best,
Jeff

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; "Jonathan@berlinrosen.com"; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Confidential
Date: Monday, May 25, 2015 8:37:01 PM

-bdb, flo
Let's not do this on email pls

----- Original Message -----

From: B
Sent: Monday, May 25, 2015 08:35 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; 'Jonathan@berlinrosen.com' <Jonathan@berlinrosen.com>; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic; FLONYC
Subject: Re: Confidential

A week of family vacation (just like last year) and a week of overseas travel (rather than the overseas travel being in August). And City budget and Albany session will be done, with more achievements under our belt. But I defy any purveyor of conventional wisdom to beat a Vatican - Holy Land trip for bulletproofness! :)

----- Original Message -----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, May 25, 2015 08:31 PM
To: B
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Jonathan@berlinrosen.com <Jonathan@berlinrosen.com>; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic; FLONYC
Subject: Re: Confidential

How many days outside of NYC for July?

> On May 25, 2015, at 8:18 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>

> See below. Some of us discussed this yesterday on the scheduling call, and we can make a final decision at the planning mtg Tues eve. Since the invitation is from the Pope and about fighting inequality, I think it is near impossible to turn down. So the current thinking is to compress all our overseas travel into a week or so, anchored by this Vatican event.

>

> So that would mean one trip including Israel and the Vatican -- I wonder if the tabloids would be able to criticize THAT :) Michael, pls discuss what this would look like when we all meet Tues, and if there are any major conflicts. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]. And no other trips planned out of town in August if we do the overseas trip this way. Food for thought.

>

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Jeffrey Sachs

> To: Bill de Blasio

> Subject: Confidential

> Sent: May 25, 2015 9:37 AM

>

> Dear Bill,

> Greetings!

> Congrats on the launch of the new progressive agenda. I've been traveling abroad (with Ban Ki-moon in Korea last week), but have been watching from afar!

> The Vatican has confirmed to me again today that Pope Francis is indeed very keen to meet with you and other mayors on July 21 to discuss issues of social inclusion and sustainable development. (His encyclical on climate change will be issued in the next few weeks, before July 21).

> They asked today whether you might be able to confirm your attendance. I've of course also been coordinating with Penny.

> I have asked, and the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences has agreed, to host a symposium on Cities and Sustainable Development at the Vatican on July 22. I would love for you to present OneNYC to the other mayors on that occasion. I think it would have a HUGE impact.

> I hope that we can get together soon.

:~)

>

> All best,

> Jeff

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; "Jonathan@berlinrosen.com"; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic; FLONYC
Subject: Re: Confidential
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 7:17:02 AM

And we are now considering an option to move the family vacation to August. Let's discuss tonight

----- Original Message -----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

Sent: Monday, May 25, 2015 08:31 PM

To: B

Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Jonathan@berlinrosen.com <Jonathan@berlinrosen.com>; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic; FLONYC
Subject: Re: Confidential

How many days outside of NYC for July?

> On May 25, 2015, at 8:18 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>

> See below. Some of us discussed this yesterday on the scheduling call, and we can make a final decision at the planning mtg Tues eve. Since the invitation is from the Pope and about fighting inequality, I think it is near impossible to turn down. So the current thinking is to compress all our overseas travel into a week or so, anchored by this Vatican event.

>

> So that would mean one trip including Israel and the Vatican -- I wonder if the tabloids would be able to criticize THAT :) Michael, pls discuss what this would look like when we all meet Tues, and if there are any major conflicts. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]. And no other trips planned out of town in August if we do the overseas trip this way. Food for thought.

>

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Jeffrey Sachs

> To: Bill de Blasio

> Subject: Confidential

> Sent: May 25, 2015 9:37 AM

>

> Dear Bill,

> Greetings!

> Congrats on the launch of the new progressive agenda. I've been traveling abroad (with Ban Ki-moon in Korea last week), but have been watching from afar!

> The Vatican has confirmed to me again today that Pope Francis is indeed very keen to meet with you and other mayors on July 21 to discuss issues of social inclusion and sustainable development. (His encyclical on climate change will be issued in the next few weeks, before July 21).

> They asked today whether you might be able to confirm your attendance. I've of course also been coordinating with Penny.

> I have asked, and the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences has agreed, to host a symposium on Cities and Sustainable Development at the Vatican on July 22. I would love for you to present OneNYC to the other mayors on that occasion. I think it would have a HUGE impact.

> I hope that we can get together soon. [REDACTED]

:~)

>

> All best,

> Jeff

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Mayor de Blasio interview
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 11:42:21 AM

You are going to have to do a briefing on this. Gasp!

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Sunday, May 24, 2015 7:33 AM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: Fwd: Mayor de Blasio interview

Will take it

Begin forwarded message:

From: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Date: May 23, 2015 at 10:20:52 PM EDT
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Lauren Windsor ([REDACTED])" <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Re: Mayor de Blasio interview

That will work, thank you.

Sent from my iPhone

On May 23, 2015, at 5:25 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

How about 5pm on 6/3?

From: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 at 11:19 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Lauren Windsor ([REDACTED])" <[REDACTED]>
Subject: RE: Mayor de Blasio interview

We were looking at being there Monday through Wednesday, is there any way to do it one of those days?

Mike Lux
1250 Eye St., N.W., Suite 250
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 628-7771
A Proud Member of Democracy Partners

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 10:59 AM
To: Michael Lux
Cc: 'Lauren Windsor' ([REDACTED])
Subject: Re: Mayor de Blasio interview

Would the morning of June 5th work?

From: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 12:24 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "'Lauren Windsor' ([REDACTED])
<[REDACTED]>
Subject: Mayor de Blasio interview

John,

Lauren and I will be in NYC the first week of June, can we figure out a time to do that de Blasio interview you and I have been talking about?

Mike Lux
1250 Eye St., N.W., Suite 250
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 628-7771
A Proud Member of Democracy Partners

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 12:44:19 PM

I already did.

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 12:45 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: <no subject>

Others to invite to the TPA call tomorrow:

RKK (unless MBDB rejected that??)

John Davis <[REDACTED]>

jeani murray <[REDACTED]>

Tom Snyder

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Video script
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 12:47:46 PM

Sorry for the delay on this! Here's the audio... The graphics are mainly just identifying the

Shot of Capitol Building
CG: Washington, DC
May 12, 2015

MBDB:
Today we're announcing and we're signing The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality.

(CG: Bill de Blasio
Mayor, New York City)

MBDB:
The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept: we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth.

Gov. Dean:
We have got to deal with the fact that 80% of this country have not had a raise in the last 20 years. America can't work if 80% of the people don't participate in the benefits of our extraordinary economic machine that we have.

(CG: Howard Dean
Former Governor, Vermont)

DeLauro:
Minimum wage, paid sick days, paid family leave, universal pre-k, immigration reform, restoring the right to organize and, yes, opposing bad trade deals. These are things that so many of us have been advocating for a long time.

(CG: Rosa DeLauro
U.S. Representative, Connecticut's 3rd District)

MBDB:
We're inviting everyday Americans to be a part of this. Sign up today at ProgressiveAgenda.US

(MBDB speaking, fade to TPA logo, URL, Twitter handle)

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: can i get you for 12PM on June 1?
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 2:39:14 PM

Gotcha... Call is always better than a meeting for me - but I defer to you on what makes the most sense & can do either one

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 at 2:06 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: can i get you for 12PM on June 1?

He is the person who is head of Center for Popular Democracy. I connected you and Aaron who knows one of the folks in CPD leadership- Brian Kittenring.

Local Progress which is a organization that helped us with outreach for transpo and TPA to some extent. They are small but have HUGE potential with progressive municipalities and organize mayors and other city officials... and a network of folks on the ground that can help translate legislative victories into TPA successes.

I think it's an important and interesting meeting for you to do. Happy to be in it with you. Want you to meet with him before the Lerner for framing reasons. If you want, we can do it as a call.

Thanks,
Steph

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 1:44 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: can i get you for 12PM on June 1?

Who is that? Could we do a call instead of a meeting?

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 at 1:37 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: can i get you for 12PM on June 1?

to meet with andrew friendman before our stephen lerner conversation...
stephanie

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: can i get you for 12PM on June 1?
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 2:40:48 PM

Just googled - Anna Maria (Andrew's co-director) [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] So now I'm really on board

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 at 2:06 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: can i get you for 12PM on June 1?

He is the person who is head of Center for Popular Democracy. I connected you and Aaron who knows one of the folks in CPD leadership- Brian Kittenring.

Local Progress which is a organization that helped us with outreach for transpo and TPA to some extent. They are small but have HUGE potential with progressive municipalities and organize mayors and other city officials... and a network of folks on the ground that can help translate legislative victories into TPA successes.

I think it's an important and interesting meeting for you to do. Happy to be in it with you. Want you to meet with him before the Lerner for framing reasons. If you want, we can do it as a call.

Thanks,
Steph

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 1:44 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: can i get you for 12PM on June 1?

Who is that? Could we do a call instead of a meeting?

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 at 1:37 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: can i get you for 12PM on June 1?

to meet with andrew friendman before our stephen lerner conversation...
stephanie

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: TPA
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 4:46:27 PM

See you then.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 4:40 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA

Sure - how about 430pm tomorrow (Wed) afternoon at City Hall?

From: <Snyder>, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 at 4:28 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: TPA

John – I would like to schedule a meeting for us to chart out the next few months or so on TPA. Do you want to suggest a time or two?

Tom Snyder
Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
City Hall
New York, NY 10007
212-341-5050

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: NPR: Despite An Economy On The Rise, American Paychecks Remain Stuck
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 6:20:44 PM

Good stuff... And it quotes Larry Mishel, a TPA co-signer!

From: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 at 5:05 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Fw: NPR: Despite An Economy On The Rise, American Paychecks Remain Stuck

Fyi

From: Clips
Sent: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 05:02 PM
Subject: NPR: Despite An Economy On The Rise, American Paychecks Remain Stuck

Despite An Economy On The Rise, American Paychecks Remain Stuck

NPR – Scott Horsley

<http://www.npr.org/sections/itsallpolitics/2015/05/26/408555544/despite-economic-climb-american-paychecks-remain-stuck>

As candidates hit the campaign trail, NPR looks at four major issues the next president will face from Day 1 in office.

For seven years, Michael Hall has been guiding tourists to the top of Seattle's Space Needle and back. It's a unique vantage point from which to watch the ups and downs of Americans' paychecks.

At first, the 30-year-old elevator operator shared in the success of the popular attraction. He got regular raises, thanks to a union contract. Then the contract ran out. Hall's pay hasn't budged in the past four years.

At first, Hall said, "I could put some money into savings every check. Still go out, grab a beer. But after about two or three years, suddenly it was like there's seven of us in a house. And then finally I started to find myself, about a year ago, living paycheck to paycheck."

It's a familiar story. Most Americans still aren't seeing big raises, even though the job market is slowly recovering.

In April, the official unemployment rate dropped below 5.5 percent for the first time in seven years. But the problem of stagnant wages goes back a lot further. Since 1979, average wages have barely kept pace with inflation.

John Pallaoro, a self-employed truck driver, says his paychecks stretched further four decades ago.

"I was able to purchase a suburban house in the mid-'70s for the price of barely one year of wages, two years at the most," Pallaoro recalled. "My standard of living is probably reduced by 50 percent from 40 years ago."

Stagnant wages aren't just a problem for individuals. When workers like Hall and Pallaoro don't have money to spend, it's a drag on the whole economy.

Experts point to a variety of causes for wage stagnation, including sluggish productivity growth. In the first decades after World War II, Americans' productivity climbed steadily, nearly 3 percent every year. But in the mid-'70s, that growth downshifted to less than 2 percent.

"One obvious lesson is it's better to be growing fast than to be growing slow," said James Pethokoukis, an economic policy scholar at the conservative American Enterprise Institute.

"The default Republican position would be you need to reduce taxes, you need to reduce spending so more of America's economic resources are being run by the private sector," he said. "And that would boost economic growth."

Other proposals such as education reform and increased investment in public works are also intended to boost productivity. But that's not the only challenge.

Since the 1970s, there's been a disconnect between productivity and wages, so even as workers produce more, they don't necessarily see the benefits.

"We have created lots of income, lots of output, lots of wealth over the last three decades," said Larry Mishel, president of the left-of-center Economic Policy Institute. "The problem is it has not accrued to the vast majority."

Virtually all of the gains have gone to those at the top of the income scale. In the past, politicians have sometimes tried to address that through the tax code: taking a slightly larger cut from the wealthy and using tax credits to pad the pockets of the poor. But there are political limits to that approach. Some people consider such government redistribution akin to adding or taking away points after the whistle has blown. Mishel and others argue that policymakers need to focus more on shaping the rules of the economic game, so average workers can command higher pretax wages.

"The problems with people's paychecks is not what the federal government is taking out in taxes. It's what employers are not putting in," Mishel said.

Elevator operator Hall agrees. He complains that while his paycheck has flat-lined for the past four years, business at the Space Needle has been up, up, up.

"We're busier than we ever were," Hall said. "One full elevator, that pays most of us working for the day. And we'll do that 100 times. It's sort of insulting that they can't afford to keep paying us enough to live in the city."

There is one stretch in the past 35 years that offers a glimmer of hope for struggling workers. That's the late 1990s — a period when not only was the economy growing fast but the gains were widely shared, so workers on every rung of the economic ladder were climbing together.

"What was distinct about that period can be summarized in two words: full employment," said economist Jared Bernstein of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities. "Or maybe three words: very full employment."

Unemployment in the late '90s was below 5 percent. Some months it fell below 4 percent. That gave workers everywhere lots of leverage to demand higher wages.

Short of full employment, Bernstein says, there are other policies that could boost workers' bargaining power, including a higher minimum wage, steps to make it easier for unions to organize, and immigration policies that limit the growth of a shadow workforce.

Many of those policies will be debated over the next year and a half by those who seek to occupy the White House. As the U.S. economic elevator starts to climb again, a central challenge for the next president will be making sure more American families aren't stuck on the bottom floor.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Fw: BUZZFEED: 9 Tips For Mental Self-Care From The First Lady Of NYC
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 8:28:36 AM
Attachments: image001.png

Sir, flagging the below in context of last night's discussion. As a specific strategy, we've broadened out the First Lady's media to go more directly at audiences via consumer outlets and bypass room 9 as necessary. Univision, for example, has gotten a lot of love because they've been willing to use content locally and nationally. We've also been doing podcasts and creating our own content.

Will discuss with Phil and John options for longer-lead pieces and diversifying outlets locally and nationally as we work to tell our governing story.

Thanks,
Andrea

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 01:50 PM
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: Bray, Jackie; Richardson, Jerika; Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas; John, Roxanne
Subject: FW: BUZZFEED: 9 Tips For Mental Self-Care From The First Lady Of NYC

Mayor, First Lady

Some strong mental health budget communications that are a direct result of our funding announcement a few weeks back. This is a great audience for us (for context, Buzzfeed has 5 million unique visitors per day according to recent stats available) and helps us get the message out without the Room 9 snark.

Audio of the interview from today's podcast with Buzzfeed is available here (The First Lady participated in a mental health-focused interview<<https://soundcloud.com/anotherroundwithhebenandtracy/episode-11-bob-loblaw/>> with Heben Nigatu and Tracy Clayton for the Buzzfeed podcast "Another Round.")

And Psychology Today should post the op-ed this week!

Best,
Andrea

From: Clips
Sent: Tuesday, May 26, 2015 1:48 PM
Subject: BUZZFEED: 9 Tips For Mental Self-Care From The First Lady Of NYC

9 Tips For Mental Self-Care From The First Lady Of NYC

BUZZFEED – Anita Badejo, Another Round

<http://www.buzzfeed.com/anitabadejo/shatter-the-stigma#.of6yzl0XG5>

Meet Chirlane McCray.

She is a feminist trailblazer and the wife and “No. 1 Adviser” of NYC Mayor Bill de Blasio. She is also the chair of the Mayor’s Fund to Advance New York City, a nonprofit that raises money to support a variety of initiatives. In the past year, McCray has put the issue of mental health at the forefront of her causes and recently announced the investment of $78.3 million annually to provide mental health care services in the New York City area. She also launched #shatterthestigma, a social media campaign aimed at destigmatizing conversations surrounding mental illness. For her, it’s an effort that is not only political, but personal: Her father suffered from depression, and her daughter, Chiara, has been open about her own struggles with depression, anxiety, and addiction. As Mental Health Awareness Month comes to a close, McCray sat down with BuzzFeed News to share her insights into an important — and often forgotten — aspect of the conversation surrounding mental health: self-care. Here are some of her tips for coping with life’s difficulties — and seeking help when you need it.

1. Don’t shy away from negative emotions...

“What you feel is what you feel. I like to think about carrying my weather with me. If I feel like I’m in a space where there are clouds and rain and lightning, then it’s like, ‘Something’s not right,’ and I need to do something about it, figure out some coping strategies, and if that’s not working then it means taking another step.”

2. ...And figure out what helps you process them.

“I have a lot of tools that I use. This morning I was listening to Chaka Khan and India Arie. It really helps me boost my mood. I love to move around. Dancing is a big thing for me. I love nature, so walking around the garden, looking at plants, just being in touch with the Earth helps me so much. Poetry. Writing. It’s a long list.”

(For ideas on other activities that can help you process emotions and practice self-care, check out this useful list.)

3. Remember that what you share online can be a barometer for yourself and others.

“I think that technology is great because we can actually sometimes see that people are not feeling the face that they’re putting forward to the world, and that way we can help people. Especially with young people, they’re putting it all out there, and I think that it’s actually a helpful tool for their friends to be able to notice when something’s not right so they can help get them to a better space.”

4. No matter how busy your schedule is, carve out time for yourself...

“Sometimes we think, Oh, I don’t have time to do this because our lists of tasks for the day is so long. But I know that if I don’t dance, if I don’t sing, if I don’t meditate, if I don’t take time for myself, I’m not going to be able to get up and get out there and do the work that I need to do. I need to be in a good space.”

5. ...and make sure it’s a regular habit.

“[Making time for myself] is definitely a challenge, but I have to do it. I would love to get to a point where I could say, ‘Oh, it’s going to take me two hours a day or an hour.’ I just know it has to be there and it has to be regular. [I] can’t save it all up for two weeks in the summer. It has to be part of my routine.”

6. If you know you need help, find someone you can trust...

“The best resource I found [when seeking help for my daughter] was actually another person. I found it really hard to figure out, What’s the good level of care here? [Therapists] are strangers. So, it really came down to finding one person who I trusted. I trusted her judgment and she pointed me in the direction of other people I could go to who’d be able to provide a certain level of care. I can’t recommend that more strongly...Just find that person that you can trust who can help.”

7. ...And don’t wait to do it.

“If you live with stress for a long period of time, it really builds up and builds up and becomes what we call ‘toxic stress’ and trauma and it’s much harder for people to make a comeback from that. So it’s really important for people to get it early. If you feel like something’s not right, reach out.”

(If you’d like to find a therapist and aren’t sure how, this beginner’s guide is a great place to start.)

8. Remember that therapists aren’t the only ones who can help...

“Sometimes healing doesn’t require a psychiatrist. Remember that, and know that there are healers actually all around us and people who have the ability to help with the healing process. But we do have to seek them out.”

9. ...And don’t get discouraged if you don’t find someone right away.

“Sometimes it does take a little time to find the right person. Even though you need that person now, don’t be discouraged. It may take a little while, but that person is out there. There’s a resource, whether it’s in your church, in your hospital, through your community organization, a trusted friend. Just keep looking, keep reaching out. It is the first step to healing.”

To hear more on mental health from NYC’s first lady, tune in to her interview on Another Round.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: HUFFPO: Tracking the Progress of the Progressive Agenda
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 10:48:04 AM

This may be why I can't get Roger Hickey to send our stuff out to his list! (He works for Campaign for America's Future, too - and maybe he's pushing his agenda over TPA - even though they have so much in common)..

I'm gonna take another run at people like Bob Creamer & Deepak today - although I think there's no substitute for a little TLC from you - that's what sets us apart from these other groups...

From: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 at 10:24 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Fw: HUFFPO: Tracking the Progress of the Progressive Agenda

Let's discuss tonight

From: Clips
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 10:21 AM
Subject: HUFFPO: Tracking the Progress of the Progressive Agenda

Tracking the Progress of the Progressive Agenda

HUFFINGTON POST - Richard Eskow - 10:12 am

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/rj-eskow/tracking-the-progress-of_b_7451066.html

We live in a political era dominated by corporate cash, billionaire "beauty pageants," and a right-wing noise machine whose rhetorical phasers are permanently set to "stun." It's easy to lose track of ourselves when we're distracted from moment to moment by Fox News pinwheels and celebrity-driven media circuses.

But out behind the tents, where the carnival lights aren't as bright, a lot of people are fighting the good fight. How's that fight going? One way to track its progress is by measuring recent developments against a populist or progressive agenda.

There are a number of such documents in circulation at the moment, each of which has its own strengths. Bernie Sanders has a 12-point economic agenda, New York Mayor Bill de Blasio is offering a 13-point agenda, and Robert Reich is currently in the process of rolling out "ten ideas to save the economy."

These plans share many ideas and goals in common. The one I know best is the 12-point agenda called "Populism 2015 Platform: Building a Movement for the People and the Planet." It is jointly sponsored by the Campaign for America's Future*, National People's Action, USAction, and the Alliance for a Just Society. This first of several posts will take a look at the first three points in that platform.

While all twelve points are deeply interconnected, the theme of the first three might be summarized as "growth." The first, "Rebuild America for the 21st Century and Create Jobs for All," reads as follows:

"America's public infrastructure - from roads to rail to water and energy systems - is increasingly dangerous to our health and a drag on our economy. National investment in rebuilding America will create millions of high-quality jobs, bid wages up, help close the racial jobs gap, and make America a better place to live and work."

Infrastructure is the first item on Sen. Sanders' list as well. Sanders has introduced a bill, cosponsored by Sen. Barbara Mikulski (D-MD), which would invest $1 trillion in infrastructure spending over the next five years.

Sanders says the bill would create 13 million "decent-paying jobs." That estimate appears quite reasonable, especially when compared to the 27 million jobs which the New America Foundation estimated would be created by a $1.2 trillion infrastructure program. (The 2011 paper is no longer available online, but a summary description can be found here.)

And, while the Washington Post and others have characterized Sanders' $1 trillion infrastructure budget as politically "problematic" (to use a Post blogger's word), it seems relatively modest when compared to the $3.6 trillion which the American Society of Civil Engineers estimates must be spent by 2020 in order to return our decaying roads, bridges, and other infrastructure to proper working order.

This idea, like many offered by the left, is extremely popular with the American people. 75 percent of voters in a November 2014 NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll indicated that they supported "increasing spending on infrastructure projects for our roads and highways."

If creating these jobs would have such a positive effect on employment, if our infrastructure is in such urgent need of repair (as evidenced by last week's fatal Amtrak crash), and if the idea is so popular - why, then, would passing a bill like this be considered "problematic"?

Because we have a political system that responds to the desires of an oligarchy, rather than to those of the public at large. That's not one person's opinion. It is what a Princeton University study concluded in 2014.

Nevertheless, the public debate on infrastructure is shifting - although probably not quickly enough to prevent the next tragedy.

In a similar vein, the Platform also called for investment in a "Green Economy," saying:

"Catastrophic climate change is a clear and present danger. The United States should lead the global green revolution that builds strong and resilient communities. Public investment in renewable energy and energy efficiency can create jobs and opportunity, particularly in communities of color that have borne the worst consequences of toxic corporate practices." Here, as with infrastructure, two critical needs are being addressed - in this case, the fate of the planet and the need for jobs and economic growth. And here, too, the public is on the right side of the issue. In a December 2014 poll, 80 percent of voters indicated that they found the idea of

"a clean energy policy that promotes American innovation and manufacturing jobs, speeding up the nation's transition to cleaner, renewable forms of energy like wind and solar" to be "appealing." (51 percent of them found it "extremely appealing.")

All government spending programs (except defense) are anathema to conservatives. But the right seems to be spurred into a special frenzy by green jobs, perhaps thanks to encouragement from the Koch Brothers and the other "hidden persuaders" driving the conservative agenda. The "Green Economy" agenda, whose virtues should be self-evident, has some tough battles ahead -- at least until the political climate shifts.

The next item in the "Populist Platform" is "Raise Wages, Empower Workers and Reverse Inequality." It is described as follows:

"Inequality has reached new extremes, as more and more jobs become contingent and part-time, with low pay and few benefits. We should lift the floor under every worker by guaranteeing a living wage, paid sick and vacation days, and affordable health care. We should empower workers to form unions and bargain collectively. We must curb perverse CEO compensation policies that give executives personal incentives to plunder their own companies."

Some first steps toward curbing CEO pay were included in the Dodd-Frank financial reform bill of 2010. Unfortunately, the Securities and Exchange Commission has taken more than five years to implement a key disclosure provision in that law. And "say on pay" provisions allowing shareholders to hold a (nonbinding) vote on executive pay have not had the impact some hoped. 92 percent of executive pay packages received 70 percent shareholder support or more in 2014.

However, in one encouraging development, shareholders this month approved the pay package for J.P. Morgan Chase CEO Jamie Dimon and other senior executives by an unexpectedly narrow margin. Shareholder activism can become an important aspect of economic reform if properly directed. In this case the "no" votes were apparently led by institutional investors, a group which typically includes union pension funds.

And speaking of unions: Labor empowerment has not received the political support from Democrats that might have been expected, given union support for Democratic candidates. It would have been reasonable, for example, for the newly-elected President Obama to offer stronger support to 2009's Employee Free Choice Act (EFCA) strengthening workers' collective bargaining rights. That didn't happen.

But at least one other form of worker organizing has had considerably more success. The "Fight for 15" movement of fast-food employees and other low-wage workers has quickly grown from a spontaneous set of demonstrations with a seemingly unrealizable demand - a $15 per hour minimum wage - to a well-organized and well-supported effort whose goal now seems eminently achievable.

Cities have taken up the call. In April Seattle moved to raise its minimum wage to $15. San Francisco raised its minimum wage to $12.25, with a plan to increase it to $15 by 2018. Los Angeles recently voted to raise its minimum wage to $15 by 2020. And New York Governor Andrew Cuomo recently indicated he would create a Wage Board to review restaurant workers' salaries after a minimum wage proposal failed to make it through the legislature in that state.

The Fight for $15 offers some compelling lessons for the progressive movement. For one thing, it demonstrates that while national-level (presidential and congressional) campaigns are part of a progressive strategy, they can't be the only approach. Municipalities, labor organizing, and street-level demonstrations are powerful tools for change. Our media's fixation on national campaigns and political celebrities should not make us overlook these vitally important fields of action - especially not when we're learning that the struggle for growth is having its greatest successes, appropriately enough, at the "grassroots" level.

Major systemic changes are needed to address economic inequality. But the Fight for $15 shows us that seemingly unachievable goals can be reached. It tells us that we mustn't let commentators or political insiders determine the limits of the politically possible. That is for the public, not the pundits, to decide.

We've learned that it's wrong to aim too high, with a focus on national elections that neglects local and state organizing. And when it comes to a movement's goals and ambitions, the Fight for $15 is teaching us something even more fundamental: that it's a mistake to set our sights too low

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 2:06:31 PM

No

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 27, 2015, at 2:01 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Any news re: Al Gore?

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 3:16:26 PM

Cool! I can come meet u send me email when done

From: John Del Cecato
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 3:13 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: <no subject>

cool

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 at 3:10 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: <no subject>

I can meet u after ur mtg w tom

From: John Del Cecato
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 3:08 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: <no subject>

I'm free now if you are! Or I could come to City Hall now, as I have a 430pm meeting with Tom

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 at 3:01 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: <no subject>

Yes. When can we do a call?

From: John Del Cecato
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 3:00 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: <no subject>

Hey there. Can I ask a really stupid question that betrays just how much I'm NOT an organizer?

We wanted to do a Day of Action for TPA with our signers. But I realize that I really don't know what the hell that means.

Can you give me a little insight into what you did re: transportation in DC? MBDB was really into it - so I'd love to steal all of your ideas & try to make them work for my little project!!

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: RE: The Agenda
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 4:01:15 PM
Attachments: image002.png

Yeah, Glenn has been terrible.

But Michael Grunwald is progressive and the new Editor at Large for The Agenda – he is the one who wrote that book about Obama and the Recovery Act (“The New, New Deal”...)

Might be worth a shot.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 3:57 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
Subject: Re: The Agenda

They have asked for mayor. Glenn thrush who has not been good to us

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 03:57 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea Subject: The Agenda

Politico launched it today – billed as the “new window on the policy conversations shaping America”?

Maybe we could pitch them on something TPA-related? Profile on how MBdB’s ideas are incubating in NYC, serve as a harbinger for future DC action?

Dunno, just thinking out loud.

<http://www.politico.com/agenda/>

Welcome to The Agenda

Welcome to The Agenda, POLITICO's new home for the daily conversation around the ideas reshaping the country. What's really at stake today, this week, and in the next session of Congress? How do we connect the dots between the robust debates in the war of ideas and the policy proposals actually on the table here in Washington?

We'll aim to answer those questions, in many different ways, with The Agenda. We all know the Internet is drowning in smart, interesting stuff already – including more than its share of brilliant wonkery, smart analysis, granular procedural reporting and lots and lots of clever takes on the debates of the day. We admire so much of it, and we hope that The Agenda can add to those debates by connecting you directly with the issues and ideas that are on Washington's actual agenda today, and tomorrow.

POLITICO is proud to have assembled a team of incisive, deeply sourced, agile journalists who can approach these questions in fresh and accessible ways. Senior writer Michael Grunwald, The Agenda's editor at large, is one of the most acute and original voices in American policy journalism, marrying an expert's grasp of details, investigative reporting chops and the clear and original voice of the bestselling author he is. A longtime correspondent for Time magazine and before that for The Washington Post, Grunwald will contribute both quick smart reporting and interviews – and the signature deep dives for which he is known, including his smart, revelatory report from “inside the war on coal” which leads our special report on the future of power in today's launch issue. POLITICO senior writer Darren Samuelsohn brings 15 years of Capitol Hill reporting depth to the team, training a laser on what's happening right now, and why policy unfolds the way it does. Darren's wide-ranging interests, from technology to the ins and outs of defense policy and the politics of climate change, are already an immeasurable asset to the project. Assistant editor Danny Vinik, who arrives this week from The New Republic, has established himself as one of the most ambitious young analysts in the DC wonkosphere. Our contributing lineup is equally exciting: Boer Deng will bring her science expertise and original eye for a story; David Lazer, of Northeastern University, runs one of the most ambitious political data labs in America. We'll also feature the work of Politico Magazine's Margaret Slattery, designer Heather Barber, and fellow Nolan McCaskill – and beyond all that, week in and week out, a rotating series of thinkers from academia, industry, and politics.

We hope you read the Agenda two ways. First, it's an engaging daily policy magazine that tracks the Washington conversation as it happens, and puts you in the flow of the new ideas that shape it. For that, bookmark www.politico.com/agenda, or follow #Agenda on Politico's Twitter and Facebook feeds. Second, watch for our deep-dive monthly issue packages, where we identify a major decision point for American leaders and bring together original investigative reporting with direct insights from the thought leaders who are every day shaping these debates. Look, as well, for smart graphics, lots of data points, weekly videos, and as many new ways in to the debate as we can think up.

I came to POLITICO a few months ago from editing the Boston Globe's Sunday Ideas section to launch this project precisely because of the chance to connect those dots – to publish policy ideas not in some academic vacuum, but in the context of the Washington world in which their fate is decided.

The birth of new policies and the fights over old ones — that's the machinery where tomorrow's country gets forged. Some call this wonky. We believe it's important and fascinating. Welcome to The Agenda, and thanks for reading.

– Stephen Heuser

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Update
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 5:33:20 PM

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB
FR: JDC
RE: TPA
DA: 5/27/15

We've come a long way.

17 months ago, you delivered your inaugural address – and focused it squarely on income inequality.

At the time, it was a pretty lonely place to be. Aside from a handful of progressive academics and columnists, very few prominent voices were focused on income inequality. Politicians at every level were sticking to the same “safe” talking points – pabulum that offered nothing but vague references to “helping the middle class” and “increasing opportunity.” Harry Reid went so far as to warn his caucus that they were not to go the “de Blasio route.”

We saw what happened. After running away from the President and refusing to embrace economic populism, Democrats got trounced in the midterm elections.

So a little more than six months ago, you spoke out, offering some tough-love advice in the Huffington Post. Your words caused a stir -- with a whole lot of folks getting their backs up, but quite a few progressives embracing your analysis.

The tragic events of December drew attention away from the national conversation on income inequality, but by late January/early February, it re-emerged.

In February, we put together a plan for elevating the progressive solutions to income inequality. As we saw during last week's planning meeting, we not only achieved the vast majority of the items contained in that plan, we went above and beyond: the joint op-ed with Warren, the speech at Roosevelt, and, most notably, the signing of TPA in Washington – a convening of progressive leaders that I believe was unprecedented in modern times.

To be clear, progressives have been doing good work for a long time – but very often in silos – and seemed to always find a way to compete with each other, rather than come together in common cause.

The trip to California yielded some media, but – more important – allowed you to build relationships with some key progressive allies on the West Coast.

On May 19th, we re-launched TPA to accommodate those who felt the original document was lacking. Coincidentally, that same day saw the City of Los Angeles raise their minimum wage to $15, and Philadelphia Democrats overwhelmingly chose the progressive candidate in a competitive primary.

Since the 19th, Team TPA has been primarily focused on pushing our new partners to drive the everyday progressive activists in their networks to sign onto our document. We've had some success – but not nearly enough.

As we've discussed, the past 7-10 days have not been ideal – and that's my failure, not yours. I'm still new to this thing you call "organizing," and haven't done a great job at seizing on the momentum we all worked to create. Hayley has been doing yeoman's work as always, and RKK has been generating ideas for media appearances.

But Team TPA is beginning to feel the strain of having lost 2 or 3 of our folks to their day jobs. Jeani is back at the Labor Table – although is still offering ideas pro bono. John Davis started a new job with the Senate Energy Committee. While Pickrell is always available to me, and has given me as much time as possible, he's now being sucked into the work of his other clients – a possibility he'd warned me about at the start of this project. I didn't do a good job of planning for the departure of these folks, and now TPA is paying the price.

That's not to say the movement has been moribund - far from it. Many of our partners have been doing great surrogate work – talking to their members, getting quoted in news stories, doing television appearances that promote our agenda, writing op-eds, circulating videos, and so on.

But we need a plan going forward, as you've said with understandable frustration.

Before I get to that, let's just keep in mind what some of our initial goals were. Building a national presence around income inequality – check. Establishing a national network among like-minded progressives – check. Generating enthusiasm among some well-heeled, kindred spirits – check. Pushing the national conversation away from small-ball, spineless non-policies and towards bold, progressive actual-policies – BIG check.

On that last count, think about the conversations you've had with some of the most powerful people in our orbit. Whether cordial or confrontational, those discussions make it clear that we've gotten people's attention, to say the least.

Not bad for six months. Now...on to Act Two!

In the short term, we need to push our partners, and their members, towards something tangible. I think our best bet is a Day of Action – preferably sometime in late June, or mid-July.

We could also host Gracie Confab: Part II, bringing together a dozen leaders from our signing ceremony in Washington – with a focus on the top names we wanted for the first round, but couldn't get – for a whole new batch of voices offering thoughts on next steps (tactical, not substantive).

I would aim for doing that in late June or mid-July – whichever isn't filled by the Day of Action.

Third, I think we should plan an Issues Conference – in concert with some of our New York-based partners (Roosevelt, OSI, etc) that features a Big Name speaker (think: Al Gore), and produce a substantive discussion about how to understand the goals of TPA from a policy perspective. We haven't given nearly enough time to some of the very substantive pieces on our agenda – like closing the CEO pay loophole, implementing a national child-care program, moving towards debt-free college, or reforming the NLRA to enhance the right to organize. That would be an August event – when the news cycle is slower & we have a better chance at getting coverage.

Finally, we should do an event on inequality issues impacting Communities of Color – from sentencing reform, to stop-and-frisk reform, to Pre-K and its specific impact on low-income families of color. We have done so much in these areas on the local level that it makes all the sense in the world to gin up Van Jones, Heather, and other like-minded folks to really plan and promote the hell out of something like this.

Those events would be supplements to our day-to-day list-building, surrogate media scheduling, and TPA call time (with you reaching out to both Signers and Non-Signers, seeking ideas/spreading love).

In the long-term, we should discuss building a permanent enterprise. That's a huge endeavor, and requires funding and staff – but it's something we have the capacity to fund and build. Think of it as the progressive version of Third Way – a hub of substantive policy ideas, strategic advice, farm-team building, and progressive networking. Third Way has about a dozen permanent staff. I think we could get away with a team that's half that size, if we hire the right folks.

In terms of immediate staffing, I'm talking to Phil about a guy who might be a Pickrell replacement, and I will get with Jeani and Davis about who might fill the roles that they did so well for us. My guess is that we'll need $20K a month to lock those folks down – although it can be a short-term contract that evolves into something more fiscally manageable in the long-term.

The X-factor here is Hillary Clinton. At some point this summer – probably on June 13th – she's going to outline her economic vision. I hope/pray/expect that it will be in sync with most of the things for which TPA has been advocating. If that's the case, we'll need to take OFF our TPA hats, and have a separate conversation on what you do there.

I don't want to get into that business in this memo, as it will be a political discussion that's not in the TPA realm. But off the top of my head, I'd say that an event in New York City (probably the City Hall steps) with you and a number of folks who've been simpatico on progressive issues (with a great deal of gender/racial/geographic diversity) – but not with HRC herself. More on that when the time/circumstances are appropriate.

We'll talk more this evening, but those are my initial thoughts.

###

From: Hayley Prim
To: Leopold, Elana
Cc: Carey, Michael; de Alwis, Ronalie; Chao, Raymond; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; [REDACTED] Rebecca Katz \(hilltoppublicsolutions.com\)
Subject: Re: MBDB: TPA Conference Call Follow Up En Route
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 5:41:47 PM

+ RKK

On Wed, May 27, 2015 at 5:42 PM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

| We are delayed. Please stand by

--

Hayley Prim

c: [REDACTED]

From: John Del Cecato
To: Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael; de Alwis, Ronalie; Chao, Raymond; [REDACTED]
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; John Davis; Rebecca Katz; jeani murray
Subject: Re: MBDB: TPA Conference Call Follow Up En Route
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 5:41:49 PM

Adding peeps

On 5/27/15, 5:42 PM, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>We are delayed. Please stand by

From: Leopold, Elana
To: Carey, Michael; de Alwis, Ronalie; Chao, Raymond; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; [REDACTED]
[REDACTED] Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: MBDB: TPA Conference Call Follow Up En Route
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 6:32:45 PM

+ tom

Sent from my iPhone

> On May 27, 2015, at 5:42 PM, Leopold, Elana <ELEopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> We are delayed. Please stand by

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Sunday
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 6:41:11 PM

Works for me

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 06:22 PM
To: B
Subject: Sunday

Face the Nation is booked. What about This Week with George from NYC, in studio? Not 100% sure they can do it - but wanted to take your temperature... We'd need to do some serious prep, of course

From: John Del Cecato
To: Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael; de Alwis, Ronalie; Chao, Raymond; [REDACTED]
[REDACTED] Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: MBDB: TPA Conference Call Follow Up En Route
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 6:42:48 PM

We are dialed in

On 5/27/15, 6:38 PM, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>Please dial in now

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 7:14:46 PM

Works!

From: John Del Cecato
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 6:24 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: <no subject>

10am?

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 at 6:00 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: <no subject>

Yes sorry! Lets schedule something for AM?what aworks

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 6:00 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: <no subject>

Yeah I had to split - sorry - talk tomorrow?

On May 27, 2015, at 5:49 PM, Yazgi, Stephanie <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Hi did I miss you

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 5:25 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: <no subject>

Okay, I'm wrapping up with Tom

From: John Del Cecato
To: Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Can you send memo to me please
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 7:37:38 PM
Attachments: default.xml
MEMORANDUM.docx

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB
FR: JDC
RE: TPA
DA: 5/27/15

We've come a long way.

17 months ago, you delivered your inaugural address – and focused it squarely on income inequality.

At the time, it was a pretty lonely place to be. Aside from a handful of progressive academics and columnists, very few prominent voices were focused on income inequality. Politicians at every level were sticking to the same “safe” talking points – pabulum that offered nothing but vague references to “helping the middle class” and “increasing opportunity.” Harry Reid went so far as to warn his caucus that they were not to go the “de Blasio route.”

We saw what happened. After running away from the President and refusing to embrace economic populism, Democrats got trounced in the midterm elections.

So a little more than six months ago, you spoke out, offering some tough-love advice in the Huffington Post. Your words caused a stir -- with a whole lot of folks getting their backs up, but quite a few progressives embracing your analysis.

The tragic events of December drew attention away from the national conversation on income inequality, but by late January/early February, it re-emerged.

In February, we put together a plan for elevating the progressive solutions to income inequality. As we saw during last week's planning meeting, we not only achieved the vast majority of the items contained in that plan, we went above and beyond: the joint op-ed with Warren, the speech at Roosevelt, and, most notably, the signing of TPA in Washington – a convening of progressive leaders that I believe was unprecedented in modern times.

To be clear, progressives have been doing good work for a long time – but very often in silos – and seemed to always find a way to compete with each other, rather than come together in common cause.

The trip to California yielded some media, but – more important – allowed you to build relationships with some key progressive allies on the West Coast.

On May 19th, we re-launched TPA to accommodate those who felt the original document was lacking. Coincidentally, that same day saw the City of Los Angeles raise their minimum wage to $15, and Philadelphia Democrats overwhelmingly chose the progressive candidate in a competitive primary.

Since the 19th, Team TPA has been primarily focused on pushing our new partners to drive the everyday progressive activists in their networks to sign onto our document. We've had some success – but not nearly enough.

As we've discussed, the past 7-10 days have not been ideal – and that's my failure, not yours. I'm still new to this thing you call "organizing," and haven't done a great job at seizing on the momentum we all worked to create. Hayley has been doing yeoman's work as always, and RKK has been generating ideas for media appearances.

But Team TPA is beginning to feel the strain of having lost 2 or 3 of our folks to their day jobs. Jeani is back at the Labor Table – although is still offering ideas pro bono. John Davis started a new job with the Senate Energy Committee. While Pickrell is always available to me, and has given me as much time as possible, he's now being sucked into the work of his other clients – a possibility he'd warned me about at the start of this project. I didn't do a good job of planning for the departure of these folks, and now TPA is paying the price.

That's not to say the movement has been moribund - far from it. Many of our partners have been doing great surrogate work – talking to their members, getting quoted in news stories, doing television appearances that promote our agenda, writing op-eds, circulating videos, and so on.

But we need a plan going forward, as you've said with understandable frustration.

Before I get to that, let's just keep in mind what some of our initial goals were. Building a national presence around income inequality – check. Establishing a national network among like-minded progressives – check. Generating enthusiasm among some well-heeled, kindred spirits – check. Pushing the national conversation away from small-ball, spineless non-policies and towards bold, progressive actual-policies – BIG check.

On that last count, think about the conversations you've had with some of the most powerful people in our orbit. Whether cordial or confrontational, those discussions make it clear that we've gotten people's attention, to say the least.

Not bad for six months.
Now...on to Act Two!

In the short term, we need to push our partners, and their members, towards something tangible. I think our best bet is a Day of Action – preferably sometime in late June, or mid-July.

We could also host Gracie Confab: Part II, bringing together a dozen leaders from our signing ceremony in Washington – with a focus on the top names we wanted for the first round, but couldn't get – for a whole new batch of voices offering thoughts on next steps (tactical, not substantive).

I would aim for doing that in late June or mid-July – whichever isn't filled by the Day of Action.

Third, I think we should plan an Issues Conference – in concert with some of our New York-based partners (Roosevelt, OSI, etc) that features a Big Name speaker (think: Al Gore), and produce a substantive discussion about how to understand the goals of TPA from a policy perspective. We haven't given nearly enough time to some of the very substantive pieces on our agenda – like closing the CEO pay loophole, implementing a national child-care program, moving towards debt-free college, or reforming the NLRA to enhance the right to organize. That would be an August event – when the news cycle is slower & we have a better chance at getting coverage.

Finally, we should do an event on inequality issues impacting Communities of Color – from sentencing reform, to stop-and-frisk reform, to Pre-K and its specific impact on low-income families of color. We have done so much in these areas on the local level that it makes all the sense in the world to gin up Van Jones, Heather, and other like-minded folks to really plan and promote the hell out of something like this.

Those events would be supplements to our day-to-day list-building, surrogate media scheduling, and TPA call time (with you reaching out to both Signers and Non-Signers, seeking ideas/spreading love).

In the long-term, we should discuss building a permanent enterprise. That's a huge endeavor, and requires funding and staff – but it's something we have the capacity to fund and build. Think of it as the progressive version of Third Way – a hub of substantive policy ideas, strategic advice, farm-team building, and progressive networking. Third Way has about a dozen permanent staff. I think we could get away with a team that's half that size, if we hire the right folks.

In terms of immediate staffing, I'm talking to Phil about a guy who might be a Pickrell replacement, and I will get with Jeani and Davis
about who might fill the roles that they did so well for us. My guess is that we'll need $20K a month to lock those folks down – although it can be a short-term contract that evolves
into something more fiscally manageable in the long-term.

The X-factor here is Hillary Clinton. At some point this summer – probably on June
13th – she's going to outline her economic vision. I hope/pray/expect that it will be in sync with most of the things for which TPA has been advocating. If that's the case, we'll need to take OFF our TPA hats, and have a separate conversation on what you do there.

I don't want to get into that business in this memo, as it will be a political discussion that's not in the TPA realm. But off the top of my head, I'd say that an event in New York City (probably the City Hall steps) with you and a number of folks who've been simpatico on progressive issues (with a great deal of gender/racial/geographic diversity) – but not with HRC herself. More on that when the time/circumstances are appropriate.

We'll talk more this evening, but those are my initial thoughts.

###

On 5/27/15, 7:00 PM, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>Thanks!
>
>Sent from my iPhone

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB
FR: JDC
RE: TPA
DA: 5/27/15

We've come a long way.

17 months ago, you delivered your inaugural address – and focused it squarely on income inequality.

At the time, it was a pretty lonely place to be. Aside from a handful of progressive academics and columnists, very few prominent voices were focused on income inequality. Politicians at every level were sticking to the same “safe” talking points – pabulum that offered nothing but vague references to “helping the middle class” and “increasing opportunity.” Harry Reid went so far as to warn his caucus that they were not to go the “de Blasio route.”

We saw what happened. After running away from the President and refusing to embrace economic populism, Democrats got trounced in the midterm elections.

So a little more than six months ago, you spoke out, offering some tough-love advice in the Huffington Post. Your words caused a stir -- with a whole lot of folks getting their backs up, but quite a few progressives embracing your analysis.

The tragic events of December drew attention away from the national conversation on income inequality, but by late January/early February, it re-emerged.

In February, we put together a plan for elevating the progressive solutions to income inequality. As we saw during last week's planning meeting, we not only achieved the vast majority of the items contained in that plan, we went above and beyond: the joint op-ed with Warren, the speech at Roosevelt, and, most notably, the signing of TPA in Washington – a convening of progressive leaders that I believe was unprecedented in modern times.

To be clear, progressives have been doing good work for a long time – but very often in silos – and seemed to always find a way to compete with each other, rather than come together in common cause.

The trip to California yielded some media, but – more important – allowed you to build relationships with some key progressive allies on the West Coast.

On May 19th, we re-launched TPA to accommodate those who felt the original document was lacking. Coincidentally, that same day saw the City of Los Angeles raise their minimum wage to $15, and Philadelphia Democrats overwhelmingly chose the progressive candidate in a competitive primary.

Since the 19th, Team TPA has been primarily focused on pushing our new partners to drive the everyday progressive activists in their networks to sign onto our document. We've had some success – but not nearly enough.

As we've discussed, the past 7-10 days have not been ideal – and that's my failure, not yours. I'm still new to this thing you call "organizing," and haven't done a great job at seizing on the momentum we all worked to create. Hayley has been doing yeoman's work as always, and RKK has been generating ideas for media appearances.

But Team TPA is beginning to feel the strain of having lost 2 or 3 of our folks to their day jobs. Jeani is back at the Labor Table – although is still offering ideas pro bono. John Davis started a new job with the Senate Energy Committee. While Pickrell is always available to me, and has given me as much time as possible, he's now being sucked into the work of his other clients – a possibility he'd warned me about at the start of this project. I didn't do a good job of planning for the departure of these folks, and now TPA is paying the price.

That's not to say the movement has been moribund - far from it. Many of our partners have been doing great surrogate work – talking to their members, getting quoted in news stories, doing television appearances that promote our agenda, writing op-eds, circulating videos, and so on.

But we need a plan going forward, as you've said with understandable frustration.

Before I get to that, let's just keep in mind what some of our initial goals were. Building a national presence around income inequality – check. Establishing a national network among like-minded progressives – check. Generating enthusiasm among some well-heeled, kindred spirits – check. Pushing the national conversation away from small-ball, spineless non-policies and towards bold, progressive actual-policies – BIG check.

On that last count, think about the conversations you've had with some of the most powerful people in our orbit. Whether cordial or confrontational, those discussions make it clear that we've gotten people's attention, to say the least.

Not bad for six months. Now...on to Act Two!

In the short term, we need to push our partners, and their members, towards something tangible. I think our best bet is a Day of Action – preferably sometime in late June, or mid-July.

We could also host Gracie Confab: Part II, bringing together a dozen leaders from our signing ceremony in Washington – with a focus on the top names we wanted for the first round, but couldn't get – for a whole new batch of voices offering thoughts on next steps (tactical, not substantive).

I would aim for doing that in late June or mid-July – whichever isn't filled by the Day of Action.

Third, I think we should plan an Issues Conference – in concert with some of our New York-based partners (Roosevelt, OSI, etc) that features a Big Name speaker (think: Al Gore), and produce a substantive discussion about how to understand the goals of TPA from a policy perspective. We haven't given nearly enough time to some of the very substantive pieces on our agenda – like closing the CEO pay loophole, implementing a national child-care program, moving towards debt-free college, or reforming the NLRA to enhance the right to organize. That would be an August event – when the news cycle is slower & we have a better chance at getting coverage.

Finally, we should do an event on inequality issues impacting Communities of Color – from sentencing reform, to stop-and-frisk reform, to Pre-K and its specific impact on low-income families of color. We have done so much in these areas on the local level that it makes all the sense in the world to gin up Van Jones, Heather, and other like-minded folks to really plan and promote the hell out of something like this.

Those events would be supplements to our day-to-day list-building, surrogate media scheduling, and TPA call time (with you reaching out to both Signers and Non-Signers, seeking ideas/spreading love).

In the long-term, we should discuss building a permanent enterprise. That's a huge endeavor, and requires funding and staff – but it's something we have the capacity to fund and build. Think of it as the progressive version of Third Way – a hub of substantive policy ideas, strategic advice, farm-team building, and progressive networking. Third Way has about a dozen permanent staff. I think we could get away with a team that's half that size, if we hire the right folks.

In terms of immediate staffing, I'm talking to Phil about a guy who might be a Pickrell replacement, and I will get with Jeani and Davis about who might fill the roles that they did so well for us. My guess is that we'll need $20K a month to lock those folks down – although it can be a short-term contract that evolves into something more fiscally manageable in the long-term.

The X-factor here is Hillary Clinton. At some point this summer – probably on June 13th – she's going to outline her economic vision. I hope/pray/expect that it will be in sync with most of the things for which TPA has been advocating. If that's the case, we'll need to take OFF our TPA hats, and have a separate conversation on what you do there.

I don't want to get into that business in this memo, as it will be a political discussion that's not in the TPA realm. But off the top of my head, I'd say that an event in New York City (probably the City Hall steps) with you and a number of folks who've been simpatico on progressive issues (with a great deal of gender/racial/geographic diversity) – but not with HRC herself. More on that when the time/circumstances are appropriate.

We'll talk more this evening, but those are my initial thoughts.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: Pls download
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 2015 11:28:25 PM

Will do - tomorrow AM?

> On May 27, 2015, at 10:21 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
>
> Sharpton mtg re: TPA and how he will approach his upcoming mtg with podesta

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 8:44:06 AM

I can reach out again see what they say

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 28, 2015 8:45 AM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: <no subject>

Well - he did a conf call (with an awful announcement system where they couldn't get a sentence in) - but that was just a quickie to answer questions about TPA before some individuals signed on... This would be a more formal "appearance" to the full caucus

From: <Carey>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 at 8:41 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: <no subject>

They never got back to me
Also – didn't we already do this?

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 28, 2015 8:43 AM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: <no subject>

Do you know what the status is of MBDB addressing Congressional Progressive Caucus via Skype or whatever?

From: Abeywardena, Penny
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: FW: Taiwan -- Tsai Ing-wen
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 10:35:48 AM

Hey John, Unfortunately the Mayor has to regret because of scheduling conflict. Sorry!

----- Forwarded message -----

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Mon, Apr 27, 2015 at 9:46 AM
Subject: Tsai Ing-wen
To: Penny Abeywardena <

Hey Penny. My firm AKPD is working for Tsai Ing-wen, presidential nominee of the opposition party in Taiwan (the Democratic Progressive Party).

I haven't been working with this client personally; it's been my partners Larry Grisolano and Mike Donilon.

Larry said that Tsai is going to be in NYC on June 5-6, meeting with Taiwanese business leaders, etc. Larry was wondering if MBDB would also like to meet with her.

I don't know much about her, other than Larry telling me she's the favorite to win the election next January, and that she's good people. But thought I'd put on your radar - just in case you think it makes sense.

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: RE: also... fyi mayors intel
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 11:21:00 AM

yep

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Thursday, May 28, 2015 11:22 AM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: also... fyi mayors intel

Hmm... ok tx

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 at 10:41 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: also... fyi mayors intel

Frm max in fed affairs;

I just talk to my colleague in Los Angeles. Mayor Garcetti will likely be in San Francisco on Sunday June 21st. Mayor Emanuel apparently will be there on Saturday June 20th.

The WH has engaged them with the idea of doing some photo opp or other visibility event with mayors who have increased the minimum wage.

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: RE: Abc/george
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 11:28:44 AM

Just to be clear - we are talking June 14th now right? If that is the case we need to be in midtown by 11 AM. I believe he tapes at 9 or 930 AM.

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, May 28, 2015 11:30 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: Abc/george

Do you know what time church sermon is?

On 5/28/15, 10:43 AM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>We have a housing sermon that day that we really can't pull down again.
>See if they would tape in advance
>

>----- Original Message -----

>From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
>Sent: Thursday, May 28, 2015 10:41 AM
>To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil
>Subject: Re: Abc/george
>

>It's a no-go - possibly Sunday show for the week after (June 6)

>

>On 5/28/15, 10:10 AM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>>What is the status for sunday?

>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 11:50:45 AM

Checking

Sent from my iPhone

> On May 28, 2015, at 11:48 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Friend of mine said income inequality was a topic on Morning Joe this AM, and that they mentioned MBDB

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 12:08:03 PM

Mayor mention @ 6:41 am more income inequality mention @ 7:03 am

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Thursday, May 28, 2015 11:51 AM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: <no subject>

Friend of mine said income inequality was a topic on Morning Joe this AM, and that they mentioned MBDB

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO PARTICIPATES IN LECTURE WITH FORMER SECRETARY OF LABOR ROBERT REICH AT THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 1:31:13 PM
Attachments: image001.png

Sorry for the delay here...this will be posted on nyc.gov shortly

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: May 14, 2014
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO PARTICIPATES IN LECTURE WITH FORMER SECRETARY OF LABOR ROBERT REICH AT THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY

Professor Robert Reich: Thank you so much, Henry. I want to thank Henry Brady, and the Goldman School, and the staff at the Goldman School for making this possible. I also want to thank Jake Kornbluth and the Economic Inequality Media Project, which Jake and I and some others are involved in because we are trying to get the word out about what's happening in this country economically, what's happening to our democracy.

I also, finally, want to thank the person I'm about to introduce. Henry filled you in on the mayor's background, but on a personal level I am so pleased that he was willing to take some time out and come to talk with us at Berkeley. He is one of my heroes. He has put the issue of inequality not only in the center of the national conversation, but he is daily trying to do something about it – very hard to do something about it – easy to talk about, hard to do something about it. And he's out there rolling up his sleeves and actually working on this issue.

We're going to have a conversation. We're going to talk more in about a half an hour and then open it up to your questions – and I hope you have some. It's my great, great pleasure to introduce to you Mayor Bill de Blasio of New York City.

I think you should stand up. Hold on.

Mayor Bill de Blasio: [Inaudible].

Professor Robert Reich: [Inaudible].

Mayor: I got my victory sign. I like that.

Professor Robert Reich: We embody inequality.

Mayor: Does that make me the one percent?

Professor Robert Reich: I think you're in the top one-tenth of one percent. Mr. Mayor, thank you for joining us. Welcome to Berkeley.

Mayor: Thank you.

Professor Robert Reich: Berkeley, California.

Mayor: Wonderful place to be.

Professor Robert Reich: Berkeley is – New York, it's not exactly New York. Our delicatessens are not quite as good, maybe actually they are. Saul's, you ought to go to Saul's. We are the sister city on the West Coast.

Mayor: You're supposed to say they make a nice sandwich.

Professor Robert Reich: Tell us about your project. A day and a half ago, you actually launched a project on inequality, a national conversation on inequality. Tell us a little bit about what you're doing.

Mayor: Well, I want to first to offer some quick praise. I want to thank UC-Berkeley. I want to thank the Goldman School, thank the dean for helping to put this together, but especially thank you Bob. I have to say I hope the warm reception I heard for Bob at the beginning is an indication not just how much people have an affection for him, but an understanding of how much his message is having an impact on this country. I assume everyone in this room has seen Inequality for All. Everyone has seen Inequality for All, required viewing, but it is I think one of the clearest, sharpest, evocations of what we're going through and it's one of the clearest calls to arms. Let's thank Bob for making that possible for all of us.

Professor Robert Reich: And Jake Kornbluth.

Mayor: Jake Kornbluth – extra credit to Jake Kornbluth. What we put together into these last weeks we call the Progressive Agenda – very simply, the Progressive Agenda. I urge everyone to go to progressiveagenda.us and look at it, and what you will find is simplicity and clarity, I hope. What's needed in this moment is to organize like-minded people all over the country to man a series of changes in our national policy so we can actually go at the problem of income and inequality head on.

It's amazing when you watch the film to see this is one of the most profound crises this nation has faced and it is going essentially unaddressed. I don't think there's a lot of parallels in our history for something of this magnitude. Finding that there is no coherent federal response, I often parallel the dynamic of the New Deal – the other economic crisis that's comparable. Obviously, the New Deal per-se was a sharper crisis, but the response from our federal government, once the Roosevelt administration took over, borrowing in many cases from policies at the state and local level previously was profound, was deep, was felt by every American – changed the trajectory of our country. We're still feeling it in many good ways to day.

Now, compare it to the beginning of the Great Recession until now – the absence of a coherent federal response, the paralysis in Washington we talk about often. While I think one of the most damning elements of that paralysis is the economic condition of most Americans has worsened and they don't see any meaningful response from those in the best position to do it in Washington.

We created this progressive agenda to say, let's have a short, clear articulation of the things that would make a difference and start organizing around them all over this country because as hard as all of us are working at the local level to address income inequality, we cannot do it effectively without changes in national policy. We need a $15 dollar minimum wage everywhere if we're really going to change this country. We need progressive taxation in the platform. In the platform we say some of the most obvious, some of those items I think should be most universal. The Buffet rule – millionaires and billionaires should not pay a lower percentage of taxes than the secretaries and clerks that work in their offices. Closing the carried interest loophole, hedge fund managers literally should not pay less in taxes than the woman who cleans their summer home or the man who flies their private jet. It's just simple, straightforward ideas and profoundly important ideas where there's not yet the kind of national consensus we need.

What I hoped to do and what I'm finding a really great collegiality on – and Bob, thank you for being one of the people who signed on early on and is helping us to build this movement – is there's a hunger out there for a clear set of ideas that actually change the country and progressives all over the country are gathering to show our combined strength to make a difference. If we do this well enough, if we do this strongly and consistently enough, we actually can change those national policies – and that's my work.

Professor Robert Reich: Mr. Mayor, let me ask you though why should this just be a progressive agenda? Why shouldn't this be an agenda of the entire poor, the working class, the middle class, conservatives, people who call themselves Republicans? They have as much interest in taking back the economy, making the economy working for everybody and not just the few at the top as progressives do, right?

Mayor: There's absolutely a number of areas where I think we can find common ground. I was on Capitol Hill yesterday working on a kindred issue, which is trying to rebuild America's infrastructure is something of great concern in New York City and cities all over the country. Actually, we found some interesting bipartisanship, mayors from around the country working together across the aisle – Republican and Democrat together. We found Republicans in Congress who shared our concern about fixing this country's infrastructure. The fact it's called the Progressive Agenda does not for a moment suggest we don't want a deep consensus to grow around it and we don't want to invite everyone in.

I think the notion though – and I love the word "progressive" because it harkens back to something that worked powerfully in this nation's history in politics. Progressive movements 100 years ago and before was the gateway to the New Deal – created the thinking of how a government can actually serve people in a meaningful and tangible way. And it also in a way that suggested the kind of reforms that government at that time needed profoundly. I think we need a version of that again today. So why we call it the Progressive Agenda is it harkens back to a consistency in American history about when we got it right. But it's not meant to be anything less than an ecumenical statement of things that people could agree with across the board.

I was on Morning Joe a week or so ago and Joe Scarborough – who is known to remind the viewers of his time as a Republican congressman – he said on the Buffet Rule: “I think something like that is the kind of idea that Americans across the board could agree on.” I think pre-k is another great example. We are blessed in New York City. We've been working very hard the last few years. This is the number one issue I ran on, full day, high quality pre-k for every child in New York City. If you look around the country that idea is gathering strength in lots of places, but if you said, well, tell me where else is doing a great job on pre-k? The first words out of my mouth would be the state of Oklahoma.

It's not a red or blue that we need pre-k for all our kids. It's not red or blue that we should have fair taxation, certainly, not red or blue that we need to raise the minimum wage. In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. They're demanding it from the grass roots.

We've have talked about the Fight for $15 movement, which is extraordinary. A couple weeks ago, maybe it wasn't on every front page of every newspaper, it didn't lead every TV news broadcast, but in 200 cities around the country simultaneously there were demonstrations for the $15 dollar minimum wage. That's not a minor development. That suggests the grass roots speaking powerfully.

I think it's a moment to achieve some of these changes, and it's certainly a moment where a lot of folks who may not agree on some other social issues, for example, can get together on the economic issues.

Professor Robert Reich: Well, then the political question, we're coming up to an election year next year, the political question is how do we that is the larger – we Democrats, Republicans, progressives and others who want an agenda that is actually for working people and not an economy that's working just for the people at the top. How do we come together when number one, you've got a kind of divide and conquer strategy in the Republican Party? That is – blame the immigrants, blame the poor, blame the African-Americans, blame everybody else. Among Democrats you have got people who are accepting a lot of money from Wall Street and big business. How do you actually break through both? Let's start with money. How do you break through the big money? How do you get big money out of politics?

Mayor: First of all, I think we do need a constitutional amendment to reverse the Citizen's United decision. That's where we have to go fundamentally. I want to say very quickly, this is for those who might say, well, that sounds too idealistic. Look at the polling in the months after the Citizen's United decision. How consistently Democrat, Republican, independent, the American people rejected that decision because they could quickly ascertain that it would lead to even more concentration of power among those who are most wealthy.

I actually think we can build a consensus among the people, not the political insiders and the traditional structures, but among the people that we have to get money out of the political process. I think the time is ripe for that. This is a bit of a window from my point of view into the question of how you change a political context. What troubles me in a lot of our discourse is the notion that the current political dynamics are somehow fixed, somehow handed down to us on stone tablets, which is to me profoundly a-historical. Before 1980, what we are living through today would have been inconceivable. Before 1932, the New Deal would have been inconceivable. The times we live in and how we respond to them are what determine the political trajectory and part of why I think your film is so powerful is it reminds us that these are not fixed dynamics – that we actually are actors in the drama, which I appreciate deeply.

I think a nation where income inequality is at the greatest point it's been since before the Great Depression, and getting worse, and where the middle class is now in a profoundly tenuous situation that is a nation ripe for fundamental political change. We can't be the ones, those of us who want change can't be the ones with blinders on that somehow think the current dynamic is unmovable. It's profoundly movable. I think part of it is to bluntly not allow the mistakes of 2014. I'll speak in this instance from a partisan perspective as a Democrat.

In 2014, I have written about this, many, many Democratic candidates around the country for Senate, Governor, House, ran away from the traditional values of their party. They didn't want to talk about income inequality. They didn't want to talk about poverty. They didn't want to talk about taxing the wealthy. They didn't even want to talk about their own president and his achievement with the Affordable Care Act. Low and behold, a lot of voters around the country looked at that and didn't see anything recognizable in the way of a set of solutions or values.

Professor Robert Reich: Can I stop you just briefly on that point. They didn't want to talk about these things and yet you said and I agree – most Americans care about these things. The four states that actually did raise the minimum wage are red states. They did not send Democrats to Washington. Why is it Democrats are so reluctant to talk in these terms?

Mayor: I think money is part of it.

Professor Robert Reich: You mean the money they're drinking at the same trough as –

Mayor: That's one way of saying it, known for his diplomatic statements. I'm going to go farther than just the narrow construct if you get money from wealthy donors you don't want to offend or propose policies they don't like. That's one piece of the equation. I think the professional political class is another part of the equation because I think what we have developed in this country is a consultant class and an insider class that often is very unimaginative and not necessarily connected to the grass roots.

I think beyond it there's a misunderstanding of how much the jury's already come back. The movie's powerful. Look, one of the things that moved me in the Age and Inequality is the simple notion of asking typical Americans how much is in your bank account. In that movie people said $25 dollars, $50 dollars, $100 dollars. If you ever want to get another way of saying one paycheck away from disaster that's it. In my city, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.

If that is the reality in our country, it would be illogical not to address it. What I find interesting is that so many people in the insider political world have decided it is a greater danger to offend the wealthy or the donors than to say the things that would actually move the people and the voters. What happened in 2014? Many, many voters who would have been moved by a vision of progressive economic change simply stayed home. Many of them were Democrats because they did not hear a believable vision.

Part of what I hope our discussion will do and certainly our progressive agenda will do is remind candidates and leaders in office right now if you want people to feel something, give them a vision that's sharp and clear and yes, has an element of risk to it. There's no question.

Professor Robert Reich: Let's hypothesize for a second. You are a candidate for president in 2016.

Mayor: No, I'm not.

Professor Robert Reich: No, you're not. I'm using a hypothetical.

Mayor: No.

Professor Robert Reich: Let's say I'm a candidate.

Mayor: You're a president.

Professor Robert Reich: This is a hypothetical.

Mayor: You heard it here. We have news made already.

Professor Robert Reich: No, I want to use this as a hypothetical. Here is the question I have for you. You are advising me or let's say Hillary Clinton is sitting here. What specifically – to say yes you have to have the vision that's going to move people. You've got to talk about inequality. But specifically, what do you want that candidate to say in order to move people, something that the political consultants are not –

Mayor: Again, I'll hype for a moment progressiveagenda.us – 13 point agenda. No point is more than a sentence long or two sentences long. It's very compressed and clear. For example, if you want to move people in this country, you have to speak to wage and benefit levels. No one should ever mistake the fact that we're talking about $15 dollar minimum wage and saying that that's where we want people to end. We're saying that should be a baseline. We should have no one in this country paid less than that if we expect them to make ends meet.

One, a candidate who wants to move the people has to say, I want to make sure everyone starts at that level and I'm going to do something about it. They have to say, I'm going to address some of the core benefit issues, paid sick leave, paid family leave are two of the things that actually bring economic stability to working families and there's plenty of precedent for the value they bring in both the private sector in this country and across nations in other parts of the world, which think those policies are normal. I think if you can present a tangible, clear picture of the way we're going to change people's lives – let me tell you about pre-k. Pre-k is so fascinating because parents get instantly that you're now saying. We're going to help your child change fundamentally their economic trajectory, not just their educational trajectory, their economic trajectory because we get them into full day, high-quality pre-k. It will change their entire futures. It's the time that you can have a transcendent impact on their economic and educational future. By the way, for those parents to pay for the same opportunity – working parents who need a good place for their child – in New York City that would be $10,000 or more. It's not just we're setting up the future for that child. We're taking an immediate economic burden off that family.

I think people do want to hear, they know the game has been rigged. They want to hear that something's going to start to rewrite the rules, so when you say, we're going to implement that Buffet Rule. We're going to close the carried interest loophole. You start to change the dynamics in favor of the people again. Those things to me would be a catalytic in terms of public interest and involvement.

Professor Robert Reich: Yeah, well, powerful policies and the policies that you're talking about are powerful specific policies and also Jake Kornbluth and I, and MoveOn have been working on something very, very similar, a series of videos, ten videos about ten ideas, many of them overlapping with what you're talking about. There is a way of educating the public about this, but let me ask you a more difficult question I think.

Democrats have a tendency to believe that all you do is go out in front of the American people and you provide them lists of policies and if they're powerful enough lists of policies, the public will be rational enough to say, "Yes, I want that." But Republicans, I don't want to make this a partisan forum, but I have noticed over the past 40 years that Republicans tend to not go out there in the public with a lot of policies. They go out with moral principles. They talk morality. What is the morality that we or you or I or Hillary Clinton or Bernie Sanders or anybody else as a progressive? What's the moral set of principles that's going to actually move people?

Mayor: We need to reward work not wealth. What's happening and you're sitting in the presence of the experts. I'll say it in my own simple short formulation as a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.

Meanwhile back at the ranch, we do not reward work. How can people work one job, two jobs, three jobs and not still be able to make ends meet and have the $25 dollars in the bank account? Well because government policy hasn't set the right minimum wage. Government policy hasn't provided paid sick leave and paid family leave. Government policy doesn't make things like pre-k and after school available to children for free. These are noble things, fixable things. The moral standard is, and I think it's a profoundly and classically American value, a country formed on hard work, a country of immigrants, a country of strivers.

The American dream actually happened in many ways. I don't want to provide a gauzy, romantic view of perfection, but the core notion that generations were actually able to uplift themselves and their children could do better than them and it was based on hard work and work actually was rewarded that's true. Your film, your research, your book show it. If we say, you know what? We are the party of work. We're a party that believes in work and we're going to do a series of things to reward work and we're not a party that accepts inequality.

Inequality is an un-American value.

If you had to make it plain and narrow and we're not in a partisan setting, but if one party wants to represent growing inequality and the other party wants to represent a return to equality, which is an American ideal, I think that's plenty of the groundwork you discuss. But I don't want to underestimate the value of specific ideas.

I ran for mayor, and some of you may know the recent history. I spent most of my time running for mayor in fourth or fifth place, and I would not recommend that to most people. But we did have a clear understanding of the fact that if you stand for something, and people can recognize it, and see it, and touch and feel it, it makes an impact. First thing, number one plank unquestionably was I called for a tax on those who make $500,000 or more so that we could have full day pre-k for every child in the city. That communicates some very simple things in very few words. Those who had done well, nothing against them. We commend them for their success, but we want to create more success stories, so we're going to ask those who have done well to do a little more for the good of all and for them, too. They're part of our society. It's for the good of all.

That made a lot of sense to typical New Yorkers. The value of pre-k made a lot of sense for families thinking about their own children or their nieces, nephews, grandchildren. They thought about, wow, that's something that would change our lives. It communicated that we weren't going to allow continued deepening inequality.

I think you need, yes, you need the moral grounding. You need the thematic grounding if you will, but you also need to attach it to a series of policies that suggest you're for real. When I said I mentioned risk earlier, risk is not a bad thing. Actually, proponents of the pure theory of capitalism will be the first to agree with me. Things are achieved through risk, ergo [inaudible] for office should show some risk in what they do. They should be willing to take on powerful interests in the name of the people. They should be willing to risk donations.

I tell a story. It is 100 percent true. I gave a speech October 4, 2012, where I introduced my pre-k plan. I did it before a business audience. When I said let's tax those who make $500,000 or more so we can have pre-k, that was not the moment I got a standing ovation. I just want you to know. What did happen is the next day individuals from my finance committee called and resigned, and I was not surprised and we had in fact said, let's be honest, we give this speech. We will lose a certain amount of financial support. These are not ill-liberal people. These were some people who believed in a lot of the other things I stood for, but they personally do not think it was fair to ask that they be taxed more and they resigned. That is part of what you have to do if you're actually going to change something. You can't change something and make everybody happy.

Professor Robert Reich: Let's talk about change and let's talk about not only campaigning, which we've done up until now, but actually governing. You ran on a tale of two cities. You put inequality in New York City right there in front of everybody. You pissed off people on your finance committee who left. Franklin D. Roosevelt, I remember – I don't remember directly, but I remember. I'm starting to feel like I remember.

Mayor: You called him Frank, didn't you?

Professor Robert Reich: In 1936, Frank, my good – my dear friend said, they hate me these business leaders, and I welcome their hatred. Then you've got to govern. Then you've actually got to take the reins. Well, how is it different? What have you discovered about governing with regard to a platform to overcome inequality? What have been the most challenging aspects of doing that?

Mayor: I think I would say two answers. On the first, what have I discovered versus the most challenging? What I have discovered is that we underestimate the tools of government. I am a progressive. I'm inspired by nothing more than the New Deal and by my predecessor, Fiorello LaGuardia, who was the great example of the New Deal at the local level. I think we're still understanding what government can do for people and I think that is particularly true because from 1980 to present, there's been such a clear consistent movement to try and undermine people's faith in government and what it can do that even for those of us who know the history and know the facts sometimes the vision has become less clear.

What I have found is that a strong, aggressive approach can move mountains. We said so we did not get tax for pre-k because it had to be approved in our state capital in Albany. A lot of powerful individuals and interests there didn't want to see it happen. They blocked it, but we had created such momentum around the idea that the leaders in Albany felt they had to produce an alternative, so we got the full funding for our pre-K plan from the state budget. The reason I say that is well, when we got that funding it was April 1 of 2014, opening day of school was September 4 of 2014. We had five months to create a full day pre-K plan for 53,000 kids. There had been only 20,000 a year previously, so our delta was 33,000 more kids had to be accommodated. We did not have the space. We didn't have the teachers, but we had a powerful government that was resolute and devoted to it and we pulled it off. On opening day there were 53,000 seats.

I think part one, I have learned what can be done and that does not reference the naysayers were actually wrong and you cannot be lost in the naysayers, but what's the challenge? I mentioned our state government. I think it is that for localities what's upstream is the challenge. It's not what your constituents need. That's self-evident or what some of the great examples of effective policies are. That's clear, too, because cities all over the country are sharing good ideas and tools all the time so we actually say, hey, we've got the tools. We know what the people need. We're ready to go. A lot of what we need has to be approved in a state capital or even at the federal level.

Transportation issues, as I said yesterday outside the capital with a cross section of mayors around the country, Democrat and Republican -- all of us can't move our people around sufficiently. All of us see our roads and bridges falling apart -- and bridges is a particularly sensitive matter, because one of the people there was the mayor of Minneapolis, who talked about being at the site of the bridge in 2007 that fell down -- the interstate bridge across the Mississippi River that literally fell down in 2007 because the federal government had not invested in maintaining it.

So, I think the challenge for local leaders, and particularly for progressive local leaders, is -- above us are still realities where policies are stuck, and there's not movement, and there's not a necessary willingness to support the local level. That, you know, does not take all the options away. And what it calls upon all of us to do is two things: one -- innovate and create with the tools we have and two -- change the paradigm. As I said, the notion we're going to accept existing politics is absolutely illogical -- it's absolutely illogical. Why would we accept a political context that isn't serving our people? How do you change a political context? Change people's minds.

In the movie, there's a beautiful segment with some of the workers you went to address. I'm trying to remember the company -- Calpon, I think it was.

Professor Robert Reich: Calpon.

Mayor: And you meet with one family in particular -- obviously, that is somewhat dubious of your worldview -- and in the course of the movie, they start moving. The more you present the truth to people and the more you engage people at the grassroots, the more they will move because their economic reality will dictate it. Then, the other step is to convince them that there are leaders and ideas that will constitute change, and to relentlessly turn them out to vote, energize them, mobilize them. This is how social changes happened. One beautiful part of the movie -- I'm going to keep plugging you here, Bob. I'm sorry. I loved it.

Professor Robert Reich: Everybody's seen it. You don't need to plug it.

Mayor: Okay, well, for the audience at home. But one thing I found powerful is that reminder towards the end that history favors social change movements. We've seen it happen again and again and again. And I think we have to have the courage of our convictions to say, okay, if we're not getting some of these changes, why -- why do we not have more progressive taxation? Or, why don't we have a $15 dollar minimum wage? Because we haven't talked to enough Americans yet. We haven't reached enough of our fellow citizens and convinced them and mobilized them -- because if we do that enough, then I don't care how strong the Tea Party is.

Professor Robert Reich: Well, let me -- I -- I want to get to your questions in just a minute. I want to ask you a little bit of a devil's advocate question here on this particular point. Because there is a divide and conquer strategy, whether it's explicit or implicit among those who want the status quo. You divide the middle class from the poor. You divide the whites from blacks. You divide union members from non-union members. You divide the rural people from the urban people. You divide the poor cities from the rich cities and you convince each of them that the other is their real problem. How do you -- as a leader, trying to bring people together -- actually show that the other guys are not their problem?

Mayor: I've believed for a long time that the missing link is economics. I think a lot of progressives down through history have seen this clearly -- that it's easy to be divided by nationality or race or region. A lot of history shows how simply people fall into those patterns.

But economics unites people, and today that is profoundly true in America. Maybe if you had a wonderfully strong, stable middle-class and then a painful underclass, and those two were fully separated ideas, maybe you could say, well, can that be bridged? But [inaudible] -- fortunately, as your and many other people's research has shown, what you have is an extremely tenuous middle-class, where more and more people understand the condition of those who are even in worse shape than them. And I think that is a different America.

I think the Great Recession changed our lives and our politics, and our political class and our political discourse have not caught up with the reality. I think we went through a lot of the same trajectory as happened in 1929 and the early 30s, but it has not been recognized yet.

Because you can't have a nation that, for a half-century, had an assumption about a strong and vibrant middle class and the assumption evaporated, which it did, and then not have the politics have fundamentally become unmoored and changed. I think it's up to us to actualize the results of that change.

And I'm -- I'm not happy about it. No one should be happy that so many hard-working people that once thought they have security -- had security -- now know they don't. No one should be happy about all the people who were promised pensions, only to see the pensions literally disappear. But we have to be honest about the fact that that's made -- created a greater commonality of experience. And therein is the possibility of a governing majority on a host of issues like minimum wage and benefits and progressive taxation.

One other vignette -- I live this in a different way. You know, I'm obviously from one of the most diverse places on the earth. And when I ran, you know, I happened to be a white guy.

I was running against a variety of different candidates of different backgrounds. And I can't tell you how many rooms I sat in where people said to me, well, there happened to be an African-American candidate, so you're not going to win any African-American votes. There happens to be a woman candidate, so you won't win the women's vote. There happens to be a gay candidate. You won't win the gay vote. And it almost was an extraordinary minimization of the human experience and the human mind and soul, because, in fact, what I found from my constituents -- all 8.5 million hyper-opinionated constituents I had, is --

[Laughter]

Professor Robert Reich: Now, you must be mayor of New York. Is that right?

[Laughter]

Mayor: Yeah, that's -- that's right.

But they are watching. They are thinking. They are looking. They don't check some kind of box and say, oh, I'm going to think from this demographic perspective only. They're thinking as humans beings. They're thinking as family members. They're actors in the drama, and -- we had a primary, a Democratic primary and I ended up doing better than those other candidates in terms of the women's vote, the black vote, the gay vote, because people voted their economic interests. And I think we have to recognize that we've unfortunately been sold a bill of goods in terms of political analysis. In the end, what is more profoundly important than your economic circumstance? And if more and more and all of us are in this together, and more and more of us have a shared economic reality and experience, that should be the moment for a new politics. I actually think it is.

Professor Robert Reich: Mr. Mayor -- Bill, if I may --

Mayor: Please.

Professor Robert Reich: One last question -- a more personal question. Now, I want to know what got you into this business.

[Laughter]

A lot of people are very cynical about politics.

Mayor: Don't call it a business to begin with. That's a cynical formulation.

[Laughter]

Professor Robert Reich: Non-business. My wife went to high school with you.

Mayor: Yes.

Professor Robert Reich: And she remembers you very fondly.

Mayor: She's wonderful.

Professor Robert Reich: And I said to her this morning -- I said, what do you remember about -- about Bill?" And she said, well, he was a lovely, lovely man. I suppose he still is. And he was very tall.

[Laughter]

I said, do you remember his political activism? She -- and she said, well -- and she was -- she strained a little bit. I mean, maybe you were politically active.

Mayor: Sure.

Professor Robert Reich: What got you into politics? What gave you your fervor, and what made you particularly concerned about widening inequality?

Mayor: I think it's the life my family and I live, like so many others. You know, it's seeing adversity in different forms -- the stories of the Great Depression, first of all, because my parents both had me a little later in life than usual. They were both 44 when I was born. They were absolute classic children of the Depression. And it was -- I think one thing we can say about children of the Depression, they're an extraordinarily brave generation, but they also never lost that imprint. So I cannot tell you how many family meals included the discussion of how they lost the family business -- you know, the bread lines, everything -- and then the heroic actions of people like Roosevelt and LaGuardia that changed things. I think that's one part of it.

I think it was the times I grew up in, too. I grew up in the 60s and into the 70s, and I saw social change all around me and people dealing with incredibly challenging, painful issues. My oldest brother was draft age at a time in Vietnam, where -- where it had become a national consensus that we were in a war that was painfully wrong and yet, young men were being sent to die. You know, you live enough of those experiences, it's impossible, from my point of view, not to want to address them.

So, and I also -- on a very human level, my own father went through tragedy, and having served in World War II in a -- in a heroic manner -- decorated -- came back very painfully wounded, lost half his leg on Okinawa. And, unfortunately, for that and other reasons became an alcoholic, so I watched his life decline before our eyes. My parents were divorced. And I think -- I -- I'm not trying to be maudlin here. It's just a combination of things that wake you up. And I -- I know from the movie you had a similar painful experience with someone you lost in your life that woke you up in a different way.

I think -- I think in the end it is a call to arms when you see how much unfairness there is and how much can be different. And once I started, I found it energizing to be in the fray. There's a great Teddy Roosevelt quote about "those in the fray who are willing to risk victory or defeat." I think that's, to me, an inspiring notion -- that there's something to be done and it's worth the risk. On a lighter note, I'll conclude with this.

On a lighter note -- I'll conclude with this. On a lighter [inaudible] your wife, doesn't remember that I was very actively involved in student government and people thought I was going to be involved in long-term. I was one of those kind of geeky, student government guys.

Professor Robert Reich: She -- she did remember that. She just didn't think it was very important.

[Laughter]

Mayor: Well, she's right. She's right. But here's how it wraps around. I was -- I was also very deeply moved by my Italian culture, because during high school I went to my grandfather's hometown in Italy and I came back and basically couldn't stop talking about my Italian culture. It was to the point that people gave me a nickname. So they combined the fact that I seemed like someone who was going to be involved in politics with the fact that I obsessively talked about my Italian heritage and they literally -- my nickname around school was Senator Provolone.

[Laughter]

Professor Robert Reich: Okay, Senator Provolone. Now, your questions to Senator Provolone --

[Applause]

Okay, shall we -- why don't we start on this side? Can we just --

Question: Hi, Mr. Mayor. So, I think any discussion --

Professor Robert Reich: Can you introduce yourself, please?

Question: Hi -- yeah. I'm Albert Lynn. I'm a public policy student. I think that any discussion of inequality has to start with housing stability, and in the Bay Area here, we're in a major, major crisis. And we also have a political system here with kind of entrenched -- entrenched interest groups in a political structure that make a lot of debates or proposals kind of dead on arrival. And as a mayor of a big city that's undergoing a lot of the same issues, if you were advising Mayor Lee, Mayor Lecardo, Mayor Shaft, what proposals would you have and how would you suggest kind of building that coalition to bridge all these divided interest groups?

Mayor: Well, I wouldn't presume to advise my colleague mayors. They -- I know them -- two of them very well and the third I look forward to knowing. But they each understand their circumstances. [Inaudible] advise the people and those actively involved on the issue, which is to demand a different reality in the process of development, which is what we are now doing. I -- in my campaign I said, look, we're grappling with an inequality crisis that certainly plays out in housing. We're also grappling with a gentrification dynamic over now several decades that literally went unaddressed by public policy.

One of the solutions from my point of view was a different kind of development. We had to create a massive amount of affordable housing. We couldn't put our head in the sand, in my point of view, and do nothing -- because if you did nothing, the market forces were simply going to continue to march forward and you'd have ever more gentrification, and you'd end up potentially with a European type model of everyone who was working class or poor pushed to the periphery. If you actually wanted an economically integrated city -- and that for New York is part of our lifeblood, that combination of people -- you needed to build, but with different set of rules. So we said very clearly, we were going to build, but we were going to drive a very different kind of bargain with the development community -- a very hard bargain.

And what we found instantly upon taking office -- we moved the goalposts. We announced we were going to move the goalposts, and we moved them. And we said, if you want to develop, it's going to cost you in this sense. We're going to need to see a lot of affordable housing as a part of every development -- every development.

If the government had a role in permitting the development or a rezoning, anything like that, it was going to come with an obligation for a very substantial amount of affordable housing. And once that paradigm is set, the development community has a pretty stark choice -- either follow it, or they're not in a position to develop. I think that's what the people should demand.

[Applause]

Professor Robert Reich: Let's have a question over here. Could you introduce yourself please?

Question: My name is Pinky Kushner and I'm from San Francisco. And I actually had the same topic, which is housing, and -- but I'll approach it from a different way. In San Francisco, it's a big city with a lot of different departments, and those departments seem to have a life of their own. They set their own policies. They are the knowledgeable ones. It's very hard to contradict them.

And I'll give you an example of what -- how I would like to contradict them. Affordable housing in San Francisco is set according to the number of units. So if the developer wants to build ten units, they have to build one affordable housing unit. And, of course, then the developer builds 6,000 to 10,000 square foot units and sells them to people who can afford six bathrooms and 10,000 square feet. And Mayor Lee has tried, but I think has been very unsuccessful in promoting what I think would be more equitable, which would be based on, for instance, square footage. How do you plan to control your very large and very important Department of Planning and Building?

Mayor: Well, we -- it's the beauty of our administration is we based everything on the platform from the campaign. On the campaign I said we're going to create 200,000 units of affordable housing between -- it's 80,000 new units, 120,000 preserved, meaning currently affordable units that we subsidize or find other tools to keep affordable for the long term. And the message to all of the entities of our city government, our planning department, our housing department, etcetera was: this is a goal, has to be achieved over ten years, the most ambitious affordable housing program of any city in the country, historically.

But, it comes with this core assumption and we laid it out a year ago. It's publicly available. Here's how we're going to do the units. Here's the income mix we must achieve, including for the lowest income New Yorkers being a substantial part of that mix. And, it's not negotiable that we have to reach that goal. And therefore, in every development we're trying to maximize the number of units that are affordable.

We used to have a formulation in New York City that "80-20" where the standard was 20 percent affordable units, period. We have developments now where we're turning that into 25 percent, 30 percent, in many cases we're getting even to 50 percent and that depends obviously on all the dynamics and the financing and the specifics, but it is about changing the rules of engagement. By the way, I will let developers, and this is controversial, some people love it, some people hate it. I'll let them build higher. I'll let them build denser, but I'm going to determine very clearly a lot of affordable housing in the mix in the same building.

And what's interesting is I found this out -- so I'm from the neighborhood of Parks Slope in Brooklyn. It's a wonderful community, but a community where I found a contradiction. I was the City Council member and I had to have this very honest conversation with my constituents. A lot of people truly believe, I'm sure like many in this audience, they really believe in an economically diverse city. They really honestly wanted New York to maintain that mix of people. But I said, "We can't do that without heightened density. At this point in our history, there's very little land left. We have to do that, and it will make life around here somewhat more congested. It will be maybe less appealing than the small town feel that people love, but let's be honest. It is a choice. I choose integration. I choose economic diversity any day.

And once you make that decision, you have a lot of bargaining power with the development community, because they either get to build the thing that is to them very powerful and profitable, but only if it give the public back the public share. If they're not willing to give the public back their share, we literally walk away from the table. I've had this conversation with developers. They say, I'm not going to give you that amount of affordable housing. I say, great, we'll find someone else that wants to develop the site. That's a pretty powerful message.

[Applause]

Professor Robert Reich: But, as I understand, what you're saying, you are doing a calculation. Certain sites are going to be much more valuable to developers than others and you're saying the more valuable the site, the more leverage you have in terms of demanding affordable housing and they're still going to walk away with money, but you're going to demand a little bit more from them.

But let me ask you, some people say one of the keys to affordable housing is an excellent system of public transportation. Because if you've got a system of public transportation that goes into the suburbs or into other boroughs as in the case of New York, you can get people to the jobs, fast. And if it's really well done, if it's really well-financed, then the affordable housing can occur and can be out there. Do you think about public transportation and affordable housing in the same way?

Mayor: Yes, yes but I think the difference is that mass transit, we all know, comes with tremendous cost challenges that can't be borne sufficiently by cities as cities are organized today. You can -- I just came from Washington as I said and I partnered with the mayor of Oklahoma City, who is a Republican, who is very pro-mass transit, who passed a tax-referendum so that they could build a streetcar system in Oklahoma City. Now again, I want to emphasize the words Oklahoma City.

[Laughter]

People voted for taxes on themselves so they could have mass transit. That's what a city can do in many cases.

But the real development of a mass transit system that would work in many, many growing urban areas in this country that are more and more our economic core, requires a federal government role, as it does every in the world. Which is why we're fighting for a transportation bill, a multiyear well-funded transportation bill, so we can actually have mass transit, roads, bridges, highways in this country that are up to date with the size of our cities and our economy. That I believe also is a winning hand. I really do. I believe this is an area where there's a transcendent desire on the part of people at the grass-roots and the business community to actually improve our infrastructure because we are falling behind so much of the rest of the world.

So yes, I think affordable housing and mass transit go together. I think the difference is in so many cities, there is that leverage. When it comes to housing there's a leverage with the development community that is profound. We hold all the tools. We have the zoning power and the other powers to create affordable housing on a mass scale. With transportation, we don't get to do that the same way unless we have a federal role or an additional revenue stream.

Professor Robert Reich: Over here, please introduce yourself.

Question: Hi, I'm Brianna Mullen. I'm an undergraduate history student. And my question is the historical reality is that progressivism and New Deal did leave out a lot of Americans into economic opportunity. This is why the 40s and 50s was still plagued by a lot of urban poverty that was both assisted by federal and local policy. What does this progressive agenda that you've created do to integrate and include that yes, economic opportunity is available to all, but realizes the economic history that has left out a lot of people in the progressive agenda, which is, has been historically white, middle-class Americans?

Mayor: Well, I would differ with the question on one level. There's no question that we have had structural racism in our country and that we have had a country in which many people were left poor and without opportunity. That is absolutely true. But I would differ by saying I think the sum total of the New Deal, and the prosperity it helped to usher in did reach an extraordinary number of people in a consistent manner. Not everyone and not enough and it didn't overcome some of the reality of racism. But I would say in the scope of human history, it's one of the most successful outcomes we've seen.

I think today, and this is why I talked about the tale of two cities to begin with, today we have to be even clearer and blunter and more forceful to overcome inequality, including across all communities. So, from my point of view, this is where the rule of education is a huge x-factor. Pre-k For All effort in New York City obviously reaches because our public schools are overwhelmingly not just children of color. Many, many children who are immigrant, many, many children who are low income, that's an equalizing effect that's profoundly important. All the things we do around education, all the things we're doing around affordable housing, obviously, overwhelmingly are going to help working people and in many cases, low income people.

The focus on an actual strong minimum wage and strong benefits, transcendent for folks who have been left out economically. And one more piece, trying to use the tools of government to maximize economic opportunity. All that government spending, we're trying to find ways to maximize how much of it gives an open door economically to people who have been left out previously in a very targeted way.

Professor Robert Reich: Talk about people who are being left out. Mr. Mayor, how do you create a criminal justice system that responds to the structural inequalities and the racial inequalities and responds in such a way that is not going to exacerbate those inequalities?

Mayor: Look, I think we have a beginning New York City I'm very proud of and I have been working on this with Commissioner Bratton now for the last 16 months. First, you know, one thing Commissioner Bratton talked about the other day a "Peace dividend." This is a powerful phrase. A lot of people in this room will recognize the phrase "Peace dividend."

Professor Robert Reich: We never got it.

Mayor: We never got it.

Professor Robert Reich: From the Vietnam War, we never got the "Peace dividend."

Mayor: But it's -- correct, the peace dividend of that time, less spending on military and more on the needs of this country. But, Commissioner Bratton's version of peace dividend, he's talking about lately is that there's been about a million fewer contacts between police and community members in this last year than compared to just several years ago. The stop and frisk policy of the previous administration which was fundamentally broken. In 2011, 700,000 New Yorkers were stopped and frisked. The overwhelming majority had done nothing wrong and had -- there was no police outcome. We used to arrest a lot of young people, particularly of color for low level marijuana possession. We ended that policy. And a host of other things have happened that actually reducing the contact between police and community in a very productive way.

We also looked at the incarceration side of the equation. And mass incarceration is a profound problem in this country that needs to be reversed intensely and quickly.

[Applause]

Let alone, let alone creating an actual, honest path back for people coming back from incarceration. As they call them in our city of brotherly love, our neighbor in Philadelphia they call them returning citizens, not formerly incarcerated, which is a powerful message.

[Applause]

So, I think the notion of reducing prison population, jail population, at the outset. What we're doing right now at Rikers Island in New York City, we are finding that 40 percent of the people in Rikers have a mental health challenge. My wife, Chirlane McCray, is leading a charge for a brand new set of policies in the city government that will address mental health at the front end of the challenge, which will then allow us to divert a lot of people away from the incarceration system to begin with. A lot, a lot of people end up in the Rikers Island because they can't make a small amount of bail or because they didn't answer a summons. Those are solvable problems. We have summons reform, bail reform.

Our goal is to greatly reduce the population in our jails in the next few years. These are doable things. And so I think, I think that the criminal justice reform deeply needed -- it is to me clear you can achieve a lot of reform in the short term. That's going to change the economic trajectory for a lot of people who have been economically marginalized if they never come in contact with incarceration to begin with.

Professor Robert Reich: Time for one more, one more question. I wish we had time for more than one more question, but the mayor has already stretched to the limit your agenda and your schedule. Somebody over here, who has not had the chance ... Can we get a microphone over here, oh, down here.

Mayor: It's like here comes the microphone.

Professor Robert Reich: Boy that was the fastest run of a microphone. That was an Olympic microphone run, yes.

[Applause]

Question: So my name is Steve Silverstein. I'm a member of the board of advisors of the Goldman School. There was a story over the weekend in the New York Times on the nail salon workers, which I think many people read that's in your city. The problem is probably partially due to the fact that these are workers who cannot vote and in fact, they fear deportation from this country. So these are kind of loopholes in the system where you have workers who are disenfranchised.

The other thing that is not really mentioned is the, in that in the industry is a tipped industry that is where the workers get tips. And part of the reason that the employers don't pay them is because there's a loophole in the law where tipped workers don't really have to be paid. I know that Cuomo in New York tried to do a little bit about this, but there seems to be a little bit of reluctance to get rid of that policy where for certain professions, usually women-dominated professions, the employers really don't have to pay them at all. What do you think about that?

Mayor: Right, well I think you -- and thank you, you've educated me on this as have others. I think we have to end the practice of discriminating against those who receive tips and I think it's part and parcel of trying to lift up people economically. Let's create a minimum wage structure for all that actually provides a decent wage. That $15 dollar minimum wage should be across the board, including for those who previously were treated as tipped workers. If their tips help elevate their economic circumstances further, God bless. That's part one.

I think on the point you raised also about the reality of what happens with immigrant workers in this country. I don't think I need to say to anyone here, we need comprehensive immigration reform, but beyond that we have an opportunity here and now to change the immigration debate. And I think cities in a particularly powerful position to do this. I met with Mayor Lee earlier today and what cities are poised to do is the second the President's executive action on immigration is reaffirmed in the court system, San Francisco, New York and cities all around the country are going to go right out to communities and start to give people the opportunity. I think it's up to 5 million people in this country will benefit from the executive action and can get their status updated and improved through the process. And it's up to cities to actually implement it and reach people.

We're also doing a lot at the local level and a lot of other cities are, too, where we're not participating in the deportation process. For so many people who committed very, very minor offenses, we're just not going to aid and abet them being deported. We're providing legal support for families that are about to be torn apart by deportation. And one thing I'm very proud of in New York City, today we have a new municipal identification program, which has revolutionized the reality for a lot of struggling folks who happen to be undocumented. In the eyes of New York City, they are our fellow New Yorkers period. They deserve an identification that can give them access to all that society has to offer.

[Applause]

Professor Robert Reich: Mayor Bill de Blasio, you have been very generous with your time and we are very appreciative of your time. We're also appreciate, and I can certainly speak for myself and I think most people in this room, for the leadership you're providing on this issue of inequality. Keep it up and use your voice as you have. Use your stature, thank you.

[Laughter]

Mayor: Well done, thank you sir.

[Applause]

###

From: Carey, Michael
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: can you do dinner tomorrow night?
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 2:06:59 PM

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: samples and examples of readout materials
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 2:23:00 PM
Attachments: SU4T elected officials list 8 5x11 proof02.pdf
SU4T map APRIL 9.pdf
MAY13 Final Graphic.pdf

ELECTED AND PUBLIC OFFICIALS STANDING UP FOR TRANSPORTATION*

GOVERNORS/FORMER GOVERNORS

Ed Rendell, former gov., PA
Dannel Malloy, CT
Mary Fallin, OK
Kate Brown, OR
Jay Inslee, WA

U.S. SENATORS

Christopher Murphy, CT
Dick Durbin, IL
Shelley Moore Capito, WV
Rep from Sherrod Brown, OH
Rep from Tim Kaine, VA
Rep from Mark Warner, VA

U.S. REPRESENTATIVES

Bill Shuster, PA
Judy Chu, CA
Janice Hahn, CA
Steve Knight, CA
Alan Lowenthal, CA
Grace Napolitano, CA
Maxine Waters, CA
Elizabeth Esty, CT
Kathy Castor, FL
David Scott, GA
Bob Dold, IL
Bill Foster, IL
Dan Lipinski, IL
Mike Quigley, IL
David Young, IA
John Delaney, MD
Richard Hanna, NY
Louise Slaughter, NY
Eddie Bernice Johnson, TX
Marc Veasey, TX
Bobby Scott, VA

FEDERAL DOT

Therese McMillan, FTA

STATE/CITY DOTs

Leslie Richards, PA
James Redeker, CT
Aubrey Layne, VA
Sheailen Bhatt, CO
Nevada
South Carolina

STATE/CITY DOTs (continued)

Ohio
Maryland
Greensboro, NC
New York City, NY

MAYORS

Bill de Blasio, New York City, NY
Mark Stodola, Little Rock, AR
John Giles, Mesa, AZ
Greg Stanton, Phoenix, AZ
Thomas Tait, Anaheim, CA
Robert Garcia, Long Beach, CA
Eric Garcetti, Los Angeles, CA
Libby Schaaf, Oakland, CA
Kevin Faulconer, San Diego, CA
Edwin Lee, San Francisco, CA
Sam Liccardo, San Jose, CA
Patrick Furey, Torrance, CA
Michael Hancock, Denver, CO
Bill Finch, Bridgeport, CT
Mark Boughton, Danbury, CT
Harry Rilling, Norwalk, CT
Carlos Gimenez, Miami-Dade County, FL
Buddy Dyer, Orlando, FL
Frank Ortis, Pembroke Pines, FL
John Marks, Tallahassee, FL
Christopher Koos, Normal, IL
Karen Freeman-Wilson, Gary, IN
Greg Fischer, Louisville, KY
Mitchell Landrieu, New Orleans, LA
Kevin Dumas, Attleboro, MA

MAYORS (continued)

Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, Baltimore, MD
Emmett Jordan, Greenbelt, MD
Mike Duggan, Detroit, MI
Chad Olson, Dilworth, MN
Betsy Hodges, Minneapolis, MN
Del Rae Williams, Moorhead, MN
Sly James, Kansas City, MO
Francis Slay, St. Louis, MO
Daniel Clodfelter, Charlotte, NC
Tim Mahoney, Fargo, ND
Rich Mattern, West Fargo, ND
J. Christian Bollwage, Elizabeth, NJ
Dawn Zimmer, Hoboken, NJ
Ras Baraka, Newark, NJ
Richard Berry, Albuquerque, NM
Javier Gonzales, Santa Fe, NM
Byron Brown, Buffalo, NY
Lovely Warren, Rochester, NY
Stephanie Miner, Syracuse, NY
Nan Whaley, Dayton, OH
Mick Cornett, Oklahoma City, OK
Ed Pawlowski, Allentown, PA
Robert Donchez, Bethlehem, PA
Salvatore Panto, Jr., Easton, PA
Michael Nutter, Philadelphia, PA
A C Wharton, Memphis, TN
Karl Dean, Nashville, TN
Steve Adler, Austin, TX
Nelda Martinez, Corpus Christi, TX
Mike Rawlings, Dallas, TX
Betsy Price, Fort Worth, TX
Annis Parker, Houston, TX
Ivy Taylor, San Antonio, TX
Ralph Becker, Salt Lake City, UT
George Wallace, Hampton, VA
McKinley Price, Newport News, VA
Ed Murray, Seattle, WA
Timothy Hanna, Appleton, WI
Paul Soglin, Madison, WI
Bob Newell, Parkersburg, WV

* Current as of April 8

AMERICAN PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION ASSOCIATION

Public Transportation Industry Rallies Nationwide to Stand Up for Transportation

April 9 Events Stress Need for Federal Investment

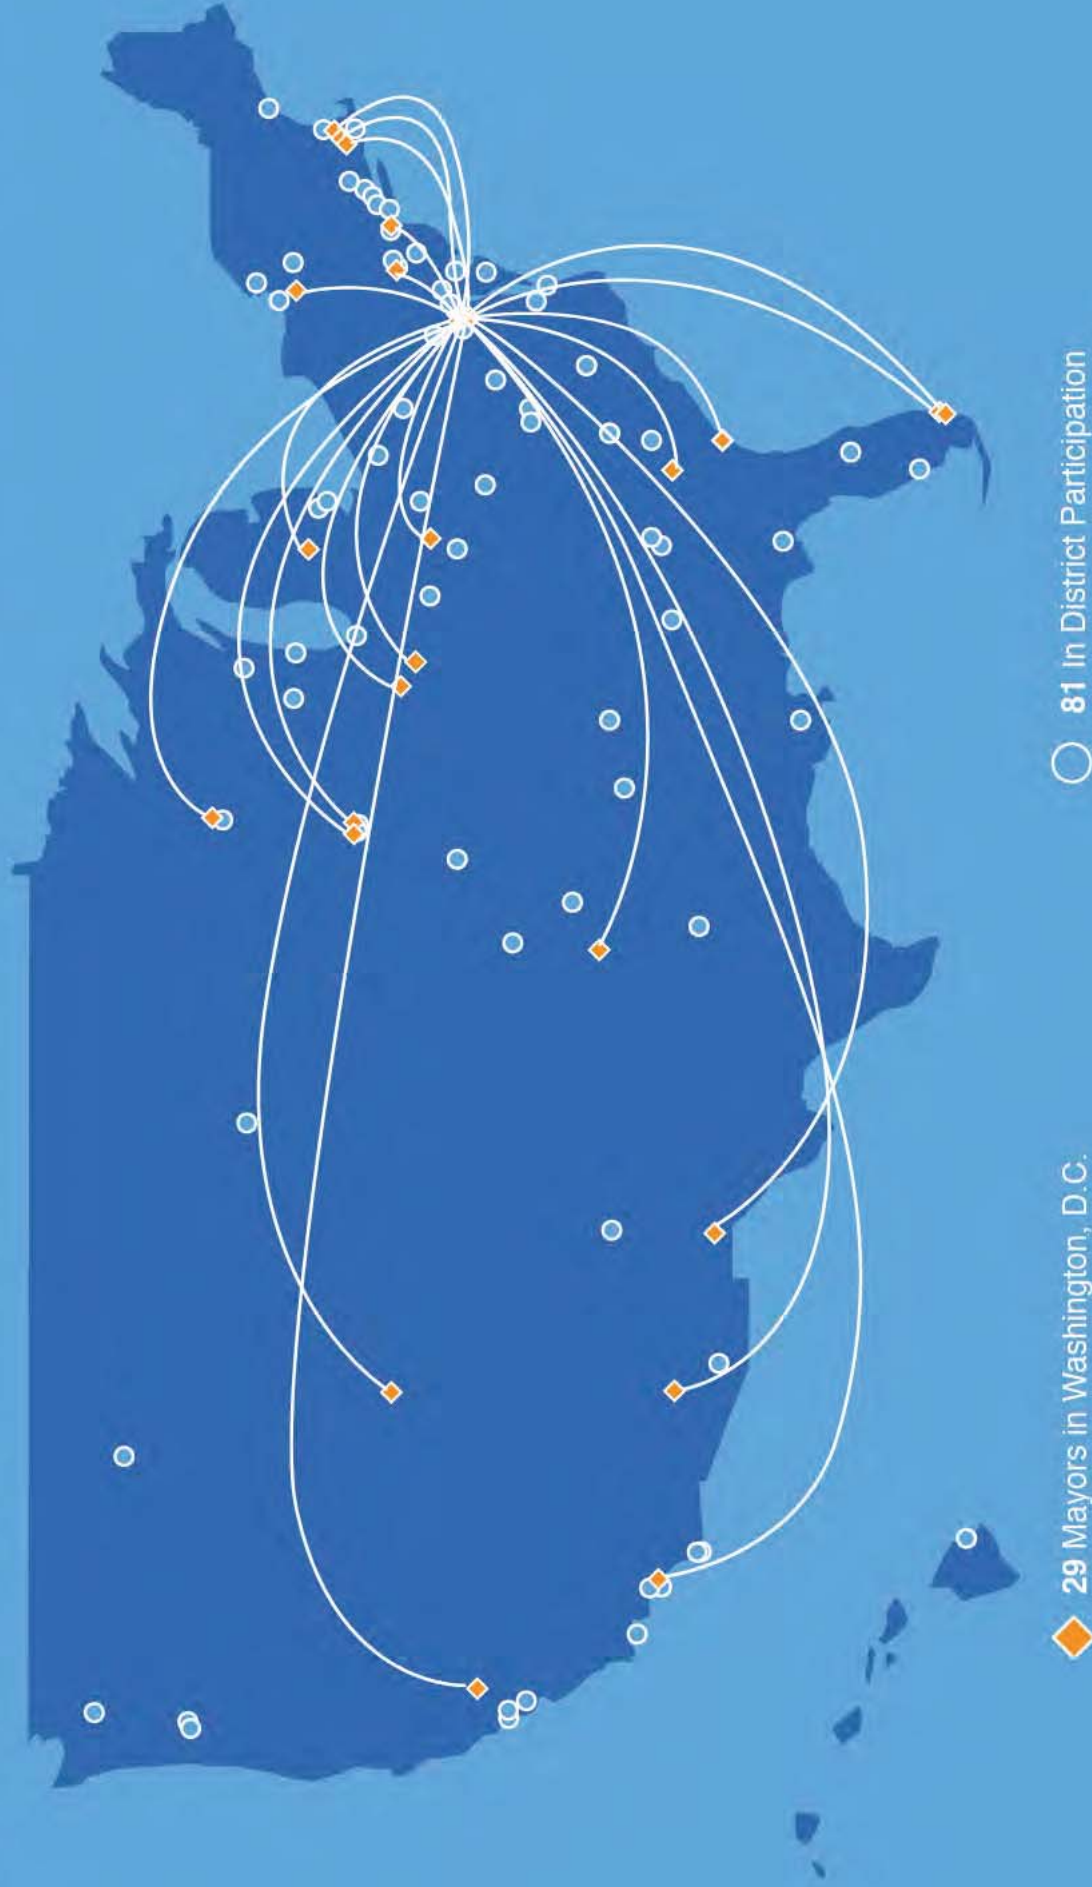

#SU4T

PARTNERS STANDING UP FOR TRANSPORTATION*

AASTOD	Clark County Public Transportation Benefit Area Authority	Midwest Regional Transit Authority	Pinellas Suncoast Transit Authority	SPORTSMAN
AC Transit	Cleaver Devices	Greater Dayton Regional Transit Authority	Pittsburgh Community Reinvestment Group	Star Transit
AEDM	Community Planning Association of Southwest Idaho (COMPASS)	Greater Peoria Mass Transit District	Pittsburghers for Public Transit	The Rapid
ALSDOM	Community Transit	Brewton Mountain Transit Agency	Port Authority of Allegheny County	The Rios Group, Inc.
American Sealing	Community Transportation Association of Idaho	Greenbush Transportation Department	Port Authority Trans-Hudson Corporation	Toledo Area Regional Transit Authority
Anelope Valley Transit Authority	CDMTD-Boston Chapter	Greenbush Transit Authority	Portage Area Regional Transportation Authority	Tompkins Consolidated Area Transit, Inc.
Architect for Life, PC	CDMTD-Houston Chapter	Greenhouse Urban Area Metropolitan Planning Organization	Potomac & Rappahannock Transportation Commission	Torrance Transit
Arpa, Inc.	CDMTD-National	Guilford County Transportation	Prestel	Transdev
Arizona Transit Association	CDMTD-Portland	Hampden Roads Transit	Rehab Transit	Transit Alliance of the Piedmont
Association of Independent Passenger Rail Operators	Connect Transit	HDR, Inc.	Red Rose Transit	Transit Authority of Northern Kentucky
Atlanta Bell, Inc.	Connecticut Association for Community Transportation	Hillgrove Area Regional Transit Authority	Regional Transit Authority of Beer City	Transit Authority of Broward County
BAE Systems	Corpus Christi Regional Transportation Authority	Ho-Ho-Ho	Regional Transportation Authority Group-Houston	Transportation Advisory Group-Houston
Baker Donelson, Bearman, Caldwell & Berkowitz	Cottowood Area Transit	HTB Corporation	Regional Transportation Commission of Southern Nevada	Transportation Riders United
Berkle Area Regional Transportation Authority	Culver Transportation	INTEC	Regional Transportation Commission of Washoe County	Transit Systems, Inc.
Birmingham-Jefferson County Transit Authority	Calver CityBus	INTEC	Regional Transportation District, Denver	Tri-County Link
Bi-State Development Agency	Dallas Area Rapid Transit	Innovations in Transportation (INIT)	Riverside Transit Agency	Tri-Delta Transit
Bombardier-American Division	David Evans and Associates, Inc.	Jacksonville Transportation Authority	Riviera Transit	TriMet
Bridgeway, LLC	Des Moines Area Regional Transit Authority	Jacobus Engineering Group	RLK Design	Tri-State Transit Authority
Burns Group	Des Moines Area Regional Transit Authority	Kansas City Area Transportation Authority	Roach Match Software	University of Illinois at Chicago-Urban Transportation Center
Caltrain	Desmet Technical Forum	Kansas Public Transit Association	RoadMatch Software	University of Oklahoma-Cleveland Area Rapid Transit
Camden County Transit Authority	Delta Engineering	Kawit North America	Sullivan-Kozer Transit	US Chamber of Commerce
Capital Area Transportation Authority	Disability Advocates of Kent County	King County Metro	San Diego Metropolitan Transit System	US High Speed Rail Association
Capital District Transportation Authority	Diversity Matters 2 US, LLC	Lake County Transit	San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit District	USFC Group
Capitol Metropolitan Transportation Authority	Ed Clure Transit	Lake Superior State University	San Joaquin Regional Transit District	Utah Transit Authority
Center for Transportation Excellence	EMSAK	Lane Transit District	San Mateo County Transit District	Valley Metro
Center for Transportation Excellence	Erie Center for Transportation	Leadership APTA Class of 2015	Santa Clara Valley Transportation Authority	Valley Regional Transit
Central Florida Transit Authority	Erie Metropolitan Transit	Lehigh and Northampton Transportation Authority	Santa Clara Valley Transportation Authority	Valley Transit
Central Ohio Transit Authority	Expansive Transit	Lewistown Area Valley Transit Authority	Sarasota County Area Transit	Vapor Bus International and Bicon Corporation-Wabtec Companies
Central Piedmont Transit Authority	Fairley Transport	Long Beach Transit	SBB Strategies	VA Metropolitan Transit
Central Valley Transportation Authority	Faring Angles Shuck in Traffic (FAST)	Los Angeles Metro	Sel-Help Counties Coalition	Virginia Railway Express
Champaign-Urbana Mass Transit District	Florida Public Transportation Association	LTK Engineering Services	SEPSA North America	Virginia Transit Association
Chardon Area Regional Transportation Authority	Fort Wayne Public Transportation Corporation	Lincoln	South Bend Public Transportation Authority	Waccamaw Regional Transportation Authority
Charleston Area Transit System	Fort Worth Transportation Authority	Luminaire	South Central Transit Authority	Washington State Transit Association
Chattanooga Valley Transportation Authority	Fresno Area Express	Macon Bibb County Transit Authority	South Florida Regional Transportation Authority	Washington State Transit Authority
CH2M America	Friends of Clayton Transit	Maintenance Design Group	South West Transit Association	Wisconsin Urban and Rural Transit Association
Citibus	Gannett Fleming, Inc.	Mass Transit Action Group	Southwest Pennsylvania Transportation Authority	Wisconsin Transit Association
City of Atlanta	Georgia Regional Bus Lines	Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority	Southwest Pennsylvania Transportation Authority	Wisconsin Transit Association
City of Boulder	Georgia Regional Transportation Authority	McDonald Transit Associates, Inc.	Spokane Transit Authority	Wisconsin Transit Association
City of Denver	Getting America to Work	Metro Magazine		Wisconsin Transit Association
City of Greensboro	Golden Gate Bridge, Highway & Transportation District			Wisconsin Transit Association
City of Morgan Hill	Greater Biscayne Transit Authority			Wisconsin Transit Association
City of Pueblo	Greater Cleveland Regional Transit Authority			Wisconsin Transit Association
City of San Diego				Wisconsin Transit Association
City of Santa Fe				Wisconsin Transit Association
Clallam Transit System				Wisconsin Transit Association

* Current as of April 1

#MayorsDo Take Action for Transportation Funding

Over 100 mayors demand increased federal funding for transportation infrastructure.

29 Mayors in Washington, D.C.

Mayor Thomas Armstrong, Not Affiliated – Grimes, IA
Mayor Ralph Becker, D – Salt Lake City, UT
Mayor Virgil Bernero, D – Lansing, MI
Mayor Muriel Bowser, D – Washington, DC
Mayor Christopher Cabaldon, D – West Sacramento, CA
Mayor William Carpenter, D – Brockton, MA
Mayor JM Skip Conkling, D – Altoona, IA
Mayor Joy Cooper, D – Hallandale Beach, FL
Mayor Mick Cornett, R – Oklahoma City, OK
Mayor Frank Cownie, D – Des Moines, IA
Mayor John Giles, R – Mesa, AZ
Mayor Hardie Davis Jr, D – Augusta, GA
Mayor Bill de Blasio, D – New York, NY
Mayor Kevin Dumas, R – Attleboro, MA
Mayor Jorge Elorza, D – Providence, RI
Mayor Betsy Hodges, D – Minneapolis, MN
Mayor Christopher Koos, Not Affiliated – Normal IL
Mayor Stephanie Miner, D – Syracuse, NY
Mayor Kenneth Miyagishima, D – Las Cruces, NM
Mayor Bridget Donnell Newton, Not Affiliated – Rockville, MD
Mayor Ed Pawlowski, D – Allentown, PA
Mayor Laurel Prussing, D – Urbana, IL
Mayor Tomas Regalado, R – Miami, FL
Mayor Jeffrey Slavin, D – Somerset, MD
Mayor Thomas Tait, R – Anaheim, CA
Mayor Nan Whaley, D – Dayton, OH
Mayor Dawn Zimmer, D – Hoboken, NJ
Deborah Feinen, Not Affiliated – Campaign, IL
Mayor Edna Branch, D – Savannah, GA

81 Mayors in District Participation

Mayor Jud Ashman, D – Gaithersburg, MD
Mayor Greg Ballard, R – Indianapolis, IN
Mayor Ras Baraka, D – Newark, NJ
Mayor Tom Barrett, D – Milwaukee, WI
Mayor Dewey Bartlett, R – Tulsa, OK
Mayor William Bell, D – Birmingham, AL
Mayor Steven Benjamin, D – Columbia, SC
Mayor Michael Bennett, D – Aberdeen, MD
Mayor Richard Berry, R – Albuquerque, NM
Mayor Michael Bodker, R – Johns Creek, GA
Mayor David Bowers, D – Roanoke, VA
Mayor Michael Brennan, D – Portland, ME
Mayor Robin R. Christiansen, D – Dover, DE
Mayor Dan Clodfelter, D – Charlotte, NC
Mayor Michael Coleman, D – Columbus, OH
Mayor John Cranley, D – Cincinnati, OH
Mayor Joseph DiGirolamo, R – Bensalem, PA
Mayor Robert Donchez, D – Bethlehem, PA
Mayor Denny Doyle, D – Beaverton, OR
Mayor Mike Duggan, D – Detroit, MI
Mayor Carolyn Dull, I – Staunton, VA
Mayor Buddy Dyer, D – Orlando, FL
Mayor William Euille, D – Alexandria, VA
Mayor Kevin Faulconer, R – San Diego, CA
Mayor Andrew Fellows, D – College Park, MD
Mayor Bill Finch, D – Bridgeport, CT
Acting Mayor Donald Fracasso, I – Southfield, MI
Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson, D – Gary, IN
Mayor Patrick Furey, D – Torrance, CA

Mayor Eric Garcetti, D – Los Angeles, CA
 Mayor Robert Garcia, D – Long Beach, CA
 Mayor Thomas Gillen, D – Oswego, NY
 Mayor Andrew Gillum, D – Tallahassee, FL
 Mayor Jeffrey Graham, I – Watertown, NY
 Mayor David S. Gysberts, D – Hagerstown, MD
 Mayor Charlie Hales, D – Portland, OR
 Mayor Timothy Hanna, R – Appleton, WI
 Mayor Toni Harp, D – New Haven, CT
 Mayor Jim Ireton, D – Salisbury, MD
 Mayor Sly James, D – Kansas City, MO
 Mayor Kevin Johnson, D – Sacramento, CA
 Mayor Elizabeth Kautz, R – Burnsville, MN
 Mayor William Kenoi, D – Hilo, HI
 Mayor Sara Kurovski, R – Pleasant Hill, IA
 Mayor Mitchell Landrieu, D – New Orleans, LA
 Mayor Ed Lee, D – San Francisco, CA
 Mayor Sam Liccardo, D – San Jose, CA
 Mayor Jeff Longwell, R – Wichita, KS
 Mayor Nancy McFarlane, Not Affiliated – Raleigh, NC
 Mayor Lisa Merkel, D – Herndon, VA
 Mayor Jonathan Mitchell, D – New Bedford, MA
 Mayor Craig Moe, D – Laurel, MD
 Mayor Edward B. Murray, D – Seattle, WA
 Mayor Robert Palmieri, R – Utica, NY
 Mayor Salvatore Panto Jr, D – Easton, PA
 Mayor William Peduto, D – Pittsburgh, PA
 Mayor Donald Plusquellic, D – Akron, OH
 Mayor McKinley Price, I – Newport News, VA
 Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, D – Baltimore, MD
 Mayor Kasim Reed, D – Atlanta, GA
 Mayor Harry Rilling, D – Norwalk, CT
 Mayor Ron Rordam, I – Blacksburg, VA
 Mayor Jonathan Rothschild, D – Tucson, AZ
 Mayor Mary Casillas Salas, D – Chula Vista, CA
 Mayor Marni Sawicki, D – Cape Coral, FL
 Mayor Libby Schaaf, D – Oakland, CA
 Mayor Helene Schneider, R – Santa Barbara, CA
 Mayor Pedro E. Segarra, D – Hartford, CT
 Mayor Will Sessoms, R – Virginia Beach, VA
 Mayor Paul Soglin, D – Madison, WI
 Mayor Mark Stodola – D, Little Rock, AK
 Mayor Marty Walsh, D – Boston, MA
 Mayor A C Wharton, D – Memphis, TN
 Mayor Steve Williams, D – Huntington, WV
 Mayor Diana Willits, R – Windsor Heights, IA
 Mayor John Engen, D – Missoula, MT
 Mayor Patrick Furey, D-Torrance, CA
 Mayor Emmett V. Jordan, D – Greenbelt, MD
 Mayor Sam Kooiker, R – Rapid City, SD
 County Executive Ed Mangano, R – Nassau County, NY
 Mayor Mike Rawlings, D – Dallas, TX

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT SANTA CLARA UNIVERSITY
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 3:18:21 PM
Attachments: image001.png

Am posting this one too

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: May 14, 2014
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT SANTA CLARA UNIVERSITY

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you. Thank you everyone. It is such a joy to be with you, and I want to tell you I have such fondness for Santa Clara University, not just because it is a beautiful place, not just because of the wonderful students and wonderful faculty, but because this place means so much to our family. And I reached out to Father Engh and I told him I wanted to come here and offer some thoughts and join with this wonderful university community in a conversation, and he said to me that he was very receptive but that there was a condition that I had to find a way to create a rainstorm at the same time.

[Laughter]

I said, you know, “Father Engh that’s going to take some divine intervention.” We worked on it together, and we’re proud of the result today.

[Applause]

That plan worked out very nicely. I wanted to tell you, you’re blessed to have a leader in Father Engh who cares so deeply about the opportunity this school gives to each student to really have a transcendent experience in their lives. The education provided here – and I’ve seen it with my own eyes; there’s something particular about the Jesuit philosophy of education; there’s something that is so appropriate to the times we’re living in.

In a moment, I’ll talk about what I think is the core challenge we face, but part of understanding that challenge and acting on it is really going deep into how this come to pass, and what it means, and what is the way out. And that spirit of inquiry, that critical thinking that is part of your everyday education here is not typical everywhere in the academic world, it’s not typical everywhere in our society, but it is strong here at SCU, and it’s something I think people should be very, very proud of. And just one – Chiara just wanted to say “Go Broncos.” Is that my moment?

[Applause]

And I must say I’m so appreciative of Father Engh for his leadership. I also want to thank his Chief of Staff, Molly McDonald, who has been great at helping us prepare for today, and all she does for this university. And it’s also a moment where we have to take stock that there is such extraordinary leadership in this world on the topic I care about, and I’m going to talk about, the inequality that we’re faced with today.

And I’ve said it many times, I am one humble voice on this matter but there is a voice that’s the strongest on this earth and has broken through more than anyone else, and that’s Pope Francis. And the Jesuit tradition has come out so powerfully in his ideas, his words, his analysis that is literally changing the global dialogue on income inequality and so many other issues. So, it’s a propitious time to be having this conversation.

But I also want to speak from a very personal perspective before I go into my remarks. This school means a lot to me and it means a lot to my family. And you know, for us – we first came at SCU, we experienced this beautiful place, but we didn’t know what it would mean in terms of our family’s life, what it would mean for us, and the future of our family, and the experience has been so powerful. So, I want to just say a profound thank you to everyone at SCU, and I want to be joined in that thank you by the First Lady of New York City, Chirlane McCray, who will now take her bow.

[Applause]

Well, the reason that I got to know this place is a young woman who means everything to Chirlane and I, our daughter, has been for us a revelation from the day she was born. And you know, you learn a lot from your children. And there’s always that hope that parent has, that dream that their children will surpass them. And you know, you don’t know when and how that might happen but it’s something parents cling to. And Chirlane and I are blessed because I can say this, and Chiara this is from the bottom of my heart, our daughter has surpassed us already.

And it is because she has shown her bravery, a strength – even in the face of her own adversity, a desire to help others to turn any source of pain into a source of action in the cause of helping others. That is the most beautiful thing. And so I just have to – I won’t brag about her anymore –but from the bottom of my heart, I have to express, not just my love but my admiration for Chiara de Blasio.

[Applause]

Take your bow. Take your bow.

Well, we’re here in the center of one of the most dynamic parts of the country. We’re here in Silicon Valley and we associate this with progress, and we associate it with innovation, we associate it with the creation of wealth. And we in New York City, as many of you know, we have a very impressive and booming tech sector of our own, and we associate it with the same things. And it would be easy to look at that good and think that the pieces of our society are coming together, things are working, an opportunity of balance.

And yet, what's true here, what's true in New York City, what's true all over the country that even in the midst of our strengths, we're experiencing a deepening – a deepening division, a deepening crisis, a deepening gap that's really in the end profoundly contradictory with our American values. It's a country that was founded – remember, not founded simply because people found themselves in a certain geography and it made sense to have a country within the certain boundaries. This was a country founded more than I could argue almost any other on a set of ideas, and those ideas fundamentally revolved around equality, and yet we find ourselves in a time of deepening inequality.

And my goal today is to talk to you about this crisis not because I think it is without solution but because I think we are not, as Americans, yet grappling with the totality of what it means and what it's doing to us; and how it does not fit our character and our beliefs; and how it has to be called out for what it is. There's a crisis of inequality.

When I ran for mayor, I talked about New York City, unfortunately, in its full reality as a tale of two cities. I talked about the inequality crisis that took many forms, not just economic. But the one that I think that is underlying so many of the challenges we face and is so under examined and undernoted is the crisis of income inequality. And the one where the solutions have not been acted on the most is in the area of income inequality.

