Okay, I am prepared to say whatever you tell me... Or we could have Emma go on background... But this is a fast ball right down the middle, and I think it advances our message if we explain that this is a startling but happy new development, given the Governor's reluctance to join our fight for $15 these past seven months...

I feel like if we say it in a positive way, we shouldn't mind going on the record. We could even do a cheeky line like: "First Donald Trump joins our effort to close the carried interest loophole, and now this. I'm not sure why everything is now moving in a progressive direction, but we're just happy that it's happening!"

Warren Buffett: 'I Admire' Bernie Sanders

Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), who has made taking on the superrich the focus of his campaign, received high praise this week from one of the country's most famous billionaires.

Warren Buffett, chairman and CEO of Berkshire Hathaway and a longtime Democratic donor, told CNBC on Tuesday that he admired Sanders' campaign.

Sanders "campaigns exactly as I hope that I would if I were a candidate," Buffett said. "He's been forthright. He has not been knocking the other candidates."

Buffett, who often speaks out against income inequality, specifically praised Sanders' promise to appoint only judges who would overturn the Citizens United decision and his emphasis on helping "the people left behind."

"I think he's run a model campaign," Buffett said, even as he acknowledged that he believes Sanders is unelectable. "He's not gonna get elected, but I think he -- I admire him."

Buffett stopped short of backing Sanders, instead reaffirming his support for former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. Buffett announced he would vote for Clinton in May, and made donations to the Ready for Hillary super PAC.

Buffett said that Clinton could have handled the controversy over her private email server better, arguing that she should have been "blunt" about making a mistake earlier on in the process. But the billionaire investor said that Clinton's policies and political skills mattered most to him.

"What I care about with Hillary is what she would do as president of the United States and her ability to do it if she becomes president of the U.S. -- in both respects, I am a terrific supporter," he said.

Sex crimes. We need to move on this.

This one is directed at MTA - which we shouldn't take much comfort in, since nobody realizes we don't control them.

MTA was useless in helping woman with subway perv: victim

THOMAS TRACY, DAN RIVOLI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS Today, 10:26 PM ET

A Brooklyn woman snapped photos of the subway pervert as he pleased himself.

A Brooklyn woman who had to face a masturbating creep on the subway has turned to social media to warn other women — and rail against unhelpful MTA workers.

Tiffany Jackson, with her pooch in hand, was able to grab photos of the pervert staring her down as he pleased himself on a Manhattan-bound No. 3 train leaving the Franklin Ave. station.

"I just wanted to get his face out there since so many of my homegirls take the same train," the Brooklyn-based writer wrote on social media Sunday.

Tiffany Jackson says the MTA was no help as a subway sicko stalked her.

But when Jackson found a conductor to complain, he appeared uninterested in helping out, according to her account.

STATE LAWMAKERS EYE TOUGHER PENALTIES FOR SUBWAY PERVERTS BUSTED FOR SEXUAL CONTACT

"He rolled his eyes, annoyed, and radioed dispatch," she wrote.

"The conductor grumbled and told me to just go upstairs and report the incident to the booth," she added.

But there was no booth on her side of the station. With the creep following her into the Nevins St. stop, she hopped on the next train she could find.

"Not upset about jerk-off guy, there are creeps all over this city," she wrote. "I'm more upset how the MTA handled themselves."

"They acted like I was more of a nuisance than trying to help me, and sent me right in the path of danger," she added.

MTA officials said the agency's protocol for handling sexual misconduct reports will be reviewed.

A ride on the No. 3 train turned into a nightmare for one Brooklyn woman who encountered a masturbating man.

NYPD Chief of Transit Joe Fox, who assured Jackson that an investigation is underway, said he's unaware of any chronic underreporting of subway sex crimes. He said 80% of public lewdness busts are made when cops are there to witness the crime or get flagged down by a victim or witness.

"You can see how angry the women are by how strong the detail they put into (their accounts of) what happened," Fox said.

Alicia/James/Gabrielle, pls watch this 5 min film so you're armed. We don't have to call tony james or john gray any more, and I don't know who we know or would be sensitive to at blackstone. And yes, I want to call speyer and tony j to thank for VF quotes

I agree, and we have to help Tom get there. And we need a clear, baseline TPA plan. Also USCM mtg is not decided yet

Will do. But this relates to something else we need to discuss.

City Hall still sees Geri and I as bit players. No one at CH gave a hoot about this event until you said, at the last planning meeting, that this event was important to you. Suddenly, I started to get (some) feedback.