And it's sobering because you think about the history of this country, and you think about the greatest economic crisis we ever had which was the Great Depression, the years leading right up to it – literally through the stock market crash in 1929 – those were the times of our historically greatest inequality. The wealthiest became even wealthier and those who had the least had no way of breaking through, and we had a template in our American thinking, look back at the year 1929 was the bright line in American history, that was everything we weren't supposed to be. 1929 was when the lust for wealth was out of control; when there was no set of boundaries and ground rules to stop us from veering into a dangerous path and literally going right over the cliff. And therefore, in that year, stock market crashed and our country went into the greatest economic crisis in its history. And for a lot of us, we grew up with those who went through the crisis. It was dinner table conversation in family gatherings in my family. People talked about what it meant, the bread lines, the people lost their jobs, the businesses – the family businesses that they had built over years and years were swept away in an instant.

And for those who went through the Great Depression, they had an attitude a strongly held belief that they would never let it happen again, not to their children or grandchildren, not to their country. And for decades, we actually lived out that belief. We actually had a country that progressed, and was more economically inclusive. It was more fair. There was actually a way forward, not for everyone. Lord knows, we faced challenges, and discrimination, and exclusion throughout our history, and those are very real still today.

But it actually was substantial progress for so many people, and the thought of ever going back in those dangerous times seemed inconceivable. And then, slowly but surely, almost without seeing that we were starting down the path, we started back towards that cliff we had once gone over. And now, this year, we have once again, the level of income inequality we had in 1929. The difference now is it's getting worse.

Now, in this year, we have the for first time a long [inaudible] of time that we've lived through in which an average American literally has been going backwards economically. I just want you to fully take in that idea. For the last 25 years, you take the median family income in this country and adjust for inflation, it is lower today than it was 25 years ago. We are still the wealthiest country in the world. We have the strongest economy in the world in terms of the totality of our economic might, but the average American has gone backwards.

I will have the honor of speaking at the University of California Berkeley earlier today, working together with former Labor Secretary Bob Reich, and he's done such extraordinary work on this topic. And I urge you to see a film he put together a few years ago called the 'Age of Inequality'. And this film points out that this crisis has deepened to such a point that is typical now in our country – even with people who used to think of themselves as middle class – it's typical for people to be living very, very close to the economic edge.

The phrase 'living one paycheck away from economic disaster,' is very, very real for a huge percentage of Americans. In the film, there were very touching moments where it would randomly go to people and ask them about their economic circumstances. The question was asked very simply, 'How much do you have in your bank account?' And it was painful to see so many families say $25, $50, $100. It was all they had as a cushion against economic demise.

That is what has happened more and more to American families, and it's because we went through the second greatest economic crisis since the Great Depression with the Great Recession. Starting in 2008, something profound changed. And I know we're going to have a dialogue in a few minutes, but part of what I think is so important about having the dialogue and examining what happened is to recognize that this is the uncharted territory. I told you what it was like when the nation went into the depression.

Well, at that time, of course, there had been nothing like it and a whole new approach had to be innovated to deal with a time that there's no precedent for, there was no roadmap, there was no game plan. Suddenly, the nation was fundamentally economically undermined, and the government had to innovate a way forward. We were blessed in that moment that we had leaders like Franklin Roosevelt or in my city, like Fiorello La Guardia who found a path and understood what it would take to make people whole again.

And again, we know from that history, those actions worked. World War II came, changed the dynamic for everyone – so much pain and suffering, but also a whole new economic reality that came out of it. The difference this time is the Great Recession hit, it changed our lives profoundly and set so many people back, and yet, we still haven't taken full stock of what it meant. This time, there are no new policies on the table. There is no profound change in our behavior, our approach, or our government that addresses the totality of what we face, and so we continue deeper into the crisis.

Now, I am not telling you all this out of hopelessness. I wouldn't do the work I do if I were not fundamentally an optimist. I am not saying it as a wakeup call. I am saying it because we can and must deal with it, and actually, we should be inspired by the history we've been through because if the Great Depression was the worst challenge we ever faced and we saw it addressed, we should be asking ourselves today, why is this challenge going unaddressed? Why are people content to watch an ever growing division and not demand more of their leaders? And where will it take us if the crisis isn't addressed?

It's interesting – this dialogue has grown slowly but surely. The Great Recession hit, the first few years obviously a shock to the system, where will we go, and we know so much of our financial sectors tittering on the edge. We know our auto industry was almost lost, and we were all caught up in the work of trying to salvage and save that which was immediately in front of our eyes and that which we are facing. Then, slowly but surely, in the years since, stock is being taken of what's happened, but it's been very slow.

Part of what I aspire to do working with so many leaders around the country is to get this issue to the front of the agenda where it needs to be. When you think about it, this kind of phenomenon is worth discussing. It's touching so many Americans so profoundly. It's going to have lasting effects on us. It has to come to the front of the agenda.

You know, the voices have started talking about this, which is so interesting because it wasn't just progressives like me; it wasn't just people from organized labor. One of the first people to say that our system was out of whack when it came to taxation was Warren Buffett, arguably the most successful capitalist of all time. He started sounding alarmed that something was wrong with the tax system in which he, as a billionaire, paid a lower percentage of taxes than his own secretary and the others who worked in his office.

Then, you start to see other voices come forward. One of the most affecting to me in last year was Lloyd Blankfein, the CEO of Goldman Sachs – and arguably, the strongest financial firm on Wall Street. He gave an interview a few months back. He talked about income inequality. He talked about how dangerous it was to this country. He used a word that we should all take as a particular warning sign coming from one of the people who probably understands our economy the best. He said income inequality was destabilizing the United States of America. That's his word, destabilizing.

So something's happening that is profoundly important, profoundly under recognized, and almost unaddressed particularly in Washington. And that is a time when people have to stand and be counted, demand of their leaders something very, very different. And we should feel some outrage at this moment. In fact, outrage, honest outrage is one of the things that moves social change, and it often starts on campuses like this because there has not been a recognition that a growing concentration of wealth in the hands of a few could seriously set us back as a nation.

Again, I don't believe it's consistent with our values, but as more and more economists and even business leaders are pointing out that growing concentration of wealth backfires because that wealth is in the hands of people who, by definition, do not plow it back into the economy the way consumers do. This is what Professor Reich talks about and so many others that there is a reality of what a strong economy looks like, there's a middle class that's growing, there are people who take the money they make and they spend it right away. And it builds up the economy for everyone.

Joe Stiglitz said – Nobel Prize Winning Economist, put out a report a few days ago, I had the honor of being with him – he said, 'Look, if the economy is no longer about a large majority of Americans having enough money to spend on a regular basis, well then, the fundamental dynamics are undermined.' He said, 'it's even worse than that because we've all been told, we've been told that we need an economy that grows. The only way to have it grow is to put more and more money in the hands of the wealthy, and yet, what we're actually finding is those "pro-growth policies," are backfiring.' The kind of growth we need is the kind of growth that uplifts working people in the middle class.

And any time the critics say that that in fact means that we will somehow not be able to sustain our growth, we'll look at the decades upon decades upon decades when America got better for everyone, the middle class grew and the wealthy, they did find but they didn't have anywhere near the concentration of wealth they have today. They also used to pay a lot more in taxes and that allowed the government to invest.

The America that worked from World War II through the end of the 1970s was the America where the distance between the average workers' pay and the CEO's pay was actually not that far. The CEO paid a very substantial amount of taxes that went into the government that invested in roads and bridges, ports, education, research, and it all kept growing for the good of all.

But just a few years ago, that phenomenon went like this – the pay of CEOs shot upwards, the concentration of wealth increased, the actual earnings of working people started to go down, the government no longer taxed at the same level, the resources of the government declined, the roads and the bridges got older, the research was cut off, education was no longer invested in.

The greatest nation on earth literally took its formula for success and threw it away. And that is the moment you inherited – that is the moment. Isn't that good news?

[Laughter]

That is the moment that we have to change. When I say you're inheriting, I am not saying it to be coy or to be depressing. I am saying it as a call to arms because you didn't create that but you can help solve it.

I'll give you an example of the kind of thing we should recognize as something wrong. In my city, And I said – I called it a tale of two cities, I didn't want [inaudible] words, I still don't [inaudible] words, I am responsible for 8.5 million people and their well-being but I am not going to pretend that we have solved the problem. So, I have a city with obviously some of the richest people on earth. I have a city where that income skew is amongst the greatest in the country. I have a city where 46% of my fellow New Yorkers are living at or near the poverty level – at or near the poverty level. We have 8.5 million people, 46% means almost four million people at that level.

Now, in that same city, just a year ago, we saw a single apartment sell for $100 million. Again, a city with four million people clinging – clinging to any possibility of getting by economically, we saw an apartment sell for $100 million. We saw another apartment rent for $500,000 a month, which made me think in my mind, I thought, what if the guy who purchased the apartment ran into the guy who rented the other apartment, what would he say to him? He'll probably say, don't worry, you'll be able to own one day.

That is a city that could turn into a gilded city. That is a city that could turn into a gated community. And we've said very clearly, we won't let that happen because by the way, what's true of New York City is true of our country. We don't work as a gated community. We don't work as a society of exclusion or a society with haves and have-nots are more deeply divided. What made New York City so great, not just for decades, for centuries, was it was open to everyone. It was open to immigrants; it was open to working people; it was open to folks that who had a great idea, and literally almost nothing in their pocket but turned it into something wonderful.

The entrepreneurs, the artists, all of the famous names you hear that come out of the history of New York City, so many of them started with nothing or were new to our shores. It was a society that actually allowed for that possibility of something greater because it was open. It was affordable, it was inclusive. Not always warm and welcoming. That's not always our strong suit but economically, a place of possibility.

[Laughter]

I know what I am fighting for and people today in my city are fighting for is to keep consistency with that great tradition that worked for us; to not let it slip through our hands; to not become as we see in so many cities in Europe, a place where the city is for the wealthy and the periphery is for the poor and the working class, no. That's, again, not consistent with our values as Americans. We're supposed to be a place for everyone.

So, we're fighting in New York City every tool we know how. We have the biggest affordable housing program in the history of this country where building and preserving 200,000 units of housing in the next ten years – enough for half a million people. So, literally, enough affordable housing that we will create to equal the size of the population within the city limits of Atlanta, or Miami, or Kansas City. That's what we're doing to go at the number one expense in people's lives, which is housing.

We're raising in every way we can wages and benefits. We passed a paid sick leave law for half a million more New Yorkers, so that they're not going to lose a paycheck just because they got sick or because their child got sick. We're providing full day pre-k for every child in the city this coming school year, which is going to change the lives of those young people and give them so much more opportunity. But also for the families taking away a huge expense they have to somehow pay out of their own pocket.

So, we are using every tool we know, and we're trying to hold ourselves accountable. By the way, I'd like to see a very different reality from my state government or my federal government but physician-heal thyself – first, show what we can do with our own resources. So, we just put out a plan for the future of New York City, and in that plan we said, we pledge especially if we can get the tools we need from our state and federal government, we will lift 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty in the next decade.

800,000 people right now are just scraping to get by. We will lift them up economically. We will do that to address the inequality that plagues us and to create a more fair and just society, but we need a state government that would do things like give us the higher minimum wage that's desperately needed – especially a place like New York. I'm a firm believer in the $15 dollar minimum wage. In a place like New York City, if you don't make that much per hour, you can't get by. A minimum wage is supposed to be a minimum wage. It's supposed to stand for something. It's supposed to be a measure of viability, but it hasn't been for a long time.

We're fighting for that in our state capital, in Washington. We're fighting for those investments I talked about before to actually see our federal government do what national governments all over the world do all the time – invest in mass transit; invest in roads, and highways, and bridges, in research, in education.

By the way, our economic competitors – they are very clear that their national governments have to build their economy. Why is China booming? Because China puts over four times more of its resources into infrastructure than we do proportionally. Europe puts over twice as much more. We can see it but we allow our current political dynamics to stifle all the things that would start to turn us around, and create opportunity, and create an economy that actually included people again.

I'm working with people all around the country who feel the same way and it's a growing number. We organized just a few days ago in Washington a group of leaders, members of the Congress, and mayors, and labor leaders, and issue advocates – we gathered together and we inaugurated something called the Progressive Agenda to combat income inequality. I urge you all to take a look at progressiveagenda.us. It's a simple set of ideas that we think can turn this crisis, and take us to a place of opportunity again – things like the $15 dollar minimum wage, things like paid sick leave and paid family leave for all Americans, pre-k for our children, progressive and fair taxation, the Buffet Rule I had mentioned before.

Let's create a tax system where those who have done very well actually have to pay the same percentage of tax as the rest of us. Let's create a tax system where hedge fund managers can do the [inaudible]. The hedge fund manager paid less in tax than the woman who [inaudible]. I say that as a Democrat but I believe what I'm saying is [inaudible] in all parts of the country and people of all different values and ideas. By the way – 2014 – where did you see states pass higher minimum wage via referendum? You saw it in red states like Nebraska. You saw people saying, wait a minute, something is out of whack here. We're going to do something about it. This set of ideas, I think, transcends our concepts of ideology because people are living it and feeling it on the ground and demanding solutions, but not small solutions – bold and forceful solutions. That's what would be needed to turn this around.

Look, I'll finish here by saying, a lot of us understand and it's very hard for people who are struggling not to feel this in this country. Hard working people, there's a lot of people in this country, they're not working one job, they're working two jobs, they're working three jobs, and still they end up with only $50 dollars in their checking accounts. Still they wonder if they would be able to pay the bills next week. For so many Americans, there's a deep, deep feeling that the game is rigged, that the rules actually are not fair for them and that those who are wealthy and powerful keep doing better and better, and the rules are only for those already at the top. By the way, the great recovery that we hear about all the time since the recession – 91 percent of the gains from that recovery have gone to those at the very top of the income scale already. So, why would any American citizen who thought there's something wrong with this picture – why would you call them wrong? You can't. You have to say they're seeing and feeling exactly what we experience in this country, and they're demanding all of us to find a way out of it and a way forward.

Again, I'll finish with a notion that I – even with this tough analysis I'm trying to provide, I see a lot of cause for hope. I see hope certainly in the fact that we went through an even a deeper crisis in the 1930s and found a way forward. I see hope in the fact that we actually have models from our own American experience of what can work to create a fair economy and an inclusive economy. I see hope in the fact that we see governments around the world investing in their people and achieving booming economies as a result. I see hope in the fact that there are business leaders of conscience saying this is not an acceptable state of affairs. I see hope in the fact that my brothers and sisters in red states are voting for a higher minimum wage. I see a lot of hope in the fact that this fight for a $15 dollar minimum wage has changed our national discussion so much that even some of our biggest corporations are rushing to proactively increase their own wages because they can feel the demand rising up, that fight for $15 dollar movement.

A couple of weeks ago, there are 200 cities in this country that simultaneously had demonstrations for a higher minimum wage. That's not business as usual. That says that something is happening at the grass roots and I'm a firm believer – real change does not happen from the top down, it happens from grass roots up, and it's starting to happen in this country.

I'll finish with a quote from the man who I think showed us the most about how to respond to economic crisis, and how to actually heed the call of our people – Franklin Roosevelt. He said, "Let us not be afraid to help each other. Let us never forget the government is ourselves and not an alien power over us. The ultimate rulers of our democracy are not a president, and senators, and congressmen, and government officials, but the people of this country." It's such a simple idea, and so powerful, so basic. Never allow that notion to stray from your field of vision. Never let the sense that there's paralysis in Washington, or angry partisan debate, or sensationalized news coverage – never let any of those things take away from you the feeling, and the understanding, and the belief that what Roosevelt said is still true. It's still the people who set the pace. We're hearing their call. They are demanding change right now and they are right. They want a just nation again. They want an economy that works for everyone again. With your help, that is what we will achieve. Thank you.

[Applause]

Dr. Elsa Chen: Mayor de Blasio, I'd I like to start by thanking you for your very powerful and compelling remarks, and thank you for bringing your lovely first lady, Ms. McCray. Thank you for coming in. Thank you for bringing the rainstorm also.

Mayor: Lovely and talented.

Dr. Elsa Chen: Lovely and talented, absolutely. Are we going to get in trouble if I didn't add that?

Mayor: I would never let you not add that.

[Laughter]

Dr. Elsa Chen: Okay. I thought I'd start with a question. Hang on a second. I have to remind people to pass the comment and question cards – the question cards to the aisles and people will be free to pick them up. Thank you. I like to start with a question that's pretty close to home here. In your recent op-ed with Elizabeth Warren, one of your recommendations for reducing income inequality was reigning in the cost of college.

Mayor: Yes.

Dr. Elsa Chen: So as someone who is –

Mayor: Can I get an amen?

[Cheers]

Dr. Elsa Chen: I know you're paying tuition bills at Santa Clara University.

[Laughter]

So, you know that college is –

Mayor: We're about to be paying a lot more at Yale University for our son, Dante.

[Laughter]

Dr. Elsa Chen: Congratulations to Dante. So, you know that college is really expensive these days, and I'd like to ask you why you think that's the case and what are some specific ways that schools like SCU can reduce tuition costs while still attracting high quality students and faculty?

Mayor: Well, I want to separate the public policy piece from what an individual school can do. Look, I think the fact is education determines economic destiny at this point in history more than literally any other point before. If we're going to have an inclusive society, you need the maximum number of people educated at the highest conceivable level. When that becomes economically impossible, we're broken, right? There is only a very small number of people in this country who know that their kids can go to college and they don't even have to think about it. Top 1 percent or maybe top 10 percent – whatever it is in that range, but for most Americans especially if it's multiple kids, it becomes an immediate challenge. And then, there's the challenge of debt burden which I have seen in the discussions of my own children – that something that Chirlane and I didn't have to obsess about. I think so many of you have to think about deeply – what will it mean for your own possibilities if you're carrying so much debt? I would say, this is first a public policy question. I think, we have to get this nation on a track to debt-free college, which means federal investment, and it certainly means one of the other things we can do is to create a methodology to allow students with debt to refinance their debt the way we do everything else in our financial system, and reduce the burdens. I think, structurally, it's not surprising if you have a federal disinvestment in education and certainly in financial aid, that it has created a bigger crisis where the skyrocketing cost cannot be met. Then, there's either a debt burden or for many – you are, thank God, the ones who manage to sustain your education but I have met too many young people who couldn't continue their educations. I also have met those who are perfectly able and should have been in that community college or four-year college, and literally did not think they could even start because they could not conceive of a financial way forward. So, you are the blessed that are at least in the game. There are many, many more – I would argue millions who can't sustain it or don't even try because the math is so daunting. I think what the individual institutions have to do – with all their might, besides the hard work of fundraising to build up their financial aid, is to do their darndest to limit the cost, and not do all the things that an institution would love to do to be as good as it could be, but at this point, I think as a question of equality and inclusion, we need financial aid more than we need a lot of the other things that might make a university great, because if it's not inclusive of every kind of people, it's not as great a university as it could be.

[Applause]

Dr. Elsa Chen: I think that's really a food for thought –

Mayor: Thank you.

Dr. Elsa Chen: You spoke also very compellingly about the desire for the $15 dollar minimum wage in New York City and elsewhere. One of my students – Stephanie, right there – would like you to talk about whether you foresee a rise in unemployment, or maybe a departure of small businesses, or any other unattended consequences with your proposed increase in the minimum wage?

Mayor: I've heard those concerns, obviously. Certainly, we heard similar concerns when we passed our paid sick leave law. We heard those concerns around the country but the paid sick leave is a great example of where – here in San Francisco, in the state of Connecticut, and other places – Seattle – all those concerns are put forward and the opposite happened. Healthier workers became more loyal, more longevity on job, more productive. That's one example. The same we hear in terms of minimum wage that it will have a negative impact on businesses – I would argue the opposite. I would argue the same phenomenon as paid sick leave, a better paid workforce will be a stronger workforce and in a lot of levels. You'll also be able to maintain talented workers for a longer period of time. But, guess what? The Henry Ford point – Henry Ford, creator of the Ford Motor Company, the man who was never described as a left-wing socialist, literally paid his workers at a level that would be unrecognizable today. By one estimate I saw, if his assembly line workers pay was adjusted for inflation, it would be pushing $100 dollars an hour by our terms today. He paid in an extraordinary wage. He had a very simple idea. It was not about charity or creating a better society, he had a simple sentence – “I want the workers in my company to be able to afford the product that they make.” It was an understanding about how our actual functioning economy works. So, I would argue to anyone who says that it's going to have a negative effect – I'd say, look at this economy right now, where so many families can't purchase anything but the basics. If you want a thriving economy, give people the kind of wage that they not only could just make ends meet, they can go out and buy some of the extras in life, and build up the economy for everyone, and a lot more employment for those who are not yet employed because the economy is growing.

Dr. Elsa Chen: But do you think that will influence American businesses' competitiveness with countries where people manufacture products that they also are not able to afford?

Mayor: I understand that challenge for sure, but here's what I have to say about our economy today. If it's not functioning for such a huge percentage of Americans and if, again, a simple measure – are people stably in the middle class? I argue that there's a huge percentage of people including some who even 10 years ago thought they were stable in the middle class who know they are not – the folks who are poor; the folks who are low income; working people; to folks who are clinging to the middle class but again, a few paychecks away; older workers who know if they lose a job, it would be very hard to find a new one. That is a pervasive reality in our economy, and this “recovery” we've experienced has come with very little wage growth. As I mentioned, the difference of 25 years ago to today – the average American family has gone backwards economically. I would argue, you have to go to the heart of that matter, and if you do, you're going to create economic growth that is actually sustainable and again where is the evidence? The late 40s, the 1950s, and 1960s, 1970s. Yes, different context in than a globalized world, but in the end, if our economy is not functioning for our people, I would argue our first task is to right that wrong. That is job one in this country and it's not being achieved.

Dr. Elsa Chen: Thank you. Do you think that there's any possibility that your efforts to push fellow Democrats to embrace more progressive policies might backfire when it comes to the presidential election in 2016, especially if the Republicans can find a somewhat moderate candidate?

Mayor: No.

[Applause]

Dr. Elsa Chen: Why not?

Mayor: I don't mean this is as a comment on you. There is a conventional wisdom that says, you know, the electorate craves a moderate. I would argue, the electorate craves leaders who are clearly defined and are offering bold solutions to the challenges we face because that larger reality – so, how many Americans are unaffected by the problem of stagnant wages, or college debt, or foreclosure, or so many of the other challenges that people face? All of them are looking for a clear path forward. I use the example of 2014. I think what happened with Democrats in 2014 is in many, many cases in competitive races, they did not talk about a progressive economic vision. They did not acknowledge the existence of the president of the United States, who is a member of their own party. They ran away from healthcare reform, which actually has been an extraordinary success in terms of reaching so many people who didn't have healthcare and now do. By the way, you want to talk to some people who actually think government did something for them, talk to some of them who didn't have health insurance and now does. Talk to perhaps some of your own parents, who had the situation where they couldn't get their kids under their insurance, now can up to the age of 26. Talk to people with preexisting conditions who couldn't be covered, now can. Nothing would be more important to a family's economy than not having to pay a huge amount of out-of-pocket healthcare costs. I use that example 2014 to say, I actually think the problem for my party is when people are not willing to be authentic progressive Democrats. Howard Dean – who I think the world of – who joined us a couple of days ago as we announced the Progressive Agenda – again, progressiveagenda.us. Look it up. That's my product placement. Howard Dean had that phrase from 2004 that changed so much of our political dynamic. He used to get up and say, "I'm Howard Dean and I'm from the Democratic Wing of the Democratic Party," and that to me is actually what the voters respond to.

Dr. Elsa Chen: Yeah. I have quite a few questions coming in.

Mayor: I'll do quicker answers now. Okay, what are they?

Dr. Elsa Chen: No, no. I have quite a few questions coming in related to criminal justice and police. This morning, a Quinnipiac University poll indicated that William Bratton, whom you hired for his second stint as police commissioner in New York City, has the approval of 55 percent of New Yorkers, with 28 percent disapproving and 57 percent approved of the Broken Windows-style of policing quality of life offenses. In fact, that poll found that support for Broken Windows outweighs opposition even among black voters. At the same time, Bratton's policies have been controversial, especially among Latino and black New Yorkers, and especially these days after the death of Eric Garner and many other African American men. How do you work with the police department to balance Broken Windows with issues of racial profiling to preserve public safety which is, of course, one of the greatest concerns for all people of all races in New York?

Mayor: From the beginning, my vision and – I have to say, I think Commissioner Bratton has done an outstanding job. I knew before I was elected, based on the number of conversations with them, I knew how kindred we were on these issues. The concept was, we had to find a way to keep crime low while repairing the bridge between police and community. The previous governing discussion in New York City – certainly the message of the previous administration then, there was a choice and it was epitomized by the stop and frisk policy. You can have a policy that alienated police from community, and in the process, the theory went – keep crime low, or you can bring police and community together but crime will go up. Bratton and I believe that that was a false choice and that we could, in fact, keep crime low, and maybe even drive it lower, while repairing that bridge. What happened? In the year 2014, we had the lowest crime we've had in a generation. We managed to take a broken stop and frisk policy and change it foundationally so that very few stops were taken and they were higher quality stops. We, in the course of the year, addressed what had been a very misguided policy of arresting New Yorkers, especially young men of color for a very low-level amounts of marijuana possession. We stopped those arrests – and we saw crime continue to decline. Now, we have crime challenges and there are some areas where I'm certainly not satisfied nor is the commissioner, but the balance point here was to say, you could have a quality of life policing addressing real concerns of community residents, keeping a strong and positive police presence in communities, but also create a more fair dynamic between police and community. What I think is going to happen as this deepens is that you will see police and community become partners. We had obviously a tragedy recently when Officer Moore was shot, and what isn't noted enough is that community residents immediately pointed out to the police the perpetrator. That is one small sign of the fact that – the day that I'm looking forward to is when we create that kind of bond, street by street, neighborhood by neighborhood, where community members are always reaching out to help the police and vice versa. It will make everyone safer – the community and the officers as well. We are actually on that track. We're on that track now. There's a lot of evidence of that, and we're very committed to it.

Dr. Elsa Chen: I find this hard to believe but I've just been reminded that it's time to ask the last question.

Mayor: Oh my God –

Dr. Elsa Chen: And I have these many questions.

Mayor: I'm just warming up.

Dr. Elsa Chen: I think I have to ask you this, and I think I know what you're going to say but I have to ask you anyway. Your national tour has raised lots of speculation regarding your presidential or other aspirations. You've consistently responded that you're only planning on running for re-election as mayor of New York. Here's where the born in New York, raised in New Jersey side of me comes out.

Mayor: Yes.

Dr. Elsa Chen: Are you serious, really?

[Laughter]

Mayor: You know, I didn't ask to see your biography but I believe you now – that you are authentic.

[Laughter]

You know, what's interesting – I think I'll just frame it this way. We have a conception in our political system, I think grounded in a lot of fact that the only reason that someone could do something is about political ambition or through this prism of being a candidate. There's another concept which is, what is leadership? Folks have asked me, what is a role of a mayor in a national debate? I always take a clean example and put it forward. Fiorello LaGuardia I think is the greatest mayor our city ever had and I think he will always be the greatest mayor we ever had. Fiorello LaGuardia, seeing the onset of depression and understanding that it would only be addressed with a federal role, helped to create the U.S. Conference of Mayors. There was no unity between mayors. There was no common vision and platform, but his vision with the other mayors was that they could bind together urban America to be a force to be reckoned with in Washington – they could actually change policies. And they were one of the reasons why the New Deal came to pass, which profoundly helped New York City out of the crisis. I believe right now and I think I've made clear of my remarks before that we are in a deep crisis and I can guarantee you, it's affecting my city in particular. It's affecting everyone but that 46 percent at or near the poverty level is plenty of an example of what it means for my city. I do not have a federal government I can rely on to invest in infrastructure, in education, in affordable housing. I don't have the minimum wage level I need for my people and only the federal government or my state government can make that change because by law, I am not allowed to. I believe we should tax those who have done well at a higher level so we can change our society for all. I don't have the right to do that. That power resides again in Albany and in Washington. So, I could sit back and say, let's just leave the status quo the way it is. Let's just assume it can't be changed or wait for someone to be elected someday to something and maybe we hope they'll change it or I can say as a leader with a bully pulpit, that I am going to try to change the conversation, and try and change the political context. I think we forget sometimes that the way things change is by yes, leaders announcing a vision of change but I said, it ultimately comes from the people. Look at some of the things that happened just in the last decades. I assume many people have seen the Inconvenient Truth – An Inconvenient Truth – I'm sorry – that movie by Al Gore. Al Gore used to go all over the world talking about climate change to doubting audiences. It was a very lonely task as the movie makes clear. 20 to 30 years ago, there was a fundamental misunderstanding or denial of climate change. Today, it is a front and center issue that people take very seriously and real action is occurring on the issue – not enough, but real action. Marriage equality – a decade ago – a decade ago, if I tell you we would be where we are today on marriage equality in so many states and possibly with the Supreme Court about to tip the bounce in favor or fairness for all Americans, you would have said I was crazy a decade ago. The people demanded it and a lot of leaders rose to the occasion. We have to address income inequality to be the country we are meant to be, and I've got to do something about it, but you know what? The only thing I am running for is reelection as mayor of New York City.

[Applause]

Dr. Elsa Chen: That's a no?

Mayor: That's a no. Thank you.

Dr. Elsa Chen: Thank you.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Leopold, Elana
Subject: TPA Update
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 8:17:27 PM
Attachments: TPA UPDATE 052815.docx

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB

FR: JDC

DA: 5/28/15

RE: TPA Update

MISSION STATEMENT/GOALS

Still working on this. Would love to mind-meld with you here.

Some options:

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->To move the Democratic Party to the left.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->To move HRC to the left.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->To make income inequality the “fiscal collapse” of the 2008 election, or the Vietnam War of the 1968 election. In other words – the biggest, most inescapable issue that defines politics up and down the ballot – and forces current elected officials of all stripes to weight in

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->To recruit and elect populist Democrats.

(BIG CAVEAT: We’d have to check to see the legal parameters here – so I’m only throwing this out as a discussion point – nothing has been done on this to date.)

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->To cultivate a grassroots movement that is essentially a Tea Party on the left (except better focused on a core set of issues).

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->To serve as a clearinghouse of information, policy, strategy, tactics, organizational/grass-tops support for progressive champions who need that support.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->To focus the national conversation on a core set of 15 planks (i.e., TPA platform) – and work like hell to get Washington to adopt those policies.

LEGACY

In other words, what do we want to “leave behind” – as you said in your Alterman interview.

Jackson didn’t leave much behind, after his historic candidacy that touched so many people.

Dean did leave a structure in place (Democracy for America). Obama did too (Organizing for America) – although it wasn't utilized the way it should have been.

Do we want to become a DLC or Third Way for the left?

Or do we want to be Convener-in-Chief – sort of a grassroots version of the Warren phenomenon – being the voice/leader who pulls together so many disparate parts of the progressive movement?

STRUCTURE

I've had some good conversations today.

██████████ can only help out on his lunch hour. Can't be hired away. Jeani Murray has a big job in pulling together all the national labor unions on various projects, BUT still has room on her plate to be an "organizing consultant" to TPA. She needs to get some signoffs first, but I feel like we've got a real shot at pulling her in. She's very enthusiastic about the cause, and totally in sync with our values. She also happens to be a wonderfully calm, yet aggressive, task-completer – basically the opposite of your hapless friend JDC!

Pickrell will always be available to weigh in – and calls me several times a day with ideas. But his role (and his compensation) will be reduced & used to pay for Jeani.

I'm talking with ██████████ tomorrow afternoon. My goal is to nail him down to be TPA executive director. His job would be to hold people like yours truly accountable, extract the stuff from me that I can do well, and find others to cover the things I do not know how to do. ██████████ – and he IS a genuine organizer!

RKK continues to lead the press stuff. One challenge there is that neither she nor Hayley can officially talk to City Hall just yet – which leaves me to be the conduit. The lawyers are working to fix that problem (I think it's a simple matter of getting a waiver completed – which is taking an inordinate amount of time). Allowing RKK to interface with Tom, MPC, Phil, and Andrea will make my life a LOT easier – as RKK has excellent connections to the press/relationships with them/creative ideas/knows strengths and weaknesses of the team/etc. And she is a true believer, as you know.

Hayley is getting it done, as always. I know she's been working to get Stuart Appelbaum on board – and I feel like we’re close. Assemblywoman Cathie Nolan also wanted you to speak to her Democratic Club so they could sign on. I have been conduit for now – but Hayley will be the one to close the sale.

Tom Snyder is a great resource/the adult in the room when it comes to thinking the organizing stuff through & making sure it clears the proper hurdles at City Hall.

Stephanie Yazgi is volunteering her thoughts/experiences in organizing the mayors, and is a great resource for neophytes like me who ask questions like “Hey – how should a Day of Action really LOOK?” She’s been fantastic – and I will lean on her more heavily – and she’s very eager to help.

SIGNERS

We’ve got over 1100 signers at this point. That doesn’t sound like much progress from the initial count I gave you on Day Three – but the truth is, the data guys were calculating the initial numbers wrong – so that number was artificially inflated. Bottom line: we’re making some progress on “regular people” signing up – even without any paid advertising (which every campaign consultant will tell you is the only way to really get your numbers up).

We have a proposal on how to use paid digital advertising to do just that – and it’s working its way through the Campaign for One New York system. Hope to get that going very soon.

VIPS

So only have one VIP to report, but it’s a big one – MoveOn.org is now officially signed on. Team TPA is tweeting/celebrating the addition (MoveOn claims 8 million members) – and are brainstorming on how to sync up with the Reich videos that they’ve been re-launching (which are all consistent with our agenda).

PARTNER ACTIONS

Mike Lux will be filming you in NYC next week for a video his group is doing. Purpose is to tie all of the various progressive groups together & show the world that we’re all working together. Will get you a briefing on this. It will be good.

Bob Creamer sent our stuff to his pretty big list of progressive activists, and is going to call me soon to talk strategy for building the movement. I know Bob pretty well, and he’s very plugged-in & knows how to get things moving.

DC-37 wants to do a piece for their newsletter (which has massive circulation) to highlight what TPA is all about. Fromo is writing a draft for them to consider. Hopefully they will only lightly edit.

I connected Robert Greenwald at Brave New Films to our friends in the teaching world, and they are both very excited to put together his Kindergarten Teachers vs. Hedge Fund Managers video. Greenwald's last piece on racism got like 15 million views online. It will be a good piece, and will work our website into it – hopefully driving lots of people to sign up.

MPC is working to get your Skype meeting with the Congressional Progressive Caucus on the schedule. Once that happens, and Keith gets them to officially endorse TPA as a caucus, we'll have a big number of Congressional Members to add to the list.

Tom Harkin still has the draft op-ed that we gave him, but hasn't yet responded. He may still be on vacation – so I don't think he's abandoned it; has just been distracted.

CHALLENGES

One issue I'm becoming more and more familiar with is the pitfalls of dealing with what some have called "The Professional Left." In theory, they are with us on the issues. They have real organizations with real members. However, there's a lot of competition between these groups: competition for attention, for credit, for money (many of them rely on contributions from the same large labor unions for their annual budgets), etc.

One example. Deepak's group was all about immigration a year ago. A few months ago, it was Social Security and college. Right before May 12th (as we know), it became all about mass incarceration. That's not to say he and his members aren't committed to EACH of these worthy causes. It's just to say that there's a general instinct that to stay relevant – even to EXIST as an organization – some of these progressive groups feel the need to leap on whatever issue is hot at the moment, rather than taking the long view.

I haven't figured out a solution to what you might call "mission drift" among these folks. Just flagging it as a challenge.

DECISION-MAKING

I now better understand the extent to which you want/need to be involved in many of the day-to-day TPA decisions. And we're going to keep you in the loop on as many things as possible – until you finally say “okay, I don’t need to be in on this one – just do it.”

More important, the TPA leadership needs to extend beyond just you. What I mean by that is this. We need a kitchen cabinet – a half-dozen or so smart, active, committed, diverse progressive leaders who are our go-to caucus for advancing our mission.

You could even call it a “steering committee.” It’s not like these folks would be bigger and better than our other valued partners; it’s just that they’d be the ones that we regularly have you communicate with – both individually, and as a group.

I haven’t fully fleshed out this group – but a top-of-head example would be:

[REDACTED]

Obviously that list is up for debate – just wanted to offer an idea.

[REDACTED] e

And once the Steering Committee decides what TPA will be doing, it will be a lot easier to push back against those who have ulterior motives/other agendas.

BIG EVENTS

As we’ve already discussed, there are a number of Big Events that we’d like to get cracking on.

- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Presidential forum on income inequality
- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->TPA Day of Action
- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Issues conference in NYC
- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Gracie Confab Part II
- <!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Policy forum focused on communities of color

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Tele-Town Hall

EDGIER IDEA

Per last night's call, there's a real possibility for us to create/fund/oversee a Caucus for Inequality effort in Iowa, for all of the obvious reasons.

We'd need a budget of $250,000-$500,000 to do it right. That would give us the money to rent the Braley caucus-goer list; hire an executive director and outreach director in the state; produce literature/rent office space/get local website going; cover travel and such.

This is a VERY big-ticket item – but could be a mission well-worth funding – as long as we thoroughly think through the ramifications/perceptions vis a vis certain friends in high places.

John Davis is more than happy to help map out a plan for this – but wanted to put a price tag on it & get your thoughts before we took it to the next step.

IN THE NEWS

Not a comprehensive list, but:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Morning Joe talked about income inequality this morning, and mentioned your work there.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->A progressive State Rep. in Pennsylvania sounds a lot like us, in a column that appeared in the Morning Call today.

<http://www.mcall.com/opinion/yourview/mc-minimum-wage-education-freeman-yv--20150527-story.html>

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Dick Fuld, the former CEO of LEHMAN BROTHERS, had this to say today:

Fuld also sounded concerned about income inequality: "Capitalism only works if it starts at the top and filters down."

<http://www.businessinsider.com.au/rich-fuld-speech-2015-5>

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->A Reuters piece helps explain why we included Social Security expansion to TPA (without naming us – just the thinking behind it).

In other words, income inequality is translating into retirement inequality.

Here is a better option: Expand Social Security benefits to help people who need it most.

<http://www.thefiscaltimes.com/latestnews/2015/05/28/How-use-Social-Security-fix-retirement-inequality>

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->A NYT review of a new book on inequality shines a light on the GOP presidentials adopting this as a cause.

http://www.nytimes.com/2015/05/29/business/dealbook/book-review-of-inequality-by-anthony-atkinson.html?_r=0

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->And Republican Gov. Rick Snyder is getting into the act.

<http://wemu.org/post/snyder-building-interest-skilled-trades-job-one-mi>

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Rick SANTORUM is talking about it.

<http://pjmedia.com/tatler/2015/05/28/santorum-i-know-radical-islam-can-face-former-secstate-very-steeped-in-knowledge-in-that-area/>

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->And of course, less surprising, Bernie Sanders is all OVER it. (Links too numerous to include here.)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Joan Walsh is always smart in writing about it.

http://www.salon.com/2015/05/28/gop_trolls_set_a_dangerous_trap_for_dems_why_zombie_centrist_would_doom_the_party/

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Robert Reich re-launched his video on the importance of unions to fixing the economy (one of our TPA planks, don't forget).

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xWtX3fHUjw4>

And that is just a SAMPLE of the stuff that's out there TODAY. If you wanted a full recap of income inequality in the news for this week, you'd need a full workday to digest it all.

WHAT WE NEED FROM YOU

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Deliver some key TPA plugs/talking points on Diana Williams and Daily Show appearances.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Continue making Campaign for One New York calls like you did this morning – but try to set aside a couple of hours a week for TPA-specific calls (care and feeding and listening to key partners).
<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Some high-level thinking on where YOU want to take TPA.

###

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB

FR: JDC

DA: 5/28/15

RE: TPA Update

MISSION STATEMENT/GOALS

Still working on this. Would love to mind-meld with you here.

Some options:

- To move the Democratic Party to the left.
- To move HRC to the left.
- To make income inequality the “fiscal collapse” of the 2008 election, or the Vietnam War of the 1968 election. In other words – the biggest, most inescapable issue that defines politics up and down the ballot – and forces current elected officials of all stripes to weight in
- To recruit and elect populist Democrats. (BIG CAVEAT: We’d have to check to see the legal parameters here – so I’m only throwing this out as a discussion point – nothing has been done on this to date.)
- To cultivate a grassroots movement that is essentially a Tea Party on the left (except better focused on a core set of issues).
- To serve as a clearinghouse of information, policy, strategy, tactics, organizational/grass-tops support for progressive champions who need that support.
- To focus the national conversation on a core set of 15 planks (i.e., TPA platform) – and work like hell to get Washington to adopt those policies.

LEGACY

In other words, what do we want to “leave behind” – as you said in your Alterman interview.

Jackson didn’t leave much behind, after his historic candidacy that touched so many people.

Dean did leave a structure in place (Democracy for America). Obama did too (Organizing for America) – although it wasn’t utilized the way it should have been.

Do we want to become a DLC or Third Way for the left?

Or do we want to be Convener-in-Chief – sort of a grassroots version of the Warren phenomenon – being the voice/leader who pulls together so many disparate parts of the progressive movement?

STRUCTURE

I've had some good conversations today.

██████████ can only help out on his lunch hour. Can't be hired away. Jeani Murray has a big job in pulling together all the national labor unions on various projects, BUT still has room on her plate to be an "organizing consultant" to TPA. She needs to get some signoffs first, but I feel like we've got a real shot at pulling her in. She's very enthusiastic about the cause, and totally in sync with our values. She also happens to be a wonderfully calm, yet aggressive, task-completer – basically the opposite of your hapless friend JDC!

Pickrell will always be available to weigh in – and calls me several times a day with ideas. But his role (and his compensation) will be reduced & used to pay for Jeani.

I'm talking with ██████████ tomorrow afternoon. My goal is to nail him down to be TPA executive director. His job would be to hold people like yours truly accountable, extract the stuff from me that I can do well, and find others to cover the things I do not know how to do. ██████████ – and he IS a genuine organizer!

RKK continues to lead the press stuff. One challenge there is that neither she nor Hayley can officially talk to City Hall just yet – which leaves me to be the conduit. The lawyers are working to fix that problem (I think it's a simple matter of getting a waiver completed – which is taking an inordinate amount of time). Allowing RKK to interface with Tom, MPC, Phil, and Andrea will make my life a LOT easier – as RKK has excellent connections to the press/relationships with them/creative ideas/knows strengths and weaknesses of the team/etc. And she is a true believer, as you know.

Hayley is getting it done, as always. I know she's been working to get Stuart Appelbaum on board – and I feel like we're close. Assemblywoman Cathie Nolan also wanted you to speak to her Democratic Club so they could sign on. I have been conduit for now – but Hayley will be the one to close the sale.

Tom Snyder is a great resource/the adult in the room when it comes to thinking the organizing stuff through & making sure it clears the proper hurdles at City Hall.

Stephanie Yazgi is volunteering her thoughts/experiences in organizing the mayors, and is a great resource for neophytes like me who ask questions like “Hey – how should a Day of Action really LOOK?” She’s been fantastic – and I will lean on her more heavily – and she’s very eager to help.

SIGNERS

We’ve got over 1100 signers at this point. That doesn’t sound like much progress from the initial count I gave you on Day Three – but the truth is, the data guys were calculating the initial numbers wrong – so that number was artificially inflated. Bottom line: we’re making some progress on “regular people” signing up – even without any paid advertising (which every campaign consultant will tell you is the only way to really get your numbers up).

We have a proposal on how to use paid digital advertising to do just that – and it’s working its way through the Campaign for One New York system. Hope to get that going very soon.

VIPS

So only have one VIP to report, but it’s a big one – MoveOn.org is now officially signed on. Team TPA is tweeting/celebrating the addition (MoveOn claims 8 million members) – and are brainstorming on how to sync up with the Reich videos that they’ve been re-launching (which are all consistent with our agenda).

PARTNER ACTIONS

Mike Lux will be filming you in NYC next week for a video his group is doing. Purpose is to tie all of the various progressive groups together & show the world that we’re all working together. Will get you a briefing on this. It will be good.

Bob Creamer sent our stuff to his pretty big list of progressive activists, and is going to call me soon to talk strategy for building the movement. I know Bob pretty well, and he’s very plugged-in & knows how to get things moving.

DC-37 wants to do a piece for their newsletter (which has massive circulation) to highlight what TPA is all about. Fromo is writing a draft for them to consider. Hopefully they will only lightly edit.

I connected Robert Greenwald at Brave New Films to our friends in the teaching world, and they are both very excited to put together his Kindergarten Teachers vs. Hedge Fund Managers video. Greenwald’s last piece on racism got like 15 million views online. It will be a good piece, and will work our website into it – hopefully driving lots of people to sign up.

MPC is working to get your Skype meeting with the Congressional Progressive Caucus on the schedule. Once that happens, and Keith gets them to officially endorse TPA as a caucus, we'll have a big number of Congressional Members to add to the list.

Tom Harkin still has the draft op-ed that we gave him, but hasn't yet responded. He may still be on vacation – so I don't think he's abandoned it; has just been distracted.

CHALLENGES

One issue I'm becoming more and more familiar with is the pitfalls of dealing with what some have called "The Professional Left." In theory, they are with us on the issues. They have real organizations with real members. However, there's a lot of competition between these groups: competition for attention, for credit, for money (many of them rely on contributions from the same large labor unions for their annual budgets), etc.

One example. Deepak's group was all about immigration a year ago. A few months ago, it was Social Security and college. Right before May 12th (as we know), it became all about mass incarceration. That's not to say he and his members aren't committed to EACH of these worthy causes. It's just to say that there's a general instinct that to stay relevant – even to EXIST as an organization – some of these progressive groups feel the need to leap on whatever issue is hot at the moment, rather than taking the long view.

I haven't figured out a solution to what you might call "mission drift" among these folks. Just flagging it as a challenge.

DECISION-MAKING

I now better understand the extent to which you want/need to be involved in many of the day-to-day TPA decisions. And we're going to keep you in the loop on as many things as possible – until you finally say "okay, I don't need to be in on this one – just do it."

More important, the TPA leadership needs to extend beyond just you. What I mean by that is this. We need a kitchen cabinet – a half-dozen or so smart, active, committed, diverse progressive leaders who are our go-to caucus for advancing our mission.

You could even call it a "steering committee." It's not like these folks would be bigger and better than our other valued partners; it's just that they'd be the ones that we regularly have you communicate with – both individually, and as a group.

I haven't fully fleshed out this group – but a top-of-head example would be:

Obviously that list is up for debate – just wanted to offer an idea.

And once the Steering Committee decides what TPA will be doing, it will be a lot easier to push back against those who have ulterior motives/other agendas.

BIG EVENTS

As we've already discussed, there are a number of Big Events that we'd like to get cracking on.

- Presidential forum on income inequality
- TPA Day of Action
- Issues conference in NYC
- Gracie Confab Part II
- Policy forum focused on communities of color
- Tele-Town Hall

EDGIER IDEA

Per last night's call, there's a real possibility for us to create/fund/oversee a Caucus for Inequality effort in Iowa, for all of the obvious reasons.

We'd need a budget of $250,000-$500,000 to do it right. That would give us the money to rent the Braley caucus-goer list; hire an executive director and outreach director in the state; produce literature/rent office space/get local website going; cover travel and such.

This is a VERY big-ticket item – but could be a mission well-worth funding – as long as we thoroughly think through the ramifications/perceptions vis a vis certain friends in high places.

John Davis is more than happy to help map out a plan for this – but wanted to put a price tag on it & get your thoughts before we took it to the next step.

IN THE NEWS

Not a comprehensive list, but:

- Morning Joe talked about income inequality this morning, and mentioned your work there.
- A progressive State Rep. in Pennsylvania sounds a lot like us, in a column that appeared in the Morning Call today. <http://www.mcall.com/opinion/yourview/mc-minimum-wage-education-freeman-yv--20150527-story.html>
- Dick Fuld, the former CEO of LEHMAN BROTHERS, had this to say today:
Fuld also sounded concerned about income inequality: “Capitalism only works if it starts at the top and filters down.”
<http://www.businessinsider.com.au/rich-fuld-speech-2015-5>
- A Reuters piece helps explain why we included Social Security expansion to TPA (without naming us – just the thinking behind it).

In other words, income inequality is translating into retirement inequality.

Here is a better option: Expand Social Security benefits to help people who need it most.

<http://www.thefiscaltimes.com/latestnews/2015/05/28/How-use-Social-Security-fix-retirement-inequality>

- A NYT review of a new book on inequality shines a light on the GOP presidentials adopting this as a cause.
<http://www.nytimes.com/2015/05/29/business/dealbook/book-review-of-inequality-by-anthony-atkinson.html? r=0>
- And Republican Gov. Rick Snyder is getting into the act.
<http://wemu.org/post/snyder-building-interest-skilled-trades-job-one-mi>

- Rick SANTORUM is talking about it.
<http://pjmedia.com/tatler/2015/05/28/santorum-i-know-radical-islam-can-face-former-secstate-very-steeped-in-knowledge-in-that-area/>
- And of course, less surprising, Bernie Sanders is all OVER it. (Links too numerous to include here.)
- Joan Walsh is always smart in writing about it.
http://www.salon.com/2015/05/28/gop_trolls_set_a_dangerous_trap_for Dems_why_zombie_centristism_would_doom_the_party/
- Robert Reich re-launched his video on the importance of unions to fixing the economy (one of our TPA planks, don't forget).
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xWtX3fHUJw4>

And that is just a SAMPLE of the stuff that's out there TODAY. If you wanted a full recap of income inequality in the news for this week, you'd need a full workday to digest it all.

WHAT WE NEED FROM YOU

- Deliver some key TPA plugs/talking points on Diana Williams and Daily Show appearances.
- Continue making Campaign for One New York calls like you did this morning – but try to set aside a couple of hours a week for TPA-specific calls (care and feeding and listening to key partners).
- Some high-level thinking on where YOU want to take TPA.

###

From: Hayley Prim
To: B
Cc: jfd@akpdmedia.com
Subject: Re: Rep Pingree of Maine
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 9:50:12 PM

Nice! We will reach out

On Thursday, May 28, 2015, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Wants to get involved with TPA

--
Hayley Prim
c: [REDACTED]

From: B
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Fw: Becky Quick - CNBC
Date: Thursday, May 28, 2015 9:52:08 PM

I had a very good talk with her tonight and she invited me onto her show to talk about income inequality. Let's do this in the next few weeks

----- Original Message -----

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
Sent: Thursday, May 28, 2015 08:31 PM
To: B
Cc: Leopold, Elana; 'ahagelgins@cityhall.nyc.gov' <ahagelgins@cityhall.nyc.gov>; Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael Subject: Becky Quick (introduced you tonight)

Sir,

Becky Quick is the co-anchor of Squawk Box on CNBC.

I have passed along to the team that you were invited to be on her show and that you are interested in participating.

R

Ronalie de Alwis
Office of the Mayor
City of New York
Cell:347-952-9525

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re:
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 6:47:28 AM

Sure

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

> On May 28, 2015, at 11:35 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Can we invite Hayley to dinner tomorrow? Per boss
>
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: TPA
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 7:32:01 AM

Will do

> On May 29, 2015, at 7:31 AM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>

> Then pls invite her to join us

>

>

> ----- Original Message -----

> From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

> Sent: Thursday, May 28, 2015 11:36 PM

> To: B

> Subject: Re: TPA

>

> Yes and yes

>

>

>

>> On May 28, 2015, at 9:53 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>

>>

>> Should we invite Hayley to join our dinner? Do you sense that she could play a bigger role?

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; [REDACTED]
Subject: Pls discuss
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 8:08:16 AM

Ronald perelman and sandy weill. Important. Re: views they expressed

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: You may have missed
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 9:43:27 AM

I remember - but I talked with the gang after the call, and we thought starting with Iowa made the most sense... Davis thinks New Hampshire is stupid/not that relevant anymore... South Carolina is only in play if Iowa/NH go down the drains (in my experience)

On 5/29/15, 8:42 AM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>
>The idea from the conf call that there are FOUR caucus and primary states >where there are extraordinary opportunities for the TPA. Let's discuss
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; jonathan@berlinrosen.com; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re:
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 10:08:28 AM

Who the fuck did they think was Shorris?? I'm not that old!

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 at 10:05 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Jonathan Rosen <jonathan@berlinrosen.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE:

Looks like the jig is up.....

Evan Siegfried

@evansiegfried

Denny's the new power breakfast spot? Irresponsible

@Jim_Slevin@SJCassidy1@PTWalzak Shorris @emmawolfe. Avoided one another responsibly.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 10:00 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; jonathan@berlinrosen.com; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re:

Love it

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 at 9:54 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Jonathan Rosen <jonathan@berlinrosen.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: <no subject>

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "John Del Cecato"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: FW: NY MAG: Inside the Latest Cuomo–de Blasio Squabble Is a Deeper Divide Over Taxes
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 10:40:43 AM

From: Clips
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 10:34 AM
Subject: NY MAG: Inside the Latest Cuomo–de Blasio Squabble Is a Deeper Divide Over Taxes

Inside the Latest Cuomo–de Blasio Squabble Is a Deeper Divide Over Taxes

NY MAGAZINE - Chris Smith

<http://nymag.com/daily/intelligencer/2015/05/latest-cuomode-blasio-squabble-is-a-rerun.html>

Boy, it sure is a good thing Governor Andrew Cuomo and Mayor Bill de Blasio are such close, personal friends. Otherwise, the past two days of sniping between them might have really gotten nasty.

Because short of name-calling and sticking out their tongues, Cuomo and de Blasio are doing a pretty good job of appearing to be angry with one another. De Blasio has proposed a package of housing ideas that would make state rent regulations more tenant-friendly and alter a state tax-rebate plan that's intended to subsidize affordable housing, all to advance his progressive agenda. But the legislature and governor are heading toward extending the laws without changes. So on Wednesday, the mayor denounced that as "irresponsible."

"We particularly need the governor to act. We need leadership, and we know the governor has been able in the past to create real change here in Albany and get big things done," de Blasio said after meeting with Cuomo. "I'm quite frustrated that issues of such great importance to millions of New Yorkers still have not been addressed."

This was followed by a Cuomo "administration source" throwing an elbow in a text sent to Zack Fink of NY1: "Don't get me wrong, it was nice [de Blasio] showed up. But to appear in the Capitol a few days before the end of session with controversial and untested ideas that are opposed by significant groups such as the AFL CIO is not how leaders get things done."

On Thursday, the governor himself attempted some political jujitsu. Cuomo, who has raised millions from real-estate developers, accused de Blasio of favoring developers over the little guys. "A lot of people think the deal that has been negotiated by the city is too rich for developers and doesn't do enough for workers," Cuomo said. "I want to make sure that workers are protected and the developers get a fair deal. I am not interested in passing a program that is a giveaway to developers."

Cuomo is right that de Blasio's plan would be a boon to landlords in at least one respect: The mayor, to try to spur construction of cheaper apartments, proposes extending the 421-a tax abatement from the current 15 or 25 years to 35 years.

But this dance is starting to seem awfully familiar — and the emphasis on the personal has obscured one important substantive point. Back in the winter of 2014, when de Blasio was pushing for a major expansion of pre-kindergarten and after-school programs, he absorbed months of jabs from Cuomo — who at one point tried to outflank de Blasio on the left by saying the mayor's proposal could create "more inequity and inequality."

The strongest flashback of all comes from a key element of last year's dispute: taxes. To fund pre-k, de Blasio wanted to raise rates on the rich. This time around, de Blasio is proposing a "mansion tax" to help fund the construction of new affordable housing.

In both cases, the mayor's tax proposal had as much symbolic as practical value. The governor was, and probably is again, less than thrilled: Cuomo has made lowering taxes, with one notable exception, a foundation of his agenda.

During the pre-k battle, Cuomo was exasperated by the mayor's insistence on pushing a tax increase even after alternative funding had been promised. There are more puzzle pieces in play this time around, but one significant source of friction doesn't seem to have changed.

Don't underestimate the pettiness driving the spat between Cuomo and de Blasio ("Jeez, can't Andrew not be a dick to Bill just once?" a Cuomo ally asks). But the tax question also has serious big-picture resonance. The two men are fighting over competing versions of liberalism: Cuomo, the (Bill) Clinton-ian centrist New Democrat versus de Blasio the New-Old Lefty Democrat.

For the mayor, the national ramifications are larger — de Blasio is trying hard to lead a broad progressive movement, and to show that an ideologically driven mayor can efficiently run and reform a major city. Cuomo's national hopes are dormant right now, so for him, the squabble is largely about reminding everyone who rules New York. Yet he's staying true to his belief in middle-of-the-road, bipartisan, get-things-done governance.

The local fight over taxes on the rich is also a warm-up act for an intramural Democratic debate that Hillary Clinton will need to contend with next year. But hey, friends can always work something out, right?

From: B
To: "hprim@hilltoppublicsolutions.com"
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Rebecca Katz \(hilltoppublicsolutions.com\); Klein, Monica; de Alwis, Ronalie
Subject: Re: Rachel Maddow
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 11:01:20 AM

Will try to call her

From: Hayley Prim [mailto:hprim@hilltoppublicsolutions.com]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 07:50 AM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Rebecca Katz (hilltoppublicsolutions.com)
Subject: Rachel Maddow

wants to connect with you. We tried to set this up during our time yesterday, but the timing didn't work out.

If you have a few minutes today when she is free, I think you should call her and talk to her about TPA. Would be a huge gain if she signed on.

She is available between 12:30-2pm or after 4pm. Her assistant is Kelsey Desiderio, [REDACTED]

If it doesn't work out today, we will schedule a time in the near future.

--

Hayley Prim
Hilltop Public Solutions
[REDACTED]

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "John Del Cecato"; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: How is this?
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 11:02:00 AM

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 11:02 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: How is this?

Maybe that's why I love it??

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 at 10:58 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: How is this?

A lot of it is from you!!!

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 10:56 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: How is this?

A few edits - but I love it

President Obama said something interesting the other day.

He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America

Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.

A lot of those hedge fund types pull a lot of weight up in Albany. They've become good friends of the folks who are deciding the laws right now.

In these final 3 weeks of session, these leaders there are going to decide if we keep in place/strengthen rent protections for more than 2 million middle-class and low-income New Yorkers.

Right now that package is up in the air.

These leaders are also going to decide if we expand our stock of affordable housing with a tax on mansions and ending no-strings tax breaks to big developers,

That reform is also up in the air.

Lets be clear about the consequences.

If Albany fails to act, it's a slap in the face to New York residents being priced out of their own city.

If Albany fails to act, hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers will be prevented from getting apartments they can afford.

If Albany fails to act, it's essentially a vote to make New York City LESS affordable for working people, and more profitable for multi-millionaire condo owners, and the developers who build them.

If Albany fails to pass our reform package, they're turning their backs on more than 2 million renters in danger of losing their homes – all so that multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth.

This governor has shown in the past he can get a great deal done even when the clock is ticking. So it's time. Time for the leaders in Albany to show some leadership.

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 at 10:46 AM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: How is this?

President Obama said something interesting the other day.

He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America

Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.

A lot of those hedge fund types pull a lot of weight up in Albany. They've become good friends of the folks who are deciding the laws right now.

In these final 3 weeks of session, these leaders there are going to decide if we keep in place/strengthen rent protections for more than 2 million middle-class and low-income New Yorkers.

Right now that package is up in the air.

These leaders are also going to decide if we expand our stock of affordable housing with a tax on mansions and ending no-strings tax breaks to big developers,

That reform is also up in the air.

Lets be clear about the consequences.

If Albany fails to act, it's a slap in the face to New York residents being priced out of their own city.

If Albany fails to act, hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers will be prevented from getting apartments they can afford.

If Albany fails to act, it's essentially a vote to make New York City LESS affordable for working people, and more profitable for multi-millionaire condo owners, and the developers who build them.

If Albany fails to pass our reform package, they're turning their backs on more than 2 million renters in danger of losing their homes – all so that multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth.

This governor has shown in the past he can get a great deal done even when the clock is ticking.

So it's time. Time for the leaders in Albany to show some leadership.

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "John Del Cecato"; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: How is this?
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 11:09:32 AM

Agree!

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 11:09 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; 'John Del Cecato'; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: How is this?

Should we pull out some of this and massage for UFT? Want to talk to you about another pressing matter etc

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 11:02 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: How is this?

Yes – exactly what im thinking

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 11:04 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: How is this?

Can we have MBDB deliver something along these lines on Diana Williams at 1pm - and leak that today?

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 at 10:46 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: How is this?

President Obama said something interesting the other day.

He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America

Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.

A lot of those hedge fund types pull a lot of weight up in Albany. They've become good friends of the folks who are deciding the laws right now.

In these final 3 weeks of session, these leaders there are going to decide if we keep in place/strengthen rent protections for more than 2 million middle-class and low-income New Yorkers.

Right now that package is up in the air.

These leaders are also going to decide if we expand our stock of affordable housing with a tax on mansions and ending no-strings tax breaks to big developers,

That reform is also up in the air.

Lets be clear about the consequences.

If Albany fails to act, it's a slap in the fact to New York residents being priced out of their own city.

If Albany fails to act, hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers will be prevented from getting apartments they can afford.

If Albany fails to act, it's essentially a vote to make New York City LESS affordable for working people, and more profitable for multi-millionaire condo owners, and the developers who build them.

If Albany fails to pass our reform package, they're turning their backs on more than 2 million renters in danger of losing their homes – all so that multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth.

This governor has shown in the past he can get a great deal done even when the clock is ticking.

So it's time. Time for the leaders in Albany to show some leadership.

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 12:26:03 PM

ok

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 12:28 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Subject: <no subject>

FYI - [REDACTED] - so I don't think I can be at the Open Societies meeting in person

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: TPA video
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 1:48:43 PM

here's the script

(Shot of Capitol Building

CG:

Washington, DC

May 12, 2015)

BDB:

Today we're announcing and we're signing The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality.

(BDB speaking

CG:

Bill de Blasio

Mayor, New York City)

BDB:

The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept: we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth.

(Dean speaking

CG:

Howard Dean

Former Governor, Vermont)

Dean:

We have got to deal with the fact that 80% of this country have not had a raise in the last 20 years. America can't work if 80% of the people don't participate in the benefits of our extraordinary economic machine that we have.

(Barbara Lee speaking

CG:

Barbara Lee

U.S. Representative, California's 13th District)

Lee:

So we have to address these inequalities head on to fight for economic justice for all. And this agenda, The Progressive Agenda, does that.

(DeLauro speaking

CG:

Rosa DeLauro

U.S. Representative, Connecticut's 3rd District)

DeLauro:

Minimum wage, paid sick days, paid family leave, universal pre-k, immigration reform, restoring the right to organize and, yes, opposing bad trade deals. These are things that so many of us have been advocating for a long time.

(Grijalva speaking

CG:

Raúl Grijalva

U.S. Representative, Arizona's 3rd District)

Grijalva:

The pledge is a call to action, and it's also a commitment to making sure that this economy and this country works for all of us and works for the American people.

(BDB speaking, fade to scroll of signers, TPA logo and URL)

BDB:

We're inviting everyday Americans to be a part of this. Sign up today at ProgressiveAgenda.US

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 at 1:23 PM

To: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: TPA video

Still tweaking, but we're hoping to get this out this afternoon, unless there are objections...

https://dl.dropboxusercontent.com/u/16883534/TPA_Cut2.mp4

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Chow, Eugene
Cc: John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: FW: UFT
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:20:10 PM
Attachments: 5_30_15_UFT_Spring_Conference.doc

Can we add language at end, perhaps page 5, something like

Before I leave, want to share something with you
President Obama said something interesting the other day.
He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America
Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.
A lot of those hedge fund types pull a lot of weight up in Albany. They've become good friends of the folks who are deciding the laws right now.
In these final 3 weeks of session, these leaders there are going to decide if we keep in place/strengthen rent protections for more than 2 million middle-class and low-income New Yorkers.
As teachers-- public servants-- you know what it means to make every penny count. Too many teachers are being priced out of this City, some may even be deciding between their passion for teaching children or making rent.
If Albany fails to act, it's a slap in the fact to New York residents being priced out of their own city.
If Albany fails to pass our reform package, they're turning their backs on more than 2 million renters in danger of losing their homes – all so that multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth.
This governor has shown in the past he can get a great deal done even when the clock is ticking.
So it's time. Time for the leaders in Albany to show some leadership.
We need your support in making that clear

-----Original Message-----

From: Chow, Eugene
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 10:21 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: UFT

Latest draft attached.

-----Original Message-----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 8:54 AM
To: Chow, Eugene
Subject: UFT

Can I get current UFT remarks? Have edits. Thanks!

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

1

OPEN PRESS

UFT SPRING CONFERENCE
SATURDAY MAY 30, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thanks for intro Michael [Mulgrew, UFT President]
- Thrilled to be back at UFT Spring Conference
- Before go on, want to acknowledge:
SEE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS CARD
- Deeply respect what you do for our children, families every day – plant seed, set kids on right path
- As public school parent (for few more weeks), seen profound effect teachers had on lives of my own children

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

2

- Know important to give you tools to succeed in what you do
- Just went to Albany, pushed hard to extend Mayoral Control – essential tool for speedy improvement, reform
- Without it, comprehensive efforts to transform NYC schools not possible
- Admin doing everything in its power...
- Over $150M for Renewal Schools – transform 94 most troubled schools
- New era: Instead of giving up on schools, kids, investing in them
 - Providing schools leadership, resources needed to turn around
- Can see changes and feel new energy

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

3

- When saw BK's Automotive HS in March: over twice as many students in after-school programs
- Attendance at 83%, highest in decade; gang-related activity down 91%
- Investing $34M next year, $60M every year after for 130 struggling schools
 - Raises to "Fair Student Funding" levels for first time
- Historic expansion of Pre-K – nearly 70K families signed up for fall
- And this week, announced 64 new PROSE schools – doubling number
- Goal: 200 PROSE schools – more than number of schools in Boston, Buffalo – innovation on a big scale

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

4

- One of most exciting developments in education in NYC
- PROSE – labs for innovation, flexibility with DOE work, union rules to innovate, better serve students
 - Extended learning hours, weekend time, rearrange calendars, more
 - Made possible with landmark contract with UFT last year
- Must maintain momentum – must extend Mayoral control
- So much at stake, future of 1.1M kids and their families – can't fail them
- Education determines economic destiny now more than ever

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

5

- Know all here feel tremendous urgency – must make Albany feel it too
- Not a partisan issue – business, faith, civic, community leaders all pushing to extend Mayoral control
- Regardless what happens upstate, we will continue to do everything to transform schools, uplift ALL our kids
- So much energy, creativity, innovation occurring – shows power of what can accomplish when work together...
 - When relationship based on dialogue, mutual respect
- Look forward to building stronger City, giving opportunities for ALL children

###

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "John Del Cecato"; Wolfe, Emma; Chow, Eugene
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: RE: UFT
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:28:34 PM

Think we need to hit the meeting's purpose first --- then we can talk about housing.

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:30 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Chow, Eugene
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: UFT

Wouldn't it make more sense to do our messagey stuff at the top?

On 5/29/15, 2:27 PM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>He goes through about 5 pages of what we're doing to improve education
>-- PROSE, etc-- prior to this
>
>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Hagelgans, Andrea
>Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:25 PM
>To: Wolfe, Emma; Chow, Eugene
>Cc: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil
>Subject: RE: UFT
>

>This is the tag on at the end after he goes through Mayoral Control. PW >wanted him to talk about housing. Is there something specific you want >added? We're limited in spacing somewhat
>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Wolfe, Emma
>Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:24 PM
>To: Chow, Eugene; Hagelgans, Andrea
>Cc: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil
>Subject: RE: UFT
>

>Want to make sure that we always talk about the things that WE are >doing as a city and promote our own work too
>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Chow, Eugene
>Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:22 PM
>To: Hagelgans, Andrea
>Cc: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma >Subject: RE: UFT
>

>Will revise accordingly.
>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Hagelgans, Andrea
>Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:22 PM
>To: Chow, Eugene

>Cc: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma >Subject: FW: UFT

>

>Can we add language at end, perhaps page 5, something like

>

>

>Before I leave, want to share something with you President Obama said >something interesting the other day.

>He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more
>MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America Think about that. $12 >billion for 25 people - more than all the folks teaching our four and >five year olds.

>A lot of those hedge fund types pull a lot of weight up in Albany.

>They've become good friends of the folks who are deciding the laws >right now.

>In these final 3 weeks of session, these leaders there are going to >decide if we keep in place/strengthen rent protections for more than 2 >million middle-class and low-income New Yorkers.

>As teachers-- public servants-- you know what it means to make every >penny count. Too many teachers are being priced out of this City, some >may even be deciding between their passion for teaching children or >making rent.

>If Albany fails to act, it's a slap in the fact to New York residents >being priced out of their own city.

>If Albany fails to pass our reform package, they're turning their backs >on more than 2 million renters in danger of losing their homes - all so >that multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater >personal wealth.

>This governor has shown in the past he can get a great deal done even >when the clock is ticking.

>So it's time. Time for the leaders in Albany to show some leadership.

>We need your support in making that clear

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Chow, Eugene

>Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 10:21 AM

>To: Hagelgans, Andrea

>Subject: RE: UFT

>

>Latest draft attached.

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Hagelgans, Andrea

>Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 8:54 AM

>To: Chow, Eugene

>Subject: UFT

>

>Can I get current UFT remarks? Have edits. Thanks!

From: John Del Cecato
To: Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:28:53 PM

We were looking for ethnic/gender diversity - but not necessarily job diversity - and didn't want it to go too long/dive into labor politics of why you included Mary Kay but not Randi, etc

From: <Snyder>, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 at 1:54 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Leopold, Elana" <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: <no subject>

One question: I assume you considered but decided against showing other than elected officials?
Curious why? And who all does this get sent to?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 1:25 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana
Subject: <no subject>

We're aiming to send this out today... I sent to MBDB too

https://dl.dropboxusercontent.com/u/16883534/TPA_Cut2.mp4

From: Chow, Eugene
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: "John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)"; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: UFT
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 3:27:12 PM
Attachments: 5_30_15_UFT_Spring_Conference_320PM.doc

Revised attached.

-----Original Message-----

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 3:08 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Chow, Eugene
Cc: 'John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com)'; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: UFT

For now

-----Original Message-----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 3:09 PM
To: Chow, Eugene
Cc: 'John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com)'; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: UFT

PW should weigh in, but sounds like MBdB at this stage wants to pull back the hedge fund line.

-----Original Message-----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:22 PM
To: Chow, Eugene
Cc: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: FW: UFT

Can we add language at end, perhaps page 5, something like

Before I leave, want to share something with you President Obama said something interesting the other day.

He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.

A lot of those hedge fund types pull a lot of weight up in Albany. They've become good friends of the folks who are deciding the laws right now.

In these final 3 weeks of session, these leaders there are going to decide if we keep in place/strengthen rent protections for more than 2 million middle-class and low-income New Yorkers. As teachers-- public servants-- you know what it means to make every penny count. Too many teachers are being priced out of this City, some may even be deciding between their passion for teaching children or making rent.

If Albany fails to act, it's a slap in the fact to New York residents being priced out of their own city.

If Albany fails to pass our reform package, they're turning their backs on more than 2 million renters in danger of losing their homes – all so that multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth.

This governor has shown in the past he can get a great deal done even when the clock is ticking.

So it's time. Time for the leaders in Albany to show some leadership.

We need your support in making that clear

-----Original Message-----

From: Chow, Eugene
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 10:21 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: UFT

Latest draft attached.

-----Original Message-----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 8:54 AM
To: Chow, Eugene
Subject: UFT

Can I get current UFT remarks? Have edits. Thanks!

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

1

OPEN PRESS

UFT SPRING CONFERENCE
SATURDAY MAY 30, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thanks for intro Michael [Mulgrew, UFT President]
- Thrilled to be back at UFT Spring Conference
- Before go on, want to acknowledge:
SEE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS CARD
- Deeply respect what you do for our children, families every day – plant seed, set kids on right path
- As public school parent (for few more weeks), seen profound effect teachers had on lives of my own children

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

2

- Know important to give you tools to succeed in what you do
- Just went to Albany, pushed hard to extend Mayoral Control – essential tool for speedy improvement, reform
- Without it, comprehensive efforts to transform NYC schools not possible
- Admin doing everything in its power...
- Over $150M for Renewal Schools – transform 94 most troubled schools
- New era: Instead of giving up on schools, kids, investing in them
 - Providing schools leadership, resources needed to turn around
- Can see changes and feel new energy

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

3

- When saw BK's Automotive HS in March: over twice as many students in after-school programs
- Attendance at 83%, highest in decade; gang-related activity down 91%
- Investing $34M next year, $60M every year after for 130 struggling schools
 - Raises to "Fair Student Funding" levels for first time
- Historic expansion of Pre-K – nearly 70K families signed up for fall
- And this week, announced 64 new PROSE schools – doubling number
- Goal: 200 PROSE schools – more than number of schools in Boston, Buffalo – innovation on a big scale

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

4

- One of most exciting developments in education in NYC
- PROSE – labs for innovation, flexibility with DOE work, union rules to innovate, better serve students
 - Extended learning hours, weekend time, rearrange calendars, more
 - Made possible with landmark contract with UFT last year
- Must maintain momentum – must extend Mayoral control
- So much at stake, future of 1.1M kids and their families – can't fail them
- Education determines economic destiny now more than ever

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

5

- Know all here feel tremendous urgency – must make Albany feel it too
- Not a partisan issue – business, faith, civic, community leaders all pushing to extend Mayoral control
- Regardless what happens upstate, we will continue to do everything to transform schools, uplift ALL our kids

[SPACE]

- Beyond education, much more at stake in last 3 weeks of legislative session
- Albany deciding if we keep, strengthen rent protections for over 2M NYers
- Albany also deciding if expand affordable housing with mansion tax, end no-strings tax breaks to developers

5/17/2018 6:56 PM

6

- Both reforms up in the air – consequences of failure dire
- If Albany fails to act, hundreds of thousands of NYers won't be able to get affordable apartments
- If Albany fails, essentially makes NYC less affordable and more profitable for luxury condo owners, developers
- If Albany fails to pass our reforms, means turn backs on over 2M renters in danger of losing homes –
- In past, Governor has shown can get deal done even with clock ticking
- Time for the leaders in Albany to show some leadership

###

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Chow, Eugene
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Gross, Dan; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Fw: Concord Church
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 3:50:33 PM

And now a sermon added, but can use similar content from synagogue

Focus on rent protections and mansion tax

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 03:48 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Schwartz, Regina; Wolfe, Emma; Snyder, Thomas; Miller, Harold
Subject: Re: Concord Church

Let's pls get that to ministers

From: Carey, Michael
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 03:48 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Schwartz, Regina; Wolfe, Emma; Snyder, Thomas; Miller, Harold
Subject: Re: Concord Church

Assume we are not staying whole service??? Parade is at noon.

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

On May 29, 2015, at 3:47 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Are we cutting close to parade??

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 03:48 PM
To: Schwartz, Regina; Carey, Michael; Wolfe, Emma Cc: Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Miller, Harold
Subject: Re: Concord Church

Message is all of albany agenda? Or just housing?

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 03:45 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Miller, Harold Subject: Concord Church

We have go ahead at :

Concord Baptist Church – Rev. Gary Simpson (wife Rev. Emma Jordan-Simpson is on the advisory committee)

800ppl Bed-Stuy

Getting confirmation on 10:30 talk time.

What details can we get you MPC?

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: RE: Week of June 22nd
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 5:42:44 PM

How mini are we talking?

My concern is that it is most likely the last week of the Albany Leg and second to last for our budget....

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:49 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Week of June 22nd

Team TPA is thinking about having the first in a series of three mini-Gracie Confabs - the first to be focused on Lifting the Floor for Working Families... Goal would be to devise tactics with TPA signers & would-be signers on how to get the word out, organize, etc...

This wouldn't need to be as elaborate as the last one - but wondering if there's a day that works best for MBDB that week

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: New Yorker
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 6:02:21 PM

Gets to the old point about there being no “secret pot of money” - and an invitation to revive an income tax hike down the line...

The Cost of New York’s Summer Slide

A New York City summer, 1975. Credit Photograph: Keystone-France/Getty

In 1906, William F. White, a mathematics instructor at the State Normal School, in New Paltz, New York, wrote an article for American Education, a periodical for teachers, titled “Reviews Before and After Vacation.” In it, he sought to answer a question familiar to his fellow-educators: How much of what students learn in the school year do they forget during the long summer break? Using the very small sample that was available to him—seven fourth graders and eight seventh graders—White tested the children’s knowledge of what are now called math facts in June, before the schools let out, and again upon their return in September. He discovered that, among fourth graders, the number of right answers fell by twenty-six per cent, with the students taking almost twice as long to respond. The drop-off for seventh graders was less pronounced, but still evident. White’s experiment did not explain exactly why this drop-off in performance occurred—“Neglect for three months may blur the memory; but three months of open-air life may give an increased vitality that quickens the memory”—but it confirmed what he had intuited.

White was an early theorist and quantifier of what has come to be known as the summer slide—the learning loss that occurs when children are out of the classroom. Many more sophisticated studies have followed. A meta-analysis of data conducted in the mid-nineties by Harris Cooper at the University of Missouri, which is still taken as the standard reference, concluded that students lost at least a month of learning every summer, with the fall-off of math knowledge and spelling skills being particularly pronounced. The study also found that results were worse for children in lower socioeconomic groups than for middle- or upper-middle-class children. In learning, as in other spheres, the poor lost the most.

What to make of such results? Modifying the school calendar to shorten the summer break—and to implement longer year-round breaks—would be a common-sense response. “Three months of open-air life” may still be the summer lot of some very rich or very rural American children; two and a half or three months of highly regulated day camp or largely unregulated screen time is more likely the case today. In some other countries, including the U.K., the summer vacation is a mere six weeks long. (Admittedly, the British joke about hoping summer falls on a weekend this year makes reference to a sad seasonal reality.) In South Korea, where students achieve very high test scores compared to those of other nations, the summer break is also only six weeks long. Then again, in Finland, which scores very high in measures of educational prowess relative to other countries, the summer break is as long as it is in the United States. Further research conducted in the United States by Harris Cooper and his colleagues has suggested that, while there may be advantages to implementing shorter summer breaks—parents tend to like it, and overcrowded school districts can stagger students’ attendance—changing the calendar alone has a minimal effect upon redressing learning loss.

Cooper’s research did show, however, that shortening the summer break has some impact upon lower-income students—the same children whom he earlier found were most likely to be afflicted by summer learning loss. Newer findings have shown the importance of sustaining summer learning, even if more informally than in a classroom setting. As the educator and author Jessica Lahey recently reported in the Times, Read for Success, a program focussed on promoting summer reading, showed that among children who had access to high-quality books that they were allowed to keep, and who had some choice in what they read rather than being obliged to stick to an assigned list, there were considerable and sometimes dramatic improvements in literacy. Rather than a summer slide, there was a summer ascent.

Bill de Blasio ran for office on a platform that contained ambitious education reform, including the provision of pre-K spots for all eligible four-year-olds. This September, about seventy thousand children will enroll in the pre-K program, up from about twenty thousand in 2013. Last summer, the Mayor also expanded summer enrichment programs to cover fifty-five thousand students, twice as many as had been enrolled the previous year. “Summer enrichment is kids who are getting more in the summer—who are deepening their knowledge, deepening their abilities, keeping that consistency from one school year to the next,” de Blasio said last July, after touring a middle school in Williamsburg that was offering music, dance, and chess programs.

This year, summer enrichment programs were due to grow still further, with a seasonal expansion of School’s Out, the Mayor’s new after-school program for sixth, seventh, and eighth graders. In mid-May, however, de Blasio withdrew funding for these additional programs, saying that the money would be “redirected to schools with the greatest challenges.” Earlier, the Mayor’s office had identified a hundred and thirty struggling schools—with chronically poor attendance and low graduation rates—to be the focus of another new program, Renewal. It is to cost thirty-four million dollars in its first year of operation. The money has to come from somewhere, and summer enrichment is one of the places it is, apparently, coming from, despite the fact that providers of the planned summer programs had been given the go-ahead only weeks earlier, and had already begun to fill up their rosters.

During his election campaign, de Blasio floated the idea of a targeted education tax, to be levied upon New York City residents who earn more than half a million dollars a year. In 2012, he told members of the Association for a Better New York—the kind of people who would be paying it—that such a surcharge would raise $532 million dollars annually. Proceeds from the proposed tax were to be earmarked for de Blasio’s signature pre-K expansion, and upon his inauguration, in January, 2014, a Quinnipiac poll indicated that seventy-four per cent of New Yorkers supported such a surcharge for such a purpose. In the event, de Blasio was able to secure those funds from Albany, rather than being obliged to requisition them from Park Avenue. (As my colleague John Cassidy noted last year, that was a political victory, not a failure.) Since then, the idea of taxing the wealthy specifically to fund the public schools has quietly gone away.

Despite the ways in which summer programs have been shown to counteract the summer slide, and despite the clear improvement in morale, if not necessarily in test scores, that accrues to children who participate in them, it might be a hard sell, politically, to suggest that the incomes of the affluent should be targeted to pay for teens to play basketball, or even chess, in a school setting during the summer months. (Pre-K is an easier call.) Still, as the city’s wealthy pack up for the Hamptons, or prepare to send their own children to Vermont or Maine to enjoy the open-air life, it is worth remembering what the loss of those summer programs says about the obligations and responsibilities of citizens toward each other. The tax-for-pre-K proposal persuasively made a case that funding the educations of the youngest New Yorkers was the right thing to do, whether for moral or for pragmatic reasons, and that the redistribution of wealth—that scariest of socialist slogans—might equally amount to the redistribution of opportunity, which is among the most dearly held of American values. It’s an argument that is still worth making, if only to draw attention to who has ended up paying. As we slide toward summer, de Blasio has been obliged to steal from the poor to give to the even poorer.

Sign up for the daily newsletter: the best of The New Yorker every day.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Blumm, Kate
Subject: Fw: REMARKS: Synagogue Visit
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 6:13:53 PM
Attachments: 5_30_15_Synagogue_Visit.doc

From: Chow, Eugene
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 06:10 PM
To: Fink, Avi; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Soliman, Sherif; Wolfe, Emma Subject: REMARKS: Synagogue Visit

Rush remarks for tomorrow.

Please review and let me know if you have any edits.

Thanks,
Eugene

5/17/2018 6:57 PM

1

OPEN PRESS

SYNAGOGUE VISIT
SATURDAY MAY 30, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thanks for intro Rabbi [Adam] Mintz
- Great to be at Kehilat Rayim Ahuvim
[kay-HEE-lat ray-EEM ah-WHO-vim]
- Strong community hub with emphasis on social justice, continued education
 - Every week, feature progressive thinkers, activists, journalists for engaging, thought provoking talks
- Before go on, want to acknowledge:

[See Acknowledgments Card]

5/17/2018 6:57 PM

2

- Rabbi Mintz told me today celebrating upcoming marriage of young couple:
 - [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] [both present]

- Looking for apartment to start building lives together – but struggling to find a place on their tight budget
 - [REDACTED]

- They are not alone – a challenge nearly all NYers face

- Sadly, as City grown, changed, too many priced out – others crushed by soaring rents

- At heart of NYC is promise that city is for everyone

5/17/2018 6:57 PM

3

- Must live up to that promise
- Right now, Albany deciding on fate of affordable housing in city – 3 weeks left in legislative session
- Went to Albany to fight for stronger rent regs that reflect current reality
- But state still uncertain if we keep, strengthen rent protections for over 2M hard-working NYers
- NYC's 1M rent-regulated apartments critical life-line for so many – only way they make ends meet each month
- If laws expire, dire consequences...
- 1994-2012: lost roughly quarter million rent stabilized units

5/17/2018 6:57 PM

4

- Must preserve, can't lose any more – threatens affordability, future of city
- NYC doing all it can to protect:
 - Affordable housing plan – build, preserve 200,000 units
 - Investing millions to protect tenants, provide free legal help to stop tenant harassment
- But can't solve crisis alone, need Albany to step up...
- Albany also deciding if expand affordable housing with mansion tax, end no-strings tax breaks to developers
- If Albany fails to act, hundreds of thousands of NYers won't be able to get affordable apartments

5/17/2018 6:57 PM

5

- If Albany fails, essentially makes NYC less affordable and more profitable for luxury condo owners, developers
- If Albany fails to pass our reforms, means turning backs on NYers like [REDACTED] and [REDACTED]
- In past, Governor has shown can get deal done even with clock ticking –
- Time for Albany to show leadership
- Future of city hangs in balance – we will not passively wait for action
- We will continue to do everything in our power to build City for ALL

###

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Blumm, Kate
Subject: Fw: REMARKS: Synagogue Visit
Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 6:15:18 PM

Fyi

From: Fink, Avi
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 06:16 PM
To: Chow, Eugene; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Soliman, Sherif; Wolfe, Emma Subject: RE: REMARKS: Synagogue Visit

The end is a little overtly political for my taste for the middle of services. Can we take out the repetitive Albany and governor call out and focus more on the issue of rent and affordability?

From: Chow, Eugene
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 6:11 PM
To: Fink, Avi; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Soliman, Sherif; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: REMARKS: Synagogue Visit

Rush remarks for tomorrow.

Please review and let me know if you have any edits.

Thanks,
Eugene

From: Walzak, Phil
To: B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 8:55:06 AM

Here was the orig that we cut back for length - manse + 421a reform:

- Plan will protect rent regs; and ALSO spur development of more affordable units

- How do we do it? TWO simple, common-sense ways
 - FIRST We END no-strings tax breaks and big giveaways to developers by reforming the tax code
 - o Currently developers who receive tax benefits only have to provide affordable housing in just 27% of the city -- Our plan says to developers: if you want a tax benefits you must build affordable housing in EVERY PART of the city -- 100%
 - o Our plan increases affordable housing requirements. Right now, developers get city tax benefits even if only 20% of a project they build is affordable housing. Our plan nearly INCREASES that requirement by nearly 50% -- to 25%-30% affordable.
 - o Our plan will reach tenants with lower incomes than what the tax benefit currently requires of developers.
 - o Our plan eliminates tax breaks for luxury condominiums. Why in the world would we provide tax incentives to build luxury condos - which need no incentive to spur construction
 - Taken together, these reforms will save city taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion over the life of the program -- and double the number of affordable apartments built by the tax benefit -- enough housing for 65,000 New Yorkers.
 - We're driving a harder bargain from developers -- and we are demanding more from them, if they want public tax benefits.

- SECOND, our plan assesses a small tax on the sales of mansions to provide much needed resources to build affordable housing.

o I don't have to tell anyone here that the luxury residential market in New York City is booming -- and in many communities luxury development is directly displacing tenants living in affordable housing.

o While the unprecedented growth in the city's luxury real estate market carries challenges, it also represents an opportunity to protect the diverse, mixed-income communities that make up New York City.

o By asking the wealthy to help out just a little more, with a 1% flat tax on sales of residences above $1.75 million -- and just a 1.5% marginal tax for incremental price over 5% -- we can divert precious resources into a dedicated fund to build affordable housing.

o The mansion tax would affect properties representing approximately the top 10% of residential real estate transactions, according to recent sales data. The top 10% doing a little more to help everyone else.

- And in asking for a small, reasonable surcharge on the top 10% of sales, we can raise an average of $180-$200 million PER YEAR THAT WILL DEVOTED to building or preserving affordable housing

- This new investment could build 37,000 units of affordable housing over the next decade— enough housing for more than 95,000 New Yorkers.

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:49 AM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Fw: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Seems to me that the verbiage below on the mansion tax is a lost opportunity. If we are taxing the wealthy to build housing for those in need, shouldn't we say it more clearly? JDC, I need help pumping this up. And EW, I want to confirm that talking overtly and passionately about the mansion tax conforms with your Albany strategy

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 05:22 AM
To: Leopold, Elana; B
Subject: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

OPEN PRESS

CONCORD CHURCH OF CHRIST
SUNDAY, MAY 31, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thank you, Pastor [Gary] Simpson
 - o Known to congregants as superhero Green Lantern
 - o Reassuring to know you always use superpowers for good
- Before go on, want to acknowledge:
[See Acknowledgments Card]
- Always great to be back at Concord
- Concord has welcomed newcomers with open arms since 1847 – 168 years!
- In early days, some of those newcomers were runaway slaves
- Later, you welcomed those who settled here after Great Migration from South
- Today, Concord and Bed-Stuy dealing with another big shift—gentrification
- As always, Concord has opened doors to new neighbors
- But at same time, many being displaced
- As real estate market rises, too many being left behind
- Bed-Stuy residents not alone – 56% of households rent-burdened
- Past 2 decades, lost hundreds of thousands of rent stabilized units
- NYC doing all it can:
 - o Affordable housing plan – build, preserve 200,000 units
 - o Investing millions to protect tenants, provide free legal help
 - o Launching 10-year plan to put NYCHA on solid footing
- But we can't do it alone – need help
- Right now, Albany deciding on fate of affordable housing in city
- Rent regs expire in less than 3 weeks
- Regs protect more than 2M middle-class and low-income New Yorkers
- City has presented to Albany reform plan to expand affordable housing
- Plan will protect rent regs AND spur development of more affordable units
- How? Two common-sense ways:
- FIRST we END no-strings tax breaks and big giveaways to developers
- Currently, developers who receive tax benefits only have to provide affordable housing in 27% of city

- Our plan: If you want tax benefits, you must build affordable housing in EVERY PART of the city—100%
- Our plan also eliminates tax breaks for luxury condominiums
 - Why would we provide tax incentives to build luxury condos?
- Taken together, reforms will save city taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion
 - And provide enough affordable housing for 65,000 New Yorkers
- SECOND, plan levies small tax on sales of mansions
 - 1% tax on sales of residences above $1.75M
- Could allow us to build enough housing for more than 95,000 New Yorkers
- Not exaggeration to say future of city hangs in balance

- Over next 3 weeks, leaders in Albany will decide if we make affordable housing a priority—or not
- If answer is no, then let us be clear about consequences
- If answer is no—slap in face to New Yorkers being priced out of own city
- If answer is no—2 million renters will be in danger of losing their homes
 - All so multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth
- So it's time. Time to say yes. Time for leaders in Albany to show leadership
- We've heard lot of reasons for "no" from Governor these past several days
 - "It's too late"—even with three weeks left on schedule
 - "It's too hard"—even when governor has pushed through far more difficult policies than these
 - "Not everyone loves it"—even though plan vastly improves people's lives
 - And no one else offering ideas to fix broken system
- These are all excuses....and time for excuses, for distractions, for political game-playing is over
- We've all seen this governor move mountains when motivated
- We can and must get this done. Now.
- And I hope you'll help me do it
- Reminded of quote from Corinthians:
 - "At the present time your plenty will supply what they need, so that in turn their plenty will supply what you need. The goal is equality."
- What all New Yorkers need and want is vibrant and diverse city
- Must invest more in affordable housing
- So communities like Bed-Stuy can grow in sustainable way
 - And congregations like Concord can remain part of city fabric for next

- 168 years, and beyond
- Thanks for support, and God bless

Sent from my iPhone

From: Wolfe, Emma
To: Walzak, Phil; B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 9:13:51 AM

yep exactly - sorry, what i meant by prog cred

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 9:10 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

I also want to note that the cuomo attack line against us is "too close to developers"

Pairing the 421a/tough on developers WITH manse tax helps push back on the attack

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:01 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes re mansion tax. At this point we need to push the progressive credentials in the package. I think being really clear in the message is good. We are still hoping it's included in senate's bill so we don't want to campaign on it every day, but doing at church is good.

By far most important thing is to pump up rent regs rhetoric, and what it means for every day nyers.

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:56 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

The passage in this speech is bloodless -- mentions what we're doing with no elaboration. Kinda the opposite of how we talked about the pre-k tax, which I know was very different circumstances. I just need to understand why we only want a drive-by reference. Are we just trying to not hide it? If we're actually trying to create energy around it, this isn't the way. And I think it's fair to say that the mansion tax is the sleeper of our housing package in albany. Is my goal here to keep it quiet or actually pump it up, as we once dreamed of doing? I literally don't understand the play on this one point

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:52 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes it does

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:49 AM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Fw: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Seems to me that the verbiage below on the mansion tax is a lost opportunity. If we are taxing the wealthy to build housing for those in need, shouldn't we say it more clearly? JDC, I need help pumping this up. And EW, I want to confirm that talking overtly and passionately about the mansion tax conforms with your Albany strategy

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 05:22 AM
To: Leopold, Elana; B
Subject: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

OPEN PRESS
CONCORD CHURCH OF CHRIST
SUNDAY, MAY 31, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thank you, Pastor [Gary] Simpson
 - o Known to congregants as superhero Green Lantern
 - o Reassuring to know you always use superpowers for good
- Before go on, want to acknowledge:
[See Acknowledgments Card]
- Always great to be back at Concord
- Concord has welcomed newcomers with open arms since 1847 – 168 years!
- In early days, some of those newcomers were runaway slaves
- Later, you welcomed those who settled here after Great Migration from South
- Today, Concord and Bed-Stuy dealing with another big shift—gentrification
- As always, Concord has opened doors to new neighbors
- But at same time, many being displaced
- As real estate market rises, too many being left behind

- Bed-Stuy residents not alone – 56% of households rent-burdened
- Past 2 decades, lost hundreds of thousands of rent stabilized units
- NYC doing all it can:
 - Affordable housing plan – build, preserve 200,000 units
 - Investing millions to protect tenants, provide free legal help
 - Launching 10-year plan to put NYCHA on solid footing
- But we can't do it alone – need help
- Right now, Albany deciding on fate of affordable housing in city
- Rent regs expire in less than 3 weeks
- Regs protect more than 2M middle-class and low-income New Yorkers
- City has presented to Albany reform plan to expand affordable housing
- Plan will protect rent regs AND spur development of more affordable units
- How? Two common-sense ways:
 - FIRST we END no-strings tax breaks and big giveaways to developers
 - Currently, developers who receive tax benefits only have to provide affordable housing in 27% of city
 - Our plan: If you want tax benefits, you must build affordable housing in EVERY PART of the city—100%
 - Our plan also eliminates tax breaks for luxury condominiums
 - Why would we provide tax incentives to build luxury condos?
 - Taken together, reforms will save city taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion
 - And provide enough affordable housing for 65,000 New Yorkers
 - SECOND, plan levies small tax on sales of mansions
 - 1% tax on sales of residences above $1.75M
- Could allow us to build enough housing for more than 95,000 New Yorkers
- Not exaggeration to say future of city hangs in balance
- Over next 3 weeks, leaders in Albany will decide if we make affordable housing a priority—or not
 - If answer is no, then let us be clear about consequences
 - If answer is no—slap in face to New Yorkers being priced out of own city
 - If answer is no—2 million renters will be in danger of losing their homes

- o All so multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth
- So it's time. Time to say yes. Time for leaders in Albany to show leadership
- We've heard lot of reasons for "no" from Governor these past several days
 - o "It's too late"—even with three weeks left on schedule
 - o "It's too hard"—even when governor has pushed through far more difficult policies than these
 - o "Not everyone loves it"—even though plan vastly improves people's lives
 - And no one else offering ideas to fix broken system
- These are all excuses....and time for excuses, for distractions, for political game-playing is over
- We've all seen this governor move mountains when motivated
- We can and must get this done. Now.
- And I hope you'll help me do it
- Reminded of quote from Corinthians:
 - o "At the present time your plenty will supply what they need, so that in turn their plenty will supply what you need. The goal is equality."
- What all New Yorkers need and want is vibrant and diverse city
- Must invest more in affordable housing
- So communities like Bed-Stuy can grow in sustainable way
 - o And congregations like Concord can remain part of city fabric for next 168 years, and beyond
- Thanks for support, and God bless

Sent from my iPhone

From: Wolfe, Emma
To: Walzak, Phil; B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 9:26:55 AM

Agree

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:24 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Drilling manse tax good - but wud also pair it w driving harder bargain w developers and discussing how

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:25 AM
To: B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

1 - i agree
2 - went back and forth on this...i think it takes away from our message about the issues which we really need folks to hear right now

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 9:18 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

1. Shouldn't I make this more vivid and emotional by saying that whenever someone wealthy buys one of those $10 million condos sprouting up all over Midtown, they should pay a little more to help create affordable housing for everyday new yorkers???

2. Should I ask the congregants to help by calling the governor's office to register their concerns??

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:01 AM
To: B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes re mansion tax. At this point we need to push the progressive credentials in the package. I think being really clear in the message is good. We are still hoping it's included in senate's bill so we don't want to campaign on it every day, but doing at church is good.

By far most important thing is to pump up rent regs rhetoric, and what it means for every day nyers.

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:56 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

The passage in this speech is bloodless -- mentions what we're doing with no elaboration. Kinda the opposite of how we talked about the pre-k tax, which I know was very different circumstances. I just need to understand why we only want a drive-by reference. Are we just trying to not hide it? If we're actually trying to create energy around it, this isn't the way. And I think it's fair to say that the mansion tax is the sleeper of our housing package in albany. Is my goal here to keep it quiet or actually pump it up, as we once dreamed of doing? I literally don't understand the play on this one point

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:52 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes it does

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:49 AM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Fw: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Seems to me that the verbiage below on the mansion tax is a lost opportunity. If we are taxing the wealthy to build housing for those in need, shouldn't we say it more clearly? JDC, I need help pumping this up. And EW, I want to confirm that talking overtly and passionately about the mansion tax conforms with your Albany strategy

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 05:22 AM
To: Leopold, Elana; B
Subject: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

OPEN PRESS
CONCORD CHURCH OF CHRIST
SUNDAY, MAY 31, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thank you, Pastor [Gary] Simpson
 - o Known to congregants as superhero Green Lantern
 - o Reassuring to know you always use superpowers for good
- Before go on, want to acknowledge:
[See Acknowledgments Card]
- Always great to be back at Concord
- Concord has welcomed newcomers with open arms since 1847–168 years!
- In early days, some of those newcomers were runaway slaves
- Later, you welcomed those who settled here after Great Migration from South
- Today, Concord and Bed-Stuy dealing with another big shift—gentrification
- As always, Concord has opened doors to new neighbors
- But at same time, many being displaced
- As real estate market rises, too many being left behind
- Bed-Stuy residents not alone – 56% of households rent-burdened
- Past 2 decades, lost hundreds of thousands of rent stabilized units
- NYC doing all it can:
 - o Affordable housing plan – build, preserve 200,000 units
 - o Investing millions to protect tenants, provide free legal help
 - o Launching 10-year plan to put NYCHA on solid footing
- But we can't do it alone – need help
- Right now, Albany deciding on fate of affordable housing in city
- Rent regs expire in less than 3 weeks
- Regs protect more than 2M middle-class and low-income New Yorkers
- City has presented to Albany reform plan to expand affordable housing
- Plan will protect rent regs AND spur development of more affordable units
- How? Two common-sense ways:
 - FIRST we END no-strings tax breaks and big giveaways to developers
 - Currently, developers who receive tax benefits only have to provide affordable housing in 27% of city

- Our plan: If you want tax benefits, you must build affordable housing in EVERY PART of the city—100%
- Our plan also eliminates tax breaks for luxury condominiums
 - Why would we provide tax incentives to build luxury condos?
- Taken together, reforms will save city taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion
 - And provide enough affordable housing for 65,000 New Yorkers
- SECOND, plan levies small tax on sales of mansions
 - 1% tax on sales of residences above $1.75M
- Could allow us to build enough housing for more than 95,000 New Yorkers
- Not exaggeration to say future of city hangs in balance
- Over next 3 weeks, leaders in Albany will decide if we make affordable housing a priority—or not
- If answer is no, then let us be clear about consequences
- If answer is no—slap in face to New Yorkers being priced out of own city
- If answer is no—2 million renters will be in danger of losing their homes
 - All so multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth
- So it's time. Time to say yes. Time for leaders in Albany to show leadership
- We've heard lot of reasons for "no" from Governor these past several days
 - "It's too late"—even with three weeks left on schedule
 - "It's too hard"—even when governor has pushed through far more difficult policies than these
 - "Not everyone loves it"—even though plan vastly improves people's lives
 - And no one else offering ideas to fix broken system
- These are all excuses....and time for excuses, for distractions, for political game-playing is over
- We've all seen this governor move mountains when motivated
- We can and must get this done. Now.
- And I hope you'll help me do it
- Reminded of quote from Corinthians:
 - "At the present time your plenty will supply what they need, so that in turn their plenty will supply what you need. The goal is equality."

- What all New Yorkers need and want is vibrant and diverse city
- Must invest more in affordable housing
- So communities like Bed-Stuy can grow in sustainable way
 - And congregations like Concord can remain part of city fabric for next 168 years, and beyond
- Thanks for support, and God bless

Sent from my iPhone

From: B
To: Wolfe, Emma; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 9:52:44 AM

Got it

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:25 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

- 1 - i agree
- 2 - went back and forth on this...i think it takes away from our message about the issues which we really need folks to hear right now

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 9:18 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

1. Shouldn't I make this more vivid and emotional by saying that whenever someone wealthy buys one of those $10 million condos sprouting up all over Midtown, they should pay a little more to help create affordable housing for everyday new yorkers???
2. Should I ask the congregants to help by calling the governor's office to register their concerns??

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:01 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes re mansion tax. At this point we need to push the progressive credentials in the package. I think being really clear in the message is good. We are still hoping it's included in senate's bill so we don't want to campaign on it every day, but doing at church is good.

By far most important thing is to pump up rent regs rhetoric, and what it means for every day nyers.

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:56 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea

Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

The passage in this speech is bloodless -- mentions what we're doing with no elaboration. Kinda the opposite of how we talked about the pre-k tax, which I know was very different circumstances. I just need to understand why we only want a drive-by reference. Are we just trying to not hide it? If we're actually trying to create energy around it, this isn't the way. And I think it's fair to say that the mansion tax is the sleeper of our housing package in albany. Is my goal here to keep it quiet or actually pump it up, as we once dreamed of doing? I literally don't understand the play on this one point

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:52 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes it does

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:49 AM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Fw: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Seems to me that the verbiage below on the mansion tax is a lost opportunity. If we are taxing the wealthy to build housing for those in need, shouldn't we say it more clearly? JDC, I need help pumping this up. And EW, I want to confirm that talking overtly and passionately about the mansion tax conforms with your Albany strategy

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 05:22 AM
To: Leopold, Elana; B
Subject: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

OPEN PRESS
CONCORD CHURCH OF CHRIST
SUNDAY, MAY 31, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thank you, Pastor [Gary] Simpson
 - o Known to congregants as superhero Green Lantern

o Reassuring to know you always use superpowers for good

• Before go on, want to acknowledge:

[See Acknowledgments Card]

- Always great to be back at Concord
- Concord has welcomed newcomers with open arms since 1847 – 168 years!
- In early days, some of those newcomers were runaway slaves

- Later, you welcomed those who settled here after Great Migration from South

- Today, Concord and Bed-Stuy dealing with another big shift—gentrification

- As always, Concord has opened doors to new neighbors

- But at same time, many being displaced

- As real estate market rises, too many being left behind

- Bed-Stuy residents not alone – 56% of households rent-burdened
- Past 2 decades, lost hundreds of thousands of rent stabilized units
- NYC doing all it can:
 - o Affordable housing plan – build, preserve 200,000 units
 - o Investing millions to protect tenants, provide free legal help
 - o Launching 10-year plan to put NYCHA on solid footing

- But we can't do it alone – need help

- Right now, Albany deciding on fate of affordable housing in city

- Rent regs expire in less than 3 weeks

- Regs protect more than 2M middle-class and low-income New Yorkers

- City has presented to Albany reform plan to expand affordable housing
- Plan will protect rent regs AND spur development of more affordable units

- How? Two common-sense ways:
 - FIRST we END no-strings tax breaks and big giveaways to developers

 - Currently, developers who receive tax benefits only have to provide affordable housing in 27% of city

- Our plan: If you want tax benefits, you must build affordable housing in EVERY PART of the city—100%

- Our plan also eliminates tax breaks for luxury condominiums
 - o Why would we provide tax incentives to build luxury condos?
- Taken together, reforms will save city taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion

- o And provide enough affordable housing for 65,000 New Yorkers
- SECOND, plan levies small tax on sales of mansions
 - o 1% tax on sales of residences above $1.75M
- Could allow us to build enough housing for more than 95,000 New Yorkers
- Not exaggeration to say future of city hangs in balance
- Over next 3 weeks, leaders in Albany will decide if we make affordable housing a priority—or not
 - If answer is no, then let us be clear about consequences
 - If answer is no—slap in face to New Yorkers being priced out of own city
 - If answer is no—2 million renters will be in danger of losing their homes
 - o All so multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth
- So it's time. Time to say yes. Time for leaders in Albany to show leadership
- We've heard lot of reasons for "no" from Governor these past several days
 - o "It's too late"—even with three weeks left on schedule
 - o "It's too hard"—even when governor has pushed through far more difficult policies than these
 - o "Not everyone loves it"—even though plan vastly improves people's lives
 - And no one else offering ideas to fix broken system
- These are all excuses....and time for excuses, for distractions, for political game-playing is over
- We've all seen this governor move mountains when motivated
- We can and must get this done. Now.
- And I hope you'll help me do it
- Reminded of quote from Corinthians:
 - o "At the present time your plenty will supply what they need, so that in turn their plenty will supply what you need. The goal is equality."
- What all New Yorkers need and want is vibrant and diverse city
- Must invest more in affordable housing
- So communities like Bed-Stuy can grow in sustainable way
 - o And congregations like Concord can remain part of city fabric for next 168 years, and beyond
- Thanks for support, and God bless

Sent from my iPhone

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B; Wolfe, Emma; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 10:01:36 AM

Yes, my apologies. It was a larger part during drafting but were concerned with length. I have told the team to focus on message content first and foremost

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:58 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

And guys, I know we need a new speechwriter, but when we're rolling out brand new material it really helps to lock it down the day before and not on the drive to the speech...

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:55 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

JDC- here is language from Phil originally in the remarks that were pulled back due to length our plan assesses a small tax on the sales of mansions to provide much needed resources to build affordable housing.

o I don't have to tell anyone here that the luxury residential market in New York City is booming -- and in many communities luxury development is directly displacing tenants living in affordable housing.

o While the unprecedented growth in the city's luxury real estate market carries challenges, it also represents an opportunity to protect the diverse, mixed-income communities that make up New York City.

o By asking the wealthy to help out just a little more, with a 1% flat tax on sales of residences above $1.75 million -- and just a 1.5% marginal tax for incremental price over 5% -- we can divert precious resources into a dedicated fund to build affordable housing.

o The mansion tax would affect properties representing approximately the top 10% of residential real estate transactions, according to recent sales data. The top 10% doing a little more to help everyone else.

- And in asking for a small, reasonable surcharge on the top 10% of sales, we can raise an average of $180-$200 million PER YEAR THAT WILL DEVOTED to building or preserving affordable housing
- This new investment could build 37,000 units of affordable housing over the next decade—enough housing for more than 95,000 New Yorkers.

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:52 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes it does

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:49 AM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Fw: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Seems to me that the verbiage below on the mansion tax is a lost opportunity. If we are taxing the wealthy to build housing for those in need, shouldn't we say it more clearly? JDC, I need help pumping this up. And EW, I want to confirm that talking overtly and passionately about the mansion tax conforms with your Albany strategy

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 05:22 AM
To: Leopold, Elana; B
Subject: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

OPEN PRESS
CONCORD CHURCH OF CHRIST
SUNDAY, MAY 31, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thank you, Pastor [Gary] Simpson
 - o Known to congregants as superhero Green Lantern
 - o Reassuring to know you always use superpowers for good

- Before go on, want to acknowledge:
[See Acknowledgments Card]
- Always great to be back at Concord
- Concord has welcomed newcomers with open arms since 1847 – 168 years!
- In early days, some of those newcomers were runaway slaves
- Later, you welcomed those who settled here after Great Migration from South
- Today, Concord and Bed-Stuy dealing with another big shift—gentrification
- As always, Concord has opened doors to new neighbors
- But at same time, many being displaced
- As real estate market rises, too many being left behind
- Bed-Stuy residents not alone – 56% of households rent-burdened
- Past 2 decades, lost hundreds of thousands of rent stabilized units
- NYC doing all it can:
 - o Affordable housing plan – build, preserve 200,000 units
 - o Investing millions to protect tenants, provide free legal help
 - o Launching 10-year plan to put NYCHA on solid footing
- But we can't do it alone – need help
- Right now, Albany deciding on fate of affordable housing in city
- Rent regs expire in less than 3 weeks
- Regs protect more than 2M middle-class and low-income New Yorkers
- City has presented to Albany reform plan to expand affordable housing
- Plan will protect rent regs AND spur development of more affordable units
- How? Two common-sense ways:
- FIRST we END no-strings tax breaks and big giveaways to developers
- Currently, developers who receive tax benefits only have to provide affordable housing in 27% of city
- Our plan: If you want tax benefits, you must build affordable housing in EVERY PART of the city—100%
- Our plan also eliminates tax breaks for luxury condominiums
 - o Why would we provide tax incentives to build luxury condos?
- Taken together, reforms will save city taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion
 - o And provide enough affordable housing for 65,000 New Yorkers
- SECOND, plan levies small tax on sales of mansions
 - o 1% tax on sales of residences above $1.75M

- Could allow us to build enough housing for more than 95,000 New Yorkers
- Not exaggeration to say future of city hangs in balance
- Over next 3 weeks, leaders in Albany will decide if we make affordable housing a priority—or not
 - If answer is no, then let us be clear about consequences
- If answer is no—slap in face to New Yorkers being priced out of own city
- If answer is no—2 million renters will be in danger of losing their homes
 - o All so multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth
- So it's time. Time to say yes. Time for leaders in Albany to show leadership
- We've heard lot of reasons for "no" from Governor these past several days
 - o "It's too late"—even with three weeks left on schedule
 - o "It's too hard"—even when governor has pushed through far more difficult policies than these
 - o "Not everyone loves it"—even though plan vastly improves people's lives
 - And no one else offering ideas to fix broken system
- These are all excuses....and time for excuses, for distractions, for political game-playing is over
- We've all seen this governor move mountains when motivated
- We can and must get this done. Now.
- And I hope you'll help me do it
- Reminded of quote from Corinthians:
 - o "At the present time your plenty will supply what they need, so that in turn their plenty will supply what you need. The goal is equality."
- What all New Yorkers need and want is vibrant and diverse city
- Must invest more in affordable housing
- So communities like Bed-Stuy can grow in sustainable way
 - o And congregations like Concord can remain part of city fabric for next 168 years, and beyond
- Thanks for support, and God bless

Sent from my iPhone

From: B
To: Wolfe, Emma; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Carrion, Marco A.; Miller, Harold; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 11:07:18 AM

I did my own THANG at church. Pls give me feedback on my remarks. Someone pls circulate them. And as I said to Harold M, next time, we need a more energetic church. I don't care about logistics -- I care about message. Concord is legendarily sleepy. I could have named 10 convenient locations where we could have gotten a lot more emotion and support from the crowd for our friends in the media to see

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:25 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

1 - i agree
2 - went back and forth on this...i think it takes away from our message about the issues which we really need folks to hear right now

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 9:18 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

1. Shouldn't I make this more vivid and emotional by saying that whenever someone wealthy buys one of those $10 million condos sprouting up all over Midtown, they should pay a little more to help create affordable housing for everyday new yorkers???

2. Should I ask the congregants to help by calling the governor's office to register their concerns??

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 09:01 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes re mansion tax. At this point we need to push the progressive credentials in the package. I think being really clear in the message is good. We are still hoping it's included in senate's bill so we don't want to campaign on it every day, but doing at church is good.

By far most important thing is to pump up rent regs rhetoric, and what it means for every day nyers.

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:56 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

The passage in this speech is bloodless -- mentions what we're doing with no elaboration. Kinda the opposite of how we talked about the pre-k tax, which I know was very different circumstances. I just need to understand why we only want a drive-by reference. Are we just trying to not hide it? If we're actually trying to create energy around it, this isn't the way. And I think it's fair to say that the mansion tax is the sleeper of our housing package in albany. Is my goal here to keep it quiet or actually pump it up, as we once dreamed of doing? I literally don't understand the play on this one point

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:52 AM
To: B; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Yes it does

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 08:49 AM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Fw: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

Seems to me that the verbiage below on the mansion tax is a lost opportunity. If we are taxing the wealthy to build housing for those in need, shouldn't we say it more clearly? JDC, I need help pumping this up. And EW, I want to confirm that talking overtly and passionately about the mansion tax conforms with your Albany strategy

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 05:22 AM
To: Leopold, Elana; B
Subject: REMARKS: Concord Church of Christ

OPEN PRESS
CONCORD CHURCH OF CHRIST
SUNDAY, MAY 31, 2015

REMARKS:

- Thank you, Pastor [Gary] Simpson
 - o Known to congregants as superhero Green Lantern
 - o Reassuring to know you always use superpowers for good
- Before go on, want to acknowledge:
[See Acknowledgments Card]
- Always great to be back at Concord
- Concord has welcomed newcomers with open arms since 1847–168 years!
- In early days, some of those newcomers were runaway slaves
- Later, you welcomed those who settled here after Great Migration from South
- Today, Concord and Bed-Stuy dealing with another big shift—gentrification
- As always, Concord has opened doors to new neighbors
- But at same time, many being displaced
- As real estate market rises, too many being left behind
- Bed-Stuy residents not alone – 56% of households rent-burdened
- Past 2 decades, lost hundreds of thousands of rent stabilized units
- NYC doing all it can:
 - o Affordable housing plan – build, preserve 200,000 units
 - o Investing millions to protect tenants, provide free legal help
 - o Launching 10-year plan to put NYCHA on solid footing
- But we can't do it alone – need help
- Right now, Albany deciding on fate of affordable housing in city
- Rent regs expire in less than 3 weeks
- Regs protect more than 2M middle-class and low-income New Yorkers
- City has presented to Albany reform plan to expand affordable housing
- Plan will protect rent regs AND spur development of more affordable units
- How? Two common-sense ways:
 - FIRST we END no-strings tax breaks and big giveaways to developers
 - Currently, developers who receive tax benefits only have to provide affordable housing in 27% of city

- Our plan: If you want tax benefits, you must build affordable housing in EVERY PART of the city—100%
- Our plan also eliminates tax breaks for luxury condominiums
 - Why would we provide tax incentives to build luxury condos?
- Taken together, reforms will save city taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion
 - And provide enough affordable housing for 65,000 New Yorkers
- SECOND, plan levies small tax on sales of mansions
 - 1% tax on sales of residences above $1.75M
- Could allow us to build enough housing for more than 95,000 New Yorkers
- Not exaggeration to say future of city hangs in balance
- Over next 3 weeks, leaders in Albany will decide if we make affordable housing a priority—or not
- If answer is no, then let us be clear about consequences
- If answer is no—slap in face to New Yorkers being priced out of own city
- If answer is no—2 million renters will be in danger of losing their homes
 - All so multi-millionaire condo owners can see lower taxes and greater personal wealth
- So it's time. Time to say yes. Time for leaders in Albany to show leadership
- We've heard lot of reasons for "no" from Governor these past several days
 - "It's too late"—even with three weeks left on schedule
 - "It's too hard"—even when governor has pushed through far more difficult policies than these
 - "Not everyone loves it"—even though plan vastly improves people's lives
 - And no one else offering ideas to fix broken system
- These are all excuses....and time for excuses, for distractions, for political game-playing is over
- We've all seen this governor move mountains when motivated
- We can and must get this done. Now.
- And I hope you'll help me do it
- Reminded of quote from Corinthians:
 - "At the present time your plenty will supply what they need, so that in turn their plenty will supply what you need. The goal is equality."

- What all New Yorkers need and want is vibrant and diverse city
- Must invest more in affordable housing
- So communities like Bed-Stuy can grow in sustainable way
 - And congregations like Concord can remain part of city fabric for next 168 years, and beyond
- Thanks for support, and God bless

Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: Reachable??
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 12:21:04 PM

So sorry - was out of pocket this morning - but back in circulation now

On 5/31/15, 8:47 AM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: DC37 piece
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 1:38:25 PM

Looks good

Sent from my iPhone

On May 31, 2015, at 12:25 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Meant to run this by you, too

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Saturday, May 30, 2015 at 7:10 PM
To: Jonathan Rosen <jonathan@berlinrosen.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: DC37 piece

This is good to go - JR - can you take from here?

On May 29, 2015, at 1:07 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Would be for their newsletter. Do I need to run by MBDB as well?

===

The Progressive Agenda Mayor Bill de Blasio

America is experiencing an inequality crisis. That's not melodrama, nor buzzwords; it's an economic reality that is hurting millions by eroding the foundation of middle class security.

America's middle class has always been this country's engine of economic success.

But as American workers' productivity has been steadily increasing for decades, the middle class' share of income has consistently declined. And between 2009 and 2012 – when times were so tough for so many working families – the top 1% of earners captured 91% of all income gains.

The trend lines over decades show a striking parallel between the decline in the middle class' income share and the decline in union membership.

Relentless attacks on right to organize have helped shape an economy that rewards wealth over work.

And today, we are all suffering the consequences of decades of trickle-down economic policy in the form of skyrocketing inequality.

There's something deeply un-American about rewarding wealth over work. That feeling of working harder and harder but falling farther and farther behind is the antithesis of the American Dream.

For many investors, 2014 returns were modest, but compensation for hedge fund managers was anything but: it was recently reported that that a group of 25 hedge fund mangers made $11.62 billion dollars last year.

To put that in perspective, here's that number fully written out: $11,620,000,000 -- for 25 people. And it is likely that they paid a lower tax rate on that income than the people who answer clean their homes and pilot their private jets.

What's more, last year Wall Street's bonus pool accounted for roughly twice as much money as was earned by every single American making the federal minimum wage. We have now worse income inequality than at the time of the stock market crash in 1929.

If we as a country are to overcome this crisis, we must act boldly. On May 12th in Washington, a large and diverse group of leaders from around the country – including AFSCME President Lee Saunders – came together around ideas that would do just that.

The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality is a set of proposals that builds upon the work of dozens of economists, lawmakers, labor unions and progressive activists, with the aim of addressing the income inequality crisis.

It's a plan grounded in concrete proposals, but it is guided by three simple principles:

1. Lift the Floor for Working People. That means taking steps like strengthening the right of workers to unionize and bargain collectively, and increasing the minimum wage so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
2. Support Working Families. That means passing measures to ensure paid sick and family leave, and making pre-K and afterschool programs available for every child.
3. Tax Fairness – by doing things like ending the “carried interest loophole” which allows hedge fund managers escape paying their fair share, and instituting the “Buffett Rule” so that millionaire investors don’t pay a lower rate in taxes than people who work 9-5.

The Progressive Agenda is a response to the demands of everyday people that the inequality crisis be addressed with bold proposals that will make a significant difference in their lives.

The rampant inequality we face today has been decades in the making, and it won't be solved overnight. But together, we're taking an important step to ensure that it will be addressed.

And we urge Americans from all walks of life – especially those fighting to strengthen the right to organize – to join us on this mission.

Sign on today at www.ProgressiveAgenda.us.

<DC37oped.docx>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re:
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 5:43:22 PM

Aiming to have done by tomorrow AM - spoke for about 20 minutes

Sent from my iPhone

> On May 31, 2015, at 5:42 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> Do we have transcript from church speech today? I was derelict re: missing all the email action this
AM and told him I would give my two cents on remarks
>
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA
Date: Sunday, May 31, 2015 11:06:55 PM

1. Will do. The big pieces will be Caucus for Equality (with a better name), and the presidential forum.
2. [REDACTED] won't be ready until 6/15 - but I think we can get some help from him before then. Jeani is supposed to get back to me tomorrow.
3. I'm definitely in favor of TPA call time that not only accomplishes this, but also gets us a steering committee (even if we don't call it that - I know you weren't quite into that concept - but a core group of DOERS who can help really drum up certain distinct elements of TPA, like [REDACTED] with Family Leave or [REDACTED] on trade).

On 5/31/15, 9:52 PM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

- >
- >1. Need updated plan asap based on our dinner
- >
- >2. Need you to hire staff asap -- and I mean asap
- >
- >3. Need call time scheduled for me with whoever will staff calls to build
- >the TPA and stay connected to key endorsers
- >

From: John Del Cecato
To: Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Katrina
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 11:17:40 AM

A little bit but we kept going off track - mostly due to my ADD

On Jun 1, 2015, at 10:29 AM, Leopold, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Did mayor ever download with you?

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: Stephen Lerner; "John Del Cecato"
Subject: Meeting Location Change
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 12:17:01 PM

Don't worry! It's closer to subway...

Mayors Office of Imigrant Affairs

253 Broadway 14th Floor

Text me when you are here at Right across from city hall

From: Carey, Michael
To: "Lauren Windsor"
Cc: John Del Cecato; Mike Lux
Subject: RE: Mayor de Blasio interview
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 12:19:03 PM

Hi Lauren,

Great!

You should have plenty of lighting. It is where we do every press conference and major interview.

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: Lauren Windsor [mailto:████████████████████]
Sent: Monday, June 1, 2015 12:17 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: John Del Cecato; Mike Lux
Subject: Re: Mayor de Blasio interview

Hi, Michael, I'll be shooting the interview, and just need 15 minutes to set up. I plan on getting there at 4:30. Is there decent lighting in the Blue Room?

Lauren Windsor
Executive Director - American Family Voices
Executive Producer - Lady Libertine Media - The Undercurrent
www.LadyLibertine.net
@_under_current
213.595.8011

On Jun 1, 2015, at 12:12 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Mike –

How much set up time do you need?

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 1, 2015 12:12 PM
To: Lauren Windsor; Mike Lux; Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: Mayor de Blasio interview

Adding MPC... We'll be doing it in the Blue Room at City Hall... You can come through either entrance (drop Michael's name at the gate)... We've got it on the sked for 5pm on Wed

From: Lauren Windsor <[REDACTED]>
Date: Monday, June 1, 2015 at 11:54 AM
To: Mike Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Mayor de Blasio interview

Hi, John, thanks for setting this up. Where do we need to meet you and the mayor on Wednesday?

Lauren Windsor
Executive Director - American Family Voices
Executive Producer - Lady Libertine Media - The Undercurrent
www.LadyLibertine.net
@_under_current
213.595.8011

On May 23, 2015, at 10:20 PM, Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net> wrote:

That will work, thank you.

Sent from my iPhone

On May 23, 2015, at 5:25 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

How about 5pm on 6/3?

From: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 at 11:19 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Lauren Windsor" ([REDACTED])
<[REDACTED]>

Subject: RE: Mayor de Blasio interview

We were looking at being there Monday through Wednesday, is there any way to do it one of those days?

Mike Lux
1250 Eye St., N.W., Suite 250
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 628-7771
A Proud Member of Democracy Partners

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 2015 10:59 AM
To: Michael Lux
Cc: 'Lauren Windsor' ([REDACTED])
Subject: Re: Mayor de Blasio interview

Would the morning of June 5th work?

From: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 12:24 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "'Lauren Windsor' ([REDACTED])
<[REDACTED]>
Subject: Mayor de Blasio interview

John,

Lauren and I will be in NYC the first week of June, can we figure out a time to do that de Blasio interview you and I have been talking about?

Mike Lux
1250 Eye St., N.W., Suite 250
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 628-7771
A Proud Member of Democracy Partners

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: Stephen Lerner; John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: Meet Up
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 12:46:21 PM

Stephen:

Just want to make sure you see we had to change the location of the meeting- pls see new location at 253 Broadway, 14th FL.

If you need me call my cell at [REDACTED]

Thanks!

From: Stephen Lerner
Sent: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 12:38 PM
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Yazgi, Stephanie; Liz Hegarty
Subject: Re: Meet Up

Look forward to it

Sent from my iPad

On May 19, 2015, at 9:24 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Sounds good!

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 19, 2015 at 12:16 PM
To: Liz Hegarty <lhegarty@akpdmedia.com>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "[REDACTED]" <[REDACTED]>
Subject: Meet Up

Stephen and John: I would like you two to meet and since Stephen is in town at 1PM thought it might be great time to do that! Both of you were present at the TPA event May 12. Here are the details for our meeting:

Church Publick, 78 Reade St, New York, NY 10007
1PM
June 1
Monday

Sound good to all?
Steph

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Walters, Alexis
Cc: Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Hinton, Karen
Subject: Briefing memo
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 1:39:38 PM
Attachments: Mayor's Event Briefing- Daily Show.doc

Here it is.

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: Andrea Hagelgans

EVENT: Interview with Jon Stewart, The Daily Show

MISSION/GOAL: Amplify TPA movement and values

DAY/DATE: Tuesday, June 2, 2015

EVENT TIME: 6:00 or 6:15 P.M. hit time

MBDB TIME: 5:40PM call time

LOCATION: Daily Show Studios
607 W. 51st Street
b/n 11& 12th Ave

CONTACT: Hillary Kun
[REDACTED]

STAFF ASSIGNED TO MBDB: Andrea Hagelgans
Karen Hinton

EVENT SET-UP/PROGRAM: 7-8 minute interview (either 1 long segment or broken into 2 segments); possibility he will request you to stay for 10 additional minutes to do an interview for the Website

Topics:

- TPA, progressive agenda and the conference YOU organized in D.C.
- Education
- Crime in NYC

Other guests this week

- General Stanley McChrystal
- Melissa McCarthy
- Steve Buscemi

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Last show: August 6, 2015

New host: Trevor Noah (South African)

Background: TPA is the pitched topic

- his recent shows indicate continued interest in SQF and police/community relations/NYC safety
- He also tends to focus on gaffes (inadvertently copying reporter on email; lateness)
- He may mention traveling outside NYC and the so-called “controversy”
- Jon is personally committed to Veterans issues and is helping Veterans get jobs in the film/entertainment industry]

Videos to watch: Rand Paul
Hillary Clinton v. Bernie Sanders
Democaplyse

Main points to land:

- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.
- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities across this country for a $15 dollar minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

Transitions

- There's no reason that a multi-millionaire sitting by the pool at their beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the woman who cleans their home.

Key Stats/ Examples

- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things: 1) more investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and 2) more revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, put a 5% surcharge on income earned over a million bucks, etc).
- President Obama said something interesting the other day. He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.
- In my city, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. They're demanding it from the grass roots.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Off Topic

On Travel

- The fight to lift up struggling New Yorkers, and to help rebuild New York's middle class, doesn't end at the borders of my city.

Mayoral Control—paint doomsday picture of turning back the clock:

- Couldn't do pre-K, after-school expansion, Renewal Schools
- All the positive momentum will come to a halt—higher attendance, higher graduation rates, safer campuses
- We couldn't even appoint a Chancellor, we couldn't hire or fire superintendents
- 71 CEOs of the city's top companies sent State leaders a letter last week demanding mayoral control be renewed for economic future

Cuomo/ MBdB relationship

- Worked with Gov Cuomo for years protecting and building housing for low-income New Yorkers. Now, with the homes of 2 million New Yorkers in the balance, we need him to stand up. If he simply extends the status quo, tens of thousands of families will be forced out of their homes.

Safety

- Overall crime is down and NYC is one of the country's safest big cities
- There are often incidents going into Spring/Summer - saw it last year as well - and we closed the year with record lows
- Working with PD and always tailoring our approach
- Our reforms to SQF have cut down lower quality stops and lead to more time for quality policing- Peace dividend
- Will continue to reform SQF so it leads to enforcement and quality stops

SQF

- SQF are down 53% from last year.
- 11,276 stops so far in 2015 compared to 23,979 at this time in 2014.
- In 2014, SQF dropped nearly 76% percent compared to the previous year.

Shootings/Safety—Aggressively Tackling

- Narrow, gang-driven activity responsible for small uptick localized in a handful of precincts—just like last year's brief surge in public housing, we're deploying targeted resources to address it.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

- Police have tools they've never had before—new tech/tablets, retraining, shot spotter
- We are down 2,500 crimes in NYC, a 7 percent decrease in overall to date compared to last year, also see decreases in housing and transit crime

Marijuana policy

- Marijuana-related arrests are down 47% in NYC compared to last year
- We are implementing a smart policy that keeps New Yorkers safe but is also more fair to our residents.
- The administration and NYPD are continuing to implement meaningful reforms that bring police and community closer together.

Rikers reform/ Mass Incarceration

- We are making significant and important progress to move Rikers from a culture of violence to a culture of safety—and meaningful reform takes time.
- Our 14-point Anti-Violence Initiative is aimed directly at reducing violence and improving the quality of life for staff and inmates alike.
- We recently committed to safely cutting the population on Rikers by reducing case delays and reforming the summons process.
- Reference FLONYC work on mental health
- [Rikers reform examples = ending punitive segregation for 16 and 17 year olds, opening Enhanced Supervision Housing, increasing programming to reduce idleness]

Possible Questions

TPA and presidential

Don't you think you should stick to your day job?

So will you endorse Bernie Sanders?

Was this all just a “wink-wink” “nod-nod” for Hillary?

What do you think of O'Malley?

How do you respond to critics that the progressive agenda is a “white, liberal” agenda?

Crime

1 year in and NYC is going to s. Does this prove SQF works?

Should I be scared to go to Central Park?

Education

What's going on with you and Cuomo?

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

BACKGROUND

NYT on Jon Stewart's Veterans Work

During the surge in Iraq in 2008, Nathan Witmer led an Army scout platoon in a thicket of villages rife with insurgents and roadside bombs. What he really wants to do is direct.

Or maybe write — or produce.

“Anything with movies was always the dream,” said Mr. Witmer, who left active duty in 2010.

Like many troops leaving the military, he was steered instead toward jobs in government agencies that offered preferential hiring or with big corporations that recruited veterans, and he assumed his hope of working in show business would remain only that.

But after selling medical equipment for two years, he had the chance to join a five-week industry boot camp designed to bring young veterans into the television business. To his surprise, it was run by one of the Iraq war's fiercest critics, Jon Stewart, the longtime host of Comedy Central's “The Daily Show.”

“It was actually inspirational,” said Mr. Witmer, who went on to work at Fox News and then found a job as a “Daily Show” associate field segment producer. “We hear ‘Thank you for your service’ all the time, but here was concrete action, people working to really make a difference. And it changed lives. I'm proof of that.”

“The Daily Show” developed the program over the last three years without publicizing it, but now, because Mr. Stewart is preparing to leave the show, he has taken it into the open, urging other shows to develop their own programs to bring more veterans into the industry.

“This is ready to franchise. Please steal our idea,” Mr. Stewart said in an interview at his Manhattan studio recently. “It isn't charity. To be good in this business you have to bring in different voices from different places, and we have this wealth of experience that just wasn't being tapped.”

Veterans are less likely to struggle to find work after war — their unemployment rate has been lower than the comparable civilian rate for years — but few land in the entertainment industry, according to the industry group Veterans in Film and Television.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Karen Kraft, a board member of the group, which tries to draw more veterans into the industry, said the small number of military veterans in show business was partly because military service supplanted the years of internships and entry-level jobs often required to establish a beachhead in the industry. The phenomenon may also be connected to a cultural divide that has kept quirky, left-leaning Hollywood and the high-and-tight world of the military from connecting.

“Sometimes people want to apologize for being in the military out here; it’s so misunderstood,” Ms. Kraft, a former soldier who became a producer in Los Angeles, said of Hollywood. “It’s a creative industry, and they tend to see military people as a bunch of rule followers.”

Efforts to bring veterans into the field have included workshops by the Writers Guild of America and projects by big-name producers and directors, among them Bruce Cohen and Judd Apatow, that involve young veterans.

Mr. Stewart may at first seem an unexpected bridge for a Hollywood-military divide. For years the host built his audience by playing straight man to the often absurd truths of the global “war on terror,” serving up scathing satire on American involvement in the Middle East in his longstanding segments “Mess o’Potamia” and “Crisis in Israafghyianonanaq.” At the same time, though, he has been an advocate for troops, visiting the wounded at hospitals, visiting Arlington National Cemetery and in 2011 doing a comedy tour of bases in Afghanistan.

“I knew I had very strong opinions about what we were doing over there, and I wanted to visit the individuals who were part of the effort to gain a perspective on it,” Mr. Stewart said. He added: “Most of all, I realized it was unbelievably hot, nothing but sand. I knew we were nation-building there. I didn’t realize we were nation-building on Mars.

In 2013, American Corporate Partners, a mentoring nonprofit group, asked Mr. Stewart to take a veteran under his wing and help find that person a job in television, which involved making a few calls.

“Jon said he wanted to help, but wanted to do more than just drop his name,” said Sid Goodfriend, who runs the program.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Instead, the staff of “The Daily Show” developed an intense five-week immersion program to give veterans a crash course in their business, with behind-the-scenes looks at areas including talent booking and editing.

They put out word to veterans’ groups but did not mention that the boot camp was at “The Daily Show,” an attempt to weed out fans and focus instead on veterans who really wanted to work in the industry.

“There are well-worn channels into this industry that are closed off to veterans,” Mr. Stewart said. “You get into the television industry generally by going to certain colleges known for having good television programs, getting internships and getting to know people who work in the industry. A lot of veterans never had that opportunity because they were busy at war. This is a way to give them that chance.”

He added that the veterans he had hired had been assets and “way less whiny” than most of his hires.

“The Daily Show” created a program to offer the benefits of an internship — experience and connections — in a form that veterans working full-time jobs could accommodate. Each class of 24 meets once a week in the evening. The program ends with a career fair that has landed a handful of vets jobs in television.

One of them is Justine Cabulong, a former Marine lieutenant who served in Mongolia and Afghanistan and is now a production coordinator at “The Daily Show” — a job that among other things includes a brief comedy routine before the show that warns audience members that if they don’t remain seated and keep their phones turned off, they “will be detained.”

“I feel like the Marines was a good preparation for ‘The Daily Show,’ actually,” she said. “The show is high tempo; it’s pretty chaotic; you have to work together. We might be on the road, not be getting much sleep. But at the same time, it’s not a war zone here. No one is shooting at us. Yes, the printer might have just died, but we can call the printer guy.”

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Fw: NEW REPUBLIC: The Future of Wall Street Regulation Is in Andrew Cuomo's Hands
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 1:41:20 PM

From: Clips <Clips@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Sent: Monday, June 1, 2015 1:37 PM
Subject: NEW REPUBLIC: The Future of Wall Street Regulation Is in Andrew Cuomo's Hands

The Future of Wall Street Regulation Is in Andrew Cuomo's Hands

NEW REPUBLIC - David Dayen

<http://www.newrepublic.com/article/121938/benjamin-lawsky-successor-should-follow-his-footsteps>

The fight for financial reform has shifted to an unlikely setting: Albany. New York Governor Andrew Cuomo must soon appoint a replacement superintendent for the state Department of Financial Services (DFS), an obscure regulatory position that the current head, Benjamin Lawsky, elevated into a major national player over the past four years.

Unfortunately, most of the names floated for the job—with one key exception—seem to herald a step backward from Lawsky's aggressive approach. They include a defender of the student loan industry, a prosecutor reluctant to prosecute, and a former executive at mega-bank JPMorgan Chase.

The position wasn't originally intended to serve as such a battleground. Cuomo created DFS by merging state banking and insurance regulators into one agency—a transparent attempt to outflank a political rival, Attorney General Eric Schneiderman. The idea was to transfer power into the executive branch and collect funds from penalties on the financial industry, which have risen to $6 billion since 2011.

But as I wrote in a profile for The New Republic last April, Lawsky, Cuomo's former chief of staff, transformed the state office into something more, even leading federal regulators to toughen their responses. By threatening to revoke licenses and kick banks out of the world's financial center, he could secure bigger fines and punishment. He is arguably solely responsible for the demise of Ocwen, the non-bank mortgage servicer engaged in repeated predatory activity toward homeowners. He banned French bank BNP Paribas from processing dollar-clearing services as part of a money laundering case.

And despite having no prosecutorial powers, Lawsky focused on individual accountability as well, a rare perspective among regulators. He has removed dozens of financial executives from the industry, most recently Barclays Bank employees for manipulating foreign exchange transactions.

Beyond crackdowns on Wall Street, advocacy groups in New York praised Lawsky for protecting vulnerable communities. He worked to prevent payday lending, illegal debt collection and insurance scams. "He's served the public interest, not the corporate interests that dominate politics," said Sarah Ludwig of the New Economy Project, an economic justice group in New York City. “I don’t normally speak in such a complimentary fashion about these people.”

Lawsky announced he would depart in June to open a law firm and teach at Stanford University. The New York Times reported a preliminary list of names under consideration to replace him. It’s mostly a depressing lot.

Jonathan Schwartz was managing director and general counsel for JPMorgan Chase; before that he toiled for almost-as-unpopular cable monopolists Cablevision and Time Warner. Bridget Healy is the lead lawyer for the Dutch financial institution ING. Under her watch, the company paid $15 million to settle charges that their life insurance and annuity unit received kickbacks from mutual funds that sold their products. ING also paid $5.75 million to the Department of Labor over processing errors in its own company 401(k) plan.

Both Hector Gonzalez and Michele Hirshman, other names on the list, left federal prosecutor positions to join corporate law firms, where they now defend clients they would have previously investigated. Gonzalez “represented a leading education and finance company” in investigations of the student loan industry, and advised the American Securitization Forum, a leading trade group for Wall Street investment banks that package loans into securities. Hirshman regularly advises “pharmaceutical manufacturers, financial institutions... and public and private company executives,” and has said that “practices that need reform should be a focus for regulators, but criminal charges are not the right vehicle to obtain systemic change.”

The common thread of comfort with banking elites signals that the next superintendent won’t ruffle the same feathers as Lawsky, if his successor is drawn from that crowd.

But Inside Mortgage Finance, a trade publication, threw out another possibility: Rohit Chopra, currently the student loan ombudsman for the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau.

Chopra was hired by Elizabeth Warren when she was standing up the agency. He has been outspoken about the abuses of the lending industry, particularly private banks, which have complained about his assertive style. But they have also begrudgingly lowered interest rates on student loans and offered more loan modifications to struggling borrowers. With Chopra’s involvement, CFPB has set rules on student loan servicers and penalized student loan debt relief companies.

This gives Cuomo a choice: Replace Lawsky by taking another spin of the revolving door between regulatory agencies and Wall Street, or go with Chopra, someone who represents the newer breed of aggressive leadership on holding financial institutions accountable. “It’s an incredibly critical appointment,” said Kirsten Keefe, consumer lawyer at the Empire Justice Center, a legal services organization. “Anyone who the governor brings in should have demonstrated experience in taking on the financial sector.”

The decision also comes at a propitious time for Cuomo. While he appears to hold out hope for a third term, his approval ratings have sunk to an all-time low of 41 percent, according to the Siena Research Institute. Corruption scandals have swirled around Albany, taking down both leaders of the state House and Senate, and threatening Cuomo himself. New York City

Mayor Bill de Blasio, among several potential challengers to Cuomo in 2018, blasted the governor over the weekend for not doing enough for the city's residents.

Cuomo has recently tried to play up a more liberal image, after receiving a significant primary challenge from Zephyr Teachout last year. Last month, he directed a state wage board to consider raises to the minimum wage in the fast food industry, going around the legislature. With de Blasio courting national progressives with a "Contract with America," Cuomo has clearly felt the pressure, giving the DFS selection even more weight.

The network of community, labor and civil rights groups in New York are paying attention to the DFS choice, and given Lawsky's stature nationally as a financial reformer, the attention could spread. Another strong leader at DFS will establish that office as one of the nation's most important positions for reforming Wall Street. A milquetoast replacement will let industry executives breathe easier.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT CONCORD BAPTIST CHURCH
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 2:13:27 PM
Attachments: image001.png

Yes, will send him now

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Monday, June 01, 2015 2:13 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: FW: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT CONCORD BAPTIST CHURCH

Here you go, JDC.

Andrea, I believe you mentioned the Mayor wanted to see this transcript.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Monday, June 01, 2015 2:13 PM
To: Transcripts; Carrion, Marco A.; Miller, Harold Subject: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT CONCORD BAPTIST CHURCH

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: May 31, 2015
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, \(212\) 788-2958788-2958)

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT CONCORD BAPTIST CHURCH

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you so much. What an honor to be here today at Concord. I want to begin at the beginning. First, I want to do honor to God. Without Him, this day would not be possible. And I know this extraordinary congregation feels that deep sense of loss as we mourn Dr. Taylor, who did so much for this congregation, for this city, for this nation – an exemplar of leadership. We remember him. We appreciate him. We feel all he did for us.

Today, you have an extraordinary leader in Pastor Simpson. I got to tell you –

[Applause]

– he is renown. He is renown not just for his spiritual leadership. He is renowned for creating a sense of mission that reaches so many people – those with HIV and AIDS, our seniors, our youth. This church community looks out for everyone. Pastor Simpson has led the way. And apparently he has another identity, I've come to understand, as the Green Lantern. I already thought you were a hero, now I hear you're a superhero. Well, we appreciate it. Like your namesake, you're always doing good.

And in our household we have a phrase – now you know many of us grew up with the phrase, behind every great man stands a great woman.

[Applause]

Well, I need to – I need to update that a little bit. My first lady is out of town, but if she were here, she would insist that phrase be updated – beside every great man stands a great woman.

[Applause]

What greater woman than Pastor Emma Jordan-Simpson?

[Applause]

The people have spoken.

[Laughter]

I love being at Concord. So much, of course, because of what's happening today – all the things this congregation represents and achieves. But I also cannot help but feel history when I stand here. One hundred and sixty-eight years of opening your arms to anyone who needed a spiritual community, who needed a home, who needed hope. By the way, in 1847, and the years thereafter, some of those who came here seeking a spiritual home literally escaped slavery here in our own nation. That is how rich and powerful the history of this place is. So many others over generations left the south in the Great Migration came here, and found a new start and a new hope.

And, here in Brooklyn, and particularly in Bed–Stuy, for generations people flourished. It wasn't always easy times, but families found opportunity, they found jobs, and especially they found a place to live they could afford. And it was their community, because they built it up.

Well, in recent years we've seen a change. And it's a change we don't talk about enough and we don't think about enough, but we have to put it front and center, because gentrification, it's one of the ultimate doubled-edged swords. There are good elements for sure, and there are also huge problems that come with it. And we have seen, in just these years, these last years, people being forced out of their own neighborhood, unable to stay in the place they love, the place they built. And that is not a promise of New York City. New York City, and Brooklyn in particular, for generations was a place for everyone. Not a perfect place. Not a place without conflict or prejudice, but still a place for everyone, because in the first instance, anyone could come here, and anyone could afford to live here, whether they came from the south, or they came from another country. Whether it was one generation passing on the torch to the next, you could live in your own neighborhood.

And today, for the first time in our history, that is truly in doubt. We know, as Pastor says, we have lost many of our neighbors already, and we know many more are threatened. In this city, 56 percent of us – 56 percent of the people who rent an apartment pay more than 30 percent of their income for a place to live. Some pay more than 50 percent of their income for a place to live. Well, that's not the mark of a city for everyone. We had – for generations we had an ample supply of rent stabilized apartments, rent controlled apartments, Mitchell-Lama housing. We had all of these tools to let working people live in their own city. And slowly but surely, the power of the private market has undermined these tools. And we have not just lost a few affordable apartments, we haven't just lost a few thousand affordable apartments. We have, in the last two decades, lost several hundred thousand affordable apartments in this city. That's how dire this situation is.

If we don't change our course, we could become a gilded city. We could become a city for only those of great means, and we will not allow that. So I presented last year an affordable housing plan – 200,000 units, built and preserved – enough housing for half a million New Yorkers. As many people as live within the city limits of Kansas City or Miami, Florida.

So that is the kind of thing the city does for its people here. We're going to create affordable housing over the next 10 years at an unprecedented level. We're going to preserve the affordable housing we have now in a much more aggressive manner. So we can be the city we are meant to be.

We also know that some, some who are landlords and don't play by the rules are harassing tenants and forcing them out of buildings. So we're investing $36 million dollars for legal services for tenants who are threatened. So, they will have a lawyer to fight against an unscrupulous landlord.

We know that over 400,000 of our fellow New Yorkers live in public housing, in NYCHA. And we know, for not just years but for decades, the federal government has been reducing its commitment to public housing, the state government has been reducing its commitment to public housing – and so it's up to us. And two weeks ago, I put forward a plan to save public housing for generations to come, because we need it, we need it in this city. 400,000 people need to know that that public housing will be there for them, it will be safer, it will be cleaner, it will be stronger.

So we're doing all that we can do as a city. But as I mentioned, we've often turned to Washington asking just to give us a little bit of the help when we're used to it. I don't have to tell anyone in this congregation what's happening in Washington. It's not the best bet to turn to Washington nowadays.

So we turn to Albany. We say to those in Albany, we represent 43 percent of the population of the state here in New York City. We're asking for fairness. We're asking for a little help so we can still be an affordable city. So this great city that does so much for the whole state can continue to thrive.

Well, in the next three weeks, it is decision time in Albany. Three weeks where things are going to happen that will affect everyone in this extraordinary church, and your family members, and your friends, and your neighbors, and your coworkers. What happens in the next three weeks 150 miles north of here will affect us all for the long term.

Rent regulation, rent control, rent stabilization. One million units of housing, affecting over 2 million New Yorkers, almost one quarter of us, set to expire in three weeks. If Albany doesn't act, all that we know – rent stabilization and rent regulation – will end. The private market will take over, and the pace of displacement will be faster than anything we've ever seen before. Will we let that happen?

Audience: No.

Mayor: Will we let that happen?

Audience: No!

Mayor: In fact, we not only need to keep rent control and rent stabilization in place, we need to strengthen it. As I told you, we've lost two – over 200,000 units of affordable housing. I'm trying to replace all that was lost. But if rent regulation isn't strengthened, we will continue to lose.

Secondly, in Albany they're making a decision about a program that doesn't get a lot of attention. I'll tell you why it doesn't get a lot of attention. It's called 421-a. It is a tax break. It's a tax break that 30 or 40 years ago was put in place so people would develop in New York City when New York City was going through a lot of trouble, and it was very hard to build anything when no one wanted to be here. Well, guess what? Times changed.

As I mentioned, that gentrification, and all the other trends we're seeing. People want to be here. People pay a lot of money to be here. So you would imagine, we all in this room being common-sense people, we would imagine that if there was a tax break once upon a time, in the bad days so the developers would create housing, that when the good times came and prices were high and the market was booming, of course that tax break would be gone, right? Well, common sense does not rule the day. There is still at this moment, by state law, a tax break for those who build luxury condominiums. Now, do you think your tax dollars should go to fund luxury condominiums?

Audience: No.

Mayor: I didn't think so. We have proposed that Albany act. We have proposed an end to all tax breaks for luxury condominium development. We have proposed that Albany act and say that any time we give a tax credit, we must have affordable housing in return for that tax credit.

[Applause]

And not just some places, literally in every neighborhood and every borough. My message to the developers is a simple one. The law should say this – if you want a tax credit, give us affordable housing. If you're not giving us affordable housing, no tax credit for you. It's as simple as that. That seems to be fair.

Albany has a chance to act on that. Three weeks, they have a chance to make a difference. If they pass the reforms that I have proposed, here's what would happen – we would save taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion dollars because we wouldn't be giving away our tax dollars for luxury housing. And what would we do with that – that $1.3 billion? We could create enough affordable housing for 65,000 of our fellow New Yorkers. That difference – think about that. 65,000 people could know that they could live in their neighborhood, live in their city they love.

And I'll – I'll conclude in one moment, but I got to tell you one more piece because I think you'll find it interesting. I also think that people who can afford a luxury condo should be able to afford a little more in taxes so we could build even more affordable housing.

[Applause]

Now, we start by saying if you're going to pay $1,750,000 dollars for a condo, we're going to ask you for 1 percent tax. That money goes to affordable housing. If you're going to pay $5 million dollars for a condo, and brothers and sisters, there are a lot of people right now – just think about this for a minute. $5 million dollars for a condo apartment. That's happening every single day, particularly in Manhattan. We ask them to pay 1.5 percent in taxes so we can create affordable housing now. There are $10 million dollar condos we have sold in this city. There is a $100 million dollar condo that was sold recently in this city. I think those individuals can afford a little more so we can build affordable housing.

[Applause]

Again, our friends in Albany have an opportunity to make a decision. They have three weeks to do it. If they agree with me, we would be able to build with the money we get from that very modest tax on the most wealthy, we would get almost $200 million dollars a year, enough to build 37,000 affordable units. That is enough for 95,000 New Yorkers. Put those two ideas together – the one I mentioned before about 421-a, the one I'm telling you about now, this tax that we call a mansion tax because it's only on the most expensive homes. You put those two plans together, that is enough housing for 160,000 people. That would change the lives of people in this room, in this sacred place, and many others you know. And that is what is hanging in the balance.

So, let's just imagine Albany thinks about it and says, okay, we want 160,000 people to have affordable housing. We don't want to keep giving money away for luxury condos. We want to ask those who have done well to help us. Albany can do all that with the stroke of a pen and set us on a good course.

But we've been disappointed before. We are not blind. We're not blind to petty politics. We're not blind to the games people play. So what if Albany says no? What if they say, no, we're not going to do any of that. That is a slap in the face of every New Yorker who is hanging on by a thread to the housing they have in this city. That's a slap in the face to everyone who wants to stay in their neighborhood and knows they may be priced out. And we shouldn't stand for that. We should not stand for the notion that two million New Yorkers have to worry right now whether their rent controlled or rent stabilized apartment will still be rent controlled or rent stabilized a month from now. And it will be a slap in the face to every one of them if those laws aren't not only renewed, but strengthened.

So I will conclude with this – I'm going to ask for your help. You will hear excuses from Albany. I've been particularly surprised to hear the governor say it's too late to make these changes. Brothers and sisters, it's not too late. Three weeks is a lifetime in Albany, New York. There's plenty of time to make these changes. The proposals are on the table, they've been vetted, they're ready to go. They've been acted on before. It's time.

I've heard the governor say it's too hard to get these things done. No, not when the people demand it. Not when we've proven it will work and be fair to people struggling to find decent housing. I've heard the governor say not everyone agrees. Well, guess what? Not everyone agrees on lots of things. But it doesn't stop us from moving forward as a city and a state. Sometimes it takes leadership. I have seen many tough things done by this governor. I've seen many tough things done by other leaders. Sometimes we say that people need our help and it is time to act. We don't care about the special interests. We care about the interests of the people. And that's – that's the chance we have to get things right. And your voices will matter. Your voices will be heard in Albany. I urge you to let your voices be heard.

Finally, I want to offer a quote from Corinthians because I think it epitomizes the simple clarity of what we're trying to achieve right now. "Right now you have plenty and can help those who are in need. Later, they will have plenty and can share with you when you need it. In this way, things will be equal." Scripture teaches us many, many things. Sometimes it reminds us there's something more fundamental than politics and posturing. It reminds us we're here for each other, and our government should be as good as all of us.

I thank you for this opportunity to be with you. I thank you for all you do to make your community strong. I join with you to fight to make sure your community will be here for everyone for years to come. We've had 168 years in this congregation. Let's have us 168 more and more beyond that where people of every kind, hardworking people, can actually live in the community they love. Thank you. God bless you.

###

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B; "jfdc@akpdmmedia.com"; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil
Subject: RE: Sermon today
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 2:14:25 PM

Here is the transcript, per your request

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: May 31, 2015
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, \(212\) 788-2958

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT CONCORD BAPTIST CHURCH

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you so much. What an honor to be here today at Concord. I want to begin at the beginning. First, I want to do honor to God. Without Him, this day would not be possible. And I know this extraordinary congregation feels that deep sense of loss as we mourn Dr. Taylor, who did so much for this congregation, for this city, for this nation – an exemplar of leadership. We remember him. We appreciate him. We feel all he did for us.

Today, you have an extraordinary leader in Pastor Simpson. I got to tell you –

[Applause]

– he is renown. He is renown not just for his spiritual leadership. He is renowned for creating a sense of mission that reaches so many people – those with HIV and AIDS, our seniors, our youth. This church community looks out for everyone. Pastor Simpson has led the way. And apparently he has another identity, I've come to understand, as the Green Lantern. I already thought you were a hero, now I hear you're a superhero. Well, we appreciate it. Like your namesake, you're always doing good.

And in our household we have a phrase – now you know many of us grew up with the phrase, behind every great man stands a great woman.

[Applause]

Well, I need to – I need to update that a little bit. My first lady is out of town, but if she were here, she would insist that phrase be updated – beside every great man stands a great woman.

[Applause]

What greater woman than Pastor Emma Jordan-Simpson?

[Applause]

The people have spoken.

[Laughter]

I love being at Concord. So much, of course, because of what's happening today – all the things this congregation represents and achieves. But I also cannot help but feel history when I stand here. One hundred and sixty-eight years of opening your arms to anyone who needed a spiritual community, who needed a home, who needed hope. By the way, in 1847, and the years thereafter, some of those who came here seeking a spiritual home literally escaped slavery here in our own nation. That is how rich and powerful the history of this place is. So many others over generations left the south in the Great Migration came here, and found a new start and a new hope.

And, here in Brooklyn, and particularly in Bed–Stuy, for generations people flourished. It wasn't always easy times, but families found opportunity, they found jobs, and especially they found a place to live they could afford. And it was their community, because they built it up.

Well, in recent years we've seen a change. And it's a change we don't talk about enough and we don't think about enough, but we have to put it front and center, because gentrification, it's one of the ultimate doubled-edged swords. There are good elements for sure, and there are also huge problems that come with it. And we have seen, in just these years, these last years, people being forced out of their own neighborhood, unable to stay in the place they love, the place they built. And that is not a promise of New York City. New York City, and Brooklyn in particular, for generations was a place for everyone. Not a perfect place. Not a place without conflict or prejudice, but still a place for everyone, because in the first instance, anyone could come here, and anyone could afford to live here, whether they came from the south, or they came from another country. Whether it was one generation passing on the torch to the next, you could live in your own neighborhood.

And today, for the first time in our history, that is truly in doubt. We know, as Pastor says, we have lost many of our neighbors already, and we know many more are threatened. In this city, 56 percent of us – 56 percent of the people who rent an apartment pay more than 30 percent of their income for a place to live. Some pay more than 50 percent of their income for a place to live. Well, that's not the mark of a city for everyone. We had – for generations we had an ample supply of rent stabilized apartments, rent controlled apartments, Mitchell-Lama housing. We had all of these tools to let working people live in their own city. And slowly but surely, the power of the private market has undermined these tools. And we have not just lost a few affordable apartments, we haven't just lost a few thousand affordable apartments. We have, in the last two decades, lost several hundred thousand affordable apartments in this city. That's how dire this situation is.

If we don't change our course, we could become a gilded city. We could become a city for only those of great means, and we will not allow that. So I presented last year an affordable housing plan – 200,000 units, built and preserved – enough housing for half a million New Yorkers. As many people as live within the city limits of Kansas City or Miami, Florida.

So that is the kind of thing the city does for its people here. We're going to create affordable housing over the next 10 years at an unprecedented level. We're going to preserve the affordable housing we have now in a much more aggressive manner. So we can be the city we are meant to be.

We also know that some, some who are landlords and don't play by the rules are harassing tenants and forcing them out of buildings. So we're investing $36 million dollars for legal services for tenants who are threatened. So, they will have a lawyer to fight against an unscrupulous landlord.

We know that over 400,000 of our fellow New Yorkers live in public housing, in NYCHA. And we know, for not just years but for decades, the federal government has been reducing its commitment to public housing, the state government has been reducing its commitment to public housing – and so it's up to us. And two weeks ago, I put forward a plan to save public housing for generations to come, because we need it, we need it in this city. 400,000 people need to know that that public housing will be there for them, it will be safer, it will be cleaner, it will be stronger.

So we're doing all that we can do as a city. But as I mentioned, we've often turned to Washington asking just to give us a little bit of the help when we're used to it. I don't have to tell anyone in this congregation what's happening in Washington. It's not the best bet to turn to Washington nowadays.

So we turn to Albany. We say to those in Albany, we represent 43 percent of the population of the state here in New York City. We're asking for fairness. We're asking for a little help so we can still be an affordable city. So this great city that does so much for the whole state can continue to thrive.

Well, in the next three weeks, it is decision time in Albany. Three weeks where things are going to happen that will affect everyone in this extraordinary church, and your family members, and your friends, and your neighbors, and your coworkers. What happens in the next three weeks 150 miles north of here will affect us all for the long term.

Rent regulation, rent control, rent stabilization. One million units of housing, affecting over 2 million New Yorkers, almost one quarter of us, set to expire in three weeks. If Albany doesn't act, all that we know – rent stabilization and rent regulation – will end. The private market will take over, and the pace of displacement will be faster than anything we've ever seen before. Will we let that happen?

Audience: No.

Mayor: Will we let that happen?

Audience: No!

Mayor: In fact, we not only need to keep rent control and rent stabilization in place, we need to strengthen it. As I told you, we've lost two – over 200,000 units of affordable housing. I'm trying to replace all that was lost. But if rent regulation isn't strengthened, we will continue to lose.

Secondly, in Albany they're making a decision about a program that doesn't get a lot of attention. I'll tell you why it doesn't get a lot of attention. It's called 421-a. It is a tax break. It's a tax break that 30 or 40 years ago was put in place so people would develop in New York City when New York City was going through a lot of trouble, and it was very hard to build anything when no one wanted to be here. Well, guess what? Times changed.

As I mentioned, that gentrification, and all the other trends we're seeing. People want to be here. People pay a lot of money to be here. So you would imagine, we all in this room being common-sense people, we would imagine that if there was a tax break once upon a time, in the bad days so the developers would create housing, that when the good times came and prices were high and the market was booming, of course that tax break would be gone, right? Well, common sense does not rule the day. There is still at this moment, by state law, a tax break for those who build luxury condominiums. Now, do you think your tax dollars should go to fund luxury condominiums?

Audience: No.

Mayor: I didn't think so. We have proposed that Albany act. We have proposed an end to all tax breaks for luxury condominium development. We have proposed that Albany act and say that any time we give a tax credit, we must have affordable housing in return for that tax credit.

[Applause]

And not just some places, literally in every neighborhood and every borough. My message to the developers is a simple one. The law should say this – if you want a tax credit, give us affordable housing. If you're not giving us affordable housing, no tax credit for you. It's as simple as that. That seems to be fair.

Albany has a chance to act on that. Three weeks, they have a chance to make a difference. If they pass the reforms that I have proposed, here's what would happen – we would save taxpayers roughly $1.3 billion dollars because we wouldn't be giving away our tax dollars for luxury housing. And what would we do with that – that $1.3 billion? We could create enough affordable housing for 65,000 of our fellow New Yorkers. That difference – think about that. 65,000 people could know that they could live in their neighborhood, live in their city they love.

And I'll – I'll conclude in one moment, but I got to tell you one more piece because I think you'll find it interesting. I also think that people who can afford a luxury condo should be able to afford a little more in taxes so we could build even more affordable housing.

[Applause]

Now, we start by saying if you're going to pay $1,750,000 dollars for a condo, we're going to ask you for 1 percent tax. That money goes to affordable housing. If you're going to pay $5 million dollars for a condo, and brothers and sisters, there are a lot of people right now – just think about this for a minute. $5 million dollars for a condo apartment. That's happening every single day, particularly in Manhattan. We ask them to pay 1.5 percent in taxes so we can create affordable housing now. There are $10 million dollar condos we have sold in this city. There is a $100 million dollar condo that was sold recently in this city. I think those individuals can afford a little more so we can build affordable housing.

[Applause]

Again, our friends in Albany have an opportunity to make a decision. They have three weeks to do it. If they agree with me, we would be able to build with the money we get from that very modest tax on the most wealthy, we would get almost $200 million dollars a year, enough to build 37,000 affordable units. That is enough for 95,000 New Yorkers. Put those two ideas together – the one I mentioned before about 421-a, the one I'm telling you about now, this tax that we call a mansion tax because it's only on the most expensive homes. You put those two plans together, that is enough housing for 160,000 people. That would change the lives of people in this room, in this sacred place, and many others you know. And that is what is hanging in the balance.

So, let's just imagine Albany thinks about it and says, okay, we want 160,000 people to have affordable housing. We don't want to keep giving money away for luxury condos. We want to ask those who have done well to help us. Albany can do all that with the stroke of a pen and set us on a good course.

But we've been disappointed before. We are not blind. We're not blind to petty politics. We're not blind to the games people play. So what if Albany says no? What if they say, no, we're not going to do any of that. That is a slap in the face of every New Yorker who is hanging on by a thread to the housing they have in this city. That's a slap in the face to everyone who wants to stay in their neighborhood and knows they may be priced out. And we shouldn't stand for that. We should not stand for the notion that two million New Yorkers have to worry right now whether their rent controlled or rent stabilized apartment will still be rent controlled or rent stabilized a month from now. And it will be a slap in the face to every one of them if those laws aren't not only renewed, but strengthened.

So I will conclude with this – I'm going to ask for your help. You will hear excuses from Albany. I've been particularly surprised to hear the governor say it's too late to make these changes. Brothers and sisters, it's not too late. Three weeks is a lifetime in Albany, New York. There's plenty of time to make these changes. The proposals are on the table, they've been vetted, they're ready to go. They've been acted on before. It's time.

I've heard the governor say it's too hard to get these things done. No, not when the people demand it. Not when we've proven it will work and be fair to people struggling to find decent housing. I've heard the governor say not everyone agrees. Well, guess what? Not everyone agrees on lots of things. But it doesn't stop us from moving forward as a city and a state. Sometimes it takes leadership. I have seen many tough things done by this governor. I've seen many tough things done by other leaders. Sometimes we say that people need our help and it is time to act. We don't care about the special interests. We care about the interests of the people. And that's – that's the chance we have to get things right. And your voices will matter. Your voices will be heard in Albany. I urge you to let your voices be heard.

Finally, I want to offer a quote from Corinthians because I think it epitomizes the simple clarity of what we're trying to achieve right now. "Right now you have plenty and can help those who are in need. Later, they will have plenty and can share with you when you need it. In this way, things will be equal." Scripture teaches us many, many things. Sometimes it reminds us there's something more fundamental than politics and posturing. It reminds us we're here for each other, and our government should be as good as all of us.

I thank you for this opportunity to be with you. I thank you for all you do to make your community strong. I join with you to fight to make sure your community will be here for everyone for years to come. We've had 168 years in this congregation. Let's have us 168 morem and more beyond that where people of every kind, hardworking people, can actually live in the community they love. Thank you. God bless you.

###

From: B
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 11:12 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Sermon today

Much appreciated. Now structure all that thinking into how I can say things better

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Sunday, May 31, 2015 11:06 PM
To: B; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Sermon today

Just listened to the audio. Very well done.

I love when you talk about the good & bad of gentrification as the scene-setter. I think people readily acknowledge & understand that - and it's a way to keep them listening for more.

Also really liked how you talked about 421a - recaptured the high ground on the CITY demanding more from developers - and ALBANY being the ones who refuse to act.

I always dig the mention of the tenant protection initiative. Might beef that up a tad in the future to offer more color. Predatory landlords are screwing with your heat & hot water, failing to make repairs - not just out of negligence, but to drive struggling people OUT so they can get rich folks IN. It's all about profits - and it's wrong. The landlords used to always win because they had money & lawyers - and regular folks couldn't go to housing court. The City is changing that - giving you a free lawyer so you can fight back.

Loved the juxtaposition of the million-dollar condos & the millions affected by rent regulations (and so did the crowd, it seemed). Just the other day, a foreign family bought a $95 million dollar apartment in Manhattan. It's lunacy.

It occurs to me that we should go back to our soy latte from Starbucks example - showing in real terms how these rich folks can pay a pittance more to help fund affordable housing that so many people so desperately need.

I also think we should work in either some real-life stories, or - just as good - some parables. I'm thinking of the May 2013 TOTC speech where the Wall Street guy was rushing out the lobby of his doorman apartment to the boardroom downtown where he'd figure out how to make millions that morning - at the same time the single mother was rushing through the turnstile of the subway with her children in tow, trying to get them to school before she started the first of the three jobs she'd work that day.

We know from the research that the numbers are powerful - 200K units/500K people, etc - but the parables really make it sing.

It also strikes me that we need to ratchet up the villain in all of this. To some extent, it's Albany & politics as usual & the Governor playing games. But people will always ask why - and we should remind them of the gobs of money that the well-heeled and well-connected dump into lobbying Albany - just so they can keep the status quo. We don't have to specifically call out developers (and probably shouldn't for another few days) - but there's a reason that developers and Wall Street pours millions upon millions into campaign accounts. It's certainly not for good government.

We also need a couple of catchy lines - something akin to the billionaire hedge funder paying a lower rate of tax than the guy who pilots his private jet or the woman who cleans his summer home.

The only critique I have is that you need to wind things up a little more succinctly - build to a crescendo & then drop the mic. That will be a lot easier to do once we get you the parables & one-liners...

But I was really happy with the performance.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: O'Malley/ vision
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 2:48:31 PM

Passed along without comment!

<http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/08/06/AR2007080601158.html>

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Monday, June 01, 2015 2:47 PM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil; Gunaratna, Mahen; Leopold, Elana; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: O'Malley/ vision

Sir,

As you know, O'Malley launched his presidential campaign. Here is what is posted on his website in terms of his platform at this stage.

Thanks,
Andrea

FIGHT FOR BETTER WAGES

Americans are working harder but earning less than they did 12 years ago, and wealth has concentrated in the hands of the very few as almost never before. We must fight for better wages for all workers, so that Americans can actually live on what they earn. That means raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour, increasing the threshold for overtime pay to $1,000 a week, and restoring workers' collective bargaining power.

BRING ACCOUNTABILITY TO WALL STREET

Despite the 2008 meltdown on Wall Street, just five banks still control half of the industry's $15 trillion in assets, and not a single executive was ever convicted of a crime. We must reinstate Glass-Steagall, empower regulators to hold law-breakers accountable, and break up big banks before they break us. We need stronger protections for American families, not billion-dollar banks.

EXPAND EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY FOR THE NEXT GENERATION

Our country was built on the belief that no matter who you are or where you were born, your hard work should pay off. But for too many of our children, that promise is out of reach from the very start. We must close the gap by making access to safe and affordable childcare and pre-K universal, and college debt-free for all. We should also modernize high school, empowering every student to graduate with a year of college credit, an apprenticeship, or a certificate or credential for a high-pay, high-skill job.

STRENGTHEN OUR CITIES AND COMMUNITIES

It has been decades since we embraced a real agenda for American cities and communities. Our country was not built on tax cuts; it was built on better choices, made for the common good. To make our communities more competitive and more equal, we must return to those better choices—from historic investments in infrastructure and mass-transit, to ensuring that every family has access to quality, affordable housing near good jobs and good schools.

SUPPORT WOMEN AND FAMILIES

We have an economy where too many Americans must choose between pursuing their careers and caring for their children. We have to do more to make sure that women are treated fairly and compensated equally in the workplace. Maternity leave, paternity leave, equal pay, and safe and affordable child care are not luxuries. They are the hallmarks of a strong, inclusive economy—because when women succeed, America succeeds.

BREAK DOWN BARRIERS THAT KEEP FAMILIES IN POVERTY

It should be unacceptable that—without safety net programs—one in three American families would live in poverty. Yet, far too many Americans, including 16 million children, are locked in a cycle of poverty today. We should set a bold goal of cutting poverty in half within 10 years—and meet it through greater investments in communities, public education, critical programs like the Earned Income Tax Credit that help families get and stay on their feet.

REFORM OUR IMMIGRATION SYSTEM

Bringing undocumented immigrants out of the shadows will grow our economy, expand our tax base, create jobs and lift wages—benefiting our country as a whole. We must boldly advance comprehensive immigration reform, while also using executive action to its full authority to end unnecessary detentions and expand deferred action. As Americans, when refugee children arrive on our doorstep, we shouldn't turn them away—we should act like the generous, compassionate people we are.

PROTECT THE DIGNITY OF RETIREMENT

We can't grow our economy if we resign a whole generation of our citizens to spending their golden years living in poverty. And we know for a fact that 401(k)s won't leave enough for many seniors to live on in retirement, especially after Wall Street's meltdown took its toll on families' savings. Rather than reducing Social Security benefits or privatizing them, we must expand benefits so all of our seniors can retire with dignity.

LAUNCH A JOBS AGENDA FOR THE CLIMATE CHALLENGE

Clean, renewable sources of energy represent one of the biggest economic opportunities in a century. And the threat of climate change is real and immediate. We must make better choices for a more secure and independent energy future—by limiting carbon emissions, setting renewable energy targets, driving innovation, seeding new industries, and creating good local jobs.

RESTORE COMPETITION TO OUR ECONOMY

The largest corporations have become more powerful than ever, smothering open competition, and shipping jobs and profits abroad. We need 21st century economic solutions that empower family businesses, entrepreneurs, and consumers to keep wealth within their communities, instead of sending it away to the top one percent. This should start with aggressive enforcement of our anti-trust laws. We must also say “no” to bad trade deals that would further benefit the largest corporations, while costing American workers their jobs.

PUT ELECTIONS BACK IN THE HANDS OF AMERICAN VOTERS

Restoring our economy requires us to revitalize our democracy. We must return to a government of, by, and for the people—one that builds an economy that works for everyone and ensures voters' voices are heard. While fixing the Citizens United decision is important, we can't afford to wait for a Constitutional amendment to solve the problem of out-of-control money in our political system.

We should start by embracing citizen-funded elections, to reduce the outsized influence of special interests and the very wealthy in our politics. Small donors should have their contributions matched by six-to-one or more, and be rewarded through a refundable tax credit that encourages more people to give and participate. And we should make it easier, not harder, to vote – by modernizing registration, restoring the Voting Rights Act, and tearing down barriers like ID requirements that make it difficult for people to exercise their most fundamental right.

INSIST ON TRANSPARENT, ACCOUNTABLE, HIGH-PERFORMING GOVERNMENT

We must have a clearer view of the most important things our government is trying to accomplish and why. This requires clear goals that reflect what we actually value as a nation. But above all, it means our government must precisely measure its progress, and present that information in an accessible, transparent way to the public. We can use this smarter and more efficient way of governing to fight against the sway of beltway lobbyists and special interests – and to build a better government focused on delivering real, measurable results for its people.

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Carey, Michael
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: Mayor's Event Briefing- TPA Taping
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 4:38:53 PM
Attachments: Mayor's Event Briefing- TPA Taping.doc

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: JDC

EVENT: Taping of Progressive Video

MISSION/GOAL: Amplify TPA movement and values

DAY/DATE: Wednesday, June 3, 2015

EVENT TIME: 5:00-5:30 PM

MBDB TIME: 5:00-5:30 PM

LOCATION:

CONTACT: JDC

STAFF ASSIGNED TO MBDB:

EVENT SET-UP/PROGRAM:

- YOU will have a 7-8 minute interview(either 1 long segment or broken into 2 segments)
- Possibility he will request YOU to stay for 10 additional minutes to do an interview for the Website

Topics:

- TPA, progressive agenda and the conference YOU organized in D.C.
- Education
- Crime in NYC

Other guests this week:

- General Stanley McChrystal
- Melissa McCarthy
- Steve Buscemi

Last show: August 6, 2015
New host: Trevor Noah (South African)

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Background: TPA is the pitched topic

- His recent shows indicate continued interest in SQF and police/community relations/NYC safety
- He also tends to focus on gaffes (inadvertently copying reporter on email; lateness)
- He may mention traveling outside NYC and the so-called “controversy”
- Jon is personally committed to Veterans issues and is helping Veterans get jobs in the film/entertainment industry]

Videos to watch: Rand Paul
Hillary Clinton v. Bernie Sanders
Democaplyse

MAIN POINTS TO LAND:

- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.
- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities across this country for a $15 dollar minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.
- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Transitions

- There's no reason that a multi-millionaire sitting by the pool at their beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the woman who cleans their home.

Key Stats/ Examples

- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things: 1) more investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and 2) more revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, put a 5% surcharge on income earned over a million bucks, etc).
- President Obama said something interesting the other day. He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.
- In my city, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. They're demanding it from the grass roots.

Off Topic

On Travel

- The fight to lift up struggling New Yorkers, and to help rebuild New York's middle class, doesn't end at the borders of my city.

Mayoral Control—paint doomsday picture of turning back the clock:

- Couldn't do pre-K, after-school expansion, Renewal Schools
- All the positive momentum will come to a halt—higher attendance, higher graduation rates, safer campuses
- We couldn't even appoint a Chancellor, we couldn't hire or fire superintendents
- 71 CEOs of the city's top companies sent State leaders a letter last week demanding mayoral control be renewed for economic future

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Cuomo/ MBdB relationship

- Worked with Gov Cuomo for years protecting and building housing for low-income New Yorkers. Now, with the homes of 2 million New Yorkers in the balance, we need him to stand up. If he simply extends the status quo, tens of thousands of families will be forced out of their homes.

Safety

- Overall crime is down and NYC is one of the country's safest big cities
- There are often incidents going into Spring/Summer - saw it last year as well - and we closed the year with record lows
- Working with PD and always tailoring our approach
- Our reforms to SQF have cut down lower quality stops and lead to more time for quality policing- Peace dividend
- Will continue to reform SQF so it leads to enforcement and quality stops

SQF

- SQF are down 53% from last year.
- 11,276 stops so far in 2015 compared to 23,979 at this time in 2014.
- In 2014, SQF dropped nearly 76% percent compared to the previous year.

Shootings/Safety—Aggressively Tackling

- Narrow, gang-driven activity responsible for small uptick localized in a handful of precincts—just like last year's brief surge in public housing, we're deploying targeted resources to address it.
- Police have tools they've never had before—new tech/tablets, retraining, shot spotter
- We are down 2,500 crimes in NYC, a 7 percent decrease in overall to date compared to last year, also see decreases in housing and transit crime

Marijuana policy

- Marijuana-related arrests are down 47% in NYC compared to last year
- We are implementing a smart policy that keeps New Yorkers safe but is also more fair to our residents.
- The administration and NYPD are continuing to implement meaningful reforms that bring police and community closer together.

Rikers reform/ Mass Incarceration

- We are making significant and important progress to move Rikers from a culture of violence to a culture of safety—and meaningful reform takes time.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

- Our 14-point Anti-Violence Initiative is aimed directly at reducing violence and improving the quality of life for staff and inmates alike.
- We recently committed to safely cutting the population on Rikers by reducing case delays and reforming the summons process.
- Reference FLONYC work on mental health
- [Rikers reform examples = ending punitive segregation for 16 and 17 year olds, opening Enhanced Supervision Housing, increasing programming to reduce idleness]

Possible Questions

TPA and presidential

- Don't you think you should stick to your day job?
- So will you endorse Bernie Sanders?
- Was this all just a "wink-wink" "nod-nod" for Hillary?
- What do you think of O'Malley?
- How do you respond to critics that the progressive agenda is a "white, liberal" agenda?

Crime

- 1 year in and NYC is going to s. Does this prove SQF works?
- Should I be scared to go to Central Park?

Education

- What's going on with you and Cuomo?

BACKGROUND

NYT on Jon Stewart's Veterans Work

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

During the surge in Iraq in 2008, Nathan Witmer led an Army scout platoon in a thicket of villages rife with insurgents and roadside bombs. What he really wants to do is direct.

Or maybe write — or produce.

“Anything with movies was always the dream,” said Mr. Witmer, who left active duty in 2010.

Like many troops leaving the military, he was steered instead toward jobs in government agencies that offered preferential hiring or with big corporations that recruited veterans, and he assumed his hope of working in show business would remain only that.

But after selling medical equipment for two years, he had the chance to join a five-week industry boot camp designed to bring young veterans into the television business. To his surprise, it was run by one of the Iraq war’s fiercest critics, Jon Stewart, the longtime host of Comedy Central’s “The Daily Show.”

“It was actually inspirational,” said Mr. Witmer, who went on to work at Fox News and then found a job as a “Daily Show” associate field segment producer. “We hear ‘Thank you for your service’ all the time, but here was concrete action, people working to really make a difference. And it changed lives. I’m proof of that.”

“The Daily Show” developed the program over the last three years without publicizing it, but now, because Mr. Stewart is preparing to leave the show, he has taken it into the open, urging other shows to develop their own programs to bring more veterans into the industry.

“This is ready to franchise. Please steal our idea,” Mr. Stewart said in an interview at his Manhattan studio recently. “It isn’t charity. To be good in this business you have to bring in different voices from different places, and we have this wealth of experience that just wasn’t being tapped.”

Veterans are less likely to struggle to find work after war — their unemployment rate has been lower than the comparable civilian rate for years — but few land in the entertainment industry, according to the industry group Veterans in Film and Television.

Karen Kraft, a board member of the group, which tries to draw more veterans into the industry, said the small number of military veterans in show business was partly because military service supplanted the years of internships and entry-level jobs often required to establish a beachhead in the industry. The phenomenon may also be connected to a cultural divide that has kept quirky, left-leaning Hollywood and the high-and-tight world of the military from connecting.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

“Sometimes people want to apologize for being in the military out here; it’s so misunderstood,” Ms. Kraft, a former soldier who became a producer in Los Angeles, said of Hollywood. “It’s a creative industry, and they tend to see military people as a bunch of rule followers.”

Efforts to bring veterans into the field have included workshops by the Writers Guild of America and projects by big-name producers and directors, among them Bruce Cohen and Judd Apatow, that involve young veterans.

Mr. Stewart may at first seem an unexpected bridge for a Hollywood-military divide. For years the host built his audience by playing straight man to the often absurd truths of the global “war on terror,” serving up scathing satire on American involvement in the Middle East in his longstanding segments “Mess o’Potamia” and “Crisis in Israfighyianonanaq.” At the same time, though, he has been an advocate for troops, visiting the wounded at hospitals, visiting Arlington National Cemetery and in 2011 doing a comedy tour of bases in Afghanistan.

“I knew I had very strong opinions about what we were doing over there, and I wanted to visit the individuals who were part of the effort to gain a perspective on it,” Mr. Stewart said. He added: “Most of all, I realized it was unbelievably hot, nothing but sand. I knew we were nation-building there. I didn’t realize we were nation-building on Mars.”

In 2013, American Corporate Partners, a mentoring nonprofit group, asked Mr. Stewart to take a veteran under his wing and help find that person a job in television, which involved making a few calls.

“Jon said he wanted to help, but wanted to do more than just drop his name,” said Sid Goodfriend, who runs the program.

Instead, the staff of “The Daily Show” developed an intense five-week immersion program to give veterans a crash course in their business, with behind-the-scenes looks at areas including talent booking and editing.

They put out word to veterans’ groups but did not mention that the boot camp was at “The Daily Show,” an attempt to weed out fans and focus instead on veterans who really wanted to work in the industry.

“There are well-worn channels into this industry that are closed off to veterans,” Mr. Stewart said. “You get into the television industry generally by going to certain colleges known for having good television programs, getting internships and getting to know people who work in the industry. A lot of veterans never had that opportunity because they were busy at war. This is a way to give them that chance.”

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

He added that the veterans he had hired had been assets and “way less whiny” than most of his hires.

“The Daily Show” created a program to offer the benefits of an internship — experience and connections — in a form that veterans working full-time jobs could accommodate. Each class of 24 meets once a week in the evening. The program ends with a career fair that has landed a handful of vets jobs in television.

One of them is Justine Cabulong, a former Marine lieutenant who served in Mongolia and Afghanistan and is now a production coordinator at “The Daily Show” — a job that among other things includes a brief comedy routine before the show that warns audience members that if they don’t remain seated and keep their phones turned off, they “will be detained.”

“I feel like the Marines was a good preparation for ‘The Daily Show,’ actually,” she said. “The show is high tempo; it’s pretty chaotic; you have to work together. We might be on the road, not be getting much sleep. But at the same time, it’s not a war zone here. No one is shooting at us. Yes, the printer might have just died, but we can call the printer guy.”

From: Leopold, Elana
To: Carey, Michael; de Alwis, Ronalie; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: MBDB: Prep for Daily Show
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 6:07:21 PM

We are delayed. Please stand by

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Prep will start in a min or so
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 6:36:35 PM

Folks exiting

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Leopold, Elana; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Daily Show Q&A
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 7:01:27 PM

Sir,

I understand we are doing the Daily Show prep by phone. Briefing memo is in your binder, but for your convenience below is the list of questions we've dreamed up to get us started. Topics Jon would like to touch on include: TPA, including the DC press conference, education, and crime in NY. Main points below

Possible Questions

TPA and presidential

Don't you think you should stick to your day job?
So will you endorse Bernie Sanders?
Was this all just a "wink-wink" "nod-nod" for Hillary?
What do you think of O'Malley?
How do you respond to critics that the progressive agenda is a "white, liberal" agenda?
When are you declaring your candidacy for president? Can I be your running mate?
What do you hope to accomplish with the Contract with America?
You've taken a lot of heat for traveling outside of NYC and for focusing on national issues.
Is Martin O'Malley progressive candidate you've been looking for?
Will you be at Hillary's campaign launch in NYC?

Crime

1 year in and NYC is going to s. Does this prove SQF works?
Should I be scared to go to Central Park?
Are we returning to the bad old days of crime?
Patriot Act expiration – is NYC safe? Are you worried about this?
Marijuana legalization? Will you go there?
Spike in shootings and murders – fear mongering by the media? NYP says you're 45% more likely to be murdered in de Blasio's Manhattan.
What are you doing to address gang crime?
Some people are saying that broken windows is your stop and frisk. How do you respond?
Let's talk about your relationship with the NYPD... It's been a tough year
Homelessness crisis – what are you doing about it?

Education

53K pre-K students – where do you go from there?
What's going on with you and Cuomo?

Miscellaneous

Pizza with a fork and knife? Still a thing?
You're fighting with everyone now these days, eh? HRC, Governor Cuomo, etc.?
Let's talk about your relationship with the press.
What do you really think about the New York Post?
Rolling Stone – do you really think New Yorkers don't understand what's going on here? Do you want to retract that statement?

Met Gala – really, couldn't attend it?

Staten Island --- Am with you on not wanting to go there... or some other snarky comment that might put you in hot water
Veterans/ Flag issue

Main points to land:

- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.
- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities across this country for a $15 dollar minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.
- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

Transitions

- There's no reason that a multi-millionaire sitting by the pool at their beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the woman who cleans their home.

Key Stats/ Examples

- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things: 1) more investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and 2) more revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, Buffett Rule, etc).
- President Obama said something interesting the other day. He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.
- In my city, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. They're demanding it from the grass roots.

Safety

- Overall crime is down and NYC is one of the country's safest big cities
- 7 Major index crimes, down 6.6% vs. this time last year
- There are often incidents going into Spring/Summer - saw it last year as well - and we closed the year with record lows
- Working with PD and always tailoring our approach
- Our reforms to SQF have cut down lower quality stops and lead to more time for quality policing- Peace dividend
- Will continue to reform SQF so it leads to enforcement and quality stops

SQF

- SQF are down 53% from last year.
- 11,276 stops so far in 2015 compared to 23,979 at this time in 2014.
- In 2014, SQF dropped nearly 76% percent compared to the previous year.

Shootings/Safety—Aggressively Tackling

- Narrow, gang-driven activity responsible for small uptick localized in a handful of precincts— just like last year's brief surge in public housing, we're deploying targeted resources to address it.
- Police have tools they've never had before—new tech/tablets, retraining, shot spotter
- We are down 2,500 crimes in NYC, a 7 percent decrease in overall to date compared to last year, also see decreases in housing and transit crime

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Wiley, Maya
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: COIB waiver request reconsideration letter Prim Katz 060115 ib.docx
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 7:16:07 PM
Attachments: COIB waiver request reconsideration letter Prim Katz 060115 ib.docx
ATT00001.txt

Can you review description of Hayley's role for accuracy? Need to send in the a.m.

Thanks

Dear Board Members:

On May 29, 2015, you denied a request for a waiver pursuant to New York City Charter Section 2604(e) to permit Rebecca Katz and Hayley Prim, employed with Hilltop Public Solutions LLC (“Hilltop”), to appear before the Office of the Mayor (the “Office”) on behalf of their firm’s client, the Campaign for One New York (“CONY”), within one year of their departure from the Office. In footnote 1 of that letter, you made clear that the determination did not address the question of whether Ms. Katz and Ms. Prim could appear before the Office if they were employed with CONY.

We are therefore seeking the Board’s opinion as to whether it would grant a waiver for Ms. Katz or Ms. Prim to appear before the Office were they employed by CONY and respectfully request the Board’s opinion, if possible, by June 5. The reason for the expedited request is that CONY has a commitment to carry out work to advance the interests of the City this month for which it needs to resolve the question of whether Ms. Prim or Ms. Katz may coordinate communications with the Office or whether it must consider other options for doing that.

Specifically, in May, Mayor de Blasio went to Washington to advocate for a series of policy priorities of interest to New Yorkers, including an increase in the minimum wage, paid family leave, and additional tax revenues to support investments that would address the current inequality crisis. CONY is currently engaged in time sensitive work to follow-up on the momentum created by that event and is working to support a day of action this month to amplify the Mayor’s earlier efforts. The Mayor’s Office needs to coordinate with CONY on the content of these activities to ensure accuracy and consistency in the presentation of information to the public and must make arrangements to do so one way or the other within the next week.

~~As~~ we noted in our request letter of April 2, 2015, CONY is a section 501(c)(4) non-profit corporation. It was established in coordination with Mayor de Blasio for the exclusive purpose of ~~to provide~~ providing the people of New York City with an opportunity to organize in support of the Mayor’s policy agenda and advocate on behalf of the City of New York.¹ ~~CONY has hired Hilltop Public Solutions (“Hilltop”) to provide communications and strategic support in advancing the non-profit’s work to support the Mayor’s agenda. Ms. Katz and Ms. Katz and Ms. Prim are employed by Hilltop where they do work for CONY as a client of Hilltop. In the coming days, she Ms. Prim will terminate her employment with Hilltop and join the staff of CONY as a full time employee. She will have no continuing employment relationship with Hilltop. Hilltop will continue to work with CONY as a client. Ms. Katz may consider doing the same and we are therefore asking for a conditional waiver for her as well should she choose to make that move.~~

We have previously noted that the Mayor’s Office has expressed a desire to communicate with Ms. Katz and Ms. Prim (on behalf of CONY) in order to align on priorities, explain relevant aspects of the Mayor’s agenda, and ensure that the information CONY disseminates accurately reflects that agenda. We requested a waiver for these communications only, making clear that we did not seek permission for Ms. Katz or Ms. Prim to be able to communicate with the Office on behalf of any other clients of Hilltop.

¹ See also, Letter from Conflicts of Interest Board to Lawrence D. Laufer, Conflicts of Interest Board Case No. 2013-899 (January 8, 2014) (recognizing the purpose of CONY as “advocating for New York City”).

In your guidance, you reasoned that such a waiver would be inappropriate due to the “the competitive advantage that might well accrue to Hilltop if two of its employees who would otherwise be barred from communicating for one year with employees of the Office of the Mayor would instead be permitted to communicate with the highest officials of the Mayor’s communications team.” In so reasoning, you made clear that notwithstanding Ms. Prim and Ms. Katz’s ultimate client being CONY, the relevant fact for conflicts purposes is that their immediate employer is Hilltop. You reason that “the resulting perception that Hilltop has favored access to City Hall would make harm to its competitors all too likely.”

~~[While we respectfully disagree with the Board’s conclusion, we request that it grant Ms. Prim a waiver to appear before the Office as an employee of CONY.]~~

~~If, however, the Board chooses not to reconsider, in light of the Board’s opinion, Ms. Prim is prepared to separate from Hilltop and join CONY as a CONY employee. Before she does so, however, since such a This move is necessary to permit would be undertaken in order to perform performs. Prim to do the work she left the Mayor’s Office intending to perform for CONY., we would like to confirm that the Board would view that situation differently and grant Ms. Prim a waiver to permit her to communicate with the Office on behalf of CONY.~~

We believe the reasoning in the Board’s May 29th letter should lead to the conclusion that ~~such~~ a waiver for Ms. Prim or Ms. Katz to communicate with the Office as employees of CONY would be appropriate. That is because CONY has neither clients nor for-profit competitors. Moreover, CONY is well understood to have a special relationship with the Mayor, having been founded in coordination with him, for the express purpose of supporting ~~his~~ the City and his agenda. There is therefore no chance that Ms. Prim’s or Ms. Katz’s communications with the Office on behalf of CONY would create any perception or reality that would either give CONY any competitive advantage or that didn’t already exist.

In addition, we believe ~~Ms. Prim’s~~ this request would meet the other criteria laid out by the Board in Advisory Opinion 94-15. In that opinion, the Board stated that in considering whether to grant a waiver it also considers “the relationship of the City to the public servant’s prospective employer” and “the benefits to the City (as opposed to the public servant) if the waiver were to be granted.” We note that in a January 8, 2014 letter the Board approved of the Mayor soliciting funds for CONY precisely because “the purpose of the Corporation lies in advocating for New York City.”

As such, we believe the Board has already found CONY to be both affiliated sufficiently with the City and operating in the City’s interests sufficiently to entitle the Mayor to fundraise on its behalf. We believe that same analysis suggests the City would benefit from strong communication and coordination with CONY and that that coordination would be advanced by having someone trusted by the Mayor who has relationships with Mayor’s Office such as Ms. Prim or Ms. Katz to be at CONY handling such communications.

Formatted: Font color: Auto

Formatted: Font color: Auto

Formatted: Font color: Auto

Formatted: Font color: Auto

Finally, as noted in our previous request but not yet addressed specifically by the Board, the desire to communicate with CONY and Ms. Katz and Ms. Prim as its representatives initiates from the Mayor's Office. Revolving door prohibitions have traditionally operated to bar former government officials from initiating contact with their former government offices on behalf of new private clients, thus giving those clients an undue advantage. That is not the situation here. Here, it is the government that wishes to coordinate with its former officials because they are working on matters of interest to the government.

We believe that impeding the Mayor's ability to seek advice from and coordination with his former advisors when they are working to advance the Mayor's agenda impairs his ability to best serve the interests of the City. We therefore respectfully request the Board grant conditional waivers to Ms. Prim and Ms. Katz to communicate with the Mayor's Office should either become an employee of CONY.

Finally, we note there is some time sensitivity to this request. As you know, the State Legislature is currently concluding its session in Albany with many issues important to the City still to be resolved. CONY is one of the entities advocating on behalf of the City's interests. Because CONY must now find a communications advisor immediately who can coordinate with the Mayor and communications personnel in City Hall and has asked Ms. Prim to therefore respond to their offer by June 5, we respectfully request that the Board provide advice regarding this letter by June 5 in order to permit Ms. Prim to make an important career decision by the deadline provided her and permit CONY to continue its work in support of the City of New York.

Sent from my iPhone

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael; de Alwis, Ronalie; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: RE: MBDB: Prep for Daily Show
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 7:39:14 PM

We're all on

-----Original Message-----

From: Leopold, Elana
Sent: Monday, June 01, 2015 7:38 PM
To: Carey, Michael; de Alwis, Ronalie; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: MBDB: Prep for Daily Show

Please dial in now

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmmedia.com\); Leopold, Elana
Subject: Stewart on Sanders
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 8:17:57 PM

This in WaPo today

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) formally announced his presidential campaign last week, and much of the coverage focused on how he is a socialist-leaning "long shot" and "loon." But Jon Stewart argued that Sanders just seems bizarre in relation to other candidates because he's actually being himself.

Sure, Sanders's hair might be a little wild, but that's just because he doesn't have someone telling him "you might want to comb your hair today, and tomorrow, make it a regular thing" like Hillary Clinton does. And, sure, he might speak about income inequality in front of sailboats, but at least he doesn't just adopt the accent of the region where he's speaking, like Clinton did speaking with a slight twang when she was in South Carolina last week, Stewart said.

"[W]e've all become so accustomed to stage-managed, focus-group-driven candidates that authenticity comes across as lunacy," he said.

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmmedia.com\); Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael
Subject: FW: Daily Show Q&A
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 8:33:28 PM

Below is the list of questions we've dreamed up to get us started. Topics Jon would like to touch on include: TPA, including the DC press conference, education, and crime in NY. Homebases below based on my review of the messages you've been consistently delivering in TPA events.

I'll get time to have you look at some videos tomorrow

Possible Questions

TPA and presidential

Don't you think you should stick to your day job?
So will you endorse Bernie Sanders?
Was this all just a "wink-wink" "nod-nod" for Hillary?
What do you think of O'Malley?
How do you respond to critics that the progressive agenda is a "white, liberal" agenda?
When are you declaring your candidacy for president? Can I be your running mate?
What do you hope to accomplish with the Contract with America?
You've taken a lot of heat for traveling outside of NYC and for focusing on national issues.
Is Martin O'Malley progressive candidate you've been looking for?
Will you be at Hillary's campaign launch in NYC?

Crime

1 year in and NYC is going to s. Does this prove SQF works?
Should I be scared to go to Central Park?
Are we returning to the bad old days of crime?
Patriot Act expiration – is NYC safe? Are you worried about this?
Marijuana legalization? Will you go there?
Spike in shootings and murders – fear mongering by the media? NYP says you're 45% more likely to be murdered in de Blasio's Manhattan.
What are you doing to address gang crime?
Some people are saying that broken windows is your stop and frisk. How do you respond?
Let's talk about your relationship with the NYPD... It's been a tough year
Homelessness crisis – what are you doing about it?

Education

53K pre-K students – where do you go from there?
What's going on with you and Cuomo?

Miscellaneous

Pizza with a fork and knife? Still a thing?
You're fighting with everyone now these days, eh? HRC, Governor Cuomo, etc.?
Let's talk about your relationship with the press.
What do you really think about the New York Post?
Rolling Stone – do you really think New Yorkers don't understand what's going on here? Do you want to retract that statement?

Met Gala – really, couldn't attend it?

Staten Island --- Am with you on not wanting to go there... or some other snarky comment that might put you in hot water

Veterans/ Flag issue

Main points to land:

- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.
- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities across this country for a $15 dollar minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.
- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

Transitions

- There's no reason that a multi-millionaire sitting by the pool at their beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the woman who cleans their home.

Key Stats/ Examples

- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things: 1) more investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and 2) more revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, Buffett Rule, etc).
- President Obama said something interesting the other day. He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.
- In my city, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. They're demanding it from the grass roots.

- Have to stiffen your backbone. 2013 Campaign example--- Called for pre-K tax, day later people resigned from finance committee. But this year 53K started pre-K.

Safety

- Overall crime is down and NYC is one of the country's safest big cities
- 7 Major index crimes, down 6.6% vs. this time last year
- There are often incidents going into Spring/Summer - saw it last year as well - and we closed the year with record lows. Narrow, gang-driven activity responsible for small uptick localized in a handful of precincts—just like last year's brief surge in public housing, we're deploying targeted resources to address it.
- Working with PD and always tailoring our approach
- Our reforms to SQF have cut down lower quality stops and lead to more time for quality policing- Peace dividend
- Will continue to reform SQF so it leads to enforcement and quality stops

SQF

- SQF are down 53% from last year.
- 11,276 stops so far in 2015 compared to 23,979 at this time in 2014.
- In 2014, SQF dropped nearly 76% percent compared to the previous year.

Shootings/Safety—Aggressively Tackling

- Narrow, gang-driven activity responsible for small uptick localized in a handful of precincts—just like last year's brief surge in public housing, we're deploying targeted resources to address it.
- Police have tools they've never had before—new tech/tablets, retraining, shot spotter
- We are down 2,500 crimes in NYC, a 7 percent decrease in overall to date compared to last year, also see decreases in housing and transit crime

Patriot Act (Stewart has been focused on this)

- The senate should pass the House bill
- We need to make sure law enforcement has every tool available to combat terrorism within the confines constitution
- The House of Representatives has arrived at a reasonable arrangement that protects the security, privacy, and constitutional rights of New Yorkers and all Americans
- I urge the Senate to expeditiously pass the House Bill and reinstitute the expired provisions of the Patriot Act with reforms

Don't Soul-Search. Stiffen Your Backbone.

Posted: 11/12/2014 10:00 am EST Updated: 11/16/2014 7:59 am EST

It's a time-honored tradition.

After months of covering the midterm elections through a prism of polls and tactics, pundits will shift their focus to the defeated party's so-called season of "soul-searching."

As a Democrat, I'm disappointed in last Tuesday's results. But as a progressive, I know my party need not search for its soul -- but rather, its backbone.

The truth is that the Democratic Party has core values that are very much in sync with most Americans.

We believe in taking dead aim at the income inequality that infects our communities -- from big cities like New York, to small towns and rural areas across the United States.

We believe that the wealthy should pay their fair share so we can lift people out of poverty and grow our middle class.

And we believe in rules that prevent big corporations and Wall Street banks from unraveling workers' pensions, suppressing employees' wages and benefits, and rigging the system to reward wealth instead of work.

This year, too many Democratic candidates lost sight of those core principles -- opting instead to clip their progressive wings in deference to a conventional wisdom that says bold ideas aren't politically practical.

To working people, it showed Democratic weakness -- a weak commitment to the change desperately sought by struggling families, and a weak alternative to a Republican philosophy that has held America back.

Bold, progressive ideas win elections.

Just ask Senator Al Franken, who has fought fearlessly to rein in Wall Street, and won by a larger margin on Tuesday than President Obama did in Minnesota in 2012.

Or Senator Jeff Merkley, who never backed away from his support for Obamacare -- a federal program that is already working to reduce income inequality, and promises to do more to address the inequality crisis than anything out of Washington in generations. Merkley won re-election in Oregon by six points more than Obama won that state in 2012.

Then there's Governor Jerry Brown, who cruised to re-election after championing -- and winning -- a millionaire's tax that dedicated funding to California's public schools.

And don't forget Governor Dan Malloy -- who was written off by so many in his re-election bid in Connecticut. Malloy raised taxes so he could invest more in education each year (at a time when other Governors were slashing education to close yawning budget gaps). Malloy passed earned sick time and a minimum wage hike. And in his re-election bid, he proudly stood alongside President Obama.

Malloy not only lived to tell about it on Tuesday, he increased his margin of victory in a rematch with his 2010 Republican opponent.

Critics will point to competitive Senate races in Kentucky, Arkansas, and North Carolina as places where such progressive policies would all but ensure Democrats' defeat.

Our question is: how would they know?

In those states, Democratic candidates didn't say much about progressive taxation, expanding health and retirement benefits, or implementing anti-poverty efforts like universal pre-k or affordable housing.

In Kentucky, more than 413,000 residents have signed up for Obamacare -- making it one of the program's most notable success stories. Arkansas had the nation's fourth highest poverty rate last year, at 19.7%. In North Carolina -- nearly 60% of three-and-four-year olds are not enrolled in pre-k. What were the Democratic candidates offering voters there?

We saw photo-ops with candidates firing their rifles of choice; witnessed rhetorical gymnastics about how different they were from Obama; and watched televised debates dominated by empty attacks on the Koch Brothers' influence on campaigns, rather than policies requiring billionaires like the Kochs to pay their fair share in taxes to fund programs benefiting working people.

I'm not blaming the individual candidates here. The strategies they employed are largely the making of Washington insiders who force-feed message points on candidates under threat of being written off by their national party infrastructure.

But we've tried it the Washington way time and time again -- and seen the result. It's time for a bold, new approach -- with campaign messages that are rooted in local concerns and core party principles; ideas that are morally just, intellectually honest, and sound public policy. In other words, a campaign plan that gives voters some credit, and has a real chance of success at the polls.

Acknowledging the need to address income inequality helps win elections. Want proof? Look at the Republicans. In several contests where the GOP prevailed last Tuesday, candidates spoke directly to voters' concerns on issues like poverty, wage equality, and underemployment.

And tackling inequality is not only good politics; it's good government.

In New York, progressive Democrats joined me in passing universal pre-k and an expansion of after-school programs. We are pursuing bold plans for building affordable housing. And we've taken decisive action to offer more people paid sick leave and living wages.

In Washington, Senator Elizabeth Warren and progressive Democrats have fought to better regulate the complex financial instruments at the heart of the 2008 fiscal meltdown, and have battled the big banks to allow students to refinance their college loans at current lower rates. And the fight against inequality isn't limited to blue states. Right now, there's a fierce battle being waged on behalf of pre-k in dark-red Indiana. In Kentucky, Governor Beshear maintains wide support and popularity after publicly championing the benefits of Obamacare to the state. Last week, voters in Arkansas, Alaska, Nebraska, and South Dakota approved ballot measures to increase the minimum wage.

So where do Democrats go from here?

The 2016 presidential election is two years off, but will have a huge impact on the lives of America's middle-class and poor. Democrats simply cannot rely on shifting demographics and a badly damaged Republican brand to hold the White House and help countless Americans who are struggling.

We must demonstrate, from coast to coast, that we are a party dedicated to lifting people out of poverty; one committed to building a bigger and more durable middle-class; one that is unafraid to ask a little more from those at the very top -- the wealthy individuals and big corporations who have not only rebounded from the depths of the Great Recession, but who've accumulated record new wealth.

This is a blueprint to revitalize the Democratic Party; to reenergize the everyday people whom we have always championed and stand up tall -- with a backbone of steel -- in what is sure to be a hard-fought contest for the direction our nation in 2016 and beyond.

Follow Bill de Blasio on Twitter: www.twitter.com/BilldeBlasio

Andrea Hagelgans

Office of the Mayor

Direct – 212.341.5372

Cell – 718.679.8965

ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; "John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)"; Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael
Subject: Stewart on Vets
Date: Monday, June 01, 2015 8:38:06 PM

One additional flag . Jon Stewart has announced a Vets Daily Show program and in recent days has been doing press on it. I doubt it will come up, but one question could be about the POW flag.

I've already asked Hatch to work something up with MOVA and other agencies that we can announce when Stewart prepares to leave the show in August as a tribute to him (and vets of course!)

NYT on Jon Stewart's Veterans Work

During the surge in Iraq in 2008, Nathan Witmer led an Army scout platoon in a thicket of villages rife with insurgents and roadside bombs. What he really wants to do is direct.

Or maybe write — or produce.

“Anything with movies was always the dream,” said Mr. Witmer, who left active duty in 2010.

Like many troops leaving the military, he was steered instead toward jobs in government agencies that offered preferential hiring or with big corporations that recruited veterans, and he assumed his hope of working in show business would remain only that.

But after selling medical equipment for two years, he had the chance to join a five-week industry boot camp designed to bring young veterans into the television business. To his surprise, it was run by one of the Iraq war's fiercest critics, Jon Stewart, the longtime host of Comedy Central's “The Daily Show.”

“It was actually inspirational,” said Mr. Witmer, who went on to work at Fox News and then found a job as a “Daily Show” associate field segment producer. “We hear ‘Thank you for your service’ all the time, but here was concrete action, people working to really make a difference. And it changed lives. I'm proof of that.”

“The Daily Show” developed the program over the last three years without publicizing it, but now, because Mr. Stewart is preparing to leave the show, he has taken it into the open, urging other shows to develop their own programs to bring more veterans into the industry.

“This is ready to franchise. Please steal our idea,” Mr. Stewart said in an interview at his Manhattan studio recently. “It isn't charity. To be good in this business you have to bring in different voices from different places, and we have this wealth of experience that just wasn't being tapped.”

Veterans are less likely to struggle to find work after war — their unemployment rate has been lower than the comparable civilian rate for years — but few land in the entertainment industry, according to the industry group Veterans in Film and Television.

Karen Kraft, a board member of the group, which tries to draw more veterans into the industry, said the small number of military veterans in show business was partly because military service supplanted the years of internships and entry-level jobs often required to establish a beachhead in the industry. The phenomenon may also be connected to a cultural divide that has kept quirky, left-leaning Hollywood and the high-and-tight world of the military from connecting.

“Sometimes people want to apologize for being in the military out here; it’s so misunderstood,” Ms. Kraft, a former soldier who became a producer in Los Angeles, said of Hollywood. “It’s a creative industry, and they tend to see military people as a bunch of rule followers.”

Efforts to bring veterans into the field have included workshops by the Writers Guild of America and projects by big-name producers and directors, among them Bruce Cohen and Judd Apatow, that involve young veterans.

Mr. Stewart may at first seem an unexpected bridge for a Hollywood-military divide. For years the host built his audience by playing straight man to the often absurd truths of the global “war on terror,” serving up scathing satire on American involvement in the Middle East in his longstanding segments “Mess o’Potamia” and “Crisis in Israfighyianonanaq.” At the same time, though, he has been an advocate for troops, visiting the wounded at hospitals, visiting Arlington National Cemetery and in 2011 doing a comedy tour of bases in Afghanistan.

“I knew I had very strong opinions about what we were doing over there, and I wanted to visit the individuals who were part of the effort to gain a perspective on it,” Mr. Stewart said. He added: “Most of all, I realized it was unbelievably hot, nothing but sand. I knew we were nation-building there. I didn’t realize we were nation-building on Mars.

In 2013, American Corporate Partners, a mentoring nonprofit group, asked Mr. Stewart to take a veteran under his wing and help find that person a job in television, which involved making a few calls.

“Jon said he wanted to help, but wanted to do more than just drop his name,” said Sid Goodfriend, who runs the program.

Instead, the staff of “The Daily Show” developed an intense five-week immersion program to give veterans a crash course in their business, with behind-the-scenes looks at areas including talent booking and editing.

They put out word to veterans’ groups but did not mention that the boot camp was at “The Daily Show,” an attempt to weed out fans and focus instead on veterans who really wanted to work in the industry.

“There are well-worn channels into this industry that are closed off to veterans,” Mr. Stewart said. “You get into the television industry generally by going to certain colleges known for having good television programs, getting internships and getting to know people who work in the industry. A lot of veterans never had that opportunity because they were busy at war. This is a way to give them that chance.”

He added that the veterans he had hired had been assets and “way less whiny” than most of his hires.

“The Daily Show” created a program to offer the benefits of an internship — experience and connections — in a form that veterans working full-time jobs could accommodate. Each class of 24 meets once a week in the evening. The program ends with a career fair that has landed a handful of vets jobs in television.

One of them is Justine Cabulong, a former Marine lieutenant who served in Mongolia and Afghanistan and is now a production coordinator at “The Daily Show” — a job that among other things includes a brief comedy routine before the show that warns audience members that if they don’t remain seated and keep their phones turned off, they “will be detained.”

“I feel like the Marines was a good preparation for ‘The Daily Show,’ actually,” she said. “The show is high tempo; it’s pretty chaotic; you have to work together. We might be on the road, not be getting much sleep. But at the same time, it’s not a war zone here. No one is shooting at us. Yes, the printer might have just died, but we can call the printer guy.”

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Monday, June 01, 2015 8:33 PM
To: B
Cc: Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmmedia.com); Leopold, Elana; Carey, Michael
Subject: FW: Daily Show Q&A

Below is the list of questions we’ve dreamed up to get us started. Topics Jon would like to touch on include: TPA, including the DC press conference, education, and crime in NY. Homebases below based on my review of the messages you’ve been consistently delivering in TPA events.

I’ll get time to have you look at some videos tomorrow

Possible Questions

TPA and presidential

Don’t you think you should stick to your day job?
So will you endorse Bernie Sanders?
Was this all just a “wink-wink” “nod-nod” for Hillary?
What do you think of O’Malley?
How do you respond to critics that the progressive agenda is a “white, liberal” agenda?
When are you declaring your candidacy for president? Can I be your running mate?
What do you hope to accomplish with the Contract with America?
You’ve taken a lot of heat for traveling outside of NYC and for focusing on national issues.
Is Martin O’Malley progressive candidate you’ve been looking for?
Will you be at Hillary’s campaign launch in NYC?

Crime

1 year in and NYC is going to s. Does this prove SQF works?

Should I be scared to go to Central Park?
Are we returning to the bad old days of crime?
Patriot Act expiration – is NYC safe? Are you worried about this?
Marijuana legalization? Will you go there?
Spike in shootings and murders – fear mongering by the media? NYP says you're 45% more likely to be murdered in de Blasio's Manhattan.
What are you doing to address gang crime?
Some people are saying that broken windows is your stop and frisk. How do you respond?
Let's talk about your relationship with the NYPD... It's been a tough year
Homelessness crisis – what are you doing about it?

Education

53K pre-K students – where do you go from there?
What's going on with you and Cuomo?

Miscellaneous

Pizza with a fork and knife? Still a thing?
You're fighting with everyone now these days, eh? HRC, Governor Cuomo, etc.?
Let's talk about your relationship with the press.
What do you really think about the New York Post?
Rolling Stone – do you really think New Yorkers don't understand what's going on here? Do you want to retract that statement?

Met Gala – really, couldn't attend it?

Staten Island --- Am with you on not wanting to go there... or some other snarky comment that might put you in hot water

Veterans/ Flag issue

Main points to land:

- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.

- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.

- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities across this country for a $15 dollar minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.

- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

Transitions

- There's no reason that a multi-millionaire sitting by the pool at their beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the woman who cleans their home.

Key Stats/ Examples

- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things: 1) more investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and 2) more revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, Buffett Rule, etc).
- President Obama said something interesting the other day. He pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more MORE than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the folks teaching our four and five year olds.
- In my city, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. They're demanding it from the grass roots.
- Have to stiffen your backbone. 2013 Campaign example--- Called for pre-K tax, day later people resigned from finance committee. But this year 53K started pre-K.

Safety

- Overall crime is down and NYC is one of the country's safest big cities
- 7 Major index crimes, down 6.6% vs. this time last year
- There are often incidents going into Spring/Summer - saw it last year as well - and we closed the year with record lows. Narrow, gang-driven activity responsible for small uptick localized in a handful of precincts—just like last year's brief surge in public housing, we're deploying targeted resources to address it.
- Working with PD and always tailoring our approach
- Our reforms to SQF have cut down lower quality stops and lead to more time for quality policing- Peace dividend
- Will continue to reform SQF so it leads to enforcement and quality stops

SQF

- SQF are down 53% from last year.
- 11,276 stops so far in 2015 compared to 23,979 at this time in 2014.
- In 2014, SQF dropped nearly 76% percent compared to the previous year.

Shootings/Safety—Aggressively Tackling

- Narrow, gang-driven activity responsible for small uptick localized in a handful of precincts—just like last year’s brief surge in public housing, we’re deploying targeted resources to address it.
- Police have tools they’ve never had before—new tech/tablets, retraining, shot spotter
- We are down 2,500 crimes in NYC, a 7 percent decrease in overall to date compared to last year, also see decreases in housing and transit crime

Patriot Act (Stewart has been focused on this)

- The senate should pass the House bill
- We need to make sure law enforcement has every tool available to combat terrorism within the confines constitution
- The House of Representatives has arrived at a reasonable arrangement that protects the security, privacy, and constitutional rights of New Yorkers and all Americans
- I urge the Senate to expeditiously pass the House Bill and reinstitute the expired provisions of the Patriot Act with reforms

Don't Soul-Search. Stiffen Your Backbone.

Posted: 11/12/2014 10:00 am EST Updated: 11/16/2014 7:59 am EST

It's a time-honored tradition.

After months of covering the midterm elections through a prism of polls and tactics, pundits will shift their focus to the defeated party's so-called season of "soul-searching."

As a Democrat, I'm disappointed in last Tuesday's results. But as a progressive, I know my party need not search for its soul -- but rather, its backbone.

The truth is that the Democratic Party has core values that are very much in sync with most Americans.

We believe in taking dead aim at the income inequality that infects our communities -- from big cities like New York, to small towns and rural areas across the United States.

We believe that the wealthy should pay their fair share so we can lift people out of poverty and grow our middle class.

And we believe in rules that prevent big corporations and Wall Street banks from unraveling workers' pensions, suppressing employees' wages and benefits, and rigging the system to reward wealth instead of work.

This year, too many Democratic candidates lost sight of those core principles -- opting instead to clip their progressive wings in deference to a conventional wisdom that says bold ideas aren't politically practical.

To working people, it showed Democratic weakness -- a weak commitment to the change desperately sought by struggling families, and a weak alternative to a Republican philosophy that has held America back.

Bold, progressive ideas win elections.

Just ask Senator Al Franken, who has fought fearlessly to rein in Wall Street, and won by a larger margin on Tuesday than President Obama did in Minnesota in 2012.

Or Senator Jeff Merkley, who never backed away from his support for Obamacare -- a federal program that is already working to reduce income inequality, and promises to do more to address the inequality crisis than anything out of Washington in generations. Merkley won re-election in Oregon by six points more than Obama won that state in 2012. Then there's Governor Jerry Brown, who cruised to re-election after championing -- and winning -- a millionaire's tax that dedicated funding to California's public schools. And don't forget Governor Dan Malloy -- who was written off by so many in his re-election bid in Connecticut. Malloy raised taxes so he could invest more in education each year (at a time when other Governors were slashing education to close yawning budget gaps). Malloy passed earned sick time and a minimum wage hike. And in his re-election bid, he proudly stood alongside President Obama.

Malloy not only lived to tell about it on Tuesday, he increased his margin of victory in a rematch with his 2010 Republican opponent.

Critics will point to competitive Senate races in Kentucky, Arkansas, and North Carolina as places where such progressive policies would all but ensure Democrats' defeat.

Our question is: how would they know?

In those states, Democratic candidates didn't say much about progressive taxation, expanding health and retirement benefits, or implementing anti-poverty efforts like universal pre-k or affordable housing.

In Kentucky, more than 413,000 residents have signed up for Obamacare -- making it one of the program's most notable success stories. Arkansas had the nation's fourth highest poverty rate last year, at 19.7%. In North Carolina -- nearly 60% of three-and-four-year olds are not enrolled in pre-k. What were the Democratic candidates offering voters there?

We saw photo-ops with candidates firing their rifles of choice; witnessed rhetorical gymnastics about how different they were from Obama; and watched televised debates dominated by empty attacks on the Koch Brothers' influence on campaigns, rather than policies requiring billionaires like the Kochs to pay their fair share in taxes to fund programs benefiting working people.

I'm not blaming the individual candidates here. The strategies they employed are largely the making of Washington insiders who force-feed message points on candidates under threat of being written off by their national party infrastructure.

But we've tried it the Washington way time and time again -- and seen the result. It's time for a bold, new approach -- with campaign messages that are rooted in local concerns and core party principles; ideas that are morally just, intellectually honest, and sound public policy. In other words, a campaign plan that gives voters some credit, and has a real chance of success at the polls.

Acknowledging the need to address income inequality helps win elections. Want proof? Look at the Republicans. In several contests where the GOP prevailed last Tuesday, candidates spoke directly to voters' concerns on issues like poverty, wage equality, and underemployment.

And tackling inequality is not only good politics; it's good government.

In New York, progressive Democrats joined me in passing universal pre-k and an expansion of after-school programs. We are pursuing bold plans for building affordable housing. And we've taken decisive action to offer more people paid sick leave and living wages.

In Washington, Senator Elizabeth Warren and progressive Democrats have fought to better regulate the complex financial instruments at the heart of the 2008 fiscal meltdown, and have battled the big banks to allow students to refinance their college loans at current lower rates. And the fight against inequality isn't limited to blue states. Right now, there's a fierce battle being waged on behalf of pre-k in dark-red Indiana. In Kentucky, Governor Beshear maintains wide support and popularity after publicly championing the benefits of Obamacare to the state. Last week, voters in Arkansas, Alaska, Nebraska, and South Dakota approved ballot measures to increase the minimum wage.

So where do Democrats go from here?

The 2016 presidential election is two years off, but will have a huge impact on the lives of America's middle-class and poor. Democrats simply cannot rely on shifting demographics and a badly damaged Republican brand to hold the White House and help countless Americans who are struggling.

We must demonstrate, from coast to coast, that we are a party dedicated to lifting people out of poverty; one committed to building a bigger and more durable middle-class; one that is unafraid to ask a little more from those at the very top -- the wealthy individuals and big corporations who have not only rebounded from the depths of the Great Recession, but who've accumulated record new wealth.

This is a blueprint to revitalize the Democratic Party; to reenergize the everyday people whom we have always championed and stand up tall -- with a backbone of steel -- in what is sure to be a hard-fought contest for the direction our nation in 2016 and beyond.

Follow Bill de Blasio on Twitter: www.twitter.com/BilldeBlasio

Andrea Hagelgans

Office of the Mayor

Direct – 212.341.5372

Cell – 718.679.8965

ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Adams, Marti
Subject: Re: Face the Nation
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 12:26:53 PM

I'd be for it, if you can secure an early taping AH

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 2, 2015 at 11:40 AM
To: "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Adams, Marti" <MAadams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Face the Nation

I'm sure I can push them for early taping

From: Carey, Michael
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 11:39 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil
Cc: Adams, Marti
Subject: RE: Face the Nation

Just flagging we have to be at Church in HARLEM by 945 AM.

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, June 2, 2015 11:38 AM
To: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil
Cc: Carey, Michael; Adams, Marti
Subject: Face the Nation

JDC/PW

Spoke to Rob (producer) at Face the Nation. This weekend is John Dickerson's first show as host. He would like MBdB on the program. It can be taped earlier in studio at 8:45 or 9 am in midtown. Topic would be TPA/ presidential race. HRC, republicans, income inequality. That is the broad brush they are giving me currently. 7minutes, would be front loaded in the line up.

I'll send him the info for review. Marti is pulling details on Dickerson's coverage on the election

Let me know your thoughts

Andrea Hagelgans

Office of the Mayor

Direct – 212.341.5372

Cell – 718.679.8965

ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: B
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: Update from Daily Show
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 12:35:40 PM

Need one of you from comms to review video with me or it just won't happen. Grab time now unless there is something else about to happen. MPC/EL, pls work out

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 12:04 PM
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com) <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Update from Daily Show

Sir,

Spoke with producer just now.

No joke sketches planned—while they loved the Israel video, no current plans to use it.

Topics remain Progressive Agenda, Crime in NYC and Education. Based on producer tone, I think crime will be a heavier part of the interview today than originally planned. I'm sending producers all our push back.

1 segment (6-7 minutes in length) with likelihood he will ask you to then stay for 10 more minutes for a web interview

I've sent the videos to your team to have them loaded up for your review when you have a moment

Karen and I will meet you there.

Thanks,
Andrea

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Carey, Michael; Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Cc: Adams, Marti
Subject: RE: Face the Nation
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 1:00:31 PM

eek

From: Carey, Michael
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 11:39 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil
Cc: Adams, Marti
Subject: RE: Face the Nation

Just flagging we have to be at Church in HARLEM by 945 AM.

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, June 2, 2015 11:38 AM
To: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil
Cc: Carey, Michael; Adams, Marti
Subject: Face the Nation

JDC/PW

Spoke to Rob (producer) at Face the Nation. This weekend is John Dickerson's first show as host. He would like MBdB on the program. It can be taped earlier in studio at 8:45 or 9 am in midtown. Topic would be TPA/ presidential race. HRC, republicans, income inequality. That is the broad brush they are giving me currently. 7minutes, would be front loaded in the line up.

I'll send him the info for review. Marti is pulling details on Dickerson's coverage on the election

Let me know your thoughts

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: Walzak, Phil; "John Del Cecato"; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 1:40:32 PM

ok

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 1:13 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: RE: <no subject>

Not here

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 9:18 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: <no subject>

Team TPA wanted to put this on the mayor's YouTube channel... (It's a little video summary of 5/12)... Do you guys have any problem with that?

https://www.dropbox.com/s/j5521tim55kmqmo/TPA_YT.mp4?dl=0

From: Leopold, Elana
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Please cc me on docs so I can flag for him
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 4:23:54 PM

Thanks!

Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Leopold, Elana
Subject: The Progressive Agenda
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 4:28:02 PM

1

Lift the Floor for Working People »

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails-- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.

2

Support Working Families »

- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit and protect and expand Social Security.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.

3

Tax Fairness »

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the "Buffett Rule" so millionaires pay their fair share.
- Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of "performance pay" write-offs.

From: John Del Cecato
To: R. Leopoldo Elana
Subject: TPA Signers
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 4:32:42 PM

Top Signers, in my humble opinion

Howard Dean
Jeff Merkley
Keith Ellison
Raul Grijalva
Richard Trumka
Mary Kay Henry
Toni Morrison
Tom Harkin
Janet Murguía
Marian Wright Edelman
Robert Reich
Steve Buscemi
Cynthia Nixon
Rev. Al Sharpton

Full list is below

SIGNERS OF THE PROGRESSIVE AGENDA TO COMBAT INCOME INEQUALITY

Steve Adler Mayor of Austin, TX	Eileen Appelbaum Senior Economist, Center for Economic and Policy Research	Dean Baker Co-Director, Center for Economic and Policy Research Robert Borosage Co-Director Campaign for America's Future
Ras Baraka Mayor of Newark, NJ Deepak Bhargava Executive Director, Center for Community Change Michael Brennan Mayor of Portland, ME Yvette Clarke U.S. Representative from New York Larry Cohen President, Communication Workers of America Robert Creamer Author, Partner at Democracy Partners Bill de Blasio Mayor of New York City Mark Dayton Governor of Minnesota Rosa DeLauro U.S. Representative from Connecticut Keith Ellison U.S. Representative from Minnesota Chaka Fattah U.S. Representative from Pennsylvania Lily Eskelsen García President, National Education Association Lisa Graves Executive Director, Center for Media and Democracy/PRWatch/ALECexposed.org Sarita Gupta Executive Director, Jobs with Justice Tom Harkin	Raven Brooks Executive Director, Netroots Nation Sheila Crowley President and CEO, National Low Income Housing Coalition Abigail E. Disney Filmmaker Leo Gerard President, United Steelworkers George Gresham President, 1199SEIU	Steve Buscemi Actor John Conyers U.S. Representative from Michigan Alan Cumming Actor Howard Dean Former Governor of Vermont & Founder, Democracy for America Maria Elena Durazo Vice President for Immigration, Civil Rights and Diversity, UNITE HERE! & Former President Los Angeles County Federation of Labor Jeff Faux Founder, Economic Policy Institute Danny Glover Actor Raúl Grijalva U.S. Representative from Arizona, Co-Chair Congressional Progressive Caucus Arshad Hasan

Former U.S. Senator from Iowa Rick Hegdahl	Wade Henderson	Executive Director, ProgressNow
Veteran Outreach Coordinator, VoteVets.org	President and CEO, Leadership Council on Civil and Human Rights
Betsy Hodges		Mary Kay Henry
Mayor of Minneapolis, MN Jeannette Huevo		President, Service Employees International Union Sheila Jackson Lee
Executive Director, United for a Fair Economy Van Jones	Barbara Lee	U.S. Representative from Texas
Co-Founder and President, Rebuild the Dream	U.S. Representative from California
Dave Loeb sack		Gabriela Lemus
U.S. Representative from Iowa Rudy López		President, Progressive Congress Mike Lux
Executive Director, Interfaith Worker Justice Chirlane McCray	Heather McGhee	Co-Founder and President, Progressive Strategies
First Lady of New York City	Executive Director, DEMOS
Jeff Merkley		Jim McGovern
U.S. Senator from Oregon Lawrence Mishel		U.S. Representative from Massachusetts Janet Murguia
President, Economic Policy Institute Edward B. Murray	Jerry Nadler	President and CEO, National Council of La Raza
Mayor of Seattle, WA	U.S. Congressman from New York
Karen Nussbaum		Cynthia Nixon
Executive Director, Working America Atima Omara		Actor James Parrott
President, Young Democrats of America Mark Pocan	Charles B. Rangel	Deputy Director and Chief Economist, Fiscal Policy Institute
U.S. Representative from Wisconsin, and 1st Vice-Chair Congressional Progressive Caucus Jean Ross	U.S. Representative from New York
Co-President, National Nurses United Mark Ruffalo		Robert Reich
Actor, Director, Producer & Activist Thomas A. Saenz		Chancellor's Professor of Public Policy at University of California at Berkeley & Former U.S. Secretary of Labor Jeff Sachs
President of Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund	Bill Samuels	Economist & Director of the Earth Institute at Columbia University
	Chairman, EffectiveNY
Lee Saunders		Susan Sarandon
President, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees	Libby Schaaf	Actress, Activist
	Mayor of Oakland, CA
Pedro Segarra		Jan Schakowsky
Mayor of Hartford, CT José Serrano		U.S. Representative from Illinois Reverend Al Sharpton
U.S. Representative from New York Judy Sheridan-Gonzalez, RN	Ilya Sheyman	Founder and President of National Action Network
President, New York State Nurses Association	Executive Director, MoveOn Political Action
D. Taylor		Hadar Susskind
President, UNITE HERE! Linda Tirado		Director, Bend the Arc Jewish Action Richard L. Trumka
Author & Founder, Bootstrap Industries Katrina vanden Heuvel	Craig Varoga	President, AFL-CIO
Editor, The Nation Randi Weingarten	President of Patriot Majority	Bonnie Watson Coleman

President, American Federation of Teachers
Michael Wessel

President, The Wessel Group
Marjorie E. Wood

PhD, Senior Associate, Global Economy
Project & Managing Editor, Inequality.org

Brad Woodhouse

President, Americans United for Change

U.S. Representative from New Jersey
Nan Whaley

Mayor of Dayton, Ohio

Marian Wright Edelman
Founder and President, Children's Defense Fund

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Leopold, Elana
Subject: TPA signers
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 4:34:08 PM

I think we leave Trumka out of the Daily Show discussion for now - just because we don't want to raise the issue of prevailing wage, etc.. More on that later...

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Debt-free college
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 4:36:23 PM

Here's something from Demos, who has pushed this very hard & is the only one to have really written something on it...

In a nutshell - it's about a federal-state matching program that ensures that students who can't afford massive debt are not saddled with such debt after they graduate...

=====

How a Federal-State Matching Program Could Work

An incentive grant will allow the federal government to use its leverage to encourage states to develop policies and plans to ensure the majority of poor-, working- and middle class-students can attend college without incurring debt or financial hardship.

Under the Affordable College Compact, a state's award—or state match—would be determined by the level of commitment it is willing to provide its students. Eligibility and funding would be determined on an annual basis, and Commitment funds would be required to be spent on higher education.

States would first be required to commit that higher education is a public good—in other words, that tuition revenue does not exceed revenue from state appropriations. This is historically consistent with public higher education in the U.S., and will prevent state institutions from excessively increasing tuition in tandem with federal help. Currently, this means that 26 states would be eligible, although any state that committed to higher education as a public good would immediately be eligible for the match.

Depending on the level of state commitment, states would then be eligible for one of two matching grants from the federal government. The first, a 20% match on every dollar spent on public higher education, would require that states maintain minimum per-student funding levels, and promise low-income students that their unmet financial need will make up a manageable portion of family income (or, no higher than the portion of income that high-income families pay).

The second level, a 60% match on every dollar spent on public higher education, would require that states simply commit to debt-free higher education for students at or below 300% of the poverty level, at both two- and four-year institutions. Four-year institutions would also be required to maintain enrollment levels for students eligible for Pell grants, and states would be required to publish better data on student outcomes at state institutions, as well as ensure that struggling borrowers who do take on student debt are provided with debt-relief options, including debt-for-service or refinancing programs.

Finally, any federal-state matching program should encourage more than a minimal effort at returning to a system of robust state investment. Therefore, each dollar committed above and beyond previous per-student funding levels should receive an additional 40% match.

Participating states should be encouraged to message such a commitment as a promise program—modeled off several promising experiments around the U.S.—that notify students and families very early in the educational process about the promise of free tuition and fees. However, this program would go further, promising debt-free higher education—encompassing not just tuition and fees but living expenses as well.

Reinvestment would impact more than just affordability, of course. Higher levels of support for higher education could prevent current phenomenon—particularly at two-year institutions—of not offering classes required for graduation or transfer, or hiring contingent faculty while eliminating full-time teaching positions.

Tackling this problem will require shared responsibility between students, states, and the federal government. Thus, we propose a new federal matching grant program to kickstart reinvestment in a way that makes a fundamental promise to the low- and middle-income students with college aspirations: If you work hard, your state will commit to making the cost of college manageable and prevent the need to take on loans.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Expanding Social Security
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 4:40:19 PM

I don't think we need to go so far as saying we'd SCRAP the cap - but having rich folks pay a little more into Social Security so that benefits can be expanded for seniors who really need help should be sufficient...

Here's what Robert Reich says (which is further than we need to go, in my view):

We can afford to increase Social Security benefits, as well as help ensure the solvency of Social Security, by eliminating the cap on income subject to Social Security taxes.

Unlike the Medicare payroll tax that everyone pays as a small portion of their total incomes, the Social Security payroll tax is capped. Any income over $118,500 this year is exempt from it. Which means a billionaire pays the same Social Security payroll tax as someone earning $118,500.

This isn't fair and it's not sensible. Billionaires and millionaires should pay just like everyone else.

Scrap the cap, and not only is Social Security more secure for you and your kids, but it will be able to pay out even more benefits in your retirement.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Mass incarceration
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 4:46:45 PM

In a nutshell, I think we mention reforming the law surrounding minor crimes (like you've already done on marijuana), stop and frisk reform, sentencing reform, etc...

Van Jones doesn't have any legislation (that I can find) that he's advocating...

Here's what the Brennan Center says...

The Brennan Center seeks to reduce mass incarceration through policy and legal reforms to create a more rational system that protects public safety and communities. The Center seeks to eliminate the criminalization of minor behavior, reform selective enforcement policies, institute a proportional system of punishment, and holding all actors in the criminal justice system accountable by ensuring that government dollars are spent on effective, evidence-based programs.

And here is what a couple of progressive advocates wrote in the NYT recently (as a guest column):

How to Lock Up Fewer People

Photo

Credit Eiko Ojala

WHEN Hillary Rodham Clinton, Ted Cruz, Eric H. Holder Jr., Jeb Bush, George Soros, Marco Rubio and Charles G. Koch all agree that we must end mass incarceration, it is clear that times have changed. Not long ago, most politicians believed the only tenable stance on crime was to be tougher than the next guy.

Today, nearly everyone acknowledges that our criminal justice system needs fixing, and politicians across the spectrum call for reducing prison sentences for low-level drug crimes and other nonviolent offenses. But this consensus glosses over the real challenges to ending mass incarceration. Even if we released everyone imprisoned for drugs tomorrow, the United States would still have 1.7 million people behind bars, and an incarceration rate four times that of many Western European nations.

Mass incarceration can be ended. But that won't happen unless we confront the true scale of the problem.

A hard-nosed skeptic would tell you that fully half the people in state prisons are serving time for violent offenses. And most drug offenders behind bars are not kids caught smoking a joint, but dealers, many with multiple prior convictions. We already have about 3,000 drug courts diverting those who need it to treatment rather than prison. Recidivism remains astonishingly high for those we release from prison, so releasing more poses real risks. And criminal law is primarily enforced by the states, not the federal government, so this is not a problem the next president can solve.

To move beyond symbolic sound bites to real progress, we need to address each of these objections in turn.

It's true that half the people in state prisons are there for a violent crime, but not all individuals convicted of violent crimes are alike. They range from serial killers to minor players in a robbery and battered spouses who struck back at their abusers. If we are going to end mass incarceration, we need to recognize that the excessively long sentences we impose for most violent crimes are not necessary, cost-effective or just.

We could cut sentences for violent crimes by half in most instances without significantly undermining deterrence or increasing the threat of repeat offending. Studies have found that longer sentences do not have appreciably greater deterrent effects; many serious crimes are committed by people under the influence of alcohol or drugs, who are not necessarily thinking of the consequences of their actions, and certainly are not affected by the difference between a 15-year and a 30-year sentence.

For the same conduct, we impose sentences on average twice as long as those the British impose, four times longer than the Dutch, and five to 10 times longer than the French. One of every nine people in prison in the United States is serving a life sentence. And some states have also radically restricted parole at the back end. As a result, many inmates are held long past the time they might pose any threat to public safety.

Offenders “age out” of crime — so the 25-year-old who commits an armed robbery generally poses much less risk to public safety by the age of 35 or 40. Yet nearly 250,000 inmates today are over 50. Every year we keep older offenders in prison produces diminishing returns for public safety. For years, states have been radically restricting parole; we need to make it more readily available. And by eliminating unnecessary parole conditions for low-risk offenders, we can conserve resources to provide appropriate community-based programming and supervision to higher-risk parolees.

It’s true that most individuals incarcerated for a drug offense were sellers, not just users. But as a result of mandatory sentencing laws, judges often cannot make reasonable distinctions between drug kingpins and street-corner pawns. We ought to empower judges to recognize the difference, and to reduce punishment for run-of-the-mill offenders, who are often pursuing one of the few economic opportunities available to them in destitute communities. The single most important thing we can do is provide meaningful work opportunities to the most disadvantaged.

There are already drug courts in many American communities, and studies show they can reduce substance abuse without incarceration. But the criteria for diversion are often unduly narrow, and they screen out substantial numbers of drug users who could benefit from treatment. Equally important, we should not limit our response to those who have been arrested. Part of winding down the “war on drugs” will require making treatment options more widely available, before individuals enter the criminal justice system.

Recidivism is also a serious obstacle to reform. Two-thirds of released prisoners are rearrested within three years, and half are reincarcerated. But many of the returns to prison are for conduct that violates technical parole requirements, but does not harm others. And much of the problem is that the scale and cost of prison construction have left limited resources for rehabilitation, making it difficult for offenders to find the employment that is necessary to staying straight. So we need to lock up fewer people on the front end as well as enhance reintegration and reduce collateral consequences that impede rehabilitation on the back end.

Criminal justice is administered largely at the state level; 90 percent of those incarcerated are in state and local facilities. This means mass incarceration needs to be dismantled one state at a time. Some states are already making substantial progress. New Jersey, California and New York have all reduced their prison populations by about 25 percent in recent years, with no increase in crime. That should be good news for other states, which would reap substantial savings — in budgetary and human terms — if they followed suit. While the federal government cannot solve this problem alone, it can lead both by example and by providing financial incentives that encourage reform.

Ending mass incarceration will not be easy. Opposition will come from rural community leaders who see prisons as economic development, legislators who still respond emotionally to the “crime of the week” and prosecutors who measure success by convictions and incarcerations, rather than by resolving conflict. But the recent tragic police shootings of young black men have, for the moment, focused our attention on the imperative for reform. And state budgetary crises have led many to question the vast resources we devote to holding too many people under lock and key.

Today, at long last, a consensus for reform is emerging. The facts that no other Western European nation even comes close to our incarceration rates, and that all have lower homicide rates, show that there are better ways to address crime. The marked disparities in whom we choose to lock up pose one of the nation's most urgent civil rights challenges. But we will not begin to make real progress until we face up to the full dimensions of the task.

Next in Opinion

The Court and Online Threats

From: Shorris, Anthony
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: RE: Read NOW
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 6:16:39 PM

I do not know what this means

-----Original Message-----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 6:13 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Read NOW

Stewart going to discuss stock buy backs. What can we propose/ do about it?

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Walzak, Phil; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Read NOW
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 6:18:06 PM

Funnelling money into investors rather than their own operations in form of stock buybacks

May be contributing to decline of middle class

Usnews wrote on it yesterday

----- Original Message -----

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 06:14 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Read NOW

What the fuck?
What is that

----- Original Message -----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 06:13 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Read NOW

Stewart going to discuss stock buy backs. What can we propose/ do about it?

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Stock buyback
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 6:19:49 PM

----- Original Message -----

From: Andrea Hagelgans [<mailto:>
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 06:18 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea

<http://www.usnews.com/news/articles/2015/06/01/stock-buybacks-innovation-boon-or-middle-class-doom>

Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Read NOW
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 6:20:27 PM

Have him read this... One of TPA's planks is closing the CEO pay loophole - which is related to stock buybacks as I understand it...

<http://billmoyers.com/2014/06/09/how-corporations-inflate-ceo-pay-with-stock-buybacks-and-why-its-bad-for-the-rest-of-us/>

How Corporations Inflate CEO Pay With Stock Buybacks — And Why It's Bad for the Rest of Us

<<http://cdn.billmoyers.com/wp-content/uploads/2014/02/AP090217156604.jpg>> Walmart in Danvers, Massachusetts. A new report shows that the retailer exploits a "performance pay" loophole saving it $104 million in corporate taxes. (AP Photo/Lisa Poole)

This post first appeared on TooMuch.org

<<http://toomuchonline.org/the-many-pipelines-that-pump-our-wealth-up/>>.

Back in 1979, notes a new Economic Policy Institute report released <<http://www.epi.org/publication/raising-americas-pay/>> last week, households in America's statistical middle — the 20 percent of households making more than the nation's poorest 40 percent and less than the nation's most affluent 40 percent — averaged $16.72, after inflation, per hour worked. In 2012, households in this same statistical middle averaged $16.26 per hour.

Over roughly that same period, EPI analysts add, America's top one percent of income-earners doubled their share of the nation's income from paychecks, dividends, rent and business earnings, from 7.2 to 14.2 percent. Wage stagnation for average Americans; record-level "success" for the one percent. The two have marched hand-in-hand for over three decades now, as EPI's new Raising America's Pay <<http://www.epi.org/publication/raising-americas-pay/>> paper and two other new studies released last week detail with no small statistical panache.

The new EPI study <<http://www.epi.org/publication/raising-americas-pay/>> emphasizes how the failure of wages to grow over recent decades has been driving growing inequality, undermining the living standards of America's "broad middle class" and stalling all progress against poverty.

Apologists for our current economic order blame wage stagnation on technological change — or workers themselves. Workers don't have the right skills and credentials to get ahead, their argument goes.

EPI's Raising America's Pay picks apart these bogus rationales and shifts the focus to business practices and policies that systematically shift income upwards.

Corporate leaders routinely stiff workers on overtime and misclassify many others as "independent contractors" to avoid paying benefits.

Corporate leaders, for instance, routinely stiff workers on overtime and misclassify many others as "independent contractors" to avoid paying benefits. Corporate muscle, meanwhile, keeps minimum wages low and unions weak.

All these moves add billions to corporate bottom lines and inflate the "metrics" — like share price — that corporate boards use to rate how well top corporate executives are "performing."

But share prices can be capricious. They often rise and fall without much rhyme or reason. CEOs don't particularly care for this share price uncertainty, and that brings us to the second <<http://www.rooseveltinstitute.org/taking-stock-executive-pay>> of last week's perceptive new studies, a Roosevelt Institute paper that explores just how far top execs will go to artificially rig higher share prices — and how much economic damage this rigging can wreak.

Corporations have been shelling out fabulous sums, Roosevelt Institute author William Lazonick relates <<http://www.rooseveltinstitute.org/taking-stock-executive-pay>>, to “buy back” their own shares of stock off the open market, an exercise designed solely to jack up demand for their stock and, in the process, raise their share price.

In the decade from 2003 through 2012, IBM alone shelled out $107 billion on stock buybacks, an outlay that equaled 91 percent of the company's total earnings over that span. The corporations that make up the S&P 500 have together spent an estimated $3.1 trillion on buybacks since 2001. These buybacks have worked wonderfully — for top executives, who just happen to get most of their pay in stock-based rewards. In 2012, the 500 highest-paid executives of America's S&P 500 corporations averaged $30.3 million each in total pay, with stock-based rewards making up 83 percent of their jackpots.

After inflation, the Roosevelt Institute notes, these 500 top execs are now grabbing nearly three times more than their executive counterparts in the early 1990s — and that early 1990s pay represented a significant increase over corporate executive pay levels of the 1970s, an increase so significant that excessive executive pay had become an issue in the 1992 presidential election.

Right after that election, the new Clinton White House moved to “reform” CEO pay, easing into law legislation that limited the amount of executive pay corporations could deduct off their taxes. But this “reform” had a loophole: Corporations could deduct as much as they chose for “performance-based pay.”

Few corporations have exploited this loophole, the third of last week's new inequality studies points out, as fully as Wal-mart, America's low-wage pacesetter.

The “performance pay” subsidy for just eight high-ranking Wal-mart execs has saved the company $104 million off its corporate tax bill, enough money to cover six years of free school lunches for 33,000 poor kids.

Over the past six years, report

<http://www.ips-dc.org/reports/taxpayers_subsidize_walmart_execs> the Institute for Policy Studies and Americans for Tax Fairness, the “performance pay” subsidy for just eight high-ranking Wal-mart execs has saved the company $104 million off its corporate tax bill, enough money to cover six years of free school lunches for 33,000 poor kids.

Plenty of America's poor kids come from Wal-mart worker families. Those workers simply don't make enough to get by without the social safety net support that America's tax dollars supply.

In effect, points out

<http://www.ips-dc.org/reports/taxpayers_subsidize_walmart_execs> the new Wal-mart study, America's “taxpayers pay twice” for the company's pay practices, first when “they subsidize the company's excessive executive pay” and then when they subsidize Wal-mart's low wages.

Average Americans, adds William Lazonick's Roosevelt Institute study, are also paying dearly for Corporate America's trillions in stock buybacks.

One example: In the decade after 2001, high-tech giant Cisco spent 107 percent of its net income on stock repurchases. How do firms spend over 100 percent of what they make? They cut costs elsewhere. In Cisco's case, Lazonick notes

<<http://www.nextnewdeal.net/ceo-performance-pay-bad-everyone-except-ceos>>, that meant “rounds of large-scale layoffs to sustain its buyback habit.”

Cisco's chief rivals — China's Huawei Technologies and Sweden's Ericsson — don't do buybacks. They've been investing in innovation instead and improving their competitive posture.

America's only big winners in all this? Top executives like Cisco CEO John Chambers. Over the 2003-2012 span, he stuffed $297 million into his pockets.

But execs like Chambers, the new reports on corporate greed and grasping all stress, don't have to be the economy's only winners. The three studies offer all sorts of suggestions for rule changes that could help unrig the economic game that average Americans always seem to lose.

We could yank the generous subsidy for corporate executive "performance pay" and reverse the federal regulations that opened the door to stock buybacks. We could set a $15 minimum wage and guarantee all workers the right to organize into unions and bargain collectively.

We need to be moving on all these fronts — and many more. After all, as the new EPI study observes, reversing rising inequality and America's "disappointing growth of living standards" is never going to happen "in one fell swoop."

But we had better start swooping.

On 6/2/15, 6:18 PM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>Funnelling money into investors rather than their own operations in form >of stock buybacks

>

>May be contributing to decline of middle class

>

>Usnews wrote on it yesterday

>

>----- Original Message -----

>From: Walzak, Phil

>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 06:14 PM

>To: 'Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>;

>Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic

>Subject: Re: Read NOW

>

>What the fuck?

>What is that

>

>----- Original Message -----

>From: Hagelgans, Andrea

>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 06:13 PM

>To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Shorris,

>Anthony; Williams, Dominic

>Subject: Read NOW

>

>Stewart going to discuss stock buy backs. What can we propose/ do about >it?

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Read NOW
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 6:24:52 PM

Right on. Break a leg!

On 6/2/15, 6:22 PM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>Done. He is good. We are starting!

>

>----- Original Message -----

>From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 06:21 PM

>To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic

>Subject: Re: Read NOW

>

>Here's what a progressive group says about CEO Pay Loophole, if he wants >to pivot to that...

>

><http://www.americansfortaxfairness.org/tax-fairness-briefing-booklet/fact-> >s >heet-tax-subsidies-for-ceo-pay/

>

>Overview

>Most American taxpayers would be shocked to learn that they subsidize CEO >bonuses. A tax loophole allows corporations to deduct from their taxable >income any amount paid to CEOs and their executives, as long as the pay is

>"performance-based." This means that the more they pay their executives, >the less they pay in federal taxes.

>Why does this tax loophole exist?The CEO pay loophole defies common sense, >but Congress thought was doing the right thing when it passed legislation >in 1993 <http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=942667> that >capped the tax deductibility of executive pay at $1 million. But there was >a huge loophole — the cap doesn't apply to "performance-based" pay, which >includes stock options. Incentive bonuses were supposed to make CEOs >better stewards of shareholders' money. This theory has proved false, with >the 2008 financial crisis being only the most severe example of how huge >performance bonuses can encourage risky activities

><<http://business.smh.com.au/business/volcker-executive-pay-broke-the-financ> >ial-system-20081118-6abo.html> that endanger single companies and the >broader economy.

>c

>How much does this loophole cost taxpayers?Closing the CEO pay loophole >would save taxpayers $50 billion over 10 years,

><<http://www.reed.senate.gov/news/release/reed-blumenthal-introduce-the-sto> >p

>-subsidizing-multimillion-dollar-corporate-bonuses-act> according to the >non-partisan Joint Committee on Taxation.

>

>

>

>On 6/2/15, 6:18 PM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>wrote:

>

>>Funnelling money into investors rather than their own operations in form

>>of stock buybacks

>>
>>May be contributing to decline of middle class
>>
>>Usnews wrote on it yesterday
>>
>>----- Original Message -----
>>From: Walzak, Phil
>>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 06:14 PM
>>To: Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>;
>>Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
>>Subject: Re: Read NOW
>>
>>What the fuck?
>>What is that
>>
>>----- Original Message -----
>>From: Hagelgans, Andrea
>>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 06:13 PM
>>To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Shorris,
>>Anthony; Williams, Dominic
>>Subject: Read NOW
>>
>>Stewart going to discuss stock buy backs. What can we propose/ do about >>it?
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Updated TPA plan
Date: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 8:55:59 PM
Attachments: MemorandumTPA6215.docx

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB
FR: JDC
DA: 6/2/15
RE: TPA -- Bronze, Silver, and Gold

There are a number of steps that we're taking on TPA, but I'm going to separate them into three categories. Bronze includes the less sexy, day-to-day efforts. Silver signifies the higher profile events or "moments" that will keep things moving forward/projecting progress. And Gold covers the two Big Ideas that will make TPA "unavoidable" to everywhere who's watching.

GOLD

<!--[if !supportLists]-->1. <!--[endif]-->Presidential forum on income inequality.

In the fall of 2015, we would convene a forum – not a debate – with presidential candidates of both parties.

We have had initial discussions with CNN as the sponsor. They are interested.

We would need mainstream reporters as moderators – maybe Jake Tapper, Paul Krugman, and a reporter from Telemundo or Univision.

The best venue would be a college campus in Washington, DC – although we should consider also consider NYC, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia as well.

Each candidate would appear individually, for 15-20 minutes. They would answer a range of questions posed by the moderators, submitted by TPA partners, and everyday people – all of them focused on combatting income inequality.

The crowd would be a mix of students and non-students. The crowd would be strictly instructed to not make noise. The event would span an entire morning or afternoon, depending on how many candidates agree to appear.

There would be no "gotcha" questions – i.e., the topics would NOT include the candidates' personal wealth, or positions they've taken in the past. Instead, the focus would be on the candidates' visions for closing the wealth gap as President.

We would seek sponsorship by both progressive groups AND non-traditional groups – think SEIU and Goldman Sachs. That would give nervous candidates some reassurance that this was a straight-ahead policy discussion, and not a rigged show.

The goal should be to announce the forum in July – with the event itself taking place right after Labor Day.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->2. <!--[endif]-->Caucus for Fairness – or C4F.

C4F would have its initial launch in Iowa – the center of the political universe. And it's prime territory for discussing income inequality. Today's respected Iowa Poll shows that, out of a list of 20 issues, likely Democratic caucus-goers rank "income inequality" as the second most important issue they'd like to hear candidates discuss – a whopping 90 percent of those surveyed. ("Energy" was number one at 92%, and "infrastructure" was number three at 88%.)

The numbers aren't nearly as good among Republican caucus-goers, who – as you might expect – want to hear more about the deficit and national defense – but with so many GOP candidates eager to talk about the economy, I'm sure there will be some who want to make the case for Reaganomics as the solution to income inequality.

The goal would be to build a massive number of caucus-goers – no matter which candidate they prefer – to join the effort to have the candidates discuss solutions to income inequality.

To start this process, we'd need the months of June and July to raise money and build our lists.

For money, the first person to tap would be Tom Steyer. He spent $11 million in Iowa during the 2014 Senate race. Of that, only $3M was spent on NextGen – his climate change group. The rest was given to various groups around the state.

Steyer has already expressed interest in drawing a direct link between climate change and income inequality – and we could pretty neatly make the inequality aspects of climate change a part of our efforts.

I'm meeting with Josh Fryday when he's in NYC next week to make a pitch for $1M – although we could settle for half that amount. For Steyer, that's pocket change – and it gives him instant credibility above and beyond the climate change niche.

The hiring process would include two full-time staffers – a "state director" for C4F, and a volunteer coordinator. [REDACTED] is looking to make a move – and I think he’d be a natural choice for state director. We could leave the hiring of a volunteer coordinator to [REDACTED]

Once the hires are made, we would focus on list growth and outreach to create a base of membership by the end of July. First, we would buy the voter file (or VAN) from the Iowa Democratic Party. That would cost around $20K. Then we would rent the Braley email list (probably around the same cost). We would also do online advertising to draw people to C4F – with an initial budget of $100K.

Our goal would be to have our membership for C4F in the thousands by mid-August, when the Iowa State Fair kicks off (and when the candidates really start descending on the state).

As the State Fair, each presidential candidate will be invited to participate in the Des Moines Register’s “Soap Box” – a place where all of the candidates will give speeches & have their remarks live-streamed. We would use our ground troops to pressure the candidates to talk about income inequality. Our folks would be identified with stickers, signs, and similar visibility.

From August until the caucuses on February 1st, our membership would be encouraged to follow the candidates at various town halls, candidate forums, and retail stops – inserting questions on various TPA planks where possible, and holding rallies to demand answers when conditions are less hospitable. They will submit letters to the editor, call into radio shows (which still exist in Iowa!), and insert TPA issues into the interviews that the phalanx of national reporters conduct with “average Iowa voters.”

Reporters will eat this stuff up. Candidates will feel great pressure from the people who may well determine their political future. And TPA will – at the end of the process – have built a durable list of go-to activists to cultivate through the NEXT presidential election (and any intervening Congressional and Senate races).

There will be those naysayers who suggest that we’re somehow unfairly pressuring Clinton, and by proxy helping Sander and O’Malley – but that’s a short-lived reality that will dissipate once the process is over.

Now, Iowa is just one piece of the equation. New Hampshire, Nevada, South Carolina, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia are other states to which we could fan out – in keeping with the primary and general election calendars. But for resource allocation purposes, everything should start in Iowa – and build from there over time.

SILVER

As discussed previously, there are a number of “big events” that we can and should do simultaneous to the planning/execution of the presidential forum and C4F. That list includes:

- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->TPA Day of Action
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Issues conference in NYC
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Gracie Confab Part II
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Policy forum focused on communities of color
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Tele-Town Hall

None of these events on their own will have the same “shock and awe” power of the GOLD events – but they demonstrate that TPA is always working towards building momentum/adding names/forcing the issue of income inequality into the national conversation.

BRONZE

We will also be minding the day-to-day, lower-impact efforts that must be at the heart of TPA.

That includes list-building (by getting our partners to regularly push their members/constituents to sign onto TPA; executing a surrogate media program (with key TPA partners appearing on TV and radio shows to promote specific issues, as well as drive traffic to the site); and having you make national media appearances that link your efforts in NYC (on affordable housing, for example) to the larger national movement. The Daily Show and Face the Nation are scheduled. CNBC is being scheduled. Rachel Maddow and other MSNBC shows can and will be scheduled soon.

MISCELLANEOUS

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->I’m talking to [REDACTED] about how much money he’d need to start at TPA executive director as soon as [REDACTED]

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Robert Greenwald is moving forward with his effort to build a viral video that really elevates the Hedge Funders Vs. Kindergarten Teachers conversation. I will be coming to you with a more formal proposal on this – with a request for you to help personally recruit 4-5 other mayors to offer teachers for the video, and to schedule simultaneous screenings in 5-6 cities across the country in September.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->We released a video today from the DC event as part of the effort to drive traffic to our site & get more signers.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->DC-37 is distributing a guest column by you on TPA as part of their very high circulation newsletter.
<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->We are compiling a list of core TPA partners for you to call & cultivate – as well as seek input from – during your weekly TPA call time.