In the same way, people feel free to ignore Geri's incessant pleading for call time, co-chairs, weekly TPA calls, and your (now killed) trip to Washington for USCM. The general attitude is this: "if the Mayor doesn't say to ME that it's a priority, then I'm not gonna worry about it." People are so concerned with not getting crossways with you that they fail to do what's in your interests, or even execute on decisions you previously made.

We have to change that mentality. I know that Tom is supposed to play that role, but he - like everyone else - defers to whatever you are focused on at the moment, rather than standing firm on our long term plan and forcing discipline.

I don't have a great idea for resolving this, but it's really tough for TPA to get anything done unless and until you personally weigh in directly with the players involved.

You shouldn't have to do that - and cannot sustain -- that as mayor. We should talk more about it over a beer.

Okay - you're right. And I'm probably a little defensive because I knew that we were pushing the envelope - and I liked it (!) But in the future, I will work to ensure that I get in people's faces and make sure they know what's happening, and not assume that they actually read their email - and I won't take silence as assent.

I believe you, but I think we needed to mirror the talk we had about taxes when we created the TPA. Sorry that actual government (as opposed to the freedom of campaigns) involves having to get the whole team in the discussion, but that's reality. I didn't focus on this in time. But brother, you're smart enough to know that attacking a Wall Street firm comes with ramifications. I was happy to support Greenwald's intent and do an event with him, but we needed to think this thru more. Now I own it

I definitely ran the traps here. I should have included Alicia earlier, I suppose - but she was one of very few people at City Hall who did NOT know what was in the film a while ago. I realize the VF profile being so bad, and Blackstone executive being nice to us in it, is unfortunate timing - but I feel like I covered my bases here.

She's still got her [REDACTED] - so she won't be in person tonight, but I'll make sure she calls in.

Roger that. Thank you. And I will try to reassure the team on tonight's event. We didn't make the video ourselves. And Blackstone isn't going to get needlessly worked up by what we have to say about closing the carried interest loophole. They have to worry more about Jeb since even he's with us on this issue now!

Will do. But this relates to something else we need to discuss.

City Hall still sees Geri and I as bit players. No one at CH gave a hoot about this event until you said, at the last planning meeting, that this event was important to you. Suddenly, I started to get (some) feedback.

In the same way, people feel free to ignore Geri's incessant pleading for call time, co-chairs, weekly TPA calls, and your (now killed) trip to Washington for USCM. The general attitude is this: "if the Mayor doesn't say to ME that it's a priority, then I'm not gonna worry about it." People are so concerned with not getting crossways with you that they fail to do what's in your interests, or even execute on decisions you previously made.

We have to change that mentality. I know that Tom is supposed to play that role, but he - like everyone else - defers to whatever you are focused on at the moment, rather than standing firm on our long term plan and forcing discipline.

I don't have a great idea for resolving this, but it's really tough for TPA to get anything done unless and until you personally weigh in directly with the players involved.

You shouldn't have to do that - and cannot sustain -- that as mayor. We should talk more about it over a beer.

Okay - you're right. And I'm probably a little defensive because I knew that we were pushing the envelope - and I liked it (!) But in the future, I will work to ensure that I get in people's faces and make sure they know what's happening, and not assume that they actually read their email - and I won't take silence as assent.

On Sep 9, 2015, at 11:11 PM, B <BCCD@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

I believe you, but I think we needed to mirror the talk we had about taxes when we created the TPA. Sorry that actual government (as opposed to the freedom of campaigns) involves having to get the whole team in the discussion, but that's reality. I didn't focus on this in time. But brother, you're smart enough to know that attacking a Wall Street firm comes with ramifications. I was happy to support Greenwald's intent and do an event with him, but we needed to think this thru more. Now I own it

I definitely ran the traps here. I should have included Alicia earlier, I suppose - but she was one of very few people at City Hall who did NOT know what was in the film a while ago. I realize the VF profile being so bad, and Blackstone executive being nice to us in it, is unfortunate timing - but I feel like I covered my bases here.

No, I'm confused!! :) I can never tell those firms apart. Ok, you guys just sort out who Alicia and/or I should call and let's move on. The truth is I agreed to be supportive of the film because it called for closing the carried interest loophole -- a view shared by every Dem presidential candidate. I did not know until we committed about the Blackstone reference (which is brief). Let's deal with it and move on. They are big boys -- they'll live

It's all good. Here's the blog post (attached), which should go live this morning, as planned.

Also, here's the film.

The Blackstone reference is historically accurate and not that harsh. And it's not coming out of our mouth. (We didn't make the film - we're just endorsing its message). We not only shouldn't be defensive about this; we should be aggressively pursuing it. Even Jeb is on board now.