###

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB
FR: JDC
DA: 6/2/15
RE: TPA -- Bronze, Silver, and Gold

There are a number of steps that we're taking on TPA, but I'm going to separate them into three categories. Bronze includes the less sexy, day-to-day efforts. Silver signifies the higher profile events or "moments" that will keep things moving forward/projecting progress. And Gold covers the two Big Ideas that will make TPA "unavoidable" to everywhere who's watching.

GOLD

1. Presidential forum on income inequality.

In the fall of 2015, we would convene a forum – not a debate – with presidential candidates of both parties.

We have had initial discussions with CNN as the sponsor. They are interested.

We would need mainstream reporters as moderators – maybe Jake Tapper, Paul Krugman, and a reporter from Telemundo or Univision.

The best venue would be a college campus in Washington, DC – although we should consider also consider NYC, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia as well.

Each candidate would appear individually, for 15-20 minutes. They would answer a range of questions posed by the moderators, submitted by TPA partners, and everyday people – all of them focused on combatting income inequality.

The crowd would be a mix of students and non-students. The crowd would be strictly instructed to not make noise. The event would span an entire morning or afternoon, depending on how many candidates agree to appear.

There would be no "gotcha" questions – i.e., the topics would NOT include the candidates' personal wealth, or positions they've taken in the past. Instead, the focus would be on the candidates' visions for closing the wealth gap as President.

We would seek sponsorship by both progressive groups AND non-traditional groups – think SEIU and Goldman Sachs. That would give nervous candidates some reassurance that this was a straight-ahead policy discussion, and not a rigged show.

The goal should be to announce the forum in July – with the event itself taking place right after Labor Day.

2. Caucus for Fairness – or C4F.

C4F would have its initial launch in Iowa – the center of the political universe. And it's prime territory for discussing income inequality. Today's respected Iowa Poll shows that, out of a list of 20 issues, likely Democratic caucus-goers rank "income inequality" as the second most important issue they'd like to hear candidates discuss – a whopping 90 percent of those surveyed. ("Energy" was number one at 92%, and "infrastructure" was number three at 88%.)

The numbers aren't nearly as good among Republican caucus-goers, who – as you might expect – want to hear more about the deficit and national defense – but with so many GOP candidates eager to talk about the economy, I'm sure there will be some who want to make the case for Reaganomics as the solution to income inequality.

The goal would be to build a massive number of caucus-goers – no matter which candidate they prefer – to join the effort to have the candidates discuss solutions to income inequality.

To start this process, we'd need the months of June and July to raise money and build our lists.

For money, the first person to tap would be Tom Steyer. He spent $11 million in Iowa during the 2014 Senate race. Of that, only $3M was spent on NextGen – his climate change group. The rest was given to various groups around the state.

Steyer has already expressed interest in drawing a direct link between climate change and income inequality – and we could pretty neatly make the inequality aspects of climate change a part of our efforts.

I'm meeting with Josh Fryday when he's in NYC next week to make a pitch for $1M – although we could settle for half that amount. For Steyer, that's pocket change – and it gives him instant credibility above and beyond the climate change niche.

The hiring process would include two full-time staffers – a "state director" for C4F, and a volunteer coordinator. [REDACTED] is looking to make a move – and I think he'd be a natural choice for state director. We could leave the hiring of a volunteer coordinator to [REDACTED]

Once the hires are made, we would focus on list growth and outreach to create a base of membership by the end of July. First, we would buy the voter file (or VAN) from the Iowa Democratic Party. That would cost around $20K. Then we would rent the Braley email list (probably around the same cost). We would also do online advertising to draw people to C4F – with an initial budget of $100K.

Our goal would be to have our membership for C4F in the thousands by mid-August, when the Iowa State Fair kicks off (and when the candidates really start descending on the state).

As the State Fair, each presidential candidate will be invited to participate in the Des Moines Register's "Soap Box" – a place where all of the candidates will give speeches & have their remarks live-streamed. We would use our ground troops to pressure the candidates to talk about income inequality. Our folks would be identified with stickers, signs, and similar visibility.

From August until the caucuses on February 1st, our membership would be encouraged to follow the candidates at various town halls, candidate forums, and retail stops – inserting questions on various TPA planks where possible, and holding rallies to demand answers when conditions are less hospitable. They will submit letters to the editor, call into radio shows (which still exist in Iowa!), and insert TPA issues into the interviews that the phalanx of national reporters conduct with "average Iowa voters."

Reporters will eat this stuff up. Candidates will feel great pressure from the people who may well determine their political future. And TPA will – at the end of the process – have built a durable list of go-to activists to cultivate through the NEXT presidential election (and any intervening Congressional and Senate races).

There will be those naysayers who suggest that we're somehow unfairly pressuring Clinton, and by proxy helping Sander and O'Malley – but that's a short-lived reality that will dissipate once the process is over.

Now, Iowa is just one piece of the equation. New Hampshire, Nevada, South Carolina, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia are other states to which we could fan out – in keeping with the primary and general election calendars. But for resource allocation purposes, everything should start in Iowa – and build from there over time.

SILVER

As discussed previously, there are a number of "big events" that we can and should do simultaneous to the planning/execution of the presidential forum and C4F. That list includes:

- TPA Day of Action
- Issues conference in NYC
- Gracie Confab Part II
- Policy forum focused on communities of color
- Tele-Town Hall

None of these events on their own will have the same “shock and awe” power of the GOLD events – but they demonstrate that TPA is always working towards building momentum/adding names/forcing the issue of income inequality into the national conversation.

BRONZE

We will also be minding the day-to-day, lower-impact efforts that must be at the heart of TPA.

That includes list-building (by getting our partners to regularly push their members/constituents to sign onto TPA; executing a surrogate media program (with key TPA partners appearing on TV and radio shows to promote specific issues, as well as drive traffic to the site); and having you make national media appearances that link your efforts in NYC (on affordable housing, for example) to the larger national movement. The Daily Show and Face the Nation are scheduled. CNBC is being scheduled. Rachel Maddow and other MSNBC shows can and will be scheduled soon.

MISCELLANEOUS

- I’m talking to [REDACTED] about how much money he’d need to start at TPA executive director as soon as [REDACTED]
- Robert Greenwald is moving forward with his effort to build a viral video that really elevates the Hedge Funders Vs. Kindergarten Teachers conversation. I will be coming to you with a more formal proposal on this – with a request for you to help personally recruit 4-5 other mayors to offer teachers for the video, and to schedule simultaneous screenings in 5-6 cities across the country in September.
- We released a video today from the DC event as part of the effort to drive traffic to our site & get more signers.
- DC-37 is distributing a guest column by you on TPA as part of their very high circulation newsletter.
- We are compiling a list of core TPA partners for you to call & cultivate – as well as seek input from – during your weekly TPA call time.

###

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 9:19:30 AM

CNBC: Part 1 <http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=122b82c4-9c53-46ca-93db-a158be832ce5>

Part 2 <http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=cca3297d-61a0-417e-9e8d-1e270c363022>

Daily Show: <http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=5f77bb82-fc3c-4eba-931a-328c9507ed41>

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 3, 2015, at 8:43 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Do you have a TV eyes on MBDB appearance on CNBC?

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 11:15:51 AM

We are confirmed for Sunday. Taped interview (john in DC). You will appear in same show as Republican presidential candidates (or a soon to announce Gov Christie). Will be national focus but I am monitoring for an potential additional topics.
This one will likely include HRC and other candidates as discussion points.

----- Original Message -----

From: B
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 06:15 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation

Approved

----- Original Message -----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 09:43 PM
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation

Let me know if you'd like to do this one on Sunday. Thanks

----- Original Message -----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 05:41 PM
To: 'BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov' <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Pls review: Face the Nation

Sir,

Face the Nation would like to have you on this Sunday for John Dickerson's first show since becoming host (bob schieffer retired last week). The topic would be TPA/presidential politics. May include crime, though that is my flag, not something they mentioned.

We could tape at 8:45 am in midtown so that you could be on time for sermon in Harlem.

We recommend this opportunity for TPA.

Please send me your thoughts.

Best,
Andrea

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: Cnbc
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 11:30:20 AM

Excellent.

First - hat-tip on getting the website in there.

Second - loved how you turned the tables on other countries versus the "experiment" that we did right here in the US in terms of growing the middle class.

I liked your demeanor and big picture view of the economy.

Only flag was on financial industry. The point on, say, closing the carried interest loophole is that it would be done on a federal level - so there wouldn't be competition among states. (You could also make this argument on the federal minimum wage, of course). And what was missing from that answer - and that even the folks watching CNBC need to hear — is that there's something inherently wrong about hedge fund managers paying a lower tax rate than people who work in manufacturing or service or other jobs. You got at the fairness argument during the Buffett Rule discussion - but I think it's a message Wall Street needs to hear as well.

Finally, on the question of growth, I think we can & should cite Stiglitz.

It's a false choice to say we have to choose between growing the economy and rebuilding the middle class/helping the poor. The fact is, the rules of the game are rigged to reward wealth & not work - and all the growth in the world is counterproductive if it just leads to a greater concentration of wealth at the very top. As billionaire Nick Hanauer said, he buys a pairs of pants each year. He COULD buy 1000 pairs - but why would he? Instead, he socks his saving away - which doesn't do much good for the country. We have to get more money in the pockets of those who will spend it. As Robert Reich has said, 70 percent of economic activity derives from consumer spending.

But you did a great job - and came across as very thoughtful & reasonable - great work!

On 6/3/15, 8:21 AM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>Pls send feedback when you can

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: List of progressive mayors for possible film premier event
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 12:07:22 PM

MAYORS

Nan Whaley (Dayton)

Ed Murray (Seattle)

Betsy Hodges (Minn)

Eric Garcetti (LA)

Steve Adler (Austin)

Marty Walsh (Boston)

Greg Stanton (Phoenix)

Stephanie Rawlings-Blake (Baltimore) - [REDACTED]

Pedro Segarra (Hartford) - [REDACTED]

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Updated TPA plan
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 1:22:22 PM

<http://iowacci.org/>

Remember I don't yet have their sign off. So don't contact them yet.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 1:04 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: Updated TPA plan

What was the name of the Iowa group again?

From: <Snyder>, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, June 3, 2015 at 9:16 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Updated TPA plan

Loved the GOLD Ideas. On number 1, I get the idea of having a balanced sponsor lineup (SEIU/Goldman) but I would hope we could find a business type sponsor that is not Goldman which probably is the number one representative of finance capital, excessive wealth and political influence. And as I told you I have a good grassroots group that we might be able to enlist for the Iowa part. I think if we could execute GOLD, it would be a home run.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 8:56 PM
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Updated TPA plan

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB
FR: JDC
DA: 6/2/15
RE: TPA -- Bronze, Silver, and Gold

There are a number of steps that we're taking on TPA, but I'm going to separate them into three categories. Bronze includes the less sexy, day-to-day efforts. Silver signifies the higher profile events or "moments" that will keep things moving forward/projecting progress. And Gold covers the two Big Ideas that will make TPA "unavoidable" to everywhere who's watching.

GOLD

1. Presidential forum on income inequality.

In the fall of 2015, we would convene a forum – not a debate – with presidential candidates of both parties.

We have had initial discussions with CNN as the sponsor. They are interested.

We would need mainstream reporters as moderators – maybe Jake Tapper, Paul Krugman, and a reporter from Telemundo or Univision.

The best venue would be a college campus in Washington, DC – although we should consider also consider NYC, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia as well.

Each candidate would appear individually, for 15-20 minutes. They would answer a range of questions posed by the moderators, submitted by TPA partners, and everyday people – all of them focused on combatting income inequality.

The crowd would be a mix of students and non-students. The crowd would be strictly instructed to not make noise. The event would span an entire morning or afternoon, depending on how many candidates agree to appear.

There would be no “gotcha” questions – i.e., the topics would NOT include the candidates’ personal wealth, or positions they’ve taken in the past. Instead, the focus would be on the candidates’ visions for closing the wealth gap as President.

We would seek sponsorship by both progressive groups AND non-traditional groups – think SEIU and Goldman Sachs. That would give nervous candidates some reassurance that this was a straight-ahead policy discussion, and not a rigged show.

The goal should be to announce the forum in July – with the event itself taking place right after Labor Day.

2. Caucus for Fairness – or C4F.

C4F would have its initial launch in Iowa – the center of the political universe. And it’s prime territory for discussing income inequality. Today’s respected Iowa Poll shows that, out of a list of 20 issues, likely Democratic caucus-goers rank “income inequality” as the second most important issue they’d like to hear candidates discuss – a whopping 90 percent of those surveyed. (“Energy” was number one at 92%, and “infrastructure” was number three at 88%.)

The numbers aren't nearly as good among Republican caucus-goers, who – as you might expect – want to hear more about the deficit and national defense – but with so many GOP candidates eager to talk about the economy, I'm sure there will be some who want to make the case for Reaganomics as the solution to income inequality.

The goal would be to build a massive number of caucus-goers – no matter which candidate they prefer – to join the effort to have the candidates discuss solutions to income inequality.

To start this process, we'd need the months of June and July to raise money and build our lists.

For money, the first person to tap would be Tom Steyer. He spent $11 million in Iowa during the 2014 Senate race. Of that, only $3M was spent on NextGen – his climate change group. The rest was given to various groups around the state.

Steyer has already expressed interest in drawing a direct link between climate change and income inequality – and we could pretty neatly make the inequality aspects of climate change a part of our efforts.

I'm meeting with Josh Fryday when he's in NYC next week to make a pitch for $1M – although we could settle for half that amount. For Steyer, that's pocket change – and it gives him instant credibility above and beyond the climate change niche.

The hiring process would include two full-time staffers – a “state director” for C4F, and a volunteer coordinator. [REDACTED] is looking to make a move – and I think he'd be a natural choice for state director. We could leave the hiring of a volunteer coordinator to [REDACTED]

Once the hires are made, we would focus on list growth and outreach to create a base of membership by the end of July. First, we would buy the voter file (or VAN) from the Iowa Democratic Party. That would cost around $20K. Then we would rent the Braley email list (probably around the same cost). We would also do online advertising to draw people to C4F – with an initial budget of $100K.

Our goal would be to have our membership for C4F in the thousands by mid-August, when the Iowa State Fair kicks off (and when the candidates really start descending on the state).

As the State Fair, each presidential candidate will be invited to participate in the Des Moines Register's “Soap Box” – a place where all of the candidates will give speeches & have their remarks live-streamed. We would use our ground troops to pressure the candidates to talk about income inequality. Our folks would be identified with stickers, signs, and similar visibility.

From August until the caucuses on February 1st, our membership would be encouraged to follow the candidates at various town halls, candidate forums, and retail stops – inserting questions on various TPA planks where possible, and holding rallies to demand answers when conditions are less hospitable. They will submit letters to the editor, call into radio shows (which still exist in Iowa!), and insert TPA issues into the interviews that the phalanx of national reporters conduct with “average Iowa voters.”

Reporters will eat this stuff up. Candidates will feel great pressure from the people who may well determine their political future. And TPA will – at the end of the process – have built a durable list of go-to activists to cultivate through the NEXT presidential election (and any intervening Congressional and Senate races).

There will be those naysayers who suggest that we’re somehow unfairly pressuring Clinton, and by proxy helping Sander and O’Malley – but that’s a short-lived reality that will dissipate once the process is over.

Now, Iowa is just one piece of the equation. New Hampshire, Nevada, South Carolina, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia are other states to which we could fan out – in keeping with the primary and general election calendars. But for resource allocation purposes, everything should start in Iowa – and build from there over time.

SILVER

As discussed previously, there are a number of “big events” that we can and should do simultaneous to the planning/execution of the presidential forum and C4F. That list includes:

- TPA Day of Action
- Issues conference in NYC
- Gracie Confab Part II
- Policy forum focused on communities of color
- Tele-Town Hall

None of these events on their own will have the same “shock and awe” power of the GOLD events – but they demonstrate that TPA is always working towards building momentum/adding names/forcing the issue of income inequality into the national conversation.

BRONZE

We will also be minding the day-to-day, lower-impact efforts that must be at the heart of TPA.

That includes list-building (by getting our partners to regularly push their members/constituents to sign onto TPA; executing a surrogate media program (with key TPA partners appearing on TV and radio shows to promote specific issues, as well as drive traffic to the site); and having you make national media appearances that link your efforts in NYC (on affordable housing, for example) to the larger national movement. The Daily Show and Face the Nation are scheduled. CNBC is being scheduled. Rachel Maddow and other MSNBC shows can and will be scheduled soon.

MISCELLANEOUS

- I'm talking to [REDACTED] about how much money he'd need to start at TPA executive director as soon as [REDACTED]
- Robert Greenwald is moving forward with his effort to build a viral video that really elevates the Hedge Funders Vs. Kindergarten Teachers conversation. I will be coming to you with a more formal proposal on this – with a request for you to help personally recruit 4-5 other mayors to offer teachers for the video, and to schedule simultaneous screenings in 5-6 cities across the country in September.
- We released a video today from the DC event as part of the effort to drive traffic to our site & get more signers.
- DC-37 is distributing a guest column by you on TPA as part of their very high circulation newsletter.
- We are compiling a list of core TPA partners for you to call & cultivate – as well as seek input from – during your weekly TPA call time.

###

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Updated TPA plan
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 1:23:10 PM

Also, is it true that you are not available Sunday afternoon for meeting with OSI?

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 1:04 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: Updated TPA plan

What was the name of the Iowa group again?

From: <Snyder>, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, June 3, 2015 at 9:16 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Updated TPA plan

Loved the GOLD Ideas. On number 1, I get the idea of having a balanced sponsor lineup (SEIU/Goldman) but I would hope we could find a business type sponsor that is not Goldman which probably is the number one representative of finance capital, excessive wealth and political influence. And as I told you I have a good grassroots group that we might be able to enlist for the Iowa part. I think if we could execute GOLD, it would be a home run.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 8:56 PM
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Updated TPA plan

MEMORANDUM

TO: MBDB
FR: JDC
DA: 6/2/15
RE: TPA -- Bronze, Silver, and Gold

There are a number of steps that we're taking on TPA, but I'm going to separate them into three categories. Bronze includes the less sexy, day-to-day efforts. Silver signifies the higher profile events or "moments" that will keep things moving forward/projecting progress. And Gold covers the two Big Ideas that will make TPA "unavoidable" to everywhere who's watching.

GOLD

1. Presidential forum on income inequality.

In the fall of 2015, we would convene a forum – not a debate – with presidential candidates of both parties.

We have had initial discussions with CNN as the sponsor. They are interested.

We would need mainstream reporters as moderators – maybe Jake Tapper, Paul Krugman, and a reporter from Telemundo or Univision.

The best venue would be a college campus in Washington, DC – although we should consider also consider NYC, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia as well.

Each candidate would appear individually, for 15-20 minutes. They would answer a range of questions posed by the moderators, submitted by TPA partners, and everyday people – all of them focused on combatting income inequality.

The crowd would be a mix of students and non-students. The crowd would be strictly instructed to not make noise. The event would span an entire morning or afternoon, depending on how many candidates agree to appear.

There would be no “gotcha” questions – i.e., the topics would NOT include the candidates’ personal wealth, or positions they’ve taken in the past. Instead, the focus would be on the candidates’ visions for closing the wealth gap as President.

We would seek sponsorship by both progressive groups AND non-traditional groups – think SEIU and Goldman Sachs. That would give nervous candidates some reassurance that this was a straight-ahead policy discussion, and not a rigged show.

The goal should be to announce the forum in July – with the event itself taking place right after Labor Day.

2. Caucus for Fairness – or C4F.

C4F would have its initial launch in Iowa – the center of the political universe. And it’s prime territory for discussing income inequality. Today’s respected Iowa Poll shows that, out of a list of 20 issues, likely Democratic caucus-goers rank “income inequality” as the second most important issue they’d like to hear candidates discuss – a whopping 90 percent of those surveyed. (“Energy” was number one at 92%, and “infrastructure” was number three at 88%.)

The numbers aren't nearly as good among Republican caucus-goers, who – as you might expect – want to hear more about the deficit and national defense – but with so many GOP candidates eager to talk about the economy, I'm sure there will be some who want to make the case for Reaganomics as the solution to income inequality.

The goal would be to build a massive number of caucus-goers – no matter which candidate they prefer – to join the effort to have the candidates discuss solutions to income inequality.

To start this process, we'd need the months of June and July to raise money and build our lists.

For money, the first person to tap would be Tom Steyer. He spent $11 million in Iowa during the 2014 Senate race. Of that, only $3M was spent on NextGen – his climate change group. The rest was given to various groups around the state.

Steyer has already expressed interest in drawing a direct link between climate change and income inequality – and we could pretty neatly make the inequality aspects of climate change a part of our efforts.

I'm meeting with Josh Fryday when he's in NYC next week to make a pitch for $1M – although we could settle for half that amount. For Steyer, that's pocket change – and it gives him instant credibility above and beyond the climate change niche.

The hiring process would include two full-time staffers – a “state director” for C4F, and a volunteer coordinator. [REDACTED] is looking to make a move – and I think he'd be a natural choice for state director. We could leave the hiring of a volunteer coordinator to [REDACTED]

Once the hires are made, we would focus on list growth and outreach to create a base of membership by the end of July. First, we would buy the voter file (or VAN) from the Iowa Democratic Party. That would cost around $20K. Then we would rent the Braley email list (probably around the same cost). We would also do online advertising to draw people to C4F – with an initial budget of $100K.

Our goal would be to have our membership for C4F in the thousands by mid-August, when the Iowa State Fair kicks off (and when the candidates really start descending on the state).

As the State Fair, each presidential candidate will be invited to participate in the Des Moines Register's “Soap Box” – a place where all of the candidates will give speeches & have their remarks live-streamed. We would use our ground troops to pressure the candidates to talk about income inequality. Our folks would be identified with stickers, signs, and similar visibility.

From August until the caucuses on February 1st, our membership would be encouraged to follow the candidates at various town halls, candidate forums, and retail stops – inserting questions on various TPA planks where possible, and holding rallies to demand answers when conditions are less hospitable. They will submit letters to the editor, call into radio shows (which still exist in Iowa!), and insert TPA issues into the interviews that the phalanx of national reporters conduct with “average Iowa voters.”

Reporters will eat this stuff up. Candidates will feel great pressure from the people who may well determine their political future. And TPA will – at the end of the process – have built a durable list of go-to activists to cultivate through the NEXT presidential election (and any intervening Congressional and Senate races).

There will be those naysayers who suggest that we’re somehow unfairly pressuring Clinton, and by proxy helping Sander and O’Malley – but that’s a short-lived reality that will dissipate once the process is over.

Now, Iowa is just one piece of the equation. New Hampshire, Nevada, South Carolina, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia are other states to which we could fan out – in keeping with the primary and general election calendars. But for resource allocation purposes, everything should start in Iowa – and build from there over time.

SILVER

As discussed previously, there are a number of “big events” that we can and should do simultaneous to the planning/execution of the presidential forum and C4F. That list includes:

- TPA Day of Action
- Issues conference in NYC
- Gracie Confab Part II
- Policy forum focused on communities of color
- Tele-Town Hall

None of these events on their own will have the same “shock and awe” power of the GOLD events – but they demonstrate that TPA is always working towards building momentum/adding names/forcing the issue of income inequality into the national conversation.

BRONZE

We will also be minding the day-to-day, lower-impact efforts that must be at the heart of TPA.

That includes list-building (by getting our partners to regularly push their members/constituents to sign onto TPA; executing a surrogates media program (with key TPA partners appearing on TV and radio shows to promote specific issues, as well as drive traffic to the site); and having you make national media appearances that link your efforts in NYC (on affordable housing, for example) to the larger national movement. The Daily Show and Face the Nation are scheduled. CNBC is being scheduled. Rachel Maddow and other MSNBC shows can and will be scheduled soon.

MISCELLANEOUS

- I'm talking to [REDACTED] about how much money he'd need to start at TPA executive director as soon as [REDACTED]
- Robert Greenwald is moving forward with his effort to build a viral video that really elevates the Hedge Funders Vs. Kindergarten Teachers conversation. I will be coming to you with a more formal proposal on this – with a request for you to help personally recruit 4-5 other mayors to offer teachers for the video, and to schedule simultaneous screenings in 5-6 cities across the country in September.
- We released a video today from the DC event as part of the effort to drive traffic to our site & get more signers.
- DC-37 is distributing a guest column by you on TPA as part of their very high circulation newsletter.
- We are compiling a list of core TPA partners for you to call & cultivate – as well as seek input from – during your weekly TPA call time.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; de Alwis, Ronalie
Subject: Cheat sheet for Mike Lux taping
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 3:53:19 PM

QUESTION:

Tell us about your progressive agenda. Why is it important; what's your strategy; and what's next?

ANSWER:

The Progressive Agenda, which people can read in full at ProgressiveAgenda.US, is a list of progressive policies to combat income inequality – which I believe is the crisis of our times.

Consider the statistics:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->A typical American family, in real income terms, is making less today than they were a quarter century ago.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->The wealthiest one percent captured 91% of all the income gains since the Great Recession ended.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->And now we have the greatest income disparity since the 1920s – and it's getting worse.

The Progressive Agenda is about lifting the floor for working families – a $15 minimum wage, strengthening workers' right to organize, and fighting for fair trade deals.

It's about helping working parents – paid sick leave, paid family leave, helping keep students and families from getting buried by college debt.

And it's about fair taxes – closing tax loopholes that let hedge fund managers and billionaires pay a lower rate of tax than regular working people.

We need to do these things if we're going to rebuild our middle class and lift people out of poverty.

So we're taking this agenda & forcing a national discussion on how to achieve it – and that means pressuring elected officials and candidates at every level to spell out THEIR vision for tackling this crisis.

To that end, we're planning a Day of Action among those who've signed onto TPA. We're aggressively building our list of signers and supporters – using social media, and old-fashioned grassroots organizing. And we're planning a presidential forum for the fall that will squarely focus on how to combat income inequality.

QUESTION:

What does it mean to you to be a progressive, and what do you think it means for the progressive movement that you were elected mayor of the nation's most populous city?

ANSWER:

Being a progressive means challenging the status quo, un-rigging the rules of the economy that allow power and wealth to become concentrated among a very small group at the very top, and giving EVERY person a chance to get ahead.

For decades, those on the right have sold Americans on trickle-down economics – and we know how miserably that has failed. Meanwhile, the One Percent have seen their wealth and power soar – while the middle class is disappearing, and low-income folks feel hopeless and desperate. That has to change – not just for those who are struggling, but because it's not sustainable for ANY of us.

When I campaigned for mayor, I talked about the Tale of Two Cities that New York had become – with Wall Street setting records and multi-million dollar condos springing up everywhere, while nearly half our city was living at or near the poverty line. We are taking dead aim at that – and doing everything in our power to change it.

QUESTION:

What can mayors do to enact a progressive economic agenda, and what challenges have you faced in doing so?

Here's some of what we've done in NYC: (Pre-K/After-school, paid sick leave, living wage, new rules for developers, most ambitious affordable housing plan ever).

We're also fighting to raise the minimum wage, strengthen rent regulations, and so many other things.

The challenge is what it's always been – powerful, well-financed interests who benefit from the status quo. They have a great deal of say in Albany, and also in Washington. So it's a battle we have to fight each and every day – and never give up.

QUESTION:

How can the progressive movement overcome those challenges to see these agenda items enacted on a national level?

ANSWER:

We have to think big and bold. We have to stand united and band together, like so many mayors have done on immigration and transportation funding. And we have to make the progressive cause not just a PART of the national political discussion; we have to make it an UNAVOIDABLE one.

You do that by organizing all across the country – starting at the grassroots. You find common ground with business and labor leaders, civil rights leaders and elected officials. You demand that the federal government do its part and make sure the American people know what's at stake & weight in loudly with the people they sent to Washington.

QUESTION:

You are the mayor of what is arguably the financial capital of the world. Wall Street's influence has a significant impact on the growing economic disparity between rich and poor. What can you do as mayor to address that problem?

ANSWER:

At the city level, we're using every tool in our toolbox to close the wealth gap – Pre-K, afterschool, paid sick leave, living wage, affordable housing – you name it.

But we need Washington as a partner – and we need the federal government to help rewrite the rules.

We need an economy that rewards WORK and not WEALTH. That means closing the carried interest loophole so that a billionaire hedge fund manager isn't paying a lower rate of taxes than the woman who cleans his beach house, or the guy who pilots his private plane. It means implementing the Buffett Rule, so that millionaire executives aren't paying a lower tax rate than their secretaries. It means ending tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas. It means pushing back against a system that piles up student debt.

We need to restore a sense of fairness to our economy. That's what progressive change has always been about. And that's what The Progressive Agenda is all about.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: Lauren Windsor
Cc: Michael Lux; de Alwis, Ronalie; Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: Lauren forgot her audio recorder in the podium
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 6:55:03 PM

No worries at all - will do

> On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:51 PM, Lauren Windsor <[REDACTED]> wrote:
>
> I'm soooooo sorry for this inconvenience! I was trying to hurry and get out so the mayor could film his next segment.
>
> Can you please put the recorder in a bubble wrap envelope with a tracking number? We'll obviously reimburse whatever that costs. Again, so sorry.
>
> Here's the mailing address:
>
> American Family Voices
> 1250 I Street NW Suite 250
> Washington, DC 20005
>
> Lauren Windsor
> Executive Producer - Lady Libertine - The Undercurrent
> www.LadyLibertine.net
> @LadyLibertine27
> 213.595.8011
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
>> On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:42 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>
>> Ha! Adding Ronalie. Please delete any NSFW post interview comments!
>>
>>
>>
>>> On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:30 PM, Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net> wrote:
>>>
>>> And it is still on. Is there one of the mayor's fine young staffers who could retrieve it, turn it off, and send it to us?
>>>
>>> Sorry about that!
>>>
>>> Other than that, I thought it was a great interview:)
>>>
>>> Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Schnake-Mahl, Gabriel
Subject: Fwd: Lauren forgot her audio recorder in the podium
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 6:56:14 PM

If you are still at CH can you go to Blue Room and secure tape recorder? Just don't want a reporter to find it

Begin forwarded message:

From: Lauren Windsor <[REDACTED]>
Date: June 3, 2015 at 6:50:58 PM EDT
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>, "de Alwis, Ronalie" <rdealwis@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Lauren forgot her audio recorder in the podium

I'm soooooo sorry for this inconvenience! I was trying to hurry and get out so the mayor could film his next segment.

Can you please put the recorder in a bubble wrap envelope with a tracking number? We'll obviously reimburse whatever that costs. Again, so sorry.

Here's the mailing address:

American Family Voices
1250 I Street NW Suite 250
Washington, DC 20005

Lauren Windsor
Executive Producer - Lady Libertine - The Undercurrent
www.LadyLibertine.net
@LadyLibertine27
213.595.8011

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:42 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Ha! Adding Ronalie. Please delete any NSFW post interview comments!

On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:30 PM, Michael Lux
<mlux@progressivestrategies.net> wrote:

And it is still on. Is there one of the mayor's fine young staffers who could retrieve it, turn it off, and send it to us?

Sorry about that!

Other than that, I thought it was a great interview:)

Sent from my iPhone

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Jonathan@berlinrosen.com; Carrion, Marco A.; Blumm, Kate
Subject: RE: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 7:07:12 PM

Lets talk abt marcia

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 6:46 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Jonathan@berlinrosen.com; Carrion, Marco A.; Blumm, Kate
Subject: RE: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

I need to find something special for Marcia. She is convinced she is being slighted when, in fact, she just doesn't check it voice mail or email on a regular enough basis. But the facts have nothing to do with her perception. Any suggestions?

In a conversation with Mayor, he seemed open to giving her an interview.

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 4:09 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Jonathan@berlinrosen.com; Carrion, Marco A.; Blumm, Kate
Subject: RE: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

We should exclu it NYDN for one of Fermino Sunday spacers, and advance it tv desks for morning news breaks, then drive them to cover event

Tell story

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 4:06 PM
To: Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Walzak, Phil; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Jonathan@berlinrosen.com; Carrion, Marco A.; Blumm, Kate
Subject: RE: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

+Kate who had been working on this as well

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 4:05 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Jonathan@berlinrosen.com; Carrion, Marco A.
Subject: Re: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

Minus Mayor

Do we want to give her, Marcia, the clergy council announcement? Know nothing at this point about Sunday but offer this as an idea.

Karen
Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 3, 2015, at 2:59 PM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Yes correct.

From: B
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 2:57 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; 'Jonathan@berlinrosen.com'; Carrion, Marco A.
Subject: Re: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

Meaning OUR clergy council, correct? Marco, pls get me an updated list of all members of COREL and of our new clergy council. Want to give you feedback on any additions that may be needed to our group. Thanks

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 02:54 PM
To: B; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; 'Jonathan@berlinrosen.com' <Jonathan@berlinrosen.com>; Carrion, Marco A.
Subject: RE: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

The Clergy Council is being announced Sunday FYI at Corinthian

From: B
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 2:54 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; 'Jonathan@berlinrosen.com'; Wolfe, Emma; Carrion, Marco A.
Subject: Fw: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

We should try something different with Marcia, because whatever we're doing isn't working. And we should figure out how to deal with tony hebert and the "brooklyn clergy coalition" -- need to know who they are. Marco, we need to move our clergy gameplan asap. And does RAS still have any influence over tony herbert??

From: Clips
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 01:35 PM
Subject: CBS: Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

Protesters: De Blasio Not Doing Enough To Curb City Violence

CBS - Staff - 12:49 pm

<http://newyork.cbslocal.com/2015/06/03/de-blasio-crime-rate/>

Using a coffin and body bags to make their point, angry demonstrators rallied in City Hall Park on Wednesday to demand that Mayor Bill de Blasio try new tactics to curb the city's soaring murder rate.

As CBS2's Marcia Kramer reported, New York City has seen a nearly 20 percent increase in homicides so far this year.

"There's too many people dying in the city of New York, and I'm under the premise of conversation with a number of leaders in our community who feel that this mayor is not sensitive to those that are dying in our neighborhoods," community activist Tony Herbert said.

Members of the Brooklyn Clergy Coalition and other community leaders have devised a One Family One Community initiative, which calls for tackling the issue of violence by sending more than 10,000 mentors into neighborhoods, schools and housing developments with the highest rate of gang and gun violence.

They say they've tried to talk to de Blasio about it, but he refuses.

"At the end of the day, we have to work as a collective," Herbert said. "The city has to work with the community, not walk around and call people fearmongers, to insult use when we're out here on every day, every aspect of the night — 2 o'clock, 3 o'clock in the morning — in the housing developments to try to stop violence."

Appearing on "The Daily Show" on Tuesday, de Blasio acknowledged the city has seen an alarming spike in shootings this year, but also said it's an issue the Police Department is handling. As of next week, 330 officers will be pulled from their usual duties for special patrols aimed at the shootings spike.

De Blasio defended curtailing the controversial "stop-and-frisk" policing technique and touted an overall drop in crime.

"We brought down murder to a rate we had not seen since the early '60s," de Blasio said. "We brought down crime across the board. We do have a shooting problem. We had a shooting problem last year; we have a shooting problem this year."

The mayor said that the shootings are centered around gang violence, and the city is rolling out aggressive anti-gang policing and intervention.

"Those strategies need to be applied," de Blasio said. "Going back to an unconstitutional, alienating approach is not only inappropriate and unfair to the populace, it doesn't work. It ties up a ton of police time and energy into things that aren't actually going after serious crime. So I think we're broadly on the right track."

De Blasio cited police retraining, body cameras and new technology as elements his administration is bringing to bear in the fight against crime.

"I think these pieces are going to add up," de Blasio said. "Because people are not wasting time on unnecessary and unconstitutional stops, and they're not wasting time on low-level marijuana arrests either."

In Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood, there were nine shootings last month. That's more than double the number for the same time last year, 1010 WINS reported. Some residents are calling for the mayor to drop his opposition to a City Council plan to hire an additional 1,000 police officers.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; "John Del Cecato"
Subject: HRC Speech Tomorrow at Texas Southern University - Voting Rights
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 7:29:45 PM

HRC is expected to deliver a speech tomorrow at Texas Southern University on voting/civil rights. She's expected to:

- Condemn the 2013 Supreme Court decision striking down part of the Voting Rights Act
- Call on Congress to re-enact parts of the Voting Rights Law
- Criticize voter suppression laws in Texas, North Carolina, Ohio, and Wisconsin – including direct criticism of Governors Walker, Bush, and Perry for actions their states have taken
- Propose a nationwide early-voting standard of at least 20 days before an election
- Call for an increase in online voter registration
- Reaffirm her stance that ex-felons should have their voting rights restored

I'll send a transcript of her remarks when it's released tomorrow.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "John Del Cecato"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: @Press Office
Subject: RE: Lauren forgot her audio recorder in the podium
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 7:33:38 PM

Pls see below and see

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 7:28 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: Lauren forgot her audio recorder in the podium

Sorry to bug - but anyone still at the Hall who can at least secure it?

Begin forwarded message:

From: Lauren Windsor <[REDACTED]>
Date: June 3, 2015 at 7:05:19 PM EDT
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Michael Lux <mlux@progressivestrategies.net>, "de Alwis, Ronalie" <rdealwis@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Lauren forgot her audio recorder in the podium

Thanks, John! And actually, if you could overnight it, that would be best-- there are some time-sensitive audio files on there. Per Mike, we will owe you big time!

Lauren Windsor
Executive Producer - Lady Libertine - The Undercurrent
www.LadyLibertine.net
@LadyLibertine27
213.595.8011

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:54 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

No worries at all - will do

On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:51 PM, Lauren Windsor <[REDACTED]> wrote:

I'm soooooo sorry for this inconvenience! I was trying to hurry and get out so the mayor could film his next segment.

Can you please put the recorder in a bubble wrap envelope with a tracking number? We'll obviously reimburse whatever that costs. Again, so sorry.

Here's the mailing address:

American Family Voices
1250 I Street NW Suite 250
Washington, DC 20005

Lauren Windsor
Executive Producer - Lady Libertine - The Undercurrent
www.LadyLibertine.net
@LadyLibertine27
213.595.8011

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:42 PM, John Del
Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Ha! Adding Ronalie. Please delete any
NSFW post interview comments!

On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:30 PM,
Michael Lux
<mlux@progressivestrategies.net
> wrote:

And it is still on. Is there one of the mayor's fine young staffers who could retrieve it, turn it off,
and send it to us?

Sorry about that!

Other than that, I thought it was a great interview:)

Sent from my iPhone

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato; B; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Netroots Nation's any feelings?
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 9:37:00 PM
Importance: High

Wow - JDC quick to diss the schedule. Good to know!

My scheduling flag is that this would be the Friday before YOU are scheduled to go to Rome. It would be a lot of travel again.

Always up for discussion, but just flagging.

On 6/3/15, 9:22 PM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>I'm in favor of this - would be a very big deal for TPA - but we have >schedule issues, so would need to Skype in, I think

>

>On 6/3/15, 7:00 PM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>>

>>What do we think of this?

>>

>>

>>-----Original Message-----

>>From: Jonathan Tasini

>>To: Bill de Blasio

>>Subject: Re: Netroots Nation's any feelings?

>>Sent: Jun 2, 2015 3:38 PM

>>

>>Brother: in case this didn't get your attention or...so I've got the >>organizers to say this now to me:

>>"We're going to have a keynote on Friday, July 17th at 3:15 pm AZ time.

>>What we're looking to do is dive in to a handful of issue areas (LGBT >>marriage, Immigration and Fight for 15/Income Inequality) and talk about >>where we won in the last year but what we have to do next. De Blasio >>would make a great anchor for that to talk about a larger progressive >>vision. And so we'd likely either have him open or close that session."

>>Interested?

>>Obviously you can talk whatever you want...they usually get good CSPAN >>coverage and a bunch of political reporters are there too. Also cool if >>it doesn't fit for you!

>>JT

>>From: Jonathan Tasini <jtasini@economicfuturegroup.com>

>>Date: Friday, May 29, 2015 2:55 PM

>>To: Bill De Blasio <[REDACTED]>

>>Subject: Netroots Nation...

>>

>>Suggestion: a convo with you at Netroots Nation...you probably know, it's
>>THE echo chamber for progressive/liberal bloggers and a very good place >>to promote your agenda on inequality, progressive politics. I asked the >>organizers--they are VERY INTERESTED.

>>Pheonix, AZ July 16th-19th (yeah, who were the idiots who thought of July >>in Pheonix).

>>General interest?

>>If yes, any date work better for you?

>>Jonathan Tasini

>>www.workinglife.org Follow me on Twitter @jonathantasini Facebook:

>><http://www.facebook.com/jonathan.tasini.3>

>>Please consider the environment before printing the contents of this >>email

>

From: Lauren Windsor
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Michael Lux; John Del Cecato; de Alwis, Ronalie
Subject: Re: Lauren forgot her audio recorder in the podium
Date: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 9:49:33 PM

Thanks, Michael! Can you please put it in a bubble envelope? (The recorder is fairly expensive.)

American Family Voices
1250 I (Eye) Street NW Suite 250
Washington, D.C. 20005

Lauren Windsor
Executive Producer - Lady Libertine - The Undercurrent
www.LadyLibertine.net
@LadyLibertine27
213.595.8011

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 3, 2015, at 9:37 PM, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> We can send but not via fedex. Where are we sending?
>
>> On 6/3/15, 8:45 PM, "Michael Lux" <mlux@progressivestrategies.net> wrote:
>>
>> We will definitely be deleting the side conversation...
>>
>> Sent from my iPhone
>>
>>> On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:42 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>>
>>> Ha! Adding Ronalie. Please delete any NSFW post interview comments!
>>>
>>>
>>>> On Jun 3, 2015, at 6:30 PM, Michael Lux
>>>> <mlux@progressivestrategies.net> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> And it is still on. Is there one of the mayor's fine young staffers >>>> who could retrieve it, turn it off, and send it to us?
>>>>
>>>> Sorry about that!
>>>>
>>>> Other than that, I thought it was a great interview:)
>>>>
>>>>> Sent from my iPhone
>

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana
Subject: RE: Pls review: Face the Nation
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:23:40 PM

Me too. Especially the part about the survey showing popularity of TPA.

-----Original Message-----

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:20 PM
To: John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana
Subject: RE: Pls review: Face the Nation

I like that!

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:18 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation

We could hit Christie on paid sick leave - clearly he's on the wrong side of 85% of Americans - and even 77% of Republicans! Contrast that with what we've done in NYC...

<http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2015/06/03/business/income-inequality-workers-rights-international-trade-poll.html>

http://www.nj.com/politics/index.ssf/2015/03/-_at_town_hall_christie_says_his_prognosis_for_pai.html

Could we do a statement or a tweet from MBDB today highlighting how Americans agree on the basic tenets of TPA?

On 6/3/15, 9:55 AM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>- B

>

>We can be in chair taping at 8:45 am. 7 minute interview. Tape in >midtown

>

>Topic: presidential politics, income inequality/progressive agenda

>Other guest on the show that day ---" undeclared republican candidate >from state adjacent to ours... You may want to talk about the tunnel" >according to the producer

>

>If it isn't Christie he said it will be some other Republican >presidential candidate

>

>HRC launching her campaign on June 14 in NYC will be part of the >discussion

>

>And I imagine her downward approval ratings...

>

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: B

>Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 6:16 AM

>To: Hagelgans, Andrea
>Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas;
>Leopold, Elana; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
>Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation

>

>

>Approved

>

>

>----- Original Message -----

>From: Hagelgans, Andrea

>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 09:43 PM

>To: B

>Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas;

>Leopold, Elana; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

>Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation

>

>Let me know if you'd like to do this one on Sunday. Thanks

>

>----- Original Message -----

>From: Hagelgans, Andrea

>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 05:41 PM

>To: 'BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov' <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas;

>Leopold, Elana

>Subject: Pls review: Face the Nation

>

>Sir,

>Face the Nation would like to have you on this Sunday for John

>Dickerson's first show since becoming host (bob schieffer retired last >week). The topic would be TPA/presidential politics. May include crime, >though that is my flag, not something they mentioned.

>

>We could tape at 8:45 am in midtown so that you could be on time for >sermon in Harlem.

>

>We recommend this opportunity for TPA.

>

>Please send me your thoughts.

>

>Best,

>Andrea

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: RE: Face the Nation is out, btw
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:41:07 PM

They started promoting yesterday at my approval

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:40 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Face the Nation is out, btw

<http://www.cbsnews.com/news/coming-up-sunday-gov-chris-christie-new-york-city-mayor-bill-de-blasio-gov-rick-perry/>

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; John Del cecato
Subject: FW: CBS NEWS: Coming up Sunday: Gov. Chris Christie, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, Gov. Rick Perry
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:43:26 PM

We prep tomorrow and I have videos for you to watch of Dickerson in action.

From: Clips
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:41 PM
Subject: CBS NEWS: Coming up Sunday: Gov. Chris Christie, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, Gov. Rick Perry

Coming up Sunday: Gov. Chris Christie, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, Gov. Rick Perry

CBS NEWS - Louise Dufresne - 12:21 pm

<http://www.cbsnews.com/news/coming-up-sunday-gov-chris-christie-new-york-city-mayor-bill-de-blasio-gov-rick-perry/>

On John Dickerson's first broadcast this Sunday, we'll be carrying on a 60 year tradition here at Face the Nation of going straight to the news.

As the race for 2016 heats up, we'll interview New Jersey Governor Chris Christie in New Hampshire, where he's been testing the waters. With ten Republicans already in the race for the White House in 2016 and Florida Governor Jeb Bush set to announce on June 15th, when will Christie jump in?

Former Texas Governor Rick Perry, who made an unsuccessful bid for the Republican nomination in 2012, officially kicks off his campaign Friday. We'll ask him why he thinks he can win this go around.

We'll also sit down with New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio to discuss the policies he's been implementing in the nation's largest city. Mayor de Blasio has yet to publicly support any candidate for president - what does he need to see from Hillary Clinton before he endorses her?

Then we'll turn to this week's news from Boston, where the FBI shot and killed terror suspect Usaama Rahim, who was allegedly planning to behead a police officer. John will sit down with Rep. Michael McCaul, who chairs the House Homeland Security Committee, to discuss the U.S.'s effort to combat violent extremism around the globe--and here at home.

As always, we have an all-star political panel to break down a busy week in news. Joining us on Sunday are Susan Page of USA Today, Jamelle Bouie of Slate, Ron Fournier of National Journal and CBS News Congressional Correspondent Nancy Cordes. Hope you'll join us.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Face the Nation is out, btw
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 1:26:07 PM

Rick Perry doesn't think there should be a federal minimum wage
<http://www.politifact.com/texas/statements/2014/may/30/democratic-national-committee/2014-rick-perry-saying-he-opposes-federal-governme/>

And slammed The Buffett Rule
<http://www.cnn.com/id/44717744>

#TheProgressiveAgenda

From: <Gunaratna>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 4, 2015 at 12:40 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Face the Nation is out, btw

<http://www.cbsnews.com/news/coming-up-sunday-gov-chris-christie-new-york-city-mayor-bill-de-blasio-gov-rick-perry/>

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic; Yazgi, Stephanie Subject: Politico
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 2:41:57 PM

Just flagging... Could be a question for Face the Nation

http://www.politico.com/story/2015/06/mayors-leading-obamas-charge-on-trade-118608.html?hp=lc3_4

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Wolfe, Emma; Schwartz, Regina; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Walzak, Phil; "jonathan@berlinrosen.com"; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Fw: May Breakdown
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 2:43:15 PM
Attachments: May 2015 Events Breakdown.pdf

Fyi- breakdown of may events

From: Gross, Dan
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 02:40 PM
To: Adams, Marti; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Norvell, Wiley
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: May Breakdown

Attached

Communications Events in May
Launches Shelter Repair Squad to Address Urgent Health and Safety Conditions in City Shelters	Housing	QN
Unveils 'NextGeneration NYCHA': A Comprehensive Plan to Secure The Future of City Public Housing.	Housing	MN
Holds Press Conference on Investing $242 Million More in Repaving and Maintaining NYC Roadways	Transportation	SI
Opens First Full Section of New Resilient Rockaway Beach Boardwalk, Kicks off Beach Season	Recovery / Resilience	QN
Announces 64 New Prose Schools Driving Innovation Across System	Education	SI

Total Number of Events and or Avails in the Month of May = 29

Attends FDNY Open House with Commissioner Nigro [Engine 58/Ladder 26]	5/2	Ceremonial		Manhattan
With Police Commissioner Bratton, Holds Media Availability at Jamaica Hospital Medical Center	5/2	Emergency	Public Safety	Queens
Attends TechCrunch Disrupt and Delivers Remarks [Manhattan Center]	5/4	Pre-Organized	Economic Development	Manhattan
Holds Public Hearings and Signs Intros 261-A, 271-A, 211-A, 597-A, 433-A, 681, and 555-A	5/6	Bill Signing		Manhattan
Delivers Remarks at One Police Plaza Memorial Wall [1PP]	5/7	Ceremonial		Manhattan
Presents Fiscal Year 2016 Executive Budget	5/7	Fiscal	Budget	Manhattan
Attends and Delivers Remarks at Funeral for Police Officer Brian Moore	5/8	Ceremonial		Non-NYC
Launches Shelter Repair Squad to Address Urgent Health and Safety Conditions in City Shelters [Corona Family Residence]	5/11	Message	Housing	Queens
Delivers Remarks at National Press Club	5/12	Message		Non-NYC
Unveils The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality	5/12	Message		Non-NYC
Hosts Press Conference with Bipartisan Coalition of Mayors to Call for Long-Term Transportation Bill	5/13	Message	Transportation	Non-NYC
Participates in Lecture with Robert Reich	5/14	Pre-Organized		Non-NYC
Delivers Remarks at Santa Clara University	5/14	Pre-Organized		Non-NYC
Holds Press Gaggle in Room 9	5/18	Avail		Manhattan
Holds Public Hearing and Signs Intros. 419-A, 178-A, 51-B, 181-A	5/18	Bill Signing		Manhattan
Delivers Remarks at CUNY Celebration for Herman Badillo [Hunter College]	5/18	Pre-Organized		Manhattan
Announces Tentative Contract Agreement with Uniformed Sanitationmen's Association, Local 831	5/19	Fiscal	Fiscal Responsibility	Manhattan
Unveils 'NextGeneration NYCHA': A Comprehensive Plan to Secure The Future of City Public Housing [James Weldon Johnson Community Center]	5/19	Message	Housing	Manhattan
Delivers Remarks and Holds Photo Spray Before Veterans' Issues Roundtable	5/21	Roundtable		Manhattan
Holds Press Conference on Investing $242 Million More in Repaving and Maintaining NYC Roadways	5/21	Message	Transportation	Staten Island
Opens First Full Section of New Resilient Rockaway Beach Boardwalk, Kicks off Beach Season [Rockaway Beach]	5/22	Message	Recovery / Resilience	Queens
Delivers Remarks and Participates in Wreath Laying Ceremony [Intrepid Sea, Air, & Space Museum]	5/25	Ceremonial		Manhattan
Marches in The Little Neck Douglaston Memorial Day Parade	5/25	Pre-Organized		Queens
Announces 64 New Prose Schools Driving Innovation Across System [Michael J. Petrides School]	5/26	Message	Education	Staten Island
Mayor de Blasio Holds Impromptu Gaggle in Albany	5/27	Avail		Albany
Mayor de Blasio Holds Media Availability in Albany	5/27	Avail		Albany
Mayor de Blasio Holds Press Gaggle in Albany	5/27	Avail		Albany
Delivers Remarks at Asian Pacific Heritage Month Reception [New York County Surrogate's Courthouse]	5/29	Ceremonial		Manhattan
Delivers Remarks at Carnegie Hall Medal of Excellence Gala [Carnegie Hall]	5/29	Pre-Organized		Manhattan

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: John Del Ceccato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: FW: TPA
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 3:59:55 PM

National People's Action signed on. I'm waiting for them to tell me how exactly they want to be listed on web page. And I told them we should talk about Iowa ideas next time he's in NYC. See below.

From: Mehrdad Azemun [<mailto:mehrdad@npa-us.org>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:56 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA

Hey Tom - we'll sign on. FYI here's the agenda / platform that we've been pushing along with Campaign for America's Future: <https://populism2015.org/the-new-populist-agenda/> - please take a look. While we're not wedded to the letter of the agenda, it expresses the ideas that we're trying to push out there.

Also, I talked with our Iowa group and we should definitely explore interests and possible timelines. I'm going to talk with our ED and then we'll likely circle back to you as a team.
MA

On Tue, Jun 2, 2015 at 5:44 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
OK let me know if NPA can be a signer. We definitely are interested in exploring the Iowa idea.

From: Mehrdad Azemun [<mailto:mehrdad@npa-us.org>]
Sent: Monday, June 01, 2015 4:39 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA

Hi Tom - great seeing you as well! Thanks for making time.

I'm following up with George (our ED) about signing on.

Here's our group in Iowa: <http://iowacci.org/> (that's their c3; their c4 is here: <http://cciaction.org/>)

I'll keep in touch - Mehrdad

On Fri, May 29, 2015 at 10:46 AM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
Here is the website on The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality. Great if NPA could sign on. Let me know. Great seeing you today.

<http://progressiveagenda.us/agenda>

Tom Snyder
Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
City Hall

New York, NY 10007
212-341-5050

--

Mehrdad Azemun
Campaign Manager
National People's Action
National People's Action Campaign
810 N. Milwaukee Ave., Chicago IL 60642
773-220-7929 (mobile)
312-676-2815 (office)
mehrdad@npa-us.org
www.npa-us.org

Twitter:

www.twitter.com/NPAction

Facebook:

www.facebook.org/NationalPeoplesAction

YouTube:

www.youtube.com/movetoaction

--

Mehrdad Azemun
Campaign Director
National People's Action
National People's Action Campaign
810 N. Milwaukee Ave., Chicago IL 60642
773-220-7929 (mobile)
312-676-2815 (office)
mehrdad@npa-us.org
www.npa-us.org

Twitter:

www.twitter.com/NPAction

Facebook:

www.facebook.org/NationalPeoplesAction

YouTube:

www.youtube.com/movetoaction

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 4:24:11 PM
Attachments: default.xml

Did we put anything out? Maybe something like:

Today's New York Times survey is further evidence of what so many progressives have been saying: income inequality is the crisis of our times, and Americans strongly support for progressive policies to address it.

The Progressive Agenda – which can be found at www.ProgressiveAgenda.us – proposes a number of bold measures to lift the floor for working families, give relief to working parents, and require those at the top to pay their fair share of taxes.

By rewarding work instead of just wealth, progressive policies represent where the vast majority of Americans are – and where Washington policymakers need to go.

On 6/4/15, 12:20 PM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>I like that!

>
>
>

>_____
>From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]

>Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:18 PM

>To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael;

>Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana

>Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation

>

>We could hit Christie on paid sick leave - clearly he's on the wrong side >of 85% of Americans - and even 77% of Republicans! Contrast that with >what we've done in NYC...

><http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2015/06/03/business/income-inequality-w>

>o

>rkers-rights-international-trade-poll.html

>http://www.nj.com/politics/index.ssf/2015/03/-_at_town_hall_christie_says

>h

>is_prognosis_for_pai.html

>

>Could we do a statement or a tweet from MBDB today highlighting how >Americans agree on the basic tenets of TPA?

>

>

>On 6/3/15, 9:55 AM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>

>wrote:

>

>>- B
>>
>>We can be in chair taping at 8:45 am. 7 minute interview. Tape in >>midtown
>>
>>Topic: presidential politics, income inequality/progressive agenda
>>Other guest on the show that day ---" undeclared republican candidate >>from state adjacent to ours... You may want to talk about the tunnel" >>according to the producer
>>
>>If it isn't Christie he said it will be some other Republican >>presidential candidate
>>
>>HRC launching her campaign on June 14 in NYC will be part of the >>discussion
>>
>>And I imagine her downward approval ratings...
>>
>>
>>-----Original Message-----
>>From: B
>>Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 6:16 AM
>>To: Hagelgans, Andrea
>>Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, >>Elana; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
>>Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation
>>
>>
>>Approved
>>
>>
>>----- Original Message -----
>>From: Hagelgans, Andrea
>>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 09:43 PM
>>To: B
>>Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold,
>>Elana; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
>>Subject: Re: Pls review: Face the Nation
>>
>>Let me know if you'd like to do this one on Sunday. Thanks
>>
>>----- Original Message -----
>>From: Hagelgans, Andrea
>>Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 2015 05:41 PM
>>To: 'BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov' <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael; Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, >>Elana
>>Subject: Pls review: Face the Nation
>>
>>Sir,
>>Face the Nation would like to have you on this Sunday for John >>Dickerson's first show since becoming host (bob schieffer retired last >>week). The topic would be TPA/presidential politics. May include crime, >>though that is my flag, not something they mentioned.
>>
>>We could tape at 8:45 am in midtown so that you could be on time for >>sermon in Harlem.
>>
>>We recommend this opportunity for TPA.
>>

>>Please send me your thoughts.

>>

>>Best,

>>Andrea

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Schwartz, Regina; Yazgi, Stephanie; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Governing magazine
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 4:30:25 PM

Agree. I think sounds good

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 04:28 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: Governing magazine

Andrea what do you think here?

I imagine someone could reach out to the mayor and ask them if they were interested, as part of the mayor's directive is to help get other mayors press.

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 2:33 PM
To: John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Schwartz, Regina
Subject: Re: Governing magazine

Adding regina in my abnsece

From: John Del Cecato
Sent: Thursday, June 4, 2015 10:49 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Governing magazine

Is a pretty respected publication & emailed TPA account with the following.. Might be good to connect JB with Hodges, Whaley, Murray?

----- Forwarded message -----

From: J.B. Wogan <jwogan@erepublic.com>
Date: Wed, Jun 3, 2015 at 1:04 PM
Subject: Governing magazine story
To: "press@progressiveagenda.us" <press@progressiveagenda.us>

Hello,

I'm interested writing about the Progressive Agenda and its role in city elections this fall. I'm curious if you're in talks with any mayoral candidates about signing the agenda.

J.B. Wogan

Staff Writer

GOVERNING | governing.com

A division of e.Republic | Smart Media for Public Sector Innovation

1100 Connecticut Ave N.W., Suite 1300

Washington, D.C. 20036

202-862-1439

@jbwogan

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: John Del cecato; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: HRC
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 7:03:46 PM

Ok

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 4, 2015, at 7:03 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

3 tomorrow. Not sure if I still have

I think just, :

Voting Rights
- She supports X
- Said X

Prisons

Minimum wage

Etc

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 7:00 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: John Del cecato; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: HRC

Don't have, but could easily whip something up. What's deadline?

Could someone send me the MTP doc?

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 4, 2015, at 6:57 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea
<AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Do we have an updated document on the positions/ statements she's made recently? Know we did something for MTP prep. Just wondering if anything recent.

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:12:05 PM

Excellent!!

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:09 PM
To: B
Subject: <no subject>

And here's what we had some of our partners send out to their lists this AM...

Friend,

Three weeks ago, The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality officially launched.

Today, a brand new New York Times poll confirms what those of us who've signed on to The Progressive Agenda already knew – the American people share our concern over income inequality, and support our progressive solutions to tackling the crisis.

Among the findings:

- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->80 percent favor paid family leave.
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->85 percent back paid sick leave.

Will you add your name to The Progressive Agenda?

From strengthening workers' rights, to curbing corporate power, to backing fair trade – the American people are with us.

The time for action is now.

Sign on to The Progressive Agenda to build on this momentum.

Best,

NAME

ORGANIZATION

Sign up: www.ProgressiveAgenda.us

Follow The Progressive Agenda on Twitter at: @TheP2Agenda

From: Wiley, Maya
To: ifdc@akpdmedia.com
Subject: Got 2 minutes?
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 8:42:41 AM

Sent from my iPhone

From: Singleton, Jessica
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Jacobs, Steven; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: Jobs Friday
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:34:38 AM

Totally. Wasn't thinking this was for validation, more just bringing into the tw convo about jobs report.

> On Jun 5, 2015, at 09:33, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> I guess that's ok... But TPA is obviously much more validated by yesterday's > NYT front-page story on the guts of our agenda than new US jobs numbers..
>
>
>
> On 6/5/15, 9:25 AM, "Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)" <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>
> wrote:
>
>> I like
>>
>>
>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 9:20 AM, Singleton, Jessica
>>> <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> Let's get confirmation. Do you all approve?
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 09:16, Jacobs, Steven <stjacobs@digital.nyc.gov>
>>>> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> I'll add these into the queue for this morning unless there are any >>>> objections.
>>>>
>>>> On 6/5/15 8:54 AM, "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>>> wrote:
>>>>
>>>>> Two tweets:
>>>>>
>>>>> Jobs report underscores the purpose of the #p2Agenda: ensure that >>>>> economic growth & prosperity lift up every rung of the economic >>>>> ladder.
>>>>>
>>>>> .@NYCgov programs like @nyctehtalent give New Yorkers the skills >>>>> needed
>>>>> to access opportunities in a growing economy.
>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 08:42, Singleton, Jessica
>>>>>> <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>>
>>>>>> Specifically this from nyt
>>>>>>
>>>>>> recovery from the recession, now reaching its sixth anniversary, has >>>>>> been uneven, lifting the fortunes of some Americans while others >>>>> languish.

>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 08:41, Singleton, Jessica
>>>>> <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>> + Steve. I'm just reading the sop. Last time was just about why we >>>>> need progressive agenda to support families getting back into >>>>> workforce, underemployment. And a second about diversifying nyc's >>>>> economy as a way to mitigate risk.
>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 08:38, Hagelgans, Andrea
>>>>>> <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>>
>>>>>> Totally
>>>>>>
>>>>>> Adding jDC. Did we end up doing anything on the poll yesterday?
>>>>>>
>>>>>>
>>>>>> ----- Original Message -----
>>>>>> From: Singleton, Jessica
>>>>>> Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 08:35 AM
>>>>>> To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Hinton, >>>>>> Karen
>>>>>> Subject: Jobs Friday
>>>>>>
>>>>>> Numbers just came out. Wanna tweet?
>>>>>> 280k jobs
>>>>>> 5.5 unemployment
>

From: Jacobs, Steven
To: Singleton, Jessica; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
Subject: Re: Jobs Friday
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:49:36 AM

Yup, will do

On 6/5/15 9:45 AM, "Singleton, Jessica" <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>We can't change the policy but we can definitely tweet about something >without linking to it. And we always do tweeters, which do include links
>-- just flag if you don't see it in the mix
>
>Steve, will you add language about the poll to tweeters?
>
>The jobs suggestion is not apples to apples with the poll. I was >targeting a niche audience who are tw about the report and using p2agenda >reference and tech talent pipeline. Timeliness is important for the tw >algorithm. If there isn't an existing conversation about something on tw, >it doesn't get us much.

>
>
>
>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 09:38, Hagelgans, Andrea
>><AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>
>> We need to find another way then to get the poll in. Feel like we limit >>ourselves a lot by that policy. Understand reasons for it, but doesn't >>mean topic shouldn't be addressed

>>
>> -----Original Message-----
>> From: Singleton, Jessica
>> Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:38 AM
>> To: Hinton, Karen
>> Cc: Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Jacobs, >>Steven; Hagelgans, Andrea
>> Subject: Re: Jobs Friday

>> We don't tweet to outside urls from mayor or gov handles.

>>
>>
>>
>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 09:36, Hinton, Karen <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>>wrote:

>>>
>>> Do both: jobs numbers and ny times.

>>> -----Original Message-----
>>> From: Walzak, Phil
>>> Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:35 AM
>>> To: 'John Del Cecato'; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Singleton, Jessica
>>> Cc: Jacobs, Steven; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
>>> Subject: RE: Jobs Friday

>>>
>>> Then lets do the thing

>>>
>>> -----Original Message-----
>>> From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
>>> Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:34 AM
>>> To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Singleton, Jessica
>>> Cc: Jacobs, Steven; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
>>> Subject: Re: Jobs Friday
>>>
>>> I guess that's ok... But TPA is obviously much more validated by >>> yesterday's NYT front-page story on the guts of our agenda than new US >>> jobs numbers...
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>> On 6/5/15, 9:25 AM, "Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)" <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>
>>> wrote:
>>>
>>>> I like
>>>>
>>>>
>>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 9:20 AM, Singleton, Jessica
>>>>> <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>> Let's get confirmation. Do you all approve?
>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 09:16, Jacobs, Steven <stjacobs@digital.nyc.gov>
>>>>>> wrote:
>>>>>>
>>>>>> I'll add these into the queue for this morning unless there are any >>>>>> objections.
>>>>>>
>>>>>> On 6/5/15 8:54 AM, "Singleton, Jessica" >>>>>> <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
>>>>>> wrote:
>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Two tweets:
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> Jobs report underscores the purpose of the #p2Agenda: ensure that >>>>>>> economic growth & prosperity lift up every rung of the economic >>>>>>> ladder.
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>> .@NYCgov programs like @nychtechtalent give New Yorkers the skills >>>>>>> needed to access opportunities in a growing economy.
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 08:42, Singleton, Jessica
>>>>>>>> <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> Specifically this from nyt
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> recovery from the recession, now reaching its sixth anniversary, >>>>>>>> has been uneven, lifting the fortunes of some Americans while >>>>>>>> others languish.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 08:41, Singleton, Jessica
>>>>>>>>> <JSingleton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> + Steve. I'm just reading the sop. Last time was just about why >>>>>>>>> + we >>>>>>>>> need progressive agenda to support families getting back into >>>>>>>>> workforce, underemployment. And a second about diversifying >>>>>>>>> nyc's economy as a way to mitigate risk.
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> On Jun 5, 2015, at 08:38, Hagelgans, Andrea
>>>>>>>>> <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> Totally
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> Adding jDC. Did we end up doing anything on the poll yesterday?
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> ----- Original Message -----
>>>>>>>>> From: Singleton, Jessica
>>>>>>>>> Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 08:35 AM
>>>>>>>>> To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); >>>>>>>>> Hinton, Karen
>>>>>>>>> Subject: Jobs Friday
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> Numbers just came out. Wanna tweet?
>>>>>>>>> 280k jobs
>>>>>>>>> 5.5 unemployment
>>>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:57:48 AM

330 on the 19th works for me!

From: <Snyder>, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 9:23 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: FW: TPA

Here is how to list the new sign-on:

George Goehl, National People's Action

They can meet on the 19th around 3:30pm. Does that work for you. We will need to have some concrete ideas of what we want to do in Iowa if we meet with them.

From: Mehrdad Azemun [<mailto:mehrdad@npa-us.org>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 11:11 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA

George Goehl, National People's Action is fine.

I'll be back in town on June 19th but have a meeting from 9 am til 3 pm. We could do a call before that date if you need.

On Thu, Jun 4, 2015 at 2:57 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
OK excellent. How should we name your sign on? ED plus org name? Also, if you are going to be in NYC let's see if we can move the ball on Iowa.

From: Mehrdad Azemun [<mailto:mehrdad@npa-us.org>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 12:56 PM

To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA

Hey Tom - we'll sign on. FYI here's the agenda / platform that we've been pushing along with Campaign for America's Future: <https://populism2015.org/the-new-populist-agenda/> - please take a look. While we're not wedded to the letter of the agenda, it expresses the ideas that we're trying to push out there.

Also, I talked with our Iowa group and we should definitely explore interests and possible timelines. I'm going to talk with our ED and then we'll likely circle back to you as a team.
MA

On Tue, Jun 2, 2015 at 5:44 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

OK let me know if NPA can be a signer. We definitely are interested in exploring the Iowa idea.

From: Mehrdad Azemun [mailto:mehrdad@npa-us.org]
Sent: Monday, June 01, 2015 4:39 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA

Hi Tom - great seeing you as well! Thanks for making time.

I'm following up with George (our ED) about signing on.

Here's our group in Iowa: <http://iowacci.org/> (that's their c3; their c4 is here: <http://cciaction.org/>)

I'll keep in touch - Mehrdad

On Fri, May 29, 2015 at 10:46 AM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
Here is the website on The Progressive Agenda to Combat Income Inequality. Great if NPA could sign on. Let me know. Great seeing you today.

<http://progressiveagenda.us/agenda>

Tom Snyder
Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
City Hall
New York, NY 10007
212-341-5050

--

Mehrdad Azemun
Campaign Manager
National People's Action
National People's Action Campaign
810 N. Milwaukee Ave., Chicago IL 60642
773-220-7929 (mobile)
312-676-2815 (office)
mehrdad@npa-us.org
www.npa-us.org

Twitter:
www.twitter.com/NPAction
Facebook:
www.facebook.org/NationalPeoplesAction
YouTube:
www.youtube.com/movetoaction

--

Mehrdad Azemun
Campaign Director
National People's Action
National People's Action Campaign
810 N. Milwaukee Ave., Chicago IL 60642
773-220-7929 (mobile)
312-676-2815 (office)
mehrdad@npa-us.org
www.npa-us.org

Twitter:

www.twitter.com/NPAction

Facebook:

www.facebook.org/NationalPeoplesAction

YouTube:

www.youtube.com/movetoaction

--

Mehrdad Azemun
Campaign Director
National People's Action
National People's Action Campaign
810 N. Milwaukee Ave., Chicago IL 60642
773-220-7929 (mobile)
312-676-2815 (office)
mehrdad@npa-us.org
www.npa-us.org

Twitter:

www.twitter.com/NPAction

Facebook:

www.facebook.org/NationalPeoplesAction

YouTube:

www.youtube.com/movetoaction

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: US News story
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 10:08:36 AM

JDC, Random thought: what do you think of Moyers as possible moderator?

Phil: do you want us all to discuss this before going to B ? If so I will get it scheduled.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 10:04 AM
To: Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: US News story

My thought is this.

MBDB is really intent on doing something big for TPA.

The two ideas on the table right now that qualify as big in his mind are presidential forum & some sort of organizing effort in IA/NH/SC/NV...

The former is a lot easier/cheaper to pursue - with much less chance of backlash, in my opinion.

Plus, he's been on the record several times saying we were going to do this presidential forum, so there's that.

Tom & I have talked about how we might pull this off - making it a way to insert income inequality into national conversation without causing unnecessary heartburn.

Here's what I sent MBDB the other day (although he hasn't responded)... Tom flagged that Goldman Sachs might not be the right choice for co-sponsor (for obvious reasons) - but I do think a non-traditional host would give the thing credibility

Presidential forum on income inequality.

In the fall of 2015, we would convene a forum – not a debate – with presidential candidates of both parties.

We have had initial discussions with CNN as the sponsor. They are interested.

We would need mainstream reporters as moderators – maybe Jake Tapper, Paul Krugman, and a reporter from Telemundo or Univision.

The best venue would be a college campus in Washington, DC – although we should consider also consider NYC, Ohio, Florida, and Virginia as well.

Each candidate would appear individually, for 15-20 minutes. They would answer a range of questions posed by the moderators, submitted by TPA partners, and everyday people – all of them focused on combatting income inequality.

The crowd would be a mix of students and non-students. The crowd would be strictly instructed to not make noise. The event would span an entire morning or afternoon, depending on how many candidates agree to appear.

There would be no “gotcha” questions – i.e., the topics would NOT include the candidates’ personal wealth, or positions they’ve taken in the past. Instead, the focus would be on the candidates’ visions for closing the wealth gap as President.

We would seek sponsorship by both progressive groups AND non-traditional groups – think SEIU and Goldman Sachs. That would give nervous candidates some reassurance that this was a straight-ahead policy discussion, and not a rigged show.

The goal should be to announce the forum in July – with the event itself taking place right after Labor Day.

From: <Snyder>, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 9:51 AM
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: US News story

Sure – let’s get John’s outline of plan of action and then discuss. I just want to get us moving on it since I presume this will take tons of lead time if indeed we make the attempt.

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:42 AM
To: Snyder, Thomas; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea Subject: RE: US News story

-BdB

Can we arrive at a consensus at whats real/smart and then take a unified rec to mayor? Feel like there are some differing views on how to best do this/how to do

From: Snyder, Thomas
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:41 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; B; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: US News story

How can we move on our “Forum” (not debate) idea asap? Assume we would need HRC agreement to participate? Or not? What will it take to get our oar in the water immediately? What are the key ingredients: moderator, audience, candidate agreement, TV ? I recommend John outline what has to be done and let us know if we need Mayor to weigh in before moving ahead.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:28 AM
To: B; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: US News story

Is Hillary Ready for More Debates?

Progressives are pushing to add more debates to the Democratic slate, but will the party's leading candidate oblige?

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton speaks at Texas Southern University on Thursday in Houston.

By David Catanese June 4, 2015 | 6:48 p.m. EDT+ More

Since January, Republicans with dreams of occupying the White House have dutifully traipsed to a dozen gatherings before audiences eager to compare and contrast their options for the presidency.

In order, there was the Iowa Freedom Summit, the Freedom Partners Koch brothers summit, the Conservative Political Action Conference, the Iowa Ag Summit, the South Carolina National Security Action Summit, the New Hampshire Freedom Summit, the First In the Nation Republican Leadership Summit, the Iowa Faith & Freedom Coalition forum, the South Carolina Freedom Summit, the National Review Ideas Summit, the Southern Republican Leadership Conference and Florida Gov. Rick Scott's Economic Growth Summit.

RELATED

Hillary Clinton's Treatment of Press Shows Contempt for the American Public

And on Saturday, the GOP contenders will make it a baker's dozen by descending on Boone, Iowa, for Sen. Joni Ernst's "Roast and Ride." which is also, essentially, a summit. With motorcycles and barbecue.

These summits aren't debates, but they do allow likely primary voters to measure a contender's message, style and substance against his or her competitors. Additionally, they attract gobs of media attention for the slew of contenders seeking a breakout moment.

Yet so far, all of this action has taken place on the Republican side.

The Democratic field, which grew to four this week, has had no such platforms. Not one.

What's more, while Republicans have agreed to hold at least nine and up to a dozen primary debates, the Democratic National Committee is only sanctioning half as many.

All of this is resulting in an obvious dialogue disparity between the two parties, one that progressives are now moving to remedy, U.S. News has learned.

In a move which could potentially place pressure on front-runner Hillary Clinton to interact with her field of Democratic rivals sooner than expected, the Progressive Change Campaign Committee has made initial inquiries to Democratic campaigns about holding one or more additional debates, beginning as early as this August.

The PCCC, an ardent cheerleader of the Elizabeth Warren wing of the Democratic Party, is advocating what they're dubbing an "open debate" format, in which questions would be formulated by voters rather than media figures.

They've even begun a dialogue with conservative groups to organize a similar venture among Republican candidates, and are floating the idea of holding an "open debate" for the general election.

The initial test, though, will be whether the liberal group can foster agreement to participate from all camps on the Democratic side.

"Debates are absolutely essential if we want a race to the top with them racing with each other to support big ideas," PCCC co-founder Adam Green says. "There's going to be broad support among most progressives for more debates, not less."

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley signaled swift interest in the organization's pitch.

"It's a great idea," says Lis Smith, O'Malley's deputy campaign manager. "Gov. O'Malley enjoys taking unscripted questions from voters wherever he goes, and we think it's critical that Democrats have more – not fewer – debates."

Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, meanwhile, is circulating a petition and imploring the Democratic Party to begin holding debates this summer, seemingly eager to take part in any format.

"More debates will encourage more people to vote, and when more people vote, Democrats win," he wrote in an email to supporters this week.

| |

RELATED

But it's Clinton's participation that's the key to this effort, and so far her campaign has been quiet on the topic.

Pollster: Don't Believe Clinton Polls

After the DNC announced its plan for six debates, Clinton tweeted that she's "looking forward to a real conversation," without making a firm commitment to the number proposed. Her campaign did not respond to multiple inquiries from U.S. News.

"We informed Hillary that this was brewing and let them know we'd like to talk to them about it," Green says. Asked if he thought Clinton would ultimately sign on to his idea, he replied, "We will find out."

As a historic party front-runner leading her field by an exorbitant margin in the polls, there may not be much incentive for Clinton to expose herself further.

But that's where pressure from interest groups and her rivals comes in. O'Malley, Sanders and newly minted candidate Lincoln Chafee have shied away from attacking Clinton directly so far, but that's prone to change if she's skirting engaging with them. In fact, this could become the first fault line in what's been a quiet primary.

And the PCCC isn't the only group that will be looking for facetime with all of the candidates.

"We'll look for opportunities, once the field is set in the fall, to have all the candidates engage with and make the case to our 8 million members on key issues they care about," Ilya Sheyman, executive director of MoveOn.org Political Action – one of the nation's leading progressive groups – tells U.S. News in an email.

During the 2008 campaign, the last time there was an open-seat race for the presidency, Democrats held more than two dozen debates between their candidates, which eventually narrowed from eight to only Clinton and Barack Obama.

The glaring reduction this cycle may best be explained by the perceived lack of competitiveness on the Democratic side of the ledger. While a cast of more than a dozen

Republicans are bunched up in national and early primary state polling, Clinton looms as the nominee-in-waiting, amassing a 46-point lead over her Democratic rivals in the latest CNN survey.

RELATED

Hillary, Jeb Are Slipping in Public Support

"I just don't see where there's an opening for anybody," Democratic pollster Celinda Lake says. "There's not a lot of Democratic primary voters looking for an alternative to Hillary Clinton."

Many progressives consider that argument irrelevant, though. They see early debates as the only way to pressure Clinton on their pet issues, such as college affordability, financial regulation and expanding Social Security.

Plus, Green thinks his unique format could be potentially advantageous to Clinton, because the questions will be driven by substance, not cable newshounds trying to advance headlines on topics like The Clinton Foundation or her email use.

"I assume they'd much rather talk about college affordability and Social Security than more petty things like the right-wing scandal of the day," he says.

Whereas Republicans worry a protracted debate schedule could damage their party brand and wear down their ultimate nominee, some Democrats see less risk in greater exposure of their national candidates.

"Our candidates, with the exception of Bernie Sanders, aren't a bunch of crazy people. I don't worry about them saying something that would hurt the party brand. I think getting our ideas out there in the mainstream would benefit," says Boyd Brown, a Democratic National Committee member from South Carolina and an O'Malley supporter. "The more debate, the better."

Now they wait to see if Clinton agrees.

From: Martinez, Julien
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; John Del Cecato
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 12:11:00 PM

Haven't been able to find the full report online. I believe it's only available through a subscription at this link:

<http://www.nber.org/papers/w21174.pdf>

But I was able to find these similar studies regarding WV:

<http://www.wvpolicy.org/income-inequality-continues-to-grow-in-west-virginia>

<http://www.wvpolicy.org/income-inequality-at-historic-high-in-wv>

-----Original Message-----

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 11:20 AM
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Jon Fromowitz; Martinez, Julien
Subject: Re: <no subject>

I'm out of the office today. Looping Julien to assist.

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 5, 2015, at 9:24 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>
> I couldn't find the actual report this story references, but it's an interesting TPA talking point/comeback to be able to say that income inequality isn't just hitting NYC... Over the past 30 years, the top 1 percent in WV saw income gains of 60 percent, while everybody else fell back...
>
> <http://www.wdtv.com/wdtv.cfm?func=view&ion=5-News&item=Income-Inequality-Worsens-in-West-Virginia-23534>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Fwd: BLOOMBERG: De Blasio Wants Clinton to Back End to Carried-Interest Loophole
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 12:40:16 PM

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Clips <Clips@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 5, 2015 at 12:34:14 PM EDT
Subject: BLOOMBERG: De Blasio Wants Clinton to Back End to Carried-Interest Loophole

De Blasio Wants Clinton to Back End to Carried-Interest Loophole

BLOOMBERG – Henry Goldman

<http://www.bloomberg.com/politics/articles/2015-06-05/de-blasio-wants-clinton-to-back-end-to-carried-interest-loophole>

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio insisted that former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton call for higher taxes on the wealthy, a $15-an-hour minimum wage and an end to preferential treatment for carried interest earned by private-equity managers.

De Blasio, a self-described progressive, said in April that he was withholding his endorsement of Clinton in the 2016 Democratic presidential primary until she lays out specific plans for tacking income inequality.

In a radio interview Friday with Brian Lehrer on WNYC, de Blasio said Clinton should back investor Warren Buffett's suggestion of taxing chief executives at a higher rate than their employees and support an end to the rule that allows profits earned by private-equity managers, venture capitalists and some hedge funds to be taxed as capital gains rather than ordinary income.

"These are the kinds of things that have to happen to change the country and I look forward to hearing her vision of how she'll address these issues," he said.

The mayor said he was "very impressed" by Clinton's stands on immigration, criminal justice and expanded voter eligibility.

De Blasio, 53, managed the former first lady's successful 2000 bid to become a U.S. senator from New York, and in 1997 he worked for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in her husband's administration.

He made national news April 12 when he refused to endorse Clinton on the day she declared that she was in the race.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: <no subject>
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 1:48:57 PM

Some good stats in here vis a vis being a real populist & its impact on turnout...

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/erik-ose/why-kay-hagan-lost-in-north-carolina_b_6143286.html

From: John Del Cecato
To: Williams, Dominic; Shorris, Anthony; Gunaratna, Mahen; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: FW: TPP materials
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 2:10:17 PM
Attachments: No on TPP Adam Hersh Roosevelt InstituteFINAL.docx

This is mostly for Dom - but some good stuff in here - although it's dense (as one might expect from esteemed economists!)

In a word, I like the nuggets on patents/generic Rx drugs, ISDS undermining US regulations designed to protect consumers health & safety, and - of course - jobs both in manufacturing & high-skilled service industries leaving faster than they'd be replaced... Also, since MBDB loves stats, the economic impact of .4 percent - a "rounding error" as they say" - drives home the point that we should be getting a lot more out of a deal with 40% of the world's economy

From: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 10:31 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Aaron PickrellEmail <[REDACTED]>
Cc: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: TPP materials

John and Aaron,

Here are the two pieces I mentioned:

1. Prof. Stiglitz's letter to Congressional leaders: <http://www.rooseveltinstitute.org/joseph-stiglitz-and-trans-pacific-partnership-tpp>
2. My (forthcoming) op-ed (attached).

I'll circle back to everyone with more intel on targets as well as some TPs for Sunday.

Great to be working together!

Best,

Adam

Adam S. Hersh, Ph.D.
Senior Economist, Roosevelt Institute
Visiting Scholar, Columbia University Initiative for Policy Dialogue

博
斯福研究所, 家
哥 学, 行政策 ,客座学者

@adamshersh

On Thu, Jun 4, 2015 at 3:02 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Yes - please send letter and additional talking points - that would be great. We obviously don't want to personalize it at all - but we like to be prepared to vigorously defend our position.

How about a call around 5?

On Jun 4, 2015, at 3:00 PM, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Nice. Next steps? Should we get on the phone? Looping Marcus (whom you guys know) and Adam Hersh (senior economist I mentioned...this was his good idea actually). Let Adam know what you need for Sunday, and we always accept shout outs. Thanks. Stiglitz sent a letter to Congress (which Adam co-authored), which we can send to you right away. And Adam has some good TPs (not written down yet, however) to respond to Obama's mayors angle.

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Thu, Jun 4, 2015 at 2:43 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Hey Dave. Yes - definitely interested in talking... MBDB is doing Face the Nation on Sunday, and we'd be happy to trumpet some of your work on this there, too

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 4, 2015 at 1:46 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Aaron PickrellEmail <[REDACTED]>
Subject: BdB/RI on TPP/TPA

How's that for acronym overuse?

John, I spoke briefly w/ Aaron about an idea we had around responding to this:

Mayors leading Obama's charge on trade
http://www.politico.com/story/2015/06/mayors-leading-obamas-charge-on-trade-118608.html?hp=lc3_4

The article mentions BdB and his progressive agenda.

Gist of idea: A call w/ reporters, BdB, some Mayors who aren't pro-TPA/TPP & our resident expert (senior economist, Adam Hersh).

Let me know if you're interested and want to chat. Hope you're well.

Dave

PS- We should all also do a post-May 12 follow-up to update each other and see if there are ways to continue to coordinate.

— — —
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

Why Congress should vote no on the pending Pacific trade deal

By Adam S. Hersh

June 3, 2015

The Obama administration's effort to expand economic relations with 11 Asia-Pacific nations is critical U.S. endeavor that also uniquely sparks intra-party political battles. The administration argues Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) is essential to America "winning the future" in a globalized economy.

Beyond political headlines, this agreement is an intricate legal text. Assessing its economic impacts warrants commensurately detailed analysis. Roosevelt Institute Chief Economist Joseph Stiglitz wrote in his recent letter to congressional leaders, such analysis suggests lawmakers and voters should reject TPP in its current form and seek expanded trade under fundamentally different rules.

In truth, TPP has less to do with freeing trade, creating jobs, or raising wages than with rewriting the rules of the global economy to favor big businesses at the expense of most everyone else. Its foremost effects would not be lowering trade barriers between countries, but rewriting the economic rules within countries. The rules do not embody economic principles of open competition so much as the preferences of industry lobbyists that had the best seats at the U.S. Trade Representative's table. The outcome is an agreement that fails to address America's economic needs and geostrategic goals.

TPP economics: Reason to expect little growth, more inequality

The most generous models predicting TPP's economic impact—from the Peterson Institute for International Economics—estimate it would raise U.S. GDP by $88 billion (in today's prices) by 2025. This less than 0.4 percent increase is smaller than the rounding error in official GDP calculations. Why is impact so low from a trade bloc covering 40 percent of world GDP? Most welfare gains derive from countries lowering their own barriers—something we have largely done.

Even if one expected different equity outcomes from more growth given the same unequal U.S. distribution structure, there's reason to believe TPP will lead to higher inequality: trade adjustment would eliminate jobs and businesses in more labor-intensive industries—not just manufacturing, but in services of increasingly higher skill—faster than trade creates them in expanding industries. Recent research by MIT economists Daron Acemoglu, David Autor, and co-authors shows that such import shocks decimate local economies, causing higher unemployment, slower wage growth, and straining social expenditures and tax revenues.

TPP goes far beyond mere tariffs and trade

All sides agree TPP's most significant provisions address "behind the border" measures—not what happens between countries, but how the economic rules will work within countries.

To highlight two major issues, first is TPP's investor–state dispute settlement mechanism (ISDS). Here, Elizabeth Warren and progressives are joined by the likes of the Cato Institute and The Economist magazine in raising concerns that ISDS serves to empower global businesses against public regulation. Understandably, global businesses would like assurance against expropriation and discriminatory treatment where rule of law is underdeveloped. But they can already buy private insurance against such risks. That USTR also insists on ISDS in an agreement with Europe, where no one questions legal standards, reveals the lie that this is about protecting investor rights, rather than expanding them.

Second is TPP's expansive intellectual property protections. Economic research is clear that patents do not increase innovation or growth. Rather, they serve to raise consumer prices and restrain competition. The agreement reportedly will allow "ever-greening" of drug patents and aim for more stringent exclusivity for biosimilar medicines than even President Obama's budget proposed, meaning less access to medicines and slower development of new ones in TPP members and beyond.

TPP tackles 21st century foreign policy challenges with a 20th century mindset

Proponents also argue TPP's importance to buttressing Asia-Pacific allies with an implicit economic ring-fence around China's rising power and influence. It's a Cold War containment strategy, but in the 21st century the United States is no longer the epicenter of the world economy. China's economic transformation under authoritarian capitalism and expanding geopolitical influence pose real foreign and economic challenges for the United States. A strategic agreement countering China's rising influence, to be effective, requires two things: First, it must truly set high standards for international trade and investment; second, it must largely exclude China from the benefits, diverting investment and trade to TPP countries, thereby enticing China to rise to TPP standards. TPP does neither.

Chinese officials and technocrats are as enthusiastic about TPP as the Business Roundtable. That's because the 1 percent in both countries stand to gain hugely from a deal allowing both to expand supply chains into lower-cost developing Asia.

TPP will not lock-in a U.S. advantage. China is already more integrated than the U.S. with TPP countries: their total trade in the region nearly doubles ours, and they outpace us in foreign direct investment in all members except Canada and Mexico. Integration with TPP countries means that Chinese producers can enjoy the agreement's benefits by investing in or trading through TPP countries, without reciprocating to TPP's preferential terms. How big an economy is and its geographical proximity to others—the "gravitational factors"—matter much more for international trade patterns than do agreements like TPP. China will be bigger, grow faster, and be geographically and culturally closer to these countries no matter what we do.

Last, American-led TPP does little to out-compete the influence bought with China's nearly $300 billion commitment to development financing in the Asia Infrastructure Investment Bank and other initiatives. U.S. officials strategically sought to brow-beat allies into shunning China's proposal. They earned no coalition of the unwilling, just a diplomatic blunder isolating us from the global community and losing us a seat at the table. Now, they are worried about damaging America's reputation if Congress rejects TPP?

What to do with a bad agreement?

Those marching TPP toward passage are right that strengthening international relationships is essential for ongoing U.S. leadership—be it economic, political, or cultural. No American should relish a failure to build deeper, more open relations with foreign partners, nor should we retreat from trying. But getting to a deal that serves more than the narrow interests of big corporations, their CEOs and shareholders will require Americans be willing to walk away from the written without their voice.

Adam S. Hersh is Senior Economist at the Roosevelt Institute and a visiting scholar at Columbia University's Initiative for Policy Dialogue.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 2:27:54 PM

I should be - although I'm having an appliance delivered sometime that day, so i will know better on Wednesday night/Thursday morning

From: "<Da Costa>", Ricky <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 11:20 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Morning Jon,

Tom wants to huddle with you, Phil and Andrea next Thursday (6/11). Are you free between 12-3 by chance?

Thanks,
Ricky

Ricky Da Costa
Special Assistant to the Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
212.788.7751 (o)
516.425.2160 (m)

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "John Del Cecato"
Cc: Hinton, Karen
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 2:47:26 PM

Yes, if he is game

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 2:46 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: <no subject>

Are you going to be with MBDB at FTN? Could we get you to record a 6-second Vine when he's backstage - just saying "I'm about to go on Face the Nation to talk about rewarding work & not wealth. Sign on at ProgressiveAgenda.us today!"

From: Da Costa, Ricky
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:10:10 PM

Sounds like a plan. I'll circle back in a bit

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:09 PM
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Before the next planning meeting so MBDB doesn't yell at me!

From: "<Da Costa>", "Da Costa, Ricky" <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 3:08 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

He's in a meeting now but let me ask & see what we can work out. What's your ideal timing?

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:06 PM
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

If this is regarding TPA presidential forum - is there any way to do it earlier in the week than Thursday?

From: "<Da Costa>", "Da Costa, Ricky" <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 11:20 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Morning Jon,

Tom wants to huddle with you, Phil and Andrea next Thursday (6/11). Are you free between 12-3 by chance?

Thanks,
Ricky

Ricky Da Costa
Special Assistant to the Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
212.788.7751 (o)
516.425.2160 (m)

From: Da Costa, Ricky
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:50:57 PM

Ok, just need to double-check with Phil & Andrea. Will confirm shortly

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:50 PM
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

sure

From: "<Da Costa>", "Da Costa, Ricky" <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 3:48 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Can you do Wednesday AM?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:09 PM
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Before the next planning meeting so MBDB doesn't yell at me!

From: "<Da Costa>", "Da Costa, Ricky" <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 3:08 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

He's in a meeting now but let me ask & see what we can work out. What's your ideal timing?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:06 PM
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

If this is regarding TPA presidential forum - is there any way to do it earlier in the week than Thursday?

From: "<Da Costa>", "Da Costa, Ricky" <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 11:20 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Morning Jon,

Tom wants to huddle with you, Phil and Andrea next Thursday (6/11). Are you free between 12-3 by chance?

Thanks,
Ricky

Ricky Da Costa
Special Assistant to the Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
212.788.7751 (o)
516.425.2160 (m)

From: de Alwis, Ronalie
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Chao, Raymond; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: RE: MBDB: Prep for Face the Nation
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 5:28:41 PM

Hi all!

We are delayed for this meeting!

R

-----Original Appointment-----

From: Carey, Michael

Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 2:56 PM

To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; de Alwis, Ronalie; Chao, Raymond; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil

Subject: MBDB: Prep for Face the Nation

When: Friday, June 05, 2015 5:30 PM-7:00 PM (UTC-05:00) Eastern Time (US & Canada).

Where: City Hall, The Mayor's Office

From: John Del Cecato
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 6:45:55 PM

Thanks you too!

On Jun 5, 2015, at 6:16 PM, Da Costa, Ricky <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Going to send a calendar invite shortly for 11am Weds. Let me know if that doesn't work or if anything changes. Thanks & have a great weekend!

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:50 PM
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

sure

From: "<Da Costa>", "Da Costa, Ricky" <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 3:48 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Can you do Wednesday AM?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:09 PM
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Before the next planning meeting so MBDB doesn't yell at me!

From: "<Da Costa>", "Da Costa, Ricky" <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 3:08 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

He's in a meeting now but let me ask & see what we can work out. What's your ideal timing?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 3:06 PM
To: Da Costa, Ricky
Subject: Re: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

If this is regarding TPA presidential forum - is there any way to do it earlier in the week than Thursday?

From: "<Da Costa>", "Da Costa, Ricky" <RDaCosta@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 11:20 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Meeting with Tom/Andrea/Phil

Morning Jon,

Tom wants to huddle with you, Phil and Andrea next Thursday (6/11). Are you free between 12-3 by chance?

Thanks,
Ricky

Ricky Da Costa
Special Assistant to the Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
212.788.7751 (o)
516.425.2160 (m)

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "John Del Cecato"; de Alwis, Ronalie
Cc: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Chao, Raymond; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: MBDB: Prep for Face the Nation
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 6:57:02 PM

Be nice to other dems!

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 6:46 PM
To: de Alwis, Ronalie
Cc: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Chao, Raymond; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: MBDB: Prep for Face the Nation

I just got out of meeting and can call in - or happy to let you guys carry ball

On Jun 5, 2015, at 6:26 PM, de Alwis, Ronalie <rdealwis@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Please gather!

-----Original Appointment-----

From: Carey, Michael
Sent: Wednesday, June 03, 2015 2:56 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; de Alwis, Ronalie; Chao, Raymond;
'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: MBDB: Prep for Face the Nation
When: Friday, June 05, 2015 5:30 PM-7:00 PM (UTC-05:00) Eastern Time (US & Canada).
Where: City Hall, The Mayor's Office

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re: June 13
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 7:04:44 PM

Will do

> On Jun 5, 2015, at 6:55 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
>
> HRC campaign kick-off and major speech?? We need to keep the TPA energy up leading up to this, and get all TPA leaders out talking asap. Pls discuss tmrw. Find me

From: Wolfe, Emma
To: B; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Huff Po: HRC First Campaign Event
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 7:06:16 PM

Hillary Clinton Gets Ready For First Campaign Rally

May 29, 2015 | Updated 4 days ago

NEW YORK -- Hillary Clinton

will use a kickoff rally next month to lay out her most detailed policy vision to date, bringing together ideas and themes she has started to discuss during campaign stops so far in Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina.

This speech will be the architecture and the operating manual for the campaign, according to senior campaign officials who briefed reporters Thursday at their headquarters in Brooklyn. Clinton will center her remarks around where the country is, where the country needs to go and why she is the best person to take Americans there.

Over the summer, the campaign will roll out specific policy proposals that Clinton believes are the best ways for moving the country forward. Clinton officially jumped into the 2016 presidential field on April 12. Since then, she has focused on small events like roundtable discussions with voters in the four early primary states.

June 13 will mark Clinton's first big event, which will be open to the public. The campaign has not yet announced where it will be held, but is expected to do so in the next few days. Campaign officials said former President Bill Clinton and the couple's daughter, Chelsea, will be in attendance, although they won't be deeply involved in the campaign for months.

On the campaign trail, Clinton has talked about the four pillars of her campaign -- what she has called "big fights" -- that will also no doubt come up during her kickoff. Those include building an "economy of tomorrow," strengthening families and communities, campaign finance reform and national security.

Politically, the campaign remains focused on the four early primary states -- especially Iowa, where Clinton first went after her announcement -- with senior campaign officials insisting at every turn that they expect the Democratic primary to be competitive. But they also, as The Huffington Post first reported, have organizers on the ground in every state and are attempting to follow a 50-state strategy, similar to what former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean laid out when he led the Democratic National Committee.

As the campaign ramps up, it has already had to deal with questions, for instance, about contributions to the Clinton Foundation and potential conflicts of interest. But campaign officials said they didn't believe these issues were doing any real damage to her candidacy, arguing that voters see them as overly political and therefore dismiss them. Aides also characterized Clinton as pleased with the campaign so far, saying she was more in control than in the 200 election, when the campaign often seemed to be leading her.

Still, the amount of money being amassed by Republicans remains a major concern to the campaign, which is why even though Clinton wants to change campaign finance rules, there will be a Democratic super PAC -- Priorities USA -- helping her candidacy. The campaign aims to raise $100 million this year for the Democratic primary.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Hinton, Karen; de Alwis, Ronalie; Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmmedia.com\)
Subject: Meet the Press transcript
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 7:24:32 PM

Meet the Press Transcript - April 12, 2015

BY NBC NEWS

CHUCK TODD (V/O):

This Sunday, she's in it to win it again.

HILLARY CLINTON:

I am all about new beginnings. Another new hairstyle, a new email account.

CHUCK TODD (V/O):

Hillary announces today while this time her biggest opponent may be herself. Also, Rand in the race.

CHUCK TODD:

I'm joined now by New York City mayor, Bill de Blasio. He actually served as Hillary Clinton's campaign manager when she ran successfully for the Senate in 2000. Mayor de Blasio, welcome back to Meet the Press.

BILL DE BLASIO:

Good morning, Chuck.

CHUCK TODD:

So let me ask you about what you're hearing about how she's launching her campaign, that it's all about copying the blueprint you put together in 2000. Smart?

BILL DE BLASIO:

Well, there's certainly a team effort in 2000 and it worked. And one of the important points was she did go out and listened to what was happening to everyday people. And I think that's going to be more necessary this year than ever before, because people in this country are hurting. The Great Recession set people back on their heels in a way we have not seen in decades and decades. I think it's important for Hillary to hear those stories of the American people, I think it will make her a stronger candidate.

CHUCK TODD:

You have wanted to talk about pushing her more to a progress agenda, you're not alone here. There's a lot of Democrats on the progressive side of the party that are trying to push her in that direction. I've had somebody say to me, they hope it's Hillary Rodham that runs for president, and not Hillary Clinton. What say to that?

BILL DE BLASIO:

Look, I think she has a very progressive history. We certainly saw that in her early work on behalf of children and families. We saw that when she took on the big insurance companies to try and achieve health care reform in the early 1990s. There's a lot there that progressives will appreciate that, look, here's the bottom line: the income and equality crisis in this country is out of control.

The worst income inequality since the Great Depression, depression getting worse. A typical American family, in real income terms, is making less today than they were a quarter century ago. That has to be addressed. I think progressives all over the country, I think everyday Americans are demanding that their candidates, the president and every other level, really say that we have a plan that we can believe in for addressing income inequality.

It has to include progressive taxation. It has to include increases in wages and benefits. It has to include the willingness to tax the wealthy so we can invest infrastructure, so we can invest in education again. That's what I think progressives and everyday Americans will be looking for from Hillary and all other candidates.

CHUCK TODD:

Look, there's a lot of Democrats that are worried that she doesn't yet have a message that it's not clear that she's answered the "why" question. Brent Budowsky, for The Hill, a former Democratic Capitol Hill aide, somebody who wants to see Hillary Clinton become president, writes this: "American voters don't want to be sold a new Hillary, which is reminiscent of an earlier politician whose handles invented the term 'New Nixon.' They want to be trusted enough to be let into the world of the really Hillary, informed enough about her vision and plans for America to believe their lives will be made better if she is elected president." How does she make her message the star if right when she announces later today, it's a video, and she's listening, there's no big idea yet?

BILL DE BLASIO:

Well, Chuck, I think it's important that she come out with her vision as soon as possible, but there's certainly time. It's only April of 2015. I think the reality here is there's a tremendous opportunity for her to present a vision because of how different the circumstances are today, than when she was last a candidate. 2008 was a very different time.

We've now had the greatest economic crisis since the Great Depression. Again, families far and backwards economically, tremendous economic-gained security, people who do not assume now across the country the next generation will be better, and the economic recovery we've seen, most of that, 95% of all additional earnings since this recovery have gone to the top 1% of Americans. In that context, there's a lot of new material. There's a lot of new issues for Hillary to address. And it's the chance for her to offer a bold lead.

CHUCK TODD:

Obviously, her opponents are going to try to make her a candidate of the past. Rand Paul, we're going to give you a first look here, Rand Paul's first TV ad is an attack on Hillary Clinton. Here's a quick clip, I want to get you to react to it.

FEMALE VOICE (ON AD):

What path will America take? Will it be a path to the past? A road to yesterday? To a place we've been to before? Hillary Clinton represents the worst of the Washington machine.

CHUCK TODD:

How does she overcome? Again, this is Rand Paul's first ad that he's going to run in the early states later this week. Presidential campaigns are about the future. Her last name, obviously, signifies the past. How does she deal with that?

BILL DE BLASIO:

I think the substance and division does it. Look, Rand Paul Republicans at this point, are the party of trickle-down economics. And that is fair of the American people. Too many Democrats have not offered an alternative. And you know I believe strongly that that's what happened in 2014. Democrats did not offer a progressive economic vision.

And voters didn't move to Democrats, in fact, a lot of Democratic voters stayed home because they didn't hear anything meaningful from their fellow Democratic candidates. So I think there's an opportunity here to break with the past, to break with what's wrong in Washington by offering a bold reason that actually talks to what the American people are going through.

Look, progressives around the country are saying this. This is going to be an effect that'll create almost a primary-like dynamic on the substance. Progressives are demanding from all of our candidates an actual vision on economic change.

We had a meeting of progressive leaders at Gracie Mansion last week, we're going to offer it next month, a progressive contract with America to say, "If you're serious, you've got to be ready to tax the wealthy, you've got to be ready to raise wages and benefits, you've got to be ready to have tax fairness in this country." And I think that is a chance to say, "Hey, we're going to break with a Washington formula that failed the people of this country over the last quarter century.

CHUCK TODD:

Well, in the last quarter century, they'll have had a Clinton as president for eight years of that last quarter century, so that's going to be difficult. Let me ask you this, are you for her now, unequivocally? Or do you want to wait to see if she takes your advice on moving to a more progressive agenda?

BILL DE BLASIO:

I think like a lot of people in this country, I want to see a vision. And again, that would be true of candidates on all levels. It's time to see a clear, bold vision for progressives--

CHUCK TODD:

But you're technically not yet endorsing her?

BILL DE BLASIO:

No, not until I see, and again, I would say this about any candidate, until I see an actual vision of where they want to go. I think she's a tremendous public servant. I think she is one of the most qualified people to ever run for this office. And by the way, thoroughly vetted, we can say that. But we need to see the substance.

CHUCK TODD:

All right. Do you want to see her get a tough primary?

BILL DE BLASIO:

I think, again, what's happening now almost synthesizes some of the reality of the primary. Clearly what's happening with the rest of the wing of the Democratic party is a demand for our candidates to come forward with a vision. That's creating some of the same positive pressure you see in the primary process. She doesn't need to be vetted. I think we can safely say that. But I think she has to address the issues and that can be done with or without a primary.

CHUCK TODD:

Mayor Bill de Blasio, the first campaign manager for Hillary Clinton when she first ran for office, thanks for coming on Meet the Press.

BILL DE BLASIO:

Thank you, Chuck.

CHUCK TODD:

Let me bring in the panel, David Brooks, Maria Hinojosa, Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, Hugh Hewitt. All right Maria, a vision. That was interesting there. Mayor de Blasio, her first campaign manager. Still not ready to, like, technically endorse her because of this, you know, you talk a lot to the progressive community, is there a real hesitance? Or is it just sort of trying to pressure her you think?

MARIA HINOJOSA:

I think you see the hesitancy right there. I mean, he was her campaign manager. You would expect him to say, "I'm in."

CHUCK TODD:

"I'm in." Gung ho, right.

MARIA HINOJOSA:

So what I'm hearing at least from, for example, immigration activists, is that they want to continue to push to a more progressive side of things. And that's going to come in interesting ways. But ultimately, it comes down to those questions, humility and authenticity, how do you make that happen?

I'll just tell you, the one time that I saw Hillary Clinton, and I've covered her a lot, but the one time when it really clicked was when there were no cameras, she had barely no makeup on, she had, like, you know, a little gloss and some mascara, and had just flown in. And she was speaking from the heart because she knew she wasn't being covered. How do you replicate that?

CHUCK TODD:

You know, how many, David, you've probably heard story after story now. We've all been off the record with her, where there-- there is this very warm person and she struggles in the public light. But I'm curious, there's a whole bunch of polls this week.

I want to show them to you, about honest and trustworthy with Hillary Clinton. In Iowa, upside down. In Virginia, even worse, a majority in Virginia don't view her as honest and trustworthy, Colorado, even worse at 56%. This is part, a little bit of the authenticity issue, but obviously, you know, the email issue.

DAVID BROOKS:

I'm waiting to see if Bill Clinton is ready to endorse Hillary. Whether he's still on the fence there

CHUCK TODD:

Were you surprised at Mayor de Blasio?

DAVID BROOKS:

I was surprised.

CHUCK TODD:

Yeah.

DAVID BROOKS:

It's the pressure thing. You know, I think she's not going to win the authenticity, the integrity, the honesty thing, unless she has issues. I think that's what de Blasio's saying. The most underappreciated skill for a politician is imagination. The ability to put new things together in new ways, to have creativity.

She's shown a lot of great skill over the course of her career. She's not shown that one. And I think they're asking her to show some skills and offer a package. And the instinct from the campaign staff has said, "You've got a monopoly here. Let's not put out anything. It'll give people something to attack. Let's hang back. Just be grandma." But that is the wrong strategy, I think. I think de Blasio's right.

CHUCK TODD:

This goes back to her being risk-averse, Madam Mayor. That's her history, she's a very, very cautious person.

MARIA HINOJOSA:

I think she's right to be cautious. But when you see the retread of Republicans' arguments, it's just frustrating because I always say, all the things that they say are wrong about Hillary Clinton doesn't make any of the Republican arguments or any of the candidates any better. You know, I think the thing that's strong about the Democratic party is we have a solid field (?). And we're excited about Hillary Clinton, we're excited about all of the other people that--

CHUCK TODD:

Maria, are you endorsing her?

MARIA HINOJOSA:

As DNC secretary, I cannot.

CHUCK TODD:

Okay, fair enough. I just wanted to get that out.

MARIA HINOJOSA:

But I am proud. I am very proud. And I don't think you should read too much into de Blasio's comments, because people don't want a coronation. And I think when you ask someone to come out ahead of her announcement, that's what that speaks to. People want a race. People want to hear from her. And I think that's what she's saying.

CHUCK TODD:

Hugh, the Republican party this morning, they made sure they came in, they said they had something the RNC called, "StopHillary.GOP." They sent out a little thumb drive that they claim have her email. They're getting T-shirts. They went to all the news divisions this morning and did this. You know, I look at sort of an obsession on the right of beating Obama and beating Bill Clinton over the years, and I think, "They're oh for four." Is there a point where you do this too much?

HUGH HEWITT:

Oh no. Not with Hillary. That was a little surreal when the mayor said she'd been thoroughly vetted. That was the talking point that they'd asked her, I think, to make sure they got out there. Because of course she hasn't been thoroughly vetted. Brent Budowsky calling her "The New Nixon," reminded me this is like a "new Coke" moment as well.

And it's actually kind of a "Weekend at Bernie's" moment. I think they're afraid that they have a candidate that they have to prop up from now until November of '16, that there isn't any substance, there isn't any charisma, and most of all, she's not trustworthy. And that's what those plans she showed, Quinnipiac polls. She fails on the trustworthy question again and again.

CHUCK TODD:

Well, it does seem as if this is a challenge for her, to sort of break out of this.

DAVID BROOKS:

Yeah. And how far left she goes is the big one. You know, there is the massive inequality problem. But Democrats have not persuaded the country that their move is the solution to it. And if you're especially among whites with high school degrees, who she needs in Ohio and places like that, they're falling and she has to make the case for it.

CHUCK TODD:

Right.

STEPHANIE RAWLINGS-BLAKE:

But more infighting isn't the answer either. I mean, I think what we're hearing is more of the same.

CHUCK TODD:

Well, and then they would argue, the Clintons, they would rather be a loud argument. They think they know how to win that campaign. All right, we're going to pause here, we're going to talk more Hillary Clinton later in the show. I promise you. But in a moment, secretary of State, John Kerry. Why do the U.S. and Iran have such different ideas on what they supposedly agreed to on Iran's nuclear program? Right after this.

Commercial Break

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hinton, Karen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; B; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: Proposed Perry and Christie answers
Date: Friday, June 05, 2015 9:36:40 PM

I love that first line! The progressive agenda is the American agenda

On Jun 5, 2015, at 9:18 PM, Hinton, Karen <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I'll add this one comment. You may have used this or a variation:

Polls are telling us a progressive agenda is an American agenda.

Or becoming an American agenda.

If the polices are bold the politics will be too.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 5, 2015, at 7:52 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea
<AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

And your broader 2014 answer for both sides of the aisles. I'll connect with you tomorrow and have this in a 1 pager

This presidential election we need blunt talk and real solutions. The candidate who makes this election about income inequality, the real struggles in people's lives, and provides the solution will be the winner.

In the 2014 cycle, Democrats did not speak bluntly about it —and they paid the price. That is the lesson.

They did not honestly say to the people of this country, here's a crisis and we're going to do very specific things about it. We're going to be willing to take on those who are wealthy and ask them to do their fair share. We're going to be willing to take on corporations that are not being fair to their workers.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 7:47 PM
To: B
Cc: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmmedia.com); Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Proposed Perry and Christie answers

Sir—My proposed points on the other two guests. Added JDC/Mahen for extra color.

-
Proposed answer on Rick Perry

- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Look more than his lapses in debates, a bigger concern for the Perry campaign should be how out-of-touch he is with American voters on issues like a federal minimum wage. (Perry has said, “ I don’t think it is the government’s business to be setting the minimum wage out there”)
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->The current minimum wage in NY is $8.75. In Texas it is $7.25 an hour—the federal minimum. Hard- working families can’t get by on so little.
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->As we just saw from last week’s poll, a majority of Americans are yearning for the government to do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor (nearly 6 in 10). This presidential election we need blunt talk and real solutions.

Proposed answer on Chris Christie

- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Certainly bridgegate was of concern to residents in my region.
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->But we shouldn’t just be focusing on the scandal but his positions that fly in the face of the needs of hardworking Americans.
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Under my administration we’ve brought Paid Sick Leave to thousands of New Yorkers. And nationally a vast majority of Americans support requiring employers to offer paid sick leave to employees who are ill (85%)
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->But as recent as March, Chris Christie has said he wouldn’t require businesses to pay for paid sick leave, claiming it is too expensive for businesses.
http://www.nj.com/politics/index.ssf/2015/03/-_at_town_hall_christie_says_his_prognosis_for_pai.html
- <!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Paid sick leave makes businesses more competitive, not less, and ensures higher productivity among workers

-
-
-

-
-
REPUBLICANS RE: INCOME INEQUALITY:

CHRIS CHRISTIE

New Jersey Gov. Christie Distances Himself On Common Core

WSJ - Josh Dawsey

Gov. Chris Christie said implementing the Common Core wasn't working in New Jersey and that he will likely address the situation in coming weeks, among his strongest comments on the controversial education standards. Speaking to the editorial board of the New Hampshire Union Leader, Mr. Christie seemed to further distance himself from the Common Core, which he once staunchly defended. He noted that former Democratic Gov. Jon Corzine began the process, which he finished, and that he was open to making broad changes. The exchange was videotaped by the newspaper and shown online. It follows other comments at Republican events, in which Mr. Christie expressed concern about any federal incentives tied to adopting the Common Core, a set of guidelines for what children should learn in each grade that have been adopted by most states in recent years.

Christie: Fed partly to blame for U.S. income inequality

REUTERS - Lisa Lambert, Amanda Becker

In unusual remarks for a moderate Republican who may run for president, New Jersey Governor Chris Christie said on Tuesday the Federal Reserve deserved part of the blame for a widening gulf between the rich and the poor. Some investors find anti-Fed rhetoric unsettling, fearing politicians might try to curb the U.S. central bank's independence. The Obama administration's regulatory policies, along with the Fed's monetary policies, have stymied economic growth by allowing financial assets to grow substantially in value while wages have stagnated, Christie said. "The Fed's easy money policies and the president's anti-growth policies have made the rich even richer and made our middle class work longer and harder for less pay and less promise for their future," Christie said.

...Christie said he would create conditions for the economy to grow at a brisk annual rate of 4 percent through policy changes such as overhauling the tax code and rolling back what he said were burdensome regulations put in place by President Barack Obama. Christie said he would lower tax rates for all Americans, including eliminating payroll taxes for those over 62 and under 21. He also pledged to transition corporations to a system in which they pay taxes in the country in which profits are generated.

Chris Christie Calls for Fewer U.S. Income-Tax Rates

BLOOMBERG NEWS - Terrence Dopp

New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, a Republican considering a run for president, will propose a simpler U.S. income-tax system and lowering the top rate to 28 percent as part of his plan for spurring the national economy. Christie also is calling for ending some tax deductions but leaving those for charitable giving and first home mortgage and interest payments, according to excerpts of a speech he plans to give on Tuesday in early-voting New Hampshire. He said there should be three individual income-tax rates instead of six, with the lowest less than 10 percent. “Under this president, we have a roaring financial economy for the wealthy and a weak real economy for the middle class,” Christie, 52, said in his planned remarks at the University of New Hampshire at Manchester that were released by his political action committee. “He has worsened income inequality through his policies.”

Chris Christie: U.S. needs leaders ‘who will fight’ for middle class

WASHINGTON TIMES - David Sherfinski

Saying that America needs leaders who will fight for a middle class left behind in the current economy, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie laid out an economic platform Tuesday that called for a simpler tax code, reduced regulations, a national energy strategy and policies he says would incentivize hiring and technological innovation.

...He said President Obama’s policies were to blame for the comparatively weak growth during the current economic recovery. “In my view, this weak growth is no coincidence,” Mr. Christie said at the University of New Hampshire at Manchester. “It is the direct result of the policies that this president, the worst economic president since Jimmy Carter, has put into position.”

N.J. pension panel devising nitty-gritty details of controversial Christie reform plan

NJ - Samantha Marcus

For seven weeks, Gov. Chris Christie has brought his far-reaching plan to overhaul New Jersey's public worker retirement system to town halls across the state. He's sent out email blasts and tweets on the growing burden on pension and health care costs, trying to build support for a polarizing plan he and his high-powered commission say will defuse the Garden State's massively underfunded retirement system. But the commission, which worked in secret for months on the proposal to reinvent those benefits, now has a new job: putting together all the nitty-gritty details of how Christie's pension reform would play out for hundreds of thousands of public employees. Rather than handing the report off to another task force as originally envisioned, the commission's mission was recast. Tom Healey, the chairman of the pension commission and a former Goldman Sachs executive, said the governor turned down his resignation.

Chris Christie's Administration Omitted Wall Street Fees From State Pension Analysis

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS TIMES - Matthew Cunningham-Cook

Even as Chris Christie pushed to cut benefits to retired New Jersey firefighters, teachers and other state workers, saying there simply wasn't sufficient money in the pension fund, his administration was concealing how millions of those pension fund dollars were spent. Faced with intensifying criticism of skyrocketing fees the state pension was paying to financial firms, the Republican governor's officials have touted their own cost estimate. But they didn't offer a complete reckoning. The officials' testimony to state lawmakers and letter to one of the state's largest newspaper chains earlier this year appeared to prove that the state's fees were well below other states. In fact, the Christie administration's pension analysis, obtained through an open records request by International Business Times, omitted so-called performance fees that the state is paying to Wall Street. Those levies, which give financial firms a cut of the state's investment gains, now total hundreds of millions of dollars a year. A Christie administration presentation to state pension trustees also obtained by IBTimes similarly omitted those performance fees from its cost estimate.

RAND PAUL

Rand Paul: U.S. Must Be More Realistic In Foreign Policy Approach
NPR - Staff

...On economic inequality

I think inequality can be a problem and interestingly seems to be getting a little bit worse under this administration. Income inequality is worse in towns run by Democrat mayors than in towns run by Republican mayors. ... You have to ask what's the cause of it. Some would argue, for example, you're a multimillionaire and you get a $500 million loan to build solar panels — would that be aiding income inequality? I'm an ordinary middle-class guy, I don't get a $500 million loan from the government, so some would argue that the government aids and abets income inequality and the marketplace has income inequality but it's based on you pleasing someone. I would say the policy aim of government absolutely should be that government should not contribute to income inequality.

On calls to raise the federal minimum wage

I think like most policies that are well-intended, we need to look at the intentions of the policy and then the outcome of the policy. The people who get hurt the most when you raise the minimum wage are the people with the least skills or the most animus toward them getting started in the workplace. So the person who is most affected, the unemployment that rises the fastest and steepest with raising the minimum wage, is black teenagers. If we make the minimum wage $25, will more people or less people work? I think it's without question there would be less jobs....

TRANSCRIPT: Freedom Partners Forum: Ted Cruz, Rand Paul and Marco Rubio In Conversation with ABC's Jonathan Karl

ABC NEWS

SENATOR RAND PAUL: You know, the initial question also was about does government have a role in fixing income inequality? I think it's important to think about this because government does have a role in enhancing and enabling the general welfare. The general welfare is everyone equally. It's not really the sense of where the wealth should be distributed but that we should enhance the general welfare. There are problems with income inequality. Interestingly, worse in states led by Democrats, in cities led by Democrats and in countries led by Democrats. But the thing is is that one of the things you have to understand, if you're an ordinary person in our country and you're trying to save to get ahead you put your money in the bank and it gets zero. You don't have the wherewithal to have enough money to buy stocks. You have to be a little bit above that to buy stock. The way to make money and the way money has done well in the last several years is in the stocks market. But why are the interest rates 0% in your bank account? Why don't you make any interest rates? It's because of the Federal Reserve keeping interest rate low. Why do we keep it low? Because we have this massive debt that we've gotta pay off with new money, with cheap money. And so it's all intertwined. And it's-- income inequality is indirectly, if not directly, related to big government.

Editorial: PAUL: Why an education system to leave everyone behind?

WASHINGTON TIMES - Rand Paul

Let's start by agreeing that a great education needs to be available for everyone, whether you live on a country club lane or in government housing. I am convinced this will only happen when we allow school choice for everyone, rich or poor, from any background. Let the taxes you pay for education follow each and every student to the school of your choice. Competition has made America the richest nation in history. Competition can make our educational system the envy of the world. The status quo traps poor children in a crumbling system of hopelessness.

...In America, poverty should not destine a child to educational failure. Instead, we all should have access to a great education, whether we live on a country club lane or in government housing. I believe equality in education will only be achieved when we allow school choice for all: rich or poor, white, brown or black. Let the taxes Americans pay for education follow every student to the school of his or her family's choice. School choice should be an obvious solution, and it need not be a partisan one.

...Public charter schools should be an option in providing school choice. Charter schools are independent schools that are allowed the freedom to be more innovative than traditional public schools, while being held accountable for improved student achievement.

RICK PERRY

Rick Perry thinks America needs a president who's served in the military. Will voters agree?

YAHOO NEWS - Liz Goodwin

"Imagine a president who's worn the uniform and knows what it's like to serve," retired Navy SEAL Pete Scobell told a crowd of Rick Perry supporters Thursday as they waited for the former Texas governor to announce his second run for the presidency in a stifling hot airplane hangar. Several in the crowd hooted "yes" and "uh-huh," nodding in agreement. Once Perry, in a dark suit with his now trademark thick-framed glasses, took the stage, he encouraged his supporters to keep imagining that president who had served. He announced his candidacy flanked by at least nine veterans, many of them decorated war heroes. Behind them stood a giant C-130 cargo plane — the kind of aircraft Perry flew during his six-year peacetime stint in the Navy during the 1970s. "I was proud to wear the uniform of our country as an Air Force officer and aircraft commander," Perry said of his time as a pilot in the military, when he participated in several drought and earthquake relief missions abroad. He later compared President George Washington to the military heroes who stood behind him. "George Washington lived in the service of a cause greater than self,” Perry said. “If anyone is wondering if America still possesses the character of selfless heroes, I am here to say, ‘Yes, I am surrounded by such heroes.’” With his speech, Perry hearkened back to a time when almost all of the nation’s leaders had also fought in the military. Harry S. Truman, Ulysses S. Grant and William Henry Harrison were rocketed to the White House by their military prowess. And more modern presidents, such as Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush, served in World War II.

5 Things You Should Know About Rick Perry

NPR - Wade Goodwyn

- ...1. Perry started his political career an Al Gore Democrat.
- ...2. Perry was for big government projects before he was against them.
- ...3. Perry tried to protect young teenage girls from cervical cancer.
- ...4. The two former GOP Texas governors — Perry and George W. Bush — aren't big fans of the other.
- ...5. Rick Perry was a cheerleader at Texas A&M — specifically, an Aggie Yell Leader.

Rick Perry Fell Harder Than Anyone — And He’s The First To Try Again

FIVE THIRTY EIGHT - Harry Enten

I feel for Rick Perry. He entered the 2012 presidential race as the last great conservative hope to defeat Mitt Romney, and Perry’s campaign wasn’t just a bust, it was an epic, cringe-inducing bust (as typified by the “oops” moment). And yet, on Thursday, the thrice-elected former governor of the second-most-populous state in the union, Texas, is officially announcing he is running for president again. Does Perry’s collapse four years ago mean we should write him off now? Or do the lines on Perry’s résumé that made him such an attractive candidate in 2012 still matter? These are new questions — it’s basically unprecedented for a candidate who fell as hard as Perry did to try again. ...Right now, it doesn’t seem like Perry has much of a chance, either. The party establishment doesn’t appear very forgiving. Perry hasn’t received any endorsements from any members of Congress or governors. In 2012, in contrast, he picked up the second-highest number of endorsements of any candidate running. As we’ve discussed previously, a candidate without endorsements is almost always a candidate who isn’t going anywhere. Republican voters don’t seem to be in a forgiving mood, either. Perry’s ideology places him within the center of his party. Despite that, Perry is languishing in 10th place at 3 percent in Iowa.2 Same thing in New Hampshire. He’s in ninth place nationally, with 2 percent. In other words, he’s a long ways away from where he was when he entered the race in August 2011. He also managed just a fifth-place showing (8 percent) in Texas, which is far weaker than eventual nominees tend to do in their home states at this point in campaigns.

Rick Perry Rented A C-130 Hercules To Use As Campaign Kickoff Backdrop

JALOPNIK - Tyler Rogoway

Rick Perry is at it again, chasing his dreams of becoming the most powerful person and defacto leader of planet earth. This time around he’s armed with cool hipster glasses, a load of famous Navy SEALs and a C-

130 Hercules campaign plane. Well, more like a campaign plane prop, as in one that won't fly. Perry kicked off his campaign flanked by what at first looked like heavy duty security. Was the placement of these two intimidating secret-service looking guys part of an attempt look Presidential? Surely, but these were not rent-a-cops, the two men in question were actually Marcus Luttrell and Morgan Luttrell. Marcus was the Navy SEAL whose book Lone Survivor topped the charts and spurred a Mark Wahlburg action flick that was based on it (sadly not too closely). His brother Morgan was also a Navy SEAL. Taya Kyle, widow of famed "American Sniper" and Navy SEAL Chris Kyle, was also in attendance, along with Navy SEAL Medal Of Honor Recipient Michael Thornton.

RICK SANTORUM

Rick Santorum's Message Reflects GOP's Economic Tilt

WSJ - Nick Timiraos

Rick Santorum's entry to the expanding field of 2016 GOP presidential candidates offers the latest example of Republicans looking to broaden their appeal to an electorate facing unease over stagnant living standards for millions of middle-class Americans. Mr. Santorum, a former Pennsylvania senator, used his popularity with religious conservatives in 2012 to win several states' nominating contests. He is also honing a populist economic message that he emphasized Wednesday in his formal campaign announcement. "Big government and big business told our workers that times have changed. American workers could no longer compete," he said from a factory floor in Cabot, Pa. "They provided no hope. To that, I say, no longer." The push comes as the U.S. economy struggles to accelerate fast enough to stir widely shared gains and reflects a Republican Party trying to frame an economic message that goes beyond its decadeslong focus on tax cuts as the main tool to boost growth. In 2012, Democrats made headway in portraying Mitt Romney and his tax-cut proposals as too generous for the wealthy. So far, the Republican candidates for 2016 are staking out economic policies designed to draw contrasts.

Exclusive: Rick Santorum explains why he's running for president on 'Hannity'

FOX NEWS - Sean Hannity

HANNITY: "How do you deal with the foreign policy issues we have? The Middle East is blowing up, the rise of ISIS. You see cities that Americans fought, bled, and died for one after another falling into hands of ISIS. You see Vladimir Putin on the march. You see China now threatening and pushing America in their own way. You see the Iranians now on the verge of maybe getting a nuclear deal, an Obama seal of approval on a nuclear weapon. Where do you start there?"

SANTORUM: "There's a lot of places to start. I think you have to start where the temperature is the hottest, and that's in the Middle East. Iran is certainly -- as you know, Sean, for a long time I've been sounding the alarm on Iran. It was authored Iran sanctions 10, 12 years ago. This is something that is critical for us. I'm hopeful, I pray, literally, I pray, that we don't strike a deal with Iran that puts them that close to a nuclear weapon that's really their option. But if that doesn't happen, and I pray it doesn't, that's going to be a big job for the next president to make sure that Iran does not get a nuclear weapon. We take on ISIS. I talked here today how important it is not to have a commander in chief with no experience. A commander in chief is not an entry level position. I served eight years on the Armed Services Committee. I've been talking about this problem of radical Islam now for more than a dozen years and traveled the country, traveled the world. And we need someone with experience who knows how to handle that, to go up particularly against a former secretary of state who is very steeped in knowledge in that area.”

Rick Santorum Receives Thunderous Applause When He Says We Should Bomb ISIS ‘Back to the 7th Century’

IJ REVIEW - Chris Enloe

Former Pennsylvania Senator Rick Santorum said on Saturday that the U.S. military should “load up our bombers” and completely destroy ISIS. Santorum’s comments came during the South Carolina Freedom Summit in Greenville, South Carolina, over the weekend. Santorum said: “If these folks want to return to a 7th Century version of Islam, then let’s load up our bombers and bomb them back to the 7th Century.” Santorum went on to say that “we need to be clear with the American people what a threat radical Islam presents”: “Radical Islam is confronting this country. Terror is a tactic, and radical Islam is an ideology.” Santorum continued on to say that President Obama has made the situation worse by damaging relationships with nations that are allies with the U.S., especially Israel: “I would be happy if the president were able to tell the difference between our friends and our enemies. Iran: Enemy. Israel: Friend. Iran will never keep anything that they promise to do.” Santorum, like many other potential 2016 GOP candidates, is taking hardline stances on foreign policy issues. With ISIS becoming more and more of a threat, foreign policy will likely play key role in deciding who takes over the White House in 2016.

Santorum: ‘I’m For Income Inequality’

THINK PROGRESS - Marie Diamond

GOP contender Rick Santorum picked up an important endorsement today with the official backing of Iowa kingmaker Bob vander Plaats of the FAMiLY Leader. Campaigning at the organization’s headquarters in Pella, Iowa, Santorum made some surprising remarks in support of income inequality: “They talk about income inequality. I’m for income inequality. I think some people should make more than other people, because some people work harder and have better ideas and take more risk, and they should be rewarded for it. I have no problem with income inequality.

...“President Obama is for income equality. That’s socialism. It’s worse yet, it’s Marxism,” Santorum said. “I’m not for income equality. I’m not for equality of result – I’m for equality of opportunity.” Oddly, Santorum acknowledged that social and income mobility is lagging in America — a key reason income inequality exists, through no fault of workers who find themselves working harder and longer for less money. The decline of social mobility contradicts Santorum’s assertion that people making more money deserve it because they work harder.

###

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Hinton, Karen; de Alwis, Ronalie; Leopold, Elana; Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Face the Nation
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 9:09:08 AM

Sir,

During your travel time today please review the poll and videos. Ronalie will pull up the videos. The poll is in the binder under the "poll" tab. Dickerson's pieces on HRC, the 1% and Warren are under the "Dickerson" tab. Dickerson was interviewed by Charlie Rose last night and I am typing up the transcript. On it though he said Chris Christie is on a slow rise up.

Below are practice questions to get you in the zone and home bases, and proposed responses on Perry and Christie.

Will talk later today

Income Inequality

Q: Pollsters and strategists in previous cycles told candidates that targeting the rich or talking too much about income inequality isn't a smart strategy. But this week's NYT/CBS poll demonstrates that income inequality is top of mind for voters. Do you think candidates will heed the warning?

Q. Are you concerned it will just be talking points? What are you listening for?

Q: A lot of people associate income inequality with class warfare. How does TPA address that perception? Why do you think so many people in your own city think you want to attack the wealthiest New Yorkers?

Q: The only way to force candidates to focus on income inequality is to make voters care about it. Many voters back specific items that address inequality, but not the mantra itself. How will TPA/Contract with America make battling income inequality a priority?

Q: Are you trying to spur a new movement? What do you think an income inequality movement should look like?

Q: How will you convince voters and the candidates to support with your proposals to tax the wealthy?

Q: How would you grade the Obama Administration on income inequality?

Democratic Field

Q: What do you need to hear from Hillary Clinton before you'll endorse her?

Q. Will you be attending Clinton's speech on June 13? Have you spoken with her?

Q: Will you endorse any Democrat this primary season? Where does O'Malley stand in the mix?

Q. Given the policies you support, why haven't you endorsed Bernie Sanders?

Q: What is it going to take to pull Hillary Clinton to the left? How will you do that with TPA?

Q: Do you think she should be running her primary campaign against the Republicans or the other Democrats?

Republican Field

Q: We're hearing Republicans talk a lot more about poverty and income inequality this cycle compared to 2012. Which candidate do you think has the potential to resonate with voters?

Q: Last November you said, "I think Rand Paul, although I could not disagree with him more on a host of issues, I do think he evinces a certain authenticity that any good Democrat should worry about. I thought, when, for example, speaking up for the drone issue, regardless of what you think about what he said, there was a willingness to risk there, and it seemed to connect to a real ideology." Talk more about his strength as a candidate?

Mayoral Coalition

Q: You oppose the President's trade agenda in your Contract with America, but most big city mayors across the country support it. How do you reconcile that with your fellow mayors?

Crime

Q: To what do you attribute rising crime rates not only in New York City, but in other cities across the country?

MAIN POINTS TO LAND:

We need an economy that rewards WORK and not just wealth.

1. There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country and it is a profound threat to this country and its future.

- We have now worse income inequality than at the time of the stock market crash in 1929.

2. Here's the hard truth. If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need:

- More investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and
- More revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, the Buffett Rule, closing the CEO pay loophole).

3. (As the most recent poll reaffirms) The Progressive Agenda is the American Agenda. This presidential election we need blunt talk and real solutions. The candidate who makes this election about income inequality, the real struggles in people's lives, and provides the solution will be the winner.

- In 2014, overall voter turnout was the worst it's been since World War II.
- Candidates did not honestly say to the people of this country, here's a crisis and we're going to do very specific things about it. We're going to be willing to take on those who are wealthy and ask them to do their fair share. We're going to be willing to take on corporations that are not being fair to their workers.
- Inviting Americans to be a part of this at Progressiveagenda.us

Transitions

- There's no reason that a multi-millionaire sitting by the pool at their beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the woman who cleans their home.

Key Stats/ Examples

- Nationally, the share of the vote of core Democratic constituencies – including African Americans, Hispanics, unmarried women, and young voters – dropped from 2012 to 2014. Low turnout among our base was a key factor in our losses. Many Democrats stayed at home and didn't bother to vote.
- In my city, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- A typical American family, in real income terms, is making less today than they were a quarter century ago.
- The wealthiest one percent captured 91% of all the income gains since the Great Recession ended.
- And now we have the greatest income disparity since the 1920s – and it's getting worse.
- Not red state/blue state issues. Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states.

Proposed answer on Rick Perry

- Look more than his lapses in debates, a bigger concern for the Perry campaign should be how out-of-touch he is with American voters on issues like a federal minimum wage. (Perry has said, " I don't think it is the government's business to be setting the minimum wage out there")
- The current minimum wage in NY is $8.75. In Texas it is $7.25 an hour—the federal minimum. Hard- working families can't get by on so little.
- As we just saw from last week's poll, a majority of Americans are yearning for the government to do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor (nearly 6 in 10). This presidential election we need blunt talk and real solutions.

Proposed answer on Chris Christie

- Certainly bridgegate was of concern to residents in my region.

- But we shouldn't just be focusing on the scandal but his positions that fly in the face of the needs of hardworking Americans.
- Under my administration we've brought Paid Sick Leave to thousands of New Yorkers. And nationally a vast majority of Americans support requiring employers to offer paid sick leave to employees who are ill (85%)
- But as recent as March, Chris Christie has said he wouldn't require businesses to pay for paid sick leave, claiming it is too expensive for businesses.
http://www.nj.com/politics/index.ssf/2015/03/-_at_town_hall_christie_says_his_prognosis_for_pai.html
- Paid sick leave makes businesses more competitive, not less, and ensures higher productivity among workers

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Hinton, Karen; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Snyder, Thomas; Leopold, Elana; de Alwis, Ronalie
Subject: Income Inequality Poll
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 9:24:08 AM

NYT/CBS News Poll Key points

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor.

Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

Inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union.

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

By NOAM SCHEIBER and DALIA SUSSMAN JUNE 3, 2015

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

"There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth," Stephanie Altener, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. "There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have money get to make more of it."

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today's economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking. More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines, most Americans said the chance to get ahead was mainly a luxury for those at the top.

"People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job," said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from

Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as they benefit from the union's protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that "people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top."

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

The New York Times | CBS NEWS Poll

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to $10.10. JUNE 3,

2015

The nationwide telephone poll was conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults and has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points. Full methodology.

Most Americans say that it is mainly just a few people at the top who have a chance to get ahead and that the money and wealth in this country should be more evenly distributed.

The vast majority of Democrats and most independents say wealth should be more evenly distributed, but Republicans are closely split.

Which comes closer to your view? In today's economy, everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in the long run, or in today's economy, it's mainly just a few people at the top who have a chance to get ahead?

Anyone can get ahead

35%

Just a few people at the top have a chance to get ahead

61%

Do you feel that the distribution of money and wealth in this country is fair, or do you feel that the money and wealth in this country should be more evenly distributed among more people?

Fair

27%

Should be more even 66%

7%

When it comes to the availability of good jobs for American workers, some say that America's best years are behind us. Others say the best times are yet to come. What do you think?

Best behind

46%

Yet to come

47%

7%

Do you think the gap between the rich and the poor in the United States is getting larger, getting smaller or has stayed the same?

Getting larger

67%

Getting smaller

Stayed the same

25%

Don't know/No answer

Do you think the gap between rich and poor in this country is a problem that needs to be addressed now, a problem but one that does not need to be addressed now or not a problem?

Addressed now

65%

Not addressed now

16%

Not a problem

17%

Don't know/No answer

Should the government do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor in this country or is this something the government should not be doing?

Reduce gap

57%

Should not

39%

Do you favor or oppose raising taxes on people earning more than $1 million per year?

Favor

68%

Oppose

30%

Do you favor or oppose raising taxes on financial transactions like the sale of stocks or bonds?

Favor

33%

Oppose

59%

8%

Do you favor or oppose limiting the amount of money earned by top executives at large corporations?

Favor

50%

Oppose

45%

When you think about your own personal finances over the next few months, do you feel very confident, somewhat confident, somewhat uneasy, or very uneasy?

Very confident

21%

Somewhat confident

35%

Somewhat uneasy

26%

Very uneasy

16%

Don't know/No answer

Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor requiring employers to offer paid sick leave to employees who are ill and paid leave to parents of new children and employees caring for sick family members. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to $10.10.

However, most oppose requiring fast food chains and other hourly employers to pay workers at least $15 an hour.

As you may know, the federal minimum wage is currently $7.25 an hour. Do you favor or oppose raising the minimum wage to $10.10?

Favor

71%

Oppose

26%

Do you favor or oppose requiring employers to offer paid leave to parents of new children and employees caring for sick family members?

Favor

80%

Oppose

17%

Do you favor or oppose requiring employers to offer paid sick leave to employees who are ill?

Favor

85%

Oppose

14%

Do you favor or oppose requiring fast-food chains and other hourly employers to pay workers at least $15 per hour?

Favor

38%

Oppose

60%

Do you favor or oppose requiring chain stores and fast-food outlets to give workers at least two weeks' notice of any changes in their work schedules or provide them with extra pay?

Favor

72%

Oppose

25%

Do you think labor unions have too much influence, too little influence, or about the right amount of influence on American life and politics today?

Too much

37%

Too little

25%

Right amount

29%

Don't know/No answer

9%

Do you think large corporations have too much influence, too little influence, or about the right amount of influence on American life and politics today?

Too much

74%

Too little

Right amount

20%

Don't know/No answer

By law, a union must protect and bargain on behalf of all workers in a place of employment where the union exists, whether or not they are members. Should all workers be required to pay union fees in exchange for these benefits, even if they choose not to join the union, or should workers who don't want to join the union be able to opt out of paying fees, even though they receive the benefits?

Required to pay union fees

40%

Able to opt out

54%

6%

International Trade

Most Americans continue to say that trade restrictions are necessary to protect domestic industries. But the large majority of Americans haven't heard or read much, or anything at all, about the Trans-Pacific Partnership.

Which of the following statements comes closer to your opinion? Trade restrictions are necessary to protect domestic industries. Free trade must be allowed, even if domestic industries are hurt by foreign competition.

Restriction necessary

63%

Free trade must be allowed

30%

6%

Do you favor or oppose Nafta — the North American Free Trade Agreement between Mexico, Canada, and the United States, or don't you know enough about NAFTA to say?

Favor

22%

Oppose

14%

Don't know enough to say

63%

Don't know/No answer

Do you favor or oppose giving the president authority to negotiate international trade deals that Congress can only approve or disapprove, but not change?

Favor

42%

Oppose

55%

As you may know, the Obama administration is negotiating a trade agreement with 11 countries bordering on the Pacific called the Trans-Pacific Partnership. How much have you heard or read about the Trans-Pacific Partnership – a lot, some, not much or nothing at all?

A lot

6%

Some

16%

Not much

30%

Nothing at all

48%

Don't know/No answer

From what you have heard or read, do you think the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade agreement would increase the number of jobs available in the United States, decrease the number of jobs available, or won't it make much difference?

Increase

16%

Decrease

22%

Won't make much difference

29%

Don't know/No answer

33%

-

Andrea Hagelgans

Office of the Mayor

Direct – 212.341.5372

Cell – 718.679.8965

ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Been, Vicki \(HPD\)
To: Glen, Alicia
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Patchett, James; Soliman, Sherif; Hinton, Karen; Fuleihan, Dean \(OMB\); Shorris, Anthony; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: NYDN: OpEd: My affordable housing agenda: Gov. Cuomo lays out his plan to keep rents in line with what New Yorkers can pay
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 9:57:53 AM

Awesome!

Sent from my iPad

On Jun 6, 2015, at 7:57 AM, "Glen, Alicia" <AGlen@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

+ Vicki

Pretty remarkable policy turn around
Definitely argues for our approach of sticking to our guns.

Sent from my iPad

On Jun 6, 2015, at 7:43 AM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Specifics match our rent platform:

"We must eliminate vacancy decontrol or at the very least significantly raise vacancy decontrol thresholds; further limit vacancy bonuses to ensure landlords aren't rewarded financially for schemes to force tenants out; make major capital improvements and individual apartment improvement surcharges that go away once recovered by landlords, instead of ways of artificially raising a unit's monthly rent; and make the preferential rent operate as the legal rent for the life of the tenancy. These should be foundational elements of any new rent regulation legislation."

From: Melissa DeRosa [<mailto:Melissa.DeRosa@exec.ny.gov>]
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 06:44 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fw: NYDN: OpEd: My affordable housing agenda: Gov. Cuomo lays out his plan to keep rents in line with what New Yorkers can pay

From: E-Clips Application <clips@its.ny.gov>
Sent: Saturday, June 6, 2015 5:27 AM

To: dailyclips

Subject: NYDN: OpEd: My affordable housing agenda: Gov. Cuomo lays out his plan to keep rents in line with what New Yorkers can pay

NYDN: OpEd: My affordable housing agenda: Gov. Cuomo lays out his plan to keep rents in line with what New Yorkers can pay

BY ANDREW CUOMO:

Safe, affordable housing is the foundation of our communities. Without it, New York may be a place to live, but it will not be a home for millions of New Yorkers.

The protection of affordable housing has been a passion of mine for over 30 years.

As founder of the Housing Enterprise for the Less Privileged, and then as U.S. secretary of housing and urban development, it was my mission to increase the supply of affordable housing, crack down on discrimination and expand programs to help grow housing options for low-income communities.

Before I took office, New York's stock of affordable housing was being rapidly depleted with each passing year. In the 15 years prior to the passage of the new rent controls, New York had lost more than 230,000 apartments from the rent regulated system, and we faced the threat of losing over 100,000 more if we did not act.

So four years ago, with tenants facing lease manipulation and the loss of their rent-regulated apartments due to renovation schemes, we limited vacancy bonuses and altered the calculations and verification system to make sure landlords played by the rules.

And arguably our most important innovation was the creation of the first ever Tenant Protection Unit empowered with the authority to investigate, audit and bring legal action against landlords who gamed unsuspecting tenants.

These historic efforts were matched by an equally historic investment of $1 billion in the House NY program, which provides developers capital to build affordable housing.

The House NY program has helped spur the creation of thousands of affordable housing units; the TPU has helped return 40,000 units to rent regulation.

Yet despite our action four years ago, the crisis of affordability is back with a vengeance. Once again we are faced with an expiration emergency and, this time, the stakes are even higher.

Rising rent costs are taking an increasingly high toll on New York City residents. In 2012, roughly 55% of the city's residents were spending more than 30% of their gross annual income on rent, and 30% of New York City's renters were spending more than half of their gross annual income on rent.

Of the 3.4 million housing units in New York City, fewer than half are rent stabilized and only 1.2% are rent controlled. Access to rent stabilized units is incredibly limited, with only 2.12% of those units vacant, a figure far lower than the national average of 7%.

If these trends continue, affordable housing and the foundation of a vibrant middle-class will soon be a distant memory.

As we chart a newer, bolder, more sustainable course on affordable housing, we are not only protecting the rights of millions of New Yorkers, but also potentially millions more around the country.

So as Albany continues to debate rent regulations, our goal must be to strengthen and sustain them, not just extend them.

We must eliminate vacancy decontrol or at the very least significantly raise vacancy decontrol thresholds; further limit vacancy bonuses to ensure landlords aren't rewarded financially for schemes to force tenants out; make major capital improvements and individual apartment improvement surcharges that go away once recovered by landlords, instead of ways of artificially raising a unit's monthly rent; and make the preferential rent operate as the legal rent for the life of the tenancy. These should be foundational elements of any new rent regulation legislation.

While the Legislature has it in their hands to negotiate the specifics of the debate, there is one point that is non-negotiable: Their work will not be done unless and until they pass a law to strengthen and extend tenant protections.

I will call them back into session every day if necessary until tenants are protected with new regulations.

Providing "a decent home and a suitable living environment for ever American family" was the goal of the National Housing Act of 1949. So many decades later, we must recommit to that goal so New Yorkers can continue to call this city and state their home.

Cuomo is governor of New York.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Dickerson on Charlie Rose last night
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 12:06:13 PM

Dickerson taped his piece with Christie yesterday. Here is what is available as first look:

FIRST LOOK - John Dickerson, debuting tomorrow as host of "Face the Nation," to New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, taped yesterday in N.H.: "Hillary Clinton mentioned you and said you and other Republicans are trying to make it harder for people to vote. What's your reaction to that?"

CHRISTIE: "Well, first, she doesn't know what she's talking about. ... [T]he fact is that the folks in New Jersey have plenty of an opportunity to vote. And maybe, you know, if she took some questions some places and learned some things, maybe she wouldn't make such ridiculous statements."

DICKERSON: "So your son jokes that New Hampshire is your second home, basically. So you're a truth-teller. Why don't you just say you're running?"

CHRISTIE: "Because I haven't made my mind up yet, John. But I've told people, I'm going to make my mind up this month. ... And let's remember something: We're still eight months away from anybody voting. So let's everybody take a deep breath. It'll all be fine."

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 09:19 AM
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com) <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Dickerson on Charlie Rose last night

Dickerson is on the campaign trail in manchester, new hampshire. He is, as you know, the political director of cbs news and chief political commentator for slate and on sunday he takes over as anchor of "face the nation." I am pleased to have him back on this program. and congratulations once again. tell me what should I expect on "face the nation" on sunday?

Thanks, charlie.

Dickerson: I think you should expect pretty much the same thing we have been doing at "face the nation" for 60 years, which is figuring out what the news, inviting the newsmakers on and asking questions people want asked and hopefully squeezing the answers out of them. So that's pretty much what bob did, and I'll try and stay focused on that, too.

Rose: all right, tell me what's going on with jeb bush, first.

Dickerson: With jeb bush what he's trying to do is get another bite at the apple, get into the news cycle. he's not actually announcing until the 15th of june, and one of the things we're starting to see a little bit is with such a wide field the question is where are each of these candidates going to put the majority of their chips in terms of having early victories in the first contests. and I think jeb bush, we're going to start to see some of that after his announcement just in terms of where he starts to spend his time.

Rose: will new hampshire be a likely choice?

Dickerson: it will be a likely choice for jeb bush, and then that will be interesting because there are other candidates who are trying to do that. and chris christie is one.

Rose: where is the christie candidacy today?

Dickerson: it is on a slow climb up the roller coaster. I mean, you remember when he was considered the party savior in 2011. people weren't excited for romney. They wanted him to jump in the race. a group of wise men sat him down and said, "please, you must run." he decided he wasn't ready, and after mitt romney lost, mitt romney said he was going to be the savior of the party, mitt romney did, and bridge-gate hit. people are worried he's too risky a bet. even though bridge-gate didn't turn into a big problem for him personally-- in other words, there's not somebody who has an indictment out for him-- he is just unpredictable. The other problem is he's not considered conservative enough for conservatives. he's trying to grind it out in new hampshire.

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Face the Nation/ Clinton voting speech
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 3:24:20 PM

Sir,

Producer emailed me now to say you may get a question on voter registration, ballot access and the issues raised by the Clinton Speech this week.

You have answered supportively on the speech (full speech below). Republicans have criticized her for not bringing early voting to New York when she was Senator.

Proposed response

- clinton raised an important issue.
- Voting access cuts at heart of inequality since we know those without a voice are often those working low-wage jobs, struggling to get by.
- And the wealthy have too much influence in political campaigns
- We need to stand up to extreme Republican politicians who would erect barriers to voting like Scott Walker who pushed through a discriminatory voter ID bill in Wisconsin that will make it harder for people to vote - specifically seniors, minorities and young people. And stand up to Rick Perry who supported gutting the voting rights act

----- Original Message -----

From: Watkins, Ellen
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 02:52 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Gunaratna, Mahen; @Research Office
Subject: RE: Clinton voting speech

Full transcript: HRC on voting rights

Wow! Thank you so very much. I cannot tell you how personally honored I am to be here with all of you, to be at this historic institution. Let me start by thanking President Rudley, everyone at Texas Southern university. It's a great treat to be here, to have heard just briefly from Dr. Rudley and others about the incredible programs and progress and the fact that you graduated more than 1,000 young people into the world not so many days ago. This institution is the living legacy, the absolute embodiment of Heman Marion Sweatt and the long struggle for civil rights. and for me, to be surrounded by so many here in Houston, Texas, and indeed from across our country, who were part of that movement is especially touching. I am delighted to be here with my friend, Sheila Jackson Lee, she has been a tireless champion for the people of the 18th district and state, and the country.

I have to tell you though I thought she would tell you about the most important news coming out of Congress. And that is she is finally a member of the Grandmother's Club. And as a member of now a little over 8 months it is the best club you will ever be a member of Sheila. I have to tell you I was excited to come here and to talk about an issue that is important to Barbara Jordan and should be important to all of us. But to do so in front of Dr. Freeman is a little daunting. I mean anyone who knows what this man has meant, not only to Barbara Jordan but to so many who have studied here who have been in anyway effected by his brilliant teaching, elocution and delivery would be a little daunted too. I noticed that both Dr. Rudley and Dr. Sheila both got off before Dr. Freeman came up.

I also want to say my thoughts and prayers are with all the families in Houston and across Texas affected by the recent terrible flooding. And I am confident that this community will embrace them. I remember very well coming here after Katrina with my husband and in face we decided to invite along a young Senator from Illinois by the name of Barack Obama, along and with Sheila and other leaders in the community we toured the facilities that Houston had provided to those who were fleeing that horrific storm. And I saw how people had opened their hearts and their homes. This is a city that knows how to pull together and I'm confident you'll do so again on behalf of those who are suffering from this latest terrible disaster.

And it is also a special moment to be here knowing that Barbara Jordan was succeeded by Mickey Leland and the 18th District was so well represented for so long and I am delighted to be here with Alison and to remember the pioneering work he did on behalf of children and the poor and hunger. So many issues that he was the champion of. And I want to thank Rosemary McGowan and all the friends and loved ones of Barbara Jordan here today. This is such a particular honor for me because the award is in memory of one of my true personal heroes – a woman who taught me and so many others the meaning of courage and determination and justice.

I first met Barbara Jordan when I was a young attorney and had been given a position working for the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee investigating Richard Nixon, and it was such a profound moment in American history and there wasn't anyone who was a more effective eloquent inquisitor than Barbara Jordan.

As a 26-year old fresh out of law school, as some of you are perhaps now having graduated from the Thurgood Marshall school here at TSU, I was riveted and not a little intimidated to tell you the truth by this unstoppable Congresswoman from Texas. I got to talk with her, which was thrilling, I got to hand her papers, which was equally exiting but mostly I got to watch and listen to her. At a time of shaken confidence, she stirred the entire nation with her words.

Remember what she said "My faith in the Constitution is whole, it is complete; it is total."

It was that passion and moral clarity that took Barbara Jordan from the TSU and the halls of Texas legislature all the ways to the halls of Congress. The first woman and the first African American ever elected to represent Texas in the House of Representatives.

And she defended and continued the civil rights legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and her friend and mentor President Lyndon Johnson – and in particular she was a staunch advocate for the Voting Rights Act, which had helped make it possible for her to be elected.

In 1975, in the face of fierce opposition, Barbara Jordan led the fight to extend the special protections of the Voting Rights Act to many more Americans, including Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, and Asian Americans as well.

And like every woman who has run for national office in this country in the last four decades, I stand here on the shoulders of Barbara Jordan and so does our entire country.

And boy do we miss her. We miss her courage, we also miss her humor, she was funny and most of all her irresistible voice.

I remember talking to her and Ann Richards one time. And between the two of them, forget trying to get a word in at all. And they were telling me about how they would love to go to the University of Texas women's basketball games. Right, and Barbara would be there by that time in her wheelchair and Ann would be holding court right next to her. And Barbara would be yelling directions like she was, you know, the coach. "Why are you doing that? Jump higher! That's not a pass!", you know all of those kinds of sideline comments. And so Ann was telling me this, with Barbara right there and I finally turned to her and said, "Barbara, encourage these young women, don't just criticize them." And Barbara turned around and said to me, "When they deserve it, I will".

We sure could use her irresistible voice. I wish we could hear that voice one more time.

Hear her express the outrage we feel about the fact that 40 years after Barbara Jordan fought to extend the Voting Rights Act, its heart has been ripped out.

And I wish we could hear her speak up for the student who has to wait for hours to vote...

For the grandmother who's turned away from the polls because her driver's license expired...

For the father who's done his time and paid his debt to society but still hasn't gotten his rights back.

Now we know, unfortunately, Barbara isn't here to speak up for them and so many others. But we are. And we have a responsibility to say clearly and directly what's really going on in our country – because what is happening is a sweeping effort to disempower and disenfranchise people of color, poor people, and young people from one end of our country to the other.

Because since the Supreme Court eviscerated a key provision of the Voting Rights Act in 2013, many of the states that previously faced special scrutiny because of a history of racial discrimination have proposed and passed new laws that make it harder than ever to vote. North Carolina passed a bill that went after pretty much anything that makes voting more convenient or more accessible. Early voting. Same-day registration.

The ability of county election officials to even extend voting hours to accommodate long lines.

What possible reason could there be to end pre-registration for 16-and 17- year olds and eliminate voter outreach in high schools?

We should be doing everything we can to get our young people more engaged in democracy, not less.

In fact I would say it is a cruel irony – but no coincidence – that Millennials, the most diverse, tolerant, and inclusive generation in American history, are now facing so much exclusion.

And we need look no further than right here in Texas. You all know this far better than I, but if you want to vote in this state, you can use a concealed weapon permit as a valid form of identification – but a valid student ID isn't good enough?

Now, Krystal Watson found out the hard way. She grew up in Louisiana but came to Marshall, Texas to attend Wiley College. Krystal takes her responsibilities as a citizen so seriously that not only did she register to vote in Texas where she was living and would be for a number of years, she even became a deputy registrar to help other people vote as well. But this past year, when she showed up at her local polling place with a Wiley College ID, she was turned away.

Experts estimate that hundreds of thousands of registered voters in Texas may face similar situations.

And while high-profile state laws like those in Texas and North Carolina get most of the attention, many of the worst offenses against the right to vote actually happen below the radar. Like when authorities shift poll locations and election dates. Or scrap language assistance for non-English speakers – something Barbara Jordan fought so hard for.

Without the pre-clearance provisions of the Voting Rights Act, no one outside the local community is likely to ever hear about these abuses, let alone have a chance to challenge them and end them.

It's not a surprise for you to hear that studies and everyday experiences confirm that minority voters are more likely than white voters to wait in long lines at the polls. They are also far more likely to vote in polling places with insufficient numbers of voting machines.

In South Carolina for example, there's supposed to be one machine for every 250 voters. But in minority areas, that rule is just often overlooked. In Richland County, nearly 90 percent of the precincts failed to meet the standard required by law in 2012. Instead of 250 voters per machine, in one precinct it was more than 430 voters per machine. Not surprisingly, people trying to cast a ballot there faced massive delays.

Now there are many fair-minded, well-intentioned election officials and state legislators all over this country. But this kind of disparity that I just mentioned does not happen by accident. Now some of you may have heard me or my husband say one of our favorite sayings from Arkansas, of course I learned it from him. "You find a turtle on a fence post, it did not get there on it's own." Well all of these problems with voting did not just happen by accident. And it is just wrong, it's wrong to try to prevent, undermine and inhibit American's right to vote. Its counter to the values we share.

And at a time when so many Americans have lost trust in our political system, it's the opposite of what we should be doing in this country.

This is the greatest longest lasting democracy in the history of the world, we should be clearing the way for more people to vote, not putting up every roadblock anyone can imagine.

Yet unfortunately today, there are people who offer themselves to be leaders whose actions have undercut this fundamental American principle.

Here in Texas, former Governor Rick Perry signed a law that a federal court said was actually written with the purpose of discriminating against minority voters.

He applauded when the Voting Rights Act was gutted, and said the lost protections were "outdated and unnecessary."

But Governor Perry is hardly alone in his crusade against voting rights.

In Wisconsin, Governor Scott Walker cut back early voting and signed legislation that would make it harder for college students to vote.

In New Jersey, Governor Christie vetoed legislation to extend early voting.

And in Florida, when Jeb Bush was governor, state authorities conducted a deeply flawed purge of voters before the presidential election in 2000.

Thankfully in 2004 a plan to purge even more voters was headed off.

So today, Republicans are systematically and deliberately trying to stop millions of American citizens from voting.

What part of democracy are they afraid of?

I believe every citizen has the right to vote. And I believe we should do everything we can to make it easier for every citizen to vote.

I call on Republicans at all levels of government with all manner of ambition to stop fear mongering about a phantom epidemic of election fraud and start explaining why they're so scared of letting citizens have their say.

Yes, this is about democracy. But it's also about dignity. About the ability to stand up and say, yes, I am a citizen. I am an American.

My voice counts. And no matter where you come from or what you look like or how much money you have, that means something.... In fact, it means a lot.

I learned those lessons right here in Texas, registering voters in south Texas down in the valley in 1972.

Some of the people I met were, understandably, a little wary of a girl from Chicago who didn't speak a word of Spanish. But they wanted to vote. They were citizens. They wanted to exercise all the rights and responsibilities that citizenship conveys.

That's what should matter because when these rights are denied, it doesn't just hold back the aspirations of individual citizens. It holds back our entire country.

That's why, as a Senator, I championed a bill called the Count Every Vote Act. If it had become law, it would have made Election Day a federal holiday and mandated early voting opportunities. Deceiving voters, including by sending flyers into minority neighborhoods with false voting times and places, would have become a federal crime. And many Americans with criminal convictions who had paid their debt to society would have finally gotten their voting rights back.

Well today, with the damage to the Voting Rights Act so severe, the need for action is even more urgent.

First, Congress should move quickly to pass legislation to repair that damage and restore the full protections that American voters need and deserve.

I was in the Senate in 2006 when we voted 98 to zero to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act after an exhaustive review process.

There had been more than 20 hearings in the House and Senate Judiciary Committees. Testimony from expert witnesses. Investigative reports documenting continuing discrimination in covered jurisdictions. There were more than 15,000 pages of legislative record.

Now that is how the system is supposed to work. You gather the evidence, you weigh it and you decide. And we did 98 to nothing. We put principle ahead of politics. That is what Congress needs to do again.

Second, we should implement the recommendations of the bipartisan presidential commission to improve voting. That commission was chaired by President Obama's campaign lawyer and by Governor Mitt Romney campaign's lawyer. And they actually agreed. These are common sense reforms, including expanding early, absentee, and mail voting. Providing online voter registration. Establishing the principle that no one should ever have to wait more than 30 minutes to cast your vote.

Third, we should set a standard across our country of at least 20 days of early in-person voting everywhere – including opportunities for weekend and evening voting.

If families coming out of church on Sunday before an election are inspired to go vote, they should be free to do just that.

And we know that early in-person voting will reduce those long lines and give more citizens the chance to participate, especially those who have work or family obligations that make it difficult to get to the polls on Election Day.

It's not just convenient — it's also more secure, more reliable, and more affordable than absentee voting. So let's get this done.

And I believe we should go even further to strengthen voting rights in America.

So today I am calling for universal, automatic voter registration. Everyone, every young man or young woman, in every state in the union should be automatically registered to vote when they turn eighteen – unless they actively choose to opt-out.

But I believe this would have a profound impact on our elections and our democracy. Between a quarter and a third of all eligible Americans remain unregistered and therefore unable to vote.

And we should modernize our entire approach to registration. The current system is a relic from an earlier age. It relies on a blizzard of paper records and it's full of errors.

We can do better. We can make sure that registration rolls are secure, up-to-date, and complete. When you move, your registration should move with you. If you are an eligible voter, and want to be registered, you should be a registered voter – period.

Now, Oregon is already leading the way modernizing its system, and the rest of the country should follow. The technology is there. States have a lot of the data already. It's just a matter of syncing and streamlining.

Now, all of these reforms, from expanded early voting to modernized registration, are common sense ways to strengthen our democracy. But I'll be candid here, none of them will come easily.

It's going to take leadership at many levels.

Now more than ever, we need our citizens to actually get out and vote for people who want to hear what is on their minds.

We need more activists working to expose abuses, educate Americans about their rights, and hold authorities accountable for protecting them.

Some of the worst provisions in recent laws have been blocked or delayed by tireless advocates raising the alarm and filing legal challenges. But they can't do it alone.

We need more grassroots mobilization efforts like the Moral Monday movement in North Carolina to build momentum for reform.

We need more Justices on the Supreme Court who will protect every citizen's right to vote, I mean the principle underlying our Constitution, which we had to fight for a long time to make apply to everybody, one person, one vote and we need a Supreme Court that cares more about protecting the right to vote of a person than the right to buy and election of a corporation.

But of course, you know what we really need? We need more elected leaders from Houston to Austin to Washington who will follow in the footsteps of Barbara Jordan and fight for the rights and opportunities of everyday Americans, not just those at the top of the ladder.

And we need to remember that progress is built on common ground, not scorched earth.

You know, when I traveled around the world as Secretary of State, one of the most frequent questions I was asked was: How could you and President Obama work together after you fought so hard in that campaign?

People were genuinely amazed, which I suppose is understandable, considering that in many places, when you lose an election or you oppose someone who wins you could get imprisoned or exiled – even killed – not hired as Secretary of State.

And it's true, I was surprised when the President asked me to serve. But he made that offer, and I accepted it, because we both love our country. So my friends, here at this historic institution let us remember that America was built by people who knew that our common interest was more important than our self-interest.

They were fearless in pursuit of a stronger, freer, and fairer nation.

As Barbara Jordan famously reminded us, when the Constitution was first written, it left most of us here out. But generations of Americans fought and marched and organized and prayed to expand the circle of freedom and opportunity. They never gave up and never backed down.

And nearly a century ago on this very day, after years of struggle, Congress finally passed the 19th amendment to give women the right to vote in the United States.

So that is, that is the story of progress, courageous men and women, expanding rights, not restricting them.

And today we refuse, we refuse to allow our country or this generation of leaders to slow or reverse America's long march toward a more perfect union.

We owe it to our children and grandchildren to fight just as hard as those who came before us did. To march just as far. To organize just as well. To speak out just as loudly. And to vote, every chance we get for the kind of future we want.

That's what Barbara Jordan would do. That's what we should do in honor of her.

Thank you, and may God bless you.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 2:40 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; @Research Office
Subject: Clinton voting speech

Can someone send me the clinton voting speech in body of email and any criticism of it? Sorry, need for prep today

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Fw: June 13
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 4:46:01 PM

Fyi

----- Original Message -----

From: B
Sent: Friday, June 05, 2015 06:55 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: June 13

HRC campaign kick-off and major speech?? We need to keep the TPA energy up leading up to this, and get all TPA leaders out talking asap. Pls discuss tmrw. Find me

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Story on Iowa poll/income inequality
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 4:57:24 PM

Iowa GOP: Talk about deficit, defense. Democrats: Stress energy, income inequality

Republicans and Democrats have widely different views of what they want discussed in the Iowa presidential caucus campaign.

Republicans overwhelmingly want to hear more about fiscal and defense issues. Democrats are very interested in domestic policy.

The findings come from a new poll by Selzer & Co. of Des Moines. The Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics Iowa poll found 90 percent or more of Republicans said they want to spend a lot of time on the budget deficit, national defense, taxes and terrorist groups.

Topping the Democratic list were energy, at 92 percent, followed by income inequality at 90 percent and the nation's infrastructure at 88 percent.

Only job creation, which was fifth on the Republican list and fourth among Democrats, showed up in the top five of either party.

"The underlying difference right now between the policy agendas of elites at the top â€" which has increasingly filtered down into minds of ordinary citizens â€" is a fundamental disagreement about the role of government in the modern world," Jeff Manza, a professor of sociology at New York University, told the Register.

One other big difference: More than four of five Republicans said they don't want to hear discussions of climate change. But a nearly equal percentage, 81 percent, of Democrats said they did.

The 2016 Iowa presidential caucuses are current scheduled for early February.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Another story on Iowa poll
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 5:01:36 PM

This one shows how Democratic caucusgoers DO want to hear about it - but Republican caucusgoers don't...

Poll: What should candidates talk about to Iowans?

DES MOINES — Likely Democratic and Republican caucusgoers expect vastly different talking points from their presidential candidates, a new Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics Iowa Poll shows.

Republican poll respondents are seeking discussion of fiscal and defense matters. Ninety percent or higher say they want candidates to spend "a lot" of time talking about the budget deficit, national defense, taxes and terrorist groups such as the Islamic State, or ISIL.

"The U.S. looks like a weak power to all these foreign countries," Republican poll respondent Grant Wells said in a follow-up interview. "These new candidates need to lay out how they're going to handle that. No one wants to overstep, but we need to clean things up."

Democrats, conversely, are far more interested in hearing about domestic policy. Energy (92%) and income inequality (90%) top the list of issues that Democrats say candidates should spend a lot of time discussing. National infrastructure and job creation also rate highly.

"Domestically, we'd better start taking care of some things here or we're going to be more insecure as a nation than we are now," said Midge Gaylor, a Democrat and retired teacher from Mason City who participated in the poll.

Just one issue ranks in the top five for likely caucus attendees from both parties: job creation.

The issue divide illustrates a fundamental disagreement between the parties over the role of government, said Jeff Manza, a professor of sociology at New York University who has written extensively on politics and public opinion.

While Democrats believe government can and should address social and economic issues, Republicans are less confident about its ability to solve such problems and focus instead on limiting taxes and spending while maintaining national defense.

"The underlying difference right now between the policy agendas of elites at the top — which has increasingly filtered down into minds of ordinary citizens — is a fundamental disagreement about the role of government in the modern world," Manza said.

The Iowa Poll shows the extent to which the priorities of national party leaders have informed likely caucusgoers' political sentiments heading into 2016, he said.

"What you're seeing in the Iowa data here is simply a reflection of the agendas of the leadership," Manza said. "It's the voters following the leaders — the rhetoric of the leaders and the policy priorities of the leaders."

"What you're seeing in the Iowa data here is simply a reflection of the agendas of the leadership. It's the voters following the leaders — the rhetoric of the leaders and the policy priorities of the leaders."

Jeff Manza, sociology professor, New York University

The poll, conducted May 25-29 by Selzer & Co. of Des Moines, has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percentage points for Republican respondents and 4.7 percentage points for Democrats.

Especially wide divergences emerge on a few issues.

Ninety percent of Democrats say they want to hear candidates talk about income inequality — making it the No. 2 issue among the party's likely caucusgoers. For likely Republican caucusgoers, though, income inequality ranks 19th out of the 20 issues tested by the poll, with 36% of respondents saying they wish candidates would devote a lot of time talking about it.

"It's one of the top problems in America today, and it's a problem that affects all of us," Democratic respondent Jeremy Knipper said of income inequality. He's a small-business executive from Waukee. "I think that in a lot of ways, the ability to achieve the American dream is a bit of a sham these days."

But Wells, a 29-year-old business owner from Fonda, in northwest Iowa, said he believes income, wealth and economic success depend on individual initiative and that government intervention is unnecessary to address inequality.

"America doesn't hold you back. It doesn't hold you hostage. No one owes you nothing, and no one's giving you nothing," Wells said. "Go out and make yourself better. Don't expect the government to do it for you. To me, (income inequality) is not a big issue."

An even wider gap between Democrats and Republicans is evident on climate change. While 81% of Democrats planning to caucus say they want to see candidates focus on it, just 18% of likely Republican caucusgoers are interested in hearing a lot about the issue.

There are areas, too, where the interests of likely caucus attendees from the two parties are more aligned — at least as far as wanting candidates to address an issue.

An equal percentage of Democratic and Republican respondents (86%) say candidates should talk about job creation. They also closely align on the importance of discussing immigration (85% for Republicans, 82% for Democrats) and international trade (81% for Republicans, 77% for Democrats). Smaller but similar percentages want candidates to talk about gun issues (Republicans, 57%, and Democrats, 56%).

For many of these issues, however, the solutions or approaches Democratic and Republican caucusgoers want to hear may be far different.

Social issues low on Iowa GOP list

Turns out caucusgoing Iowa Republicans don't want to hear their candidates talk a lot about hot-button social issues on the campaign trail this year.

Just 48% of GOP respondents say they want candidates to spend a lot of time talking about abortion — ranking it 15th of 20 issues tested in the latest Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics Iowa Poll. Same-sex marriage rates even lower. Just 38% of likely GOP caucusgoers want candidates to devote much time to the issue.

"The Republican caucuses have a reputation for attracting a core from the religious right, but these data actually demonstrate that the issues most closely tied to that constituency are among the least important," pollster J. Ann Selzer said. "Really, the issues Iowans want to hear about most are the same as the rest of the nation."

Judy Heath, 63, a hair stylist and artist in Bettendorf who's a Republican, said in a later interview that the country simply has more pressing matters to address.

"It's not of great interest to me at all whether someone has an abortion or wants to be gay and marry his or her partner," Heath said. "I think taking care of our country is much more of an issue than getting into the homes of people and what their lives are like."

What about the Democrats? Less than half of respondents say they want to hear candidates devote time to same-sex marriage (45%), abortion (29%) and candidates' religious beliefs (14%).

About the Iowa Poll

The Iowa Poll, conducted May 25-29 for The Des Moines Register and Bloomberg Politics by Selzer & Co. of Des Moines, is based on telephone interviews with 437 registered Iowa voters who say they definitely or probably will attend the 2016 Democratic caucuses and 402 registered voters who say they definitely or probably will attend the 2016 Republican caucuses.

Interviewers contacted 4,161 randomly selected active voters from the Iowa secretary of state's voter registration list by telephone. Responses were adjusted by age, sex and congressional district to reflect all active voters in the voter registration list.

Questions based on the subsample of 437 likely Democratic caucus attendees have a maximum margin of error of plus or minus 4.7 percentage points, and questions based on the subsample of 402 likely Republican caucus attendees have a maximum margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percentage points. This means that if this survey were repeated using the same questions and the same methodology, 19 times out of 20, the findings would not vary from the percentages shown here by more than plus or minus 4.7 or 4.9 percentage points, respectively. Results based on smaller samples of respondents — such as by gender or age — have a larger margin of error.

Republishing the copyright Iowa Poll without credit to The Des Moines Register and Bloomberg Politics is prohibited.

Coming Wednesday

What do Iowans think of the prospect that former President Bill Clinton could be an adviser to Hillary Clinton as president, or former President George W. Bush could be an adviser to Jeb Bush?

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Hagelgans, Andrea; Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic
Subject: How a Carried Interest Tax Could Raise $180 Billion
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 5:17:15 PM

This is a little in the weeds, but if Face the Nation - or some other critic - were to question whether closing the carried interest loophole really matters that much (since US Dept of Treasury says it's only $18B over 10 years), we could say that the jury's out on that - that, in fact, an expert recently wrote in the New York Times that it could generate 10 TIMES that amount.

http://www.nytimes.com/2015/06/06/business/dealbook/how-a-carried-interest-tax-could-raise-180-billion.html?_r=0

How a Carried Interest Tax Could Raise $180 Billion

When Hillary Rodham Clinton opened her campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination in Iowa, the first substantive issue she raised was a safe one: carried interest. “There’s something wrong when hedge fund managers pay lower tax rates than nurses or the truckers that I saw on I-80 as I was driving here,” she said.

President Obama also raised the issue at a recent forum on inequality, calling fund managers our society’s “lottery winners.” Taxing carried interest at a low rate is, for many of us, a simple issue of fairness. The richest among us should not pay tax at a low rate on labor income.

Private equity moguls and other defenders of the status quo object to the characterization of carried interest as labor income. But they also argue that there just isn’t that much money at stake.

Taxing carried interest at ordinary income rates would raise about $18 billion over 10 years, according to a Treasury estimate of President Obama’s recent budget proposal. The Joint Committee on Taxation, which scores congressional legislation, has made similar estimates in the past.

One or two billion dollars a year is more than most of us can find in between the seat cushions. It would roughly double what Congress gives the I.R.S. to spend on information technology. Still, the number is small enough that it makes raising the issue seem petty and vindictive. Referring to carried interest has become a badge of solidarity, a touchstone for measuring class allegiances.

We should not overlook the substance of the issue. By my calculations, the government's estimate is low by an order of magnitude. Taxing carried interest at ordinary rates would generate about $180 billion in revenue over 10 years.

Here's how I get to a different bottom line. "Carried interest" is the investment fund manager's share of the profits of the fund. Managers of private equity funds, venture capital funds and many hedge funds pay tax at the long-term capital gains rate on much of their income. Because this return represents a return on labor efforts, not a financial return, I have argued in the past that carried interest should be taxed at higher ordinary income rates.

Figuring out how much money is at stake isn't easy. As I argued a few weeks ago, we should require investment funds to report carried interest separately on tax returns.

In the meantime, I looked at the latest available data from the I.R.S. Statistics of Income division. There is no separate reporting of carried interest, but buried deep in the data there is a line that reports the income of "partnership general partners" – that is, when the partner earning income is itself not an individual, but a partnership or limited liability company.

This entry in the data turns out to be a pretty good proxy for carried interest, as the fund manager of an investment fund is typically itself organized as a partnership. (By contrast, it is not unusual for the general partner of a real estate partnership to be an individual.)

The I.R.S. data is broken down by industry. In 2012, finance partnerships earned just over one trillion in income, about half of which ($527 billion) was taxed at long-term capital gains rates or preferential dividend rates. Within this group, “partnership general partners” reported $78 billion in income. The same group reported $53 billion in 2011 and $56 billion in 2010. About $40 billion, or half of the $78 billion, was taxed at low rates; applying a 20 percent rate increase would raise $8 billion a year.

One could argue, I suppose, that 2012 was not a representative year. But recent years have been even better. For example, Kohlberg Kravis Roberts alone earned about $8 billion in carried interest in 2014. The Blackstone Group reported earning $4 billion in carried interest.

My starting point for carried interest — the data on “partnership general partners” — is underinclusive. Individuals and corporations organized under Subchapter S also receive carried interest. And then one must add back in other industries, like real estate, that also generate carried interest.

If you add the amount of carried interest earned by general partners, there is about $200 billion annually in carried interest income, of which about $100 billion is taxed at low rates. Applying a 20 percent tax rate increase yields $20 billion a year, or $200 billion over 10 years. Applying a 10 percent haircut for factors like the actual invested capital of managers and anticipated changes in behavior, and the bottom line is $180 billion over 10 years.

The vast difference between the government’s estimate and my own is attributable to the anticipated behavioral response to the tax change, which one can think of as dynamic scoring on a microeconomics level.

For example, imagine that we doubled the capital gains rate to 40 percent from 20 percent. We would not get twice as much revenue as we do now. Some owners of appreciated property would feel “locked in” and defer the sale of assets.

The government’s low revenue estimate results from this “X factor” of anticipated behavioral response. But, unlike holding on to appreciated stock, there is no easy way to avoid realizing the income from carried interest.

Simple workarounds, like borrowing money from limited partners to buy direct interests in the funds, have been closed off. More complex workarounds, like having managers invest directly in portfolio companies, change the fundamental economics of private equity investing, where performance is measured on a fund-wide basis. I first proposed taxing carried interest at ordinary rates in 2006, and I’ve had thousands of conversations about it with tax lawyers. If there were an easy workaround, someone I know would have heard something about it.

Cynics say that the rich always figure out a way to avoid paying tax. This is not true. The system has many flaws, but the fact remains that closing loopholes raises revenue.

And there’s this: If it were so easy to avoid paying tax on carried interest, why would the industry fight so hard?

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: B; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: NYT
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 9:55:20 PM

Exactly. That was just my internal commentary! Sorry.

If asked whether HRC's strategy is smart, though, I think we can safely say that it is. Voters need to hear bold proposals - progressive solutions that give them a reason to get engaged.

On Jun 6, 2015, at 9:51 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

If we get the question about the strategy -- Recommend bridge back to broader income inequality policy issues and idea of low voter turnout in 2014 b/c folks were wishy-washy and didn't "stiffen their backbone"
Avoid specific candidate punditry.

From: John Del Cecato [REDACTED]
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 9:44 PM
To: B; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: NYT

1. This is smart - for her.
2. We didn't need polling and focus groups to tell us this - but happy that they're doing their research.
3. Important point made about how the Clintons could get seduced by old friends.

Politics

SUBSCRIBE LOG IN

Hillary Clinton Traces Friendly Path, Troubling Party

Hillary Rodham Clinton in Columbia, S.C., last month. If she is nominated, she does not plan to campaign much in red states.

DOUG MILLS / THE NEW YORK TIMES

By JONATHAN MARTIN and MAGGIE HABERMAN

JUNE 6, 2015

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton appears to be dispensing with the nationwide electoral strategy that won her husband two terms in the White House and brought white working-class voters and great stretches of what is now red-state America back to Democrats.

Instead, she is poised to retrace Barack Obama's far narrower path to the presidency: a campaign focused more on mobilizing supporters in the Great Lakes states and in parts of the West and South than on persuading undecided voters.

Mrs. Clinton's aides say it is the only way to win in an era of heightened polarization, when a declining pool of voters is truly up for grabs. Her liberal policy positions, they say, will fire up Democrats, a less difficult task than trying to win over independents in more hostile territory — even though a broader strategy could help lift the party with her.

This early in the campaign, however, forgoing a determined outreach effort to all 50 states, or even most of them, could mean missing out on the kind of spirited conversation that can be a unifying feature of a presidential election. And it could leave Mrs. Clinton, if she wins, with the same difficulties Mr. Obama has faced in governing with a Republican-controlled Congress.

Graphic | Electoral Paths for Hillary Clinton Should Hillary Rodham Clinton win the Democratic nomination for president in 2016, she would most likely follow the path that Barack Obama took to victory in 2008 and 2012.

Already, it is causing consternation among Democrats in conservative states that could be given short shrift by her campaign or bypassed altogether.

When Bill Clinton reclaimed the presidency for Democrats in 1992, his road to the White House ran through Southern and Southern-border states filled with what were then a precious commodity: swing voters.

Twenty years later, Mr. Obama convincingly won a second term without competing in states like Kentucky, Louisiana, Tennessee or West Virginia that powered Mr. Clinton. And because of his strong appeal among liberals, Mr. Obama did so even while losing among independent voters.

As Mrs. Clinton intensifies her campaign for the Democratic nomination, it is clear from her left-leaning policy stances, her hiring and her focus on data-driven organizing that her strategy is modeled on Mr. Obama's, not her husband's.

Bill Clinton, then the Democratic nominee for president, greeted supporters in 1992 in Carrollton, Ky. His road to the White House took him through many Southern and border states, where he won the support of swing voters.

GREG GIBSON / ASSOCIATED PRESS

If she won, it would suggest that the so-called Obama coalition of young, nonwhite and female voters is transferable to another Democrat. And it would validate the idea that energizing core supporters is more important in presidential contests than persuading those still undecided.

To the architects of the Obama strategy, Mrs. Clinton's approach is not mere homage: It is unavoidable, given that there are few genuine independents now and that technology increasingly lets campaigns pinpoint their most likely voters.

"If you run a campaign trying to appeal to 60 to 70 percent of the electorate, you're not going to run a very compelling campaign for the voters you need," said David Plouffe, a top Obama strategist who has consulted informally with Mrs. Clinton.

Mrs. Clinton has said repeatedly that she does not want a lonely victory in 2016; she wants to elect Democrats down the ballot. A group of her senior aides met recently with officials at the Democratic House, Senate and governor campaign arms to brief them on the aides' research and plans for her message and organization. And Senate Democrats are hopeful that she will lift their prospects, because there is considerable overlap in crucial states: The results in Colorado, Florida, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Ohio and Wisconsin will almost certainly determine both who wins the White House and which party controls the Senate.

Interactive Feature | Who Is Running for President (and Who's Not)? At least a dozen Republicans and a handful of Democrats have expressed an interest in running for their party's 2016 presidential nomination.

House Democrats, while realistic about the difficulty of retaking control, are also counting on Mrs. Clinton to drive turnout for their candidates. There will be contested races in some presidential swing states, but Democratic strategists say Mrs. Clinton could also help the party unseat House Republicans in deep-blue states like New York and California.

So to Democrats in states where Mrs. Clinton is unlikely to compete, her relying on Mr. Obama's map would be worrisome. It would not only further diminish beleaguered state parties, but also leave Mrs. Clinton with a narrower margin for error.

"Go ask Al Gore," Senator Joe Manchin III, Democrat of West Virginia, said about the risk of writing off states such as his, where Democratic presidential candidates prospered until 2000. "He'd be president with five electoral votes from West Virginia. So it is big, and it can make a difference."

Centrist Democrats also worry that focusing on liberal voters could lead to a continuation of the problems Mr. Obama has faced with a Congress elected by a vastly different subset of the nation.

"That's not good for the country," Mr. Manchin said, adding that he hoped Mrs. Clinton would "come to the middle" if she became president.

Of her campaign, he said, “If they get her too far over, it’s going to be more difficult to govern, it truly is.”

Other rural-state Democrats are sending not-so-subtle messages.

“I think that we always appreciate when people want to kind of talk to the whole country and listen to concerns, and I think farm country is critically important,” said Senator Heidi Heitkamp, Democrat of North Dakota.

A larger risk of a tailored strategy is that by taking advantage of polarization, a candidate could lose some of the authority that comes from the civic exercise of appealing to much of the nation.

“The president is the one person who potentially could be the unifying figure in the country,” said H. W. Brands, a historian at the University of Texas at Austin. “And if the president or a presidential candidate basically writes off 40 states, then how in the world do the people in those 40 states feel like they have a stake in that person or that election?”

Mrs. Clinton’s strategists appear mostly unmoved.

“I think everybody understands how tough it’s going to be next year if we get through the primary,” Robby Mook, Mrs. Clinton’s campaign manager, said. “So I’m not concerned about hand-wringing on the strategy.”

Aides acknowledged that Mrs. Clinton’s map would closely resemble Mr. Obama’s, with roughly the same eight or so key states as in the last two presidential elections, and with the possibility of competing in historically Republican states like Arizona where the demographics increasingly favor Democrats.

But given the Clintons’ deep ties to party leaders, including in many red states, and their instinct for building up party machinery, some Democrats wonder whether Mrs. Clinton will be able to resist old friends who press her to at least test the waters in Republican-leaning areas.

Gov. Steven L. Beshear of Kentucky said he had reminded Mr. Clinton this year that he carried Kentucky twice — and said Mrs. Clinton could win it, too.

Many in Mr. Obama's orbit are watching closely to see which impulse wins out: an Obama-style faith in the data or a temptation to acquiesce to the familiar. So far, Mrs. Clinton is heeding her mostly new team of advisers.

"One of the hardest things to do in politics is dispense with old behavior," said Dan Pfeiffer, a former Obama adviser. "That will be a challenge. But they're setting themselves up to avoid that."

Mrs. Clinton and her husband expressed concern last year when Democratic turnout fell precipitously. Recognizing that Democrats had to be galvanized to show up at the polls, Mrs. Clinton's advisers used surveys and focus groups to assess the risks of running a strongly liberal campaign. They concluded that there were few.

So she is embracing the central lesson of the Obama school: that voters turn out when they believe that an election makes a difference and that their party's standard-bearer is a champion on issues important to them.

By emphatically staking out liberal positions on gay rights, immigration, criminal justice, voting rights and pay equity for women, Mrs. Clinton is showing core Democratic constituencies that she intends to give them a reason to support her.

The stoke-the-base approach is a hallmark of Mrs. Clinton's young campaign manager, Mr. Mook. He used similar tactics to lift Gov. Terry McAuliffe of Virginia to victory in 2013, in a race both Clintons watched closely.

It is a starkly different style from that of Mrs. Clinton's 2008 campaign, when she was often concerned about being seen as too liberal to appeal to centrists.

This time, Mr. Pfeiffer said, "she hired people with a sense of where the electorate is now, not where it was in 1992."

Mrs. Clinton's strategic intentions are also evident in her focus on organizing. Mr. Mook noted twice in an interview that her campaign already had supporters in all 50 states mustering volunteers to register voters and ensure Mrs. Clinton is on the ballot. That is partly why the campaign postponed her first rally: so her team could have time to make it more of an organizing event.

That kickoff in New York next Saturday will be an important test of enthusiasm for Mrs. Clinton's candidacy, and of her campaign's ability to use big events to build the machinery that will identify and turn out voters.

What Mrs. Clinton says there will matter. But the organizing around the rally, and around the events her campaign is holding that night to build a volunteer network, will be just as consequential.

It is a far cry from her husband's campaigns.

"The highest-premium voter in '92 was a voter who would vote for one party some and for another party some," said James Carville, Mr. Clinton's chief strategist in 1992. "Now the highest-premium voter is somebody with a high probability to vote for you and low probability to turn out. That's the golden list. And that's a humongous change in basic strategic doctrine."

Ashley Parker contributed reporting.

Follow The New York Times Politics and Washington on Facebook and Twitter, and sign up for the First Draft politics newsletter.

RELATED COVERAGE

Hillary Clinton Says G.O.P. Rivals Try to Stop Young and Minority Voters JUN 4, 2015

George Soros Bankrolls Democrats' Fight in Voting Rights Cases JUN 5, 2015

Republican Candidates Assail Hillary Clinton on Voting Rights JUN 5, 2015

A Young Manager for Clinton Juggles Data and Old Baggage MAR 14, 2015

Most Popular on NYTimes.com

The Secret History of
SEAL Team 6: Quiet
Killings and Blurred
Lines

FIRST DRAFT
Rubios on the Road
Have Drawn
Unwanted Attention

Millionaires Who Are
Frugal When They
Don't Have to Be

A Manhattan
Fortuneteller Cost
Him Fortune After
Fortune

Scott Walker Riding
With Joni Ernst in
Iowa as Rivals Give
Chase

Alice Goffman's
Heralded Book on Crime Is Disputed

FIRST DRAFT
George Soros
Bankrolls Democrats'
Fight in Voting Rights
Cases

Beau Biden Funeral
Draws Many
Mourners, Including
Obama

Back to top

- | | |
|------------------------------|------------------------------|
| Home | Opinion |
| World | Science |
| U.S. | Health |
| Politics | Arts |
| The Upshot | Style |
| New York | Photos |
| Business Day | Video |
| Technology | Most Emailed |
| Sports | |

More Sections

Settings

Download Our Apps

- | | |
|---------------------------------|---------------------------|
| NYTimes | NYT Now |
| NYT Real Estate | Crossword |

Help Subscribe Feedback Terms of Service Privacy

© 2015 The New York Times Company

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato; B
Cc: Hinton, Karen
Subject: RE: NYT
Date: Saturday, June 06, 2015 9:55:58 PM

no punditry
stand up for values and whats right

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 9:51 PM
To: John Del Cecato; B; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Hinton, Karen
Subject: RE: NYT

If we get the question about the strategy -- Recommend bridge back to broader income inequality policy issues and idea of low voter turnout in 2014 b/c folks were wishy-washy and didn't "stiffen their backbone"
Avoid specific candidate punditry.

From: John Del Cecato [REDACTED]
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 9:44 PM
To: B; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: NYT

1. This is smart - for her.
2. We didn't need polling and focus groups to tell us this - but happy that they're doing their research.
3. Important point made about how the Clintons could get seduced by old friends.

Politics

SUBSCRIBE LOG IN

Hillary Clinton Traces Friendly Path, Troubling Party

Hillary Rodham Clinton in Columbia, S.C., last month. If she is nominated, she does not plan to campaign much in red states.

DOUG MILLS / THE NEW YORK TIMES

By JONATHAN MARTIN and MAGGIE HABERMAN

JUNE 6, 2015

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton appears to be dispensing with the nationwide electoral strategy that won her husband two terms in the White House and brought white working-class voters and great stretches of what is now red-state America back to Democrats.

Instead, she is poised to retrace Barack Obama's far narrower path to the presidency: a campaign focused more on mobilizing supporters in the Great Lakes states and in parts of the West and South than on persuading undecided voters.

Mrs. Clinton's aides say it is the only way to win in an era of heightened polarization, when a declining pool of voters is truly up for grabs. Her liberal policy positions, they say, will fire up Democrats, a less difficult task than trying to win over independents in more hostile territory — even though a broader strategy could help lift the party with her.

This early in the campaign, however, forgoing a determined outreach effort to all 50 states, or even most of them, could mean missing out on the kind of spirited conversation that can be a unifying feature of a presidential election. And it could leave Mrs. Clinton, if she wins, with the same difficulties Mr. Obama has faced in governing with a Republican-controlled Congress.

Graphic | Electoral Paths for Hillary Clinton Should Hillary Rodham Clinton win the Democratic nomination for president in 2016, she would most likely follow the path that Barack Obama took to victory in 2008 and 2012.

Already, it is causing consternation among Democrats in conservative states that could be given short shrift by her campaign or bypassed altogether.

When Bill Clinton reclaimed the presidency for Democrats in 1992, his road to the White House ran through Southern and Southern-border states filled with what were then a precious commodity: swing voters.

Twenty years later, Mr. Obama convincingly won a second term without competing in states like Kentucky, Louisiana, Tennessee or West Virginia that powered Mr. Clinton. And because of his strong appeal among liberals, Mr. Obama did so even while losing among independent voters.

As Mrs. Clinton intensifies her campaign for the Democratic nomination, it is clear from her left-leaning policy stances, her hiring and her focus on data-driven organizing that her strategy is modeled on Mr. Obama's, not her husband's.

Bill Clinton, then the Democratic nominee for president, greeted supporters in 1992 in Carrollton, Ky. His road to the White House took him through many Southern and border states, where he won the support of swing voters.

GREG GIBSON / ASSOCIATED PRESS

If she won, it would suggest that the so-called Obama coalition of young, nonwhite and female voters is transferable to another Democrat. And it would validate the idea that energizing core supporters is more important in presidential contests than persuading those still undecided.

To the architects of the Obama strategy, Mrs. Clinton's approach is not mere homage: It is unavoidable, given that there are few genuine independents now and that technology increasingly lets campaigns pinpoint their most likely voters. "If you run a campaign trying to appeal to 60 to 70 percent of the electorate, you're not going to run a very compelling campaign for the voters you need," said David Plouffe, a top Obama strategist who has consulted informally with Mrs. Clinton.

Mrs. Clinton has said repeatedly that she does not want a lonely victory in 2016; she wants to elect Democrats down the ballot. A group of her senior aides met recently with officials at the Democratic House, Senate and governor campaign arms to brief them on the aides' research and plans for her message and organization. And Senate Democrats are hopeful that she will lift their prospects, because there is considerable overlap in crucial states: The results in Colorado, Florida, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Ohio and Wisconsin will almost certainly determine both who wins the White House and which party controls the Senate.

Interactive Feature | Who Is Running for President (and Who's Not)? At least a dozen Republicans and a handful of Democrats have expressed an interest in running for their party's 2016 presidential nomination.

House Democrats, while realistic about the difficulty of retaking control, are also counting on Mrs. Clinton to drive turnout for their candidates. There will be contested races in some presidential swing states, but Democratic strategists say Mrs. Clinton could also help the party unseat House Republicans in deep-blue states like New York and California.

So to Democrats in states where Mrs. Clinton is unlikely to compete, her relying on Mr. Obama's map would be worrisome. It would not only further diminish beleaguered state parties, but also leave Mrs. Clinton with a narrower margin for error.

"Go ask Al Gore," Senator Joe Manchin III, Democrat of West Virginia, said about the risk of writing off states such as his, where Democratic presidential candidates prospered until 2000. "He'd be president with five electoral votes from West Virginia. So it is big, and it can make a difference."

Centrist Democrats also worry that focusing on liberal voters could lead to a continuation of the problems Mr. Obama has faced with a Congress elected by a vastly different subset of the nation.

"That's not good for the country," Mr. Manchin said, adding that he hoped Mrs. Clinton would "come to the middle" if she became president.

Of her campaign, he said, "If they get her too far over, it's going to be more difficult to govern, it truly is."

Other rural-state Democrats are sending not-so-subtle messages.

"I think that we always appreciate when people want to kind of talk to the whole country and listen to concerns, and I think farm country is critically important," said Senator Heidi Heitkamp, Democrat of North Dakota.

A larger risk of a tailored strategy is that by taking advantage of polarization, a candidate could lose some of the authority that comes from the civic exercise of appealing to much of the nation.

"The president is the one person who potentially could be the unifying figure in the country," said H. W. Brands, a historian at the University of Texas at Austin. "And if the president or a presidential candidate basically writes off 40 states, then how in the world do the people in those 40 states feel like they have a stake in that person or that election?"

Mrs. Clinton's strategists appear mostly unmoved.

"I think everybody understands how tough it's going to be next year if we get through the primary," Robby Mook, Mrs. Clinton's campaign manager, said. "So I'm not concerned about hand-wringing on the strategy."

Aides acknowledged that Mrs. Clinton's map would closely resemble Mr. Obama's, with roughly the same eight or so key states as in the last two presidential elections, and with the possibility of competing in historically Republican states like Arizona where the demographics increasingly favor Democrats.

But given the Clintons' deep ties to party leaders, including in many red states, and their instinct for building up party machinery, some Democrats wonder whether Mrs. Clinton will be able to resist old friends who press her to at least test the waters in Republican-leaning areas.

Gov. Steven L. Beshear of Kentucky said he had reminded Mr. Clinton this year that he carried Kentucky twice — and said Mrs. Clinton could win it, too.

Many in Mr. Obama's orbit are watching closely to see which impulse wins out: an Obama-style faith in the data or a temptation to acquiesce to the familiar. So far, Mrs. Clinton is heeding her mostly new team of advisers.

"One of the hardest things to do in politics is dispense with old behavior," said Dan Pfeiffer, a former Obama adviser. "That will be a challenge. But they're setting themselves up to avoid that."

Mrs. Clinton and her husband expressed concern last year when Democratic turnout fell precipitously. Recognizing that Democrats had to be galvanized to show up at the polls, Mrs. Clinton's advisers used surveys and focus groups to assess the risks of running a strongly liberal campaign. They concluded that there were few.

So she is embracing the central lesson of the Obama school: that voters turn out when they believe that an election makes a difference and that their party's standard-bearer is a champion on issues important to them.

By emphatically staking out liberal positions on gay rights, immigration, criminal justice, voting rights and pay equity for women, Mrs. Clinton is showing core Democratic constituencies that she intends to give them a reason to support her. The stoke-the-base approach is a hallmark of Mrs. Clinton's young campaign manager, Mr. Mook. He used similar tactics to lift Gov. Terry McAuliffe of Virginia to victory in 2013, in a race both Clintons watched closely.

It is a starkly different style from that of Mrs. Clinton's 2008 campaign, when she was often concerned about being seen as too liberal to appeal to centrists.

This time, Mr. Pfeiffer said, "she hired people with a sense of where the electorate is now, not where it was in 1992."

Mrs. Clinton's strategic intentions are also evident in her focus on organizing. Mr. Mook noted twice in an interview that her campaign already had supporters in all 50 states mustering volunteers to register voters and ensure Mrs. Clinton is on the ballot. That is partly why the campaign postponed her first rally: so her team could have time to make it more of an organizing event.

That kickoff in New York next Saturday will be an important test of enthusiasm for Mrs. Clinton's candidacy, and of her campaign's ability to use big events to build the machinery that will identify and turn out voters.

What Mrs. Clinton says there will matter. But the organizing around the rally, and around the events her campaign is holding that night to build a volunteer network, will be just as consequential.

It is a far cry from her husband's campaigns.

"The highest-premium voter in '92 was a voter who would vote for one party some and for another party some," said James Carville, Mr. Clinton's chief strategist in 1992. "Now the highest-premium voter is somebody with a high probability to vote for you and low probability to turn out. That's the golden list. And that's a humongous change in basic strategic doctrine."

Ashley Parker contributed reporting.

Follow The New York Times Politics and Washington on Facebook and Twitter, and sign up for the First Draft politics newsletter.

RELATED COVERAGE

 Hillary Clinton Says G.O.P. Rivals Try to Stop Young and Minority Voters JUN 4, 2015

 George Soros Bankrolls Democrats' Fight in Voting Rights Cases JUN 5, 2015

 Republican Candidates Assail Hillary Clinton on Voting Rights JUN 5, 2015

 A Young Manager for Clinton Juggles Data and Old Baggage MAR 14, 2015

Most Popular on NYTimes.com

 The Secret History of SEAL Team 6: Quiet Killings and Blurred Lines

 [FIRST DRAFT
Rubios on the Road Have Drawn Unwanted Attention](#)

 Millionaires Who Are Frugal When They Don't Have to Be

A Manhattan
Fortuneteller Cost
Him Fortune After Fortune

Scott Walker Riding
With Joni Ernst in Iowa as Rivals Give
Chase

Alice Goffman's
Heralded Book on Crime Is Disputed

FIRST DRAFT
George Soros
Bankrolls Democrats'
Fight in Voting Rights
Cases

Beau Biden Funeral
Draws Many
Mourners, Including
Obama

Back to top

Home

World

U.S.

Politics

The Upshot

New York

Opinion

Science

Health

Arts

Style

Photos

Business Day

Video

Technology

Most Emailed

Sports

More Sections

Settings

Download Our Apps

NYTimes

NYT Now

NYT Real Estate

Crossword

Help Subscribe Feedback Terms of Service Privacy

© 2015 The New York Times Company

From: Hinton, Karen
To: B; Walzak, Phil; [REDACTED] Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: NYT editorial
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 7:16:18 AM

We can do Kramer and 880 when we can put on schedule. Everyone wants you. Can tee those that make sense up.

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Sun, 7 Jun 2015 07:07:52 -0400
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "[REDACTED]" <[REDACTED]>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Karen Hinton <khinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: NYT editorial

And that is very much appreciated. And as this points out, our disagreement with BB makes this harder. But we need to keep fighting back and you can put me in play any time you need

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 11:30 PM
To: John Del Cecato <[REDACTED]> B; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: RE: NYT editorial

this is one of the many, many examples of the work this team is doing to push back

From: John Del Cecato [REDACTED]
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 11:28 PM
To: B; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil
Subject: NYT editorial

Opinion

EDITORIAL

Crime and Confusion in a Safer New York City

By THE EDITORIAL BOARD
JUNE 5, 2015

152

The New York City tabloids, TV news and other elements of the city's early-warning system for the apocalypse have noted a steady rise in shootings and homicides. To some this smells like the beginning of the end of many years of falling crime, and with it, presumably, the mayor's credibility as a leader who can keep the city safe.

Any prolonged increase in violence is worrying, and shootings have been climbing for two years.

But Mr. de Blasio has a ready response, which he repeated on Friday. It's that serious crime overall is still down — way down — from historic highs. That the shooting problem is largely confined to a few precincts in Brooklyn and the Bronx, where gangs and drugs hold sway. (Police Commissioner William Bratton said it's "career criminals, killing and shooting other career criminals.") And that he and Mr. Bratton have got this, through programs, with names like Summer All Out and Operation Impact, that will focus attention and officers on crime-plagued neighborhoods.

Mr. Bratton's remark about career criminals is meant to reassure everyone else. And the comforting statistics Mr. de Blasio cites have the virtue of being accurate. But they don't mean much if you live in a problem precinct.

A police officer in Brooklyn last week.
ROBERT STOLARIK FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

Here's what is also unsettling: the continued disagreement between the mayor and Mr. Bratton over police staffing. Mr. Bratton has sided with the City Council, which has consistently urged the hiring of 1,000 new officers. The mayor has just as consistently said that the money is needed elsewhere, and that Mr. Bratton has all the officers he needs.

Mr. de Blasio argues that the steep reduction in stop-and-frisk and marijuana arrests has led to a manpower dividend: Cops who aren't hassling young black and Latino men have a lot more time for smarter, better crime-fighting.

But if the mayor is right, why isn't his own police commissioner buying it? Maybe some political game is being played here, some budget-related dance or some message being sent to the police unions. The result for those of us in the cheap seats is confusion. Do we need more cops, or not? Does the mayor trust his police commissioner as his No. 1 public-safety expert, or not? If he does trust him, why doesn't he give him more officers? If he doesn't trust him, that is a much bigger problem.

Adding 1,000 officers to a force of 34,500 probably won't lead to drastic results. But the split on so basic a subject suggests a level of discord in the administration that is not reassuring. It also emboldens the critics who say Mr. de Blasio is ineptly leading the city back to the ugly 1990s.

The worriers have leveled many such unfair, if not overheated, attacks on the mayor, the worst being that city has been placed in grave danger by the sharp drop in stop-and-frisk arrests since their peak under Mayor Michael Bloomberg and Police Commissioner Ray Kelly. This is hard to support, since overall crime keeps falling.

Then there is the idea that cops are demoralized and unwilling to do their jobs aggressively because of the citywide reaction to police brutality, ignited by the video of a cop choking the life out of Eric Garner. By this account, no officer wants to be the next Daniel Pantaleo, the Staten Island hothead who brought Mr. Garner down, and who — with the help of an inert district attorney, Daniel Donovan — brought upon the city paroxysms of revulsion and grief.

This, too, is a dubious claim, a slander against the department's professionalism, belied by the overall crime rate.

The mayor's more fervid critics need to get a grip. But the mayor should, too. It is of barely passing interest whether he appears to be dominating Mr. Bratton, or the other way around. What matters is a unified strategy to ensure that all law-abiding citizens are treated with respect, while keeping the city safe, consolidating and perpetuating its success in lowering crime, and quieting the gunfire where it persists.

Follow The New York Times Opinion section on Facebook and Twitter, and sign up for the Opinion Today newsletter.

152 Comments

RELATED COVERAGE

Have Wary Police Brought an End to the Drop in Crime? JUN 4, 2015

More In Opinion

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Reminder
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 8:05:47 AM

If you could record a quick cell phone video of MBDB saying something like:

“I’m about to go on Face the Nation. Tune in. And then sign up at ProgressiveAgenda.us. Thanks.”

Then Team TPA can turn it into a Vine & build our list.

From: Norvell, Wiley
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; Walzak, Phil
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea; Richardson, Jerika; McGinn, Isaac
Subject: Re: He should know about this
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:10:58 AM

Yup. I'm recording

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:10 AM
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea; Norvell, Wiley; Richardson, Jerika; McGinn, Isaac
Subject: Re: He should know about this

Sent to him.

Also, whoever has audio, pls send to both me and Isaac, copied here.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 7, 2015, at 9:53 AM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

+JR WN who are also onsite

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 09:52 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: He should know about this

Zachary Roth (@zackroth)

6/7/15, 9:40 AM

HRC called into fast-food worker convention this a.m. "We need u out there. No one who works honest job in US should have 2 live in poverty"

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

From: B
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; FLONYC
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: HRC Call-In to Fast Food Workers' Convention
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:26:20 AM

Interesting. Progress, at least. Thanks for the heads up

----- Original Message -----

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 09:58 AM
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: HRC Call-In to Fast Food Workers' Convention

HRC called into a fast food workers' organizing convention today and thanked the workers for their bravery and hard work. She said, "We need you out there. No one who works an honest job in the U.S. should have to live in poverty." To my knowledge, she didn't endorse a specific minimum wage proposal as part of her remarks.

Sent from my iPhone

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Carrion, Marco A.; Richardson, Jerika
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Norvell, Wiley; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Gunaratna, Mahen; McGinn, Isaac
Subject: Re: Pastor Walrond's Remarks
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:58:40 AM

Cool

----- Original Message -----

From: Carrion, Marco A.
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:52 AM
To: Richardson, Jerika; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Norvell, Wiley; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Gunaratna, Mahen; McGinn, Isaac
Subject: Re: Pastor Walrond's Remarks

I worked with him on this. This is the beginning of his offense posture as the chair of council.

----- Original Message -----

From: Richardson, Jerika
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:51 AM
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Norvell, Wiley; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Carrion, Marco A.; Gunaratna, Mahen; McGinn, Isaac
Subject: Re: Pastor Walrond's Remarks

Yes. Very much so.

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 7, 2015, at 10:50 AM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

> Did he have our back?

>

> ----- Original Message -----

> From: Richardson, Jerika

> Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:47 AM

> To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Norvell, Wiley; John Del Cecato
<jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Carrion, Marco A.; Gunaratna, Mahen; McGinn, Isaac

> Subject: Pastor Walrond's Remarks

>

> Audio of Pastor Walrond's remarks after Mayor and First Lady's departure. Responding to recent clergy criticism of the Mayor. Sorry ... I missed a few seconds off the top.

>

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B
Cc: Hinton, Karen; Gunaratna, Mahen; [REDACTED] Walzak, Phil; de Alwis, Ronalie; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Fw: Perry comments on wall street
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 11:42:32 AM

----- Original Message -----

From: Martinez, Julien
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 11:34 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; @Research Office
Subject: RE: Perry comments on wall street

Perry: Big banks that make mistakes 'need to pay a price'
THE HILL - Rebecca Shabad
<http://thehill.com/blogs/ballot-box/presidential-races/244232-perry-big-banks-that-make-mistakes-need-to-pay-a-price>

Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry (R) in an interview that aired Sunday said he would hold big banks accountable if he's elected president.

At the same time, Perry told CNN's "State of the Union" that he would eliminate Wall Street and banking regulations.

"If a bank makes bad decisions, they'll fail. Nobody ought to be too big to fail, and all these regulations did was codify in the law, and I'd certainly get rid of those," he said.

"You make a mistake, and you make bad choices, you need to pay a price in this country. I don't care who you are, or whether you're a big Wall Street firm, or you're a big bank. You know? That's what our bankruptcy laws are for."

Perry, who announced a second run for the presidency last week, bashed the Dodd-Frank Wall Street financial reform law that Republicans have tried to roll back in Congress.

"Dodd-Frank's a great example it right here in Iowa. These bankers -- these small community banks are being strangled by regulations, and they can't loan money to their farmers or small businesses. That's just not right," he said.

...

Rick Perry to appear on 'State of the Union,' 'Face the Nation'
DALLAS MORNING NEWS - Sylvan Lane
<http://trailblazersblog.dallasnews.com/2015/06/rick-perry-to-appear-on-state-of-the-union-face-the-nation.html/>

...Perry also criticized mega-banks for refusing to clean up their own messes and said that "no one should be too big too fail."

"I don't think it's right for the people on Wall Street to walk away from mistakes and people on main street have to pay for them," said Perry.

When Bash said he sounded like a populist, Perry said "I think I sounded like a boy who grew up on a dry-land cotton farm in a house with no running water," referring to his childhood in Paint Creek.

--

Julien A. Martinez
Media Research Analyst
Office of the Mayor

jamartinez@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3064

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 9:05 AM
To: @Research Office
Subject: Perry comments on wall street

Looks like a cnn interview. Can someone grab text? Thanks!

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Re:
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 12:14:32 PM

Yes indeed - Americans are with us!

> On Jun 7, 2015, at 11:45 AM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>

> Well, I'm happy I was able to stretch the question. AND I'm experimenting with even more populist language re: TPA -- and from the heart. Also, I want to pump up the new poll everywhere I go

>

>

> ----- Original Message -----

> From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

> Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:51 AM

> To: B

> Subject:

>

> Good job on FTN. Bummer that he didn't give us more time - but he played it straight and let us get our message out - if only for one question!

>

>

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Fwd: CBS NEWS: Face the Nation Transcripts June 7, 2015: Christie, de Blasio
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 1:02:23 PM

Face the Nation transcript

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Clips <Clips@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 7, 2015 at 12:57:11 PM EDT
Subject: CBS NEWS: Face the Nation Transcripts June 7, 2015: Christie, de Blasio

Face the Nation Transcripts June 7, 2015: Christie, de Blasio

CBS NEWS - Staff

<http://www.cbsnews.com/news/face-the-nation-transcripts-june-7-2015-christie-de-blasio/>

A transcript from the June 7, 2015 edition of Face the Nation. Guests included New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, Former Texas Governor Rick Perry, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, House Homeland Security Chairman Michael McCaul, Susan Page of USA Today, Jamelle Bouie of Slate, Ron Fournier of National Journal and CBS News Congressional Correspondent Nancy Cordes

JOHN DICKERSON, HOST: Today on FACE THE NATION: The 2016 field gets even bigger, and the terror threats at home continue to grow.

With the number of Republican candidates now in double digits, we caught up with New Jersey Governor Chris Christie in New Hampshire.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GOV. CHRIS CHRISTIE (R), NEW JERSEY: Do I want to do it? In my heart, is this something that I really absolutely want to do?

(END VIDEO CLIP)

DICKERSON: Former Texas Governor Rick Perry is in. We will talk to him, too.

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio will be here to talk about his plan to move Democrats to the left.

And after new terror and security threats, we will talk to House Homeland Security Chairman Michael McCaul about the challenges we face at home.

Wrap it up with panel of political reporters.

It's all ahead on FACE THE NATION.

Good morning. I'm John Dickerson. Welcome to FACE THE NATION.

We have got a lot of news this morning, so we will start with the horse race. History was made last night in Belmont, New York, as American Pharoah, written by jockey Victor Espinoza became first horse in 37 years to win the Triple Crown.

Moving on to the other horse race, Senator Lindsey Graham and former Texas Governor Rick Perry joined the Republican presidential field last week. And former Florida Governor Jeb Bush says he will make it official on June 15. We'll talk with Rick Perry later in the broadcast, but first our conversation with New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, who we spoke with Friday in New Hampshire.

He insists he hasn't made up his mind about running, but, in our interview, he sure sounded like a candidate.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

DICKERSON: Hillary Clinton mentioned you and said you and other Republicans are trying to make it harder for people to vote. What is your reaction to that?

CHRISTIE: She doesn't know what she's talking about.

In New Jersey, we have early voting that are available to people. I don't want to expand it and increase the opportunities for fraud. Maybe that's what Mrs. Clinton wants to do. I don't know.

But the fact is that folks in New Jersey have plenty of an opportunity to vote. And maybe if she took some questions some places and learned some things, maybe she wouldn't make such ridiculous statements.

DICKERSON: She says it's fear-mongering, this idea that there's a lot of election fraud going on.

CHRISTIE: Yes. Well, she's never been to New Jersey, I guess.

DICKERSON: We have learned of a massive hack on the United States government, this incident this weak with an ISIS operative perhaps in the United States. This is a part of this new terrorism. Do you think that the United States prepared for this kind of thing?

CHRISTIE: Not as prepared as we need to be, John.

And the fact is that, of all the people who are engaged in this national conversation right now, I'm the only one who has actually done this. For seven years, I was the U.S. attorney in one of the places where there's significant terrorist activity, in New Jersey, in the New York-New Jersey area.

This is why I'm fighting so hard about this intelligence question too. And the actions that were taking this week by Congress has made our country weaker and more vulnerable.

DICKERSON: You said when the debate was going on, you can't enjoy your civil liberties if you're in a coffin.

Now, Republican Senator Mike Lee said that that was political pornography, meaning that you're trying to scare people. Are you?

CHRISTIE: No. I'm trying to tell them the truth, as opposed to what Senator Lee is doing and Senator Paul, which is, they're grandstanding for political purposes.

None of them have ever done this. None of them know what they're talking about in this regard. I have done it. And we can do this in a way that makes civil liberties safe and secure. If Congress is really worried about this, John, why don't they use their vigorous oversight capability to make sure that if someone in the intelligence community is overstepping the line, that they bring them back in?

And if we need to prosecute folks who are doing that, we will. But instead what they want to do is to make the country more vulnerable and weaker, take tools away from us that we need. So, he can call me whatever he wants to call me. I'm the guy who understands this stuff and has done it. And he's the guy who sits up on Capitol Hill in subcommittee meetings and theorizes about it.

DICKERSON: But what they say is, they hold a hearing and the director of national terrorism comes in and doesn't tell them the truth. So, their oversight is blown if they're not getting the straight story from their government.

CHRISTIE: Let me tell you this. If every time somebody didn't tell me the 100 percent truth when I was a prosecutor, if I then just threw my hands up and gave up, I wouldn't have been much of a prosecutor.

You want to conduct oversight, they have lots of tools in Congress to be able to conduct oversight. They should be doing that. And instead what they're doing is throwing tools out of our toolbox that can help protect the American homeland and have protected the American homeland for the last 13 years.

DICKERSON: But the tools that you used, the one they're modifying, was that one you used, this metadata collection? That's what they were modifying. That's not a tool you used.

CHRISTIE: No. It's not a tool I used, but it's a tool I'm aware of.

I'm aware of the efficacy of it and how important it is to our efforts to be able to do what we need to do to protect ourselves in a really dangerous world. And so I understand how these things work. I understand how the FISA court works. I understand what you have to do to put probable cause forward. I have done these things.

And they're making up fictions, John, down there to try to scare people. I'm not the person scaring people. I'm the person telling people the truth. They're the folks who are scaring people for political gain.

DICKERSON: We're now going to switch to the presidential conversation. Your son jokes that New Hampshire is your second home, basically. So, you're a truth-teller. Why don't you just say you're running?

CHRISTIE: Because I haven't made my mind up yet, John.

But I told people I'm going to make my mind up this month. And I have got a day job, too, you know. And I have got to work on making sure our budget gets passed in New Jersey, that we do the things we need to do as the legislature concludes their session on June 30.

And let's remember something. We're still eight months away from anybody voting. So, let's everybody take a deep breath. It will all be fine.

DICKERSON: When you say you're still making up your mind, is it one day you're in, one day you're out, or it's you are standing by the edge of the pool and you're thinking, OK, I'm going to go in, but I don't want to go in this very second? What is the thinking process?

CHRISTIE: It's a linear evolutionary decision-making process. I go through all the different factors that I need to consider. And when I'm done, I check that off and I move to the next factor. And the factor I'm down to now, John, is, do I want to do it? Do I want to do it? In my heart, is this something that I really absolutely want to do?

And if I check that box, then you will hear me say I'm going to announce for president. And if I don't, you will hear me say I won't.

DICKERSON: Last night at your town hall, I was talking to a fellow that was there. He likes you, but he's also thinking about supporting somebody else.

And I want to bring up some of the things he said about you might, because he might be gettable for you.

CHRISTIE: OK.

DICKERSON: He said that his issue with you is that you have too much baggage. And here's the first thing he raised, the multiple bond -- the multiple rating reductions in New Jersey.

What is your answer to him?

CHRISTIE: My answer to that is that I inherited a state 5.5. years ago that was an absolute fiscal basket case, that wasn't going to meet payroll in March of 2010, that had zero net private sector job growth from eight years before I became governor.

Now, when you start to clean up that kind of mess, and the rating agencies, by the way, wake up from this slumber they were in that led us to the huge problems we had during the recession and all the busts that we had in banks and other places, they start to downgrade. I understand that.

But what they will see when they look at New Jersey is that now we have created 186,000 private sector jobs in five years, when we had eight years of no private sector job growth, that we have cut our budget back significantly, that we have capped property taxes. And so credit downgrades are just one part of it, and that is really connected to a long-term pension problem that probably 40 of our 50 states have and are going through.

DICKERSON: You mentioned what you inherited. When Barack Obama used to say, the economy is good relative to what I inherited, Republicans pounded him for it. So, why aren't you saying the same thing President Obama says?

CHRISTIE: No, well, I'm not saying the same thing President Obama said. And, by the way, he did inherit a bad economy. We know that. He came in, in the middle of a recession.

Now, the problem for him is not so much the results, but what he's done. I don't think what he's done has been the right prescription for the country. And that's where I criticize him. DICKERSON: Here is the second thing that our voter who is on the fence -- he like your bluntness. Put that in the for Christie category.

But he thinks you're too unpredictable, too risky as a candidate and possibly as a president. What is your answer to him?

CHRISTIE: Well, I think he's just going to have to watch me over time.

I think I have been not too much of a risk in New Jersey. I think people have seen exactly what they were going to get. I have delivered exactly what I promised I was going to deliver. And so that's just something that they are going to learn over time. And that's why I say take a deep breath.

Campaigns are about convincing people. If the election were a week from today, I would be really nervous about that guy. The fact that it's eight months from today, I have got plenty of time to convince him I'm not risky at all if I decide to run.

DICKERSON: We're here at Webster Place, a drug treatment center. Why do you think people end up here?

CHRISTIE: Oh, gosh, all kinds of reasons, John.

I think some of them can be genetic in your background and in your makeup. I think some of them are bad choices that lead people into a disease that they can't find their way out of without help of places like Webster Place.

What I have been saying in New Jersey is that we can no longer incarcerate our way out of this problem, that we need to give treatment. This is a disease. And every life is precious. And we need to give people an opportunity to have the tools to be able to deal with their disease.

No other disease do we say to folks, no, no, no, you don't deserve treatment, that somehow it's a moral failing. This is a disease like anything else. And I think, quite frankly, the war on drugs has been a failure. And what we need to do now is to work on giving people the tools that we know we have available us to. We know how to help people.

Let's do it. And let's stop spending money on incarcerating nonviolent people because they are drug-addicted. Let's get into treatment and let's give them the tools to get better, because every life is a miracle.

DICKERSON: A president's role -- what is a president's role in that kind of an issue?

CHRISTIE: I think the bully pulpit is the first and most important role.

We have to lower stigma, John, to getting -- seeking drug and alcohol treatment. Right, people, as I said before, see it as a moral failing. And if you have a president up there saying, you're not a failure, you're sick, and we want to help you get better, and we're going to in this country emphasize for the first time that this is a disease and that we need to give people the treatment that they need to get better, I think that will move the needle significantly in our country for both lawmakers at the state and local level and for regular people in their neighborhoods to say, we need to treat this a little bit differently and look at it differently.

DICKERSON: You said marijuana is a gateway drug. If you were president, would you return the federal prosecutions in these states like Colorado, Washington State?

CHRISTIE: Yes.

DICKERSON: Go after it?

CHRISTIE: Yes, sir.

DICKERSON: So, if somebody enjoying that now in your state, if you're president, that is getting turned off?

CHRISTIE: Correct.

DICKERSON: And how are you going to win Colorado when you do that?

CHRISTIE: Well, listen, I think there's probably a lot of people in Colorado who are not too thrilled with what is going on there right now.

And you know the way you win any state? You go out and you tell people the truth and you lay out your ideas, and you either win or you lose. But I don't believe that people want to be told just what they want to hear. I believe they want to be told the truth as the person who is running sees it. And if I choose to do that, I will go out there in Colorado.

And I have done that. When I went out and campaigned for folks in Colorado, I have said it. So, it's not like I'm going to pander or hide. I'm going to say what I think. And if there's folks who disagree, they disagree, but I also don't know that that will be the only thing they will vote on.

DICKERSON: So, let's switch to the question of Common Core. You used to say in 2013 you supported the federal role, the president's support for Common Core. Now you say the federal role, that's a bad idea.

Wouldn't straight-talking Chris Christie, if he looked at those two things, say, you're just changing because it's an election year and it's a bad issue for you..

(CROSSTALK)

CHRISTIE: No, I'm changing because I gave it four years to work. I mean, unlike some other folks, who just reflexively dismissed it, I said, all right, let's give it a chance. Let's see if it will work. It was originally written by the nation's governors. Let's give it a chance. But in four years, John, we did not have educators or parents buy into Common Core.

I can't tell you many people, including my own sister, came to me and complained about Common Core. And at the end of the day, if you don't have buy-in from the educators and you don't have buy-in from the parents, if what I'm worried about is, well, if I change my mind, gosh, somebody like John Dickerson is going to be accuse me of flip- flopping, well, that's the way it goes.

That's being stubborn and not being a leader. If you give something four years, which we did in New Jersey, to work, and it doesn't work, then you need to change, because you owe it to the kids and their parents to do something different.

DICKERSON: What about conservatives who say, you could have seen this coming a mile away, that this was going to collapse like this, in your opinion?

CHRISTIE: Listen, everybody, everybody is a genius in retrospect.

And the fact is that I thought this was worth giving it a try. And we tried it. And it didn't work. And so that is part of what government does too, you know. You engage in certain actions which you are hopeful will work when. And they don't work, you should change course, not stay stubborn because you're afraid of somebody asking you a gotcha question.

DICKERSON: Thanks very much, Governor Christie.

CHRISTIE: Thank you, John.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

DICKERSON: We go now to the mayor of New York City, Bill de Blasio, who is making his first appearance on the show.

Welcome to FACE THE NATION, Mr. Mayor.

And I want to start at the beginning here with that question about voter participation. You heard what Chris Christie said about Hillary Clinton. What is your reaction to that

BILL DE BLASIO (D), MAYOR OF NEW YORK: Well, John, first of all, congratulations to you. You're taking over one of the great shows in television history, so I'm very, very happy for you.

Look, I think what Governor Christie is saying distracts from the core point of the dialogue we have to have. We have a democracy problem in this country. We have declining voter turnout. Secretary Clinton put forward the notion that we need a national strategy to energize voting again, to get people involved, obviously to address the many efforts that have been made by Republicans to repress voter involvement.

And I think Governor Christie should speak to the proposal, rather than just attacking her personally.

DICKERSON: Mr. Mayor, you talk about a national strategy, but then you single out Republicans. Hillary Clinton singled out Republicans. But New York City, Democratic town, has very restrictive voting rules. Hillary Clinton didn't quite mention that. By making it so political, doesn't that just undermine her case?

DE BLASIO: No, I think she's saying the right thing, because she's talking about a national vision. We have to get to early voting across the country. We have to simplify registration across the country, obviously get rid of these efforts to repress voter involvement.

But I don't think New York City or New York State are doing well enough either. Our elections are governed by state law. And for a long time, I have believed we need to make fundamental series of reforms. Let's face it. Historically, a lot of people in the political class have tried to discourage voter involvement.

A lot of incumbents prefer a very small electorate. And I think what Hillary Clinton is saying is it's time to do away with that status quo and actually get the entire American people back into our democratic process.

DICKERSON: I would to talk to you, Mr. Mayor, about your effort to take the lead in shaping the conversation for your party and for the presidential election.

You have got a 13-point plan, a progressive plan that includes things like raising the minimum wage, setting a minimal level for taxation for the wealthy. When you look at the Democratic candidates, which one most closely embodies the vision you would like to see in a candidate?

DE BLASIO: Well, John first of all, our progressive agenda -- and you can see all the details at progressiveagenda.us -- it is predicated on the notion that the American people more and more are demanding solutions to the economic challenges we face.

Let's face it. The great recession hasn't ended for so many Americans. In fact, over the last 25 years, the typical American family, when you adjust for inflation, has actually gone backwards economically. We call for increasing the minimum wage to $15 an hour nationally over the coming years, things like paid sick leave and paid family leave for families, progressive taxation, raising taxes on the wealthy.

I think these have become more and more the standard that the American people are demanding answers on. And you saw the CBS poll of course this week which shows that, more than ever, the American people want real solutions to income inequality.

As for Democratic field, each of the candidates is beginning to address these issues. I'm waiting to hear a fuller vision from each on how we will actually tackle income inequality.

DICKERSON: Including from Hillary Clinton?

DE BLASIO: Absolutely.

DICKERSON: On the question of income inequality, when I talk to some Democratic pollsters, they say when voters hear that, there are certainly some liberals and progressives who like hearing about that conversation, but other voters worry that when they hear income inequality, they think their taxes are going to go up.

DE BLASIO: I find that -- I have heard that. And I find it not disingenuous. That would be the wrong word. I find it narrow-minded.

I think there's a lot of people again in the professional political class, consultants and pollsters, who have their own way of thinking and are actually not listening to what is happening on the ground to the American people. Why did the CBS poll show overwhelming concern this week all over the country of people saying, look, regular people can't get ahead any longer, the only folks who can do well are the wealthiest?

You saw it so clearly in the poll, the feeling that the American dream has been profoundly watered down and that people can't make it to the middle class anymore. The poll that came out of Iowa, where caucus- goers on the Democratic side were explicit about the fact that they want candidates to address income inequality.

So, I think what's happened in some of the inside-the-Beltway thinking is they don't like the sound of that word, but in fact it gets to the heart of the matter. Right now, our economic system is not serving a huge percentage of our people. We should be blunt about it. We should be blunt about the fact we have the greatest income disparity since before the Great Depression.

I actually think people want that truth-telling.

DICKERSON: I want to switch now quickly to security. There was a plot thwarted this week in Boston. New York has always been a target. Can you tell us, what is your feeling about these lone wolf attacks and is New York at greater threat than ever?

DE BLASIO: I'm sorry to say we have always been the number one terror target since this recent phenomenon over the last couple of decades of terrorism as we know it today, al Qaeda and ISIS.

New York has always been the number one terror target. We are constantly vigilant. We have 1,000 NYPD officers who focus on anti- terror activities. We know that's the reality of that. We're going to be in that constant state of vigilance for a long time.

But that being said, we have tremendous partnership between the NYPD and our federal partners, particularly the FBI. And we have been able to together thwart a number of attacks. The lone wolf phenomenon, of course, is unsettling, because it could be an individual there's no indication of. But, that being said, bluntly, we saw that in a different way in a Newtown or Columbine. We have seen lone wolves of a different type before. Our job is to see the warning signs early, particularly that involves either radicalization or mental health problems, and intervene early. And I think more and more, we're figuring how to do that well.

DICKERSON: All right, Mayor de Blasio, thanks very much.

DE BLASIO: Thanks, John.

DICKERSON: We will be back in a minute.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

DICKERSON: We're back now with the chairman of the House Homeland Security Committee, Texas Congressman Michael McCaul.

Mr. Chairman, I want to ask you about this massive data breach we heard about this week, some four million former or current government employees. Is this -- these seem to happen pretty regularly now. Is this the new normal? And what is the next thing we need to be worried about?

REP. MICHAEL MCCAUL (R), TEXAS: Well, first, let me say, it's been an honor to be part of our inaugural show.

But, having said that, this was the most significant breach of federal networks in U.S. history. And that's very significant. We look at the threat indicators, who has a motive and intent to steal this data.

This was a huge data mining process. And it targeted political appointees in the federal government and federal employees, four million of them. In my judgment, this was an attack by China against the United States government. It quantities to espionage. And that raises all sorts of issues that we need to deal with.

DICKERSON: And if I can just be clear, you mean China, the government of, as opposed to just a person who is in China.

MCCAUL: That has not been -- the attribution, they call it, to go back to the source has not been confirmed by the United States government.

But I believe, in my judgment, that all the threat indicators point to the fact that it is China, and perhaps nation state-sponsored because of the way it was done. It was not done to steal credit card information and that kind of theft. It was done to get to personal information on political appointees in the federal government and federal employees to exploit them so that later down the road, they can use those for espionage to either recruit spies or compromise individuals in the federal government.

DICKERSON: In terms of responses, what do you do, shut a door or do you punch back? Do you use computer espionage back...

(CROSSTALK)

MCCAUL: I passed a cyber-security bill out of the House. I hope the Senate will pass that and the president will sign it into law.

But I think this is an area where there are no rules of the game in terms of espionage, in terms of stealing this kind of information. And I think it raises all sorts of issues with Americans. Anthem was an attack against health care records of Americans and Blue Cross/Blue Shield.

This, we think, originates from the same source out of China to steal data not only on federal employees, but Americans, to have a large database of intelligence information against us.

DICKERSON: I want to switch to this incident in Boston, self- radicalization. What is your feeling about that?

MCCAUL: Well, I think the biggest concern that the FBI has and Homeland Security officials have is that we have gone beyond the days of bin Laden, where they were caves and couriers, to a new generation of terrorists who use the Internet through Twitter accounts to activate followers in the United States.

These recruiters out of Syria are very sophisticated on the Internet, and through their Twitter accounts, and they have thousands of followers online in the United States, can send a call to arms to activate them to attack, in this case, police officers, in the Boston case, in Garland, or military installations as well.

This is a very hard thing to stop, and a hard thing for FBI and Homeland to monitor. When you talk about the new wave of terrorism, this is pretty much it.

DICKERSON: You were also just in Iraq and other areas, regions where there are foreign fighters. Talk a little bit about that.

MCCAUL: That's a dual threat.

We have the radicalization over the Internet that I just talked about, but also the foreign fighter that travels to the region, to Syria and Iraq, receives training and then comes back. We went over there to try to close security gaps with respect to travel.

Istanbul, 40 million passengers through that airport per year, that is the epicenter of the transit for foreign fighters. They go through there to Western Europe and then into the United States. Western Europe has almost no rules in terms of who they let in and out through air travel, and then their visa waiver to get into the United States.

That's where my biggest concern is to stop to them.

DICKERSON: Well, that's the airports over there. Our airports over here didn't have a good week either with the TSA.

MCCAUL: I think a dismal performance. I will be conducting oversight hearings on this. I just got a classified briefing this week on this.

It's been reported 95 percent failure rate. We know that al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula and the Khorasan group are constantly targeting aircraft through non-metallic IEDs and such to blow up airplanes. With the high-threat environment, John, that we're in right now, this is totally unacceptable.

DICKERSON: Mr. Chairman, thanks very much. We appreciate it.

MCCAUL: Thank you, John.

DICKERSON: We will be right back.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

DICKERSON: When we come back, we will talk to the latest Republican presidential contender, former Texas Governor Rick Perry, who is on the trail in Manchester this morning, and will be joining us in just a moment.

Stay with us.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

DICKERSON: Some of our stations are leaving us now, but for most of you, we will be right back with a lot more FACE THE NATION, including an interview with Texas Governor Rick Perry and our reporters roundtable.

Stay with us.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

DICKERSON: Welcome back to FACE THE NATION.

Former Texas Governor Rick Perry joins us from the campaign trail in New Hampshire. Welcome, governor.

I want to start by just saying, why are you going to do better this time than you did four years ago?

RICK PERRY, (R) PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE: I would suggest that's the case. We're healthy and well prepared. So, I spent a lot of time in Iowa and New Hampshire, South Carolina, that plays great dividends just in itself.

DICKERSON: When, I listened to your speeches and your announcement speech, it seemed like you were saying the governors have a certain set of skills and senators need not even apply for this presidential job. Is that what you mean?

PERRY: Well, I think anybody can apply. But I think the facts are that governors do have that executive experience, particularly someone with 14 years of that executive experience that no one gave me a handbook that said here is how you handle Katrina and Rita and the hurricanes, nobody said here's how you handle ebola, here's how you handle a crisis on your border. That only comes with that executive experience. And that's what I'm asking Americans to take a look at.

Here is how we run the 12th largest economy in the world. Here's the results we've had, 1.5 million jobs created from '07 through 2014. Don't you think those policies, that focus on economics is what we need at the White House at this particular point in time?

And obviously the preparation on foreign policy that I've done and dealing with those issues is also I think selling point that Americans are going to look at and say that executive experience does matter and it matters a lot.

DICKERSON: Well, what the senators would say is yes, executive experience, you learned to make decisions, but if you don't understand the issues in your bones the way they think they do, you can be given option A and option B and sure you can make a choice between the two, but you don't option C exists.

PERRY: Well, I disagree with that analysis obviously. We took a chance on a young, inexperienced United States senator back in 2008 and both economically and foreign policy-wise I think most observers would say that we find ourselves in rather a pickle, if you will economically and foreign policy.

Our allies don't know whether they can to trust America or not, because the lack of experience that this president and his inability to connect the dots.

And so, I think executive experience -- you know, it's really interesting to me that this business that we find ourselves in, on the political side in governing, the only place that you would discount experience -- when you get on an airliner going to Chicago, to London, you want the most experienced pilot sitting in the front left seat. I think that should be the same for the next leader of the United States.

DICKERSON: On the campaign trail, you talk about how you've been hitting the books since last presidential race. What is the most important thing you've learned in all of your studies?

PERRY: Obviously spent lot of time with foreign policy, with people with the Hoover Institute, with the George Schultzes with the Henry Kissingers, you know, the Brian Hooks at the (inaudible) initiative folks, with Edelman and the Colins. I mean, those are individuals with extraordinary deep understanding of foreign policy.

Sitting at the table with James Ricard and Richard Fisher on monetary policy, two people at kind of opposite side of some of these issues, but that is the type of preparation, I think that is the type of experience that you want to be table to tap into on these host of issues that you would face on whether it's monetary domestic policy, foreign policy also keeping in mind I think that you need to have a president who understands that all wisdom doesn't emanate out of Washington, D.C., that you have got to trust these governors and trust these states to come up with the right concepts and the right ideas and to frankly experiment out there in America, and that makes for great competition and stronger country.

DICKERSON: I'm going to ask you something, governor, you said in your announcement. You said the American people see a rigged game where insiders get rich and the middle class pays the tab. Now, that's coming from you. We talked to Mayor Bill de Blasio of New York, could have come from him, could have come from Senator Warren of Massachusetts. So, talk about that a little bit.

PERRY: Yeah, as a boy who grew up on a dry land cotton farm, the child of a couple of tenant farmers -- I grew up in a house that didn't even have running water. I kind of -- I relate to people who struggle and work hard to get ahead. And when we see these Wall Street bankers, when we look back at General Motors getting sweet treatment, if you will, I believe in the bankruptcy laws in this country. There is nothing too big to fail from my perspective when it comes from banks or where it comes to big corporate entities.

And I think Americans are fed up, I am. We're fed up by seeing Wall Street get treated specially. And you can't even get loan from your community bank because of Dodd-Frank banking regulations. All that has to change, John. I'm telling you, Americans are fed up with that type of inside where the rich get richer and the folks out on main street have to pay bills.

DICKERSON: What are you going to do about Wall Street, then?

PERRY: Well, regulate them. I mean, regulate them. Make sure that that doesn't happen. If they make bad decisions, let them live with those bad decisions. Don't bail them out.

DICKERSON: All right, I'll -- but isn't that what Dodd-Frank is? Regulations? You were just saying that was bad?

PERRY: Dodd-Frank is killing the community banks over regulation in that sense.

There needs to be some wisdom. My home state one of the things that we were successful with was finding that balance between protecting the citizens and allowing the freedom for folks to grow to be able to get loans, to be able to do the things that really matter. And Dodd- Frank just codifies into place these regulations. Big banks, and they hire all the lawyers, they hire all the accountants, and then they write it off and we pay for it. Community banks that are the real core of lending for small businessmen and women, for farmers in Iowa. You've got to give them the freedom to loan to these people.

DICKERSON: Governor, I want to get your reaction here Hillary Clinton attacked you directly. Let's listen to what she said. And I want to get your reaction.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

HILLARY CLINTON, (D) PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE: Here in Texas, former Governor Rick Perry signed a law that a federal court said was actually written with the purpose of discriminating against minority voters. He applauded when the Voting Rights Act was gutted and said the laws protections were outdated and unnecessary.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

DICKERSON: Governor, your reaction. But also Hillary Clinton's folks and she says, there really aren't a whole host of cases of voter fraud, and that this is something you're just trumping up. Your reaction?

PERRY: I think that the people of the state of Texas overwhelmingly support voter identification and that's what this is really about. Hillary Clinton believes that all wisdom emanates out of Washington, D.C. She's the classic Washington insider. And she wants Washington to take this over.

Listen, we've seen this with the Affordable Care Act. We've seen it with education policy. If you think that Washington needs to be controlling our voting and our oversight for voting, I just don't agree with that. And I think most Americans believe that the governors, the legislators and overwhelmingly passed in the state of Texas.

She's basically looking at the people of Texas and other states that have put these types of voter identification laws into place and saying we don't trust you.

DICKERSON: All right, Governor, we're going to leave it there. Thank you, Governor Rick Perry of Texas.

We'll be right back with...

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

DICKERSON: Joining us now to talk about all the news this week, The Washington Bureau chief of USA Today Susan Page. We want to welcome my Slate magazine colleague, politics writer Jamelle Bouie to the broadcast. And my CBS News Colleague, congressional correspondent Nancy Cordes. And last but absolutely not least, is Ron Fournier. He's a senior political columnist and editorial director of The National Journal.

OK, Susan, I want to start with you. Rick Perry, he's hit the books. He's got the glasses. What are his chances in life?

SUSAN PAGE, USA TODAY: So, do you get second chance to make a first impression? That's the issue for Rick Perry.

I take him very seriously in the presidential field. I think it is a mistake to say because he had such catastrophic experience last time around that we shouldn't -- that we should not take him seriously. And I think you saw the kind of confidence and manner, the kind of comfortable manner that he has in the interview that you just did with him.

Also a good fit with his party. He's from Texas; that's part of the country that where the Republican Party is strongest. He does seem both more serious and a little more prepared, I think, this time around.

DICKERSON: Ron, let me ask you then about Chris Christie, the other fellow we heard from today.

What about him?

What are his chances in the Republican -- ?

(CROSSTALK)

RON FOURNIER, NATIONAL JOURNAL: First, congratulations. This reminds me of what it must have been like to take the first fast ball from Nolan Ryan.

You might swing and miss, but you'll never forget.

(LAUGHTER)

FOURNIER: Chris Christie has always struck me as somebody who is really made for the times, at least his brand, a straight talker, tell hard truths, all the things he told you that he was going to be about.

Now if that was the interview that might really appeal in New Hampshire. The problem is he's really muddled, really messed up, really maybe even destroyed that brand.

Bridgegate, whether he was involved with it and not, he certainly failed the test of what kind of people you put around you and what kind of tone you set as leader. And the budget problems in New Jersey and some of the other problems in New Jersey just don't reflect well on him as a potential president.

NANCY CORDES, CBS CONGRESSIONAL CORRESPONDENT: Although I have to say that one part of your interview really struck me, which his when you were asking him about Common Core. And it reminded me that there's a few things that he does better than just about anybody in this party.

When he said, I haven't flip-flopped. I thought about Common Core. We tried it out for four years. And I changed my mind. It wasn't working.

A lot of politicians, when you ask them a question like that, they try to argue that they never changed their mind in the first place and it comes across as disingenuous.

But on this issue and others that could really tie him up within his own party, he's willing to say, not that I made a mistake but that, like everything in life, if it's not working and you thought it would, you try something else.

FOURNIER: It made a flip-flop look like a matter of principle. It was a very (INAUDIBLE).

(LAUGHTER)

(CROSSTALK)

JAMELLE BOUIE, SLATE: -- both of their big problems in this field is that the rest of the camps are so good. If this were four years ago I think Rick Perry today and Chris Christie today would be great candidates.

But against Jeb Bush, Marco Rubio, Scott Walker, their problem is what do you have to offer that we don't already have in this field?

DICKERSON: And it's new and --

(CROSSTALK)

DICKERSON: -- want to ask you about Rand Paul and where he ended up this week. He took on the PATRIOT Act, had a little victory, but in the end what passed was not what he wanted; give me a sense of Rand Paul at the end of this week.

CORDES: Well, he raised a lot of money. His campaign won't even say how much he raised because they say that this fight was not about that. I think a lot of his Republican colleagues would beg to differ but he did energize that slice of the electorate that is as passionate on this issue as he is.

And when you have got a field that is as crowded as this one, 16 or so people, a devoted slice can take you a long way.

On the other hand, he showed that when he's under pressure he tends to say things that don't come across as extremely presidential.

PAGE: He's got another problem and the PATRIOT Act debate kind of highlighted and that is developments in the world. You had Chairman McCaul talk about it's actually -- he thinks perhaps a Chinese government hack of federal employment records here. And we've had -- seen the rise of ISIS and there terrible brutality of ISIS. I think that's hard -- that hurts Rand Paul's case that this is a time for the United States to be less engaged in the world.

DICKERSON: Jamelle, do you think that this issue of surveillance has gone away?

I mean, when Rand Paul's banking on is that there's a whole bunch of people out in the center who really care about this.

Has it come and gone as an issue?

What's your sense of its relevance going forward?

BOUIE: I think Paul's right about that. I think there is a large number of people who are very anxious about government surveillance. I think his problem is that, in the context of Republican primary, those people aren't so much there. There are some of them are there. But if he wants to actually become the consensus candidate of the Republican Party, those are not the people who are going to take him there. So he's sort of out of step with the kinds of people he needs to be in step with on this one issue, even if, in a general election, I think he'd be -- I think he would be a great player.

FOURNIER: I agree with that, everything everybody is saying. When you just look at the horse race, let's give the guy some credit. This issue and judicial reform are two issues that he's not taking just right or left. They are really millennial issues, both this is new era and we have to look at these issues in a new way and make up for the mistakes that we've made in the past and be honest about those mistakes.

And they appeal to the rising voters in this country and the rising leaders in this country.

BOUIE: And to that point I think Paul will end up being influential in the Republican field. In your interview with Christie, Christie's entire thing on reforming drug laws could have come from the mouth of Rand Paul and I don't think that's some weird coincidence.

FOURNIER: I hope he influences the Democrats, too. They're, in my mind, on the wrong side of -- especially Hillary Clinton -- on the wrong side of NSA and surveillance.

DICKERSON: Well, you've given me a nice segue. Thank you --

(CROSSTALK)

DICKERSON: -- Hillary Clinton, Susan Page, let me ask you, Hillary Clinton this week took a big swing at bunch of her Republican -- possible Republican opponents.

What was behind that?

PAGE: Well, one thing that's behind is, I think, actual Democratic concern about this -- all these voter laws aimed at what Republicans see as voter fraud. That may not make very limited -- they make just a little bit of difference. But if you had an election like we had in 2000, they could make the difference in a key state. So I think there is concern that these laws --

(CROSSTALK)

PAGE: -- laws are in place. And we're seeing a big effort that Hillary Clinton basically unveiled this week, or this past week, to try to push back against these laws, fight them in the courts, fight them in the state legislatures.

They're not an issue that's number one, I think, on voters' minds, but they do energize a certain segment of the Democratic Party. And these laws themselves could make a difference in a very close election.

CORDES: And she's been on defense ever since she got into this election, essentially sending off questions about her emails, about the foundation. This was a chance -- and I'm sure her supporters thought it was about time for her to get on offense against her opponents, who have been hitting her for months.

FOURNIER: Again, this is an issue, it's a rise above the horse race. These laws go back to 1845, when farmers had to be on their farms on Sunday to go to church and had to be in the market on Wednesday.

A couple of things have happened since then, like the telegraph and the Internet. She's exactly right. These laws have got to be modernized and brought into digital age.

But is she a person who can get it done? Or is she going to be another politician that makes a lot of promises, create these wedge issues and then when she gets into office, she divides rather than unites. She plays to her base rather than getting things done.

That would be my worry. She's absolutely right. It's got to be done.

But is she the leader who can get it done? I don't know yet.

DICKERSON: Jamelle, do you see any larger strategy here for Hillary Clinton in picking this issue?

Ron makes a very correct point, which is we have a policy question here; is it easier to vote and should it be easier or harder?

But there's also the political balance of what she's trying to do.

What is your sense of the larger political strategy you see coming out of this?

BOUIE: I think she is trying to -- obviously she's trying to reconstitute the Obama coalition. But I think she's trying energize particular groups in that coalition that are absolutely vital to any win.

If you look at Obama's margins in Ohio in 2012, in Virginia in 2012, that's a -- those are margins that come entirely from African American voting enthusiasm. If she can mobilize that, if she show African American voters that not only will she help their direct interests but she respects them as citizens, so to put it, I think that can go a long way towards repeating that performance.

And if she can get that kind of turnout among African Americans in those states then that's almost the election for her. That is a win. And it's powerful.

FOURNIER: Excuse me. But you're exactly right. But that's my problem. She's using this to appeal to one small segment of the American public. This should be an issue that we all care about, whether you're living in Kentucky or Macomb County, Michigan, the fact that we're still playing under rules that are two centuries old is something that should really -- a good leader would make it matter to somebody in Little Rock and somebody in Macomb --

(CROSSTALK)

FOURNIER: -- Kentucky.

BOUIE: I don't think those things are mutually exclusive. And in the speech, she framed it explicitly as not I'm not doing this for you, this particular group of people, but we're -- this is the United States. We're a great democracy. It is wrong for Americans to be kept from the polls.

FOURNIER: But what are we hearing out of her campaign?

BOUIE: We're doing that.

CORDES: But I think -- I mean, this is the point a campaign where everyone is playing to their base, right? And I think it's really --

FOURNIER: But they've got to be better than that.

CORDES: Well, but who isn't at this point?

Whether trying to fire up their supporters because we're in a situation in 2015 where you don't have as many people in the middle anymore that you can go to, to try to beat the other guy. You have got to get your supporters, it's the Obama path in 2008 and 2012. It's not the Bill Clinton path of the 1990s. And so it's clear that she's decided that that's the way to win.

PAGE: But to Ron Fournier's point, if you want to stand out in a great big field, maybe being principled is the way to do it.

(CROSSTALK)

PAGE: -- you saw a little of that in the Chris Christie interview, which is he comes across as somebody who's not in Washington -- I agree he's got problems, serious problems -- he comes across as somebody who's not in Washington, somebody who will tell you the truth. You ask him if you're going to get prosecuted in Colorado if you're smoking marijuana in the Christie administration, he said yes. That is kind of refreshing.

DICKERSON: Yes, period, and I'll say it again.

BOUIE: I will say that the Clinton path in '92 and '96 was good and aimed at the middle. But it also never scored a majority of voters. And even in '96, when Perot was less of a factor, Clinton only reached 49 percent. The Obama path may be tailored to a polarized electorate. But Barack Obama's the only Democrat since FDR to break 50 percent twice.

DICKERSON: And, Ron, what we're talking about here is an electorate that is different than we have seen before. That really is all about possibly the way these campaigns are looking at it now, I appeal to my team, you appeal to your team.

And this old idea of people in the middle who might be appealed to by rising above, are there enough of them anymore to turn them -- ?

FOURNIER: -- there's a majority of them.

DICKERSON: But that vote?

FOURNIER: Well, that's a problem.

Why don't they vote? Is it because of the voting laws? Partly. But it's mainly because they have no reason to vote. They're not being inspired. They know nothing is getting done in this town.

So the campaign, both parties are capitulating to the worst instincts. Let's do this thing called negative partisanship. It's really -- that's now a policy of all parties. It's not about inspiring anybody. It's not about getting people to vote for me. It's about getting them to vote against the other side.

(CROSSTALK)

FOURNIER: -- new kind of politics, not a Bill Clinton politics. You're exactly right.

But certainly -- but we have to do what Barack Obama promised to do in 2008 and actually follow through as a leader.

DICKERSON: Another worse instinct is only caring about Hillary Clinton on the Democratic side. There are other Democratic candidates.

Susan Page, give me sense of the Lincoln Chafee joined in the race. What's your sense of the other members of the Democratic race?

PAGE: If the metric system debate takes off --

(LAUGHTER)

PAGE: -- he's perfectly situated --

(CROSSTALK)

PAGE: Not the candidate, not the challenger I would look to. I would look to Bernie Sanders who I think has done surprisingly well.

I mean, he's -- it's hard to imagine that he gets the nomination from Hillary Clinton, but he's getting big crowds in Iowa and New Hampshire. He's helping to shape this race. He's causing some problems I think for Hillary Clinton in terms of looking authentic, because Bernie Sanders is nothing but authentic, and also in trying to decide where she positions herself in this Democratic Party -- because Democratic Party is moving to the left, especially on these economic issues.

But if you're talking about a state like Virginia, those voters -- if you're going to win Virginia, lot of them are in the middle.

DICKERSON: Ron Fournier, you talked to Martin O'Malley, another challenger, where is he in his progress?

FOURNIER: I agree with Susan, but I wouldn't write off Martin O'Malley, because here is a guy who's got a relatively progressive record, and he can position himself authentically as a can-do pragmatic, metrics-driven leader. So, it'd be interesting to see. I don't think he can beat her, but I think he's going to give her a tough fight.

One thing I'm hearing is that both Martin O'Malley and Bernie Sanders' campaigns planning to blow up the DNC debates, planning to blow up basically the Clinton engineer debate system, and they're already talking to some of the liberal groups who like to have their own debates outside the system. And that can be interesting.

DICKERSON: Interesting.

All right. Thank you all very much for joining me on the first time out here.

For all of you out there, stay with us. We'll be right back with more of FACE OF THE NATION.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

DICKERSON: It's been one week since Beau Biden, the son of Vice President Joe Biden and former Delaware attorney general, died of brain cancer at the age of 46. Yesterday, a thousand mourners including friends, family, military leaders and two presidents turned out to honor him at a service in Wilmington, Delaware, at the St. Anthony of Padua Catholic Church.

President Obama and Beau Biden's brother Hunter and sister Ashley celebrated the 46-year-old as a father, son, brother and soldier.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

HUNTER BIDEN, BEAU'S BROTHER: Beau's was the hand everyone reached for in their time of need. Beau's was the hand that was reaching for yours before you even had to ask.

ASHLEY BIDEN, BEAU'S SISTER: He was the constant anchor for me, my brothers, our father and our mother. He was our protector, our mediator, the captain of our lives.

BARACK OBAMA, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: He did in 46 years what most of us couldn't do in 146. He was a sign of an incredibly family who brushed away the possibility of privilege for the harder, better reward of earning his own way. He was a soldier who dodged glory, exuded true humility, a prosecutor who defended the defenseless, a rare politician who collected more fans than foes, and a rare public figure who prioritized his private life above all of us.

(END VIDEO CLIPS)

DICKERSON: Beau Biden left behind wife Hallie and two children, Hunter and Natalie. Our thoughts and prayers for God's grace are with the Bidens.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

DICKERSON: That's all the time we have today. Thank you for joining me on my first broadcast at moderator.

Bob Schieffer had one piece of advice, "Stick to the news". That's what he did. And that's what we'll do, inviting people on to help us understand the news and we'll try to ask the questions you want answered.

And we'll hope to hear from you. Some of you may be on e-mail, Facebook and Twitter right now.

Until next week, for FACE THE NATION, I'm John Dickerson.

END OF TRANSCRIPT

From: Hinton, Karen
To: John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: B; Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif
Subject: Re: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 1:42:54 PM

We are doing Kramer soon. I hope so anyway. Otherwise, my life will be pure misery.

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Sun, 7 Jun 2015 17:39:23 +0000
To: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Karen Hinton <khinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Emma Wolfe <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Soliman, Sherif" <SSoliman@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

I'm sure Marcia Kramer will do a local story saying "today on Face the Nation, Mayor de Blasio pointedly failed to condemn the Stamford man who called 911 when an angry cat wouldn't let him enter his own home."

On Jun 7, 2015, at 1:26 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Am getting line fixed

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 01:23 PM
To: B
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif
Subject: Re: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

It's great !

On Jun 7, 2015, at 1:04 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

This summary ain't bad at all. Except pls make the fix the word "face" which is supposed to be "fact". And get ready to propose a voting reform package for the next legislative session

From: Clips
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 12:58 PM

Subject: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

CBS NEWS - Staff

<http://www.cbsnews.com/news/de-blasio-defends-clinton-on-voting-rights-attacks/>

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio backed Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton on voting rights, encouraging her Republican opponents to engage her ideas to expand access to the polls.

During a speech last week, Clinton criticized several Republican governors by name for seeking to depress turnout among young and minority voters as she called for a sweeping expansion of early voting rules and automatic voter registration at age 18. One of those governors, Chris Christie of New Jersey, said on CBS' "Face the Nation" Sunday that Clinton "doesn't know what she's talking about."

"I think what Governor Christie is saying distracts from the core point of the dialogue we have to have," de Blasio said in a separate interview. "We have a democracy problem in this country. We have declining voter turnout. Secretary Clinton put forward a notion we need a national strategy to energize voting again, to get people involved. Obviously, to address the many efforts made by Republicans to repress voter involvement. And I think Governor Christie should speak to the proposal rather than just attacking her personally."

Host John Dickerson asked de Blasio whether Clinton's message was undermined by the fact that New York City which has Democratic leadership, also has very restrictive voting rules. De Blasio said that wasn't the case.

"I think she's saying the right thing because she's talking about a national vision," he said. "But I don't think New York City and New York state are doing well enough either. Our elections are governed by state law and for a long time I've believed we need to make a fundamental series of reforms. Let's face it, a lot of the people in the political class have tried to discourage voter involvement and a lot of incumbents prefer a very small electorate."

De Blasio is one of the Democrats who is pushing his party's presidential candidates to stake out progressive positions on several national issues. The 13-point progressive plan he unveiled recently calls for an increase in the minimum wage to 15 dollars an hour nationally, paid sick leave and families, and increasing taxes on the wealthy, among other things.

He won't say whether there is one candidate who best exemplifies these issues.

"Each of the candidates is beginning to address these issues. I'm waiting to hear a fuller vision from each on how we'll actually tackle income inequality," de Blasio said.

He said it's cynical for pollsters to argue that many people think the term "income inequality" means their taxes will go up. He pointed to a recent CBS News poll in which two-thirds of Americans said that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly in the United States.

"I think what's happening is some of the inside-the-Beltway thinking is they don't like the sound of that word but in fact it gets to the heart of the matter," he said. "Right now, our economic system is not serving a huge percentage of our people. We should be blunt about it. We should be blunt about the fact that we have the greatest income disparity since before the Great Depression."