3:00- 3:30 STAFF DEBRIEF

The rampant inequality that we face in America is no accident. It is the result of a system that, for too long, has rewarded existing wealth over work.

There is no more striking example of this phenomenon than the disparity between the earnings - and the tax rates - of kindergarten teachers and hedge fund managers.

In 2014, the top 25 hedge fund managers made more money than every single Kindergarten teacher in America -- over 150,000 of them -- combined. That's right: 25 individuals - not even enough to fill the seating space on a single New York City subway car - made more than everyone who teaches our youngest learners put together.

What's more, because of something called carried interest - a tax loophole that exists only to boost the earnings of hedge fund managers - those 25 people paid a lower tax rate than the average Kindergarten teacher.

If we're to truly tackle the crisis of income inequality, changing that rule - and investing that money in growing our middle class - is where we must start.

Here in New York City, we're using every tool at our disposal to help combat income inequality - expanding paid sick leave to 500,000 additional workers, implementing the first rent freeze in city history, building and preserving 200,000 units of affordable housing, expanding after-school programs, and - as of this week - providing high-quality, universal Pre-Kindergarten to every family.

But we need Washington to do its part, too. Making the federal tax code more progressive will allow us to invest in people who are struggling.

To that end, closing the carried interest loophole is a tenet of The Progressive Agenda (URL HERE) to Combat Income Inequality, a 14-point plan introduced by a diverse coalition of progressive leaders in May.

Award-winning filmmaker Robert Greenwald, an inaugural signer of The Progressive Agenda, worked with his colleagues at Brave New Films to produce a powerful short documentary about the deeply unfair income and tax law disparities between hedge fund managers and teachers. It is aptly titled "Hedge Fund Billionaires vs. Kindergarten Teachers: Whose Side Are You On?"

The film explores this issue from many different angles. It features interviews with both respected economists and Kindergarten teachers. The video identifies both the macroeconomic problems that the huge gap in wages cause, as well as the human toll paid by teachers and their students. Most important, it proposes a real, concrete solution to the problem: closing the carried interest loophole.

Billionaire hedge fund managers don't need a tax break, and there is no reason this loophole should exist.

Robert and I will be hosting a screening of his film at Pace University in New York City on Thursday, September 10th at 4:30 PM. The video will also be live-streamed here on The Huffington Post \(STREAMING INFO HERE\).

Following the screening, Robert and I will join a panel that includes NYC Kindergarten teacher Lena Lombardi, and author Lynn Parramore to reflect on the film, what it means for New York City and the country, and how we can work together to end this injustice once and for all.

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio Teams Up With Brave New Films to Take on Tax Breaks for the Wealthy in Premiere of New Short Film: Hedge Fund Billionaires vs. Kindergarten Teachers: Whose Side Are You On?

Mayor's office and production company create film demanding closure of the carried interest loophole which allows billionaires to be taxed at lower rates than kindergarten teachers.

Culver City, California (September 8, 2015) - Production company Brave New Films, headed by award winning filmmaker Robert Greenwald, has released a new short film demanding the closure of the carried interest tax loophole. The film, premiering at a private event at Pace University ~~headed-led~~ by Mayor Bill de Blasio, addresses the [adj. like 'alarming' or 'ugly'] fact that while the top 25 hedge fund managers make more annually than all of America's kindergarten teachers combined, those same hedge fund managers are also taxed at a lower tax rate. Mayor de Blasio and Greenwald find the loophole appalling and are calling on all 2016 presidential candidates to pledge to end it within their first 100 days in office.

"It is unacceptable that the uber-wealthy have been able to influence the law to work in their favor," said director of the film and Brave New Films President Robert Greenwald. "While teachers around the nation are struggling to make ends meet, doing one of the most noble professions out there, billionaire hedge fund managers – who make money off of things like the housing crisis and for-profit prisons - are claiming they deserve massive tax breaks."

Quote from de Blasio's office.

"We have seen the crisis of inequality in this nation grow to critical mass, and now is time to act. It is downright reprehensible that U.S. pre-K teachers – the men and women who teach our kids the colors of the rainbow and the building blocks of language – are collectively earning the same wage as the top 25 hedge funder managers, and foot a heavier bill on tax day to boot. This film imparts an important message; that in America, our policies and tax codes should reflect our values, and reward hard work, not wealth," said Mayor Bill de Blasio.

The six-minute film will have its premiere screening on Thursday, September 10th, 2015 in the Schimmel Theatre at Pace University. On hand to give remarks will be both the Honorable Mayor Bill de Blasio, as well as filmmaker Robert Greenwald. The event begins at 4:30 pm EST.

Brave New Films is a non-partisan, non-profit, 501(c)(3) organization that carries out the Brave New Films mission by creating and distributing educational films. Its mission is to champion social justice issues by using a model of media, education, and grassroots volunteer involvement that inspires, empowers, motivates and teaches civic participation and makes a difference.

Hi all -

I was just informed that there was a group call today about the event tomorrow that I was unaware of.

Seems like there is some confusion regarding:

1. How the film is being played.
 - o Both Pace and the live streamers have the link.
 - o And Robert has a USB drive with it on it, as a back-up
2. The background slide image

- The current one that we previously sent is here: https://www.dropbox.com/s/bhaiqqi898hwos9/BNS_HedgefundManagersVsTeachers_Slide.jpg?dl=0
- Pace and the live streamer also have this asset
- If you want it updated with hashtags, we are happy to do that. If we can get the info today, we will get you an updated version to use at the event by tomorrow AM.

I hope this clears things up!

I think this would be an excellent time to do George.

1. We can talk about Trump & Bush joining us on carried interest.
2. We can talk about Cuomo, after 7 months of pushing, finally acceding to our effort to get $15 min wage.
3. We can say that Bernie's rise is due to him talking relentlessly about income inequality.
4. At the same time, we could - COULD - use this moment for the boss to say something about his plans for choosing a favorite in the race, if he is so inclined. I know that's not a topic for official business - just raising as a matter of time management, and whether it would conflict with the other messages listed here (which are powerful).

Subject: Re: Face sunday?

Sure.

1. Min wage. In 2014 State of the City address, MBDB called for a higher minimum wage - and Albany said it wasn't possible. In 2015 State of the City (February), we called for $15 minimum wage & were told it was a "non-starter." But we soldiered on. $15 min wage became the first plank in The Progressive Agenda that we unveiled in May. Our partners have been tapping into the national conversation & grassroots movement for $15. And now, we're extremely pleased to see that Governor Cuomo has joined our national chorus & chosen to embrace $15. It's a really huge deal - and shows the power of the progressive movement - and the impact it can have right here at home. The lesson: if at first you don't succeed, keep on pushing and pushing and we'll get there - and people's lives will be better as a result.

2. Carried interest. Right now, there's a tax loophole that hedge fund managers on Wall Street - many of them not just multi-millionaires but BILLIONAIRES - have been exploiting. It's called the carried interest loophole. And it essentially allows them to treat their income as an "investment" instead of ordinary wage income - which means they can pay a tax rate of 20% on that money - far less than the 25% or 30% that working and middle-class families pay. That needs to change - and change now.

Why? Consider this. The top 25 hedge fund managers earned more last year than all the Kindergarten teachers in America COMBINED. They're making all those billions of dollars, but pay a LOWER rate of tax than the very same Kindergarten teachers? That's crazy - and it's yet another piece of what's driving the rampant income inequality in New York and across the nation.

Tonight we'll be calling attention to that fact, and pushing all the folks - on both sides of the aisle — who hope to lead our country to commit to closing that loophole, and investing in our schools. Donald Trump, remarkably, is on board. And just yesterday, even Jeb Bush came on board. It's time to take the politics out of this issue & get it done - now.

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: JDC

EVENT: Screening of short film, “Hedge Fund Billionaires vs. Kindergarten Teachers: Whose Side Are You On?”

MISSION/GOAL: Explain how NYC is doing everything in its power to combat income inequality, but that we need Washington’s help. Push two pieces of The Progressive Agenda – closing the carried interest loophole, and investing in education.

DAY/DATE: Thursday, September 10, 2015
EVENT TIME: 4:30-5:30 PM
MBDB TIME: 4:30-5:15PM

LOCATION: Pace University, Michael Schimmel Center for the Arts, 3 Spruce Street, Manhattan

CONTACT: JDC

STAFF ASSIGNED TO MBDB: Marti Adams

EVENT SET-UP/PROGRAM: YOU will be introduced by moderator Lynn Parramore

After she introduces YOU, you’ll speak for 5-7 minutes on the issue of progressive taxation and investing in education, TPA. Then YOU will introduce Robert Greenwald, who will introduce the film.

Then a panel of YOU, Greenwald, NYC Kindergarten teacher Lena Lombardi, and Lynn Parramore (who studies the intersection of culture and economics) will take pre-screened questions from the audience of 300 or so, with Parramore also moderating.