Addressing the ongoing terror threats that New York City faces, de Blasio said the authorities are "constantly vigilant" with over 1,000 New York City Police Department officers focusing on anti-terror activities and a partnership with the FBI.

"We know that's the reality that we're going to be in that constant state of vigilance for a long time," he said. "Our job is to see the warning signs early, particularly that involves either radicalization or mental health problems, and intervene early. And I think more and more we're figuring out how to do that well."

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; B; Hinton, Karen; Soliman, Sherif
Subject: Re: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 1:46:21 PM

"He talks incessantly about income inequality. But when it comes to feline inequality, does the cat have Bill de Blasio's tongue? That story coming up next..."

On Jun 7, 2015, at 1:41 PM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Is the cat calmer now?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 1:39 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: B; Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif
Subject: Re: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

I'm sure Marcia Kramer will do a local story saying "today on Face the Nation, Mayor de Blasio pointedly failed to condemn the Stamford man who called 911 when an angry cat wouldn't let him enter his own home."

On Jun 7, 2015, at 1:26 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea
<AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Am getting line fixed

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 01:23 PM
To: B
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif
Subject: Re: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

It's great !

On Jun 7, 2015, at 1:04 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

This summary ain't bad at all. Except pls make the fix the word "face" which is supposed to be "fact". And get ready to propose a voting reform package for the next legislative session

From: Clips
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 12:58 PM
Subject: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

CBS NEWS - Staff

<http://www.cbsnews.com/news/de-blasio-defends-clinton-on-voting-rights-attacks/>

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio backed Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton on voting rights, encouraging her Republican opponents to engage her ideas to expand access to the polls.

During a speech last week, Clinton criticized several Republican governors by name for seeking to depress turnout among young and minority voters as she called for a sweeping expansion of early voting rules and automatic voter registration at age 18. One of those governors, Chris Christie of New Jersey, said on CBS' "Face the Nation" Sunday that Clinton "doesn't know what she's talking about."

"I think what Governor Christie is saying distracts from the core point of the dialogue we have to have," de Blasio said in a separate interview. "We have a democracy problem in this country. We have declining voter turnout. Secretary Clinton put forward a notion we need a national strategy to energize voting again, to get people involved. Obviously, to address the many efforts made by Republicans to repress voter involvement. And I think Governor Christie should speak to the proposal rather than just attacking her personally."

Host John Dickerson asked de Blasio whether Clinton's message was undermined by the fact that New York City which has Democratic leadership, also has very restrictive voting rules. De Blasio said that wasn't the case.

"I think she's saying the right thing because she's talking about a national vision," he said. "But I don't think New York City and New York state are doing well enough either. Our elections are governed by state law and for a long time I've believed we need to make a fundamental series of reforms. Let's face it, a lot of the people in the political class have tried to discourage voter involvement and a lot of incumbents prefer a very small electorate."

De Blasio is one of the Democrats who is pushing his party's presidential candidates to stake out progressive positions on several national issues. The 13-point progressive plan he unveiled recently calls for an increase in the minimum wage to 15 dollars an hour nationally, paid sick leave and families, and increasing taxes on the wealthy, among other things.

He won't say whether there is one candidate who best exemplifies these issues.

"Each of the candidates is beginning to address these issues. I'm waiting to hear a fuller vision from each on how we'll actually tackle income inequality," de Blasio said.

He said it's cynical for pollsters to argue that many people think the term "income inequality" means their taxes will go up. He pointed to a recent CBS News poll in which two-thirds of Americans said that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly in the United States.

"I think what's happening is some of the inside-the-Beltway thinking is they don't like the sound of that word but in fact it gets to the heart of the matter," he said. "Right now, our economic system is not serving a huge percentage of our people. We should be blunt about it. We should be blunt about the fact that we have the greatest income disparity since before the Great Depression."

Addressing the ongoing terror threats that New York City faces, de Blasio said the authorities are "constantly vigilant" with over 1,000 New York City Police Department officers focusing on anti-terror activities and a partnership with the FBI.

"We know that's the reality that we're going to be in that constant state of vigilance for a long time," he said. "Our job is to see the warning signs early, particularly that involves either radicalization or mental health problems, and intervene early. And I think more and more we're figuring out how to do that well."

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B; Hinton, Karen; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 1:46:42 PM

Dickerson is interested in meeting you in person for off the record "meet and greet". Will work to set up when convenient for you.

From: B
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 01:04 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif
Subject: Fw: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

This summary ain't bad at all. Except pls make the fix the word "face" which is supposed to be "fact". And get ready to propose a voting reform package for the next legislative session

From: Clips
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 12:58 PM
Subject: CBS NEWS: De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

De Blasio: "We have a democracy problem in this country"

CBS NEWS - Staff

<http://www.cbsnews.com/news/de-blasio-defends-clinton-on-voting-rights-attacks/>

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio backed Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton on voting rights, encouraging her Republican opponents to engage her ideas to expand access to the polls.

During a speech last week, Clinton criticized several Republican governors by name for seeking to depress turnout among young and minority voters as she called for a sweeping expansion of early voting rules and automatic voter registration at age 18. One of those governors, Chris Christie of New Jersey, said on CBS' "Face the Nation" Sunday that Clinton "doesn't know what she's talking about."

"I think what Governor Christie is saying distracts from the core point of the dialogue we have to have," de Blasio said in a separate interview. "We have a democracy problem in this country. We have declining voter turnout. Secretary Clinton put forward a notion we need a national strategy to energize voting again, to get people involved. Obviously, to address the many efforts made by Republicans to repress voter involvement. And I think Governor Christie should speak to the proposal rather than just attacking her personally."

Host John Dickerson asked de Blasio whether Clinton's message was undermined by the fact that New York City which has Democratic leadership, also has very restrictive voting rules. De Blasio said that wasn't the case.

"I think she's saying the right thing because she's talking about a national vision," he said.

"But I don't think New York City and New York state are doing well enough either. Our elections are governed by state law and for a long time I've believed we need to make a fundamental series of reforms. Let's face it, a lot of the people in the political class have tried to discourage voter involvement and a lot of incumbents prefer a very small electorate."

De Blasio is one of the Democrats who is pushing his party's presidential candidates to stake out progressive positions on several national issues. The 13-point progressive plan he unveiled recently calls for an increase in the minimum wage to 15 dollars an hour nationally, paid sick leave and families, and increasing taxes on the wealthy, among other things.

He won't say whether there is one candidate who best exemplifies these issues.

"Each of the candidates is beginning to address these issues. I'm waiting to hear a fuller vision from each on how we'll actually tackle income inequality," de Blasio said.

He said it's cynical for pollsters to argue that many people think the term "income inequality" means their taxes will go up. He pointed to a recent CBS News poll in which two-thirds of Americans said that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly in the United States.

"I think what's happening is some of the inside-the-Beltway thinking is they don't like the sound of that word but in fact it gets to the heart of the matter," he said. "Right now, our economic system is not serving a huge percentage of our people. We should be blunt about it. We should be blunt about the fact that we have the greatest income disparity since before the Great Depression."

Addressing the ongoing terror threats that New York City faces, de Blasio said the authorities are "constantly vigilant" with over 1,000 New York City Police Department officers focusing on anti-terror activities and a partnership with the FBI.

"We know that's the reality that we're going to be in that constant state of vigilance for a long time," he said. "Our job is to see the warning signs early, particularly that involves either radicalization or mental health problems, and intervene early. And I think more and more we're figuring out how to do that well."

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma
Subject: <no subject>
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 3:45:28 PM

This makes me happy

<http://www.capitalnewyork.com/article/city-hall/2015/06/8569611/de-blasio-floats-end-421>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Jon Fromowitz; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Another talking point
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 4:00:10 PM

Courtesy of Robert Reich...

The richest 1 percent of Americans now have 42 percent of the nation's entire wealth, while the bottom 90 percent has just 23 percent.

That's the greatest concentration of wealth at the top than at any time since the Gilded Age of the 1890s.

<http://robertreich.org>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: <no subject>
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 5:45:35 PM

Right on thanks

On Jun 7, 2015, at 5:14 PM, Yazgi, Stephanie <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

ok cool i have a couple meetings yet to be scheduled but then i can call you.
thanks.

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 5:13 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: <no subject>

I prolly won't be - gotta meet appliance installation guy - but can call when is convenient.

On Jun 7, 2015, at 5:09 PM, Yazgi, Stephanie <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I'll be around city hall tomorrow at points
you?

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 3:53 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: <no subject>

Are you back in NYC? Would love to talk to you about:

- A) Robert Greenwald film (K teachers vs Hedge Funders, need outreach to key mayors)
- B) Tuesday event with #TooManyMayors & whether we can do some stuff there vis a vis TPA

From: Walzak, Phil
To: John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Kalief Browder, 1993–2015 - The New Yorker
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 8:29:30 PM

yeah
looking at some options now pretty unreal, that poor poor guy

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 8:28 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: Kalief Browder, 1993–2015 - The New Yorker

What do you think about visiting Kalief's family?

Kalief Browder, 1993–2015 - The New Yorker

Download the Twitter app

Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 8:53:05 PM

I'm sure you have already seen story - but you should watch video from McKinney TX

<http://www.washingtonpost.com/news/morning-mix/wp/2015/06/07/new-video-shows-texas-police-officer-pulling-gun-on-teenagers-at-pool-party/>

<http://gawker.com/did-the-mckinney-cop-watch-video-of-himself-terrorizing-1709690822>

From: Walzak, Phil
To: B; John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: WAPO
Date: Sunday, June 07, 2015 10:09:19 PM

Hillary Clinton endorses fight for a $15 minimum wage

"We need you out there leading the fight against those who would rip away Americans' right to organize," she said.

DETROIT, Mich. -- In one of the most explicitly union-friendly speeches of her young presidential campaign, Hillary Clinton called in to a convention of low-wage workers Sunday morning to deliver a message of support and solidarity.

"All of you should not have to march in the streets to get a living wage, but thank you for marching in the streets to get that living wage," she said. "We need you out there leading the fight against those who would rip away Americans' right to organize, to collective bargaining, to fair pay."

Clinton's new campaign has carried a populist tone throughout, but this speech -- before a ballroom full of mostly young, African American workers from across the country -- virtually echoed the language that the Service Employees International Union has used in its campaign for a $15 minimum wage. Along with the fast food workers who have been at the core of scattered protests over the past couple of years, Clinton's short speech called out home care workers and adjunct professors, who make up a substantial part of the SEIU's membership base and have joined in the call for higher wages.

"No man or woman who works hard to feed America's families should have to be on food stamps to feed your own families," Clinton said. "It is wrong that so many people stand against you thinking that they can steal your wages with no consequences. That even stacks the deck higher for those the top."

The gathering in Detroit is the second of its kind, following a first convention last year. This time, the so-called "Fight for $15" has several victories to point to: $15 minimum wages in Seattle, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, plus new proposals for the same in St. Louis and Kansas City. New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo is even in the process of raising wages for fast food workers specifically in the state.

Clinton seemed to align herself with that campaign, to loud cheers from the audience.

"I want to be your champion. I want to fight with you every day," she said. "I'm well aware that the folks on top already have plenty of friends in Washington, but we together will change the direction of this great country."

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Good talking point
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 10:16:38 AM

Mart says staff turnover down after hike in minimum pay

Fri Jun 5, 2015 7:54pm EDT

(Reuters) - Wal-Mart Stores (WMT.N) has been losing fewer workers to turnover since it raised its minimum wage in April, the retailer's chief executive said on Friday, the first time it has reported a benefit of the new higher wages.

Wal-Mart increased its minimum pay to $9 an hour for its U.S. staff in April, providing a raise for half a million workers, and promised to hike it again to $10 an hour next year. The federal minimum is $7.25, though some states impose higher minimums.

The move came against the backdrop of a tightening labor market, which has increased competition for workers. Rival retailers followed Wal-Mart in lifting pay, including Target (TGT.N) and TJX Co Inc (TJX.N), the operator of the Marshalls and T.J. Maxx chains.

"Our job applications are going up and we are seeing some relief in turnover," Wal-Mart's chief executive, Doug McMillon, told a media briefing after the company's annual shareholders' meeting on Friday.

He did not provide details, and Wal-Mart does not disclose figures on turnover.

McMillon said the company would look to raise wages in the future beyond next year's $10 minimum rate to stay competitive in attracting and retaining workers. He did not provide a timeframe or other details.

"This won't be the last jump," he said. "There will be other moves above that as we manage the overall portfolio."

Wal-Mart announced the pay hike in February as part of a $1 billion investment in wages and training.

This week it announced it would also raise minimum wages for more than another 100,000 U.S. employees, including some department managers and deli workers.

It also said it would relax its dress code, adjust the temperatures in its stores and bring back a company-run radio station as part of measures aimed at improving conditions for its roughly 1 million U.S. hourly workers.

(Reporting by Nathan Layne in Fayetteville, Arkansas; Editing by Leslie Adler)

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: Saturday
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:23:27 AM

He was not aware of the 13th event when we prepped on Friday

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:22 AM
To: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea; Carey, Michael Subject: FW: Saturday

We going? Invited?

From: Norvell, Wiley
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:21 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: FW: Saturday

Will one of you handle?

From: Andrew Hawkins [<mailto:ahawkins@crainsnewyork.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:15 AM
To: Norvell, Wiley
Subject: Saturday

Howdy,

Does the mayor plan to attend Hillary Clinton's big policy speech Saturday? If so, has he been invited to introduce her? If not, why?

Andrew J. Hawkins | Reporter

CRAIN'S NEW YORK BUSINESS

T: 212.210.0439 | F: 212.210.0799

685 3rd Ave., NY, NY 10017

ahawkins@crainsnewyork.com | www.crainsnewyork.com

@andyjayhawk

Sign up for the new Morning Insider!

<http://www.crainsnewyork.com/section/morning-insider>

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: FW: Bill de Blasio and the New York Experiment
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 12:13:00 PM

Katrina helping get the word out...

Also had some really good chats this AM with some folks who will help make TPA a durable, high-functioning entity... Stay tuned for full report

From: Katrina vanden Heuvel <kat@thenation.com>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 12:05 PM
To: Rebecca Katz <rkatz@hilltoppublicsolutions.com>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Fwd: Bill de Blasio and the New York Experiment

fyi--and will work on additional signatories--thanks, Rebecca--kvh

Begin forwarded message:

From: Katrina vanden Heuvel <emails@emails.thenation.com>
Subject: Bill de Blasio and the New York Experiment
Date: June 8, 2015 11:37:04 AM EDT
To: kat@thenation.com

Dear Friend of The Nation,

Bill de Blasio has been listening to his Frank Sinatra.

"If I can make it there, I'll make it anywhere," Ol' Blue Eyes sang in "New York, New York."

Having made serious progress on his agenda in New York City—with much more to come—Mayor de Blasio has turned his attention to national issues, unveiling a major "Progressive Agenda" on the steps of the US Capitol last month.

The Nation saw de Blasio's national potential before almost anyone. We wrote in our endorsement of his mayoral bid two years ago:

"...a Mayor de Blasio might have a real chance to begin stitching the city's tattered social contract back together. And for the first time in a long time, New York might become a national model not of flagrant inequality but of forward-thinking efforts to create true opportunity for all its residents."

The story of those efforts to bridge the divides in an extraordinarily divided city—and country—is told in Inequality and One City: Bill de Blasio and the New York

Experiment, Year One, available as an e-book and paperback. Written by longtime Nation columnist and bestselling author Eric Alterman—based on interviews with de Blasio and dozens of key players in the upper echelons of his administration—it is the first detailed and rigorous account of the de Blasio era in New York.

Inequality and One City is also, as Alterman writes in the preface, "an attempt to move beyond the day-to-day headlines that dominate our political debate. By placing Bill de Blasio's words, and the actions of his administration, into a political, cultural, social and intellectual context, we can see just how daunting the task he has set for himself really is: to use the power of the city government to make New York a fairer and more equal place for all its inhabitants, and to do so while executing the fundamental tasks of governance judiciously and efficiently.

By purchasing e-books and paperbacks through eBookNation, you are helping sustain The Nation's journalism while supporting our writers and progressive ideals.

Sincerely,

Katrina vanden Heuvel
Editor & Publisher

To unsubscribe from all Nation emails, click here. You can also update your email preferences.

Privacy Policy | Contact Us | How to Advertise | Donate

The Nation Magazine
33 Irving Place
New York, NY 10003

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: Saturday
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 5:20:53 PM

I don't think we would/should go... We need to hear her vision first - so being there would be kinda weird... I assume the only people invited to join her would be those who've endorsed her already, right?

From: <Wolfe>, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 3:31 PM
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Saturday

We wdn't be going to this though would we?

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 3:29 PM
To: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Hinton, Karen
Subject: FW: Saturday

Just say – Sat sked rlsd later in week
Or not set yet

Right?

From: Andrew Hawkins [<mailto:ahawkins@crainsnewyork.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 3:28 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: Saturday

For what it's worth, a Hillary spokesman said "we've got nothing for you right now" which seems to imply the mayor's attendance and/or participation is still up in the air, no?

From: Andrew Hawkins
Sent: Monday, June 8, 2015 3:20 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Saturday

Hi Phil,

Does the mayor plan on attending Hillary Clinton's speech on Roosevelt Island Saturday? If so, will he be making any introduction or participating in any way?

Thanks.

Andrew J. Hawkins | Reporter

CRAIN'S NEW YORK BUSINESS

T: 212.210.0439 | F: 212.210.0799

685 3rd Ave., NY, NY 10017

ahawkins@crainsnewyork.com | www.crainsnewyork.com

@andyjayhawk

Sign up for the new Morning Insider!

<http://www.crainsnewyork.com/section/morning-insider>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Schwartz, Regina; Gann, Georgia; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 5:42:08 PM
Attachments: RevisedTPA.docx

Sorry - I'm not totally clear what you need here...

The Progressive Agenda itself is attached, if that's helpful...

The list of VIP "signers" so far is here:

<http://progressiveagenda.us/signers>

List of mayors who've signed on so far:

MAYORS

Steve Adler (Austin)
Ras Baraka (Newark)
Michael Brennan (Portland, Maine)
Betsy Hodges (Minneapolis)
Ed Murray (Seattle)
Pedro Segarra (Hartford)
Nan Whaley (Dayton)

And here's some data from the NYT poll last week, which shows overwhelming support from Americans across the country for many of TPA's planks:

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]--> 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]--> 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]--> 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]--> 80 percent favor paid family leave.
<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]--> 85 percent back paid sick leave.

Full NYT poll:

<http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2015/06/03/business/income-inequality-workers-rights-international-trade-poll.html>

From: <Schwartz>, Regina <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 4:58 PM

To: "Gann, Georgia" <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: NYT story today

GG Do we have a number here?
Jon were you able to loop with GA?
Thank you-
Gina

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:34 AM
To: Schwartz, Regina; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

John,

Per Gina, looping you in on getting background and a call sheet together for MBdB and Mayor Slay to connect on TPA this week.

Fed Affairs can help provide contact information!

Best,

Georgia

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 01:29 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: NYT story today

EL –
Is a call sheet needed here?
We will work on getting the cell number on Monday.
Thank you,
Gina

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 2:42 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: NYT story today

We will send the call sheet if you think it is needed. And track down the number. Thanks

Begin forwarded message:

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 6, 2015 at 2:31:48 PM EDT
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT story today

Let's be vigilant, guys! Not the info re: Mayor Slay below. Good moment for me to call and commend and begin to build a relationship. Schedule for next week

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:08 PM
To: B
Subject: NYT story today

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

Photo

A protest in Los Angeles. Workers at fast-food restaurants are seeking higher wages and have demonstrated in support. Credit Paul Buck/European Pressphoto Agency

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Continue reading the main story
Graphic

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to \$10.10.

OPEN Graphic

“There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth,” Stephanie Altener, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. “There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have money get to make more of it.”

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today's economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Continue reading the main story

Document

A New York Times/CBS News Poll on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

OPEN Document

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking. More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines, most Americans said the chance to get ahead was mainly a luxury for those at the top.

“People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job,” said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as they benefit from the union’s protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that “people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top.”

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

About Our Agenda

Income inequality is the crisis of our time, and we need bold, progressive solutions to address it. By harnessing the strength of a national progressive coalition, and using that to achieve success in the three pillars of The Progressive Agenda, we will make sure that the voice of every American is heard – not just those at the very top.

To do this, we must lift the floor for working people, help working parents, fight for racial and economic justice, and champion a tax system that rewards work instead of just wealth.

The Progressive Agenda is a set of proposals that build upon the work of dozens of economists, lawmakers and progressive activists, with the aim of addressing income inequality right now.

Lift the Floor for Working People

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails -- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.

Support Working Families

- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit, and protect and expand Social Security.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.

Tax Fairness

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the “Buffett Rule” so millionaires pay their fair share.
- Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of “performance pay” write-offs.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: Sorry we didn't connect today...
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 5:54:26 PM

No prob - Yes on tomorrow - thanks!

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 5:50 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Sorry we didn't connect today...

Tomorrow?

From: Gann, Georgia
To: Schwartz, Regina; Yazgi, Stephanie; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 7:12:41 PM

Gina -

I'm still working on the contact information. I got a number from their DC lobbyist, but not the cell and direct. I'm back and forth on email and phone, and also calling the city directly.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 04:58 PM
To: Gann, Georgia; Yazgi, Stephanie; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

GG Do we have a number here?
Jon were you able to loop with GA?
Thank you-
Gina

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:34 AM
To: Schwartz, Regina; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

John,

Per Gina, looping you in on getting background and a call sheet together for MBdB and Mayor Slay to connect on TPA this week.

Fed Affairs can help provide contact information!

Best,

Georgia

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 01:29 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: NYT story today

EL –

Is a call sheet needed here?

We will work on getting the cell number on Monday.

Thank you,

Gina

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 2:42 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: NYT story today

We will send the call sheet if you think it is needed. And track down the number. Thanks

Begin forwarded message:

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 6, 2015 at 2:31:48 PM EDT
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT story today

Let's be vigilant, guys! Not the info re: Mayor Slay below. Good moment for me to call and commend and begin to build a relationship. Schedule for next week

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:08 PM
To: B

Subject: NYT story today

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

Photo

A protest in Los Angeles. Workers at fast-food restaurants are seeking higher wages and have demonstrated in support. Credit Paul Buck/European Pressphoto Agency

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Continue reading the main story

Graphic

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to \$10.10.

OPEN Graphic

“There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth,” Stephanie Altener, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. “There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have money get to make more of it.”

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today’s economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Continue reading the main story

Document

A New York Times/CBS News Poll on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

OPEN Document

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking. More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines, most Americans said the chance to get ahead was mainly a luxury for those at the top.

“People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job,” said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as they benefit from the union's protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that “people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top.”

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

From: Gann, Georgia
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Schwartz, Regina; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 7:35:02 PM

I'll follow up with you off the chain in a second.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 07:29 PM
To: Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

When you say a call sheet - do you mean just a number for MBDB to call Slay? Or are you thinking that MBDB & Slay would call a bunch of mayors to get them to sign onto TPA?

From: <Gann>, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 7:14 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Is the plan still for John's team to get the call sheet together for MBdB and Mayor Slay to connect on TPA and fed affairs to get the contact information?

I'm still working on the contact, on my end.

Let me know if I should keep pushing!

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912

Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 05:41 PM
To: Schwartz, Regina; Gann, Georgia; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Sorry - I'm not totally clear what you need here...

The Progressive Agenda itself is attached, if that's helpful...

The list of VIP "signers" so far is here:
<http://progressiveagenda.us/signers>

List of mayors who've signed on so far:

MAYORS

Steve Adler (Austin)
Ras Baraka (Newark)
Michael Brennan (Portland, Maine)
Betsy Hodges (Minneapolis)
Ed Murray (Seattle)
Pedro Segarra (Hartford)
Nan Whaley (Dayton)

And here's some data from the NYT poll last week, which shows overwhelming support from Americans across the country for many of TPA's planks:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]--> 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]--> 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]--> 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]--> 80 percent favor paid family leave.
<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]--> 85 percent back paid sick leave.

Full NYT poll:

<http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2015/06/03/business/income-inequality-workers-rights-international-trade-poll.html>

From: <Schwartz>, Regina <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 4:58 PM

To: "Gann, Georgia" <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: RE: NYT story today

GG Do we have a number here?

Jon were you able to loop with GA?

Thank you-

Gina

From: Gann, Georgia

Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:34 AM

To: Schwartz, Regina; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'

Cc: Sevillia, Max

Subject: Re: NYT story today

John,

Per Gina, looping you in on getting background and a call sheet together for MBdB and Mayor Slay to connect on TPA this week.

Fed Affairs can help provide contact information!

Best,

Georgia

Georgia B. Gann

Senior Legislative Advisor

Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist

New York City Office of Federal Affairs

1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350

Tel. (202) 624-5912

Cell. (347) 497-1740

ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina

Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 01:29 PM

To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma

Subject: RE: NYT story today

EL –

Is a call sheet needed here?

We will work on getting the cell number on Monday.

Thank you,

Gina

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 2:42 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: NYT story today

We will send the call sheet if you think it is needed. And track down the number. Thanks

Begin forwarded message:

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 6, 2015 at 2:31:48 PM EDT
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT story today

Let's be vigilant, guys! Not the info re: Mayor Slay below. Good moment for me to call and commend and begin to build a relationship. Schedule for next week

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:08 PM
To: B
Subject: NYT story today

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

Photo

A protest in Los Angeles. Workers at fast-food restaurants are seeking higher wages and have demonstrated in support. Credit Paul Buck/European Pressphoto Agency

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Continue reading the main story

Graphic

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to \$10.10.

OPEN Graphic

“There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth,” Stephanie Altener, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. “There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have money get to make more of it.”

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today's economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Continue reading the main story
Document

A New York Times/CBS News Poll on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking.

OPEN Document

More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines, most Americans said the chance to get ahead was mainly a luxury for those at the top.

“People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job,” said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as they benefit from the union’s protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that “people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top.”

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

From: Gann, Georgia
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Fwd: NYT story today
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 7:52:07 PM

I cut out. On a train back to DC and in the spotty service area.

The way I read MBdB's message is to comment Mayor Slay on his minimum wage efforts and build a relationship.

See the excerpt from the NYT article you sent over -

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 07:39 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Fw: Fwd: NYT story today

I'm on a train but can call in a couple. Are you free to connect?

I looked back and saw you likely didn't have this for context (see forward below).

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 02:41 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: NYT story today

We will send the call sheet if you think it is needed. And track down the number.
Thanks

Begin forwarded message:

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 6, 2015 at 2:31:48 PM EDT
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT story today

Let's be vigilant, guys! Not the info re: Mayor Slay below. Good moment for me to call and commend and begin to build a relationship. Schedule for next week

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:08 PM
To: B
Subject: NYT story today

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

Photo

A protest in Los Angeles. Workers at fast-food restaurants are seeking higher wages and have demonstrated in support. Credit Paul Buck/European Pressphoto Agency

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Graphic

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to $10.10.

money get to make more of it.”

Continue reading the main story

“There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth,”

Stephanie Altenecker, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. “There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have

OPEN Graphic

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today's economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Document

A New York Times/CBS News Poll on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

Continue reading the main story

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking. More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines,

 most Americans said the chance to get ahead was mainly a OPEN Document luxury for those at the top.

“People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job,” said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as they benefit from the union’s protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that “people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top.”

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Gann, Georgia
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 7:56:52 PM

D'oh - looks like I totally missed the part about Slay raising min wage to $15 - that's what he was referring to - I'm an idiot - I think I get what's needed here... If you can get me the best number for Slay, I can put together call sheet

From: <Gann>, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 7:39 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Fw: Fwd: NYT story today

I'm on a train but can call in a couple. Are you free to connect?

I looked back and saw you likely didn't have this for context (see forward below).

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 02:41 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: NYT story today

We will send the call sheet if you think it is needed. And track down the number. Thanks

Begin forwarded message:

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 6, 2015 at 2:31:48 PM EDT
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT story today

Let's be vigilant, guys! Not the info re: Mayor Slay below. Good moment for me to call and commend and begin to build a relationship. Schedule for next week

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:08 PM

To: B

Subject: NYT story today

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

Photo

A protest in Los Angeles. Workers at fast-food restaurants are seeking higher wages and have demonstrated in support. Credit Paul Buck/European Pressphoto Agency

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Graphic

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to $10.10.

money get to make more of it.”

Continue reading the main story

“There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth,” Stephanie Alteneder, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. “There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have

OPEN Graphic

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today's economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Document

A New York Times/CBS News Poll on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

get ahead was mainly a luxury for those at the top.

“People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job,” said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as

Continue reading the main story

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking. More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines,

most Americans said the chance to

OPEN Document

they benefit from the union's protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that "people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top."

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

From: Gann, Georgia
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 8:00:37 PM

All good! I'm working on the number, but unlikely I'll get it tonight - will need to bug ppl in the city tomorrow for it...

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 07:57 PM
To: Gann, Georgia
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Yep yep - got it now - sorry

From: <Gann>, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 7:52 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Fwd: NYT story today

I cut out. On a train back to DC and in the spotty service area.

The way I read MBdB's message is to comment Mayor Slay on his minimum wage efforts and build a relationship.

See the excerpt from the NYT article you sent over -

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist

New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 07:39 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Fw: Fwd: NYT story today

I'm on a train but can call in a couple. Are you free to connect?

I looked back and saw you likely didn't have this for context (see forward below).

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 02:41 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: NYT story today

We will send the call sheet if you think it is needed. And track down the number. Thanks

Begin forwarded message:

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 6, 2015 at 2:31:48 PM EDT
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT story today

Let's be vigilant, guys! Not the info re: Mayor Slay below. Good moment for me to call and commend and begin to build a relationship. Schedule for next week

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:08 PM

To: B

Subject: NYT story today

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

Photo

A protest in Los Angeles. Workers at fast-food restaurants are seeking higher wages and have demonstrated in support. Credit Paul Buck/European Pressphoto Agency

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Graphic

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to $10.10.

money get to make more of it.”

Continue reading the main story

“There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth,”

Stephanie Alteneder, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. “There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have

OPEN Graphic

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today's economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Document

A New York Times/CBS News Poll on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

get ahead was mainly a luxury for those at the top.

“People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job,” said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as

Continue reading the main story

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking. More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines,

most Americans said the chance to

OPEN Document

they benefit from the union's protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that "people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top."

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: WSJ: Hillary's Other Bill Problem
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 8:31:20 PM

Hillary's Other Bill Problem

Progressivism is the fear that someone, somewhere might be making a profit.

By WILLIAM MCGURN
June 8, 2015 7:10 p.m. ET

Did Bill de Blasio hear the cock crow Sunday?

There was a day Hillary Clinton counted Mr. de Blasio among her most ardent disciples. Back in 2000, long before he was elected mayor, he even managed her successful campaign for the U.S. Senate.

Now he's busy denying Mrs. Clinton his support in the most humiliating way he can: on national television. He did it this past weekend on CBS's "Face the Nation," when he confirmed he's still waiting to hear her plans for addressing income inequality. In May he did it on "Morning Joe." Back in April he did it on NBC's "Meet the Press"—hours before Mrs. Clinton officially launched her campaign.

In between the mayor has also made campaign-like stops in Iowa and Wisconsin, released a 13-point "Progressive Agenda" for the nation and co-written (with Massachusetts Democrat Sen. Elizabeth Warren) a Washington Post op-ed on how to "revive the American Dream." In all but name, Mr. de Blasio is making his own run for the White House.

Is he serious? The pundit class points out that no sitting mayor has ever been elected president. True enough, but Mr. de Blasio's real Achilles' heel is progressivism itself. It just doesn't work.

Oh, it can claim its victories, here making it more expensive for employers to hire workers, there enshrining some race or gender grievance into law, here again imposing some new tax on millionaires. As a governing philosophy, however, progressive cures tend to leave the people the movement claims to want to help most—the poor and the working class—in worse shape.

This leaves progressive leaders with few examples of thriving progressive states and cities to point to. It also helps explain the nature of the candidates now challenging Mrs. Clinton. The ideal progressive turns out to be someone who has never run anything and so has no executive record that can be held against her.

Hence the pining for Sen. Warren. Hence too the affection for Bernie Sanders, the Vermonter whose socialism seems quaint only because it is safely confined to the Senate floor. Meanwhile, former Rhode Island governor (and former Republican) Lincoln Chafee has entered the race, running on the progressive theme of . . . getting America to adopt the metric system.

What about Martin O'Malley? Yes, he ran Baltimore as mayor and Maryland as governor. But Baltimore is not exactly a winning legacy these days. Back in November, moreover, this bluest of blue states voted in a Republican governor who campaigned largely on a vow to undo everything Mr. O'Malley did during his eight years in Annapolis.

That leaves Mr. de Blasio. Some say it's too soon for him to run for president. After all, he's only been mayor of New York for a year-and-a-half.

Mr. de Blasio knows better. These days he continues to bask in the mandate he won in the 2013 election, when he trounced his GOP rival by 49 points and became the first Democrat elected mayor of New York in two decades. In another four years, however, when the full impact of de Blasio progressivism—especially on crime—is on view, he might look more like all those other Democratic mayors presiding over failing cities.

One reason Mr. de Blasio looks viable is that his predecessor, Michael Bloomberg, did a good job on the big issues, including helping to get an economy devastated by 9/11 back on its feet. Not only was he elected three times, he did so while making clear to the public that he was himself an unabashed progressive, at least on issues from the environment and public health to abortion and same-sex marriage.

Even in more-controversial areas, Mr. Bloomberg might well argue he's been the true progressive. On crime, for example, the chief beneficiaries of the reduction in shootings and murders during the Bloomberg years are the thousands of young black men who would otherwise not be walking around today. And if you think of stop-and-frisk as gun control for criminals, that's a progressive success too.

Likewise Mr. Bloomberg's championing of charter schools. These charters have given thousands of poor and minority children the same shot at a decent education that, say, Mr. de Blasio's children have enjoyed from the elite public schools they attended. It speaks to the sorry state of progressivism that these achievements are counted against Mr. Bloomberg instead of for him.

In the end, of course, the lack of progressive love for Mr. Bloomberg stems from the same factor behind the progressive disenchantment with Hillary: Each is thought simply to have too much money and too many rich friends. Especially Mr. Bloomberg, because he's earned his billions. Thus does Bill de Blasio's campaign for the White House point to the real definition of modern American progressivism:

To paraphrase Mencken, the haunting fear that someone, somewhere may be making a profit.

Write to mcgurn@wsj.com.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: NBC National: Should Hillary Clinton Call for Debt-Free College for All Americans?
Date: Monday, June 08, 2015 8:40:08 PM

MEET THE PRESS
JUN 8 2015, 9:23 PM ET

Should Hillary Clinton Call for Debt-Free College for All Americans?

BY PERRY BACON JR.

An aggressive push for what's being billed as "debt-free college" has galvanized progressive activists, putting Hillary Clinton in the position of either endorsing an idea that will be controversial or being criticized by liberals as too timid if she does not.

The proposal, which is also energizing Democrats on Capitol Hill, attempts to enshrine a promise that all Americans can attend a public college and get a four-year degree with little tuition cost and while incurring no student debt.

Spurred in part by President Obama's push for free community college during his State of the Union address earlier this year, more than 60 Democrats in Congress, most notably Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren and New York Sen. Charles Schumer, are backing a congressional resolution calling for debt-free college.

One of Clinton's Democratic rivals, ex-Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, has endorsed the idea.

Another Democratic candidate, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, has already authored a provision in Congress that would eliminate tuition costs at public colleges, although it falls short of the debt-free proposal.

The Center for American Progress, the think tank founded by Clinton campaign chair John Podesta, has called for a plan to allow students to attend four-year public colleges at little cost initially, although they would have to repay some of the costs through loan-repayment plans. It is modeled after a similar policy that is used in Australia.

Clinton has hinted she is considering these ideas. On a recent stop in Iowa, the former secretary of state suggested college should be as "debt-free as possible." Her campaign manager Robby Mook has described the concept as one that could appeal to young voters.

Most Republicans in Congress strongly opposed Obama's initial universal community college plan and are unlikely to support Clinton if she calls for debt-free college.

Clinton is expected to roll out a plan to address student debt and higher education later this year. She is giving a "kickoff speech for campaign on June 13 in which she is expected to offer new details on what proposals she would advocate if elected president.

Her views on debt-free college, as well as her stance on the Trans-Pacific Partnership, have emerged as early tests for Clinton, who was viewed as insufficiently progressive in 2008 by some in her party. (She has delighted some liberals in the early stages of this race by calling for comprehensive reforms of America's criminal justice and voting laws.)

Clinton is the overwhelming favorite in the Democratic nomination process and would remain so even if she supports TPP and opposes debt-free college. And she will likely try to avoid taking positions that would allow Republicans to paint Clinton as a big-government liberal in the general election.

But the former secretary of state has long talked about addressing issues like student debt, and it has emerged as major concern in the face of rising tuition costs for American students.

Debt-free college would also be the kind of big, galvanizing issue that could help Clinton define her campaign and potentially her presidency, as expanding health insurance was for President Obama.

"Going to college is absolutely essential to getting into the middle class and getting ahead once you're there, but far too often it ends up breaking students' banks," Schumer said in a statement endorsing the idea.

"When students graduate with loads of debt, the ripple effects are endless; they're less likely to start a business, to buy a house, and to realize their full potential," he added. "When it comes to making college affordable, I'm hopeful that debt-free college is the next big idea."

The resolution backed by Warren and others in Congress is vague, and there is not an unified vision from progressives for exactly how this proposal would work.

The general idea is that students who attend a four-year public college would have their tuition and debt reduced almost to zero through a combination of moves. The federal government would increase its aid to states for higher education, so schools could bring down tuition. Pell Grants would be increased for low-income students, and with lower tuition this money could be spent by students on costs like books. Colleges themselves would be tasked with reducing some of their spending so that it cost less to educate each student.

The liberal think tank Demos has released a plan they say would create debt-free college for students in 26 states at a cost of around $30 billion. They would fund it either through re-allocating existing tax credits and deductions for higher education, or through new taxes and fees on the wealthy and Wall Street.

Only students whose family income (for a family of four) is under $72,000 would be eligible under the Demos plan.

Sanders says his plan would cost $70 billion a year, with the federal government expected to spend $47 billion, leaving the rest to the states. He would fund the federal plan with a tax on stock trades made by hedge funds and other financial institutions.

The idea comes amid a broader debate about higher education in America. Obama has made getting more American students to graduate from college one of his signature issues. He signed into law an increase in Pell Grant funding early in his tenure and has pushed in recent years both the universal community college proposal and a system of accountability for colleges, looking to shame those schools with low graduation rates.

But a bloc of education reformers, including many on the right, have strong reservations about simply expanding college access to more Americans. They instead want to overhaul today's college system through the use of online-courses and other technology.

The cost of higher education, in this model, would be reduced in part because fewer students would have the experience of living in dorms and having much of their education done through professors in classrooms. Students could tailor coursework more to their individual needs and goals.

"We need to make college fundamentally affordable, not continue to find ways to allow people to afford what is increasingly an expensive education. Proposals that simply make a college debt free in essence give colleges a free pass to continue to increase expenditures because they can escape pricing pressure and taxpayers foot that bill," said Michael Horn, an education policy expert who co-wrote a book called "Disrupting Class: How Disruptive Innovation Will Change the Way the World Learns."

Jeb Bush has spoken publicly about reading Horn's book and strongly embraced online-education both as governor of Florida and at the education think tank he ran until he started his presidential campaign.

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Bennett, Rob; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: RE: Chipotle
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 8:46:18 AM

Excellent. Let's just do a tweet then with a photo from last year. We just need to give him a heads up

-----Original Message-----

From: Bennett, Rob
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 8:41 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; [REDACTED] Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: Chipotle

FYI - We have file photos of a visit he made there last year.

> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:37 AM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> I'm not getting clear answer from folks, I don't want to stand in the way...I don't know their actual wage levels or if we care about that in this context (I presume he wants their wages to go up to 15). If not a full visit would certainly rec a little tweet.
>
> Fwiw random fact - he didn't love the HRC pit stop at chipotle.
>
>
>
>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 7:46 AM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>
>> Ideally today given news
>>
>> ----- Original Message -----
>> From: Carey, Michael
>> Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 07:43 AM
>> To: Hagelgans, Andrea
>> Cc: Leopold, Elana; Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]>
Bennett, Rob
>> Subject: Re: Chipotle
>>
>> Yummmmyyyyy
>>
>>
>> Michael Paul Carey
>> City Hall
>> New York, New York
>>
>>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 7:43 AM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> Chipotle announced they are providing part-time employees with sick leave, vacation and other benefits. Any chance we could get mayor to go to chipotle today and release the pic?

From: John Del Cecato
To: Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 10:55:32 AM
Attachments: SlayCallSheet.docx

Here's the call sheet - just need number

From: <Gann>, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 8:02 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Closing the loop here!

John is getting the call sheet together and I'm bugging ppl tonight and tomorrow (if needed) for an acceptable number, which I'll get to John for the call info.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 07:29 PM
To: Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

When you say a call sheet - do you mean just a number for MBDB to call Slay? Or are you thinking that MBDB & Slay would call a bunch of mayors to get them to sign onto TPA?

From: <Gann>, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 7:14 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: Re: NYT story today

Is the plan still for John's team to get the call sheet together for MBdB and Mayor Slay to connect on TPA and fed affairs to get the contact information?

I'm still working on the contact, on my end.

Let me know if I should keep pushing!

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 05:41 PM
To: Schwartz, Regina; Gann, Georgia; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Sorry - I'm not totally clear what you need here...

The Progressive Agenda itself is attached, if that's helpful...

The list of VIP "signers" so far is here:
<http://progressiveagenda.us/signers>

List of mayors who've signed on so far:
MAYORS

Steve Adler (Austin)
Ras Baraka (Newark)
Michael Brennan (Portland, Maine)
Betsy Hodges (Minneapolis)
Ed Murray (Seattle)
Pedro Segarra (Hartford)
Nan Whaley (Dayton)

And here's some data from the NYT poll last week, which shows overwhelming support from Americans across the country for many of TPA's planks:

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]--> 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]--> 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]--> 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]--> 80 percent favor paid family leave.
<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]--> 85 percent back paid sick leave.

Full NYT poll:

<http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2015/06/03/business/income-inequality-workers-rights-international-trade-poll.html>

From: <Schwartz>, Regina <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 4:58 PM

To: "Gann, Georgia" <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: RE: NYT story today

GG Do we have a number here?

Jon were you able to loop with GA?

Thank you-

Gina

From: Gann, Georgia

Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:34 AM

To: Schwartz, Regina; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'

Cc: Sevillia, Max

Subject: Re: NYT story today

John,

Per Gina, looping you in on getting background and a call sheet together for MBdB and Mayor Slay to connect on TPA this week.

Fed Affairs can help provide contact information!

Best,

Georgia

Georgia B. Gann

Senior Legislative Advisor

Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist

New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 01:29 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: NYT story today

EL –
Is a call sheet needed here?
We will work on getting the cell number on Monday.
Thank you,
Gina

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 2:42 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: NYT story today

We will send the call sheet if you think it is needed. And track down the number. Thanks

Begin forwarded message:

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 6, 2015 at 2:31:48 PM EDT
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT story today

Let's be vigilant, guys! Not the info re: Mayor Slay below. Good moment for me to call and commend and begin to build a relationship. Schedule for next week

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:08 PM
To: B
Subject: NYT story today

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

Photo

A protest in Los Angeles. Workers at fast-food restaurants are seeking higher wages and have demonstrated in support. Credit Paul Buck/European Pressphoto Agency

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Continue reading the main story

Graphic

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening

workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to \$10.10.

OPEN Graphic

“There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth,” Stephanie Altener, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. “There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have money get to make more of it.”

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today’s economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Continue reading the main story

Document

A New York Times/CBS News Poll on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

OPEN Document

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking. More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines, most Americans said the chance to get ahead was mainly a luxury for those at the top.

“People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job,” said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as they benefit from the union's protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that “people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top.”

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

Francis Slay

Mayor of St. Louis

Personal Line: Main Phone:

Assistant:

Notes:

Mayor of St. Louis since 2001 – he is the first person to be elected to that office for four consecutive terms.

Most recently re-elected in 2013 (got 54% of the vote in a competitive D primary; 84% in the general).

Credited with leading the rejuvenation of downtown St. Louis.

He is also a national voice on gun issues with Mayors Against Illegal Guns.

Slay recently called for a $15 minimum wage in St. Louis. It is not clear whether or not this proposal will be enacted – legislative and legal challenges remain – but it's a bold step in the right direction regardless.

TPA notes:

List of mayors who've signed on so far:

Steve Adler (Austin)

Ras Baraka (Newark)

Michael Brennan (Portland, Maine)

Betsy Hodges (Minneapolis)

Ed Murray (Seattle)

Pedro Segarra (Hartford)

Nan Whaley (Dayton)

Recent CBS/NYT data showing wide support for TPA approach/proposals:

- 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- 85 percent back paid sick leave.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: TPA sign-ons
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:24:21 AM

Just FYI - we now have 3,118 “regular people” signed on to TPA... And no, that's not a typo!

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Walzak, Phil; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: MTP Question
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:26:07 AM

Agreed. We are going to be fielding a lot of incoming in addition to him wanting to go proactive.
John, do you all have scenarios mapped out?

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:18 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: MTP Question

We need a sharper plan to pump up TPA against backdrop of her speech

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:16 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: MTP Question

Hmmm...

You're right - it certainly would be... But would give us a huge megaphone for TPA at a very hot time... It all comes down to what we guess she's gonna say...

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:13 AM
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FW: MTP Question

MTP and ABC both want Mayor for Sunday. I don't think he should do. Would just be reaction to HRC speech from Saturday
IMHO

From: Thomas, Shawna (NBCUniversal) [<mailto:Shawna.Thomas@nbcuni.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:12 AM
To: Katz, Rebecca; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: MTP Question

Hey Rebecca and Andrea,

I'm just checking in to see what is the Mayor's availability this Sunday. Clearly, it's early in the week but his name came up in our meeting this morning and I wanted to reach out just in case.

Thanks,

Shawna Thomas

Senior Producer – Meet the Press

NBC News

Work: 202-885-4943 //Cell: 213-200-8804

Twitter: @ShawnaNBCNews

shawna.thomas@nbcuni.com

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: MTP Question
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:40:42 AM

Regardless still need a plan

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:39 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: MTP Question

:/

From: <Wolfe>, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:36 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: MTP Question

We should NOT do this!!

On Jun 9, 2015, at 11:16 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Hmmm...

You're right - it certainly would be... But would give us a huge megaphone for TPA at a very hot time... It all comes down to what we guess she's gonna say...

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:13 AM
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FW: MTP Question

MTP and ABC both want Mayor for Sunday. I don't think he should do. Would just be reaction to HRC speech from Saturday
IMHO

From: Thomas, Shawna (NBCUniversal) [mailto:Shawna.Thomas@nbcuni.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:12 AM

To: Katz, Rebecca; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: MTP Question

Hey Rebecca and Andrea,

I'm just checking in to see what is the Mayor's availability this Sunday. Clearly, it's early in the week but his name came up in our meeting this morning and I wanted to reach out just in case.

Thanks,

Shawna Thomas
Senior Producer – Meet the Press

NBC News
Work: 202-885-4943 //Cell: 213-200-8804
Twitter: @ShawnaNBCNews
shawna.thomas@nbcuni.com

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: MTP Question
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:03:03 PM

JDC, can you and I meet and hash out a plan around her Saturday speech and take it back to this group and then him? I could meet this afternoon or tomorrow

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:52 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: MTP Question

You guys are so negative! :)

It's not being harsh if we say that we were heartened to hear her talk about A, B, & C - but that we're waiting to see the policy proposals that she lays out on D, E, and F...

Maybe I'm nuts & have drunk the boss' kool-aid, but the press is going to needle us about an endorsement anyway - so why not take to a really high-profile venue & talk about the progressive movement in our own words?

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:41 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: MTP Question

Without a more solid plan of attack we are going to generate unintended and undesired news – what does BdB think of HRC speech? Did you like what you heard? Yes, ok where is endorsement? No, ok why are you shitting on her again?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:40 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: MTP Question

:/

From: <Wolfe>, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:36 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: Re: MTP Question

We should NOT do this!!

On Jun 9, 2015, at 11:16 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Hmmm...

You're right - it certainly would be... But would give us a huge megaphone for TPA at a very hot time... It all comes down to what we guess she's gonna say...

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:13 AM

To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: FW: MTP Question

MTP and ABC both want Mayor for Sunday. I don't think he should do. Would just be reaction to HRC speech from Saturday
IMHO

From: Thomas, Shawna (NBCUniversal) [<mailto:Shawna.Thomas@nbcuni.com>]

Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:12 AM

To: Katz, Rebecca; Hagelgans, Andrea

Subject: MTP Question

Hey Rebecca and Andrea,

I'm just checking in to see what is the Mayor's availability this Sunday. Clearly, it's early in the week but his name came up in our meeting this morning and I wanted to reach out just in case.

Thanks,

Shawna Thomas
Senior Producer – Meet the Press

NBC News
Work: 202-885-4943 //Cell: 213-200-8804
Twitter: @ShawnaNBCNews
shawna.thomas@nbcuni.com

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Wolfe, Emma; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: MTP Question
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:03:04 PM

There is a much deeper problem here besides punking HRC or not

We (this is all of us, not an accusation!) haven't figured how to move ball fwd on TPA Newts contract had candidates in races who signed the agenda, then went back to their districts and campaigned on it, then won elections on it, then voted on it in Congress. A constant loud sustained drumbeat on message and legislative/political success.

We aint got that, and we need something like it stat

From: Wolfe, Emma
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:54 AM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: MTP Question

Harsh isn't the point.
We can't let her have her day in media and then respond? Cmon.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:52 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: MTP Question

You guys are so negative! :)

It's not being harsh if we say that we were heartened to hear her talk about A, B, & C - but that we're waiting to see the policy proposals that she lays out on D, E, and F...

Maybe I'm nuts & have drunk the boss' kool-aid, but the press is going to needle us about an endorsement anyway - so why not take to a really high-profile venue & talk about the progressive movement in our own words?

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:41 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: MTP Question

Without a more solid plan of attack we are going to generate unintended and undesired news – what does BdB think of HRC speech? Did you like what you heard? Yes, ok where is endorsement?
No, ok why are you shitting on her again?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:40 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: MTP Question

:/

From: <Wolfe>, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:36 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: MTP Question

We should NOT do this!!

On Jun 9, 2015, at 11:16 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Hmmm...

You're right - it certainly would be... But would give us a huge megaphone for TPA at a very hot time... It all comes down to what we guess she's gonna say...

From: <Hagelgans>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 11:13 AM
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FW: MTP Question

MTP and ABC both want Mayor for Sunday. I don't think he should do. Would just be reaction to HRC speech from Saturday
IMHO

From: Thomas, Shawna (NBCUniversal) [<mailto:Shawna.Thomas@nbcuni.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 11:12 AM
To: Katz, Rebecca; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: MTP Question

Hey Rebecca and Andrea,

I'm just checking in to see what is the Mayor's availability this Sunday. Clearly, it's early in the week but his name came up in our meeting this morning and I wanted to reach out just in case.

Thanks,

Shawna Thomas
Senior Producer – Meet the Press

NBC News
Work: 202-885-4943 //Cell: 213-200-8804
Twitter: @ShawnaNBCNews
shawna.thomas@nbcuni.com

From: John Del Cecato
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Hedge Funders vs. Kindergarten Teachers
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:23:05 PM

Trying to get Robert Greenwald going on his project - and asking Stephanie to help rope in a handful of our favorite mayors... I floated the idea to MBDB this weekend, and he wanted more details/wasn't leaping at it - but I figure if we build it the right way, he'll dig it... Wanted to send something like this around to our progressive mayors' list.. What do you think?

====

Robert Greenwald, founder and President of Brave New Films, is a supporter of The Progressive Agenda.

Robert is a brilliant, award-winning filmmaker from Los Angeles who - after a career of making dozens of feature films - turned his efforts to progressive documentary filmmaking - including Outfoxed: Rupert Murdoch's War on Journalism; Wal-Mart: The High Cost of Low Price; and Koch Brothers Exposed. Robert recently produced the short film Racism Is Real, which has been a viral sensation.

Now, in concert with The Progressive Agenda, Robert is in the process of making a short (5-10 minute) film that shines a light on the fact that the top 25 hedge fund managers earned more money last year than all of the Kindergarten teachers in America COMBINED.

Robert is hoping to film Kindergarten teachers in various cities around the country, including New York City and (YOUR CITY). The plan is to launch this new film at "premier parties" (whether in-person, or virtual) in a half-dozen cities across the country.

He'd like your help in identifying teachers to interview, as well as your help in planning for the premier, which will be the week of September 7th. There will be a national day of screenings, and discussions about this issue and how it relates to our fight to combat income inequality.

So to summarize, we'd like participating mayors to:

1. Host an in-person screening.
2. Participate in a national online stream, where we connect the mayors and cities that are participating.
3. Assign a staff person with whom we can work out the details for this national day of premiers/discussions/press coverage.

AND/OR

4. Help identify Kindergarten teachers in your city (and contacts for them), if you'd like them featured in the film.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:44:04 PM
Attachments: SlayCallSheet.docx

Here you go

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 12:36 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Gann, Georgia" <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Can someone turn this into a call sheet and I will add it to other calls?
thanks

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 10:55 AM
To: Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Here's the call sheet - just need number

From: <Gann>, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 8:02 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Closing the loop here!

John is getting the call sheet together and I'm bugging ppl tonight and tomorrow (if needed) for an acceptable number, which I'll get to John for the call info.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912

Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 07:29 PM
To: Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

When you say a call sheet - do you mean just a number for MBDB to call Slay? Or are you thinking that MBDB & Slay would call a bunch of mayors to get them to sign onto TPA?

From: <Gann>, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 7:14 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Is the plan still for John's team to get the call sheet together for MBdB and Mayor Slay to connect on TPA and fed affairs to get the contact information?

I'm still working on the contact, on my end.

Let me know if I should keep pushing!

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 05:41 PM
To: Schwartz, Regina; Gann, Georgia; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Sorry - I'm not totally clear what you need here...

The Progressive Agenda itself is attached, if that's helpful...

The list of VIP "signers" so far is here:
<http://progressiveagenda.us/signers>

List of mayors who've signed on so far:
MAYORS

Steve Adler (Austin)
Ras Baraka (Newark)
Michael Brennan (Portland, Maine)
Betsy Hodges (Minneapolis)
Ed Murray (Seattle)
Pedro Segarra (Hartford)
Nan Whaley (Dayton)

And here's some data from the NYT poll last week, which shows overwhelming support from Americans across the country for many of TPA's planks:

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->80 percent favor paid family leave.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->85 percent back paid sick leave.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->Full NYT poll:

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->

><http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2015/06/03/business/income-inequality-workers-rights-international-trade-poll.html>

<!--[if !supportLists]--> <!--[endif]-->

From: <Schwartz>, Regina <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 4:58 PM

To: "Gann, Georgia" <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: RE: NYT story today

GG Do we have a number here?

Jon were you able to loop with GA?

Thank you-

Gina

From: Gann, Georgia

Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:34 AM

To: Schwartz, Regina; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'

Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

John,

Per Gina, looping you in on getting background and a call sheet together for MBdB and Mayor Slay to connect on TPA this week.

Fed Affairs can help provide contact information!

Best,

Georgia

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 01:29 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: NYT story today

EL –

Is a call sheet needed here?

We will work on getting the cell number on Monday.

Thank you,

Gina

From: Schwartz, Regina
Sent: Saturday, June 06, 2015 2:42 PM
To: Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Fwd: NYT story today

We will send the call sheet if you think it is needed. And track down the number. Thanks

Begin forwarded message:

From: B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: June 6, 2015 at 2:31:48 PM EDT
To: "Yazgi, Stephanie" <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT story today

Let's be vigilant, guys! Not the info re: Mayor Slay below. Good moment for me to call and commend and begin to build a relationship. Schedule for next week

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 04, 2015 10:08 PM
To: B
Subject: NYT story today

Inequality Troubles Americans Across Party Lines, Times/CBS Poll Finds

Photo

A protest in Los Angeles. Workers at fast-food restaurants are seeking higher wages and have demonstrated in support. Credit Paul Buck/European Pressphoto Agency

Americans are broadly concerned about inequality of wealth and income despite an economy that has improved by most measures, a sentiment that is already driving the 2016 presidential contest, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

The poll found that a strong majority say that wealth should be more evenly divided and that it is a problem that should be addressed urgently. Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines. Only one-third of Republicans supported a more active government role, versus eight in 10 of Democrats.

These findings help explain the populist appeals from politicians of both parties, but particularly Democrats, who are seeking to capitalize on the sense among Americans that the economic recovery is benefiting only a handful at the very top.

Far from a strictly partisan issue, inequality looms large in the minds of almost half of Republicans and two-thirds of independents, suggesting that it will outlive the presidential primary contests and become a central theme in next year's general election campaign.

Continue reading the main story
Graphic

Americans' Views on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Americans overwhelmingly favor a variety of proposals aimed at strengthening workers' rights, including paid sick leave and paid family leave, the latest New York Times/CBS News poll finds. A majority, moreover, continues to support raising the federal minimum wage to \$10.10.

OPEN Graphic

“There is a small group of people in our country who own or control a vast majority of the wealth,” Stephanie Altener, 28, a Democrat and a high school teacher from Los Angeles, said in a follow-up interview. “There are a lot of systems set up so that the people who have money get to make more of it.”

The percentage of Americans who say everyone has a fair chance to get ahead in today's economy has fallen 17 percentage points since early 2014. Six in 10 Americans now say that only a few people at the top have an opportunity to advance.

The nationwide telephone poll, conducted on landlines and cellphones May 28-31 with 1,022 adults, has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

The survey touched on several issues relating to the economy and the workplace, showing that four in five Americans support requiring employers to offer paid parental leave, and even more support paid sick leave. A majority also favors requiring chain stores and fast-food restaurants to inform workers of scheduling changes two weeks in advance or to compensate them with additional pay if they fail to do so.

Seven in 10 Americans support an increase in the federal minimum wage to $10.10 from $7.25 an hour, although Republicans are about evenly divided on the question.

Americans were also skeptical of free trade. Nearly two-thirds favored some form of trade restrictions, and more than half opposed giving the president authority to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could only vote up or down without amending, a White House priority.

Continue reading the main story

Document

A New York Times/CBS News Poll on Income Inequality and Workers' Rights

Nearly six in 10 Americans said government should do more to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, but they split sharply along partisan lines, according to a New York Times/CBS News poll.

OPEN Document

Still, it was Americans' views on the distribution of money and opportunity in the country that were most striking. More than half of higher-income Americans said that money and wealth should be more evenly distributed. Across party lines, most Americans said the chance to get ahead was mainly a luxury for those at the top.

“People have to get a high school education and they have to go to college as well, and then they go out there and can only get a low-paying job,” said Betty Burgess, 70, a retired textile worker from Lincolnton, N.C., who is a Republican.

Almost three-quarters of respondents say that large corporations have too much influence in the country, about double the amount that said the same of unions. However, a majority of Americans said that workers who did not want to join a union at their workplace should be able to opt out of paying union fees, even as they benefit from the union's protection and bargaining efforts. Unions generally oppose these right-to-work measures.

The phenomenon of public frustration about inequality rising several years into a recovery is not unprecedented. According to data that Leslie McCall, a professor at Northwestern University, has culled from the General Social Survey, a biennial survey by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, some measures of concern about inequality rose steadily after the 1990-91 recession and did not peak until 1996, after which they fell for several years.

The source of the resentment, Professor McCall said, was that “people think the returns to economic growth should be going to people like them as much as they should be going to people at the top.”

The poll also included a variety of intriguing findings about what Americans think should be done to reduce inequality.

Six in 10 Americans opposed requiring fast-food chains and other employers of hourly workers to raise wages to at least $15 an hour, the aim of a two-and-a-half year nationwide campaign led in part by a major union. (On Tuesday, Francis Slay, the mayor of St. Louis, threw his weight behind an effort to gradually raise the minimum wage there to $15 an hour by 2020, following similar moves in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle in recent years.)

When asked about the other end of the income spectrum, two-thirds of Americans favored raising taxes on people with annual salaries exceeding $1 million. By 50 to 45 percent, they favored capping the income of top executives at large corporations, a measure that more than one-third of Republicans supported as well.

Francis Slay

Mayor of St. Louis

Personal Line: Main Phone:

Assistant:

Notes:

Mayor of St. Louis since 2001 – he is the first person to be elected to that office for four consecutive terms.

Most recently re-elected in 2013 (got 54% of the vote in a competitive D primary; 84% in the general).

Credited with leading the rejuvenation of downtown St. Louis.

He is also a national voice on gun issues with Mayors Against Illegal Guns.

Slay recently called for a $15 minimum wage in St. Louis. It is not clear whether or not this proposal will be enacted – legislative and legal challenges remain – but it's a bold step in the right direction regardless.

TPA notes:

List of mayors who've signed on so far:

Steve Adler (Austin)

Ras Baraka (Newark)

Michael Brennan (Portland, Maine)

Betsy Hodges (Minneapolis)

Ed Murray (Seattle)

Pedro Segarra (Hartford)

Nan Whaley (Dayton)

Recent CBS/NYT data showing wide support for TPA approach/proposals:

- 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- 85 percent back paid sick leave.

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: Gann, Georgia; "John Del Cecato"; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:51:21 PM
Attachments: MBdB Call Sheet 5 19 15 Call with NAME OF CONTACT- TEMPLATE.docx

Here is template we use
Thanks!

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:47 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

I've been talking to their DC rep and left VMs for multiple people at St. Louis CH. They as a rule don't give out the Mayor's cell, but I've pressed and have someone from within their office working on getting it released.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:46 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Let me send you template
Also, sorry wasn't following- can you please let me know what plan is for getting the number?

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: Max Sevilla

EVENT:	Call with Mayor Joseph Riley (D – Charleston, SC)
RATIONALE:	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• YOU will call Mayor Riley to ask him to support your nomination to become an Advisory Board Member at the USCM 2015 summer meeting in San Francisco.• Mayor Riley is a USCM past President from 1986 – 1987 and member of the 2015 Nominating Committee.
CONTACT INFORMATION:	CELL: xxx-xxx-xxx// FRONT OFFICE: xxx-xxx-xxx (NAME FIRST NAME LAST, title)

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION ON THE EVENT:

Note: Mayor Riley can be a key supporter in the Nominating Committee room. According to Tom Cochran, Mayor Riley believes it is critical for USCM to have the strong and active involvement of big city mayors to maximize its national visibility and relevance.

- YOU have demonstrated great commitment to the organization this past year through your organizing on Cities of Opportunity Task Force and Immigration on the Cities United for Immigration Action (not USCM coalition)
 - YOU attended 2014 USCM Annual Winter Meeting in DC 2 weeks after taking office
 - YOU attended 82nd Annual Conference of Mayors in Dallas
 - YOU attended 2015 USCM Annual Winter Meeting in DC
 - YOU attended Boston COO Conference
 - YOU hosted the 1st COO Summit at Gracie Mansion
 - YOU helped organized the May 13th Infrastructure Week Lobby Day in Washington, D.C.

USCM Leadership Path

There are 2 levels of initial leadership: Advisory Board and Trustee

- o YOU must first be elected to the 27 – member Advisory Board
 - There are 7 openings for Advisory Board this year
- o After a year Advisory Board, YOU are eligible to run for Trustee
- o After being a Trustee for one year, YOU will eligible to seek other leadership opportunities, including Vice President and President

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

- The earliest YOU would be eligible to run for USCM President is 2017
- The Nominating Committee will meet to decide on new board members on Saturday June 20, 2015 during the 83rd Annual USCM meeting in San Francisco.

BIOGRAPHY

First elected mayor in December 1975, Mayor Riley is serving an unprecedented tenth term. Mayor Riley has focused his leadership in public safety, housing, arts and culture, children's issues, the creation of park and other public spaces, and economic revitalization and development.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 1:16:48 PM
Attachments: MBdB Call Sheet - Francis Slay.docx

Here it is in proper format

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 12:51 PM
To: "Gann, Georgia" <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Here is template we use
Thanks!

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:47 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

I've been talking to their DC rep and left VMs for multiple people at St. Louis CH. They as a rule don't give out the Mayor's cell, but I've pressed and have someone from within their office working on getting it released.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:46 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Let me send you template

Also, sorry wasn't following- can you please let me know what plan is for getting the number?

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead:

EVENT: Call with Mayor Francis Slay (D – St. Louis)

RATIONALE:

- YOU will call Mayor Slay to ask him to support The Progressive Agenda.
- Slay was mentioned in the NYT story on their poll re: income inequality

CONTACT INFORMATION: CELL: xxx-xxx-xxx// FRONT OFFICE: xxx-xxx-xxx
(NAME FIRST NAME LAST, title)

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION ON THE EVENT:

Francis Slay
Mayor of St. Louis

Personal Line: Main Phone:

Assistant:

Notes:

Slay has been mayor of St. Louis since 2001. He is the first person to be elected to that office for four consecutive terms.

Most recently re-elected in 2013 (got 54% of the vote in a competitive D primary; 84% in the general).

Credited with leading the rejuvenation of downtown St. Louis.

He is also a national voice on gun issues with Mayors Against Illegal Guns.

Slay recently called for a $15 minimum wage in St. Louis. It is not clear whether or not this proposal will be enacted – legislative and legal challenges remain – but it's a bold step in the right direction regardless.

TPA notes:

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

List of mayors who've signed on so far:

Steve Adler (Austin)
Ras Baraka (Newark)
Michael Brennan (Portland, Maine)
Betsy Hodges (Minneapolis)
Ed Murray (Seattle)
Pedro Segarra (Hartford)
Nan Whaley (Dayton)

Recent CBS/NYT data showing wide support for TPA approach/proposals:

- 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- 85 percent back paid sick leave.

From: Gann, Georgia
To: "John Del Cecato"; Yazgi, Stephanie; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 1:26:19 PM
Attachments: MBdB Call Sheet - Francis Slay.docx

Here is the call sheet with contact information.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 1:17 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: Re: NYT story today

Here it is in proper format

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 12:51 PM
To: "Gann, Georgia" <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Sevillia, Max" <msevillia@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Here is template we use
Thanks!

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:47 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

I've been talking to their DC rep and left VMs for multiple people at St. Louis CH. They as a rule don't give out the Mayor's cell, but I've pressed and have someone from within their office working on getting it released.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor

Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:46 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Let me send you template

Also, sorry wasn't following- can you please let me know what plan is for getting the number?

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead:

EVENT: Call with Mayor Francis Slay (D – St. Louis)

RATIONALE:

- YOU will call Mayor Slay to ask him to support The Progressive Agenda.
- Slay was mentioned in the NYT story on their poll re: income inequality

CONTACT INFORMATION: CELL: [REDACTED]
PERSONAL SECRETARY: [REDACTED] (Sherry Wiebenmeyer)

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION ON THE EVENT:

Francis Slay
Mayor of St. Louis

Notes:

Slay has been mayor of St. Louis since 2001. He is the first person to be elected to that office for four consecutive terms.

Most recently re-elected in 2013 (got 54% of the vote in a competitive D primary; 84% in the general).

Credited with leading the rejuvenation of downtown St. Louis.

He is also a national voice on gun issues with Mayors Against Illegal Guns.

Slay recently called for a $15 minimum wage in St. Louis. It is not clear whether or not this proposal will be enacted – legislative and legal challenges remain – but it's a bold step in the right direction regardless.

TPA notes:

List of mayors who've signed on so far:

Steve Adler (Austin)

Ras Baraka (Newark)

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Michael Brennan (Portland, Maine)
Betsy Hodges (Minneapolis)
Ed Murray (Seattle)
Pedro Segarra (Hartford)
Nan Whaley (Dayton)

Recent CBS/NYT data showing wide support for TPA approach/proposals:

- 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- 85 percent back paid sick leave.

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: TPA FYI
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 1:27:18 PM

Wonders never cease. And bill peduto, mayor of pittsburgh is leaning to us. Needs a little more work by me

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 01:17 PM
To: B
Subject: TPA FYI

Ben Jealous is now signed on, thanks to Katrina VH

From: John Del Cecato
To: Gann, Georgia
Subject: Re: NYT story today
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 1:32:15 PM

Thank you!

On Jun 9, 2015, at 1:27 PM, Gann, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Just sent around the actual document with the cell in there. Problem solved!

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 1:27 PM
To: Gann, Georgia
Subject: Re: NYT story today

No prob!

On Jun 9, 2015, at 1:21 PM, Gann, Georgia <GGann@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I just gave you a ring. I'll leave the cell on your VM to fill in. I know it's a lot, but following a request...

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 1:19 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina

Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

I've got Mayor Slay's cell – I've been asked not to email it around, so I'll give you a ring to add to the call sheet.

FYI all of his staff has been very clear that this is for MBdB ONLY. Mayor Slay really does not like to give his cell phone out. I have assured that it is only for MBdB's use and we are not going to share.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:51 PM
To: Gann, Georgia; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Here is template we use
Thanks!

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:47 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

I've been talking to their DC rep and left VMs for multiple people at St. Louis CH. They as a rule don't give out the Mayor's cell, but I've pressed and have someone from within their office working on getting it released.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Yazgi, Stephanie

Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:46 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Let me send you template

Also, sorry wasn't following- can you please let me know what plan is for getting the number?

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: Gann, Georgia; "John Del Cecato"; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 2:02:33 PM

That sounds great

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 1:19 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

I've got Mayor Slay's cell – I've been asked not to email it around, so I'll give you a ring to add to the call sheet.

FYI all of his staff has been very clear that this is for MBdB ONLY. Mayor Slay really does not like to give his cell phone out. I have assured that it is only for MBdB's use and we are not going to share.

Georgia B. Gann
Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:51 PM
To: Gann, Georgia; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Here is template we use
Thanks!

From: Gann, Georgia
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:47 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; 'John Del Cecato'; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

I've been talking to their DC rep and left VMs for multiple people at St. Louis CH. They as a rule don't give out the Mayor's cell, but I've pressed and have someone from within their office working on getting it released.

Georgia B. Gann

Senior Legislative Advisor
Transportation and Infrastructure Specialist
New York City Office of Federal Affairs
1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Suite 350
Tel. (202) 624-5912
Cell. (347) 497-1740
ggann@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 12:46 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Gann, Georgia; Schwartz, Regina
Cc: Sevilla, Max
Subject: RE: NYT story today

Let me send you template

Also, sorry wasn't following- can you please let me know what plan is for getting the number?

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: Tpa
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 9:01:34 PM

Either she says enough and he endorses or not enough and he evades - bringing on all sorts of controversy. May want to avoid TV

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:53 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>

> We need to ask him what his feeling is about going on a show this weekend. We can jointly recommend him not doing one, but he will not be happy if we pocket veto

>

>

>

>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:22 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>

>> I am getting daily incoming from Sunday shows about mayor for this coming sunday. When are we meeting with him about this weekend's plan? We will need to be monitoring the speech and readying response and determining how we are maximizing for the issues/tpa.

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: Tpa
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 9:01:48 PM

I think we shud determine what we want to accomplish and if we can

----- Original Message -----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 08:53 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: Tpa

We need to ask him what his feeling is about going on a show this weekend. We can jointly recommend him not doing one, but he will not be happy if we pocket veto

> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:22 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

> I am getting daily incoming from Sunday shows about mayor for this coming sunday. When are we meeting with him about this weekend's plan? We will need to be monitoring the speech and readying response and determining how we are maximizing for the issues/tpa.

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: Tpa
Date: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 10:07:56 PM

Planning

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 9, 2015, at 9:33 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> @ planning?
>
> _____
> From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
> Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 9:27 PM
> To: Hagelgans, Andrea
> Cc: Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
> Subject: Re: Tpa
>
> Ah - gotcha - sorry - let's do tomorrow?
>
> On 6/9/15, 9:22 PM, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
> wrote:
>
>> That's why I want us to meet with him
>>
>> ----- Original Message -----
>> From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
>> Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 08:53 PM
>> To: Hagelgans, Andrea
>> Cc: Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
>> Subject: Re: Tpa
>>
>> We need to ask him what his feeling is about going on a show this >> weekend. We can jointly recommend him not doing one, but he will not be >> happy if we pocket veto
>>
>>
>>
>>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:22 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea
>>> <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> I am getting daily incoming from Sunday shows about mayor for this >>> coming sunday. When are we meeting with him about this weekend's plan?
>>> We will need to be monitoring the speech and readying response and >>> determining how we are maximizing for the issues/tpa.
>

From: Wiley, Maya
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: 15_343_output.pdf
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 10:52:14 AM
Attachments: 15_343_output.pdf
ATT00001.txt

Good news.

CITY OF NEW YORK
CONFLICTS OF INTEREST BOARD

2 Lafayette Street, Suite 1010
New York, New York 10007
(212) 442-1400
Fax: (212) 442-1407 TDD: (212) 442-1443

June 10, 2015

Ian Bassin, Esq.
Deputy Counsel to the Mayor
The City of New York
Office of the Mayor
New York, NY 10007

Re: Conflicts of Interest Board Case No. 2015-343 (Rebecca Katz and Hayley Prim)

Dear Mr. Bassin:

This is in response to your letter, dated June 3, 2015, to the Conflicts of Interest Board (the "Board"), and other communications between your office and Board staff, requesting that the Board grant a waiver pursuant to New York City Charter Section 2604(e) to permit Rebecca Katz and Hayley Prim to appear before the Office of the Mayor (the "Office") on behalf of their prospective employer, the Campaign for One New York ("CONY"), within one year of their departure from the Office.

You advise that Ms. Prim, who joined City service in February 2014, worked for the overwhelming majority of that time as a Policy Analyst on the team of Deputy Mayor Alicia Glen and that she left City service on March 27, 2015, to take a position at Hilltop Public Solutions ("Hilltop"), a strategic communications and public affairs firm. You also advise that Ms. Katz, who joined City service on January 1, 2014, served as a Special Advisor to the Mayor until April 7, 2015, when she left City service also to take a position at Hilltop.

You further advise that Ms. Prim is proposing in coming days to terminate her employment with Hilltop and to join the staff of CONY as a full-time employee. You also advise that Ms. Katz may consider doing the same.

You advise that CONY is a 501(c)(4) not-for-profit corporation established in coordination with Mayor de Blasio for the exclusive purpose of receiving and expending private funds to provide the people of New York City with an opportunity to organize in support of the Mayor's policy agenda and to advocate on behalf of the City. You advise that CONY is a client of Hilltop and that at Hilltop Ms. Prim and Ms. Katz have been doing work for CONY. You advise that if Ms. Prim and Ms. Katz become employees of CONY their work would include efforts to organize the follow-up to the Mayor's visit last month to Washington, D.C. where he advocated for a series of policy priorities of interest to New Yorkers, including an increase in the minimum wage, paid family leave, and additional tax revenues to support investments that would address the current inequality crisis; that, more particularly, CONY is currently engaged in time sensitive work to follow up on that visit and is working to support a day of action later this month; that to enable CONY to do so, the Mayor's Office needs to coordinate with CONY on the content of these activities to ensure accuracy and consistency in the presentation of information to the public; and that in light of CONY's very small staff (CONY has only one other full-time employee) the Office would need to communicate with Ms. Prim (and with Ms. Katz, should she determine to leave Hilltop for a full-time position at CONY).

By endorsement to your letter to the Board, Mayor de Blasio approves of a waiver for Ms. Prim and Ms. Katz to permit them to appear before the Office within one year of leaving City employment in connection with their work as employees of CONY, stating his belief that such appearances would not be in conflict with the purposes and interests of the City.

Charter Section 2604(d) contains a number of provisions -- referred to as the post-employment restrictions -- regulating the conduct of individuals who have left, or are contemplating leaving, City service.

Charter Section 2604(d)(2) provides that no former public servant shall, within a period of one year after the termination of the public servant's service with the City, appear before the agency served by the public servant. "Appear" means to make any communication, including personal appearances, telephone calls, and letters, for compensation, other than those involving ministerial matters. See Charter Section 2601(4). A "ministerial matter" means an administrative act, including the issuance of a license, permit, or other permission by the City, that is carried out in a prescribed manner and does not involve substantial personal discretion. See Charter Section 2601(15).

Charter Section 2604(d)(4) provides that no former public servant shall appear, whether paid or unpaid, before the City, or receive compensation for any services rendered, "in relation to any particular matter involving the same party or parties with respect to which particular matter such person had participated personally and substantially as a public servant through decision, approval, recommendation, investigation or other similar activities." "Particular matter" means any case, proceeding, application, request for a ruling or benefit, determination, contract limited to the duration of the contract as specified therein, investigation, charge, accusation, arrest, or other similar action that involves a specific party or parties, including actions leading up to the particular matter. See Charter Section 2601(17).

Charter Section 2604(d)(5) provides that no public servant shall, after leaving City service, disclose or use for private advantage any confidential information gained from public service that is not otherwise made available to the public.

Charter Section 2604(e) provides, however, that a public servant may hold a position or engage in conduct otherwise prohibited by Chapter 68 if the Board determines, after receiving the written approval of the head of the agency or agencies involved, that such position or conduct does not involve a conflict with the purposes and interests of the City.

In various Advisory Opinions starting with No. 91-8, the Board has made clear that Section 2604(e) would be interpreted to permit limited waivers of the post-employment restrictions, and has further stated that, in determining whether to issue a waiver of the post-employment restrictions, the Board would consider a number of factors, including, but not limited to: the relationship of the City to the public servant's prospective employer; the benefits to the City (as opposed to the public servant) if the waiver were to be granted; and the likelihood of harm to other organizations or companies similar to, or in competition with, a public servant's prospective employer, if the waiver is granted. The Board has in the past granted such waivers "sparingly, and only in exigent circumstances." See Advisory Opinion No. 94-15.

In Advisory Opinion No. 2000-2, in discussing the question of post-employment waivers, particularly for public servants leaving to work for not-for-profits that are closely associated with the City, the Board noted that under certain circumstances public/private partnerships are so significant to the welfare of the City that the City is well served to encourage former City employees to remain effectively in public service and to lend their expertise to these not-for-profits. The Board further stated that, when the City and the not-for-profits share an identity of interest, the harms that the post-employment provisions were intended to address ("to prevent public servants from exploiting public office for personal gain, subordinating the interests of the City to those of a prospective employer, or exerting undue influence on government decision-making"; Opinion No. 94-5 at 6-7) may be absent or at least negligible, and a waiver of the post-employment restrictions shall be granted accordingly.

In Advisory Opinion No. 2008-4, the Board provided further guidance for evaluating the types of relationships that will be deemed public-private partnerships, stating that, when the relationship between the prospective employer organization and the City is one of a compensated provider of goods or services – that is, as a vendor – and a customer, the Board will judge the request to waive the post-employment restrictions under the historic standard announced first in Advisory Opinion No. 91-8 and will grant such requests "sparingly." However, the Board further opined that when the prospective employer organization is a City-affiliated not-for-profit, or an organization that contributes private resources to the City in collaboration with a City agency, the prospective employer organization will more likely be deemed a "partner," and the Board will evaluate the application to waive the post-employment restrictions under the less stringent standard set forth in Advisory Opinion No. 2000-2. See Advisory Opinion No. 2008-4 at 12. Moreover, the Board further observed that the distinction between those private entities that will be viewed as partners and those that will not is not precise; that a given entity may, over time, "shift positions along the continuum;" and that, depending on the particular work the departing City employees will be doing, waivers for City employees leaving to take positions at such firms will be analyzed in light of the firm's hybrid status as both a partner and a vendor. See Advisory Opinion No. 2008-4 at 10.

Here, the Board determines that CONY is a not-for-profit organization bringing private resources to bear in an effort, coordinated with the Office of the Mayor, to support and advance Mayor de Blasio's policy agenda and is therefore a not-for-profit "partner" of the Office of the Mayor within the meaning of Advisory Opinion No. 2008-4. In light of the identity of interest between the Office and CONY in advancing the Mayor's policy agenda, because Ms. Prim's and Ms. Katz's proposed communications with the Office would help make it possible for CONY's initiative to succeed, and because none of the evils, noted above, against which the post-employment restrictions were aimed appear substantially present here, Ms. Prim's and Ms. Katz's proposed communications would not conflict with the purposes and interests of the City, and the Board thus grants the requested waiver of the one-year appearance ban of Charter Section 2604(d)(2) to permit Ms. Prim and Ms. Katz, should she too terminate her Hilltop employment to join CONY full-time, to communicate with the Office during their first post-employment year on behalf of CONY.

You are accordingly advised that, based on your representations and Mayor de Blasio's written approval, the Board has determined that it would not conflict with the purposes and interests of the City for Ms. Prim and Ms. Katz to appear before the Office as full-time employees of CONY during the first twelve months following their departure from City service, limited to their work for CONY as described above, provided that they may not, absent a further waiver granted by this Board on subsequent application, work on particular matters in which they were personally and substantially involved while a public servant and may not use for private advantage or disclose any confidential information gained from public service that is not available to the public. See Charter Sections 2604(d)(4) and (d)(5).

The advice conveyed in this letter is conditioned on the correctness and completeness of the facts supplied to us. If such facts are in any respect incorrect or incomplete, the advice we have given to you may not apply. If at any time you would like further advice based on a change of circumstances or additional information, please contact us.

Very truly yours,

Richard Briffault
Chair

Fernando Bohorquez
Anthony Crowell
Andrew Irving
Erika Thomas-Yuille

Sent from my iPhone

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: John Del Ceccato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: FW: 15_343_output.pdf
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 10:53:12 AM

FYI

-----Original Message-----

From: Wiley, Maya
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 10:52 AM
To: B; Wolfe, Emma; Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Leopold, Elana; Berger, Henry
Subject: 15_343_output.pdf

Hi-

COIB has approved the waiver for Hayley Prim to communicate with City Hall as a full time employee of CONY.

Letter attached.

M

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: John Del Ceccato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: mtg
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 10:55:48 AM

Are you gonna be here at 11 this am?

Tom Snyder
Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
City Hall
New York, NY 10007
212-341-5050

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wiley, Maya
Subject: Re: 15_343_output.pdf
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 11:58:01 AM

Right on!

On 6/10/15, 10:52 AM, "Wiley, Maya" <MWiley@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>Good news.
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Williams, Dominic
Subject: FYI
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:28:26 PM

There's a chance that we may do a conference call with Capitol Hill reporters either this afternoon or tomorrow AM with Robert Reich to give one last push against Fast Track/TPP - but not sure yet... Roosevelt Institute has been pushing us & I mentioned to MBDB last night & he was game - but we'll see if it pans out

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: TPA messaging
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:36:12 PM

Ah, here you go:

14. Since 1979, worker productivity has risen eight times faster than pay. [\[14\]](#)

15. In 2013, the average real hourly wages of young college graduates were barely higher than in 1989. [\[15\]](#)

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:33 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: TPA messaging

Number 14 just needs an ending then - thanks!

From: <Gunaratna>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 12:25 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: TPA messaging

I think there were only 14 originally. I can add more if you want - lemme know.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 12:20 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Mine is cut off at #14

From: <Gunaratna>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 3:55 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: TPA messaging

Here's an old email. We can brush up as needed:

We need to talk about which of these stats we like and which we want to clarify/say better so we have an arsenal of choices going forward

-----Original Message-----
From: Mahen Gunaratna
To: Bill de Blasio

Cc: Andrea Hagelgans
Subject: Quick Stats on Income Inequality
Sent: Apr 14, 2015 4:17 PM

As requested, please see below. AH is putting into your trip binder, which she will give you later tonight. Thanks, Mahen

--

Quick Stats on Income Inequality

1. The average CEO makes about 300 times what the average worker makes.[1]
 2. The wealthiest 1% captured 91% of all income gains during the first three years of the recovery from the Great Recession (2009 to 2012).[2]
 3. A typical American family, in real income terms, is making less today than they were a quarter century ago.[3]
 4. Half of all New Yorkers are living at or near the poverty level.[4]
 5. Income inequality is the highest it's been since the Great Depression.[5]
 6. Two-thirds of American employees are estimated to live paycheck-to-paycheck, saying they would find it somewhat or very difficult to meet their financial obligations if there was a delay in their paychecks.[6]
 7. In NYC, over 50% of New Yorkers are rent-burdened, meaning they spend more than 30% of their household income on rent, while in Manhattan, a single apartment recently sold for a jaw-dropping $100 million and another apartment was rented for $500,000 – per MONTH.[7]
 8. We live in a country where the wealthiest 160 THOUSAND families own as much wealth as the poorest 145 MILLION families.[8]
 9. The middle class share of national income continues to stagnate near record lows – falling sharply over nearly the past half century.[9]
 10. The top ten percent in our country take in half of our national income.[10]
 11. The top 1% of earners take home over 20% of America's income.[11]
 12. The wealth gap between the richest Americans and the average family has more than doubled over the past half century. The wealthiest 1% of American households had a net worth 288 TIMES as large as the average family.[12]
 13. A child born in the top 20% has about a 2 in 3 chance of staying at or near the top. A child born into the bottom 20% has a less than 1 in 20 shot at making it to the top. He or she is ten times likelier to be stuck in place.[13]
 14. Since 1979, worker productivity has risen eight times faster than
- Sent via BlackBerry by AT&T

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmmedia.com>]
Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 12:16 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Jon Fromowitz
Subject: Re: TPA messaging

Yes - if you could get that list, that would be great...

Fromo also has some stats that he uses...

And there are some other good data points, like the WalMart story today (they have seen less turnover since raising wages) & possibly something on West Virginia (a red state & unlikely ally in the fight against income inequality - but a place where inequality is still large)

From: <Gunaratna>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Monday, June 8, 2015 at 11:43 AM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Subject: FW: TPA messaging

Let me know what you need assistance with.

Maybe we should also brush up that list from a few months ago with 20 quick stats on income inequality – will dig up.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea

Sent: Monday, June 08, 2015 11:27 AM

To: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Gunaratna, Mahen

Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen

Subject: TPA messaging

Hey John,

So in the post-game show, Mayor said he is not pleased with current TPA messaging and examples. He wants “sharper, crisper” messages and stronger examples. He doesn’t feel we are showing forward momentum, yada, yada, yada

Do you have the strategic plan you’ve been working on?

I’d like to connect with Mahen and get a true message guide together for him—3 main messages, sharp examples for each of the promising candidates (both GOP and DEM) and whatever action item he wants to be saying, difficult Q&A updates. He also wants to bang the drum more on the poll. He finally focused on it.

I know we are discussing on Wed the idea of the presidential forum. I want to flag he would have been flat-footed if Dickerson had asked him what he plans to do if no one or only a few candidates accept the forum invite. So we are on borrowed time here.

Thanks!

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor

Direct – 212.341.5372

Cell – 718.679.8965

ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Walzak, Phil; "John Del Cecato"; Hinton, Karen
Cc: Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:55:09 PM

I did Stephanapolis and MTP

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:52 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Hinton, Karen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton

+EW, MPC

Yes, going to start barring objectins

I have Lemire, Karni, Hawkins

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:49 PM
To: Hinton, Karen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton

Can't we just tell everybody he won't be there?

On Jun 10, 2015, at 12:40 PM, Hinton, Karen <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Politico on Clinton. Let's close it down.

From: Mayor's Press Office <pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wed, 10 Jun 2015 11:57:52 -0400
To: "@Incoming" <Incoming@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton

From: Annie Karni [<mailto:akarni@politico.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 11:51 AM
To: Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Fw: de blasio clinton

Just checking if there is any comment or confirmation about BDB's office not commenting on whether or not he will be at Hillary's kick off on Saturday.

From: Annie Karni

Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 11:47 AM

To: pwalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov

Subject: de Blasio Clinton

POLITICO doing a short folo on the Crain's story. anything to add? Accurate that mayor's office won't comment on whether or not he will be attending?

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: "John Del Cecato"; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: Schwartz, Regina; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: FYI: Minimum wage item at USCM in June
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 2:05:47 PM

Yep- prob not unless something changes.
Its just an FYI and background in case something changes.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 2:03 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: Schwartz, Regina; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: FYI: Minimum wage item at USCM in June

I don't think we're going to CA for USCM - right?

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:37 PM
To: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FYI: Minimum wage item at USCM in June

Flagged this for John a while back but want y'all to know that: LA is looking to have some visibility event around minimum wage while in SF for USCM June meeting. They have been in touch with the WH about it. Not sure where idea came from but LA hey asked USCM for help identifying what cities have raised their minimum wage.

Thanks.
Stephanie

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: "John Del Cecato"; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Schwartz, Regina; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: FYI: Minimum wage item at USCM in June
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 2:06:03 PM

Very slim chance he will go.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 2:03 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: Schwartz, Regina; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: FYI: Minimum wage item at USCM in June

I don't think we're going to CA for USCM - right?

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:37 PM
To: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Schwartz, Regina" <RSchwartz@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: FYI: Minimum wage item at USCM in June

Flagged this for John a while back but want y'all to know that: LA is looking to have some visibility event around minimum wage while in SF for USCM June meeting. They have been in touch with the WH about it. Not sure where idea came from but LA hey asked USCM for help identifying what cities have raised their minimum wage.

Thanks.
Stephanie

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Cc: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: HILLARY
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 2:44:18 PM

Hillary's team has not released the time of the speech yet, just FYI

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 2:42 PM
To: Hinton, Karen
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: HILLARY

Why don't we say we have events scheduled for Sat?

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 2:41 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Fwd: HILLARY

Do I say still reviewing her position on tap

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: "Fermino, Jennifer" <jfermino@nydailynews.com>
Date: June 10, 2015 at 2:39:54 PM EDT
To: "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: HILLARY

Why isn't he going ?

Jennifer Fermino
646-734-0320

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 2:39 PM, Hinton, Karen <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

No

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 2:37 PM, Fermino, Jennifer
<jfermino@nydailynews.com> wrote:

We're doing something on this. Is he going ?
Jennifer Fermino
646-734-0320

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 1:49 PM, Fermino, Jennifer
<jfermino@nydailynews.com> wrote:

Is mayor going to hillary at Roosevelt island?

<http://www.crainsnewyork.com/article/20150610/BLOGS04/150609865/de-blasio-likely-to-skip-hillary-clintons-campaign-launch>

Jennifer Fermino
City Hall Bureau Chief
New York Daily News
(o) 212 210 1887
(c) 646 734 0320

This transmission is intended only for the use of the addressee and may contain information that is confidential, privileged and/or exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If you are not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution or copying of the information contained herein is strictly unauthorized and prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify the sender immediately and delete this message. Thank you.

^(NJ)

This transmission is intended only for the use of the addressee and may contain information that is confidential, privileged and/or exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If you are not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution or copying of the information contained herein is strictly unauthorized and prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify the sender immediately and delete this message. Thank you.

 (NJ)

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Hinton, Karen
Cc: Carey, Michael; John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 3:31:44 PM

Ok great

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 3:31 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: Carey, Michael; John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma Subject: Re: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton

Yes

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 3:30 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

You guys have more info than we do KH is he good saying not going?

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 3:30 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Walzak, Phil; John Del Cecato; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton

Mayor said he was invited

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 12:55 PM, Carey, Michael <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I have not even received an invite so.....

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:52 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Hinton, Karen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton

+EW, MPC
Yes, going to start barring objectins

I have Lemire, Karni, Hawkins

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:49 PM
To: Hinton, Karen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton

Can't we just tell everybody he won't be there?

On Jun 10, 2015, at 12:40 PM, Hinton, Karen
<KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Politico on Clinton. Let's close it down.

From: Mayor's Press Office <pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Wed, 10 Jun 2015 11:57:52 -0400
To: "@Incoming" <Incoming@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: INCOMING: Annie Karni/Politico -- : de blasio clinton

From: Annie Karni [<mailto:akarni@politico.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 11:51 AM
To: Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Fw: de blasio clinton

Just checking if there is any comment or confirmation about BDB's office not commenting on whether or not he will be at Hillary's kick off on Saturday.

From: Annie Karni
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 11:47 AM
To: pwalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov
Subject: de blasio clinton

POLITICO doing a short folo on the crain's story. anything to add? Accurate that mayor's office won't comment on whether or not he will be attending?

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: FW: INCOMING: Tara Meltzer/NBC w Andrea Mitchell// Intv Request for Mayor de Blasio --LA raising their minimum wage
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 3:45:00 PM

From: Mayor's Press Office
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 3:44 PM
To: @Incoming
Subject: INCOMING: Tara Meltzer/NBC w Andrea Mitchell// Intv Request for Mayor de Blasio --LA raising their minimum wage

From: Meltzer, Tara (NBCUniversal) [<mailto:Tara.Meltzer@nbcuni.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 3:42 PM
To: Katz, Rebecca; Mayor's Press Office
Subject: Hi, it's Tara at MSNBC w Andrea Mitchell// Intv Request for Mayor de Blasio

The topics: income inequality (LA raising their minimum wage) and 2016
It would be a one-on-one interview between 12pm-1pm

Please let me know if this can work, if not, can we look at future dates – [REDACTED]

Warm regards,

Tara

From: Ronalie
To: [REDACTED] Chao, Raymond; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Wolfe, Emma;
jfdc@akpdmedia.com
Subject: MBDB: TPA Update Call
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 4:31:14 PM

We are delayed. Still in pressed. Will update when we leave!

MBDB: TPA Update Call

Scheduled: Wednesday, Jun 10, 2015 from 4:30 PM to 5:00 PM

Location: Dial-in Number: [REDACTED] Meeting ID: [REDACTED]

Invitees: [REDACTED], Chao, Raymond, Snyder, Thomas, Carey, Michael, Leopold, Elana, Wolfe, Emma, 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
(jfdc@akpdmedia.com)

Sent from my iPhone

From: Jon Fromowitz
To: Blumm, Kate
Subject: Re: help!
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 4:53:21 PM

No prob!

On Jun 10, 2015, at 4:52 PM, Blumm, Kate <KBlumm@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Perfect—thanks, and sorry, I've been slammed today

From: Jon Fromowitz [<mailto:jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 4:50 PM
To: Blumm, Kate
Subject: Re: help!

FYI - I took transcript from Sunday and am just focusing, tightening, sound-biting for potential mosque remarks since that's so soon. Will have that for you shortly

On Jun 10, 2015, at 4:48 PM, Blumm, Kate <KBlumm@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

We will do this though Fromo is on [REDACTED] starting on Friday!

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 10:54 AM
To: Jon Fromowitz (jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com); Blumm, Kate
Subject: help!

Hi there,
Possible to get some writing assistance again from the dynamic duo?

Friday hit – Remarks at a Mosque on rent regulation (5-10 minutes). I would look at what he delivered on Sunday
Saturday hit—Remarks at a SDA church on rent regulations (5-10 minutes)
Monday hit- remarks on Fast Food workers on minimum wage. I'll get more details for you

Best,
Andrea

Andrea Hagelgans

Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Wolfe, Emma
To: [REDACTED]; [REDACTED] Chao, Raymond; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael;
Leopold, Elana; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: MBDB: TPA Update Call
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 5:05:19 PM

I'm having service issues on train back from alb
Will keep trying

From: Ronalie [mailto:[REDACTED]]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 05:00 PM
To: [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]> Chao, Raymond; Snyder, Thomas; Carey, Michael; Leopold, Elana; Wolfe, Emma; jfdc@akpdmedia.com <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: MBDB: TPA Update Call

Calling now

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 4:45 PM, Ronalie <[REDACTED]> wrote:

Hi all, please dial in!

Mayor will be dialing in soon.

Thank you!!

MBDB: TPA Update Call

Scheduled: Wednesday, Jun 10, 2015 from 4:30 PM to 5:00 PM

Location: Dial-in Number: [REDACTED] Meeting ID: [REDACTED]

Invitees: [REDACTED], Chao, Raymond, Snyder, Thomas, Carey, Michael, Leopold, Elana, Wolfe, Emma, 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' (jfdc@akpdmedia.com)

Sent from my iPhone

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Williams, Dominic
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Sevillia, Max
Subject: RE: Buffett Rule
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 5:12:09 PM

Trying to find a solid analysis from post-Jan 2013, when the President signed the latest compromise into law. A lot of the Buffet Rule revenue estimates are from 2012.

Looping Max to see if his team has something handy.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 3:30 PM
To: Williams, Dominic; Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Buffett Rule

Dom/Mahen - Andrea & I are trying to think through some questions that will become more pointed about TPA as the weeks go by...

Do you guys know how much money would be generated by implementing the Buffett Rule right now?

There are a lot of numbers out there - but the amount got impacted by the extension of the Bush tax cuts for some (as I recall, most of them were made permanent?)

Just looking for a ballpark figure (as much as possible, of course!) that MBDB can say with a straight face

From: John Del Cecato
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: <no subject>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 6:02:58 PM

Going forward, we're going to need lots of TPA call time.

The truth is, the reason all the stuff worked up until now is that we were able to use our major weapon - the mayor.

And since May 12th, we've been doing all we can at the staff/consultant level - but we only have so much juice.

Other than a few calls to Elizabeth Warren & Keith Ellison, he hasn't spoken to the vast majority of our TPA partners since May 12th. That's not necessarily his fault - we mentioned it to him, but haven't really shown the urgency.

To get this presidential forum off the ground, we'll need him to make some calls to top TPA people & get them on board.

And to get the Early State program off the ground, we'll need him to engage a "chairman" like Harkin, as we discussed earlier today.

Geri will bring a ton to the table - but a staffer is only as good as the principal they represent - and none of us - myself included - have the juice to convince others that we're speaking directly for the mayor on this stuff

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Snyder, Thomas; John Del Cecato
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Tpa
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 6:05:34 PM

<http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2015/06/10/de-blasio-to-skip-clinton-rally-praises-rival-sanders/>

5:56 pm ET
Jun 10, 2015

2016

De Blasio to Skip Clinton Rally, Praises Rival Sanders

One for Hillary Clinton's rivals for the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination received an informal boost Wednesday from a curious source: Mrs. Clinton's former campaign manager, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio.

Mr. de Blasio, who managed Mrs. Clinton's winning 2000 campaign for Senate and supported her 2008 presidential bid, said at an unrelated news conference that "I've always liked what I heard from Bernie Sanders," the independent Vermont senator who is running for the Democratic 2016 nomination.

"I think Bernie Sanders is a great senator, is a great voice for a fair society and a fair economy," he said.

Mr. de Blasio, a Democrat, also said that he wouldn't attend Mrs. Clinton's campaign rally on Saturday in New York City, on Roosevelt Island.

"I'm waiting to hear, as I've said, her larger vision for addressing income inequality," Mr. de Blasio said when asked if he would attend her June 13 event. "I look forward to that."

Mr. de Blasio has sought lately to cast himself as a national voice for liberalism.

A spokesman for Mrs. Clinton didn't immediately respond a question about whether Mr. de Blasio was invited to the rally, nor to a request for comment on the mayor's remarks about Mr. Sanders.

The mayor also praised Mrs. Clinton more extensively on Wednesday than he has since the start of her campaign.

“I’ve been very impressed by the comment she’s given so far on a host of issues,” he said. “I saw her speech on voting rights — it was very powerful,” he said. “I thought her vision for that was exactly right. I’m very impressed by her criminal justice reform speech. What I am waiting to hear about is the fight against income inequality, how we raise wages and benefits.”

Mrs. Clinton last week proposed that Americans be automatically registered to vote when they turn 18, unless they opt out, and called for an expansion of early-voting opportunities across the country.

Mr. de Blasio has had a lengthy relationship with both Mrs. Clinton and former President Bill Clinton, in whose administration he worked as an official at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

This isn’t the first time Mr. de Blasio has distanced himself from Mrs. Clinton’s campaign or expressed reservations about her platform. In recent months he has said repeatedly that he hasn’t decided whether to endorse her 2016 presidential bid.

In April, Mr. de Blasio said in an interview on NBC that he wouldn’t endorse her “until I see an actual vision of where they want to go.”

“She’s a tremendous public servant,” he told NBC. “I think she is one of the most qualified people to ever run for this office. And by the way, thoroughly vetted, we can say that. But we need to see the substance.”

Mara Gay contributed to this article.

-----Original Message-----

From: Snyder, Thomas

Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 9:02 PM

To: John Del Cecato

Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen

Subject: Re: Tpa

Either she says enough and he endorses or not enough and he evades - bringing on all sorts of controversy. May want to avoid TV

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:53 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmmedia.com> wrote:

>

> We need to ask him what his feeling is about going on a show this weekend. We can jointly recommend him not doing one, but he will not be happy if we pocket veto

>

>

>

>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:22 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>

>> I am getting daily incoming from Sunday shows about mayor for this coming sunday. When are we meeting with him about this weekend's plan? We will need to be monitoring the speech and readying response and determining how we are maximizing for the issues/tpa.

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: reminder
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 6:26:20 PM

Ok great

Then I'll add in a closing introducing her and adding her to CC

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 6:13 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: reminder

Oh - that would be helpful right? Greenwald's producer is Regina I believe - will get everyone connected

On Jun 10, 2015, at 5:52 PM, Yazgi, Stephanie <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

But who at the company am I connecting them with?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 12:05 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: reminder

Just talked to Tom - he thinks it's fine - go for it - and thank you!

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 5:05 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: reminder

Ok no prob let's wait for tom!

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 4:49 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: reminder

Thanks for reminder... Was waiting for Tom Snyder to weigh in re: what exactly we could have MBDB do - but I think that part can wait... Here's what I've got.... Need some sort of nice closing!

Robert Greenwald, founder and President of Brave New Films, is a supporter of The Progressive Agenda.

Robert is a brilliant, award-winning filmmaker from Los Angeles who - after a career of making dozens of feature films - turned his efforts to progressive documentary filmmaking - including Outfoxed: Rupert Murdoch's War on Journalism; Wal-Mart: The High Cost of Low Price; and Koch Brothers Exposed. Robert recently produced the short film Racism Is Real, which has been a viral sensation.

Now, in concert with The Progressive Agenda, Robert is in the process of making a short (5-10 minute) film that shines a light on the fact that the top 25 hedge fund managers earned more money last year than all of the Kindergarten teachers in America COMBINED.

Robert is hoping to film Kindergarten teachers in various cities around the country, including New York City and (YOUR CITY). The plan is to launch this new film at "premier parties" (whether in-person, or virtual) in a half-dozen cities across the country.

He'd like your help in identifying teachers to interview, as well as your help in planning for the premier, which will be the week of September 7th. There will be a national day of screenings, and discussions about this issue and how it relates to our fight to combat income inequality.

So to summarize, we'd like participating mayors to:

1. Host an in-person screening.
 2. Participate in a national online stream, where we connect the mayors and cities that are participating.
 3. Assign a staff person with whom we can work out the details for this national day of premiers/discussions/press coverage.
- AND/OR
4. Help identify Kindergarten teachers in your city (and contacts for them), if you'd like them featured in the film.

From: <Yazgi>, Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Tuesday, June 9, 2015 at 4:46 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Subject: reminder

Write up for the educational movie. Don't forget
+ contact form the movie company.
steph

From: Jon Fromowitz
To: Blumm, Kate
Subject: Re: help!
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 6:36:42 PM
Attachments: MosqueRemarksv2.docx
ATT00001.htm

Draft mosque remarks attached.

Can either use these for temple for SDA or go a different direction on that one - defer to you on which makes more sense given aims.

Mayor Bill de Blasio
Mosque Remarks
Wednesday 6 PM

Acknowledgements TK

New York City works best when it works for everyone.

New York's promise – that you can make here no matter what you look like or where you were born -- has made our city a shining beacon of opportunity visible across the world.

Our history isn't perfect, but the guiding light of opportunity has led us through even our darkest hours.

Today, the very promise of our city is at risk.

It's at risk because millions who live here struggle to AFFORD living here.

We can talk about the pros and cons of gentrification, and we can acknowledge that it's not all good or all bad, but we know one thing – gentrification has changed us rapidly.

And with it have come profound challenges:

The cost of housing going up all over has changed us.

The Great Recession has changed us – and not for the better. It threw people into poverty and so many haven't yet recovered.

When things change, you can bury your head in the sand or you can do something about it.

But the fact is we have a status quo that is unsustainable and unacceptable.

I believe it's time to ACT to keep New York a city for all. Are you with me?

I've talked about many times before about The Tale of Two Cities New York has become. In greater than it's been at any time since before the Great Depression, in the 1920s.

And this Administration is working is squarely focused on changing that.

We're giving families better wages, and essential benefits like paid sick leave.

We're giving -day pre-k to every family who wants it.

And we're expanding programs for our middle school kids so that working parents have the peace of mind knowing kids are safe and learning.

These changes have happened in these last 17 months, and we will expand upon them.

But there's much more work to do, and there's no clearer manifestation of inequality in New York than the skyrocketing cost of housing.

If we don't act and act boldly to control the price of housing in our city, New York will be a gilded city, rather than the city of opportunity that's meant so much for so many.

The good news is we don't have to accept the status quo. Everyday people have the power to CREATE change, but only if we all DEMAND change.

And when we say change, we mean the type of change that puts people first.

For years, changing neighborhoods meant less affordable ones.

Developers put profits ahead of people. They played by their own rules, and their rules put their bottom lines first.

This Administration is working relentlessly to change that status quo.

We're DEMANDING the developers build affordable housing. Under this Administration in rezoned neighborhoods, if you build any housing, you are also building affordable housing. Period.

But to really make our ambitious affordable housing plan – which will create or preserve 200,000 units of affordable housing, we’ll need Albany’s help.

There’s just days left before those in Albany conclude the legislative session.

If they fail to act, we’ll continue to slip backwards.

Right now in New York City, according to state law, a developer get a tax break for building new luxury condos. Is that what you want your tax dollars to go to?

...

Do you think people who create luxury condominiums need a tax break?

...

You know, there was just a $90 million condo sold in midtown. Can you believe that? The developers got a tax break to build it, and the fortunate souls who can afford to live in such expensive homes aren’t asked to pay their fair share.

Meanwhile, millions struggle to find or keep affordable housing.

So it’s no wonder that when it comes to housing in New York City, the game feels rigged for so many.

We have proposed to Albany some ideas to change the rules of the game.

First of all, we believe that if someone can afford to buy one of those luxury condominiums, then they can also afford to pay a modest tax to create affordable housing.

We call it the mansion tax, because if you can afford a mansion, you can afford to help your brothers and sisters. The revenue from the mansion tax we proposed would give our city the ability to create or preserve affordable housing for 160,000 New Yorkers.

In Albany, they will make a decision on that proposal in the next few days.

And they'll also decide whether to continue or eliminate rent regulation for over 2 million New Yorkers.

And we can be sure about one thing: if Albany doesn't act, the market will. And we all know what that will mean.

Albany not only has a choice to keep rent regulation or to eliminate it, they should do the right thing and STRENGTHEN rent regulation.

What do we mean when we talk about strengthening rent regulations?

Under the current rent law, when the rent hits a certain level for an apartment, the landlord gets to take away all rent stabilization, so that there are no more rules, no more limits to what they can charge.

The current law gives them a loophole to take the apartment out of any kind of regulation.

In the last 5 years alone, our city has lost 35,000 affordable housing units. We've seen what that looks like in our neighborhoods.

So Albany should change the rules to end this loophole.

Under the current law, whenever a tenant moves out of an apartment, the landlord can up the rent by 20 percent. They don't have to do anything to the unit. They just get to up the rent by 20 percent. It's called a "vacancy bonus." Why should you get a bonus just because you have a new tenant?

Albany should change the rules end the vacancy bonus for landlords now so that we can keep more units from becoming unaffordable.

And under the current law, if a landlord does something to improve a unit, they get to raise the monthly rent... permanently. Current law lets the landlord just keep on getting more and more money out of us.

Albany should change the rules and close that loophole, because if we don't, we'll just keep losing more and more the affordable apartments that people need.

Let me be clear: The Assembly has done the right thing on many of the measures we're talking about, but now it's time for others to act.

If they don't act, they will be consigning this city to become unaffordable for more and more people....
Mortgaging millions of promising futures here.

Make your voices heard. All those who represent you in Albany need to hear from you now.

Make your voices inescapable, make your voices loud – and we have a chance to make the changes we need.

Are you going to make your voices heard in Albany?

...

And let me tell you one other thing. Let's say those who believe in the status quo don't want to hear our voices. So they want to continue tax breaks for developers. This is this thing you've heard about lately called 421-a – harmless sounding phrase, but what it really means is tens of millions of dollars going into the pockets of developers.

If Albany will not give us the changes we need, if Albany will not strengthen rent regulation, if Albany will not pass a mansion tax, if Albany will not protect us, then we should end any tax breaks for developers who are not going to create affordable housing.

I've said it before, I'll say it again: If Albany won't mend it let's end it.

The challenges of talking inequality and creating affordable housing are big ones.

They won't be achieved overnight, but as long as everyday activists across this city make their voices heard... As long as we speak in ONE VOICE when we say the rules of the game must be changed so they work for working people...

As long as fight with the tireless ferocity that this city is known for, then I have no doubt that we will prevail.

Thank you!

On Jun 10, 2015, at 4:53 PM, Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

No prob!

On Jun 10, 2015, at 4:52 PM, Blumm, Kate <KBlumm@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Perfect—thanks, and sorry, I've been slammed today

From: Jon Fromowitz [<mailto:jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 4:50 PM
To: Blumm, Kate
Subject: Re: help!

FYI - I took transcript from Sunday and am just focusing, tightening, sound-biting for potential mosque remarks since that's so soon. Will have that for you shortly

On Jun 10, 2015, at 4:48 PM, Blumm, Kate <KBlumm@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

We will do this though Fromo is on [REDACTED] starting on Friday!

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 10:54 AM
To: Jon Fromowitz (jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com); Blumm, Kate
Subject: help!

Hi there,
Possible to get some writing assistance again from the dynamic duo?

Friday hit – Remarks at a Mosque on rent regulation (5-10 minutes). I would look at what he delivered on Sunday
Saturday hit—Remarks at a SDA church on rent regulations (5-10 minutes)
Monday hit- remarks on Fast Food workers on minimum wage. I'll get more details for you

Best,
Andrea

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Carey, Michael
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Snyder, Thomas; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Happy to do something tomorrow (Thursday) morning. I'll be at 415-669-9727. NOTE PACIFIC TIME!
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 6:48:28 PM

12:15 from CH

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:05 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Reich is on board to do a conf call with Capitol Hill reporters tomorrow on trade...

MPC - is there some time in the sked that works (i.e., not too early, since Reich is in California)?

From: Hayley Prim <hprim@hilltoppublicsolutions.com>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 6:01 PM
To: "Robert B. REICH" <rreich@berkeley.edu>
Cc: Rebecca L BOLES <rboles@berkeley.edu>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Happy to do something tomorrow (Thursday) morning. I'll be at 415-669-9727. NOTE PACIFIC TIME!

Thank you! Also adding my colleague John Del Cecato.

On Wednesday, June 10, 2015, Robert B. REICH <rreich@berkeley.edu> wrote:

|

--

Hayley Prim
Hilltop Public Solutions

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie; Regina Clemente
Cc: Robert Greenwald
Subject: Connecting
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 8:16:25 PM

Regina, meet Stephanie - who's leading our charge on fellow mayors - and is reaching out via Hedge Funders versus Kindergarten Teachers...

From: John Del Cecato
To: Williams, Dominic
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 8:49:43 PM

Can you resend the latest taking points on TPP

From: Regina Clemente
To: John Del Cecato; Yazgi, Stephanie
Cc: Robert Greenwald
Subject: Re: Connecting
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 8:55:49 PM

Thanks, John. Hi, Stephanie.

Looking forward to working together. Let me know how I can be helpful/what the next steps are on your end. And we will keep you updated on our progress with the film.

Happy to jump on a call this week or next to discuss more.

Thanks!

Regina Clemente
Director of Campaigns
Brave New Films
regina@bravenewfilms.org
o: 310-204-0448 x.236
c: 818-239-2070
bravenewfilms.org

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 5:16 PM
To: Stephanie Yazgi <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Regina Clemente <regina@bravenewfilms.org>
Cc: Robert Greenwald <robert@bravenewfilms.org>
Subject: Connecting

Regina, meet Stephanie - who's leading our charge on fellow mayors - and is reaching out via Hedge Funders versus Kindergarten Teachers...

From: Wolfe, Emma
To: Shorris, Anthony; Williams, Dominic; Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wiley, Maya; Snyder, Thomas; Fuleihan, Dean \(OMB\); "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" (jfdc@akpdmedia.com)
Cc: Fink, Avi; Schwartz, Regina
Subject: debbie downer
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 8:40:55 AM

I want to adjust my predictions even lower on a big good thing coming out of next week in albany. The more I reflect on my last two days in Albany, think about rent as fulcrum, and the 421-a play by the Governor, the less good I feel.

Lowering down to 30-40% that we come out with anything big and good here. Only good thing that means is potentially less harm on 3/4.

I hope dean both more optimistic than me and is right. But we should prepare for an "Albany basically gave up" narrative.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Politico on HRC college debt plan
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:02:42 AM

Clinton student loan reform plan has Warren stamp

In weekly calls and in meetings over the past few months, Hillary Clinton's policy team has been soliciting input from policy experts with ties to Sen. Elizabeth Warren, with the goal of making student loan reform the core of Clinton's economic agenda.

The effort to make college more accessible — a litmus test for liberals and key to attracting grass-roots support on the left — comes as the Clinton campaign finds itself under increasing pressure to accommodate progressive demands. Yet it also could provide Clinton with a signature domestic policy issue, similar to health care for Barack Obama in 2008. With a student debt crisis climbing upward of $1.2 trillion, Clinton's camp views the issue as one where the former secretary of state could drive the conversation and create a mandate for reform.

In one of the clearest signs of the importance the policy team — headed by senior adviser Ann O'Leary — is placing on the issue, student loan reform is expected to be one of the earliest policy rollouts after Clinton's campaign kickoff Saturday. The campaign is expected to unveil its student loan plans in detail in mid-July, multiple sources said.

To the great relief of restive progressives, Clinton's campaign has sought out policy experts with strong ties to Warren, who has crusaded on the issues of making college more affordable and refinancing student loans so that students get the same interest rates on federal loans as banks do on theirs.

Heather McGhee, president of the liberal think tank Demos, has discussed the issue directly with Hillary Clinton, sources said. McGhee's think tank is aligned with Warren, whose daughter, Amelia Warren Tyagi, serves as chairwoman of the board of Demos.

The Clinton campaign has also sought advice from Rohit Chopra, the top student loan official at the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, who was hired by Warren when she launched the agency. Chopra remains close with Warren, who recently endorsed him as her top candidate to replace Ben Lawskey as the next New York State superintendent of financial services, after his name was floated in the news media.

Other experts who have also been involved in discussions with O’Leary and her team, sources said, include Mark Huelsman, a senior policy analyst at Demos; economist Gene Sperling; James Kvaal, who was Obama’s policy director in the 2012 election; and longtime Clinton advisere Neera Tanden, president of the Center for American Progress.

None of the policy details have been finalized, and it’s still unclear how Clinton plans to pay for any of the proposals currently being discussed.

But on the table is a plan to support debt-free college — including in that reducing the cost of attendance. That goes further than either of Clinton’s Democratic opponents, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders or former Maryland Gov. Martin O’Malley, have discussed when addressing the issue of debt-free college. Sanders has used it to mean simply covering the cost of tuition, and O’Malley has focused more on capping student loan payments.

It’s not clear yet exactly what form Clinton’s debt-free college proposal will take — whether students will pay based on a percentage of their income or carry some obligation based on their ability to pay.

But covering the cost of attendance is appealing to the progressive policymakers advising Clinton. “The total cost of attendance is a more expansive view of the actual cost of higher education,” said Huelsman. “We and other groups have encouraged Clinton to include the cost of attendance as the definition of debt-free college. That would be a big deal.”

Also under discussion is allowing students to refinance their loans, an issue that Warren championed in a bill that was defeated last year by Republican opposition. “It would help a lot of middle-class families with student debt,” said Huelsman.

Outside experts are also pitching the campaign on a bill of rights for student loan carriers and risk-sharing for colleges, which means a school would be penalized if a student defaulted on loans. Both of those are currently under discussion with campaign officials.

“It doesn’t hurt to have had a lot of people in the more progressive side of the Democratic Party say we want this to be a key issue going into 2016,” Huelsman said. “It seems like they want to do something big on this. I’m extremely encouraged.”

O’Leary has invited a group of experts to an hours-long briefing at the Center for American Progress in Washington, D.C., on Thursday to discuss these issues.

A campaign spokesman declined to comment about the meeting or the policies under review.

But the Clinton campaign has made it clear that, even in its ramp-up phase, the issue is at the forefront of their planned agenda. “What voters are looking for in this election is someone who is going to be a champion for everyday people,” campaign manager Robby Mook said in a CNBC interview in May. “For young people, that’s debt-free college, that is finding that job after you graduate.”

Clinton herself has addressed it in her early forays on the campaign trail. “We have to deal with the indebtedness — to try to move toward making college as debt-free as possible,” she said last month in Iowa.

Clinton's most engaged moment so far during the roundtables she has participated in was with Bryce Smith, a 23-year-old bowling-alley owner in Iowa, who told her student loans were harming his ability to access credit for his small business. "I've never heard anyone so persuasively link it to the slowdown in business startups," Clinton told him.

She has also praised Obama's $60 billion community college plan, which would provide students with two years of free community college. Her plan, however, is expected to be more expansive and influence more institutions than just community colleges.

Authors:

View Comments

From: Williams, Dominic
To: John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: TPP materials
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:13:13 AM
Attachments: TPP Backgrounder.docx

From: John Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 2:10 PM
To: Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Anthony Shorris <ashorris@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: FW: TPP materials

This is mostly for Dom - but some good stuff in here - although it's dense (as one might expect from esteemed economists!)

In a word, I like the nuggets on patents/generic Rx drugs, ISDS undermining US regulations designed to protect consumers health & safety, and - of course - jobs both in manufacturing & high-skilled service industries leaving faster than they'd be replaced... Also, since MBDB loves stats, the economic impact of .4 percent - a "rounding error" as they say" - drives home the point that we should be getting a lot more out of a deal with 40% of the world's economy

From: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 10:31 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Aaron PickrellEmail <[REDACTED]>
Cc: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: TPP materials

John and Aaron,

Here are the two pieces I mentioned:

1. Prof. Stiglitz's letter to Congressional leaders: <http://www.rooseveltinstitute.org/joseph-stiglitz-and-trans-pacific-partnership-tp>
2. My (forthcoming) op-ed (attached).

I'll circle back to everyone with more intel on targets as well as some TPs for Sunday.

Great to be working together!

Best,

Adam

Adam S. Hersh, Ph.D.

Senior Economist, Roosevelt Institute

Visiting Scholar, Columbia University Initiative for Policy Dialogue

,博
斯福研究所, 家
哥 学, 行政策 ,客座学者

@adamshersh

On Thu, Jun 4, 2015 at 3:02 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Yes - please send letter and additional talking points - that would be great. We obviously don't want to personalize it at all - but we like to be prepared to vigorously defend our position.

How about a call around 5?

On Jun 4, 2015, at 3:00 PM, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Nice. Next steps? Should we get on the phone? Looping Marcus (whom you guys know) and Adam Hersh (senior economist I mentioned...this was his good idea actually). Let Adam know what you need for Sunday, and we always accept shout outs. Thanks. Stiglitz sent a letter to Congress (which Adam co-authored), which we can send to you right away. And Adam has some good TPs (not written down yet, however) to respond to Obama's mayors angle.

— — —
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Thu, Jun 4, 2015 at 2:43 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Hey Dave. Yes - definitely interested in talking... MBDB is doing Face the Nation on Sunday, and we'd be happy to trumpet some of your work on this there, too

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Thursday, June 4, 2015 at 1:46 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Aaron PickrellEmail <[REDACTED]>

Subject: BdB/RI on TPP/TPA

How's that for acronym overuse?

John, I spoke briefly w/ Aaron about an idea we had around responding to this:

Mayors leading Obama's charge on trade

http://www.politico.com/story/2015/06/mayors-leading-obamas-charge-on-trade-118608.html?hp=lc3_4

The article mentions BdB and his progressive agenda.

Gist of idea: A call w/ reporters, BdB, some Mayors who aren't pro-TPA/TPP & our resident expert (senior economist, Adam Hersh).

Let me know if you're interested and want to chat. Hope you're well.

Dave

PS- We should all also do a post-May 12 follow-up to update each other and see if there are ways to continue to coordinate.

— — —
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

The Trans-Pacific Partnership
Issues and Areas of Concern for New York City

The Trans-Pacific Partnership is a regulatory and investment treaty being negotiated by the Obama administration covering major economies of the Pacific Rim currently excluding China. It includes 12 nations and nearly 40% of the world's economy: United States, Australia, Brunei Darussalam, Chile, Canada, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Peru, Singapore, Vietnam. New York State exports approximately $23 billion per year in goods to TPP economies. Overall, exports in goods support approximately 280,000 jobs.

The treaty includes reciprocal tariff reductions, akin to a traditional free trade agreement, but also includes chapters on other non-tariff regulatory issues, including intellectual property, labor, financial services, and the environment. Relative tariff levels between the United States and the other participating nations are already relatively low, so there has been intense focus on the non-tariff aspects of the deal.

FACTS ABOUT PROCESS

The agreement is being negotiated in secret: The text of the agreement has not been made public, limiting the ability for citizens or advocacy groups to form opinions of the direction of the agreement. Instead, non-legislators have needed to rely on leaked drafts of some chapters, which have been criticized by the Obama administration as being incomplete and partial. Members of Congress and stakeholder groups convened by the administration, including some labor, environmental, and consumer advocacy representatives have seen confidential draft language.

The President is seeking “fast-track” authority over opposition and skepticism from Congressional Democrats, labor unions, and prominent environmental groups: The Administration is seeking Trade Promotion Authority (colloquially known as “fast track”) which allows the Administration to submit a negotiated agreement in total to be voted up or down by Congress with no opportunity for amendments and limited debate. This is the process that was used for NAFTA, WTO, and other high-profile trade agreements. Without an “up or down” vote, the administration argues that the deal would collapse under the weight of amendments. Harry Reid and Nancy Pelosi have opposed granting the President fast-track authority, but some Democrats and many Congressional Republicans are open to the idea.

BENEFITS OF A DEAL AS WE KNOW IT

While we do not know the final text, there are a number of key benefits that seem like likely outcomes of a successfully approved deal:

The agreement could increase opportunities for increased exports and domestic job creation, while expanding profit-making opportunities for U.S. companies abroad and potentially shift jobs or expand operations overseas. The White House has stated that approving this agreement would increase exports from the United States by approximately $120 billion per year, largely benefiting those companies and employees in export-oriented industries, and increase real incomes, in the form of lower prices and increased competition, by $77 billion per year. They point to increased opportunities for small and medium sized export-oriented U.S. businesses, reduced tariffs for goods and services from U.S. firms (including “financial services”), uniform regulations, and increased protections for the intellectual property from U.S. tech, medical, and media firms.

Would benefit large corporate entities with major footprints in New York City: The benefits of additional corporate investment opportunities in the Pacific Rim created by TPP skews towards some categories of companies who have major presence in New York City: particularly companies who own valuable IP in tech, media, and pharmaceuticals, and companies that are positioned to increase “trade in services” – particularly financial institutions, law firms, and consulting companies.

This agreement would set the pattern for other future trade deals, including with China and other nations across the world: The TPP is seen as an opportunity for the United States to take the lead in setting minimum standards for trade among major economic partners in the Pacific Rim, in an attempt to create “rules of the game” that these nations will play on American terms, rather than on the terms of Chinese interest, which may include less protection for labor, the environment, American security interests, and the interests of American corporations and workers. It is also seen as an important tool to knit together countries in the region to provide an economic counterweight to the rise of China. Roger Altman, former Treasury official, and Richard Haas of the Council on Foreign Relations, wrote that a failure of the TPP, “would leave the country poorer and the world less stable.”

CONCERNS ABOUT PROCEEDING WITH THE PENDING DEAL:

While we do not know the final text, there are a number of substantive concerns being raised by labor, environmental, and consumer protection advocates:

Treaty may include weak sections on environmental protection and labor rights and could expand fossil fuel exports, exacerbating climate change and reinforcing dependence on fossil fuels. The White House is planning on including broad protections against illegal trade in protected species, overfishing, and deforestation, but a leaked draft revealed a framework that lacked meaningful enforcement mechanisms and has drawn the skepticism of major environmental groups. In addition, while the White House insists they are including protections for labor rights, including rights to collective bargaining, limits on child labor, and acceptable working conditions (safe work environments and maximum hours limitations), there are parallel concerns that these clauses will not be adequately enforceable. There is also no chapter on currency manipulation, which is concerning to domestic labor unions as member countries can use artificial currency depreciation to undercut U.S. manufacturing companies.

The agreement would likely expand expansive controversial U.S. intellectual property laws internationally: A leaked version of the Intellectual Property rights chapter includes provisions that would expand U.S. intellectual property protections, including 80-year copyright protections and increased protections for patented brand-name pharmaceuticals. This would improve profit prospects for pharmaceutical companies, but may yield higher drug prices.

The agreement would likely expand the use of “Investor-State Dispute Settlement” giving investors and international corporations a trans-national forum to seek damages from governments for regulations that expropriate property: The White House has identified these tribunals as vital protection from expropriation for U.S. companies doing business abroad, but Elizabeth Warren and other critics criticize them as potentially allowing global corporations to receive damages, paid for by U.S. taxpayers, from regulations designed to protect consumers but which the company will argue unfairly restrict profits. It is important to note, however, that most companies will continue to challenge rules in U.S. courts in order to overturn the laws all together. ISDS tribunals are only able to award damages, and have never done so in any of the thirteen cases that went to judgment against the United States.

“Buy America” provisions could be challenged: The White House insists that there will be no change to current law, and that states and localities’ ability to impose local purchasing requirements will not be disrupted, but the AFL-CIO has claimed that this deal would undermine the ability of the United States to impose “Buy America” provisions.