RUN OF SHOW:

4:15pm Program participants arrive and are escorted to green room
4:30pm Welcome and Intro of Mayor: Parramore
4:33pm Intro of overall issue and of Robert Greenwald: Mayor de Blasio
4:40pm Intro Film: Robert Greenwald
4:43pm Film Screening
4:55pm Panel begins -- Parramore as moderator begins with two questions for panelists
5:05pm Questions are collected from audience and sorted to avoid duplication and ensure resonance
5:25pm Program Ends

Topics:

- TPA, income inequality, carried interest loophole, tax fairness, education.

Background:

Shortly after TPA was launched on May 12th, we got a call from Robert Greenwald, progressive filmmaker and TPA signer.

He had an idea on how to use the power of film to highlight the great disparity between the incomes of hedge fund managers and Kindergarten teachers – and highlight the inequity in the fact that the former pays a lower tax rate than the latter.

The film is being debuted on Thursday in NYC, and will also be live-streamed on HuffingtonPost.com.

We will be using new media tools – Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Periscope – to urge that the video be shared online to a massive audience.

A couple of years ago, very few aspiring elected officials were talking about income inequality. Throughout 2015, we've seen more and more elected officials and candidates from BOTH political parties discussing the problem.

Recently, we've heard a number of excellent proposals for combatting inequality – including, just in the past several days – Donald Trump and Jeb Bush calling for an end to the carried interest loophole.

We're using every tool at our disposal to combat inequality in NYC (UPK – just this week). But we need Washington to be our partner if we want to tackle this problem at its core.

It's time for Americans from all walks of life to come together and pressure Washington to make this change so that we can make the tax code more fair, and invest more in our schools.

We don't do this to punish success. Rather, we do it to create more success stories.

FYI: Katrina vanden Heuvel is a board member of Brave New Films. She will be in attendance.

BACKGROUND ON Robert Greenwald:

Robert Greenwald, founder and president of Brave New Films (BNF), is an award-winning television, feature film and documentary filmmaker. He has produced and/or directed more than 50 TV movies and miniseries, including The Burning Bed (1984), starring Farrah Fawcett and A Woman of Independent Means (1995), starring Sally Field; as well as the feature films Steal This Movie (2000), starring Vincent D'Onofrio as 60's radical Abbie Hoffman, and Breaking Up (1997), starring Russell Crowe and Salma Hayek.

Greenwald turned to documentary filmmaking in 2002, inspired by pervasive voter rights abuses in the 2000 U.S. presidential election. He found audiences eager for substantive investigations of social issues, told through personal stories, and chose to bypass the usual gatekeepers by devising creative means of distribution, first through house parties, and ultimately through the Internet and social media. The documentaries produced by Brave New Films have been streamed across all seven continents and have been viewed over 70 million times and counting.

At BNF, Greenwald has produced and directed eight full-length documentaries and over a dozen short videos, uncovering corporate abuse, the military industrial complex, the unbridled political influence of billionaires, and the unfair and unbalanced tactics of Fox News. His full-length features include; Uncovered: The War on Iraq (2004); Outfoxed: Rupert Murdoch's War on Journalism (2004); Wal-Mart: The High Cost of Low Price (2005); Iraq for Sale: The War Profiteers (2006); Rethink Afghanistan (2009); Koch Brothers Exposed (2012); and War on Whistleblowers: Free Press and the National Security State (2013). Unmanned: America's Drone Wars (2013) is BNF's latest feature-length documentary.

Greenwald is the recipient of many awards and accolades, including a Maggie Award from the Planned Parenthood Federation, the Peacemaker Award from the Physicians for Social Responsibility, the City of Justice award from LAANE, the 2007 Norman Felton and Denise Aubuchon Humanitarian Award, and Liberty Hill Foundation's Upton Sinclair Award. Greenwald was honored in 2013 by the ACLU Foundation of Southern California for his activism and also received the 2001 Peabody Award and the 2002 American Film Institute Producer of the Year award. His films have garnered 25 Emmy nominations.

BACKGROUND ON Lynn Parramore:

Lynn Parramore is an author and cultural theorist. She is Contributing Editor at AlterNet and writes for Reuters, Al Jazeera, and other outlets. She holds a doctorate in English and cultural theory from New York University.

BACKGROUND ON Lena Lombardi:

Lena Lombardi has been a Gifted Education teacher at P.S. 132 for six years, and has taught Gifted and Talented Kindergarten for five of those years. She graduated from Hofstra University's Honors College with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Public Relations and worked briefly as a publicist out of college before deciding to follow her heart and pursue her lifelong dream of becoming a teacher. She completed her certification through a career-change program at St. John's University, and she currently holds a Master of Science degree from SJU in both Childhood Education (Grades 1-6) and Gifted Education (Grades K-12.) She was born and raised in Williamsburg, Brooklyn and attended the elementary school at which she currently teaches. She and her husband (John) currently live in Middle Village, Queens.

MAIN POINTS TO LAND:

- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we're doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
- But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington's help.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.

- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities (60,000 people) across this country for a $15 dollar minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.
- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

Transitions

- There's no reason that a billionaire hedge fund manager sitting by the pool at his beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the guy who pilots his private jet.

Key Stats/ Examples

- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things: 1) more investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and 2) more revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, close CEO pay loophole, Buffett Rule, end tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas).
- President Obama pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the money earned by the women and men teaching our four and five year olds - COMBINED.

- In NYC, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. The grassroots is demanding it.
- A typical American family, in real income terms, is making less today than they were a quarter century ago.
- The wealthiest one percent captured 91% of all the income gains since the Great Recession ended.
- And now we have the greatest income disparity since the 1920s – and it's getting worse.
- The two issues that we're highlighting today are closing the carried interest loophole, and investing more in education. We don't advocate that to punish success, but to create more success stories.

The Progressive Agenda:

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails-- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.
- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit and protect and expand Social Security.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the “Buffett Rule” so millionaires pay their fair share.

Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of “performance pay” write-offs.

Hi all -

I was just informed that there was a group call today about the event tomorrow that I was unaware of.

Seems like there is some confusion regarding:

1. How the film is being played.

- Both Pace and the live streamers have the link.
- And Robert has a USB drive with it on it, as a back-up

2. The background slide image

- The current one that we previously sent is here:
https://www.dropbox.com/s/bhaiqqi898hwos9/BNS_HedgefundManagersVsTeachers_Slide.jpg?dl=0
- Pace and the live streamer also have this asset
- If you want it updated with hashtags, we are happy to do that. If we can get the info today, we will get you an updated version to use at the event by tomorrow AM.

I hope this clears things up!

If there is any other confusion or questions that need answering, please don't hesitate to contact me by email or on my cell at 818-239-2070.

Thanks for everyone's work on this!

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio Teams Up With Brave New Films to Take on Tax Breaks for the Wealthy in Premiere of New Film: Hedge Fund Billionaires vs. Kindergarten Teachers: Whose Side Are You On?

Mayor's office and production company create film demanding closure of the carried interest loophole which allows billionaires to be taxed at lower rates than kindergarten teachers.

Culver City, California (September 8, 2015) - Production company Brave New Films, headed by award winning filmmaker Robert Greenwald, has released a new short film demanding the closure of the carried interest tax loophole. The film, premiering at an invitation-only event at Pace University led by New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, addresses alarming fact that while the top 25 hedge fund managers make more annually than all of America's kindergarten teachers combined, those same hedge fund managers are also taxed at a lower tax rate. Mayor de Blasio and Greenwald find the loophole appalling and are calling on all 2016 presidential candidates to pledge to end it within their first 100 days in office.

"It is unacceptable that the uber-wealthy hedge fund managers have been able to influence the law to work in their favor," said director of the film and Brave New Films President Robert Greenwald. "While teachers around the nation are struggling to make ends meet, doing one of the most noble professions out there, billionaire hedge fund managers – who make money off of things like the housing crisis and for-profit prisons - are claiming they deserve massive tax breaks."

"We have seen the crisis of inequality in this nation grow to critical mass, and now is time to act. It is downright reprehensible that U.S. pre-K teachers – the men and women who teach our kids the colors of the rainbow and the building blocks of language – are collectively earning the same wage as the top 25 hedge funder managers, and foot a heavier bill on tax day to boot. This film imparts an important message; that in America, our policies and tax codes should reflect our values, and reward hard work, not wealth," said Mayor Bill de Blasio.

The film will have its premiere screening on Thursday, September 10th, 2015 in the Schimmel

Theatre at Pace University. On hand to give remarks will be both the Honorable Mayor Bill de Blasio, as well as filmmaker Robert Greenwald. The event begins at 4:30 pm EST. The premiere is open to press, but in order to attend, members of the media must RSVP to vanessa@bravenewfilms.org and arrive to Pace University's Schimmel Theatre no later than 4:10 PM EST.

Brave New Films is a non-partisan, non-profit, 501(c)(3) organization that carries out the Brave New Films mission by creating and distributing educational films. Its mission is to champion social justice issues by using a model of media, education, and grassroots volunteer involvement that inspires, empowers, motivates and teaches civic participation and makes a difference.

Hi John,

I've attached the final briefing for tonight.