Draft Recommended Position: Skeptical of TPP, Against Fast Track

We can’t really comment on the TPP itself because we haven’t seen it - which is a BIG PART OF THE PROBLEM. It’s been negotiated in secret, and that’s not acceptable. We need to see what’s in it.

We all saw what a disaster NAFTA was for America - 700K jobs lost, according to the Economic Policy Institute. We look with GREAT skepticism on a new trade deal that could lead to even more jobs being shipped away. From what I currently understand of the new trade accord, this looks like another bad deal for American workers, and we cannot accept it.

I oppose Fast Track because the American people should have a say in the process - through their elected representatives. If our Members of Congress are forced to vote YES OR NO on a massive trade deal without the power to offer amendments, we’re putting all the power on the side of the giant multinational corporations and Wall Street banks, and their armies of lobbyists.

We need trade deals that protect American jobs, workers’ rights, human rights, consumers, and our environment. We should not allow corporations even more power to subvert American laws designed to protect workers, consumers, and families.

Without the proper protections for America’s working families, these massive trade deals can lead to a global rush the bottom. That flies in the face of our effort to combat income inequality in the United States - handing more power to those at the top, and letting them write the rules to further enrich themselves at the expense of our struggling middle class, working class, and poor.

TPP Q & A

Concern: Second Coming of NAFTA We all saw what a disaster NAFTA was for America - 700K jobs lost, according to the Economic Policy Institute. We look with GREAT skepticism on a new trade deal that could lead to even more jobs being shipped away. From what I currently understand of the new trade accord, this looks like another bad deal for American workers, and we cannot accept it.

Obama Response: Some folks think we should just withdraw and not even try to engage in trade with these countries. I disagree. We have to make sure America writes the rules of the global economy. And we should do it today, while our economy is in the position of global strength. (Applause.) Because if we don't write the rules for trade around the world -- guess what -- China will. And they'll write those rules in a way that gives Chinese workers and Chinese businesses the upper hand, and locks American-made goods out. That's the choice we face. We're not going to be able to isolate ourselves from world markets. We got to be in there and compete. And the question is, are we going to make sure that the rules are fair so that our businesses and our workers are on a level playing field. Because when they are, we win every time. When the rules are fair, we win every time. And you know what, past trade agreements, it's true, didn't always reflect our values or didn't always do enough to protect American workers. But that's why we're designing a different kind of trade deal. And the truth is that companies that only care about low wages, they've already moved. They don't need new trade deals to move. They've already outsourced. They've already located in search of low wages.

DW: President is asking us to trust him, that this time will be different – it's hard to do without seeing and knowing how he'll do it.

Concern: Treaty may include weak sections on environmental protection and labor rights and could expand fossil fuel exports, exacerbating climate change and reinforcing dependence on fossil fuels. The White House is planning on including broad protections against illegal trade in protected species, overfishing, and deforestation, but a leaked draft revealed a framework that lacked meaningful enforcement mechanisms and has drawn the skepticism of major environmental groups. In addition, while the White House insists they are including protections for labor rights, including rights to collective bargaining, limits on child labor, and acceptable working conditions (safe work environments and maximum hours limitations), there are parallel concerns that these clauses will not be adequately enforceable. There is also no chapter on currency manipulation, which is concerning to domestic labor unions as member countries can use artificial currency depreciation to undercut U.S. manufacturing companies.

Obama Response: So when you look at a country like Vietnam, under this agreement, Vietnam would actually, for the first time, have to raise its labor standards. It would have to set a minimum wage. It would have to pass safe workplace laws to protect its workers. It would even have to protect workers' freedom to form unions -- for the very first time. And if Vietnam, or any of the other countries in this trade agreement don't meet these requirements, they'll face meaningful consequences. If you're a country that wants in to this agreement, you have to meet higher standards. If you don't, you're out. If you break the rules, there are actual repercussions.

DW: President is asking us to trust him, that this time will be different – it's hard to do without seeing and knowing how he'll do it. Many legislators who have seen the deal share this concern. Hard not to be skeptical in that context.

Concern: The agreement would likely expand the use of "Investor-State Dispute Settlement" giving investors and international corporations a trans-national forum to seek damages from governments for regulations that expropriate property: The White House has identified these tribunals as vital protection from expropriation for U.S. companies doing business abroad, but Elizabeth Warren and other critics criticize them as potentially allowing global corporations to receive damages, paid for by U.S. taxpayers, from regulations designed to protect consumers but which the company will argue unfairly restrict profits. It is important to note, however, that most companies will continue to challenge rules in U.S. courts in order to overturn the laws all together. ISDS tribunals are only able to award damages, and have never done so in any of the thirteen cases that went to judgment against the United States.

Obama Response: Number four -- critics warn that parts of this deal would undermine American regulation -- food safety, worker safety, even financial regulations. They're making this stuff up. (Applause.) This is just not true. No trade agreement is going to force us to change our laws. This agreement would make sure our companies aren't discriminated against in other countries. We already treat companies from other countries fairly here. But our companies don't always get treated fairly there. So sometimes they need to have some way to settle disputes where it's not subject to the whims of some government bureaucrat in that country. That's important. We want our businesses to succeed in selling over there because that's how our workers will get more jobs here in the United States.

DW: President is asking us to trust him, that this time will be different – it's hard to do without seeing and knowing how he'll do it. People who have seen the deal and don't reflexively distrust him are concerned – hard not to doubt in that context.

Elizabeth Warren's Q and A with Washington Post on TPP and Obama's critique

THE PLUM LINE: What's your response to the latest from President Obama?

SENATOR WARREN: The president said in his Nike speech that he's confident that when people read the agreement for themselves, that they'll see it's a great deal. But the president won't actually let people read the agreement for themselves. It's classified.

PLUM LINE: But don't you get 60 days to review it after the deal is finalized, with the authority to revoke fast track?

WARREN: The president has committed only to letting the public see this deal after Congress votes to authorize fast track. At that point it will be impossible for us to amend the agreement or to block any part of it without tanking the whole TPP. The TPP is basically done. If the president is so confident it's a good deal, he should declassify the text and let people see it before asking Congress to tie its hands on fixing it.

PLUM LINE: Doesn't the current framework allow for the revocation of fast track authority?

WARREN: The whole point about fast track is to grease the skids so that 51 votes will get it through...it takes a majority to get rid of [fast track].

PLUM LINE: The push-back from the administration is that the ISDS will be written in such a way that there is no authority to override Congressional [and other countries'] regulations.

WARREN: If the president has changed ISDS to solve the problem, then the text should be released so that legal experts can look at it.

PLUM LINE: Is there a scenario under which ISDS could be written the way he says it is being written?

WARREN: I've sat with many legal scholars to talk about this issue, and I have not seen a draft that would do what the president says he has already accomplished....Hillary Clinton in her book raised concerns about precisely this issue. Just last week, some of the top legal and economic minds in this country, including the president's mentor from Harvard, Laurence Tribe, and Nobel-prize-winning economist Joe Stiglitz, raised exactly this concern.

PLUM LINE: Is it theoretically possible to write ISDS in a way that precludes it from overriding regulation?

WARREN: It doesn't directly tell countries to repeal regulations. It imposes a financial penalty, which has caused countries to change their regulations...[ISDS mechanisms] never had the authority to override regulations. What they had was the authority to impose a monetary penalty directly against the government and its taxpayers. That's the point at which governments have backed up and said, "we can't afford this, we'll just change the law."

PLUM LINE: You can't envision even in theory a way to structure ISDS that would assuage your concerns?

WARREN: Once a group of independent arbiters, whose decisions cannot be appealed, can issue a money judgment of any size, then the ISDS problem arises....Here's what you could do. If corporations had to go through the same procedures that anyone else has to go through to get the trade deal enforced, then the problem wouldn't exist.

Now, if a labor union says, "Vietnam promised not to work people for a couple of dollars a day, and to raise working conditions, and then failed to do it," they have to get the U.S. government, through the trade rules, to go to Vietnam and prosecute the case. If corporations had to do the same thing, then it would be a level playing field...ISDS gives a special break to giant corporations, a break that nobody else gets.

PLUM LINE: What you're arguing is that six years of fast track, plus ISDS, could ultimately result in the weakening of financial regulations? You're not saying ISDS itself would do that?

WARREN: Absolutely right...six years means that whatever the Obama administration has committed to won't bind the next president. If that president wants to negotiate a trade deal that undercuts Dodd Frank, it will be very hard to stop it.

PLUM LINE: Couldn't a Republican president simply go straight at Dodd Frank? Would this be any easier than that?

WARREN: Absolutely. Because trade will be fast tracked for six years....A direct run at Dodd Frank potentially takes 60 votes in the U.S. Senate. But doing it through trade authority needs to be done with 51 votes.

PLUM LINE: But wouldn't that require a direct change to U.S. legislation?

WARREN: It's possible to punch holes in Dodd Frank without directly repealing it. For example, harmonization of the capital standards and leverage ratios could be adjusted to help the big banks without ever directly contradicting Dodd Frank. But the effects of Dodd Frank would be severely undercut.

PLUM LINE: Is there no scenario under which you ultimately support TPP?

WARREN: Trade deals matter...I am worried about key parts of this trade agreement. I would like to see changes. I believe in trade. I understand that we want to be a nation that trades, that trade creates many benefits for us. But only if done on terms that strengthen the American economy and American worker. ...the American family, because that's what this is really about.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: TPP materials
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:25:12 AM

tx

From: <Williams>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 9:13 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: TPP materials

From: John Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 2:10 PM
To: Dominic Williams <dwilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Anthony Shorris <ashorris@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: FW: TPP materials

This is mostly for Dom - but some good stuff in here - although it's dense (as one might expect from esteemed economists!)

In a word, I like the nuggets on patents/generic Rx drugs, ISDS undermining US regulations designed to protect consumers health & safety, and - of course - jobs both in manufacturing & high-skilled service industries leaving faster than they'd be replaced... Also, since MBDB loves stats, the economic impact of .4 percent - a "rounding error" as they say" - drives home the point that we should be getting a lot more out of a deal with 40% of the world's economy

From: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Friday, June 5, 2015 at 10:31 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Aaron PickrellEmail <[REDACTED]>
Cc: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: TPP materials

John and Aaron,

Here are the two pieces I mentioned:

1. Prof. Stiglitz's letter to Congressional leaders: <http://www.rooseveltinstitute.org/joseph-stiglitz-and-trans-pacific-partnership-tpp>
2. My (forthcoming) op-ed (attached).

I'll circle back to everyone with more intel on targets as well as some TPs for Sunday.

Great to be working together!

Best,

Adam

Adam S. Hersh, Ph.D.
Senior Economist, Roosevelt Institute
Visiting Scholar, Columbia University Initiative for Policy Dialogue

博
斯福研究所, 家
哥 学, 行政策 ,客座学者

@adamshersh

On Thu, Jun 4, 2015 at 3:02 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Yes - please send letter and additional talking points - that would be great. We obviously don't want to personalize it at all - but we like to be prepared to vigorously defend our position.

How about a call around 5?

On Jun 4, 2015, at 3:00 PM, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Nice. Next steps? Should we get on the phone? Looping Marcus (whom you guys know) and Adam Hersh (senior economist I mentioned...this was his good idea actually). Let Adam know what you need for Sunday, and we always accept shout outs. Thanks. Stiglitz sent a letter to Congress (which Adam co-authored), which we can send to you right away. And Adam has some good TPs (not written down yet, however) to respond to Obama's mayors angle.

— — —
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Thu, Jun 4, 2015 at 2:43 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Hey Dave. Yes - definitely interested in talking... MBDB is doing Face the Nation on Sunday, and we'd be happy to trumpet some of your work on this there, too

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Thursday, June 4, 2015 at 1:46 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Aaron PickrellEmail <[REDACTED]>

Subject: BdB/RI on TPP/TPA

How's that for acronym overuse?

John, I spoke briefly w/ Aaron about an idea we had around responding to this:

Mayors leading Obama's charge on trade

http://www.politico.com/story/2015/06/mayors-leading-obamas-charge-on-trade-118608.html?hp=lc3_4

The article mentions BdB and his progressive agenda.

Gist of idea: A call w/ reporters, BdB, some Mayors who aren't pro-TPA/TPP & our resident expert (senior economist, Adam Hersh).

Let me know if you're interested and want to chat. Hope you're well.

Dave

PS- We should all also do a post-May 12 follow-up to update each other and see if there are ways to continue to coordinate.

— — —
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

From: John Del Cecato
To: Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:10:24 AM
Attachments: Trade Presser Advisory June 2015.docx
Importance: High

Just talked to Reich (I think I woke him up!) - he said this is good to go

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow. [REDACTED]
[REDACTED] Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable. Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

PRESS CALL TODAY: De Blasio, Reich, Roosevelt Institute to Detail Key Economic Concerns About Trade Agreement in Advance of House Vote

New York—As the U.S. House of Representatives considers granting President Obama new trade promotion authority, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, former U.S. Labor Secretary and University of California at Berkeley Professor Robert Reich and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh will host a press call to highlight key economic concerns regarding the pending agreement. De Blasio will discuss how the agreement would impact New York City families while Reich and Hersh will detail how this deal is less about expanding free trade and more about rewriting global economic rules to favor corporations over America’s workers. Hersh will also detail how the proposed agreement fails to address China’s growing economic influence.

WHO: New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, Former U.S. Secretary of Labor and University of California at Berkeley Professor Robert Reich, and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh

WHAT: Press call addressing concerns with TPP

WHEN: Thursday, June 11, 2015, 12:30pm Eastern
Dial in: XXX-XXXX

From: John Del Cecato
To: Williams, Dominic
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:15:32 AM

interesting

From: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:12 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

FYI, looks like the House TPA bill will prohibit climate change action:

TPA CLIMATE PROVISION COULD CUT BOTH WAYS: The House trade package set for a vote this week includes GOP language that would prohibit the U.S. from attaching climate change commitments to trade deals - intensifying the opposition among environmentalists to President Barack Obama's top legislative priority.

What environmentalists called House Ways and Means Chairman Paul Ryan's late addition to the trade package's customs bill would alter the TPA bill to "ensure that trade agreements do not require changes to U.S. law or obligate the United States with respect to global warming or climate change."

The move could help lure conservatives in what both parties expect will be a close vote. But climate activists lambasted the change and urged their House allies to turn against the trade package.

Karthik Ganapathy, spokesman for the climate group 350.org, predicted that the addition would "alienate [Democratic] legislators like Reps. [Jared] Polis and [Earl] Blumenauer, whom conventional wisdom calls swing votes but who understand the threat of climate change." Read the amended TPA bill here: <http://1.usa.gov/1KWMq6z>

Adam S. Hersh, Ph.D.
Senior Economist, Roosevelt Institute
Visiting Scholar, Columbia University Initiative for Policy Dialogue

博
斯福研究所, 家
哥 学, 行政策, 客座学者

@adamshersh

On Thu, Jun 11, 2015 at 10:11 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Actually - we told Reich 1215pm - can we make that adjustment & blast out?

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow. [REDACTED]
[REDACTED] Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

--
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato
<jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable.

Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

--
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael; Hagelgans, Andrea; Williams, Dominic
Subject: <no subject>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:18:09 AM

Okay, we're a go.

Using Roosevelt Institute's call-in line. There's no speaker line/press line - so we'll all be in the same "room." BUT I confirmed that it will be "dings" and not "joining conference now" (which irritates MBDB).

So - 1200pm - MBDB calls Reich to get ducks in a row.

1215pm - MBDB, Reich, Adam Hersh on conf call with reporters.

We shouldn't let it go more than 30 minutes, I think.

Roosevelt will send advisory to their list of Capitol Hill reporters & liberal outlets.

City Hall should send to Room 9 folks, any other liberal outlets.

Will get you advisory as soon as I have updated.

I'll help staff him.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:19:00 AM
Attachments: Trade Presser Advisory June 2015.docx

Good to go

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:15 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Here is the update. We have a call in #. It is listed in there

MM

On Thu, Jun 11, 2015 at 10:12 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Also - do you have a call-in number - or do you need our folks to set that up?

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow. [REDACTED] (Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

— — —
Dave Palmer

VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato

<jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable. Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

Dave Palmer

VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

MEDIA ADVISORY FOR:
June 11, 2015

CONTACT: Marcus Mrowka
202-531-0689

PRESS CALL TODAY: De Blasio, Reich, Roosevelt Institute to Detail Key Economic Concerns About Trade Agreement in Advance of House Vote

New York—As the U.S. House of Representatives considers granting President Obama new trade promotion authority, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, former U.S. Labor Secretary and University of California at Berkeley Professor Robert Reich and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh will host a press call to highlight key economic concerns regarding the pending agreement. De Blasio will discuss how the agreement would impact working families while Reich and Hersh will detail how this deal is less about expanding free trade and more about rewriting global economic rules to favor corporations over America’s workers. Hersh will also detail how the proposed agreement fails to address China’s growing economic influence.

WHO: New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, Former U.S. Secretary of Labor and University of California at Berkeley Professor Robert Reich, and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh

WHAT: Press call addressing concerns with TPP

WHEN: Thursday, June 11, 2015, 12:15pm Eastern
Dial in: [REDACTED], Code: [REDACTED]

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:20:09 AM

Will do

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:14 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Pls alert da boss

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:09 AM
To: Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors

Just talked to Reich (I think I woke him up!) - he said this is good to go

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow. [REDACTED]
[REDACTED] Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

— — —
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato

<jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable. Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Confirmed - 12pm - conf call with Reich, Hersh, reporters
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:20:10 AM

We're on for:

12pm - you call Reich to do a little pre-call prep.

1215pm - you, Reich, and Adam Hersh do conference call with reporters.

I'll be with you at City Hall.

From: Carey, Michael
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:34:21 AM

Yup

Michael Paul Carey
City Hall
New York, New York

On Jun 11, 2015, at 10:33 AM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

MPC - u good?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:18 AM
To: Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors

Good to go

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:15 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Here is the update. We have a call in #. It is listed in there

MM

On Thu, Jun 11, 2015 at 10:12 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Also - do you have a call-in number - or do you need our folks to set that up?

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow [REDACTED]. Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

--
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable. Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

--
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--
Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

--
Marcus Mrowka

Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: B; John Del Ceccato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\)
Subject: Union endorsements
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:34:35 AM

AFT and AFSCME have met w candidates and are trying to move their respective endorsements prior to the AFLCIO July 29 EC mtg. IAM is also trying to move an endorsement. The AFL-CIO July 29 meeting may or may not take up a Federation endorsement.

Tom Snyder
Chief of Staff
Office of the Mayor
City Hall
New York, NY 10007
212-341-5050

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:35:39 AM

+EW for IGA awareness

This is the reich call on TPP discussed last nite

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:20 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Will do

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:14 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Pls alert da boss

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:09 AM
To: Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors

Just talked to Reich (I think I woke him up!) - he said this is good to go

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka

[REDACTED]

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato

<jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable. Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

From: Walzak, Phil
To: B; John Del Cecato; Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: FWIW
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:57:16 AM
Attachments: image002.png

Hillary Clinton, Amid Signs of Weakness, Plans Big Speech Laying Out Vision

By AMY CHOZICK JUNE 11, 2015

Photo

Hillary Rodham Clinton delivered a speech on voting rights last week in Houston. Credit: Ilana Panich-Linsman for The New York Times
Advertisement

Continue reading the main story

Continue reading the main story Share This Page

Email

Share

Tweet

Save

More

Continue reading the main story

Hillary Rodham Clinton, at a major outdoor rally planned for Saturday, will directly address concerns that have emerged in the early weeks of her candidacy, telling voters they can trust her to fight for the middle class and stressing that she cares about their problems, several people briefed on her plans say.

The speech, at an event shaping up to be the most ambitious public gathering undertaken by the campaign since Mrs. Clinton began her quest for the White House in April, will be shaped by symbolism as she seeks to make the case for why she should be president.

It will be held in New York City on an island named for Franklin D. Roosevelt, in the shadow of diverse middle-class neighborhoods, as Mrs. Clinton tries to evoke the legacy of the New Deal and lays out her vision for a federal government substantially engaged in lifting American families that feel economically insecure and increasingly left behind.

And she will channel her personal hero, Eleanor Roosevelt, in emphasizing women's and civil rights and her assertion that the Republican Party is out of touch with an increasingly diverse electorate. Her plans were described by people briefed on the speech who were not authorized to discuss it for attribution before the campaign officially released details.

Continue reading the main story

Who Is Running for President (and Who's Not)?

Mrs. Clinton has yet to put forth a clear rationale for her candidacy since announcing in a brief online video that she would run for the Democratic nomination.

“She has to articulate an authentic, compelling rationale for her candidacy, a cause and vision that is larger than her own ambitions,” said David Axelrod, a former senior adviser to President Obama.

But the large outdoor event, complete with a marching band and a space for an overflow crowd to watch the speech on giant monitors, must also counteract some signs of decline in Mrs. Clinton's personal appeal, with polls showing that a growing number of Americans do not trust her or feel she understands their lives.

A CNN poll released on June 2 showed that 57 percent of Americans thought that Mrs. Clinton was not honest and trustworthy, up from 49 percent in March, and that 47 percent of voters thought that Mrs. Clinton “cares about people like you,” down from 53 percent last July. Publicly, Mrs. Clinton's campaign aides have shrugged off such polls as evidence that voters distrust Washington and politics in general, but privately they are strategizing about how to reframe the conversation.

Rather than defend attacks on Mrs. Clinton's trustworthiness with regard to her use of a private email address at the State Department while she was secretary of state or foreign donations to her family's philanthropy, the campaign will seek to turn the trust issue on its head. "But who do you trust more to fight for you when they get in the Oval Office?" the Democratic strategist, Steve Elmendorf, said, repeating a line often used by Mrs. Clinton's senior advisers.

The campaign will try to turn another one of Mrs. Clinton's challenges, her tendency to incite strong and divisive reactions from people, to her advantage, emphasizing her perceived toughness. Her campaign chairman, John D. Podesta, often refers to Mrs. Clinton as a "tenacious fighter," a theme that will echo throughout the speech and her campaign.

Advertisement

Continue reading the main story

Mrs. Clinton's husband, former President Bill Clinton, and daughter, Chelsea, will appear with her at the rally, the first time the family will make a joint campaign appearance since Mrs. Clinton became a candidate.

Saturday's event will signal the end of the first phase of Mrs. Clinton's campaign, which mainly featured the former first lady holding round-table discussions with small groups of voters. Mrs. Clinton has said that she has learned a lot from those meetings, but they could come across as scripted and lacking in energy, especially as one rival, Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont, has already drawn large crowds. In the coming weeks, Mrs. Clinton will present more specific policies, speak to larger audiences and appear at town hall gatherings.

The staging of Saturday's event has been meticulous. Huma Abedin, a longtime aide to Mrs. Clinton and vice chairwoman of the campaign, and Greg Hale, an Arkansas-based consultant who has handled events for the Clintons for years, have taken a lead on planning. Jim Margolis, the media consultant behind both of Mr. Obama's inaugurations, and Mandy Grunwald, the longtime Clinton adviser who helped choreograph the appearance of Mr. Clinton and his family at the 1992 Democratic National Convention in New York, have also been involved.

For weeks, aides weighed various locations. Rather than choosing Iowa or New Hampshire, they settled on New York where Mrs. Clinton served as a senator and where a friendly crowd of supporters was simple enough to summon.

Looking at a map of New York, aides in the campaign's downtown Brooklyn headquarters settled on Roosevelt Island, the two-mile-by-800-foot strip of land on the East River between Manhattan and Queens. The event is open to the public and the campaign has received several thousand requests to attend, though the forecast of scattered thunderstorms could affect turnout.

The campaign angered some island residents after a community day for children had to be rescheduled. Others have grumbled that the national news media has, in terms of accessibility, compared Roosevelt Island to the nearby jail complex of Rikers Island. (Roosevelt Island is reachable via public transportation as well as a tram that has in the past stalled, leaving passengers suspended over the murky brown waters of the East River.)

But what the location lacks in logistical ease it makes up for in imagery.

Mrs. Clinton will deliver the speech at Four Freedoms Park, a memorial with a grassy tree-lined mall, named after the four tenets that Roosevelt presented in his 1941 State of the Union address: freedom of speech and worship, and freedom from want and fear.

She has defined her campaign thus far as taking on “four fights,” including strengthening the economy, helping families and communities, getting unaccountable money out of politics and protecting the country from foreign threats.

She is expected to evoke Roosevelt’s policies to reiterate her belief that government is needed to help lift wages, create jobs, make college and health care more affordable, and rebuild antiquated infrastructure.

“It’s important for the campaign to demonstrate the sense of energy and excitement,” said the Democratic pollster Geoff Garin. But what is more important, he said, “is laying out an agenda that makes people feel that Hillary Clinton will be a fighter for them.”

Mrs. Clinton’s message will reflect the Democratic Party’s leftward shift and stand in sharp contrast to the new covenant of personal responsibility that Mr. Clinton preached when he announced his candidacy in 1991 at the Old Statehouse in Little Rock, Ark.

“Government’s responsibility is to create more opportunity,” Mr. Clinton said in that speech. “The people’s responsibility is to make the most of it.”

Dan Schwerin, a policy adviser to Mrs. Clinton, is among the aides who have helped her shape her speech. Mrs. Clinton has already tested many of the main themes, including a populist critique of Wall Street excesses. She has called for equal pay for women, an overhaul of the criminal justice system and voting rights policies that would make the process easier for young people and minorities.

Framing all of this with the pomp and celebration of an official announcement speech can serve not just as an introduction for a candidate (or in Mrs. Clinton’s case, a reintroduction), but also as a crucial chance to counteract preconceived negatives more than a year before a general election.

In 2000, Vice President Al Gore’s campaign tried to reposition his wooden and cerebral demeanor as an advantage against the more affable George W. Bush.

“At the end of the day, with critical decisions impacting your family, do you want someone you know is smart or not?” was how Chris Lehane, an adviser to Mr. Gore, summed up the strategy. Or, in shorthand: “You date

Bush and marry Gore.”

With Chelsea nearby, Mrs. Clinton will remind voters about her years as a working mother, her experience working for the Children’s Defense Fund in the 1970s and her record of as an advocate for women and children as a first lady, senator and secretary of state. The campaign also has a biographical video in the works.

“You can become a caricature of how the press has determined who you are,” said Thomas R. Nides, a friend and adviser who worked for Mrs. Clinton at the State Department. “But the good news about Hillary Clinton is that she has a long history of who she is and what she stands for.”

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:59:33 AM

Jfdc

Lemme know when he is aware, then we will advise

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:14 AM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Carey, Michael; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Pls alert da boss

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:09 AM
To: Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors

Just talked to Reich (I think I woke him up!) - he said this is good to go

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato

<jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable. Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hinton, Karen; Grybauskas, Natalie; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Boeglin, Rosemary
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:15:39 AM
Attachments: image001.png

Thursday, June 11, 2015, 12:15pm Eastern

Dial in: [REDACTED] Code: [REDACTED]

From: <Hinton>, "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 11:12 AM
To: "Grybauskas, Natalie" <NGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Boeglin, Rosemary" <RBoeglin@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys — We need to the dial in number.

From: "Grybauskas, Natalie" <NGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thu, 11 Jun 2015 10:27:24 -0400
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Boeglin, Rosemary" <RBoeglin@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: Karen Hinton <khinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Update re TPP/Mayors

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

UPDATED PUBLIC SCHEDULE FOR MAYOR BILL DE BLASIO FOR THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 2015

 Updated: Event added *****

On Thursday, Mayor de Blasio will deliver remarks at a press conference hosted by the American Federation of Teachers and the United Federation of Teachers. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

After, the Mayor will join former U.S. Labor Secretary and University of California at Berkeley Professor Robert Reich and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh to host a press call to highlight key economic concerns regarding the pending agreement by the U.S. House of Representatives granting President Obama new trade promotion authority. The dial-in line for this press call is XXX-XXX-XXXX

In the evening, the Mayor will deliver remarks at the 2015 Jewish Heritage Reception. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

After, the Mayor will deliver remarks at the 2015 Puerto Rican Heritage Reception. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

Press Schedule

-
11:00 AM – Delivers Remarks at Press Conference Hosted by American Federation of Teachers and the United Federation of Teachers

UFT – 2nd Floor, Room A
52 Broadway
New York, NY 10004

Footage will be provided by NYC TV and will be available shortly following the event on Encompass Port CTY- 4205. Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

-
12:30 PM – Hosts Press Call with UC Berkeley Professor Robert Reich and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh

The dial-in line for this press call is XXX-XXX-XXXX.

-
Approximately 6:30 PM – Delivers Remarks at 2015 Jewish Heritage Reception

Museum of Jewish Heritage - Events Hall, 2nd Floor
36 Battery Place
New York, NY 10007

Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

-
Approximately 7:45 PM – Delivers Remarks at 2015 Puerto Rican Heritage Reception

New York County Supreme Courthouse
60 Centre Street
New York, NY 10007

Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

###

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:19 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Boeglin, Rosemary; Grybauskas, Natalie
Cc: Hinton, Karen
Subject: Fw: Update re TPP/Mayors
Importance: High

+++ pls send a revisked sked around for a look

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:09 AM
To: Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors

Just talked to Reich (I think I woke him up!) - he said this is good to go

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:
We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow. [REDACTED]
[REDACTED] Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable. Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

--
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Grybauskas, Natalie; "John Del Cecato"; Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea; Boeglin, Rosemary
Cc: Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: Update re TPP/Mayors
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:17:59 AM
Attachments: image001.png

PLS HOLD

We will let you know Natalie

From: Grybauskas, Natalie
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:17 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Boeglin, Rosemary
Subject: RE: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hang on I see 1215 on JDC's email – is it 12:15 or 12:30

From: Grybauskas, Natalie
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:17 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Boeglin, Rosemary
Subject: RE: Update re TPP/Mayors

Thx JDC. PW, pls approve language and I can get out the door:

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

UPDATED PUBLIC SCHEDULE FOR MAYOR BILL DE BLASIO FOR THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 2015

 Updated: Event added *****

On Thursday, Mayor de Blasio will deliver remarks at a press conference hosted by the American Federation of Teachers and the United Federation of Teachers. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

After, the Mayor will join former U.S. Labor Secretary and University of California at Berkeley Professor Robert Reich and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh to host a press call to highlight key economic concerns regarding the pending agreement by the U.S. House of Representatives granting President Obama new trade promotion authority. The dial-in line for this press call is 408-650-3131; the access code is 643-704-605.

In the evening, the Mayor will deliver remarks at the 2015 Jewish Heritage Reception. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

After, the Mayor will deliver remarks at the 2015 Puerto Rican Heritage Reception. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

Press Schedule

-
11:00 AM – Delivers Remarks at Press Conference Hosted by American Federation of Teachers and the United Federation of Teachers

UFT – 2nd Floor, Room A

52 Broadway

New York, NY 10004

Footage will be provided by NYC TV and will be available shortly following the event on Encompass Port CTY- 4205. Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

-
12:30 PM – Hosts Press Call with UC Berkeley Professor Robert Reich and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh

The dial-in line for this press call is 408-650-3131; the access code is 643-704-605.

-
Approximately 6:30 PM – Delivers Remarks at 2015 Jewish Heritage Reception

Museum of Jewish Heritage - Events Hall, 2nd Floor

36 Battery Place

New York, NY 10007

Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

-
Approximately 7:45 PM – Delivers Remarks at 2015 Puerto Rican Heritage Reception

New York County Supreme Courthouse

60 Centre Street

New York, NY 10007

Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

###

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]

Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:15 AM

To: Hinton, Karen; Grybauskas, Natalie; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Boeglin, Rosemary

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Thursday, June 11, 2015, 12:15pm Eastern

Dial in: 408-650-3131, Code: 643-704-605

From: <Hinton>, "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 11:12 AM

To: "Grybauskas, Natalie" <NGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil"

<PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Boeglin, Rosemary" <RBoeglin@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys — We need to the dial in number.

From: "Grybauskas, Natalie" <NGrybauskas@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Thu, 11 Jun 2015 10:27:24 -0400

To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Boeglin, Rosemary" <RBoeglin@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Cc: Karen Hinton <khinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: RE: Update re TPP/Mayors

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

UPDATED PUBLIC SCHEDULE FOR MAYOR BILL DE BLASIO FOR THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 2015

* Updated: Event added ****

On Thursday, Mayor de Blasio will deliver remarks at a press conference hosted by the American Federation of Teachers and the United Federation of Teachers. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

After, the Mayor will join former U.S. Labor Secretary and University of California at Berkeley Professor Robert Reich and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh to host a press call to highlight key economic concerns regarding the pending agreement by the U.S. House of Representatives granting President Obama new trade promotion authority. The dial-in line for this press call is XXX-XXX-XXXX

In the evening, the Mayor will deliver remarks at the 2015 Jewish Heritage Reception. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

After, the Mayor will deliver remarks at the 2015 Puerto Rican Heritage Reception. This event is open press, and there will be no Q-and-A.

Press Schedule

11:00 AM – Delivers Remarks at Press Conference Hosted by American Federation of Teachers and the United Federation of Teachers

UFT – 2nd Floor, Room A
52 Broadway
New York, NY 10004

Footage will be provided by NYC TV and will be available shortly following the event on Encompass Port CTY- 4205. Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

12:30 PM – Hosts Press Call with UC Berkeley Professor Robert Reich and Roosevelt Institute Senior Economist Adam Hersh

The dial-in line for this press call is XXX-XXX-XXXX.

Approximately 6:30 PM – Delivers Remarks at 2015 Jewish Heritage Reception

Museum of Jewish Heritage - Events Hall, 2nd Floor
36 Battery Place
New York, NY 10007

Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

Approximately 7:45 PM – Delivers Remarks at 2015 Puerto Rican Heritage Reception

New York County Supreme Courthouse
60 Centre Street
New York, NY 10007

Official photos will be available at flickr.com/nycmayoroffice shortly following the event.

###

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:19 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Boeglin, Rosemary; Grybauskas, Natalie
Cc: Hinton, Karen
Subject: Fw: Update re TPP/Mayors
Importance: High

+++ pls send a revisked sked around for a look

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:09 AM
To: Carey, Michael; Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: FW: Update re TPP/Mayors

Just talked to Reich (I think I woke him up!) - he said this is good to go

From: Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 10:08 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Hi guys- Seems like the window is closing on this happening at 1215.

Here's a draft advisory in case it happens for another time

MM

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 10:02 PM, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:
We can send an advisory out in the am

Marcus Mrowka
[REDACTED]

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:59 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

We are aiming for 1215p tomorrow - waiting to make sure that works for Reich

On Jun 10, 2015, at 6:06 PM, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org> wrote:

Works for me. Let me know if you want to do a call beforehand to coordinate.

-Adam

On Jun 11, 2015 12:05 AM, "John Del Cecato" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
Good news - Reich is game.. Trying to figure out a good time (remember he's in California).. i'm gonna talk to MBDB scheduler & try to get noon or 1pm-ish - but would need your help in advising for the press

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 4:19 PM

To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>

Cc: Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>

Subject: Re: Update re TPP/Mayors

Guys, I'm off tomorrow [REDACTED]
[REDACTED] Can you believe it?) I wanted to let you know that I won't be in, so you all know to coordinate with each other on this. I'm guessing you won't need me at this point, but if you do, call my cell. Hopefully, I'll be on the back 9 with a cigar. (I moved to the burbs 2 years ago and figured I had to try out this golf thing.)

I'll keep an eye out on email for any relevant info and fwd to you all. I've not heard anything on the Rules committee meeting yet -- will email her shortly and copy Marcus & Adam so they can keep an eye on the intel.

Dave

--
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

On Wed, Jun 10, 2015 at 1:40 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
Roger all of that... Today looking less likely - but still possible - most likely tomorrow AM tho

From: David Palmer <dpalmer@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 2015 at 1:27 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Adam Hersh <ahersh@rooseveltinstitute.org>, Marcus Mrowka <mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org>
Subject: Update re TPP/Mayors

John, Adam, Marcus:

Communicating w/ each of you. Consolidating.

- John says they reached out to Reich and are waiting to hear back. John asked if tomorrow AM was too late.

- I spoke w/ AFL. They like this idea, and think it would be valuable. Vote could come Friday, but could come earlier. There is a push to make it an emergency bill to get it over with and take the pressure off folks. Rules committee mtg at 3 and more will be known after that. In general, AFL says tomorrow AM could work and would be helpful.

- AFL also said Mayor of Pittsburgh sent a good letter...not sure he's on your list, John.

- Adam & Marcus, I'm assuming from John's last email to me that this will not happen today, but stay tuned. John, let me know if that's incorrect.

- John: we do have a cap hill media trade list. And Adam can do a call -- as the expert for questions, for example. I think I already shared that. Please keep us all looped.

Dave

--
Dave Palmer
VP & Nat'l Director, Four Freedoms Center
Roosevelt Institute
c: 917.482.7251

--

Marcus Mrowka
Strategic Communications Director
Roosevelt Institute
570 Lexington Ave, 5th floor
New York, NY 10022
Mobile: 202-531-0689
Twitter: @MarcusMrowka
mmrowka@rooseveltinstitute.org

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: RE: Jfdc - you have materials/tps/etc
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:18:12 AM

If Roosevelt already advised it then I think we need to

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:03 AM
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: Carey, Michael; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Jfdc - you have materials/tps/etc

I'm arriving CH

> On Jun 11, 2015, at 11:01 AM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>
> Have you discussed w him today JFDC?

> -----Original Message-----

> From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
> Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:00 AM
> To: Walzak, Phil
> Cc: Carey, Michael; Hagelgans, Andrea
> Subject: Re: Jfdc - you have materials/tps/etc

> I think we should both staff.

> It feels rushed to me too! But vote coming tomorrow

>> On Jun 11, 2015, at 10:58 AM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>> We doing this @ 1215 or 1230?
>> This feels VERY rushed to me - BdB is good and ready to go?

>> -----Original Message-----

>> From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
>> Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:36 AM
>> To: Carey, Michael
>> Cc: Walzak, Phil
>> Subject: Re: Jfdc - you have materials/tps/etc

>>

>> Two other things he should check out if he has a few minutes:
>>
>> Elizabeth Warren op-ed:
>> http://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/kill-the-dispute-settlement-lan-guage-in-the-trans-pacific-partnership/2015/02/25/ec7705a2-bd1e-11e4-b274-e5209a3bc9a9_story.html
>>
>> Robert Reich's widely-viewed video on TPP:
>> https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3O_Sbbeqfdw
>>
>>
>>
>>> On 6/11/15, 9:30 AM, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> Our deadline is 1030 am. We need to know by then.
>>>
>>> Michael Paul Carey
>>> City Hall
>>> New York, New York
>>>
>>>> On Jun 11, 2015, at 9:27 AM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> Here are three documents - which may be too much for the boss.
>>>>
>>>> 1. TPP backgrounder (with pluses & minuses) from Dom.
>>>> 2. Talking points on TPP (written by Roosevelt Institute, edited >>>> by JDC).
>>>> 3. Op-ed that the senior economist at Roosevelt will be publishing
>>>> (Adam Hersh).
>>>>
>>>> FYI - I haven't heard back from Reich or his person yet on whether >>>> they can actually do a 12pm primer & a 1215pm press call... Will >>>> ping them again at 10am (7am California time)
>>>>
>>>>> On 6/11/15, 9:12 AM, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>> For reich
>>>>>
>>>>> <TPP Backgrounder.docx>
>>>>> <TPP Talking Points (Roosevelt).docx> <No on TPP_Adam >>>>> Hersh_Roosevelt InstituteFINAL[3].docx>
>>

From: Walzak, Phil
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; "John Del Cecato"; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: FW: have you all
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:30:11 AM

Im probing for more....dont like clashing w WH...

From: Burns, Alex [mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:25 AM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: have you all

Gotten any bitchiness from the WH about the mayor's role on trade?

--

Alexander Burns
New York Times
Desk: (212) 556-4420
Cell: (917) 838-2039

From: John Del Cecato
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Williams, Dominic
Subject: <no subject>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:43:30 AM
Attachments: CONFERENCE CALL WITH REPORTERS.docx

CONFERENCE CALL WITH REPORTERS
TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP/FAST TRACK AUTHORITY

CONTEXT: Vote on Fast Tracking TPP could happen in the House as soon as tomorrow. It's very unclear whether it will pass or fail – both sides claim momentum.

MAIN MESSAGE:

When we unveiled The Progressive Agenda a month ago, one of our planks spoke to the need to stand up to trade deals that handed corporations more power at the expense of American workers, jobs, and the environment.

Fast-tracking TPP exemplifies this problem.

- While we don't have all the details of this trade deal – we DO have a point of reference – NAFTA.
- NAFTA hit our economy hard. Up to a million jobs lost, according to Public Citizen. Our already hurting manufacturing sector further decimated.
- So from what we DO know about this current trade deal – we're deeply concerned.
- U.S. government regulations designed to protect workers and consumers could be undermined – with an international tribunal of private attorneys (ISDS) that can order compensation for “lost profits” as a result of a US regulation. Regulations that protect consumers, workers, the environment.
- The pharmaceutical would get stronger patents – which means cheaper generic drugs would be delayed from coming into the market.
- The trade deal would cover 40% of the world's economy. But what would it do for the U.S.?
- Even the pro-TPP folks say it would boost the economy by 0.4 percent. As Adam Hersh has said, that's a rounding error!
- We want to increase trade – but do it in the RIGHT way. Fast Tracking TPP fails that test.

Q: What should Hillary do?

A: In my view, she should oppose it. It hands more power to corporations, and puts regulations that protect workers, consumers, and the environment at risk.

Q: But her husband passed NAFTA. Isn't that a rebuke of him?

A: We have to learn from history. NAFTA was projected to create hundreds of thousands of jobs. But we know that it didn't happen – and, in fact, up to a million jobs were LOST due to NAFTA. We can't let that happen again.

Q: Bernie Sanders and Martin O'Malley are with YOU on trade. Hillary has been silent. Why don't you endorse them.

A: I'm looking for an economic vision that addresses income inequality from all of the candidates. But there will be time to talk about individual candidates for president at another time.

Q: The president is extremely committed to this. Don't you trust him to negotiate good deals for American workers?

A: Look, it's not a matter of trust. The president and I just disagree on this issue. I believe that handing new power to corporations – while putting regulations that protect workers and consumers and the environment at risk – is just the wrong way to go.

Q: But the president says that this agreement has more “teeth” in each of those areas. Doesn't that speak to you?

A: Again, I'm not privy to all the details of the agreement – but from what I have read & discussed with experts like those on the phone with me, I believe this is a trade deal that doesn't measure up.

Q: The White House has been touting a lot of pro-trade mayors. Are you not kindred with them?

A: We have a number of mayors who are signers on TPP. I think there are plenty of mayors out there who have real reservations about trade deals like this. But I'm only speaking for myself today.

Mayors

Nan Whaley (Dayton)

Ed Murray (Seattle)

Eric Garcetti (LA)

Steve Adler (Austin)

Marty Walsh (Boston)

Greg Stanton (Phoenix)

Stephanie Rawlings-Blake (Baltimore)

Pedro Segarra (Hartford)

From: Wolfe, Emma
To: Jon Fromowitz
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Blumm, Kate
Subject: Re: low wage worker/minimum wage Wage Board event
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:52:07 AM

Looped on personal email with organizers

On Jun 11, 2015, at 11:44 AM, Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Sounds good - will do
On Jun 11, 2015, at 11:38 AM, Hagelgans, Andrea
<AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

It's a wage board hearing on Monday. Audience will be packed with union folks and community organizers

Main messages along TPA/activisty lines—he's spoken about this in TPA context quite a bit

- 1) Need to get $15 minimum across industries.
- 2) Fast food workers organizing have led the way. Great to see the energy
- 3) Need to do more

Copying Emma in case I'm missing anything. Fromo, whatever you pull together we can take from there tonight.

Thanks
Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Walzak, Phil
To: "John Del Cecato"; Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Leopold, Elana; Ponet, Maibe; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: FW: Sanders
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 12:14:41 PM

+++Comms, Front Office

Also this –

Sanders Says He'll Reach Out to De Blasio for Endorsement

JP UPDATES - Jacob Kornbluh - 11:35 am

<http://jpupdates.com/2015/06/11/berniesanders-says-hell-reach-out-to-billdeblasio-for-endorsement/>

Senator Bernie Sanders said Thursday he intends to reach out to NYC Mayor Bill de Blasio, after the liberal Democrat revealed he will not attend Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign kickoff rally on Roosevelt Island Saturday.

Speaking to reporters Wednesday afternoon, de Blasio, a friend and former campaign manager for Hillary Clinton, confirmed earlier reports that he will not attend the rally, since he is still "waiting to hear her larger vision to addressing income inequality."

At the same time, de Blasio heaped praise on Sanders, who is challenging Hillary for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2016.

"I've always liked what I heard from Bernie Sanders," he said. "I think Bernie Sanders is a great senator, is a great voice for a fair society and a fair economy."

Sanders says he plan on phoning de Blasio and asking him for an endorsement. "I'd love to have the endorsement of as many public figures as we can," the Jewish self-described socialist presidential hopeful told reporters after attending a breakfast in DC.

From: Geoff Earle [mailto:gearle@nypost.com]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 12:11 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Sanders

Hey Phil.

Bernie Sanders mentioned this AM that he planned to call Mayor de Blasio to thank him for his kind words. Do you know if that has happened yet, and would you mind keeping me apprised when it does?

Thanks,

Geoff

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: RE: What are our...
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:21:58 PM

I'll have a transcripts of his remarks at the top shortly.

Full transcript of entire call will take a bit longer.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:21 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: What are our...

Here were his talking points - but he mostly rified

When we unveiled The Progressive Agenda a month ago, one of our planks spoke to the need to stand up to trade deals that handed corporations more power at the expense of American workers, jobs, and the environment.

Fast-tracking TPP exemplifies this problem.

- While we don't have all the details of this trade deal – we DO have a point of reference – NAFTA.
- NAFTA hit our economy hard. Up to a million jobs lost, according to Public Citizen. Our already hurting manufacturing sector further decimated.
- So from what we DO know about this current trade deal – we're deeply concerned.
- U.S. government regulations designed to protect workers and consumers could be undermined – with an international tribunal of private attorneys (ISDS) that can order compensation for "lost profits" as a result of a US regulation. Regulations that protect consumers, workers, the environment.
- The pharmaceutical would get stronger patents – which means cheaper generic drugs would be delayed from coming into the market.
- The trade deal would cover 40% of the world's economy. But what would it do for the U.S.?
- Even the pro-TPP folks say it would boost the economy by 0.4 percent. As Adam Hersh has said, that's a rounding error!

- We want to increase trade – but do it in the RIGHT way. Fast Tracking TPP fails that test.

From: <Gunaratna>, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 12:11 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: What are our...

Can someone pass along his prepared remarks/talking points?

Thanks!

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 12:11 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: What are our...

He will be on whole time

On Jun 11, 2015, at 11:50 AM, Gunaratna, Mahen <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Got it.

What's format – is he going to be on the call for the entire duration or is he hopping on for a specific portion?

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:50 AM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; 'John Del Cecato'; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Subject: RE: What are our...

We should have a transcript

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:49 AM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: What are our...

...transcript needs for the TPP press call?

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis

Mayor's Press Office | City Hall

mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov

(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Tpa
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:45:10 PM

No. She didn't.

She endorsed the movement in spirit during her call-in to the fast food workers conference over the weekend, but didn't go so far as to say she endorsed $15/hour.

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:45 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: Tpa

She already called for $15 - no?

On 6/11/15, 1:43 PM, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>FYI, looks like the wage growth policy speech, which the WSJ first >reported on, is coming in a matter of weeks, not months, per a campaign >sponsored. That's likely when she'll specify a minimum wage figure:
>
><http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/wonkblog/wp/2015/06/10/how-the-15-m> >ini-mum-wage-could-become-a-new-dividing-line-in-the-2016-primary/
>
>"In the coming weeks, she will lay out her specific plans for >increasing wages."

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Snyder, Thomas
>Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 9:02 PM
>To: John Del Cecato
>Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
>Subject: Re: Tpa

>Either she says enough and he endorses or not enough and he evades - >bringing on all sorts of controversy. May want to avoid TV

>Sent from my iPhone

>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:53 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>>> We need to ask him what his feeling is about going on a show this >>>weekend. We can jointly recommend him not doing one, but he will not >>>be happy if we pocket veto

>>>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:22 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea
>>>><AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>>> I am getting daily incoming from Sunday shows about mayor for this >>>>coming Sunday. When are we meeting with him about this weekend's plan?
>>>>We will need to be monitoring the speech and reading response and >>>>determining how we are maximizing for the issues/tpa.

From: Boeglin, Rosemary
To: Gunaratna, Mahen; Transcripts; "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:55:19 PM
Attachments: image001.png

Blast?

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:55 PM
To: Transcripts; 'John Del Cecato'
Subject: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: June 11, 2015
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I thank everyone for joining with us today.

Obviously, people are – all over the country – very focused today on what action could happen in the House of Representatives on the trade bill. And I think we can safely say the situation is gray in terms of what the outcome will be. But I want to talk about – I know my colleagues on the call want to talk about the underlying issues here. And I think for many of us, there's deep concern that this country is about to make a mistake we've made before. And it was certainly – looking back at the history of NAFTA, we have an exceedingly cautionary history we have to learn from and not repeat.

I've been working with progressives all over the country who feel this same deep concern. A number us unveiled a document back on May 12th – the Progressive Agenda. And you can see at progressiveagenda.us. And one of the planks in that 15-point agenda was the need to make sure we don't have the kind of trade deals we've had in the past that undermine the jobs of American workers and didn't rein in the power of multi-national corporations. And I think the history of NAFTA is profoundly troubling. We saw how it hurt our economy. There are estimates that as many as a million jobs that were lost as a result of NAFTA. Obviously, it had a hugely negative impact on manufacturing in this country. And there's too many realities around the current trade deal that are reminiscent of NAFTA and there's still too much we don't know. A lot of us are deeply concerned about the regulatory structures created in the trade proposal that – certainly from my perspective and I think a lot of other progressives – will undermine the power of government regulators in relationship to corporate power. There's real concerns on a consumer-level. The patent strengthening for the pharmaceutical industry – very well could have the effect of making it harder for everyday people to get cheaper generic drugs that they need. There's a lot in this deal that appears to reinforce the status quo that is not working for the American people. And even the more generous estimates of the positive impact it could have for our economy don't seem overly impressive. So I think, for a lot of us, we see profound danger in this deal and a lot of bad history and very little about it that is encouraging that any lessons had been learned from the past.

So, trade is obviously a crucial part of our lives and our economy but it has to be done the right way. And what we've seen with fast track – what we've seen with the trade deal, as outlined so far, is clearly not the right way. So that's my opening. I want to see now – Bob Reich has joined us. Okay, it seems like a no, so we'll call again to find out – I think we have him on the line. But let's go to Adam Hirsh – the senior economist at the Roosevelt Institute – for him to offer his cause.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: Boeglin, Rosemary; Gunaratna, Mahen; Transcripts
Subject: Re: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 2:00:51 PM
Attachments: image001.png

Hersh not Hirsh -but I would say yes - thanks for quick turnaround!

From: <Boeglin>, Rosemary <RBoeglin@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 1:55 PM
To: "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Transcripts <Transcripts@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE

Blast?

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:55 PM
To: Transcripts; 'John Del Cecato'
Subject: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: June 11, 2015
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I thank everyone for joining with us today.

Obviously, people are – all over the country – very focused today on what action could happen in the House of Representatives on the trade bill. And I think we can safely say the situation is gray in terms of what the outcome will be. But I want to talk about – I know my colleagues on the call want to talk about the underlying issues here. And I think for many of us, there's deep concern that this country is about to make a mistake we've made before. And it was certainly – looking back at the history of NAFTA, we have an exceedingly cautionary history we have to learn from and not repeat.

I've been working with progressives all over the country who feel this same deep concern. A number of us unveiled a document back on May 12th – the Progressive Agenda. And you can see at progressiveagenda.us. And one of the planks in that 15-point agenda was the need to make sure we don't have the kind of trade deals we've had in the past that undermine the jobs of American workers and didn't rein in the power of multi-national corporations. And I think the history of NAFTA is profoundly troubling. We saw how it hurt our economy. There are estimates that as many as a million jobs that were lost as a result of NAFTA. Obviously, it had a hugely negative impact on manufacturing in this country. And there's too many realities around the current trade deal that are reminiscent of NAFTA and there's still too much we don't know. A lot of us are deeply concerned about the regulatory structures created in the trade proposal that – certainly from my perspective and I think a lot of other progressives – will undermine the power of government regulators in relationship to corporate power. There's real concerns on a consumer-level. The patent strengthening for the pharmaceutical industry – very well could have the effect of making it harder for everyday people to get cheaper generic drugs that they need. There's a lot in this deal that appears to reinforce the status quo that is not working for the American people. And even the more generous estimates of the positive impact it could have for our economy don't seem overly impressive. So I think, for a lot of us, we see profound danger in this deal and a lot of bad history and very little about it that is encouraging that any lessons had been learned from the past.

So, trade is obviously a crucial part of our lives and our economy but it has to be done the right way. And what we've seen with fast track – what we've seen with the trade deal, as outlined so far, is clearly not the right way. So that's my opening. I want to see now – Bob Reich has joined us. Okay, it seems like a no, so we'll call again to find out – I think we have him on the line. But let's go to Adam Hirsh – the senior economist at the Roosevelt Institute – for him to offer his cause.

###

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: Observer
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 2:02:21 PM

So solid for the cause! I have no clue what's gonna happen, but fingers crossed that it fails & maybe we get a tiny tiny bit of credit

From: <Walzak>, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 1:52 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Dominic Williams <DWilliams@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Observer

HAHA
doh

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:51 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Williams, Dominic; Wolfe, Emma Subject: Observer

Bill Clinton's Labor Secretary Urges Hillary Clinton to Oppose TPP at Kickoff

Former U.S. Labor Secretary Robert Reich testifies before the Joint Economic Committee January 16, 2014 in Washington, DC. (Photo: Win McNamee/Getty Images)

Former Secretary of Labor Robert Reich, who served under President Bill Clinton and oversaw the roll-out of the North American Free Trade Agreement, joined Mayor Bill de Blasio today in urging Hillary Clinton to use her presidential campaign kickoff speech to oppose the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade pact—a deal Mr. Reich deemed “NAFTA on steroids.”

“I would hope that she very clearly, specifically opposes the Trans-Pacific Partnership,” Mr. Reich said of the former secretary of state in a media conference call this afternoon.

Mr. de Blasio, Ms. Clinton’s former Senate campaign manager who has yet to offer up an endorsement in the Democratic primary, also urged Ms. Clinton to come out against the trade deal, which unions and progressive politicians have derided as bad for American workers.

“I’d like to see a very clear statement that this trade deal should be opposed and should be stopped,” Mr. de Blasio said.

While he knew what he’d like to hear, Mr. de Blasio has said he will not attend Ms. Clinton’s campaign kick-off, which is being held Saturday just down the East River from Gracie Mansion on Roosevelt Island. Today, he recalled her speaking on trade issues in 2008 in a way that “resonated” in states like Ohio, which he visited to campaign for her in that year.

“I think it’s very important she speak up make clear that there will be no more NAFTAs,” Mr. de Blasio said. “People all over the country, at the grassroots, certainly Democrats all over the country, are looking to her for leadership, and certainly her strong voice would make a very big difference.”

Mr. Reich noted it would not be the first time Ms. Clinton, as a candidate, has taken a position that differed from the policies of her husband, former President Bill Clinton. He noted her recent push to end mass incarceration.

“I hope that she does the same with the TPP, relative to NAFTA,” Mr. Reich said.

Mr. Reich was charged with rolling out NAFTA under Mr. Clinton and, like many who oppose the TPP, said the 1990s trade pact had delivered poor results for American workers.

“Once the dust cleared, we did find that a lot of manufacturing jobs left the U.S., they first went to Mexico and then they promptly went to Southeast Asia,” Mr. Reich said.

He was also charged with enforcing the trade deal’s guidelines for better labor conditions in other countries, but said it proved “extraordinarily difficult to do,” something he suspected would hold true for the TPP as well.

Mr. Reich and Mr. de Blasio bashed the idea of Congress holding a “fast-track” up or down vote on the trade pact, very little of which has been made public. The deal has pitted many in the left wing of the Democratic party against President Barack Obama, who backs the deal.

“To have this large a trade agreement or investment agreement negotiated in secret and fast tracked through Congress without any opportunity for amendment, when most of America has no access to this trade agreement at all—what I know about it was leaked through Wikileaks—it seems to me makes a mockery of democracy,” Mr. Reich said.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: NY Observer
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 2:06:11 PM

Good stuff for advancing The Progressive Agenda, helping pressure TPP to go down (especially when the vote count is so close), giving HRC a nudge to do the right thing... And it's not all about us! Hoping the other stories read the same..

Bill Clinton's Labor Secretary Urges Hillary Clinton to Oppose TPP at Kickoff

Former U.S. Labor Secretary Robert Reich testifies before the Joint Economic Committee January 16, 2014 in Washington, DC. (Photo: Win McNamee/Getty Images)

Former Secretary of Labor Robert Reich, who served under President Bill Clinton and oversaw the roll-out of the North American Free Trade Agreement, joined Mayor Bill de Blasio today in urging Hillary Clinton to use her presidential campaign kickoff speech to oppose the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade pact—a deal Mr. Reich deemed “NAFTA on steroids.”

“I would hope that she very clearly, specifically opposes the Trans-Pacific Partnership,” Mr. Reich said of the former secretary of state in a media conference call this afternoon.

Mr. de Blasio, Ms. Clinton's former Senate campaign manager who has yet to offer up an endorsement in the Democratic primary, also urged Ms. Clinton to come out against the trade deal, which unions and progressive politicians have derided as bad for American workers.

“I'd like to see a very clear statement that this trade deal should be opposed and should be stopped,” Mr. de Blasio said.

While he knew what he'd like to hear, Mr. de Blasio has said he will not attend Ms. Clinton's campaign kick-off, which is being held Saturday just down the East River from Gracie Mansion on Roosevelt Island. Today, he recalled her speaking on trade issues in 2008 in a way that “resonated” in states like Ohio, which he visited to campaign for her in that year.

“I think it’s very important she speak up make clear that there will be no more NAFTAs,” Mr. de Blasio said. “People all over the country, at the grassroots, certainly Democrats all over the country, are looking to her for leadership, and certainly her strong voice would make a very big difference.”

Mr. Reich noted it would not be the first time Ms. Clinton, as a candidate, has taken a position that differed from the policies of her husband, former President Bill Clinton. He noted her recent push to end mass incarceration.

“I hope that she does the same with the TPP, relative to NAFTA,” Mr. Reich said.

Mr. Reich was charged with rolling out NAFTA under Mr. Clinton and, like many who oppose the TPP, said the 1990s trade pact had delivered poor results for American workers.

“Once the dust cleared, we did find that a lot of manufacturing jobs left the U.S., they first went to Mexico and then they promptly went to Southeast Asia,” Mr. Reich said.

He was also charged with enforcing the trade deal’s guidelines for better labor conditions in other countries, but said it proved “extraordinarily difficult to do,” something he suspected would hold true for the TPP as well.

Mr. Reich and Mr. de Blasio bashed the idea of Congress holding a “fast-track” up or down vote on the trade pact, very little of which has been made public. The deal has pitted many in the left wing of the Democratic party against President Barack Obama, who backs the deal.

“To have this large a trade agreement or investment agreement negotiated in secret and fast tracked through Congress without any opportunity for amendment, when most of America has no access to this trade agreement at all—what I know about it was leaked through Wikileaks—it seems to me makes a mockery of democracy,” Mr. Reich said.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Hinton, Karen
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: have you all
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 2:32:22 PM

Outstanding

On Jun 11, 2015, at 2:24 PM, Hinton, Karen <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Done already. Tom Cochran said plenty of mayors have problems with the trade bill; de Blasio is not alone.

From: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thu, 11 Jun 2015 14:22:16 -0400
To: 'John Del Cecato' <jfdc@akpdmmedia.com>, Emma Wolfe <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Karen Hinton <khinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: have you all

KH – can USCM hit up Burns on this?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:07 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma
Cc: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: have you all

Adding Karen, who can get USCM to push back and point out how many mayors don't support TPP

On Jun 11, 2015, at 12:55 PM, Wolfe, Emma <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

horse shit horse shit

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 12:49 PM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea; 'John Del Cecato'
Subject: FW: have you all

From: Burns, Alex [<mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 12:44 PM
To: Walzak, Phil

Subject: Re: have you all

Doing a story on him going his own way on trade, while USCM and a lot of typically sympathetic mayors in other cities, go in the other direction

Obviously his comments on the conference call are great

But lemme know if there's anything else you'd like to feed in for context or background

On Thu, Jun 11, 2015 at 11:29 AM, Walzak, Phil

<PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Are you hearing that?

From: Burns, Alex [mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com]

Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:25 AM

To: Walzak, Phil

Subject: have you all

Gotten any bitchiness from the WH about the mayor's role on trade?

--

Alexander Burns

New York Times

Desk: \(212\) 556-4420556-4420)

Cell: \(917\) 838-2039838-2039)

--

Alexander Burns

New York Times

Desk: (212) 556-4420

Cell: (917) 838-2039

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Transcripts; "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE WITH FORMER U.S. SECRETARY OF LABOR ROBERT REICH AND ROOSEVELT INSTITUTE SENIOR ECONOMIST ADAM HERSH
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 3:17:28 PM
Attachments: pastedGraphic.png

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: June 11, 2015
CONTACT: pressoffice@cityhall.nyc.gov, (212) 788-2958

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO HOSTS PRESS CALL ON UPCOMING TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP (TPP) VOTE WITH FORMER U.S. SECRETARY OF LABOR ROBERT REICH AND ROOSEVELT INSTITUTE SENIOR ECONOMIST ADAM HERSH

Mayor Bill de Blasio: I thank everyone for joining with us today.

Obviously, people are – all over the country – very focused today on what action could happen in the House of Representatives on the trade bill. And I think we can safely say the situation is gray in terms of what the outcome will be. But I want to talk about – I know my colleagues on the call want to talk about the underlying issues here. And I think for many of us, there's deep concern that this country is about to make a mistake we've made before. And it was certainly – looking back at the history of NAFTA, we have an exceedingly cautionary history we have to learn from and not repeat.

I've been working with progressives all over the country who feel this same deep concern. A number of us unveiled a document back on May 12th – the Progressive Agenda. And you can see at progressiveagenda.us. And one of the planks in that 15-point agenda was the need to make sure we don't have the kind of trade deals we've had in the past that undermine the jobs of American workers and didn't rein in the power of multi-national corporations. And I think the history of NAFTA is profoundly troubling. We saw how it hurt our economy. There are estimates that as many as a million jobs that were lost as a result of NAFTA. Obviously, it had a hugely negative impact on manufacturing in this country. And there's too many realities around the current trade deal that are reminiscent of NAFTA and there's still too much we don't know. A lot of us are deeply concerned about the regulatory structures created in the trade proposal that – certainly from my perspective and I think a lot of other progressives – will undermine the power of government regulators in relationship to corporate power. There's real concerns on a consumer-level. The patent strengthening for the pharmaceutical industry – very well could have the effect of making it harder for everyday people to get cheaper generic drugs that they need. There's a lot in this deal that appears to reinforce the status quo that is not working for the American people. And even the more generous estimates of the positive impact it could have for our economy don't seem overly impressive. So I think, for a lot of us, we see profound danger in this deal and a lot of bad history and very little about it that is encouraging that any lessons had been learned from the past.

So, trade is obviously a crucial part of our lives and our economy but it has to be done the right way. And what we've seen with fast track – what we've seen with the trade deal, as outlined so far, is clearly not the right way. So that's my opening. I want to see now – Bob Reich has joined us. Okay, it seems like a no, so we'll call again to find out – I think we have him on the line. But let's go to Adam Hersh – the senior economist at the Roosevelt Institute – for him to offer his cause.

...

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Bob, you're always fun to have on the call. Well, look, I'll summarize this and say, first of all, we're on this call today because we believe this country is poised to make a huge mistake. And obviously, we want to see the House act and vote down Fast-Track and stop this mistake in its tracks. There are progressive leaders all over the country who feel the same way, and voices at the grassroots, and certainly a majority of the American people who are tremendously nervous about additional trade deals given the bad track record that we've all experienced. I think it's particularly powerful to hear that former labor secretary who tried to enforce the previous agreement tell us straight up that it couldn't be enforced, and that points out how false some of the arguments are in terms of this trade deal. So I want to thank you, Bob, as always for powerfully framing the situation. Now I would like to welcome the journalists on the line to ask questions of any and all of us.

Question: Mr. Mayor, [inaudible] from Newsday at City Hall. TPP supporters say the deal would open markets from New York to five Asia Pacific countries that aren't trading partners now and expand trade with six other ones. How can you be against the TPP if it's good for New York, if you say it's bad for New York? Can you give us some specific city reason that it's not good for us?

Mayor: Sure, I'll give you the – my perspective as Mayor. I think it would be great to let Bob and Adam have that question too, about what I think is the falsehood of the benefits being promised in this deal. I think both of them already gave you some of those answers, but I'd like them to specifically amplify in terms of the way you phrased the question. But my answer is simple. I believe the constant downward pressure that we've seen on the standard of living of American workers has had a deeply negative effect on New York City. The deeply troubling facts – I've talked about the fact that the average American family is worse off today than 25 years ago when you adjust for inflation. Bob just used that very troubling stat about the decline of the minimum wage in real terms since 1968. The fact is we've seen a series of government policy decisions that have made it harder and harder for people to reach the middle class, and that has deeply affected the people of New York City, which is why I have 46 percent of the people in my city at or near the poverty level. So, we are trying to do a lot of things here to address income inequality, but we need changes in national policy if we're going to make a profound difference. And my fear is that this trade deal will just deepen an already negative trend and we'll, again, continue to empower corporations that have been part of creating this unfair economy. And we can't make this mistake again. So the theoretical argument, well, it's going to open up business opportunities – I don't believe that's going to be transcendent for this city. I think the must bigger issue is to stop going down the wrong road that has only deepened income inequality. Bob or Adam?

Senior Economist Adam Hersh, Roosevelt Institute: Well, let me just state exactly the same point a slightly different way, and that is that we know that the two forces that have been pushing inequality and pushing the median wage downward, if you adjust for inflation, are globalization and technological change. But [inaudible] variable here. Other nations exposed to those two factors, that is, globalization and technological change have not succumbed as much as we have to both inequality and both stagnant or declining wages. The median wage in the United States has dropped nine percent over the past decade, and that means half of Americans are worse off than they were ten years ago. Those Americans happen to be mostly in our large cities. So trade has played a role. Although people get their lower priced goods, they're losing jobs. Most of the jobs created in the United States, certainly over the past 15 years, have been in retail, restaurant, hotel, hospital, service transportation, childcare and elder care. These are jobs [inaudible] areas. They don't pay well. We're losing and have lost the kind of manufacturing base, but also the – the – the – the investment base that allows Americans to flourish and do well. To the trade and the investment provisions in the Transpacific Partnership will unfortunately further these very troubling trends.

Question: Mr. Mayor, this is Ann Gearan with the Washington Post – I wanted to ask you a related question. On Saturday, in New York City, Hillary Clinton will be talking about her campaign themes. And certainly a fair amount of that speech is expected to be along the lines of some of the things you've talked about here, about middle class economic access and so forth. What would you like to hear her say specifically on trade and the TPP?

Mayor: Well, I'd like to answer that in honest and give Bob the chance as well, since he has a long, deep relationship with both Clintons. I'd like to see a very clear statement that this trade deal should be opposed and should be stopped. I think, when you think about the 2008 campaign, Hillary Clinton said very powerful things that really resonated with people in places like Ohio and Pennsylvania. I happened to be out in Ohio supporting her effort and I saw the ability she had to move people by talking about not making mistakes with the past we have seen with NAFTA. I think it's very important she speak up, make clear that there will be no more NAFTA, that this trade deal is unacceptable. I think that's important as a matter of policy, but I also think it's important politically. I think people all over the country at the grassroots – certainly Democrats all over the country – are looking to her for leadership and her strong voice at this moment would make a very big difference. Bob?

Former U.S. Secretary of Labor Bob Reich: I agree. I would hope that she very clearly and specifically opposes the Trans-Pacific Partnership. She has already so far in her campaign made impressive statements about criminal justice, immigration, voting rights, some of which position her very differently from Bill Clinton's positions in the 1990s, and the policies that he invoked in the 1990s. I hope she does the same with regard to the Trans-Pacific Partnership relative to NAFTA, because I've said the Trans-Pacific Partnership is NAFTA on steroids.

Question: Mr. Mayor, this is Dana Rubenstein from Capital. Do you believe that you could support Hillary for president if she doesn't oppose TPP?

Mayor: Dana, thanks for the question. I don't deal with hypotheticals and I've said consistently, I've been very impressed by what she's said so far on criminal justice reform, voting rights, immigration reform, $15 dollar minimum wage. I'm very optimistic about where she and her campaign are going. I think she has to speak to issues like trade to provide us all with a full picture of how she's going to address income inequality and the future of our economy. So, I don't want to prejudge different scenarios. I'm looking forward to hearing from her. And again, I've heard her say things in the past that are very encouraging to me because I think she understands what a devastating impact NAFTA had.

Question: Mr. Mayor, this is Andrew Hawkins from Crain's New York Business. I'm just wondering – your message is having difficulty getting across in Washington on TTP, on Fast Track – also difficulty in Albany on 421-a and other, and rent regulations. I'm just wondering if there's going to be a change in strategy in terms of how you're lobbying for these things?

Mayor: No, Rome wasn't built in a day. I think, again, my colleagues on the phone here have been at this work a long time, as have I. I think progressives who believe in changing the debate, changing the rules of the game, understand that is work that takes a while, but boy there's a rich history going certainly back to the original progressive movement a century ago, and to the New Deal – strong progressive voices changing the foundational concepts of policy and how we go about things in this country. And, I think that this is one of those moments. I think – and I give Bob tremendous credit – I give Adam and everyone at the Roosevelt Institute tremendous credit – they have been sounding the alarm for years now on income inequality. Well, we just saw a poll last week – CBS News-New York Times poll – here's one of the most important new inputs in this discussion. It showed overwhelming concern around the country on the question of income inequality. It showed extraordinary concern among Democrats and obviously those who make the decisions about the future of our party and our nominee.

I think this issue's time has come in every sense and that doesn't mean that every time we go to bat trying to change policies that dug this hole that folks in the status quo are going to respond. It doesn't shock me that I go to Albany and call for fundamental changes to address income inequality, and there's not a receptive audience from those who have represented the status quo. It certainly doesn't shock me that this Congress has a lot of people in it who don't want to take on big corporations and don't want to make sure that the playing field is more fair for working people. But I think the debate is changing, and I think the views of the American people are changing, and that will ultimately win the day.

Question: Mayor, Jillian Jorgensen with the Observer. Question for you and for Secretary Rice. Just wondering what you think of the message you're hearing on TPP from other contenders in the Democratic primaries, particularly Bernie Sanders and Martin O'Malley. What do you think of the message you're hearing from them?

Mayor: From what I've heard so far, my view is they both said very important and appropriate things on trade, and I give them both credit for that. And I think that represents what a lot of people in this party feel on the ground all over the country.

Question: Secretary, if you could?

Secretary Rice: Yes. My impression is exactly the same – that Bernie Sanders and Martin O'Malley have sounded the alarm about the Trans-Pacific Partnership, and I hope Hillary Clinton does the same.

Mayor: Any other questions?

Question: Mr. Mayor, on housing [inaudible] – Ryan Hutchins at Capital – wondering if you think at this point that there’s any chance of actually getting any changes to 421-a in Albany –

Mayor: [inaudible] – hold on, hold on – topic at hand. This was specifically a talk about trade issues, and we allowed a little bit of variation there, but I can’t go specifically into 421-a. I spoke to that yesterday. Last call on questions specifically about how we open this discussion related to trade in the vote coming up. Any other questions?

Question: Secretary of State, is this issue going to factor into whomever you may endorse for president?

Secretary Rice: Well, I’m in a slightly different position from others in the sense that I am chairman of Common Cause, a non-partisan citizens group that’s trying to get big money out of politics, so I feel it inappropriate to endorse anybody. But more generally, [inaudible], this is, as Mayor de Blasio said, this a long struggle. I mean, TPP is part of a movement and the opposition of TPP are part of a movement that is going to take a great deal of time, but is gaining momentum. The Fight For Fifteen, Black Lives Matter, the extraordinary opposition to the Trans-Pacific Partnership among organized labor, and others I think is bringing people together around a very common theme, and Mayor de Blasio, and the Roosevelt Institute and others have contributed mightily to this – and that is that we’ve got to have an economy that works for the many, not the few.

Mayor: Amen. Last call. Any other questions on trade?

Question: Yes, Mr. Mayor. Quick follow-up – have you personally discussed the Trans-Pacific Partnership with Hillary Clinton? And if so, can you detail the conversation for us?

Mayor: No, no, I have not. But I think my views are quite clear, and my colleagues on the phone and a lot of strong voices in this country have spoken out against this trade deal. So, I am certain she’s up to date on it, and I think it’s important that we all hear her voice.

Alright, everyone. Thanks very much. Thanks to my colleagues. Thank you.

###

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: <no subject>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 6:03:41 PM

I don't want to send to Damon. I might send it to Trumka's assistant. But it might look weird if we are sending to two different people? Don't forget Larry Cohen at CWA. Hoffa big on TPP also, but I don't think he signed TPA.

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 5:50 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: <no subject>

Hey Tom... Been sending this out to some of our most anti-trade deal friends (Leo Gerard, Rosa DeLauro, UFCW)... I think Pickrell can send to Damon Silvers - unless you want to? Anyone else in your orbit that we should hit?

Wanted to make sure you saw that MBDB and Secretary Reich made an 11th-hour push on killing Fast Track today... Fingers crossed!

<http://observer.com/2015/06/bill-clintons-labor-secretary-urges-hillary-clinton-to-oppose-tpp-at-kickoff/>
<http://www.capitalnewyork.com/article/city-hall/2015/06/8569999/hillary-launch-de-blasio-exerts-more-leftward-pressure>
<http://www.newsday.com/news/new-york/de-blasio-presses-hillary-clinton-to-oppose-trade-deal-1.10534056>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Walzak, Phil
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: PLS READ USE THIS THREAD FOR BURNS
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 7:39:33 PM

To be clear, it's complete WH spin to suggest that opposing fast track is somehow a partisan issue. Point Alex to his own newspaper's poll. 55% of Americans oppose fast track. The number among Republicans is 72 percent!

On Jun 11, 2015, at 6:59 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

USE THIS THREAD
+JFDC

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 6:39 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Burns, Alex (alex.burns@nytimes.com); Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma Subject: FW: have you all

Latest from BUrns

From: Alex Burns [<mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 5:08 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: have you all

Actually point to that trip as a case in point: visits DC to lobby on infrastructure, then separately unveil the progressive agenda (TM)

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 11, 2015, at 5:07 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Ok

You got the transpo stuff in there from May (also gonna be a hot DC topic later this summer)

Another ex of the bipartisan urban issues

From: Alex Burns [<mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 5:06 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: have you all

Hey, shouldn't be anything surprising. Mayor denouncing the deal and challenging Clinton to do same, showing the two hats he wears with respect to other mayors - working together on nonpartisan urban issues and then picking moments to go very visibly in a different direction.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 11, 2015, at 4:29 PM, Walzak, Phil
<PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Hey just tried you
Any sneak peak you can provide on what to expect tmrw?
thanks

From: Alex Burns [<mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 4:25 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: have you all

Think we are good

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 11, 2015, at 3:59 PM, Walzak, Phil
<PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Anything else you need here? Not sure if there are specific things you want addressed?

From: Burns, Alex
[<mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 2:29 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: have you all

Sure

On Thu, Jun 11, 2015 at 2:25 PM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
Aren't there a lot of folks w probs w TPP – inside and outside USCM?

From: Burns, Alex
[<mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 12:44 PM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: have you all

Doing a story on him going his own way on trade, while USCM and a lot of typically sympathetic mayors in other cities, go in the other direction

Obviously his comments on the conference call are great

But lemme know if there's anything else you'd like to feed in for context or background

On Thu, Jun 11, 2015 at 11:29 AM, Walzak, Phil <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
Are you hearing that?

From: Burns, Alex
[mailto:alex.burns@nytimes.com]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 11:25 AM
To: Walzak, Phil
Subject: have you all

Gotten any bitchiness from the WH about the mayor's role on trade?

--
Alexander Burns
New York Times
Desk: \(212\) 556-4420556-4420)
Cell: \(917\) 838-2039838-2039)

--
Alexander Burns
New York Times
Desk: \(212\) 556-4420556-4420)
Cell: \(917\) 838-2039838-2039)

--
Alexander Burns
New York Times
Desk: (212) 556-4420
Cell: (917) 838-2039

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Snyder, Thomas; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: NYT story
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:33:11 PM

I'm absolutely fine with it

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 09:22 PM
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: NYT story

I know there are things to nitpick - but given our objectives, I can't imagine a better story coming from a news source like the (pro-trade) New York Times!

—

De Blasio Calls Trans-Pacific Partnership a 'Huge Mistake'

Reviving a public split with the White House, Mayor Bill de Blasio declared on the eve of a key vote in Washington that it would be a "huge mistake" for Congress to approve President Obama's chief legislative priority, a sweeping trade deal known as the Trans-Pacific Partnership.

Raising the specter of lower wages, more powerful multinational companies and costlier pharmaceutical drugs, Mr. de Blasio on Thursday warned: "For a lot of us, we see profound danger in this deal."

And the mayor of New York, a Democrat who has yet to endorse a candidate for president, said that Hillary Rodham Clinton should speak forcefully against the trade agreement covering nearly a dozen Asian nations. Mrs. Clinton has expressed some reservations about the agreement, but has not drawn a bright line to indicate her position on the overall deal.

"I'd like to see a very clear statement that this trade deal should be opposed and should be stopped," Mr. de Blasio said during a conference call with the news media that his office helped organize, adding: “Democrats all over the country are looking to her for leadership.”

The mayor’s dire words regarding the Asian trade pact have put him at odds both with the Obama administration and with a range of other mayors with whom he is typically aligned.

The United States Conference of Mayors, a group with which Mr. de Blasio works closely, sent a public letter to congressional leaders on Wednesday, urging them to give Mr. Obama enhanced authority to advance the deal; the mayors of other major cities, including Houston, Atlanta and Philadelphia, support it.

But Mr. de Blasio, who described himself on Thursday as a spokesman for progressives across the country, has increasingly tried to stretch his role as the country’s most prominent city executive, balancing an urban agenda that crosses party lines against a sharper-edged liberal vision that he has been eager to advance nationally.

A case in point came last month, when Mr. de Blasio visited Washington for a dual purpose: to lobby Congress for additional infrastructure spending, and to unveil a politically provocative document, titled “The Progressive Agenda,” outlining ambitious proposals to fight economic inequality. Several mayors signed on, including leaders from Seattle, Minneapolis and Newark.

Among the components of that agenda was total opposition to “trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers’ rights and the environment.”

Tom Cochran, the chief executive of the mayors’ conference, said the group and its members have come to expect that Mr. de Blasio will play a dual role in national politics. The group previously passed a resolution to support the Trans-Pacific Partnership, and Mr. Cochran noted, “The smallest city in the nation has one vote and Mayor de Blasio has one vote.”

“We all know what he is doing,” Mr. Cochran said. “He has an open conspiracy to have what we call a progressive agenda — that’s what I call it. Some people say it’s a New Left agenda. We all know he’s been quite vocal.”

Mr. de Blasio had words of praise for two liberal candidates challenging Mrs. Clinton for the Democratic presidential nomination: Martin O’Malley, the former Maryland governor, and Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont. Both men, who oppose the trade deal, are saying “important and appropriate things on trade,” Mr. de Blasio said.

A spokesman for the Clinton campaign declined to comment on the remarks from Mr. de Blasio, who managed Mrs. Clinton’s Senate campaign in 2000.

Mr. de Blasio’s renewed advocacy on trade comes at a particularly delicate time in the legislative process. The House of Representatives is expected to vote on Friday on whether to give Mr. Obama enhanced powers to move the deal forward. Democratic lawmakers appear overwhelmingly opposed to the measure, and the White House has strained to find the votes necessary for passage.

The mayor did not rebuke Mr. Obama directly for his position on Thursday. During his May visit to Washington, where he met with Mr. Obama, Mr. de Blasio said there was a state of “détente” between himself and the president on trade. “We agree to disagree,” Mr. de Blasio said then. “Obviously, we have two different views.”

Yet Mr. de Blasio has been no passive critic of the Trans-Pacific Partnership: He denounced it forcefully during a speech to the Wisconsin Democratic Party in April. On the conference call on Thursday, Mr. de Blasio rejected the notion, advanced by supporters of the deal, that cities with export-driven jobs would benefit over all from the agreement.

“I believe the constant downward pressure that we’ve seen on the standard of living of American workers has had a deeply negative effect on New York City,” Mr. de Blasio said, alluding to past trade deals such as the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Robert B. Reich, the former federal labor secretary who joined the mayor on the conference call, said he and Mr. de Blasio have had a running conversation about disrupting the economic debate, including on trade.

“Both of us are very convinced that the only way we get politics to turn around on this is if people are mobilized,” Mr. Reich said in an interview.

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: B
Subject: Re: NYT story
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:34:32 PM

In for a penny in for a pound. The corporate agenda is a dead end road for majority of Americans. We just have to keep organizing and building support and saying what we actually believe. I know that's a shocking thought.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 11, 2015, at 9:22 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

I know there are things to nitpick - but given our objectives, I can't imagine a better story coming from a news source like the (pro-trade) New York Times!

—

De Blasio Calls Trans-Pacific Partnership a 'Huge Mistake'

Reviving a public split with the White House, Mayor Bill de Blasio declared on the eve of a key vote in Washington that it would be a "huge mistake" for Congress to approve President Obama's chief legislative priority, a sweeping trade deal known as the Trans-Pacific Partnership.

Raising the specter of lower wages, more powerful multinational companies and costlier pharmaceutical drugs, Mr. de Blasio on Thursday warned: "For a lot of us, we see profound danger in this deal."

And the mayor of New York, a Democrat who has yet to endorse a candidate for president, said that Hillary Rodham Clinton should speak forcefully against the trade agreement covering nearly a dozen Asian nations. Mrs. Clinton has expressed some reservations about the agreement, but has not drawn a bright line to indicate her position on the overall deal.

“I’d like to see a very clear statement that this trade deal should be opposed and should be stopped,” Mr. de Blasio said during a conference call with the news media that his office helped organize, adding: “Democrats all over the country are looking to her for leadership.”

The mayor’s dire words regarding the Asian trade pact have put him at odds both with the Obama administration and with a range of other mayors with whom he is typically aligned.

The United States Conference of Mayors, a group with which Mr. de Blasio works closely, sent a public letter to congressional leaders on Wednesday, urging them to give Mr. Obama enhanced authority to advance the deal; the mayors of other major cities, including Houston, Atlanta and Philadelphia, support it.

But Mr. de Blasio, who described himself on Thursday as a spokesman for progressives across the country, has increasingly tried to stretch his role as the country’s most prominent city executive, balancing an urban agenda that crosses party lines against a sharper-edged liberal vision that he has been eager to advance nationally.

A case in point came last month, when Mr. de Blasio visited Washington for a dual purpose: to lobby Congress for additional infrastructure spending, and to unveil a politically provocative document, titled “The Progressive Agenda,” outlining ambitious proposals to fight economic inequality. Several mayors signed on, including leaders from Seattle, Minneapolis and Newark.

Among the components of that agenda was total opposition to “trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights and the environment.”

Tom Cochran, the chief executive of the mayors' conference, said the group and its members have come to expect that Mr. de Blasio will play a dual role in national politics. The group previously passed a resolution to support the Trans-Pacific Partnership, and Mr. Cochran noted, “The smallest city in the nation has one vote and Mayor de Blasio has one vote.”

“We all know what he is doing,” Mr. Cochran said. “He has an open conspiracy to have what we call a progressive agenda — that's what I call it. Some people say it's a New Left agenda. We all know he's been quite vocal.”

Mr. de Blasio had words of praise for two liberal candidates challenging Mrs. Clinton for the Democratic presidential nomination: Martin O'Malley, the former Maryland governor, and Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont. Both men, who oppose the trade deal, are saying “important and appropriate things on trade,” Mr. de Blasio said.

A spokesman for the Clinton campaign declined to comment on the remarks from Mr. de Blasio, who managed Mrs. Clinton's Senate campaign in 2000.

Mr. de Blasio's renewed advocacy on trade comes at a particularly delicate time in the legislative process. The House of Representatives is expected to vote on Friday on whether to give Mr. Obama enhanced powers to move the deal forward. Democratic lawmakers appear overwhelmingly opposed to the measure, and the White House has strained to find the votes necessary for passage.

The mayor did not rebuke Mr. Obama directly for his position on Thursday. During his May visit to Washington, where he met with Mr. Obama, Mr. de Blasio said there was a state of “détente” between himself and the president on trade. “We agree to disagree,” Mr. de Blasio said then. “Obviously, we have two different views.”

Yet Mr. de Blasio has been no passive critic of the Trans-Pacific Partnership: He denounced it forcefully during a speech to the Wisconsin Democratic Party in April. On the conference call on Thursday, Mr. de Blasio rejected the notion, advanced by supporters of the deal, that cities with export-driven jobs would benefit over all from the agreement.

“I believe the constant downward pressure that we’ve seen on the standard of living of American workers has had a deeply negative effect on New York City,” Mr. de Blasio said, alluding to past trade deals such as the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Robert B. Reich, the former federal labor secretary who joined the mayor on the conference call, said he and Mr. de Blasio have had a running conversation about disrupting the economic debate, including on trade.

“Both of us are very convinced that the only way we get politics to turn around on this is if people are mobilized,” Mr. Reich said in an interview.

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: B
Subject: Re: NYT story
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:45:08 PM

For every action there is an equal and opposite reaction. It must mean we actually have a shot at winning.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 11, 2015, at 9:41 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

And for good measure, the White House is pounding me. So Mayor - don't say I never stick up for what's right - even when it's tough!

On Jun 11, 2015, at 9:35 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

A shockingly TRUE thought!!

From: Snyder, Thomas
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 09:34 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: B
Subject: Re: NYT story

In for a penny in for a pound. The corporate agenda is a dead end road for majority of Americans. We just have to keep organizing and building support and saying what we actually believe. I know that's a shocking thought.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 11, 2015, at 9:22 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

I know there are things to nitpick - but given our objectives, I can't imagine a better story coming from a news source like the (pro-trade) New York Times!

—

De Blasio Calls Trans-Pacific Partnership a ‘Huge Mistake’

Reviving a public split with the White House, Mayor Bill de Blasio declared on the eve of a key vote in Washington that it would be a “huge mistake” for Congress to approve President Obama’s chief legislative priority, a sweeping trade deal known as the Trans-Pacific Partnership.

Raising the specter of lower wages, more powerful multinational companies and costlier pharmaceutical drugs, Mr. de Blasio on Thursday warned: “For a lot of us, we see profound danger in this deal.”

And the mayor of New York, a Democrat who has yet to endorse a candidate for president, said that Hillary Rodham Clinton should speak forcefully against the trade agreement covering nearly a dozen Asian nations. Mrs. Clinton has expressed some reservations about the agreement, but has not drawn a bright line to indicate her position on the overall deal.

“I’d like to see a very clear statement that this trade deal should be opposed and should be stopped,” Mr. de Blasio said during a conference call with the news media that his office helped organize, adding: “Democrats all over the country are looking to her for leadership.”

The mayor's dire words regarding the Asian trade pact have put him at odds both with the Obama administration and with a range of other mayors with whom he is typically aligned.

The United States Conference of Mayors, a group with which Mr. de Blasio works closely, sent a public letter to congressional leaders on Wednesday, urging them to give Mr. Obama enhanced authority to advance the deal; the mayors of other major cities, including Houston, Atlanta and Philadelphia, support it.

But Mr. de Blasio, who described himself on Thursday as a spokesman for progressives across the country, has increasingly tried to stretch his role as the country's most prominent city executive, balancing an urban agenda that crosses party lines against a sharper-edged liberal vision that he has been eager to advance nationally.

A case in point came last month, when Mr. de Blasio visited Washington for a dual purpose: to lobby Congress for additional infrastructure spending, and to unveil a politically provocative document, titled "The Progressive Agenda," outlining ambitious proposals to fight economic inequality. Several mayors signed on, including leaders from Seattle, Minneapolis and Newark.

Among the components of that agenda was total opposition to “trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers’ rights and the environment.”

Tom Cochran, the chief executive of the mayors’ conference, said the group and its members have come to expect that Mr. de Blasio will play a dual role in national politics. The group previously passed a resolution to support the Trans-Pacific Partnership, and Mr. Cochran noted, “The smallest city in the nation has one vote and Mayor de Blasio has one vote.”

“We all know what he is doing,” Mr. Cochran said. “He has an open conspiracy to have what we call a progressive agenda — that’s what I call it. Some people say it’s a New Left agenda. We all know he’s been quite vocal.”

Mr. de Blasio had words of praise for two liberal candidates challenging Mrs. Clinton for the Democratic presidential nomination: Martin O’Malley, the former Maryland governor, and Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont. Both men, who oppose the trade deal, are saying “important and appropriate things on trade,” Mr. de Blasio said.

A spokesman for the Clinton campaign declined to comment on the remarks from

Mr. de Blasio, who managed Mrs. Clinton's Senate campaign in 2000.

Mr. de Blasio's renewed advocacy on trade comes at a particularly delicate time in the legislative process. The House of Representatives is expected to vote on Friday on whether to give Mr. Obama enhanced powers to move the deal forward. Democratic lawmakers appear overwhelmingly opposed to the measure, and the White House has strained to find the votes necessary for passage.

The mayor did not rebuke Mr. Obama directly for his position on Thursday. During his May visit to Washington, where he met with Mr. Obama, Mr. de Blasio said there was a state of "détente" between himself and the president on trade. "We agree to disagree," Mr. de Blasio said then. "Obviously, we have two different views."

Yet Mr. de Blasio has been no passive critic of the Trans-Pacific Partnership: He denounced it forcefully during a speech to the Wisconsin Democratic Party in April. On the conference call on Thursday, Mr. de Blasio rejected the notion, advanced by supporters of the deal, that cities with export-driven jobs would benefit over all from the agreement.

"I believe the constant downward pressure that we've seen on the standard of living of American workers has had a deeply negative effect on New York City,” Mr. de Blasio said, alluding to past trade deals such as the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Robert B. Reich, the former federal labor secretary who joined the mayor on the conference call, said he and Mr. de Blasio have had a running conversation about disrupting the economic debate, including on trade.

“Both of us are very convinced that the only way we get politics to turn around on this is if people are mobilized,” Mr. Reich said in an interview.

From: Hinton, Karen
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Wolfe, Emma; B
Subject: Re: Burns story
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 10:43:22 PM

Correction — Rawlings-Blake is next President; then Cornett in June 2016.

From: Karen Hinton <khinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thu, 11 Jun 2015 22:06:22 -0400
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Emma Wolfe <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: Burns story

Tom is afraid of his own shadow. The current Prez, Kevin Johnson, is jealous of our Mayor, and Johnson and Philly Mayor Nutter jump every time WH calls. Tom, on the other hand, loves that Mayor is involved with USCM. It takes Tom back to when USCM was very much a part of the Lindsey Administration. It's good we are developing a relationship with Mayor Cornett, the next President.

From: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thu, 11 Jun 2015 21:59:01 -0400
To: "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "jfdc@akpdmedia.com" <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, Karen Hinton <khinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Emma Wolfe <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Burns story

yeah its good
cochrane tho yikes not cool

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:33 PM
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; B
Subject: Re: Burns story

Agree. Good positioning piece, particularly heading into Saturday speech.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 09:20 PM
To: Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Hagelgans, Andrea; B
Subject: Re: Burns story

True - but the story itself is awesome...

From: <Hinton>, "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 11, 2015 at 9:17 PM
To: "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: Burns story

See below. Tom Cochran not that helpful. Either Tom didn't say what he told me he said or burns didn't use it. I've ask burns. K

From: Alexander Burns [REDACTED]
Date: June 11, 2015 at 9:02:51 PM EDT
To: <khinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: here you go

http://www.nytimes.com/2015/06/12/nyregion/de-blasio-calls-trans-pacific-partnership-a-huge-mistake.html?_r=0

From: Hinton, Karen
To: B; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: RE: Trade
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 9:03:11 AM

Will do!

-----Original Message-----

From: B
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 8:54 AM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'
Subject: Trade

Karen, pls send me transcript of part of karen finney interview on cnn this morning where john berman challenged her on why HRC wasn't speaking to the trade issue. Thought you all would be interested

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Re: Trade
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 9:36:42 AM

In that vein...

====

In a city where clout is king, the most powerful man on the planet seems to have none: Only one of the nine House Democrats who represent Chicago and its suburbs has committed to supporting the trade legislation.

===

What Chicago Democrats tell us about President Obama's problems on trade
CHICAGO — On the day Barack Obama launched himself on the fast track to the presidency, running for a U.S. Senate seat in 2004, Rep. Danny K. Davis (D-Ill.) was right there with him.

He served, in fact, as master of ceremonies for his campaign launch, Davis recalls with a chuckle: "He's a person that I have supported pretty much straight down the line."

Until now.

With his presidency waning and a Republican Congress obstructing all but a handful of items on his legislative agenda, Obama has one more big request for House Democrats such as Davis: a vote to grant his administration "fast track" negotiating authority, paving the way for the completion of the vast Trans-Pacific Partnership trade accord, or TPP.

Final votes on the trade legislation are set for Friday, and its fate remains uncertain — thanks mainly to the skepticism that runs deep among Obama's fellow Democrats. Some were talking openly of sabotaging the bill, and only eight Democrats backed a key procedural measure that squeaked through Thursday evening.

House Republican leaders pushed toward a showdown vote Friday on President Obama's trade agenda, despite heavy Democratic opposition. (AP)

Davis was not among the eight. Despite months of lobbying and personal appeals from Obama, he has made it clear the president can look elsewhere for support.

"I recognize that the president does indeed want this legislation passed," he said. "The people who vote for me in the 7th District have their position, and accurate, right, wrong, whatever — it's the position of the people."

Davis, who represents downtown Chicago and a swath of the city's west and south sides, is hardly an outlier in Obama's home town — where he came to organize communities decimated by lost manufacturing jobs before starting a family and launching a political career.

In a city where clout is king, the most powerful man on the planet seems to have none: Only one of the nine House Democrats who represent Chicago and its suburbs has committed to supporting the trade legislation.

The Illinois delegation's lack of faith in Obama almost perfectly aligns with the House as a whole. With barely 20 of the 188 House Democrats committed, it is clear that Republicans must provide the vast majority of support if Obama's top domestic legislative priority is going to be passed Friday.

Democrats' deep skepticism

Obama's failure to persuade Chicagoland Democrats is emblematic of the difficulties he has had convincing Democrats across the country who have been unwilling to accept the president's assurances that trade deals negotiated under the new authority — allowing an up-or-down congressional vote but no amendments or filibusters — would contain unprecedented protections for workers, domestic industry and the environment. They have instead aligned themselves with the labor unions and activist groups that constitute the bedrock of the party base.

Even those who acknowledge the parochial politics behind lawmakers' individual decisions are surprised by the lack of loyalty.

"Any Illinois Democrat who says they're going to be the last vote to kill one of the president's legacy items, I just don't think they're going to be judged very well over the long term," said Tom Bowen, a Chicago political consultant who advises Mayor Rahm Emanuel and Rep. Mike Quigley, the only House Democrat from Chicago to support the fast-track authority.

"There are rare opportunities for getting something done that your president asks you to do, that he's willing to put his stamp on, and there's no Democrat who can argue with a straight face that Barack Obama hasn't been the most progressive president probably since Lyndon Johnson."

Even Obama's closest ally on Capitol Hill, Sen. Richard J. Durbin (D-Ill.), sided with labor and activist groups against a friend who happens to be the first Illinois Democrat to be elected president. Durbin, who supported the North American Free Trade Agreement when he held a downstate House seat in 1993, said his personal relationship with Obama "was a factor which was raised several times in conversation between the president and myself."

"But he had the votes here, and I knew it and he knew it," he continued.

"I believe in trade, but I believe our trade agreements are not as complete as they should be and don't serve our state as well as they should."

In the House, objections from Illinois Democrats have varied, but all who oppose the pending deal cite the effects of previous trade deals, especially NAFTA, which was ratified in 1993.

Hardened by NAFTA

For Rep. Bill Foster, a physicist, it comes down to the data — and a hard calculation of whether the TPP or other trade deals negotiated under fast-track authority will net well-paying jobs for his district in the southwest suburbs. He is not convinced they will unless provisions are included to address currency manipulation by other countries; those provisions, aimed mostly at China, have generated veto threats from the White House.

Foster said he has not been asked to vote with Obama for personal or political reasons, only on the policy. "He's a university professor; I'm a scientist," he said last week. "That's the level at which the discussion is."

Reps. Daniel Lipinski and Bobby L. Rush had distant political relations with Obama to begin with, and both have cited potential harm to workers in their public statements on trade.

"You talk to Ford, who has a big plant on the South Side of Chicago, and they will tell you that the TPP is a bad deal for American manufacturing," Lipinski said at a Wednesday news conference on Capitol Hill. "We cannot let this happen."

Reps. Tammy Duckworth and Robin L. Kelly have both issued similar statements skeptical of trade deals. They have the additional complication of pursuing potential 2016 Senate bids, which might make them even more reticent to alienate key elements of the Democratic political base.

Veteran Rep. Jan Schakowsky — a former political organizer who represents the city's far north side and liberal suburbs such as Evanston and Skokie — is considered so close to labor and left-wing activist groups that neither Obama nor his aides ever approached her about supporting the trade legislation, she said.

"Once he said on television, 'Look, even some of my longest-term supporters are on the other side,' and I sort of waved at the TV," said Schakowsky, who delivered Obama a key endorsement during his 2004 Senate run. "We're with the president on so many other things. . . . We have the greatest admiration and affection and, by and large, support for the president. Not here."

Rep. Luis V. Gutierrez said the politics of trade haven't shifted much since 1993, when he was a House freshman and President Bill Clinton's NAFTA whip team included Chicagoans such as Bill Daley, son of a former mayor and brother of the then-mayor, and Emanuel, then a young presidential aide.

"When Hillary and Obama were running in 2008, when NAFTA came up, I don't remember the president making an enthusiastic defense, and Hillary was almost apologetic," he said.

The all-politics-is-local factor also applies, Gutierrez said: "You didn't see anybody punish me for voting against NAFTA, did you?"

One unhesitating backer

Obama's lone Democratic ally in the Illinois delegation is Quigley, a former Cook County board member who likes to tell a story about how he took Obama to breakfast after he'd lost his 2000 bid to unseat Rush. He says he offered Obama this condolence: "Well, there'll be something for you someday."

Unlike most of his Democratic colleagues in Illinois and elsewhere, Quigley did not make an extended display of agony over his decision. He recalled a White House meeting with other House members last year, where Obama polled the table about their feelings on trade.

"He's got to be thinking, after all I've been through, you can't do this one tough thing for me?" Quigley said. "I said, 'I'm with you, and my job is to help others join you.' It was liberating."

He is now one of a handful of House Democrats who have played a leading role in trying to sell the trade deal to skeptical colleagues.

That lonely position has earned Quigley the ire of organized labor and progressive activists, the same elements of the Democratic Party that made Emanuel's reelection bid earlier this year a whole lot more dramatic than once anticipated.

On a recent Thursday afternoon, about 50 protesters gathered outside Quigley's North Side congressional office to chant "Quigley says fast track; we say fight back" and deliver a petition to his staff.

"It defies demographic explanation," said Carson Starkey, director of the Illinois Fair Trade Campaign, an umbrella group of labor and progressive activists. "He is in a very deep-blue district, going back to Dan Rostenkowski. . . . It sort of baffles us that he's adopted the position of the Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and the Club for Growth."

Echoing the message that has come from AFL-CIO President Richard L. Trumka on down, Chicago activists have suggested that Quigley might find himself with a primary opponent on his hands next year.

Celeste Larkin, public policy coordinator for the Chicago Religious Leadership Network, which has participated in the anti-fast-track protests, said its goal has been "to make this as contentious as possible for as long as possible" for Quigley.

"He's burning constituencies across his district. He's burning labor, he's burning immigrants, he's burning the faith community," she said. "I think Mike Quigley feels safe. . . . He should be afraid. He should be nervous." Quigley isn't feeling nervous so much as exasperated at his fellow partisans' unwillingness to support their president.

"To me . . . the most disappointing thing the Democrats have ever done is not to trust the president on this," he said. "It is the one blind spot in my mind to the 99 the Republicans have. If they take my Democratic card, so be it. I love being a Democrat, but this one's maddening."

Obama has pledged to support pro-trade-deal Democrats in various ways, and Quigley already has been rewarded for his loyalty: He was one of four House Democrats who support the trade agreement and were invited to join Obama this past weekend at the Group of Seven economic talks in Germany. On Monday, while the two were aboard Air Force One returning to Washington, Obama tweeted a photo <<https://twitter.com/WhiteHouse/status/607998210347405312>> of him and Quigley, holding a Chicago Blackhawks jersey ahead of the evening's Stanley Cup hockey game.

As for the response from labor, Quigley said: "It hasn't been positive. My response is: 'You're going to need me.' "

For instance, Quigley is the only Illinois Democrat serving on the House Appropriations Committee, where he is the second-ranking Democrat on the transportation subcommittee.

Even Starkey acknowledged that threats of a primary challenge are mostly hollow. "There is a better chance of Barack Obama winning a third election in Texas than Mike Quigley losing a primary challenge," he said.

But for most of Quigley's colleagues, even the threat of a primary challenge is a hassle best avoided.

"Fortunately for the president, he will not have to run again," Davis said. "Our situations are different. If you've got to go before the voters for election, you want to be as close to them as you possibly can."

On 6/12/15, 8:53 AM, "B" <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>Karen, pls send me transcript of part of karen finney interview on cnn >this morning where john berman challenged her on why HRC wasn't speaking >to the trade issue. Thought you all would be interested

From: Jon Fromowitz
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Blumm, Kate; Wolfe, Emma; John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: low wage worker/minimum wage Wage Board event
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 10:13:25 AM
Attachments: WageBoardRemarksFri10AM.docx
ATT00001.htm

Draft attached.

One big policy flag is whether call for living wage for every worker is the right way to be put what we're calling for.

Adding JDC, who is happy to stay looped on this throughout.

As for me, I'll have train internet for the next 1.5 hours or so - but feel free to give me a buzz after that if you want to talk anything through, etc.

Thanks all!

Mayor Bill de Blasio
Wage Board Remarks
Friday 10AM

Acknowledgements TK

Two months ago today, something special happened...
Something big

From coast to coast, in large cities and small towns, people from all walks of life stood together in solidarity.

The cause was simple, but so important: a $15 minimum wage for fast food workers... for ALL workers in America.

In all, 60,000 people came together for the Fight for Fifteen day. Six-zero-thousand.

That's enough people to fill Madison Square Garden...
Three times!

Cynics called demands for a $15 minimum wage unrealistic... Said it'd never happen.

Well, in just two months, two of America's biggest and most important cities – Los Angeles and St. Louis – have already taken important steps towards raising city minimum wages to $15 an hour for everyone who works there.

As we speak, many other cities are working on plans to do the same.

What's happening feels remarkable, but really, it shouldn't. These cities are responding to the demands of their people.

It's time that New York does the same.

There's nothing unreasonable about demanding a wage you can live on.

And let me tell you, in New York City, $8.75 is not a many can live on... and certainly not a wage that anyone can raise a family on.

My Administration is squarely focused on addressing the income inequality crisis in our city and taking dead aim the Tale of Two Cities that New York has become.

That's meant:

- Free, full-day pre-k for every family that wants it;
- Expanded after-school programs for middle schoolers, so working parents know their kids are safe and learning;
- An affordable housing plan that creates or preserves 200,000 affordable units over a decade;
- More guaranteed benefits workers need and deserve, like paid sick leave and family leave.

These are just some of important steps that we've taken in the last 17 months... and will continue to relentlessly address the crisis of our time.

But there is nothing that would do more to combat inequality in New York City than raising the minimum wage so it reaches $15 an hour, while indexing to inflation.

Raising wages for fast food workers would be a great and important first step.

Fast food workers put in long hours, working under difficult and often thankless circumstances.

Moreover, the vast majority of fast food workers are employed by multibillion corporations that can certainly afford to pay a little more.

I implore the Wage Board to grant fast food workers the right of a living wage. And that means raising it to $15 an hour.

And as much as fast food workers deserve a raise – and they do – we'd be remiss to only focus our attention on this one sector of our economy.

We all must do more to ensure that EVERY worker gets a living wage.

Let me give you three reasons why I believe this is so important.

First, it's an issue of basic fairness.

Too many pundits glibly dismiss the minimum wage as an issue only effecting only young people – as though high schoolers working summer jobs fill every minimum wage position.

The problem with that thinking is that it's totally disconnected from reality.

Want proof? The New York Post – that bastion of leftist thought – recently reported a study by the Economic Policy Institute that found:

- 89% of minimum wage earners nationwide are over the age of 20;
- 37% are over the age of 40;
- 57% work full-time;
- Nearly three-in-ten are raising at least one child.

The Wage Board has heard the stories of workers struggling tirelessly to make ends meet. They are heartbreaking, but they should also inspire all of us to action.

After all, when we talk about raising the minimum wage, we're talking about lifting the floor for so many of our brothers and sisters... and for their kids.

It's the right thing to do.

Second, low wages mean that governments must intervene – and spend money – just to help working people keep their heads above water.

New York spends about $700 million dollars every year on programs aimed at helping the working-poor in the fast food industry (CHECK).

That is tantamount to a government subsidy for multibillion corporations that certainly don't need the assistance.

And to those on the right that say government assistance like welfare robs recipients of their dignity, here's an easy way to remedy that problem: make sure workers get the wages they deserve.

Raising the minimum wage will give governments more resources to invest in the things that improve all of our qualities of life like education and infrastructure.

It's the right thing to do.

Third, raising the minimum wage is good economics.

Henry Ford, the noted anti-capitalist crusader that he was, paid his assembly-line workers what in 2015 dollars would be about $125 a day.

He didn't do it to be charitable. He did it because he wanted to keep his workers happy and productive, and to make sure that they could be a part of his growing customer base by having enough money to actually purchase the cars they built.

This model worked out pretty well for Ford, I'd say.

Today, more than ever, we live in a consumer-driven economy.

A more modern radical socialist, billionaire investor Nick Hanauer, traveled all the way from Seattle to testify before New York's Wage Board.

In 2013, Nick wrote an article entitled "The Capitalist's Case for a $15 Minimum Wage."

In it, he laid out a compelling argument, not based on fairness, but on raw economics.

He noted QUOTE "Raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour would inject about $450 billion into the economy each year." END QUOTE

As a major investor, you can see why he feels so strongly about this issue.

He also pointed out that a study found that raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour would directly or indirectly help 81 million Americans – almost two thirds of our workforce.

Raising the minimum wage is good economics.

It is the Right. Thing. To. Do.

For me, and for millions of others, there really shouldn't be a debate on this issue.

The people are demanding higher wages. They are not requesting it, or begging for it... They are demanding it.

And since we live in a democracy, I think it's best for all of us in positions of leadership – including those on the Wage Board – to heed their call.

Not just for fast food workers – but for all workers. $15 an hour, indexed locally for inflation. It's what the people want... and it's what so many need.

So let's take a big step in the right direction, together.

Thank you!

On Jun 11, 2015, at 11:44 AM, Jon Fromowitz <jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Sounds good - will do

On Jun 11, 2015, at 11:38 AM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

It's a wage board hearing on Monday. Audience will be packed with union folks and community organizers

Main messages along TPA/activist lines—he's spoken about this in TPA context quite a bit

- 1) Need to get $15 minimum across industries.
- 2) Fast food workers organizing have led the way. Great to see the energy
- 3) Need to do more

Copying Emma in case I'm missing anything. Fromo, whatever you pull together we can take from there tonight.

Thanks

Andrea Hagelgans

Office of the Mayor

Direct – 212.341.5372

Cell – 718.679.8965

ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Jon Fromowitz
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Blumm, Kate; Wolfe, Emma; John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: low wage worker/minimum wage Wage Board event
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 10:21:03 AM

Thanks!

On Jun 12, 2015, at 10:19 AM, Hagelgans, Andrea <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Thank you! Go enjoy [REDACTED]

From: Jon Fromowitz [<mailto:jfromowitz@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 10:13 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Blumm, Kate; Wolfe, Emma; John Del Cecato
Subject: Re: low wage worker/minimum wage Wage Board event

Draft attached.

One big policy flag is whether call for living wage for every worker is the right way to be put what we're calling for.

Adding JDC, who is happy to stay looped on this throughout.

As for me, I'll have train internet for the next 1.5 hours or so - but feel free to give me a buzz after that if you want to talk anything through, etc.

Thanks all!

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA signers update
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 11:05:33 AM

Excellent!! So now find a way to get some attention somewhere on that. And let's have a constant and sharp target list. Mayors of San Jose and Pittsburgh next

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 11:03 AM
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: TPA signers update

VIPs signed up over the past week:

Rashad Robinson, Executive Director, Color of Change
George Goehl, Executive Director, National People's Action
Robert Greenwald, Founder and President, Brave New Films
Ben Jealous, Partner, Kapor Capital
Marc Perrone, President, UFCW International

3,177 online signups

plus 90 VIPs

= 3,267 total people signed onto TPA

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA signers update
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 12:01:22 PM

1. We should be moving individual prog caucus members in the meantime -- unless that discomfits raul and keith
2. I'm ready anytime to do that Skype conf with the caucus, or even to go down there once our budget is done

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 11:43 AM
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA signers update

On House Progressive Caucus - I've been pushing them to vote on TPA (as Ellison said they would)... I think they're bunkered down on trade fight right now - but will give them another big nudge today...

CT budget is not done.. Malloy's been getting hammered for the tax hikes in the budget/some companies threatening to leave... He has until 6/20 to sign or veto it

From: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 11:17 AM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: TPA signers update

For example, why haven't we been more aggressive about getting more members of the House Progressive Caucus on? And when will Malloy's budget be done so I can take another pass at him?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 11:03 AM
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: TPA signers update

VIPs signed up over the past week:

Rashad Robinson, Executive Director, Color of Change
George Goehl, Executive Director, National People's Action
Robert Greenwald, Founder and President, Brave New Films
Ben Jealous, Partner, Kapor Capital
Marc Perrone, President, UFCW International

3,177 online signups

plus 90 VIPs

= 3,267 total people signed onto TPA

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Tpa
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 12:09:16 PM

LOL

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 12:08 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: Tpa

This must be a typo or something - not sure what it means pushing for deep tax cuts against the wealthy

Read more:

<http://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2015/06/hillary-clinton-2016-wonk-wa-rior-118910.html#ixzz3crfqFV82>

On 6/12/15, 12:02 PM, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>"And she'll do so with a broad progressive agenda, her advisers told >me, studded with policy proposals to be unveiled in greater depth in a >series of speeches this summer, starting with an ambitious plan to cut >student debt and lower tuition and a program to coax corporations into >paying their workers more."

>

>Read more:

><http://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2015/06/hillary-clinton-2016-wonk-w-rior-118910.html#ixzz3creJRMLQ>

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Gunaratna, Mahen
>Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:43 PM
>To: Snyder, Thomas; John Del Cecato
>Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma
>Subject: RE: Tpa

>

>FYI, looks like the wage growth policy speech, which the WSJ first >reported on, is coming in a matter of weeks, not months, per a campaign >svox. That's likely when she'll specify a minimum wage figure:

>

><http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/wonkblog/wp/2015/06/10/how-the-15-m-ini-mum-wage-could-become-a-new-dividing-line-in-the-2016-primary/>

>

>"In the coming weeks, she will lay out her specific plans for >increasing wages."

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Snyder, Thomas
>Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 9:02 PM
>To: John Del Cecato
>Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
>Subject: Re: Tpa

>
>Either she says enough and he endorses or not enough and he evades - >bringing on all sorts of controversy. May want to avoid TV
>
>Sent from my iPhone
>
>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:53 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>
>> We need to ask him what his feeling is about going on a show this >>weekend. We can jointly recommend him not doing one, but he will not >>be happy if we pocket veto
>>
>>
>>
>>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:22 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea
>>><AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> I am getting daily incoming from Sunday shows about mayor for this >>>coming sunday. When are we meeting with him about this weekend's plan?
>>>We will need to be monitoring the speech and readying response and >>>determining how we are maximizing for the issues/tpa.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Williams, Dominic; "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Wall Street Transactions Tax
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 12:25:46 PM

Flagging early because we will need to figure this out what our posture is if she ends up adopting this position:

Shot:

“Clinton’s team is also looking into various permutations of a tax on stock trades, as a way to incentivize longer-term capital investment over quick-turn profit taking in the market and buy-backs.” Politico, “Wonk Warrior”, [6/12/2015]

Chaser (old email I found from Aug 2013):

BdB was a bit caught off guard today when Ed Schultz asked him about the Wall Street tax. Luckily, Ed didn't press him when BdB dodged in his answer. BdB wanted to make sure we're doing two things:

- 1) If an MSNBC host (or any other interviewer) has a pet issue, we should flag that in the briefing and do a better job of alerting him next time
- 2) He wants a tighter response if pressed on this by progressive voices - what's our rec? See transcript below.

Thanks,

Mahen

--

ED: Alright, my solution - and you know I rail on the mayor, I rail on the city - is a transaction tax. Why are we afraid of that? Why are we afraid to tax every transaction on Wall Street for the benefit of the city? They enjoy the safety, they take home the billions - $20 billion in bonus money - I mean, come on? Why are we afraid to do that? Or what would you do?

BDB: Look, I think there's a set of options. I think income tax is the first one, I really believe that. I think it's the one you can do most quickly, most effectively, and use it to save our school system serving 1.1 million kids. There's a commuter tax, which was taken away a few years ago and should be there for the same reason you pointed out. People come into the city almost 3 million people a year - excuse me, a day - and they don't pay for the services they get.

<http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=541338de-ec65-47d3-8255-3516b11d8924>

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor's Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: Tpa
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 12:31:38 PM

I hope BdB doesn't think that she explicitly endorsed $15/hour last week. I specifically told him so via email, but he might have misunderstood.

From the transcript of yesterday's call:

"I've been very impressed by what she's said so far on criminal justice reform, voting rights, immigration reform, $15 dollar minimum wage. I'm very optimistic about where she and her campaign are going."

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:46 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: Tpa

Gotcha. So sneaky!

On 6/11/15, 1:45 PM, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>No. She didn't.

>

>She endorsed the movement in spirit during her call-in to the fast food >workers conference over the weekend, but didn't go so far as to say she >endorsed $15/hour.

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
>Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 1:45 PM
>To: Gunaratna, Mahen
>Subject: Re: Tpa

>

>She already called for $15 - no?

>

>On 6/11/15, 1:43 PM, "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>

>>FYI, looks like the wage growth policy speech, which the WSJ first >>reported on, is coming in a matter of weeks, not months, per a >>campaign spox. That's likely when she'll specify a minimum wage figure:

>>

>><http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/wonkblog/wp/2015/06/10/how-the-15-m-ini-mum-wage-could-become-a-new-dividing-line-in-the-2016-primary/>
>>
>>"In the coming weeks, she will lay out her specific plans for >>increasing wages."
>>
>>-----Original Message-----
>>From: Snyder, Thomas
>>Sent: Tuesday, June 09, 2015 9:02 PM
>>To: John Del Cecato
>>Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Wolfe, Emma; Gunaratna, Mahen
>>Subject: Re: Tpa
>>
>>Either she says enough and he endorses or not enough and he evades - >>bringing on all sorts of controversy. May want to avoid TV
>>
>>Sent from my iPhone
>>
>>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:53 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>>
>>> We need to ask him what his feeling is about going on a show this >>>weekend. We can jointly recommend him not doing one, but he will not >>>be happy if we pocket veto
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>> On Jun 9, 2015, at 8:22 PM, Hagelgans, Andrea
>>>><AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> I am getting daily incoming from Sunday shows about mayor for this >>>>coming sunday. When are we meeting with him about this weekend's plan?
>>>>We will need to be monitoring the speech and readying response and >>>>determining how we are maximizing for the issues/tpa.
>

From: John Del Cecato
To: Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: FYI - from Jeani Murray
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 1:56:11 PM

Yes

From: <Leopold>, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 1:49 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: FW: FYI - from Jeani Murray

Who are we calling? Chris?

From: B
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:36 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: FYI - from Jeani Murray

He's a good friend. And I should call

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 09:20 PM
To: B; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: FYI - from Jeani Murray

Larry Cohen has retired and new CWA pres is from NY/NJ region: Christopher Shelton. You guys might want to call and congratulate.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: NYT: House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:07:11 PM

Mayor - maybe you should shoot Robert Reich a quick note...

rreich@berkeley.edu

From: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 1:57 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: FLONYC <FLONYC@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT: House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal

Well THAT's pretty amazing! And now I guess Hillary is brilliant for hiding -- there won't be a trade bill to have to speak to

From: Clips
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 01:54 PM
Subject: NYT: House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal

House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal

NY TIMES - Jonathan Weisman

http://www.nytimes.com/2015/06/13/us/politics/obamas-trade-bills-face-tough-battle-against-house-democrats.html?smid=nytpolitics&_r=0

House Democrats rebuffed a dramatic personal appeal from President Obama on Friday, torpedoing his ambitious push to expand his trade negotiating power — and, quite likely, his chance to secure a legacy-defining trade accord spanning the Pacific Ocean.

In a remarkable rejection of a president they have resolutely backed, House Democrats voted to kill assistance to workers displaced by global trade, a program their party created and has stood by for four decades. By doing so, they brought down legislation granting the president trade promotion authority — the power to negotiate trade deals that cannot be amended or filibustered by Congress — before it could even come to a final vote.

“We want a better deal for America's workers,” said Representative Nancy Pelosi of California, the House minority leader who has guided the president's agenda for two terms and was personally lobbied by Mr. Obama until the last minute.

Republican leaders tried to muster support from their own party for trade adjustment assistance, a program they have long derided as an ineffective waste of money and sop to organized labor. But not enough Republicans were willing to save the program.

Republican leaders could still try to pass a stand-alone trade promotion bill, but that would force the Senate to take up a trade bill all over again. And without trade adjustment assistance alongside it, passing trade promotion authority in the Senate would be highly doubtful.

The vote was an extraordinary blow to Mr. Obama, who went to the Capitol on Friday morning to plead personally with Democrats to “play it straight” — to oppose trade promotion if they must but not to kill trade assistance, a move he cast as cynical. On Thursday night, he had made an unscheduled trip to the annual congressional baseball game to try to persuade Representative Nancy Pelosi of California, the minority leader.

But a president who has long kept Congress at arm’s length may have paid a price. Representative Henry Cuellar, Democrat of Texas, said Mr. Obama mustered rousing applause Friday morning as he went through the battles he had fought with fellow Democrats — on labor organizing, health care access and environmental protection. But he could not change minds.

“I wish there had been much better outreach,” Mr. Cuellar lamented.

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Cc: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: RE: TPA dates
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:09:30 PM

U
Are Egg
Hausting

What time are u back

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:09 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA dates

That would be fine - although I won't be back in the city until later in the afternoon on Sunday (tomorrow is [REDACTED])

From: <Carey>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 2:07 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: TPA dates

Do you want to do Sunday?

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 1:16 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: TPA dates

2. Would Monday be possible?

From: <Carey>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 12:47 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: TPA dates

1. September is horrendous with the Pope, 9/11 and UNGA, but let me get back to you
2. Going to add for Wednesday. Tuesday is a bit tough

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 11:07 AM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: TPA dates

1. Can I get a loose date in September that we could have MBDB available to do a screening (whether that be just a conference call, or else an in-person screening followed by Q&A) for Greenwald's "Hedge Funders vs. Kindergarten Teachers" short film? Maybe Wednesday, September 9th? It would be in NYC either way.
2. Can I get some TPA call time scheduled for early next week - maybe Tuesday? Would love 90 minutes or so for him to call through some of our people & discuss forum, next steps.

From: Leopold, Elana
To: "John Del Cecato"
Subject: RE: FYI - from Jeani Murray
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:12:22 PM

Ok got it- thanks!

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:05 PM
To: Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: FYI - from Jeani Murray

It was Jeani who suggested - and BDB agreed - and I think they were both talking about Chris

From: <Leopold>, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 1:57 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: RE: FYI - from Jeani Murray

Is that what you were suggesting?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 1:57 PM
To: Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: FYI - from Jeani Murray

I think

From: <Leopold>, Elana <ELeopold@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 1:49 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: FW: FYI - from Jeani Murray

Who are we calling? Chris?

From: B
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 9:36 PM
To: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com'; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: Leopold, Elana
Subject: Re: FYI - from Jeani Murray

He's a good friend. And I should call

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Thursday, June 11, 2015 09:20 PM

To: B; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: FYI - from Jeani Murray

Larry Cohen has retired and new CWA pres is from NY/NJ region: Christopher Shelton. You guys might want to call and congratulate.

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: NYT: House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:50:47 PM

Not really. But still glad we did what we did

From: John Del Cecato [mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 02:03 PM
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Re: NYT: House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal

Holy Canarsie, as my grandma would say!

I think you & Reich can take a modicum of credit here

From: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 1:57 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Snyder, Thomas" <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Cc: FLONYC <FLONYC@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Fw: NYT: House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal

Well THAT's pretty amazing! And now I guess Hillary is brilliant for hiding -- there won't be a trade bill to have to speak to

From: Clips
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 01:54 PM
Subject: NYT: House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal

House Rejects Trade Bill, Rebuffing Obama's Dramatic Appeal

NY TIMES - Jonathan Weisman

http://www.nytimes.com/2015/06/13/us/politics/obamas-trade-bills-face-tough-battle-against-house-democrats.html?smid=nytpolitics&_r=0

House Democrats rebuffed a dramatic personal appeal from President Obama on Friday, torpedoing his ambitious push to expand his trade negotiating power — and, quite likely, his chance to secure a legacy-defining trade accord spanning the Pacific Ocean.

In a remarkable rejection of a president they have resolutely backed, House Democrats voted to kill assistance to workers displaced by global trade, a program their party created and has stood by for four decades. By doing so, they brought down legislation granting the president trade promotion authority — the power to negotiate trade deals that cannot be amended or filibustered by Congress — before it could even come to a final vote.

“We want a better deal for America’s workers,” said Representative Nancy Pelosi of California, the House minority leader who has guided the president’s agenda for two terms and was personally lobbied by Mr. Obama until the last minute.

Republican leaders tried to muster support from their own party for trade adjustment assistance, a program they have long derided as an ineffective waste of money and sop to organized labor. But not enough Republicans were willing to save the program.

Republican leaders could still try to pass a stand-alone trade promotion bill, but that would force the Senate to take up a trade bill all over again. And without trade adjustment assistance alongside it, passing trade promotion authority in the Senate would be highly doubtful.

The vote was an extraordinary blow to Mr. Obama, who went to the Capitol on Friday morning to plead personally with Democrats to “play it straight” — to oppose trade promotion if they must but not to kill trade assistance, a move he cast as cynical. On Thursday night, he had made an unscheduled trip to the annual congressional baseball game to try to persuade Representative Nancy Pelosi of California, the minority leader.

But a president who has long kept Congress at arm’s length may have paid a price. Representative Henry Cuellar, Democrat of Texas, said Mr. Obama mustered rousing applause Friday morning as he went through the battles he had fought with fellow Democrats — on labor organizing, health care access and environmental protection. But he could not change minds.

“I wish there had been much better outreach,” Mr. Cuellar lamented.

From: Yazgi, Stephanie
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Schwartz, Regina
Subject: RE: Mayor outreach
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 3:02:52 PM

i can get you what we have if you give me a list of what cities you want him to call.
then you can create call sheets with talk points and staff if that makes sense.
i'm all transpo for 2 mos then back to immigration.
thanks!

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 11:27 AM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Mayor outreach

Heya. I'm in MPC's office today. We had talked at one point about a plan for reaching out to mayors to get them to sign onto TPA without messing up your efforts on non-TPA mayoral stuff.

Do you have a list of mayors that fit in the "gettable" category that we can have MBDB start calling? I know Pittsburgh and San Jose are on the list. I'm trying to lock down some pure TPA call time for next week & would like to get some good folks for him to call

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: My list
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 3:18:55 PM

MAYORS TO CALL RE: SIGNING ON TO TPA

Greg Stanton – Phoenix
Jim Kenney – Philadelphia
Bill Finch – Bridgeport, CT
Lovely Warren – Rochester, NY
Stephanie Miner, Syracuse, NY
Kathy Sheehan – Albany, NY
Eric Garcetti – Los Angeles
Sam Liccardo – San Jose, CA
Mike Duggan -- Detroit
Bill Peduto – Pittsburgh
Francis Slay – St. Louis

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Snyder, Thomas; Walzak, Phil; Hagelqans, Andrea
Subject: Politico magazine piece - key lines excerpted by me at top
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 3:29:55 PM

The goal, according to a dozen people close to the process who spoke to POLITICO, is to find the “sweet spot”—bold solutions that aren’t too bold.

====

But the team is less enamored with provocative Stiglitz proposals like breaking up big banks, as Sanders proposed, or jacking up corporate tax rates on companies that pay their executives too much.

====

Clinton’s team is also looking into various permutations of a tax on stock trades, as a way to incentivize longer-term capital investment over quick-turn profit taking in the market and buy-backs.

====

Obama’s victorious 2012 reelection, was rooted in a pledge to raise high-end taxes, and he’s told his new colleagues that the environment is even more favorable now.

====

Yet, by the same token, many liberal Democrats, including Warren and de Blasio—and potential big-money donors to Clinton-allied super PACs—are also adopting a wait-and-see approach about her.

Earlier this week de Blasio praised Sanders and said he was impressed by Clinton’s initial campaigning—but told the city press corps he won’t attend her campaign kickoff on Roosevelt Island.

When will de Blasio, campaign manager of Clinton’s 2000 Senate campaign in New York, endorse her? When she offers a “larger vision for addressing income inequality,” he said.

=====

Hillary Clinton hasn’t always been a profile in political courage, but she’s had her moments. One of them came in late December 2006, a month before Clinton announced her first run for the presidency, as she huddled with her team to discuss policy proposals to differentiate her from two rivals flanking her on the left, Barack Obama and John Edwards.

The conversation, which included former Clinton White House aides like Gene Sperling and Neera Tanden, who still have the candidate’s ear today, bogged down on the biggest, nastiest policy fight of her life, health care. Several of Clinton’s top advisers, the '90s debacle fresh in everyone's mind, counseled her to avoid proposing an individual mandate, the politically unpopular requirement that the uninsured buy insurance or face penalties.

When it came to the widely unpopular individual mandate, however, she was adamant about plowing ahead, according to a former aide who related the story. "If I run for president, I'm going to run on universal health care," Clinton told the group—and authorized attacks on her Democratic opponent Obama for opposing a mandate (he would eventually embrace it as president, much to Clinton's amusement).

"What's the point of running if I'm not going to run on universal health care?" she asked her team.

Eight years later, on the eve of Clinton's formal campaign kickoff in New York this weekend, the "what's the point of running?" question looms over the presumptive Democratic front-runner and her campaign. Over the past few months, even some of Clinton's most fervent and loyal supporters have fretted to me, over and over, that she hasn't yet articulated a compelling rationale for her second race for the White House beyond the sense that it's finally her turn and her political view that she's facing a relatively weak Republican field.

Clinton is no Teddy Kennedy, who suffered the most infamous case of lockjaw in political history when asked why he wanted to be president during the 1980 campaign; Her problem is that she's far more interested in the how than the why of the presidency, and views her greatest assets as a willingness to engage all participants in a debate and a workmanlike capacity to hammer out policy solutions. Clinton's big speech will be a rare opportunity to change that narrative. It will be held at New York's Roosevelt Island—a none-to-subtle signal that she's aligning herself with FDR, the boldest of Democratic presidents and the one who established the deepest personal connection with voters—something Clinton has struggled to do throughout her three-decade career. And she'll do so with a broad progressive agenda, her advisers told me, studded with policy proposals to be unveiled in greater depth in a series of speeches this summer, starting with an ambitious plan to cut student debt and lower tuition and a program to coax corporations into paying their workers more. Clinton's staff believes this is where the campaign will be won or lost—it will signal to voters, and to ideologically driven Obama donors, that she's every bit as committed to their cause as Elizabeth Warren or Bernie Sanders—or the Hillary Clinton of 1993 for that matter.

This isn't some pro forma exercise for Clinton, who started her professional career working on child welfare programs and sits, poolside, with briefing books when she's on vacation. Policy is what Hillary Clinton lives for, and her team is committed to portray her as a wonk warrior, which has the added virtue of being true. In 2008, the candidate emphasized her inevitability and her toughness (she was obsessed with the idea that male voters would view a woman as a weak potential commander-in-chief), but for 2016, she's building her strategy around a series of domestic policy rollouts.

How she's doing this is equally telling: Advisers told me it was an elaborate, even West Wing-style policy process, with concentric circles of advisers and pollsters who are cooking up a comprehensive economic policy, some of which will be for public consumption, some of which will be employed if she's elected. Over the past year, Clinton has quietly met with a rotating—and sharp-elbowed—cast of Democratic economic experts, pollsters, staffers and advocates to craft a just-so economic program to attack wage stagnation and economic inequality. The very explicit goal has been political: to invent a program for Clinton that captures the popular imagination—and, to no small extent, redefines a candidate with a trustworthiness problem.

“We’re talking about three- and four-hour meetings, briefing papers, weeks of back-and-forth,” says Clinton’s communications director Jennifer Palmieri, who says the candidate will unveil pieces of her agenda, one by one, in a series of events starting in July and stretching to the fall. “This is the foundational work of the election. She’s a wonk. This is stuff she loves to do.”

What’s emerging—and her staff maintains she’s made no big decisions on the stickiest subjects, such as whether to propose tax increases and Wall Street regulation—are classic Clinton thread-the-needle proposals, albeit with a slightly sharper needle, pointing unmistakably to the left.

Nobel Laureate Joseph Stiglitz had a one-on-one meeting with Clinton last December to discuss his aggressive progressive agenda, pushing for deep tax cuts against the wealthy and pay cuts for CEOs. She already knew the subject inside out, he told me, and probed him for details on how some of his proposals could be implemented. Like most of the economists and advocates she’s met with recently, Stiglitz left satisfied he’d gotten a fair hearing, but with no concrete commitment.

“I would be surprised at this point that she would want to make it clear where she is going on the specifics, so I wouldn’t expect to hear that from her anytime soon,” said Stiglitz, who worked on Bill Clinton’s economic team—then went on to become one of the country’s most influential champions of economic equality. “My sense was that she was very responsive to the overall agenda. ... It’s important for her to get elected, but we want to make sure that she understands that we have to deal with the failure of the system overall, and not just make small changes.”

The goal, according to a dozen people close to the process who spoke to POLITICO, is to find the “sweet spot”—bold solutions that aren’t too bold. She has tasked her small in-house policy team led by former State Department aide Jake Sullivan with a pragmatic mission: Attack the biggest problems—higher education debt, a tax system that encourages short-term gain over long-term investments, out-of-control CEO pay, crumbling infrastructure, the non-job-security “gig” economy, women’s pay equity—in a way that satisfies a restive left wing of the party. But do it without needlessly alienating general election voters, or potential donors.

“She wants to do just enough,” is how one New York-based Clinton donor who speaks to both Clintons regularly put it.

As important—and complex—as the health care debate was seven years ago when Clinton last ran for president, it’s dwarfed today by the sheer magnitude of the structural problems in the American economy, a sapping of dynamism and middle-income purchasing power that has given consumers (and voters) a permanent sense of the blahs, even as big banks and corporations book record profits.

Two years ago, Tanden, now the head of the Clinton-friendly Center for American Progress—who is still in frequent contact with Clinton and CAP founder John Podesta who is the campaign’s chairman—embarked on an ambitious effort to create a comprehensive Democratic blueprint for tacking these problems. The effort didn’t have Clinton's official sanction, but she was kept in the loop and its mission statement fits Clinton's own private assessment of the problem. Middle-income wage stagnation and growth that benefits only the wealthiest "is an economic problem that threatens to become a problem for [the] political system—and for the idea of democracy itself," the report found.

The report, co-authored by Larry Summers, the former treasury secretary for Clinton's husband who later emerged as a contentious leader of Obama's initial economic team in the White House and whose mere presence in Clinton's camp makes Warren and other liberals nervous, but he too was an enthusiastic backer of the campaign's pragmatic progressive approach. Many of the positions that will form the core of Clinton's platform are in it, I'm told—from phased-in minimum wage hikes pegged to local market conditions to the elimination of "carried interest" tax breaks for hedge funds to the extension of the Earned Income Tax Credit to encompass a greater number of working-class Americans.

But progressives, and many in Clinton's camp, don't merely want a carefully wrought, rational program—they crave a crusade against inequality that will unify the party and rebrand a high-odometer candidate. And they wonder if she can ever really be the apostle the party faithful crave.

Clinton can match Sanders on the finer points of policy (her college affordability plan is geared, in part, to outflank him on the left) but she's too much of an establishment figure—and maybe too rich—to authentically approximate his blue tea party populist rage. "People are just profoundly disgusted with an economy in which the rich and the corporations are doing fundamentally well and they are struggling," Sanders told me, when I asked what the crowds have been telling him at recent, well-attended campaign events.

"People don't want this system to continue, period," added Sanders who said he plans to unveil a comprehensive tax plan in the not-too-distant future. "They want the right to pay their fair share of taxes. People do want the Wall Street banks broken up... I don't want to talk about any other candidates but I've been talking about this my entire career."

Every campaign puts out some kind of big economic plan—almost all of them are pieced together, Frankenstein-like compendiums of previous programs and poll-tested formulations geared at wooing a particular voter group, and most of course have little chance of passing. Some, like Steve Forbes' "flat tax" plan in 1996, are designed to provoke a national argument, and only the rarest of them all—like Ronald Reagan's 1980 tax-cut crusade—represent the core of a campaign's actual thinking or the rebranding of a movement. A lot of Democrats think the party's 2016 platform needs to fit into that last category if Clinton is to inspire her base and reach out to disaffected working-class whites.

"I think there's an effort to create post-Obama economic agenda," says Felicia Wong, CEO of the Roosevelt Institute, a progressive think tank—and one of the dozens of outside economic advisers Clinton and her small policy staff have consulted in recent weeks. "We are talking eight years after the financial crisis—we have had sluggish growth for the majority of Americans. These are structural problems, and I have to believe ... Mrs. Clinton will recognize this."

Clinton, in a speech last month, channeled liberal economists like Thomas Picketty and Stiglitz—not to mention Elizabeth Warren, Bernie Sanders and Martin O'Malley, who are waging long-shot campaigns against Clinton from the left. "Where is it all going?” asked Clinton, referring to the sputtering recovery from the Great Recession. “Economists have documented how the share of income and wealth going to those at the very top, not just the top 1 percent but the top 0.1 percent, the 0.01 percent of the population, has risen sharply.”

Still her first big progressive test so far in this campaign ended in an incomplete: She has flatly refused to take a side in the fight over the controversial Trans-Pacific Partnership, an agreement she touted as Obama’s secretary of state, and the raging intraparty debate over whether to fast track the agreement.

The dodge confirmed longheld suspicions about Clinton on the left. Warren—who has opted for a gadfly role rather than challenging Clinton in the primary—recently told a TV interviewer, “It’s up to others to say whether they stand there as well, or if they stand in some different place,” a clear allusion to Clinton. In an email to supporters in late April, O’Malley, once a Clinton ally and now her sharpest critic, tweaked Clinton for not making a “hard choice” on the pact—a play on Clinton’s recent memoir Hard Choices. Echoing Warren, he added that “American workers... deserve to know where their leaders stand.”

Clinton’s aides are confident she can weather the storm, and quietly applauded President Obama’s recent declaration that Warren “was a politician like everybody else.”

But Warren’s ascendance is clearly a sore point with the candidate herself. Nothing annoys Clinton quite so much as hearing someone giving the upstart Massachusetts senator credit for a policy stance Clinton herself espoused years earlier.

Recently, when an adviser mentioned Warren was receiving plaudits for a mortgage relief proposal, an exasperated Clinton asked a staffer to “dig up my 2007 [housing] plan”—and distribute it to reporters.

For the most part, however, Clinton has courted, not confronted, the left. Her policy shop has already laid out a series of proposals geared toward energizing the party’s base (and denying the progressive high ground to Sangers and O’Malley), mostly by doubling down on many of the measures already adopted by the Obama administration: Last week, for example, she unveiled a plan for automatic voting registration and blasted states, like Ohio, which have restricted ballot access. She also came out early in favor of same-sex marriage and LGBT rights—renouncing her husband’s Defense of Marriage Act, and vowed to expand Obama’s immigration reform executive order if she inherits a recalcitrant GOP Congress.

She has also surrounded herself with leading progressive theorists and researchers. Arguably, the most influential thinker Clinton’s orbit these days is Harvard professor and political scientist Robert Putnam, whose recent work on the lack of social mobility in underprivileged communities has captured her imagination and influenced her approach to policy prescriptions.

Clinton—who devoured his most recent book Our Kids: The American Dream in Crisis, met with Putnam for several hours in May and peppered him with questions about his research, which have centered on the structure of families and the role of a parents’ educational attainment in determining the economic mobility of their children. She has also rekindled a relationship with Harvard economist Lawrence Katz, who was the chief economist at her husband’s labor department and has also studied the link between economic opportunity and mobility. Another economist Clinton is close to: CAP's Heather Boushey, who has studied the impact of economic inequality and families.

But tougher issues lie just ahead—especially for a candidate who's going to run on her work credentials. Stiglitz, with the support of Warren and New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, put out his own report on how to tackle inequality. It covered much of the same territory as the CAP report—but featured more radical solutions. Clinton's team took it seriously, and have grilled Stiglitz and his team repeatedly on the proposals. One advocate told me they have been especially intrigued by his criticism of intellectual property rights protections in international trade agreements, which Stiglitz believes constrain innovation and investment.

But the team is less enamored with provocative Stiglitz proposals like breaking up big banks, as Sanders proposed, or jacking up corporate tax rates on companies that pay their executives too much. The emphasis, people close to the process say, is on a slightly less nasty-sounding campaign for “corporate responsibility,” using leverage in the tax code to level the playing field to bend Wall Street toward economic justice. Clinton and her small team are gaming out dozens of ideas in a series of conference calls and memos, but a few have emerged as favorites, including a proposal floated by Maryland Democratic Rep. Chris Van Hollen to strip tax deductions from companies who don't provide reasonable raises for workers. Clinton's team is also looking into various permutations of a tax on stock trades, as a way to incentivize longer-term capital investment over quick-turn profit taking in the market and buy-backs.

It's a complex undertaking, and Clinton's policy chief Jake Sullivan has organized the effort to resemble a through-appropriate-channels paper trail that resembles the process Clinton used as first lady and in her Senate office.

There has been the usual jockeying for position in Clinton's circle, a practice campaign chairman John Podesta recently told a friend was equivalent to the “junior high school lunchroom stuff.” But so far, it's been a pretty no-drama operation, especially compared with the relative free-for-all of the 2008 campaign.

The policy process Clinton had developed is modeled on the way her husband and his White House staff ran the National Economic Council, which in turn, had been borrowed from the process used by the National Security Council. It's no accident that Sullivan, the hyper-organized aide tasked with running the policy operation in Brooklyn, was often Clinton's proxy at Situation Room meetings when he was at the State Department.

Sullivan may be a fast study but he is relatively inexperienced in domestic policy, so he's being assisted by two trusted outsiders who serve as standby advisers for the staff and Clinton herself—CAP's Tanden and Gene Sperling, who recently left the Obama administration where he served as head of the NEC.

An occasional adviser is Larry Summers, but his role has largely been confined to offering his expertise to staffers who requiring on-the-fly macro economics seminars, according to people familiar with the situation.

Summers, whose bid to become Fed chairman was derailed by Warren, is anathema to the left who sees him as a protector of the Wall Street status quo—but Clinton has pointedly told critics that she won't allow outside opinions to limit the people she talks to. Nonetheless, Summers, back at Harvard, is not considered particularly influential at the moment, even though both Clintons respect his counsel.

“Larry is trying to elbow his way in,” is how one senior Democrat described the situation.

If there's a tug-of-war inside Clinton's campaign, it's over just how far she can afford to go. Clinton, as she did in 2008, is often the one who pumps the brakes; people close to her say she often asks aides to game out the backlash against any given proposal, and sends their memos back with a raft of questions and information requests.

But many on Clinton's team believe she has wide latitude for action, especially when it comes for taxing the super-rich in new and creative ways, citing public and private poll data; indeed, chief pollster Joel Benenson's last presidential campaign, Obama's victorious 2012 reelection, was rooted in a pledge to raise high-end taxes, and he's told his new colleagues that the environment is even more favorable now.

Yet there are obvious political reasons for Clinton not to rush out a detailed set of proposals that might stoke rather than settle intraparty tensions, at least on such lightning-rod subjects as inequality-busting tax policy or cracking down on over-the-top CEO pay.

She also wants to quantify the threat posed by the left wing of the party—to see how much enthusiasm Sanders and O'Malley generate. As importantly, she needs to see how the Republican field shakes out—and which issues emerge from the GOP debates, which begin in late summer.

Yet, by the same token, many liberal Democrats, including Warren and de Blasio—and potential big-money donors to Clinton-allied super PACs—are also adopting a wait-and-see approach about her.

Earlier this week de Blasio praised Sanders and said he was impressed by Clinton's initial campaigning—but told the city press corps he won't attend her campaign kickoff on Roosevelt Island.

When will de Blasio, campaign manager of Clinton's 2000 Senate campaign in New York, endorse her? When she offers a "larger vision for addressing income inequality," he said.

Read more: http://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2015/06/hillary-clinton-2016-wonk-warrior-118910_Page3.html#ixzz3csUO6xz8

From: Hinton, Karen
To: "John Del Cecato"; Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\); Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 3:30:23 PM

I'm fine. Let's get this out soonest.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 3:23 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Trade bill just killed!

Tweaking a bit... Adding Dom for his policy eye

The House's vote to reject this provision was the right call. Trade is a crucial part of our economy -- but it must be done the right way. We simply cannot rush into trade deals that hand new power to giant multinational corporations at the expense of American workers, consumers, and the environment.

From: <Spitalnick>, "Amy (OMB)" <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 2:54 PM
To: "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Phillip Walzak <pwalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

Keeping it short and sweet, unless there's anything folks want to add?

The House's vote to reject this deal was the right decision. Trade is a crucial part of our economy -- but it must be done the right way. We simply cannot rush into trade deals that could undermine the jobs of American workers and fail to rein in the excesses of giant multinational corporations.

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:25 PM
To: 'Hinton, Karen'; Phillip Walzak; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

We'll circulate a draft soon.

From: Hinton, Karen [<mailto:KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:17 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

Amy doing. John, you want to give you a line or two?

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:10 PM
To: Hinton, Karen; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

Crib from transcript!
KH – assign it out to press team

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:08 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

I'm definitely game. Can someone write?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:06 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Trade bill just killed!

We should put out a statement from MBDB, right?? The conference call definitely didn't hurt!

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Adams, Marti
Subject: RE: staffing this weekend
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 4:21:47 PM

Sure

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 4:17 PM
To: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Adams, Marti
Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: staffing this weekend

Flagging that Mayor is doing Brooklyn Pride tomorrow night which means he likely will get Qs about HRC and Albany

Karen—is it possible for you to attend tomorrow’s events? Street re-naming and then Brooklyn Pride?

JDC/Mahen—will you be available to monitor HRC remarks and helping with any responses we may need to provide?

Thanks

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Hinton, Karen
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; John Del Cecato \(jfdc@akpdmedia.com\); Walzak, Phil; Adams, Marti
Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: RE: staffing this weekend
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 4:27:26 PM

I can't do street renaming. Jerikda is going. We aren't doing q/a. I will staff the q/a before the parade that night.

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 4:17 PM
To: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com); Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Adams, Marti
Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: staffing this weekend

Flagging that Mayor is doing Brooklyn Pride tomorrow night which means he likely will get Qs about HRC and Albany

Karen—is it possible for you to attend tomorrow's events? Street re-naming and then Brooklyn Pride?

JDC/Mahen—will you be available to monitor HRC remarks and helping with any responses we may need to provide?

Thanks

Andrea Hagelgans
Office of the Mayor
Direct – 212.341.5372
Cell – 718.679.8965
ahagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov

From: Spitalnick, Amy \(OMB\)
To: Hinton, Karen; "John Del Cecato"; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic
Cc: Boeglin, Rosemary
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 4:34:22 PM

Can we get this out?

From: Hinton, Karen [<mailto:KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 3:31 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Phillip Walzak; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic
Cc: Boeglin, Rosemary
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

He just did stand up with ABC, NBC, and NY One. Talked trade. Rosemary will send around an audio.

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 3:23 PM
To: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB); Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Williams, Dominic
Subject: Re: Trade bill just killed!

Tweaking a bit... Adding Dom for his policy eye

The House's vote to reject this provision was the right call. Trade is a crucial part of our economy -- but it must be done the right way. We simply cannot rush into trade deals that hand new power to giant multinational corporations at the expense of American workers, consumers, and the environment.

From: <Spitalnick>, "Amy (OMB)" <SpitalnickA@omb.nyc.gov>
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 at 2:54 PM
To: "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Phillip Walzak <pwalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Wolfe, Emma" <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

Keeping it short and sweet, unless there's anything folks want to add?

The House's vote to reject this deal was the right decision. Trade is a crucial part of our economy -- but it must be done the right way. We simply cannot rush into trade deals that could undermine the jobs of American workers and fail to rein in the excesses of giant multinational corporations.

From: Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:25 PM
To: 'Hinton, Karen'; Phillip Walzak; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

We'll circulate a draft soon.

From: Hinton, Karen [<mailto:KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:17 PM
To: Phillip Walzak; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Spitalnick, Amy (OMB)
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

Amy doing. John, you want to give you a line or two?

From: Walzak, Phil
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:10 PM
To: Hinton, Karen; 'John Del Cecato'; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

Crib from transcript!
KH – assign it out to press team

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:08 PM
To: 'John Del Cecato'; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: RE: Trade bill just killed!

I'm definitely game. Can someone write?

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:06 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Trade bill just killed!

We should put out a statement from MBDB, right?? The conference call definitely didn't hurt!

From: Carey, Michael
To: "John Del Cecato"
Cc: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: RE:
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 5:26:14 PM

Thursday more likely.
Friday is [REDACTED]

Michael Paul Carey
Director of Scheduling and Advance
City Hall
New York, New York 10007
212.341.5396

-----Original Message-----

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 5:25 PM
To: Carey, Michael
Cc: Snyder, Thomas
Subject:

Is mbdb able to meet with Geri Prado re on thurs or fri?

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: you're welcome!
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 6:02:13 PM

I will sign any pledge you put in front of me!

On Jun 12, 2015, at 5:57 PM, Yazgi, Stephanie <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Remember that!

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 5:57 PM
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: you're welcome!

You rock!!

On Jun 12, 2015, at 5:53 PM, Yazgi, Stephanie <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Title	Name	City	State	Party	Cell
Mayor	Greg Stanton	Phoenix	AZ	D
Mayor	Jim Kenney	Philadelphia	PA	D
Mayor	Bill Finch	Bridgeport	CT	D
Mayor	Lovely Warren	Rochester	NY	D
Mayor	Stephanie Miner	Syracuse	NY	D
Mayor	Kathy Sheehan	Albany	NY	D
Mayor	Eric Garcetti	Los Angeles	CA	D
Mayor	Sam Liccardo	San Jose	CA	D
Mayor	Mike Duggan	Detroit	MI	D
Mayor	Bill Peduto	Pittsburgh	PA	D
Mayor	Francis Slay	St. Louis	MO	D

From: John Del Cecato
To: Yazgi, Stephanie
Subject: Re: can you send me materials for mayor duggan to review befor emayor calls him?
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 6:55:02 PM

www.ProgressiveAgenda.us has good stuff!

Not 100 percent sure we will get to Duggan - but will do my best

On Jun 12, 2015, at 6:51 PM, Yazgi, Stephanie <syazgi@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

He wants reading material ;)
He is stoked about the call

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: ABC 7: DE BLASIO STRESSES NEED FOR RENT REGULATIONS FOR SENIORS
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 7:47:35 PM

You got it

On Jun 12, 2015, at 7:43 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Add to your plan and make it happen, gentlemen. I'm the one that wants to see constant action and growth for the TPAm go out there and create!

From: John Del Cecato [<mailto:jfdc@akpdmedia.com>]
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 06:41 PM
To: Snyder, Thomas
Cc: B
Subject: Re: ABC 7: DE BLASIO STRESSES NEED FOR RENT REGULATIONS FOR SENIORS

Yes!!

On Jun 12, 2015, at 6:25 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I'm glad you liked that. I want to do it on TPA at some point.

From: B
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 2:48 PM
To: Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen; Wolfe, Emma; Snyder, Thomas; Blumm, Kate
Cc: FLONYC
Subject: Fw: ABC 7: DE BLASIO STRESSES NEED FOR RENT REGULATIONS FOR SENIORS

For the record: I LOVE tele-town halls!!!! And I love AARP!! 14,000 people on one call is breathtaking. Let's do more of these kinds of things! Well done

From: Clips
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 02:34 PM

Subject: ABC 7: DE BLASIO STRESSES NEED FOR RENT REGULATIONS FOR SENIORS

DE BLASIO STRESSES NEED FOR RENT REGULATIONS FOR SENIORS

ABC 7 - Staff

<http://7online.com/news/mayor-stresses-need-for-rent-regulations-for-seniors/780273/>

With rent regulations set to expire, some New York City officials at City Hall were trying to ensure on Friday that special services if that should happen.

In Albany, state lawmakers have broken off work for the weekend without reaching a compromise on extending the city's rent control regulations, which are set to expire on Monday.

The Assembly has approved an extension, but the Senate has yet to take up any proposal. Lawmakers have floated a short-term extension to give them more time to consider changes.

Letitia James, a public advocate, said Friday that a "failure to extend rent regulations will cause anxiety and insecurity amongst for millions of New Yorkers."

"We want tenants to know that they will have legal protections and recourses to stay in their apartments," she said.

The rent regulation laws are being hotly debated by legislators in Albany. Gov. Andrew Cuomo and Assembly Democrats favor strengthening those laws so that fewer units can be deregulated.

The mayor spoke with seniors Friday morning, pushing his support for the extension of city rent regulations.

On Friday morning, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio was on a conference call with 14,000 New York seniors urging Albany and Cuomo to act on rent regulations. De Blasio said it is critical for all New Yorkers, especially seniors.

"Let's be very blunt about this," he said. "If rent regulations are not renewed, and that comes up this Monday, then everyone that has a lease in New York City with rent regulation would only get to keep their apartment with the current rent level through the end of that lease. At that point it would to go market rate."

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen; FLONYC; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma
Subject: Re: Robby Mook
Date: Friday, June 12, 2015 9:08:23 PM

Agreed. Excellent people - both of them. And yet we must always remember that staff don't always speak for their principals. I learn that over and over.

On Jun 12, 2015, at 8:42 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Impressively high-road of them. And the smart thing to do. People who are serious about this work know to keep the door very open when it comes to these endorsement dynamics -- and Robby and Jen are serious people

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 08:37 PM
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: John Del Cecato (jfdc@akpdmedia.com) <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Wolfe, Emma Subject: Re: Robby Mook

Robby quote:

"Bill de Blasio is a very good friend...I—speaking of campaign teams—I remember bringing up a whole caravan of cars to help volunteer on his public advocate race. And he has a lot going in running New York City, so he's busy with that. He's being a strong advocate on a lot of issues. As I said earlier, that's great. We all have the same goal here, and that's to get the stack unstacked against the middle class. And I know Bill is on that team. And like I said, he's a great friend. And we look forward to continuing that dialogue with him."

And in response to non-endorsement: "You're going to have to ask the mayor about his endorsement plan. Again, I think we are on the same team and on the same page."

Jen Palmieri called you "an important progressive voice" and, when asked if you're non-endorsement was orchestrated with the campaign, laughed and replied, "it's never that interesting."

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 12, 2015, at 7:03 PM, Gunaratna, Mahen <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Robby Mook was asked about your non-endorsement of HRC during a Politico Q&A this evening in NYC. His response:

- “Bill de Blasio is a very good friend...He has a lot going on, you know with running NYC”
- He noted your strong advocacy on a number of issues, said you’re a strong advocates for the middle class
- “We’re all on the same team and on the same page”
- “You’re going to have to ask the Mayor about his endorsement plans”

Let me know if you want a full transcript.

Thanks,

Mahen

--

Mahen Gunaratna

Director of Research and Media Analysis
Mayor’s Press Office | City Hall
mgunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov
(212) 676-3154 (o) | (347)-268-4295 (c)

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
To: B; Hinton, Karen
Cc: Kadushin, Peter; Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael; Gunaratna, Mahen; "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Re: Q/A at parade
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 7:56:38 AM

They have not released a specific time but it is likely between 12-3 based on their requests at that time to limit overhead noise/helicopters.

From: B
Sent: Saturday, June 13, 2015 07:53 AM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Cc: Kadushin, Peter; Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael; Gunaratna, Mahen; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Q/A at parade

Your call, guys. Happy to be there when you need me. And definitely want updates on Hillary's speech. What time will it be?

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 10:28 PM
To: Hinton, Karen; B
Cc: Kadushin, Peter; Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael; Gunaratna, Mahen; 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Subject: Re: Q/A at parade

We'll prepare responses to HRC questions given post-speech timing.

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 08:55 PM
To: B
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; Kadushin, Peter; Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael; Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Q/A at parade

Mr. Mayor, I recommend you do a q/a before the parade on legislative agenda so we give TV more time to prepare their stories.

That means arriving at parade at 7.

Phil and I discussed doing a q/a at street naming earlier but thought it was not appropriate.

Karen

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 12, 2015, at 8:06 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Great job, Mahen! And my message to AMC: the truth hurts...

From: Hinton, Karen
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 07:55 PM
To: Gunaratna, Mahen
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; B; Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif; Walzak, Phil
Subject: Re: CAPITAL: Wolfson attacks Cuomo's new stance on pensions

This is great. Tks.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 12, 2015, at 7:48 PM, Gunaratna, Mahen
<MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

Sir – Please see below for some research on Cuomo's hypocrisy/flip-flop on this issue. Per your request, we updated it with more of his direct statements from 2010 to 2014 – and will continue adding to it. The team has already been feeding much of this info to Albany and Room 9 reporters.

--

GOVERNOR CUOMO'S HYPOCRISY ON PENSIONS

In 2011, Governor Cuomo embarked on a two year quest to reform the State's pension benefits, in an effort to protect New York State's cities and local governments from the runaway costs of growing pension benefits. Cuomo's proposals built on the "Tier 3" pension for Police and Fire employees, and Cuomo celebrated the passage of a final reform that spread that "Tier 3" model to all uniformed New York City workers. Cuomo hailed his reforms, declaring the days of unfunded pension benefit enhancements that impact local government budgets over. Now, Cuomo is seeking to turn his back on his own reforms, and on his commitment to not saddling local governments with the costs of deal made but not paid for by Albany politicians.

CUOMO SPOKE OUT AGAINST PENSION EXCESSES AND WASTE AND FRAUD AS NEW YORK ATTORNEY GENERAL

As Attorney General, Cuomo Launched Probe into Pension

Padding. “Without naming names or identifying the employing agency, Cuomo cited examples of a police officer with a $74,000 annual base salary receiving another $125,277 in overtime, a sanitary district official who got more than $50,000 on top of a $150,000 salary, and a water department worker who received $30,000 on top of a $40,000 salary, all in efforts to boost final pension payments. "Some public employees may boost their income toward the end of their careers by monopolizing overtime shifts and other pension-padding practices, which in turn raises their pension benefits," said Cuomo, a Democrat who is expected to announce his candidacy for governor next month. "This type of manipulation causes a one-two punch to the taxpayer - first through unnecessarily high payroll costs for the public employer and then again through artificially inflated pension payouts," he continued. Cuomo cited data showing that the state has the highest overall pension costs in the nation - $486 per person.” “Attorney General Andrew Cuomo yesterday began a probe of one of the longest-running scams in public employment history: dramatic hikes in overtime in the last years on the job in order to bloat final pension payments. Cuomo's probe into what he called "pension padding" and "pension spiking" deals with the manipulation of both salary and overtime payments "that leads to inflated pensions at the expense of the taxpayers." [NY POST, 3/19/10] News Release, [3/18/10]

As Attorney General, Cuomo was Heavily Involved in Reforming the Abusive Disability Pension Practice of the LIRR, Stating, "Taxpayers, and My Office, Will Not Put up with a Culture of Entitlement and Unchecked Systemic Abuses of Disability Benefits." At the time, Cuomo said, “The appointment of an independent examiner is an important step to ending waste and abuse, and I am pleased to have the cooperation of the LIRR in this regard.” “Attorney General Andrew M. Cuomo today announced that the Long Island Rail Road ("LIRR") has agreed to appoint an independent examiner and implement other reforms to address abuses of the occupational disability benefits system for retirees and help ensure that benefits are available only to those who truly are disabled. This agreement comes as part of Attorney General Cuomo's investigation into the findings that a disproportionately high number of LIRR employees applied for and received occupational disability benefits from the United States Railroad Retirement Board ("RRB"), a federal agency. The LIRR has agreed to retain an independent examiner to design a compliance program and recommend controls at the LIRR. The moves are to help address the problems with the occupational disability benefits that were uncovered by the Attorney General's investigation and highlighted in a public hearing in Long Island conducted by the Attorney General and attended by five members of Congress. More than 90% of LIRR retirees applied for disability benefits from the RRB to supplement their pension - a disproportionately high percentage in relation to other railroads - and the RRB approved almost every application for the benefit. The investigation also exposed a cottage industry that has developed among certain doctors and consultants to assist LIRR employees in exploiting the system.” News Release, [3/22/10]

As Attorney General, Cuomo Said, “If Any Abuse Exists in the Pension System, However, It Is Important That It Is Purged and That Taxpayer Dollars are Protected.” “Attorney General Andrew M. Cuomo today announced an expansion of his ongoing efforts to root out fraud and abuse in the New York State pension system. For the past three years, the Attorney General has led efforts to investigate and reform the New York State pension system and the New York State Comptroller's Office. Today the Attorney General continued his investigation into "pension padding" or "pension spiking" by sending letters to 11 local government employers and authorities that have some of the highest salary or pension payments in the state. Pension padding is the practice of manipulating salary and overtime payments to acquire inflated pensions at the expense of taxpayers. The letters seek payroll and related data for pension recipients... In a separate ongoing investigation, Attorney General Cuomo uncovered abuses by independent contractors throughout the state who defrauded the pension system by holding themselves out as public employees entitled to pension benefits, resulting in the return of over $1.9 million to taxpayers through actions involving the conduct of more than 70 attorneys and other professionals. As a permanent fix, the Attorney General spearheaded legislative reform to curb pension fraud and rein in double-dipping. Another investigation explored abuses of federal disability benefits by Long Island Rail Road ("LIRR") retirees. Recently, the Attorney General obtained an agreement with the LIRR that requires it to appoint an independent examiner and implement reforms to help address abuses of the disability benefits system.” News Release, [3/24/10]

As Attorney General, Cuomo Said, "We Must Make Sure that Taxpayers Are Not Saddled with Any Artificially Inflated Bills.” “My office will continue our efforts to ensure that our pension system, which controls $130 billion and serves more than 1 million people across the state, is efficient and waste-free.” “Attorney General Andrew M. Cuomo today announced that his investigation into the manipulation of salary and overtime payments that leads to inflated pensions at the expense of taxpayers, known as "pension padding" or "pension spiking," has expanded to include more than two dozen additional localities across New York state. Cuomo, whose investigation into pension padding commenced in March, is sending letters to 25 additional entities that have some of the highest proportions of pension costs in the state. The letters seek payroll and related data for pension recipients from localities in Western New York, Rochester and surrounding areas, Central New York, the Southern Tier and the Capital Region. A full list of the 64 localities that have received letters thus far can be found below... According to recent census data, New York State had an overall pension cost of

$486 per resident in 2007, which was the highest in the nation. The New York State Common Retirement Fund ("CRF"), which funds the Employees' Retirement System ("ERS") and the Police & Fire Retirement System ("PFRS"), has assets of approximately $130 billion and covers more than 1 million members and retirees from more than 3,000 government employers. The CRF is primarily funded by taxpayers who pay an estimated $2.5 billion to the fund each year. Pension payments to retirees in ERS and PFRS have increased from $3.5 billion in 1999 to more than $7.3 billion in 2009. New Yorkers end up bearing the burden caused by excesses in pensions through increases in their property taxes. New Yorkers already face some of the highest property taxes in the nation. Although pension costs typically make up only about 2 percent of expenditures in cities, towns, counties, and villages, in certain localities pension costs represent over 7 percent of expenditures. In light of these rising pension costs, state and local employers will be required to make significantly higher contributions to fund the state pension system starting in 2011. For public employers participating in ERS, their mandated contributions will increase from 7.4 percent of payroll to 11.9 percent of payroll; for those participating in PFRS the costs will go from 15.1 percent to 18.2 percent. There is currently a striking variance in levels of retirement benefits paid across the State. The average annual public pension payment in New York State is approximately $25,000, but pensions paid to some individual retirees top $300,000 per year and some retirees end up receiving more in pension than they received in salary." Press Release, [4/1/10]

On Disability Pension Fraud, Attorney General Cuomo, said, "Disability and Pension Fraud is Getting Worse and Worse... The State Has to Fight Fraud and Cut Costs. We Cannot Afford these Pensions." "We are releasing a report next week that covers pension and disability fraud. It's a big problem. Disability and pension fraud is getting worse and worse. The state has to fight fraud and cut costs. We cannot afford these pensions." "The retired FDNY lieutenant who pockets $86,000 a year in disability payments from the city but still manages to compete in grueling road races and triathlons illustrates the need for serious pension reform, Mayor Bloomberg said yesterday... State Attorney General Andrew Cuomo yesterday said that pension fraud is a major problem that his office will tackle in an upcoming report. NY POST, [7/7/10]

On Pension Padding, Attorney General Cuomo Said, "It is Widespread. It is Chronic...It Should Have Been Stopped a Long Time Ago. It is at a Point Now Where it is Unbearable." "Government employees around the state - from commissioners to toll collectors to mechanics - are padding their lifelong pensions by working huge amounts of overtime right before they retire, Attorney General Andrew Cuomo reported yesterday. "It is widespread. It is chronic," Cuomo warned. "It should have been stopped a long time ago. It is at a point now where it is unbearable." Cuomo's investigators found two distinct patterns in 28 of 50 state agencies, localities, authorities and municipalities they probed - employees who either boosted their OT dramatically in their immediate pre-retirement years or suddenly started working long hours when they had never done so before." NY POST, [7/8/10]

Gov. Cuomo Claimed NYS Has “Zero Tolerance for Waste and Fraud When it Comes to Pension Systems,” in Relation to LIRR Disability Pension Scandal, Citing His Actions As Attorney General. "During my tenure as Attorney General, we investigated and, exactly three years ago today, held hearings that revealed systemic abuse of the federal railroad pension system involving LIRR workers in a practice we termed 'disability by appointment.' These arrests continue to show that we have zero tolerance for waste and fraud when it comes to pension systems." Official Statement, [10/27/11]

CUOMO LED CHARGE FOR PENSION REFORM IN 2012 AS GOVERNOR

Cuomo in 2012: “The Pension System As We Know It Is Unsustainable.” "The numbers speak for themselves – the pension system as we know it is unsustainable..." [Governor.ny.gov, Accessed 5/15/15]

Cuomo in 2012 On Proposed Pension Changes: “Common-Sense Reforms.” "This bill institutes common-sense reforms to bring government benefits more in line with the private sector while still serving our employees and protecting our retirees." [Governor.ny.gov, Accessed 5/15/15]

Cuomo in 2012: Pension Reform Will Help Control Local Taxes. "Reducing the skyrocketing pension burden faced by local governments and schools will also help get control of local property taxes that are driving New Yorkers from their homes and from the state." [Governor.ny.gov, Accessed 5/15/15]

Cuomo: “This Is Going To Be A Big Change...We Don’t Have A Choice.” Bent on reform as a remedy for budgetary ills and expensive bureaucracy, a hard-charging Gov. Cuomo Tuesday proposed landmark changes to the public pension system and the way teachers are graded for performance..."Everything is the way it is in this system because it's been in place there for years, with money, power . . . and this is going to be a big change," he told lawmakers. "I also believe - and I say this sincerely - that we really don't have a choice."

UNIONS RAISED CONCERNS THEN...

AP: Unions Criticized Cuomo's Plan. Unionized state workers have criticized Democratic Gov. Andrew Cuomo's pension proposal, arguing a new lower tier was enacted only two years ago, most pensions are less than $30,000 and defined benefit plans like theirs are critical to middle-class retirement security. AP, [1/24/12]

Cassidy On Cuomo Proposal: Will Throw Survivors Of Future Firefighters "Under The Bus." Those concepts have rankled some powerful unions, and will undoubtedly lead to legislative battles with their lawmaker allies. Uniformed Firefighters Association President Steve Cassidy seethed over the pension proposal. "This legislation, if enacted, will throw the widows and children of future firefighters killed in the line of duty under the bus." NY Daily News, [1/18/12]

RATHER THAN REJECTING TIER III-VI, CUOMO'S LANDMARK REFORMS BUILT ON IT

Cuomo Extended Tier III-VI Structure To New Unions.

Cuomo Proposed To Extend Tier III-VI Accidental Disability Provisions To Corrections Officers and Sanitation Workers in 2011Governor's Program Bill Memo, 2011, Description of [§ 6-e, 6-f, 6-g]

Cuomo Succeeded In Extending Tier III-VI Accidental Disability Provisions To Corrections Officers and Sanitation Workers in 2012 Governor's Program Bill Memo #32, Description of [§13, 14, 15]

Cuomo Sought His Own Changes To Make Tier III-VI Even Less Costly

Cuomo Succeeded In Further Diminishing the Tier III Benefit in His 2012 Tier VI Reform, Changing The Final Average Salary Calculation To Further Limit Pension Costs and Spiking. Governor's Program Bill Memo #32, Description of [§20]

Cuomo's Reforms Put Prohibition On Unfunded Pension Enhancements In Law

Cuomo Proposed To Protect Local Governments From Unfunded Pension Enhancement in 2011 Reform Proposal. Section 29 of Cuomo's 2011 bill provides that no enhancements, increases, or changes to the bill's benefit structure shall be authorized. Governor's Program Bill Memo, 2011, Description of [§ 29]

Cuomo Succeeded In Protecting Local Governments From Unfunded Pension Enhancement, Committing State To Funding Any Pension Enhancements or Sweeteners in 2012. Section 81 of

Cuomo's 2012 law provides that no enhancements, increases, or changes to the bill's benefit structure shall be authorized. Section 81-A mandates that the State prepay the cost of any pension sweeteners. Section 81-B allows all pension fund members to make extra contributions to receive additional pension benefits, but excludes police and fire members from that provision. [Governor's Program Bill Memo #32, Description of §81, 81-A, 81-B]

CUOMO HAS CONSISTENTLY TOUTED HIS PENSION REFORMS, BOTH AS A CANDIDATE AND AS GOVERNOR

Gov. Cuomo Vowed to "Rein In" Pension-Padding as Part of 2010 Gubernatorial Campaign. "Indeed, so corrosive has pension-padding become that Attorney General Andrew Cuomo has built his campaign for governor partly on a vow to rein it in - especially overtime abuses, which jack up salaries that determine benefits. And launched a probe of the practice. "Some workers across the state are significantly inflating their pensions by dramatically increasing their overtime hours in the final few years of employment," a Cuomo press release in July warned." NY POST, [9/7/10]

Gov. Cuomo Vowed to "Reform the N.Y. State Pension System." "Cuomo spokesman Josh Vlasto said New Yorkers' property taxes can't continue to increase at the same rate they have over the past decade. "Governor-elect Cuomo will put forward a comprehensive plan to cap property taxes, reduce state mandates to lower local governments' costs, reform the N.Y. state pension system and empower citizens to consolidate unnecessary levels of government," Vlasto said in an e-mailed statement." [Press & Sun-Bulletin, 12/15/10]

Gov. Cuomo Proposed Counteracting "Rapidly Escalating Pension Costs" with Tier VI Plan. "Pensions and employee health benefits constitute some of the fastest-rising costs facing schools, towns and counties across the state, and they represent a significant piece of the property tax burden shouldered by New Yorkers. State Comptroller Tom DiNapoli last September warned that the percentage of payrolls that local governments -- such as towns and counties -- must devote to pension benefits will by next February have jumped more than 30 percent in two years. And a mandate relief team set up by Gov. Andrew Cuomo wants a less-generous "Tier 6" retirement plan for future public employees in order to deal with "rapidly escalating pension costs." TIMES UNION, [4/11/11]

Introducing his Tier VI Plan, Gov. Cuomo Said: "The Numbers Speak for Themselves: The Pension System as We Know It is Unsustainable." "This bill institutes common-sense reforms to bring government benefits more in line with the private sector while still serving our employees and protecting our retirees. Reducing the skyrocketing pension burden faced by local governments and schools will also help get control of local property taxes that are driving New Yorkers from their homes and from the state." Governor Andrew M. Cuomo today announced he has introduced pension reform legislation that would impose a new Tier VI for future employees and save taxpayers $93 billion over the next 30 years, a figure that does not include New York City. These reforms will reduce costs for local governments and schools and help get control of local property taxes for homeowners and businesses across the state. The bill also includes, at the request of Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg, a separate pension reform proposal for New York City and the uniformed services. The new pension tier will increase the retirement age for new employees from 62 to 65, increase employee pension contributions and end so-called pension padding where employees accumulate substantial amounts of overtime in their final years of service to increase their pension. Press Release, [6/8/11]

Cuomo's 2014 State of the State: "The Tier VI Pension Reforms Make A Major Difference For Local Governments." We assumed a $1.2 billion cost of the Medicaid growth. We are funding $700 million in aid to localities, the Tier VI pension reforms makes a major difference for local governments. [Governor.ny.gov, 1/9/2014]

Cuomo: "Bold And Transformation Pension Reform Plan Is A Historic Win For New York Taxpayers." "This bold and transformational pension reform plan is a historic win for New York taxpayers and municipalities that will save more than $80 billion over the next 30 years, while preserving retirement security for public workers. Without this critical reform, New Yorkers would have seen significant tax increases, as well as layoffs to teachers, firefighters and police." [Governor.ny.gov, 3/15/12]

Cuomo 2014 Veto Message: "Disheartening..." To See Legislature Reverse After It "Overwhelmingly Agreed To Avoid Tossing These Burdens Onto Local Taxpayers In Cities, Towns, Counties..." "It is disheartening to see the Legislature reverse course only two years after it overwhelmingly agreed to avoid tossing these burdens onto local taxpayers in cities, towns, counties, and school districts. Our 2012 pension reforms sought to end the practice of enhancing retirement benefits through unfunded mandates that abuse local taxpayers." New York State Comptroller, [2014]

NOW HE SEEKS TO OVERTURN THE SAME POLICIES THAT HE EXTENDED

Cuomo: Uniformed Services in New York City Owed "Same Assurances Afforded to Every Other First Responder In The State." "We owe the brave men and women of our uniform services in New York City the same assurances afforded to every other first responder in the state. I agree with Pat Lynch that there should be parity for the NYPD should any of those officers be disabled in the line of duty, and it needs to be done one way or another as soon as possible.” AP, [5/14/15]

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 10:02 AM
To: B; Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen
Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen
Subject: Re: CAPITAL: Wolfson attacks Cuomo’s new stance on pensions

Mahen's team will pull

From: B
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 10:01 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Soliman, Sherif; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Fw: CAPITAL: Wolfson attacks Cuomo’s new stance on pensions

See below. We need every quote by Cuomo from 2010-2014 re: the disability bill and why he didn't act. We need to hoist him on his own words. We need to paint the picture of his hypocrisy -- now and if God forbid the bad bill passes

From: Clips
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 09:08 AM
Subject: CAPITAL: Wolfson attacks Cuomo’s new stance on pensions

Wolfson attacks Cuomo’s new stance on pensions
CAPITAL NY - Sally Goldenberg, Laura Nahmias
<http://www.capitalnewyork.com/article/albany/2015/06/8570059/wolfson-attacks-cuomos-new-stance-pensions>

Mayor Bill de Blasio is getting a rare boost from a top Bloomberg aide, as former deputy mayor Howard Wolfson called Governor Andrew Cuomo's embrace of disability pension reform that police and fire unions are clamoring for "surprising and disappointing from a taxpayer perspective."

"If you look at the national landscape, I think it's fair to say that New York is the only state in the country that is proposing to increase taxpayer commitment to pensions," Wolfson, who current works for Bloomberg, told Capital in a phone interview Thursday. "Most other states are seeking to reduce pension commitments, some of whom are on the verge of bankruptcy, like Illinois. So the discussion we're having about pensions in New York is very unusual in the national context."

"I continue to be very surprised at the governor's position on this issue because he was such a consistent champion of holding the line on pension increases that this is—it's so out of character," Wolfson said. "I mean, it seems very much at odds with his record on the issue, which really has been very strong."

Wolfson did not comment directly on de Blasio, who is at odds with Cuomo over the issue and is favoring a more fiscally conservative pension plan, but his comments put him on the side of City Hall in its dispute with the state.

Wolfson said that Cuomo and Bloomberg, who had a tense relationship when both were in office, had agreed on the need for pension reform to lessen the burden on taxpayers.

"When we were in City Hall, we had a real sense that he was a strong ally in trying to maintain some level of fiscal discipline around this issue, so his actions here are just very surprising," Wolfson said.

Bloomberg, who left office in a stalemate with every municipal union over contracts, often spoke of the need to lower the city's pension and health care costs.

It is unusual for anyone from the Bloomberg administration to defend de Blasio, who has often criticized his predecessor publicly. Bloomberg has largely avoided commenting on local politics, though he has allowed aides, such as Wolfson, to occasionally defend his record, and did criticize Governor Cuomo earlier this year for his decision to ban hydrofracking statewide and allow casinos in upstate regions.

Wolfson said he was compelled to speak about the pension dispute as a New York taxpayer and a former government official.

Cuomo, who has been engaged in a protracted battle with de Blasio on a series of other matters, has come out strongly in favor of a bill that would provide higher disability retirement benefits to uniformed workers hired after 2009. The mayor is embracing an opposing measure, which needs legislative support in Albany, to raise the post-2009 pensions more modestly.

De Blasio's budget team says the mayor's plan would cost taxpayers $1.25 billion to $2 billion over 30 years, compared to $6 billion over the same time period for the proposal Cuomo is backing.

The governor's favored plan would not require any approval from the New York City Council. De Blasio's bill passed in the Council on Wednesday in an unusually close vote of 31-17 with three abstentions.

Budget watchdogs agreed that Cuomo is flip-flopping. When he had the chance to increase disability benefits three years ago, as part of his 2012 legislation to create a new pension tier called “Tier VI,” he instead maintained cuts that were put in place during the economic downturn in 2009 by his predecessor, David Paterson. (Paterson's move first created the disparity in benefits for uniformed workers.)

“So, what used to happen was every year or two years there would be an extender that would go to the governor and put police and firefighters back in tier 2, but Paterson vetoed it in [20]09,” said Maria Doulis, director of City Studies at the nonpartisan Citizens’ Budget Commission.

“It’s not that there was a lingering mistake made in ‘09 that is being sought to be corrected now,” she added. “There was an active decision made by the governor to change the benefit levels in 2012. It’s not merely that it escaped notice since 2009.”

Cuomo attended a rally of firefighters and police officers—unions that have been in various political feuds with de Blasio over the past year—in front of the state Capitol Wednesday to support the more generous proposal introduced by State Senator Marty Golden.

That bill would give all uniformed workers throughout the state 75-percent disability pensions. Currently those hired after 2009 get 50 percent of their salaries if they are injured in the line of duty, and the pensions are further offset by Social Security benefits.

De Blasio's plan would increase the pensions to three-quarters for those who are severely injured and unable to work again, but would maintain them at 50 percent for everyone else. Those employees would see other changes, such as an elimination of the reduction from Social Security and a calculation that would base their pensions on the basic maximum salary a worker could receive. (The latter is a nod to workers with few years on the job.)

Cuomo said at the rally Wednesday that every other municipality had those benefits.

He called Paterson’s maneuver a “mistake,” and said the state would “do the right thing” by uniformed workers, describing the current state of New York City officers’ benefits as “blatantly unfair.”

“How do you justify paying the New York City police and firefighters less than everyone else in the state?” Cuomo said. “I understand the state had a fiscal crisis, but you have to be fair. You have to be decent with people.”

When Cuomo was asked by reporters Wednesday why he hadn’t addressed the disability benefits changes back in 2012, he said “It didn't come up. Or, it didn't come up that I had heard about it.”

A de Blasio administration spokeswoman said the mayor's pension proposal was more in keeping with the reforms Cuomo himself championed three years ago.

“The Mayor’s proposal delivers for our workers without rolling back Governor Cuomo’s vital reforms to our pension system to protect the taxpayer—reforms that the legislature itself passed and the Governor signed only a few years ago,” said Amy Spitalnick, a spokeswoman for the mayor.

A spokeswoman for Cuomo's office declined to comment.

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Hinton, Karen
Subject: Gina Belafonte
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 9:00:49 AM

Good stuff...

New York

Cuomo's Housing Game

Protesters in Albany this month criticized the governor for his ties to a real estate empire.

NATHANIEL BROOKS FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

JUNE 12, 2015

0

Big City If your Internet wanderings this week happened to land you on the web page for the governor of New York, you would have immediately found images of Andrew M. Cuomo scouring the bowels of the Clinton Correctional Facility, immersing his head in the pipes and looking like Tommy Lee Jones in "The Fugitive."
By GINIA BELLAFAI

The dramatic escape made by two inmates from the upstate prison last weekend seemed to be keeping the governor very busy. In a news conference on Wednesday, one of several media appearances he has made since the break, Mr. Cuomo announced that the prisoners, both serving terms for murder, may or may not have been headed to Vermont and that they were "nothing to be trifled with."

South of Dannemora, where the conference was held, in Albany and New York City, housing activists and thousands of those affected by rent regulations — set to expire on Monday if the State Legislature fails to take action — were hardly distracted.

On June 3, 55 people, including Councilman Jumaane D. Williams, a Brooklyn

Democrat, were arrested outside the governor's office in Albany during a protest in support of strengthening tenant protections. The disenchanted hung banners around the capital designating Mr. Cuomo "Governor Glenwood," a reference to the real estate empire that has poured millions into state politics and reaped the benefits of a tax program — the controversial 421-a — also set to expire on Monday in the absence of an extension.

Mr. Cuomo's recent positions on housing policy have seemed ironic and confounding and largely informed by his adversarial relationship with Mayor Bill de Blasio, a fellow Democrat. Though a recipient of major donations from developers and no enemy of tax breaks, Mr. Cuomo said two weeks ago that he considered the reformulation of the 421-a abatement, as conceived by Mr. de Blasio last month, "a giveaway to developers."

Under the proposal delivered to Albany by the city, the 421-a program would require developers to produce more units of "affordable housing" to receive credits — the goal is to double the number of affordable apartments built through the program. It would also eliminate tax breaks for building condominiums and end the practice of the "poor door" — separate entrances linked to income. For all of this, developers would receive an extension of the tax benefit to 35 years from the current 25. If the program continues as it is, it will swaddle developers with money, with little required in return.

In "My Affordable Housing Agenda," an op-ed piece by Mr. Cuomo in The Daily News last weekend, he outlined his résumé on the subject, talking about the passion he has held for it "for over 30 years." He worried about the "foundation of a vibrant middle class" becoming "a distant memory," and called for the elimination of vacancy control or at least a significant increase of its threshold (the rent at which a vacant regulated apartment can be converted to market-rate) from the current $2,500 a month. Not long before the op-ed, though, he proposed raising the threshold only to $2,700, an increase housing activists considered useless.

"Moving the threshold a few hundred dollars isn't going to help us at all," Delsenia Glover, campaign manager for the Alliance for Tenant Power, said. In 2011, even as the threshold was raised $500 to $2,500, she said, 35,000 units vanished from regulatory control. And since then, rents have only grown in New York.

Despite his professed concern over escalating rents, the governor has said virtually nothing specific about how he might reconfigure the 421-a program or ensure, before the final hour, that rent regulation is improved. He suggested that 421-a was essentially a lost cause at the moment, because of gridlock in the Legislature related to corruption scandals. Seemingly out of fear of alienating the building trades, Mr. Cuomo previously denounced the mayor's plan, for failing to mandate the use of union labor, which obviously drives up costs, as part of the 421-a package. ("It's very challenging to build middle-class housing when property taxes consume 33 percent of actual income or you're obligated to pay carpenters $130 an hour," said David Kramer, president of the Hudson Companies, a developer of affordable housing in the city.)

When asked by one reporter whether there was any sense of progress on rent regulations in the Senate, Mr. Cuomo responded: "I don't play that game anymore. It's either done or it's not done." But of course, playing the game, as he did to such success over passage of gay-marriage legislation, has been a singular dimension of his political style.

At risk for Mr. Cuomo is support among Democrats in New York City, who now form his strongest base. This month, his approval rating dropped to its lowest, a Quinnipiac poll found. Only 44 percent of respondents said they approved of how he was handling his job — a six-point drop from March. His approval rating in New York City was 52 percent, but that support is likely to evaporate in the absence of movement on housing issues.

"Rent-regulated tenants in New York City are fed up with his inaction," Ms. Glover said. "The next time he runs for anything else, we'll organize against him unless he does something."

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B
Cc: Hagelgans, Andrea; FLONYC; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: HRC speech
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 12:53:40 PM

Sorry, typo. Stock buybacks.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 13, 2015, at 12:49 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

"Job buybacks" or "stock buybacks"??

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Saturday, June 13, 2015 12:42 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; B; FLONYC
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: HRC speech

Rough notes below:

Notes – HRC Official Announcement Speech

- INTRO: Thanks New Yorkers for giving her the honor of representing them in the Senate for eight years
- Notes she's giving speech in a park honoring FDR – and in a location with literally “no ceilings”
- Talks about FDR's legacy that has inspired many presidents – including President Obama and President Clinton
- President Roosevelt said, “There's no mystery about what it takes to build a strong and prosperous America – equality of opportunity, jobs for those who can work, security for those who need it, the ending of special privilege for the few, the preservation of civil liberties for all, a wider and constantly rising standard of living.” HRC says, “That still sounds good for me.”
- Transitions into discussing her family history – grandfather in Scranton mill, father's middle class life in Chicago
- Contrasts WJC's economic legacy with the Republican record
- Asks “Prosperity and democracy are part of your basic bargain too.”, rails against hedge fund managers and billionaires. Says, “America can't succeed until you succeed. That is why I am running for President of the United States.”
- “I'm not running for some Americans, but for all Americans”
- Says “powerful currents” have affected Americans workers, including technology and trade, which have some much good, but have also undercut wages, etc.

- Criticizes “complex trading schemes and job buybacks”, too little focus on fair compensation, etc.
- Says Americans have lost confidence and says we can blame historic forces beyond our control, but that the choices we have made also play a big role. Next President must work with Congress and every other willing partner – and she will do just that to turn the tide so these currents start working FOR us instead of AGAINST us.
- Americans don’t hide from change, we harness it. But we can’t do that if we go back to the top-down economic policies from before.
- Transitions into criticizing Republicans, says they’re listening to the song “Yesterday” – criticizes them specifically on climate change, Wall Street reform, health care reform, women’s health, immigration, LGBT rights.
- Says she measures success not by the wealthy, but by how many children climb out of poverty, how many startups, how many college students aren’t drowning in debt, how many families get ahead.
- Transitions into talking about her mother – how her parents abandoned her, how her mother started working at age 14.
- Says, in much the same way that folks believed in her mother and helped her succeed, HRC believes in every American.
- As a law student, advocates for farmworkers. First job out of law school was for Children’s Defense Fund going door to door. Defended the right for poor people to have a lawyer. In Arkansas, supervised law students who advocated for prisoners, personally knew people whose lives were improved. As senator, represented firefighters, EMTs, construction workers who ran toward danger on 9/11 and stayed there, becoming sick themselves. Took years of effort, but Congress finally approved the health care they needed.
- So many faces and stories of people who gave their best, but still needed help themselves. Cites story of single mom who approached her three weeks ago asking what could be done – “I want to be her champion and your champion.”
- “If you give me a chance, I’ll wage and win four fights for you”:
- 1. Make economy work for everyday Americans, not just those at the top – growth and fairness go together; can’t have one without the other; possible in today’s world? I believe it is, but I don’t think it will be easy; “We can’t stand by while inequality increases, wages stagnate, etc.”; says we need everyone to come to the table and, in the coming week, she’ll unveil specifics to propose incentives for businesses to promote long-term sustainability instead of short-term profits, guarding against offshoring of jobs, new incentives to companies that give their employees a fair share of the profits, unleash a new generation of entrepreneurs and small biz owners and making it easier to secure loan, restore America to cutting edge of innovation, science, and research by increasing both public and private investments; make America the clean-energy superpower of the 21st century. Cites bringing broadband to 21st century. Establishing infrastructure bank. SUPPORTS UNIVERSAL PRE-K AND QUALITY CHILD CARE FOR EVERY CHILD IN AMERICA. Research tells us how much early learning in the first five years in life can impact lifelong success – 80% of your brain develops by age three. Talent is universal, but opportunity is not. Too many of our kids never have the chance to learn and thrive. Country won't be competitive if we don't help our kids. Let's staff our primary and secondary schools with teachers who get respect. Let's make college affordable and available to all and lift the crushing burden of student debt. Let's provide life-long learning.

- 2. STRENGTHEN AMERICA'S FAMILIES BECAUSE WHEN OUR FAMILIES ARE STRONG, AMERICA IS STRONG – “I believe you should have the right to earned paid sick days. I believe you should receive your work schedule with enough notice to arrange child care or take college courses to get ahead.”; should look forward to retirement without anxiety; health care without breaking the bank; “I believe we should offer paid family leave, so no one has to choose between keeping a paycheck and caring for a new baby or sick relative”; way past time to end outrage of women earning less than men on the job; women of color often making even less; not a women's issue, it's a family issue. Just like raising the minimum wage is a family issue; expanding child care of a family issue; declining marriage rates is a family issue; era of incarceration is a family issue; helping more people with a mental health problem is a family issue. Law-abiding immigrant families should be afforded a path to citizenship, not second-class status. Ban discrimination against LGBT families so they can live, learn, marry, and work just like everyone else.
- 3. TO HARNESS AMERICAS SMARTS AND VALUES, TO HARNESS FOR PEACE, PROSPERITY, AND SECURITY – “As your president, I'll do whatever it takes to keep America safe”, says if you look over her left shoulder, you can see the new WTC soaring skyward”; says she devoted herself to helping NYC and NYS what it needed to recover from 9/11; when our brave men and women come home from war, she will see to it that they receive care and benefits they've earned; I've stood up to adversaries like Putin and was in the Situation Room the day we got Bin Laden; “I know we have to be smart as well as strong”; future holds far more opportunities than threats if we leverage rather than being shaped by global threats
- 4. REFORMING OUR GOVERNMENT AND REVITALIZING OUR DEMOCRACY SO IT WORKS FOR EVERYDAY AMERICANS – stop the endless flow of secret, unaccountable money that is distorting our democracy; need Supreme Court Justices that will protect every citizen's right to vote; if necessary, I will support a constitutional amendment to undue the Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United; want to make it easier for every citizen to vote; universal automatic voter registration and early voting; fight back against R effort to curtail voting for people of color, etc. What part of democracy are they afraid of? Says, for all the problems we have in America, there are folks who are figuring our solutions. Washington should catch up. We need to fight against partisanship, says she will seek common ground, but also stand her ground when needed. What she did as Secretary of State. “We Americans may differ, bicker, stumble, and fall – but we are at our best when we pick each other up and have each other's backs”
- CONCLUSION: We can win these four fights if we all do our part. Invites Americans to join her in this effort – help her build this campaign and make it your own. “I've spent my life fighting for children, families, and our country – and I’m not stopping now.” “Well, I may not be the youngest candidate in this race...but I will be the youngest woman president in the history of the United States. And the first grandmother as well!” Jokes about how her hair won’t go gray in the White House because she’s been coloring it for years. Says she will be a President for all Americans. Says she won’t get everything right, says she’ll make her fair share of mistakes. But leadership means perseverance. Has been called many things by many people, but “quitter” is not one of them. Says she wishes her mother could have lived to see “the America that we’re going to build together”. An American in which a father could tell his daughter, “Yes, you can be anything you want to be, even President of the United States.”

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Saturday, June 13, 2015 11:31 AM
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael
Subject: HRC speech

Speech set to start shortly. Team will send you updates

From: Hinton, Karen
To: Hinton, Karen
Cc: Gunaratna, Mahen; Hagelgans, Andrea; FLONYC; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: HRC speech
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 1:12:56 PM

Minus mayor

One press inquiry for react. Bloomberg's Henry Goldman. He was swooning with how great the speech was in terms of Mayors TPA.

TV at parade and other print will likely want react but I don't think we have to say much except we like what we hear.

To feed the beast, we should write general statement and send out to those who Want.

Thoughts
Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 13, 2015, at 12:49 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

"Job buybacks" or "stock buybacks"??

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Saturday, June 13, 2015 12:42 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; B; FLONYC
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: HRC speech

Rough notes below:

Notes – HRC Official Announcement Speech

- INTRO: Thanks New Yorkers for giving her the honor of representing them in the Senate for eight years
- Notes she's giving speech in a park honoring FDR – and in a location with literally “no ceilings”
- Talks about FDR's legacy that has inspired many presidents – including President Obama and President Clinton
- President Roosevelt said, “There's no mystery about what it takes to build a strong and prosperous America – equality of opportunity, jobs for those who can work, security for those who need it, the ending of special privilege for the few, the preservation of civil liberties for all, a wider and constantly rising standard of living.” HRC says, “That still sounds good for me.”

Transitions into discussing her family history – grandfather in Scranton mill, father’s middle class life in Chicago

- Contrasts WJC’s economic legacy with the Republican record
- Asks “Prosperity and democracy are part of your basic bargain too.”, rails against hedge fund managers and billionaires. Says, “America can’t succeed until you succeed. That is why I am running for President of the United States.”
- “I’m not running for some Americans, but for all Americans”
- Says “powerful currents” have affected Americans workers, including technology and trade, which have some much good, but have also undercut wages, etc.
- Criticizes “complex trading schemes and job buybacks”, too little focus on fair compensation, etc.
- Says Americans have lost confidence and says we can blame historic forces beyond our control, but that the choices we have made also play a big role. Next President must work with Congress and every other willing partner – and she will do just that to turn the tide so these currents start working FOR us instead of AGAINST us.
- Americans don’t hide from change, we harness it. But we can’t do that if we go back to the top-down economic policies from before.
- Transitions into criticizing Republicans, says they’re listening to the song “Yesterday” – criticizes them specifically on climate change, Wall Street reform, health care reform, women’s health, immigration, LGBT rights.
- Says she measures success not by the wealthy, but by how many children climb out of poverty, how many startups, how many college students aren’t drowning in debt, how many families get ahead.
- Transitions into talking about her mother – how her parents abandoned her, how her mother started working at age 14.
- Says, in much the same way that folks believed in her mother and helped her succeed, HRC believes in every American.
- As a law student, advocates for farmworkers. First job out of law school was for Children’s Defense Fund going door to door. Defended the right for poor people to have a lawyer. In Arkansas, supervised law students who advocated for prisoners, personally knew people whose lives were improved. As senator, represented firefighters, EMTs, construction workers who ran toward danger on 9/11 and stayed there, becoming sick themselves. Took years of effort, but Congress finally approved the health care they needed.
- So many faces and stories of people who gave their best, but still needed help themselves. Cites story of single mom who approached her three weeks ago asking what could be done – “I want to be her champion and your champion.”
- “If you give me a chance, I’ll wage and win four fights for you”:
- 1. Make economy work for everyday Americans, not just those at the top – growth and fairness go together; can’t have one without the other; possible in today’s world? I believe it is, but I don’t think it will be easy; “We can’t stand by while inequality increases, wages stagnate, etc.”; says we need everyone to come to the table and, in the coming week, she’ll unveil specifics to propose incentives for businesses to promote long-term sustainability instead of short-term profits, guarding against offshoring of jobs, new incentives to companies that give their employees a fair share of the profits, unleash a new generation of entrepreneurs and small biz owners and making it easier to secure loan, restore America to cutting edge of innovation, science, and research by increasing both public and private investments; make America the clean-energy superpower of the 21st century. Cites bringing broadband to 21st century. Establishing infrastructure bank. SUPPORTS UNIVERSAL PRE-K AND QUALITY CHILD CARE FOR EVERY CHILD IN AMERICA. Research tells us how much early learning in the first five years in life can impact lifelong success – 80% of your brain develops by age three. Talent is universal, but opportunity is not. Too many of our kids never have the chance to learn and thrive. Country won't be competitive if we don't help our kids. Let's staff our primary and secondary schools with teachers who get respect. Let's make college affordable and available to all and lift the crushing burden of student debt. Let's provide life-long learning.

- 2. STRENGTHEN AMERICA'S FAMILIES BECAUSE WHEN OUR FAMILIES ARE STRONG, AMERICA IS STRONG – “I believe you should have the right to earned paid sick days. I believe you should receive your work schedule with enough notice to arrange child care or take college courses to get ahead.”; should look forward to retirement without anxiety; health care without breaking the bank; “I believe we should offer paid family leave, so no one has to choose between keeping a paycheck and caring for a new baby or sick relative”; way past time to end outrage of women earning less than men on the job; women of color often making even less; not a women's issue, it's a family issue. Just like raising the minimum wage is a family issue; expanding child care of a family issue; declining marriage rates is a family issue; era of incarceration is a family issue; helping more people with a mental health problem is a family issue. Law-abiding immigrant families should be afforded a path to citizenship, not second-class status. Ban discrimination against LGBT families so they can live, learn, marry, and work just like everyone else.
- 3. TO HARNESS AMERICAS SMARTS AND VALUES, TO HARNESS FOR PEACE, PROSPERITY, AND SECURITY – “As your president, I'll do whatever it takes to keep America safe”, says if you look over her left shoulder, you can see the new WTC soaring skyward”; says she devoted herself to helping NYC and NYS what it needed to recover from 9/11; when our brave men and women come home from war, she will see to it that they receive care and benefits they've earned; I've stood up to adversaries like Putin and was in the Situation Room the day we got Bin Laden; “I know we have to be smart as well as strong”; future holds far more opportunities than threats if we leverage rather than being shaped by global threats
- 4. REFORMING OUR GOVERNMENT AND REVITALIZING OUR DEMOCRACY SO IT WORKS FOR EVERYDAY AMERICANS – stop the endless flow of secret, unaccountable money that is distorting our democracy; need Supreme Court Justices that will protect every citizen's right to vote; if necessary, I will support a constitutional amendment to undue the Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United; want to make it easier for every citizen to vote; universal automatic voter registration and early voting; fight back against R effort to curtail voting for people of color, etc. What part of democracy are they afraid of? Says, for all the problems we have in America, there are folks who are figuring our solutions. Washington should catch up. We need to fight against partisanship, says she will seek common ground, but also stand her ground when needed. What she did as Secretary of State. “We Americans may differ, bicker, stumble, and fall – but we are at our best when we pick each other up and have each other’s backs”

- CONCLUSION: We can win these four fights if we all do our part. Invites Americans to join her in this effort – help her build this campaign and make it your own. “I’ve spent my life fighting for children, families, and our country – and I’m not stopping now.” “Well, I may not be the youngest candidate in this race...but I will be the youngest woman president in the history of the United States. And the first grandmother as well!” Jokes about how her hair won’t go gray in the White House because she’s been coloring it for years. Says she will be a President for all Americans. Says she won’t get everything right, says she’ll make her fair share of mistakes. But leadership means perseverance. Has been called many things by many people, but “quitter” is not one of them. Says she wishes her mother could have lived to see “the America that we’re going to build together”. An American in which a father could tell his daughter, “Yes, you can be anything you want to be, even President of the United States.”

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Saturday, June 13, 2015 11:31 AM
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael
Subject: HRC speech

Speech set to start shortly. Team will send you updates

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Re: Correction needed - CNN wire story
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 1:36:15 PM

Might be local reporter. She's at Ashley.Forest@wreg.com

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 13, 2015, at 1:35 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

>

> I'll say!

>

>

>

>> On Jun 13, 2015, at 1:34 PM, Gunaratna, Mahen <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

>>

>> "New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, who's supporting Vermont Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders in the Democratic field, will notably not be attending Saturday's rally."

>>

>> <http://wreg.com/2015/06/13/at-first-rally-hillary-clinton-looks-to-give-rationale-for-2016-quest/>

>>

>> Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: B; Snyder, Thomas
Subject: TPA update
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 3:14:27 PM

Tom & I met on Friday to flesh out some of the ideas. Here's the topline summary:

1. Presidential forum - do it in Iowa. Harkin and/or Trumka as co-sponsors. Bill Moyers as moderator.
2. Tele-Town Halls - awesome, easy way to get people/Iowans to sign onto TPA.
3. Narrow down early state effort to single issue - i.e., Caucus Against Loopholes.
4. TPA Call Time. It's been canceled for tomorrow, but we should do ASAP - asking what people thought of HRC speech, where TPA should go, & urge them to do media. Then Team TPA follows up.
5. TPA fundraising & staffing — need both, in a big way, to do stuff above. Geri Prado in NYC late in the week to meet with you.

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: Hinton, Karen; Hagelgans, Andrea; Walzak, Phil; Carey, Michael
Subject: Re: HRC speech
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 3:27:57 PM

For ending tax breaks for companies that shop jobs overseas, she did mention "rewrite the tax code so it rewards hard work and investments here at home, not quick trades or stashing profits overseas."

Will send transcript shortly.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 13, 2015, at 3:19 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

By the numbers, at least from what I remember

The Progressive Agenda To Combat Income Inequality

<!--[if !supportLists]-->1. <!--[endif]-->Lift the Floor for Working People

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation. (MENTIONED MIN WAGE HIKE, BUT NOT $15)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class. (NO MENTION)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers. (CHECK)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment. (NO MENTION)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Invest in schools, not jails -- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison. (MENTIONED MASS INCARCERATION BROADLY, NOT SECOND-CHANCE LEGISLATION)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->2. <!--[endif]-->Support Working Families

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Pass national paid sick leave. (CHECK - BROADLY)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Pass national paid family leave. (CHECK - BROADLY)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal. (BIG CHECK, NO MENTION, AND BIG CHECK)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit, and protect and expand Social Security. (NO MENTION)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college. (CHECK)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->3. <!--[endif]-->Tax Fairness

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Close the carried interest loophole. (REFERENCED, BUT NOT STATED)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas. (NOT MENTIONED)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Implement the "Buffett Rule" so millionaires pay their fair share. (NOT MENTIONED)

<!--[if !supportLists]-->• <!--[endif]-->Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of "performance pay" write-offs. (REFERENCED CEO PAY, NOTHING MORE)

###

From: <Hinton>, "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 at 1:12 PM

To: "Hinton, Karen" <KHinton@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Cc: "Gunaratna, Mahen" <MGunaratna@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, FLONYC <FLONYC@cityhall.nyc.gov>, John Del Cecato

<jfdc@akpdmedia.com>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Carey, Michael" <MPCarey@cityhall.nyc.gov>

Subject: Re: HRC speech

Minus mayor

One press inquiry for react. Bloomberg's Henry Goldman. He was swooning with how great the speech was in terms of Mayors TPA.

TV at parade and other print will likely want react but I don't think we have to say much except we like what we hear.

To feed the beast, we should write general statement and send out to those who Want.

Thoughts

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 13, 2015, at 12:49 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

"Job buybacks" or "stock buybacks"??

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
Sent: Saturday, June 13, 2015 12:42 PM
To: Hagelgans, Andrea; B; FLONYC
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmedia.com' <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Carey, Michael
Subject: RE: HRC speech

Rough notes below:

Notes – HRC Official Announcement Speech

- INTRO: Thanks New Yorkers for giving her the honor of representing them in the Senate for eight years
- Notes she's giving speech in a park honoring FDR – and in a location with literally “no ceilings”
- Talks about FDR's legacy that has inspired many presidents – including President Obama and President Clinton
- President Roosevelt said, “There's no mystery about what it takes to build a strong and prosperous America – equality of opportunity, jobs for those who can work, security for those who need it, the ending of special privilege for the few, the preservation of civil liberties for all, a wider and constantly rising standard of living.” HRC says, “That still sounds good for me.”
- Transitions into discussing her family history – grandfather in Scranton mill, father's middle class life in Chicago

- Contrasts WJC's economic legacy with the Republican record
- Asks "Prosperity and democracy are part of your basic bargain too.", rails against hedge fund managers and billionaires. Says, "America can't succeed until you succeed. That is why I am running for President of the United States."
- "I'm not running for some Americans, but for all Americans"
- Says "powerful currents" have affected Americans workers, including technology and trade, which have some much good, but have also undercut wages, etc.
- Criticizes "complex trading schemes and job buybacks", too little focus on fair compensation, etc.
- Says Americans have lost confidence and says we can blame historic forces beyond our control, but that the choices we have made also play a big role. Next President must work with Congress and every other willing partner – and she will do just that to turn the tide so these currents start working FOR us instead of AGAINST us.
- Americans don't hide from change, we harness it. But we can't do that if we go back to the top-down economic policies from before.
- Transitions into criticizing Republicans, says they're listening to the song "Yesterday" – criticizes them specifically on climate change, Wall Street reform, health care reform, women's health, immigration, LGBT rights.
- Says she measures success not by the wealthy, but by how many children climb out of poverty, how many startups, how many college students aren't drowning in debt, how many families get ahead.
- Transitions into talking about her mother – how her parents abandoned her, how her mother started working at age 14.
- Says, in much the same way that folks believed in her mother and helped her succeed, HRC believes in every American.
- As a law student, advocates for farmworkers. First job out of law school was for Children's Defense Fund going door to door. Defended the right for poor people to have a lawyer. In Arkansas, supervised law students who advocated for prisoners, personally knew people whose lives were improved. As senator, represented firefighters, EMTs, construction workers who ran toward danger on 9/11 and stayed there, becoming sick themselves. Took years of effort, but Congress finally approved the health care they needed.
- So many faces and stories of people who gave their best, but still needed help themselves. Cites story of single mom who approached her three weeks ago asking what could be done – "I want to be her champion and your champion."
- "If you give me a chance, I'll wage and win four fights for you":
- 1. Make economy work for everyday Americans, not just those at the top – growth and fairness go together; can't have one without the other; possible in today's world? I believe it is, but I don't think it will be easy; "We can't stand by while inequality increases, wages stagnate, etc."; says we need everyone to come to the table and, in the coming week, she'll unveil specifics to propose incentives for businesses to promote long-term sustainability instead of short-term profits, guarding against offshoring of jobs, new incentives to companies that give their employees a fair share of the profits, unleash a new generation of entrepreneurs and small biz owners and making it easier to secure loan, restore America to cutting edge of innovation, science, and research by increasing both public and private investments; make America the clean-energy superpower of the 21st century. Cites bringing broadband to 21st century. Establishing infrastructure bank.

SUPPORTS UNIVERSAL PRE-K AND QUALITY CHILD CARE FOR EVERY CHILD IN AMERICA.

Research tells us how much early learning in the first five years in life can impact lifelong success – 80% of your brain develops by age three. Talent is universal, but opportunity is not. Too many of our kids never have the chance to learn and thrive. Country won't be competitive if we don't help our kids. Let's staff our primary and secondary schools with teachers who get respect. Let's make college affordable and available to all and lift the crushing burden of student debt. Let's provide life-long learning.

- 2. STRENGTHEN AMERICA'S FAMILIES BECAUSE WHEN OUR FAMILIES ARE STRONG, AMERICA IS STRONG – "I believe you should have the right to earned paid sick days. I believe you should receive your work schedule with enough notice to arrange child care or take college courses to get ahead."; should look forward to retirement without anxiety; health care without breaking the bank; "I believe we should offer paid family leave, so no one has to choose between keeping a paycheck and caring for a new baby or sick relative"; way past time to end outrage of women earning less than men on the job; women of color often making even less; not a women's issue, it's a family issue. Just like raising the minimum wage is a family issue; expanding child care of a family issue; declining marriage rates is a family issue; era of incarceration is a family issue; helping more people with a mental health problem is a family issue. Law-abiding immigrant families should be afforded a path to citizenship, not second-class status. Ban discrimination against LGBT families so they can live, learn, marry, and work just like everyone else.
- 3. TO HARNESS AMERICAS SMARTS AND VALUES, TO HARNESS FOR PEACE, PROSPERITY, AND SECURITY – "As your president, I'll do whatever it takes to keep America safe", says if you look over her left shoulder, you can see the new WTC soaring skyward"; says she devoted herself to helping NYC and NYS what it needed to recover from 9/11; when our brave men and women come home from war, she will see to it that they receive care and benefits they've earned; I've stood up to adversaries like Putin and was in the Situation Room the day we got Bin Laden; "I know we have to be smart as well as strong"; future holds far more opportunities than threats if we leverage rather than being shaped by global threats

- 4. REFORMING OUR GOVERNMENT AND REVITALIZING OUR DEMOCRACY SO IT WORKS FOR EVERYDAY AMERICANS – stop the endless flow of secret, unaccountable money that is distorting our democracy; need Supreme Court Justices that will protect every citizen's right to vote; if necessary, I will support a constitutional amendment to undue the Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United; want to make it easier for every citizen to vote; universal automatic voter registration and early voting; fight back against R effort to curtail voting for people of color, etc. What part of democracy are they afraid of? Says, for all the problems we have in America, there are folks who are figuring our solutions. Washington should catch up. We need to fight against partisanship, says she will seek common ground, but also stand her ground when needed. What she did as Secretary of State. "We Americans may differ, bicker, stumble, and fall – but we are at our best when we pick each other up and have each other's backs"
- CONCLUSION: We can win these four fights if we all do our part. Invites Americans to join her in this effort – help her build this campaign and make it your own. "I've spent my life fighting for children, families, and our country – and I'm not stopping now." "Well, I may not be the youngest candidate in this race...but I will be the youngest woman president in the history of the United States. And the first grandmother as well!" Jokes about how her hair won't go gray in the White House because she's been coloring it for years. Says she will be a President for all Americans. Says she won't get everything right, says she'll make her fair share of mistakes. But leadership means perseverance. Has been called many things by many people, but "quitter" is not one of them. Says she wishes her mother could have lived to see "the America that we're going to build together". An American in which a father could tell his daughter, "Yes, you can be anything you want to be, even President of the United States."

From: Hagelgans, Andrea
Sent: Saturday, June 13, 2015 11:31 AM
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: 'jfdc@akpdmmedia.com'; Walzak, Phil; Hinton, Karen; Gunaratna, Mahen; Carey, Michael
Subject: HRC speech

Speech set to start shortly. Team will send you updates

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B; FLONYC
Cc: jfdc@akpdmmedia.com; Hinton, Karen; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: Transcript - HRC Official Announcement Speech
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 3:30:56 PM

Transcript: HRC Official Announcement Speech

CLINTON: Thank you! Oh, thank you all! Thank you so very, very much. (Cheers, applause.)

It is wonderful to be here with all of you.

To be in New York (cheers) with my family, with so many friends, including many New Yorkers who gave me the honor of serving them in the Senate for eight years. (Cheers, applause.)

To be right across the water from the headquarters of the United Nations, where I represented our country many times. (Cheers, applause.)

To be here in this beautiful park dedicated to Franklin Roosevelt's enduring vision of America, the nation we want to be.

And in a place... with absolutely no ceilings. (Cheers, applause.)

You know, President Roosevelt's Four Freedoms are a testament to our nation's unmatched aspirations and a reminder of our unfinished work at home and abroad. His legacy lifted up a nation and inspired presidents who followed. One is the man I served as Secretary of State, Barack Obama, (cheers, applause) and another is my husband, Bill Clinton. (Cheers, applause.)

Two Democrats guided by the -- (cheering) Oh, that will make him so happy. They were and are two Democrats guided by the fundamental American belief that real and lasting prosperity must be built by all and shared by all. (Cheers, applause.)

President Roosevelt called on every American to do his or her part, and every American answered. He said there's no mystery about what it takes to build a strong and prosperous America: "Equality of opportunity... Jobs for those who can work... Security for those who need it... The ending of special privilege for the few...(cheers, applause.) The preservation of civil liberties for all... (cheers, applause) a wider and constantly rising standard of living."

That still sounds good to me. (Cheers, applause.)

It's America's basic bargain. If you do your part you ought to be able to get ahead. And when everybody does their part, America gets ahead too.

That bargain inspired generations of families, including my own.

It's what kept my grandfather going to work in the same Scranton lace mill every day for 50 years.

It's what led my father to believe that if he scrimped and saved, his small business printing drapery fabric in Chicago could provide us with a middle-class life. And it did.

When President Clinton honored the bargain, we had the longest peacetime expansion in history, a balanced budget, (cheers, applause) and the first time in decades we all grew together, with the bottom 20 percent of workers increasing their incomes by the same percentage as the top 5 percent. (Cheers, applause.)

When President Obama honored the bargain, we pulled back from the brink of Depression, saved the auto industry, provided health care to 16 million working people, (cheers, applause) and replaced the jobs we lost faster than after a financial crash.

But, it's not 1941, or 1993, or even 2009. We face new challenges in our economy and our democracy.

We're still working our way back from a crisis that happened because time-tested values were replaced by false promises.

Instead of an economy built by every American, for every American, we were told that if we let those at the top pay lower taxes and bend the rules, their success would trickle down to everyone else. (Jeers, booing.)

What happened?

Well, instead of a balanced budget with surpluses that could have eventually paid off our national debt, the Republicans twice cut taxes for the wealthiest, borrowed money from other countries to pay for two wars, and family incomes dropped. You know where we ended up.

Except it wasn't the end.

As we have since our founding, Americans made a new beginning.

You worked extra shifts, took second jobs, postponed home repairs... you figured out how to make it work. And now people are beginning to think about their future again - going to college, starting a business, buying a house, finally being able to put away something for retirement.

So we're standing again. But, we all know we're not yet running the way America should.

You see corporations making record profits, with CEOs making record pay, but your paychecks have barely budged.

While many of you are working multiple jobs to make ends meet, you see the top 25 hedge fund managers making more than all of America's kindergarten teachers combined. And, often paying a lower tax rate.

So, you have to wonder: "When does my hard work pay off? When does my family get ahead?"

"When?"

I say now. (Cheers, applause.)

Prosperity can't be just for CEOs and hedge fund managers.

Democracy can't be just for billionaires and corporations. (Cheers, applause.)

Prosperity and democracy are part of your basic bargain too.

You brought our country back.

Now it's time -- your time to secure the gains and move ahead.

And, you know what?

America can't succeed unless you succeed. (Cheers, applause.)

That is why I am running for President of the United States. (Cheers, applause, chanting.)

Here, on Roosevelt Island, I believe we have a continuing rendezvous with destiny. Each American and the country we cherish.

I'm running to make our economy work for you and for every American.

For the successful and the struggling.

For the innovators and inventors.

For those breaking barriers in technology and discovering cures for diseases.

For the factory workers and food servers who stand on their feet all day. (Cheers, applause.)

For the nurses who work the night shift. (Cheers, applause.)

For the truckers who drive for hours and the farmers who feed us. (Cheers, applause.)

For the veterans who served our country.

For the small business owners who took a risk.

For everyone who's ever been knocked down, but refused to be knocked out. (Cheers, applause.)

I'm not running for some Americans, but for all Americans. (Cheers, applause.)

Our country's challenges didn't begin with the Great Recession and they won't end with the recovery.

For decades, Americans have been buffeted by powerful currents.

Advances in technology and the rise of global trade have created whole new areas of economic activity and opened new markets for our exports, but they have also displaced jobs and undercut wages for millions of Americans.

The financial industry and many multi-national corporations have created huge wealth for a few by focusing too much on short-term profit and too little on long-term value... too much on complex trading schemes and stock buybacks, too little on investments in new businesses, jobs, and fair compensation. (Cheers, applause.)

Our political system is so paralyzed by gridlock and dysfunction that most Americans have lost confidence that anything can actually get done. And they've lost trust in the ability of both government and Big Business to change course.

Now, we can blame historic forces beyond our control for some of this, but the choices we've made as a nation, leaders and citizens alike, have also played a big role.

Our next President must work with Congress and every other willing partner across our entire country. And I will do just that -- (cheers, applause) to turn the tide so these currents start working for us more than against us.

At our best, that's what Americans do. We're problem solvers, not deniers. We don't hide from change, we harness it. (Cheers, applause.)

But we can't do that if we go back to the top-down economic policies that failed us before.

Americans have come too far to see our progress ripped away.

Now, there may be some new voices in the presidential Republican choir, (laughter) but they're all singing the same old song...

A song called "Yesterday." (Laughter, cheers, applause.)

You know the one -- all our troubles look as though they're here to stay (laughter)... and we need a place to hide away... They believe in yesterday.

And you're lucky I didn't try singing that, too, I'll tell you! (Laughter, cheers, applause.)

These Republicans trip over themselves promising lower taxes for the wealthy and fewer rules for the biggest corporations without regard for how that will make income inequality even worse.

We've heard this tune before. And we know how it turns out.

Ask many of these candidates about climate change, one of the defining threats of our time, (cheers, applause) and they'll say: "I'm not a scientist." (Laughter.) Well, then, why don't they start listening to those who are? (Cheers, applause.)

They pledge to wipe out tough rules on Wall Street, rather than rein in the banks that are still too risky, courting future failures. In a case that can only be considered mass amnesia.

They want to take away health insurance from more than 16 million Americans without offering any credible alternative. (Booing.)

They shame and blame women, rather than respect our right to make our own reproductive health decisions. (Cheers, applause.)

They want to put immigrants, who work hard and pay taxes, at risk of deportation. (Booing.)

And they turn their backs on gay people who love each other. (Cheers, applause.)

Fundamentally, they reject what it takes to build an inclusive economy. It takes an inclusive society. (Cheers, applause.) What I once called "a village" (cheers) that has a place for everyone.

Now, my values and a lifetime of experiences have given me a different vision for America.

I believe that success isn't measured by how much the wealthiest Americans have, but by how many children climb out of poverty... (cheers, applause)

How many start-ups and small businesses open and thrive...

How many young people go to college without drowning in debt... (cheers, applause)

How many people find a good job...

How many families get ahead and stay ahead.

I didn't learn this from politics. I learned it from my own family.

My mother taught me that everybody needs a chance and a champion. She knew what it was like not to have either one.

Her own parents abandoned her, and by 14 she was out on her own, working as a housemaid. Years later, when I was old enough to understand, I asked what kept her going.

You know what her answer was? Something very simple: Kindness from someone who believed she mattered.

The 1st grade teacher who saw she had nothing to eat at lunch and, without embarrassing her, brought extra food to share.

The woman whose house she cleaned letting her go to high school so long as her work got done. That was a bargain she leapt to accept.

And, because some people believed in her, she believed in me. (Cheers, applause.)

That's why I believe with all my heart in America and in the potential of every American.

To meet every challenge.

To be resilient... no matter what the world throws at you.

To solve the toughest problems.

I believe we can do all these things because I've seen it happen.

As a young girl, I signed up at my Methodist Church to babysit the children of Mexican farmworkers, while their parents worked in the fields on the weekends. And later, as a law student, I advocated for Congress to require better working and living conditions for farm workers whose children deserved better opportunities. (Cheers, applause.)

My first job out of law school was for the Children's Defense Fund. (Cheers, applause.) I walked door-to-door to find out how many children with disabilities couldn't go to school, and to help build the case for a law guaranteeing them access to education. (Cheers, applause.)

As a leader of the Legal Services Corporation, I defended the right of poor people to have a lawyer. And saw lives changed because an abusive marriage ended or an illegal eviction stopped.

In Arkansas, I supervised law students who represented clients in courts and prisons, organized scholarships for single parents going to college, led efforts for better schools and health care, and personally knew the people whose lives were improved.

As Senator, I had the honor of representing brave firefighters, police officers, EMTs, construction workers, and volunteers (cheers, applause) who ran toward danger on 9/11 and stayed there, becoming sick themselves.

It took years of effort, but Congress finally approved the health care they needed. (Applause.)

There are so many faces and stories that I carry with me of people who gave their best and then needed help themselves.

Just weeks ago, I met another person like that, a single mom juggling a job and classes at community college, while raising three kids.

She doesn't expect anything to come easy. But she did ask me: What more can be done so it isn't quite so hard for families like hers?

I want to be her champion and your champion. (Cheers, applause.)

If you'll give me the chance, I'll wage and win Four Fights for you.

The first is to make the economy work for everyday Americans, not just those at the top. (Cheers, applause.)

To make the middle class mean something again, with rising incomes and broader horizons. And to give the poor a chance to work their way into it. (Cheers, applause.)

The middle class needs more growth and more fairness. Growth and fairness go together. For lasting prosperity, you can't have one without the other.

Is this possible in today's world? (Crowd responds.)

I believe it is or I wouldn't be standing here. (Cheers, applause.)

Do I think it will be easy? Of course not.

But, here's the good news: There are allies for change everywhere who know we can't stand by while inequality increases, wages stagnate, and the promise of America dims. We should welcome the support of all Americans who want to go forward together with us. (Cheers, applause.)

There are public officials who know Americans need a better deal.

Business leaders who want higher pay for employees, equal pay for women (cheers, applause) and no discrimination against the LGBT community either. (Cheers, applause.)

There are leaders of finance who want less short-term trading and more long-term investing.

There are union leaders who are investing their own pension funds in putting people to work to build tomorrow's economy. (Cheers, applause.) We need everyone to come to the table and work with us.

In the coming weeks, I'll propose specific policies to:

Reward businesses who invest in long term value rather than the quick buck - because that leads to higher growth for the economy, higher wages for workers, and yes, bigger profits, everybody will have a better time.

I will rewrite the tax code so it rewards hard work and investments here at home, not quick trades or stashing profits overseas. (Cheers, applause.)

I will give new incentives to companies that give their employees a fair share of the profits their hard work earns. (Cheers, applause.)

We will unleash a new generation of entrepreneurs and small business owners by providing tax relief, cutting red tape, and making it easier to get a small business loan.

We will restore America to the cutting edge of innovation, science, and research by increasing both public and private investments. (Cheers, applause.)

And we will make America the clean energy superpower of the 21st century. (Cheers, applause.)

Developing renewable power - wind, solar, advanced biofuels...

Building cleaner power plants, smarter electric grids, greener buildings...

Using additional fees and royalties from fossil fuel extraction to protect the environment... (cheers, applause)

And ease the transition for distressed communities to a more diverse and sustainable economic future from coal country to Indian country, from small towns in the Mississippi Delta to the Rio Grande Valley to our inner cities, we have to help our fellow Americans. (Cheers, applause.)

Now, this will create millions of jobs and countless new businesses, and enable America to lead the global fight against climate change. (Cheers, applause.)

We will also connect workers to their jobs and businesses. Customers will have a better chance to actually get where they need and get what they desire with roads, railways, bridges, airports, ports, and broadband brought up to global standards for the 21st century. (Cheers, applause.)

We will establish an infrastructure bank and sell bonds to pay for some of these improvements.

Now, building an economy for tomorrow also requires investing in our most important asset, our people, beginning with our youngest. (Cheers, applause.)

That's why I will propose that we make preschool and quality childcare available to every child in America. (Cheers, applause.)

And I want you to remember this, because to me, this is absolutely the most-compelling argument why we should do this. Research tells us how much early learning in the first five years of life can impact lifelong success. In fact, 80 percent of the brain is developed by age three.

One thing I've learned is that talent is universal - you can find it anywhere - but opportunity is not. (Cheers, applause.) Too many of our kids never have the chance to learn and thrive as they should and as we need them to.

Our country won't be competitive or fair if we don't help more families give their kids the best possible start in life.

So let's staff our primary and secondary schools with teachers who are second to none in the world, and receive the respect they deserve for sparking the love of learning in every child. (Cheers, applause.)

Let's make college affordable and available to all ...and lift the crushing burden of student debt. (Cheers, applause.)

Let's provide lifelong learning for workers to gain or improve skills the economy requires, setting up many more Americans for success.

Now, the second fight is to strengthen America's families, because when our families are strong, America is strong.

And today's families face new and unique pressures. Parents need more support and flexibility to do their job at work and at home. (Cheers.)

I believe you should have the right to earn paid sick days. (Cheers, applause.)

I believe you should receive your work schedule with enough notice to arrange childcare or take college courses to get ahead. (Cheers, applause.)

I believe you should look forward to retirement with confidence, not anxiety.

That you should have the peace of mind that your health care will be there when you need it, without breaking the bank. (Cheers, applause.)

I believe we should offer paid family leave (cheers, applause) so no one has to choose between keeping a paycheck and caring for a new baby or a sick relative. (Cheers, applause.)

And it is way past time to end the outrage of so many women still earning less than men on the job (cheers, applause) -- and women of color often making even less. (Cheers, applause.)

This isn't a women's issue. It's a family issue. Just like raising the minimum wage is a family issue. (Cheers, applause.) Expanding childcare is a family issue. Declining marriage rates is a family issue. The unequal rates of incarceration is a family issue. (Cheers, applause.) Helping more people with an addiction or a mental health problem get help is a family issue. (Cheers, applause.)

In America, every family should feel like they belong.

So we should offer hard-working, law-abiding immigrant families a path to citizenship. (Cheers, applause.) Not second-class status. (Cheers, applause.)

And, we should ban discrimination against LGBT Americans and their families (cheers, applause) so they can live, learn, marry, and work just like everybody else. (Cheers, applause.)

You know, America's diversity, our openness, our devotion to human rights and freedom is what's drawn so many to our shores. What's inspired people all over the world. I know. I've seen it with my own eyes.

And these are also qualities that prepare us well for the demands of a world that is more interconnected than ever before.

So we have a third fight: to harness all of America's power, smarts, and values to maintain our leadership for peace, security, and prosperity.

No other country on Earth is better positioned to thrive in the 21st century. No other country is better equipped to meet traditional threats from countries like Russia, North Korea, and Iran - and to deal with the rise of new powers like China.

No other country is better prepared to meet emerging threats from cyber attacks, transnational terror networks like ISIS, and diseases that spread across oceans and continents.

As your President, I'll do whatever it takes to keep Americans safe. (Cheers, applause.)

And if you look over my left shoulder you can see the new World Trade Center soaring skyward. (Cheers, applause.)

As a Senator from New York, I dedicated myself to getting our city and state the help we needed to recover. And as a member of the Armed Services Committee, I worked to maintain the best-trained, best-equipped, strongest military, ready for today's threats and tomorrow's.

And when our brave men and women come home from war or finish their service, I'll see to it that they get not just the thanks of a grateful nation, but the care and benefits they've earned. (Cheers, applause.)

I've stood up to adversaries like Putin and reinforced allies like Israel. I was in the Situation Room on the day we got bin Laden. (Cheers, applause.)

But, I know -- I know we have to be smart as well as strong.

Meeting today's global challenges requires every element of America's power, including skillful diplomacy, economic influence, and building partnerships to improve lives around the world with people, not just their governments.

There are a lot of trouble spots in the world, but there's a lot of good news out there too.

I believe the future holds far more opportunities than threats if we exercise creative and confident leadership that enables us to shape global events rather than be shaped by them. (Cheers, applause.)

And we all know that in order to be strong in the world, though, we first have to be strong at home. That's why we have to win the fourth fight - reforming our government and revitalizing our democracy so that it works for everyday Americans. (Cheers, applause.)

We have to stop the endless flow of secret, unaccountable money that is distorting our elections, corrupting our political process, and drowning out the voices of our people. (Cheers, applause.)

We need Justices on the Supreme Court who will protect every citizen's right to vote, (cheers, applause) rather than every corporation's right to buy elections. (Cheers, applause.)

If necessary, I will support a constitutional amendment to undo the Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United. (Cheers, applause.)

I want to make it easier for every citizen to vote. That's why I've proposed universal, automatic registration and expanded early voting. (Cheers, applause.)

I'll fight back against Republican efforts to disempower and disenfranchise young people, poor people, people with disabilities, and people of color. (Cheers, applause.)

What part of democracy are they afraid of? (Cheers, applause.)

No matter how easy we make it to vote, we still have to give Americans something worth voting for. (Cheers, applause.)

Government is never going to have all the answers - but it has to be smarter, simpler, more efficient, and a better partner.

That means access to advanced technology so government agencies can more effectively serve their customers, the American people.

We need expertise and innovation from the private sector to help cut waste and streamline services.

There's so much that works in America. For every problem we face, someone somewhere in America is solving it. Silicon Valley cracked the code on sharing and scaling a while ago. Many states are pioneering new ways to deliver services. I want to help Washington catch up. (Cheers, applause.)

To do that, we need a political system that produces results by solving problems that hold us back, not one overwhelmed by extreme partisanship and inflexibility.

Now, I'll always seek common ground with friend and opponent alike. But I'll also stand my ground when I must. (Cheers, applause.)

That's something I did as Senator and Secretary of State -- whether it was working with Republicans to expand health care for children and for our National Guard, or improve our foster care and adoption system, or pass a treaty to reduce the number of Russian nuclear warheads that could threaten our cities -- and it's something I will always do as your President.

We Americans may differ, bicker, stumble, and fall; but we are at our best when we pick each other up, when we have each other's back.

Like any family, our American family is strongest when we cherish what we have in common, and fight back against those who would drive us apart.

People all over the world have asked me: "How could you and President Obama work together after you fought so hard against each other in that long campaign?"

Now, that is an understandable question considering that in many places, if you lose an election you could get imprisoned or exiled - even killed - not hired as Secretary of State. (Cheers, applause.)

But President Obama asked me to serve, and I accepted because we both love our country. (Cheers, applause.) That's how we do it in America.

With that same spirit, together, we can win these four fights.

We can build an economy where hard work is rewarded.

We can strengthen our families.

We can defend our country and increase our opportunities all over the world.

And we can renew the promise of our democracy.

If we all do our part. In our families, in our businesses, unions, houses of worship, schools, and, yes, in the voting booth.

I want you to join me in this effort. Help me build this campaign and make it your own.

Talk to your friends, your family, your neighbors.

Text "JOIN" J-O-I-N to 4-7-2-4-6.

Go to hillaryclinton.com and sign up to make calls and knock on doors. (Cheers, applause.)

It's no secret that we're going up against some pretty powerful forces that will do and spend whatever it takes to advance a very different vision for America. But I've spent my life fighting for children, families, and our country. And I'm not stopping now. (Cheers, applause, chanting.)

You know, I know how hard this job is. I've seen it up close and personal. (Laughter.)

All our Presidents come into office looking so vigorous. (Laughter.) And then we watch their hair grow grayer and grayer.

Well, I may not be the youngest candidate in this race. But I will be the youngest woman President in the history of the United States! (Cheers, applause.)

And the first grandmother as well. (Cheers, applause.)

And one additional advantage: You're won't see my hair turn white in the White House. I've been coloring it for years! (Cheers, applause.)

So I'm looking forward to a great debate among Democrats, Republicans, and Independents. I'm not running to be a President only for those Americans who already agree with me. I want to be a President for all Americans.

And along the way, I'll just let you in on this little secret. (Laughter.) I won't get everything right. Lord knows I've made my share of mistakes. Well, there's no shortage of people pointing them out! (Laughter.)

And I certainly haven't won every battle I've fought. But leadership means perseverance and hard choices. You have to push through the setbacks and disappointments and keep at it. (Cheers, applause.)

I think you know by now that I've been called many things by many people (laughter) -- "quitter" is not one of them. (Cheers, applause.)

Like so much else in my life, I got this from my mother.

When I was a girl, she never let me back down from any bully or barrier. In her later years, Mom lived with us, and she was still teaching me the same lessons. I'd come home from a hard day at the Senate or the State Department, sit down with her at the small table in our breakfast nook, and just let everything pour out. And she would remind me why we keep fighting, even when the odds are long and the opposition is fierce.

I can still hear her saying: "Life's not about what happens to you, it's about what you do with what happens to you - so get back out there." (Cheers, applause.)

She lived to be 92 years old, and I often think about all the battles she witnessed over the course of the last century - all the progress that was won because Americans refused to give up or back down.

She was born on June 4, 1919 -- before women in America had the right to vote. But on that very day, after years of struggle, Congress passed the Constitutional Amendment that would change that forever.

The story of America is a story of hard-fought, hard-won progress. And it continues today. New chapters are being written by men and women who believe that all of us - not just some, but all - should have the chance to live up to our God-given potential.

Not only because we're a tolerant country, or a generous country, or a compassionate country, but because we're a better, stronger, more prosperous country when we harness the talent, hard work, and ingenuity of every single American.

I wish my mother could have been with us longer. I wish she could have seen Chelsea become a mother herself. I wish she could have met Charlotte.

I wish she could have seen the America we're going to build together. (Cheers, applause.)

An America, where if you do your part, you reap the rewards.

Where we don't leave anyone out, or anyone behind.

An America where a father can tell his daughter: yes, you can be anything you want to be. Even President of the United States. (Cheers, applause.)

Thank you all. God bless you. And may God bless America. (Cheers, applause.)

From: Gunaratna, Mahen
To: B
Cc: jfdc@akpdmmedia.com; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject: ABC News: Hillary Clinton Talked About de Blasio's Signature Issues "Years" Before Him, Says Neera Tanden
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 3:34:58 PM

Neera Tanden, the president of the Center for American Progress who is informally advising Hillary Clinton on policy, told ABC News she hoped New York Mayor Bill de Blasio -- with whom she served on the former secretary of state's 2000 campaign for Senate -- would eventually endorse their former boss, adding that Clinton had highlighted de Blasio's "signature" issues years before he had himself.

De Blasio has said he wants to hear more specifics from Clinton before making a decision.

2] Let's talk about New York Mayor Bill de Blasio, who ran Hillary Clinton's first campaign for the Senate. You were Clinton's deputy campaign manager at that time, so you must have worked with both closely, yes? Do you find it odd that he has not endorsed her?

NT: Yes, I worked closely with Bill de Blasio when he was campaign manager and I was deputy campaign manager. My own view is that this is a timing issue. On issues like rising income inequality and policies like universal pre-k, signature issues for Bill de Blasio, Hillary was talking about them years ahead of Bill. In her presidential campaign in 2007 she raised concerns about rising economic inequality and she proposed way back then universal pre-k. Her calls for universal voting, criminal justice reform and strong, comprehensive immigration reform are ones that resonate with the broad public, but particularly with progressives. So I very much hope Mayor de Blasio will endorse Hillary once she's laid out her agenda.

From: B
To: "jfdc@akpdmedia.com"
Subject: Follow up
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 3:39:37 PM

Spoke to maya. Pls call

From: John Del Cecato
To: B
Subject: Keith Ellison
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 3:54:03 PM

In the past, I think you've been calling the office & having them grab Keith - but since it's Saturday, there won't be anyone there.

Best number I have for him is his assistant's number.

Keith Ellison

Assistant: Dustin J. Brandenburg

Telephone: [REDACTED]

From: Hinton, Karen
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: B; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; Snyder, Thomas; Wolfe, Emma Subject: Re: TPA follow-up
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 4:17:10 PM

Can I use this as a comment? Bloomberg and daily news have asked. Could we send out to room 9 list?

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 13, 2015, at 4:03 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Adding Karen

From: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 at 4:00 PM
To: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Thomas Snyder <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>, Emma Wolfe <EWolfe@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: TPA follow-up

1. On Trade, MBDB & I were talking about next steps. He is going to talk to either Robby or Podesta about HRC opposing it now - which should be much easier since it's probably dead.

He may also reach out to Keith Ellison to see if there's a joint effort that they can make to help nudge in the right direction.

2. On HRC speech today, MBDB is going to say something along the lines of:

"This was an excellent speech — a full-throated progressive framework, and a heartfelt expression of Hillary Clinton's long progressive history. As she said, she'll be spelling out her policies on everything from lifting wages to helping working parents to progressive taxation in the weeks to come, and I look forward to those details with enthusiasm and great optimism."

Q: So you're STILL not ready to endorse?

A: I'm not focused on that narrow question. I'm focused on specific policy proposals, and I'm extremely encouraged that they'll be bold and on-point.

From: Hinton, Karen
To: B
Cc: Kadushin, Peter; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; jfdc@akpdmedia.com; Adams, Marti; de Alwis, Ronalie
Subject: Re: Statement / parade avail
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 6:13:29 PM

Ok will do

Sent from my iPhone

> On Jun 13, 2015, at 5:41 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
>
> 1. Make "progressive taxation" the first of the three items you note
>
> 2. "Optimism" is fine -- doesn't need to be "great"
>
>
>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: Hinton, Karen
> Sent: Saturday, June 13, 2015 04:27 PM
> To: B
> Cc: Kadushin, Peter; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea; 'jfdc@akpdmedia. com'
<jfdc@akpdmedia.com>; Adams, Marti; de Alwis, Ronalie
> Subject: Statement / parade avail
>
> Mr. mayor, I have received two requests for Clinton statement : daily news and Bloomberg. I recommend I send them statement below from you. I also recommend we send to room 9 list.
>
> Also we are going to gauge what interest is at parade and decide on site whether to do a press avail.
>
> "It was an excellent speech — a full-throated progressive framework, and a heartfelt expression of Hillary Clinton's long progressive history. As she said, she'll be spelling out her policies on everything from lifting wages to helping working parents to progressive taxation in the weeks to come, and I look forward to those details with enthusiasm and great optimism."
>
> Sent from my iPhone

From: John Del Cecato
To: Shorris, Anthony
Subject: Re: HRC Scorecard
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 6:39:54 PM

Wish we were in there! But the cause is being advanced so that's what's important

> On Jun 13, 2015, at 6:30 PM, Shorris, Anthony <AShorris@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>
> At least this language from Politico is comforting...
>
> 1. The Democratic Party is moving left fast, and she knows she needs to move with it. Clinton's spiel was slight on specifics (she'll unveil a series of new economic initiatives in a series of speeches from July to August), but her economic-inequality rhetoric could have been comfortably uttered by the likes of Elizabeth Warren, Joseph Stiglitz, Bernie Sanders or Martin O'Malley.
>
> OR BILL DE BLASIO?
>
>
>
> Anthony E. Shorris
> First Deputy Mayor
> City of New York
> City Hall
> New York, NY 10007
> 212-788-3191
>
>
>> On Jun 13, 2015, at 3:02 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>
>> Exactly. That's how I think we should approach
>>
>>
>>
>>> On Jun 13, 2015, at 2:56 PM, Shorris, Anthony <AShorris@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>
>>> Doesn't sound like she quite got there -- no surprise -- although progressives could indicate they welcome the general direction of many of her policies, but await specifics of her approach on a number of these issues.
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>> Anthony E. Shorris
>>> First Deputy Mayor
>>> City of New York
>>> City Hall
>>> New York, NY 10007
>>> 212-788-3191
>>>
>>>
>>>> On Jun 13, 2015, at 1:32 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> Paid lip service to all but strengthening unions, trade, and EITC/Social Security. Mouthed the words on fixing tax code to reward work and not wealth - but no specifics
>>>>
>>>>

>>>>
>>>>> On Jun 13, 2015, at 12:37 PM, Shorris, Anthony <AShorris@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>> How is she doing against the TPA scorecard?
>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>>
>>>>> Anthony E. Shorris
>>>>> First Deputy Mayor
>>>>> City of New York
>>>>> City Hall
>>>>> New York, NY 10007
>>>>> 212-788-3191
>>>>>

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: John Del Cecato
Cc: B
Subject: Re: DSM Register
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 7:55:22 PM

This is really something. Sustainable?

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 13, 2015, at 6:10 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Bernie Sanders draws boisterous D.M. crowd of 700-plus

A boisterous crowd of more than 700 applauded presidential candidate Bernie Sanders more times than there were minutes in his speech Friday night.

The Vermont U.S. senator, an independent who is running for the Democratic nomination, spoke for a little more than an hour and answered questions for about 30 minutes at Drake University's Sheslow Auditorium.

MORE:

Sanders continues his streak of attracting large, loud crowds in Iowa. The audience of mostly professionals and older adults, mixed with some college-age and younger attendees, rewarded him with applause more than 100 times.

Sanders stuck with his main campaign topics of income inequality, climate change, free tuition and police brutality. He also touched on trade.

Here are some of Sanders' remarks that garnered the most applause:

- 1. On income inequality and gender inequality in pay: "Today, in my mind, the most significant issue from a moral perspective, from a political perspective and from an economic perspective is the grotesque level of inequality... A living wage should not only be fair, it should be equitable. That is why we must establish pay equity for women workers."

2. On paid vacation leave, sick time and maternity leave: "In recent years, there have been millions of women giving birth and unable to spend time with their newborn babies because they did not have the income, and they had to go back to work. Family values is not telling a woman that she can't spend time with a baby because she does not have enough money."

3. On the very wealthy: "There is something profoundly wrong when the top one-tenth of 1 percent owns almost as much wealth as the bottom 90 percent."

4. On trade policies: "It's not a sexy issue, but it is enormous. ...Our trade policies over the last 40 years ... have been a disaster. Since 2001, we have lost some 60,000 factories in this country and millions of decent-paying jobs. Trade isn't the only reason for those losses, but it is the major reason." He also said: "The House has put a kibosh on the Trans Pacific (Partnership). TPP is a continuation of these disastrous trade policies. Today, the good side won."

5. "If elected president, I will not (allow) any justice in the Supreme Court who is not prepared to be loud and clear in telling the American people ... to vote to overturn ... Citizens United," the 2010 ruling that gave corporations and unions free rein to spend unlimited amounts to call for a candidate's election or defeat.

About Sanders' visit

SETTING: Sheslow Auditorium, Drake University

CROWD: More than 700 people filled Sheslow Auditorium, not counting the 25 or so members of the media.

REACTION: The crowd applauded and shouted after Sanders brought up his main campaign themes. Many in the audience attempted to shake Sanders' hand after the almost hour-and-a-half appearance.

WHAT'S NEXT: This was the kickoff event of a three-day Iowa swing. He visits Marshalltown and Cedar Rapids on Saturday, and Waterloo, Iowa Falls and Indianola on Sunday.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Snyder, Thomas
Subject: Re: NYT
Date: Sunday, June 14, 2015 7:21:24 AM

Shit, sorry - I thought you meant the statement, which we covered in an earlier group email - but you're looking for something more fulsome than this? I can do up some Q&A this morning

"It was an excellent speech – a full-throated progressive framework, and a heartfelt expression of Hillary Clinton's long progressive history. As she said, she'll be spelling out her policies on everything from progressive taxation to lifting wages to helping working parents in the weeks to come, and I look forward to those details with enthusiasm and optimism."

From: <Snyder>, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Date: Saturday, June 13, 2015 at 9:45 PM
To: John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com>
Cc: Bill de Blasio <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Walzak, Phil" <PWalzak@cityhall.nyc.gov>, "Hagelgans, Andrea" <AHagelgans@cityhall.nyc.gov>
Subject: Re: NYT

Send to Me Por favor

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 13, 2015, at 9:08 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Done and done

On Jun 13, 2015, at 7:59 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

John- I think you should draft TPs for Mayor on what to say about HRC.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jun 13, 2015, at 6:14 PM, John Del Cecato <jfdc@akpdmedia.com> wrote:

Hillary Clinton, in Roosevelt Island
Speech, Pledges to Close Income Gap

Continue reading the main story Slide Show

Hillary Clinton's Campaign Kickoff Speech

CreditDoug Mills/The New York Times

Hillary Rodham Clinton, in a speech that was at times sweeping and at times policy laden, delivered on Saturday a pointed repudiation of Republican economic policies and a populist promise to reverse the gaping gulf between the rich and poor at her biggest campaign event to date.

Under sunny skies and surrounded by flag-waving supporters on Roosevelt Island in New York, Mrs. Clinton pledged to run an inclusive campaign and to create a more inclusive economy, saying that even the new voices in the Republican Party continued to push “the top-down economic policies that failed us before.”

“These Republicans trip over themselves promising lower taxes for the wealthy and fewer rules for the biggest corporations without any regard on how that will make inequality worse,” she said before a crowd estimated at 5,500, according to the campaign.

“I’m not running for some Americans,” Mrs. Clinton said. “I’m running for all Americans.”

Offering her case for the presidency, she rested heavily on her biography. Her candidacy, she said, was in the name of “everyone who has ever been knocked down but refused to be knocked out.”

Continue reading the main story Video

Hillary Outlines Campaign Focus

Hillary Clinton speaks at her campaign launch rally on Roosevelt Island in New York City.

By Reuters on Publish Date June 13, 2015. Photo by Mark Kazlarich/The New York Times.

Mrs. Clinton portrayed herself as a fighter, sounding a theme her campaign had emphasized in recent days. “I’ve been called many things by many people, quitter is not one of them,” she said.

Standing on a platform set in the middle of a grassy memorial to Franklin D. Roosevelt on the East River island named after him, Mrs. Clinton invoked his legacy. She also praised President Obama and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, but declared that “we face new challenges” in the aftermath of the economic crisis.

While some Republican detractors have tried to make an issue of Mrs. Clinton’s age (if she won she would be 69 when she took office in January 2017), she sought to embrace it and to rebut the notion that she cannot stand for change or modernity. Offering her campaign contact information, she spoke about the lives of gay people, saying Republicans “turn their backs on gay people who love each other.”

In one of the biggest applause lines, she said: “I may not be the youngest candidate in this race, but I will be the youngest woman president in the history of the United States.”

Underscoring the point with a riff on an old Beatles song, Mrs. Clinton said: “There may be some new voices in the presidential Republican choir. But they’re all singing the same old song.”

“It’s a song called ‘Yesterday,’ ” she continued. “They believe in yesterday.”

Allison Moore, a spokeswoman for the Republican National Committee, called the speech “chock-full of hypocritical attacks, partisan rhetoric and ideas from the past that led to a sluggish economy.”

Mrs. Clinton specified policies she would push for, including universal prekindergarten, paid family leave, equal pay for women, college affordability and incentives for companies that provide profit-sharing to employees. She also spoke of rewriting the tax code “so it rewards hard work at home” rather than corporations “stashing profits overseas.” She did not detail how she would achieve those policies or address their costs.

Mrs. Clinton spoke to the criticism that her wealth makes her out of touch with the middle-class Americans, saying her candidacy is for “factory workers and food servers who stand on their feet all day, for the nurses who work the night shift, for the truckers who drive for hours.”

Uncomfortable with the fiery rhetoric of Senator Elizabeth Warren, the Massachusetts Democrat, Mrs. Clinton offered some stark statistics to address the concerns of the Democratic Party’s restless left. “The top 25 hedge fund managers make more than all of America’s kindergarten teachers combined, often paying a lower tax rate,” she said.

Mrs. Clinton said many Americans must be asking, “When does my family get ahead?” She added: “When? I say now.”

In a campaign in which Republicans have emphasized the growing threat of Islamic terrorism and an unstable Middle East, Mrs. Clinton hardly mentioned foreign policy. She did speak of her experience as a senator from New York after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

“As your president, I’ll do whatever it takes to keep Americans safe,” she said, weaving the skyline and a view of the newly built One World Trade Center into her remarks.

For as much as the content of the speech mattered, the theater of it was equally important. For a campaign criticized for lacking passion, the event gave Mrs. Clinton the ability to create a camera-ready tableau of excitement.

The Brooklyn Express Drumline revved up the crowd assembled on a narrow stretch at the southern tip of the island. And Marlon Marshall, the campaign's director of political engagement, rattled off statistics about the number of volunteers who have signed up and house parties held in the early nominating states. A section with giant screens set up for an overflow crowd stood nearly empty.

But a crowd of die-hard supporters and volunteers from the staunchly Democratic New York area does not exactly represent the electorate writ large. The real test for Mrs. Clinton and how the speech was perceived will be in Iowa, where she was to travel on Saturday evening for several events. Iowa, the first nominating state, shunned her the last time she sought the presidency, in 2008.

"I was disappointed she didn't challenge Obama four years ago," said Dominique Pettinato, a 24-year-old parole officer who lives in Brooklyn.

For some members of the skeptical liberal wing of the Democratic Party still concerned that Mrs. Clinton will embrace her husband's centrist approach, the speech went only so far in convincing them otherwise.

“This was mostly a typical Democratic speech — much better than the direction Republicans offer America,” said Adam Green, a co-founder of Progressive Change Campaign Committee, a liberal advocacy group. But he said the speech had not offered “the bold economic vision that most Americans want and need.”

Mrs. Clinton did not broach one issue that liberals are increasingly frustrated by: trade. On Thursday, Senator Bernie Sanders, a socialist from Vermont who is also seeking the Democratic nomination, pointedly criticized Mrs. Clinton for not taking a position on a controversial trade bill Mr. Obama is pushing, as well as other contentious issues like the proposed Keystone XL oil pipeline and the renewal of the Patriot Act. “What is the secretary’s point of view on that?” Mr. Sanders asked of the act, which he voted against.

Mrs. Clinton had hardly stopped speaking Saturday when Bill Hyers, a senior strategist for Martin O’Malley, the former governor of Maryland, who is also seeking the Democratic presidential nomination, criticized her as vague on trade and other issues. Mr. O’Malley, he said, “has been fearless and specific in the progressive agenda we need.”

If there is one demographic Mrs. Clinton’s campaign is hoping to excite it is young women. It is an obvious connection that her 2008 campaign played down as it tried to present the former first lady as a strong commander-in-chief.

But on Saturday it was clear that Mrs. Clinton will make gender more central to her campaign this time. In her closing remarks, she called for a country “where a father can tell his daughter yes, you can be anything you want to be, even president of the United States.”

Correction: June 13, 2015

An earlier version of this article misspelled the surname of a woman who attended Hillary Rodham Clinton’s speech. She is Dominique Pettinato, not Pettin. An earlier version also misstated part of a quote by Allison Moore, a spokeswoman for the Republican National Committee. She said Mrs. Clinton’s speech was “chock-full of hypocritical attacks,” not hypothetical attacks.

From: John Del Cecato
To: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Date: Sunday, June 14, 2015 7:52:05 AM

I like. If we get this done, I think we could easily add to our populist litany. I doubt Uber is as unpopular as other corporate giants - but we could couch as "$40 billion companies like Uber should do their part to help straphangers get more and faster trains" or whatever.

Editorial: Tax Uber

EDITORIALS

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS Today, 4:00 AM ET

Uber riders should chip in to support mass transit.

City Hall is running with the idea of asking customers of the fantastically successful Uber car service to chip in 50 cents per ride in support of mass transit.

Hail, hail to that.

Back in January, this page pointed out that while yellow and green taxis are obliged to collect the half-buck, Uber — and all other black and livery car services — have been getting a free ride, denying the Metropolitan Transportation Authority unknown millions in revenue.

"Tax Uber," our headline urged — both in the name of basic fairness, and in the name of bolstering the subway, bus and rail systems that are New York's beating heart.

That the MTA needs the money, there can be no question: The agency is $14 billion short of what it needs over the next five years to keep the trains running, modernize antiquated equipment and accommodate surging ridership.

While fares cover more than half of the MTA's expenses, the authority also depends on an array of business and sales taxes — a fitting recognition its services' importance to the region's economy.

Among those levies is a 50-cent-per-ride surcharge on cabs that brings in $90 million a year.

When that was enacted in 2009, yellow cabs were the unrivaled kings of the city's streets. Uber, just founded, was three years from arriving here.

It's a whole new world. The smartphone app-based service's fleet strength stands at 18,634, compared to 13,587 yellow taxis. And Uber is adding more than 1,000 cars per month.

Valued at upwards of $50 billion, Uber can clearly afford to pay its fair share.

To see that it does, Mayor de Blasio and Taxi and Limousine Commission Chair Meera Joshi drafted a change in state law that would expand the 50-cent surcharge to all black cars, liveries and limousines, whether app-based or not.

This is not targeting an upstart rival; it's treating all modes of car-for-hire fairly to fund a common good.

East Harlem Assemblyman Robert Rodriguez is sponsoring the bill, with Michael Benedetto of the Bronx as a cosponsor. Good for them.

As an alternative, Uber is pushing the idea of earmarking all or part of the sales tax — which its customers pay and yellow riders do not — for the MTA. That's worth exploring.

One way or another, everyone who pays for a ride in the city must pony up.

From: Snyder, Thomas
To: John Del Ceccato
Subject: Hard
Date: Sunday, June 14, 2015 10:04:24 AM

If u are picking up any interesting commentary on her speech please forward.

Sent from my iPad

From: Wolfe, Emma
To: John Del Cecato; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Cc: Lupo, Jon Paul
Subject: RE:
Date: Sunday, June 14, 2015 7:06:17 PM

+jpb

From: John Del Cecato [jfdc@akpdmedia.com]
Sent: Sunday, June 14, 2015 7:51 AM
To: Wolfe, Emma; Walzak, Phil; Hagelgans, Andrea
Subject:

I like. If we get this done, I think we could easily add to our populist litany. I doubt Uber is as unpopular as other corporate giants - but we could couch as "$40 billion companies like Uber should do their part to help straphangers get more and faster trains" or whatever.

Editorial: Tax Uber

EDITORIALS

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS Today, 4:00 AM ET

Uber riders should chip in to support mass transit.

City Hall is running with the idea of asking customers of the fantastically successful Uber car service to chip in 50 cents per ride in support of mass transit.

Hail, hail to that.

Back in January, this page pointed out that while yellow and green taxis are obliged to collect the half-buck, Uber — and all other black and livery car services — have been getting a free ride, denying the Metropolitan Transportation Authority unknown millions in revenue.

“Tax Uber,” our headline urged — both in the name of basic fairness, and in the name of bolstering the subway, bus and rail systems that are New York’s beating heart.

That the MTA needs the money, there can be no question: The agency is $14 billion short of what it needs over the next five years to keep the trains running, modernize antiquated equipment and accommodate surging ridership.

While fares cover more than half of the MTA’s expenses, the authority also depends on an array of business and sales taxes — a fitting recognition its services’ importance to the region’s economy.

Among those levies is a 50-cent-per-ride surcharge on cabs that brings in $90 million a year.

When that was enacted in 2009, yellow cabs were the unrivaled kings of the city’s streets. Uber, just founded, was three years from arriving here.

It's a whole new world. The smartphone app-based service's fleet strength stands at 18,634, compared to 13,587 yellow taxis. And Uber is adding more than 1,000 cars per month.

Valued at upwards of $50 billion, Uber can clearly afford to pay its fair share.

To see that it does, Mayor de Blasio and Taxi and Limousine Commission Chair Meera Joshi drafted a change in state law that would expand the 50-cent surcharge to all black cars, liveries and limousines, whether app-based or not.

This is not targeting an upstart rival; it's treating all modes of car-for-hire fairly to fund a common good.

East Harlem Assemblyman Robert Rodriguez is sponsoring the bill, with Michael Benedetto of the Bronx as a cosponsor. Good for them.

As an alternative, Uber is pushing the idea of earmarking all or part of the sales tax — which its customers pay and yellow riders do not — for the MTA. That's worth exploring.

One way or another, everyone who pays for a ride in the city must pony up.