Alexis Walters
Office of the Mayor
City of New York

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: JDC

EVENT: Screening of short film, “Hedge Fund Billionaires vs. Kindergarten Teachers: Whose Side Are You On?”

MISSION/GOAL: You will explain how NYC is doing everything in its power to combat income inequality, but that we need Washington’s help. Push two pieces of The Progressive Agenda – closing the carried interest loophole, and investing in education.

Topics:

- TPA, income inequality, carried interest loophole, tax fairness, education.

DAY/DATE: Thursday, September 10, 2015

EVENT TIME: 4:30-5:30 PM

MBDB TIME: 4:30-5:15PM

LOCATION: Pace University, Michael Schimmel Center for the Arts, 3 Spruce Street, Manhattan

CONTACT: JDC

STAFF ASSIGNED TO MBDB: Marti Adams

EVENT SET-UP/PROGRAM: YOU will be introduced by moderator Alex Wagner (MSNBC)

After she introduces YOU, you’ll speak for 5-7 minutes on the issue of progressive taxation and investing in education, TPA. Then YOU will introduce Robert Greenwald, who will introduce the film.

Then a panel of YOU, Greenwald, NYC Kindergarten teacher Lena Lombardi, and Lynn Parramore (who studies the intersection of culture and economics) will take pre-screened questions from the audience of 300 or so, with Wagner moderating.

RUN OF SHOW:

[4:15 PM] Program participants arrive and are escorted to green room
[4:30 PM] Alex Wagner (MSNBC) gives welcome and Introduces YOU
[4:33 PM] YOU give intro of overall issues and introduce Robert Greenwald
[4:40 PM] Intro Film: Robert Greenwald
[4:43 PM] Film Screening
[4:55 PM] Panel begins -- Alex Wagner as moderator begins with two questions for panelists
[5:05 PM] Questions are collected from audience and sorted to avoid duplication and ensure resonance
[5:25 PM] Program Ends

MAIN POINTS TO LAND:

- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we're doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
- But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington's help.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.
- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.

- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities (60,000 people) across this country for a $15 dollar minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.
- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

Transitions

- There's no reason that a billionaire hedge fund manager sitting by the pool at his beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the guy who pilots his private jet.

Key Stats/ Examples

- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things:
 - 1) More investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and
 - 2) More revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, close CEO pay loophole, Buffett Rule, end tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas).
- President Obama pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the money earned by the women and men teaching our four and five year olds - COMBINED.
- In NYC, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. The grassroots is demanding it.

- A typical American family, in real income terms, is making less today than they were a quarter century ago.
- The wealthiest one percent captured 91% of all the income gains since the Great Recession ended.
- And now we have the greatest income disparity since the 1920s – and it’s getting worse.
- The two issues that we’re highlighting today are closing the carried interest loophole, and investing more in education. We don’t advocate that to punish success, but to create more success stories.

The Progressive Agenda:

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
 - Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers’ right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
 - Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
 - Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers’ rights, and the environment.
 - Invest in schools, not jails-- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.
 - Pass national paid sick leave.
 - Pass national paid family leave.
 - Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
 - Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit and protect and expand Social Security.
 - Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.
 - Close the carried interest loophole.
 - End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
 - Implement the “Buffett Rule” so millionaires pay their fair share.
- Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of “performance pay” write-offs.

BACKGROUND ON FILM:

- Shortly after TPA was launched on May 12th, we got a call from Robert Greenwald, progressive filmmaker and TPA signer.
- He had an idea on how to use the power of film to highlight the great disparity between the incomes of hedge fund managers and Kindergarten teachers – and highlight the inequity in the fact that the former pays a lower tax rate than the latter.
- The film is being debuted on Thursday in NYC, and will also be live-streamed on HuffingtonPost.com.

FYI: Katrina vanden Heuvel is a board member of Brave New Films. She will be in attendance.

BACKGROUND ON Robert Greenwald:

- Founder and President of Brave New Films (BNF), is an award-winning television, feature film and documentary filmmaker. He has produced and/or directed more than 50 TV movies and miniseries, including The Burning Bed (1984), starring Farrah Fawcett and A Woman of Independent Means (1995), starring Sally Field; as well as the feature films Steal This Movie (2000), starring Vincent D'Onofrio as 60's radical Abbie Hoffman, and Breaking Up (1997), starring Russell Crowe and Salma Hayek.
- At BNF, his full-length features include; Uncovered: The War on Iraq (2004); Outfoxed: Rupert Murdoch's War on Journalism (2004); Wal-Mart: The High Cost of Low Price (2005); Iraq for Sale: The War Profiteers (2006); Rethink Afghanistan (2009); Koch Brothers Exposed (2012); and War on Whistleblowers: Free Press and the National Security State (2013). Unmanned: America's Drone Wars (2013) is BNF's latest feature-length documentary.
- Greenwald is the recipient of many awards and accolades, including a Maggie Award from the Planned Parenthood Federation, the Peacemaker Award from the Physicians for Social Responsibility, the City of Justice award from LAANE, the 2007 Norman Felton and Denise Aubuchon Humanitarian Award, and Liberty Hill Foundation's Upton Sinclair Award.
- Greenwald was honored in 2013 by the ACLU Foundation of Southern California for his activism and also received the 2001 Peabody Award and the 2002 American Film Institute Producer of the Year award. His films have garnered 25 Emmy nominations.

BACKGROUND ON Lynn Parramore:

- Lynn Parramore is an author and cultural theorist. She is Contributing Editor at AlterNet and writes for Reuters, Al Jazeera, and other outlets. She holds a doctorate in English and cultural theory from New York University.

BACKGROUN ON Alex Wagner:

- Alexandra "Alex" Wagner is an American television host and political commentator. She was the anchor of the daytime program Now with Alex Wagner on MSNBC.
- Wagner has worked as the cultural correspondent for the Center for American Progress. From 2003 to 2007, she was editor-in-chief of The Fader magazine, covering music and cultural movements from around the world. She also served as executive director of Not On Our Watch Project, an advocacy organization focused on mass atrocities and human rights violations.
- Wagner then became the White House correspondent for Politics Daily, a political news magazine under AOL News. She moved to The Huffington Post after it was acquired by AOL.
- As an analyst on MSNBC, Wagner appeared on Countdown with Keith Olbermann and The Last Word with Lawrence O'Donnell.

NOTE: Alex's show on MSNBC was canceled in July – but she still appears as a commentator.

Hi all -

I was just informed that there was a group call today about the event tomorrow that I was unaware of.

Seems like there is some confusion regarding:

1. How the film is being played.

- Both Pace and the live streamers have the link.
- And Robert has a USB drive with it on it, as a back-up

2. The background slide image

- The current one that we previously sent is here:
https://www.dropbox.com/s/bhaiqqi898hwos9/BNS_HedgefundManagersVsTeachers_Slide.jpg?dl=0
- Pace and the live streamer also have this asset
- If you want it updated with hashtags, we are happy to do that. If we can get the info today, we will get you an updated version to use at the event by tomorrow AM.

I hope this clears things up!

Conservatives often blame technological change and lack of job skills. Why is this particular driver, the carried interest loophole, considered so unfair and unjustified by people across the political spectrum?

Just an update from the CH press side:

We put this event on the Mayor's public schedule last night, which went to a list of several thousand including the Mayor's dedicated press corp. We've already received a handful of RSVPs for tonight, but Vanessa will forward any additional to me.

TPA folks – can you please loop me with any press that say they'd like to attend? It might be helpful to send the media advisory to press, as well, so that they can RSVP to Vanessa. Or you could just tack on a note at the top with her phone and email. The advisory is below for reference.

MEDIA ADVISORY: New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio Teams Up With Brave New Films to Take on Tax Breaks for the Wealthy in Premiere of New Short Film: Hedge Fund Billionaires vs.

Kindergarten Teachers: Whose Side Are You On?

Brave New Films, a production company headed by award winning filmmaker Robert Greenwald, has released a new short film demanding the closure of the carried interest tax loophole. The film, premiering at an invitation-only private event at Pace University led by New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, addresses the fact that while the top 25 hedge fund managers make more annually than all of America's kindergarten teachers combined, those same hedge fund managers are also taxed at a lower tax rate. Mayor de Blasio and Greenwald find the loophole appalling and are calling on all 2016 presidential candidates to pledge to end it within their first 100 days in office. In order to attend, members of the media must RSVP to vanessa@bravenewfilms.org and arrive to Pace University's Schimmel Theatre no later than 4:10 PM EST.

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio Teams Up With Brave New Films to Take on Tax Breaks for the Wealthy in Premiere of New Film: *Hedge Fund Billionaires vs. Kindergarten Teachers: Whose Side Are You On?

Mayor's office and production company create film demanding closure of the carried interest loophole which allows billionaires to be taxed at lower rates than kindergarten teachers.

Culver City, California (September 8, 2015) - Production company Brave New Films, headed by award winning filmmaker Robert Greenwald, has released a new short film demanding the closure of the carried interest tax loophole. The film, premiering at an invitation-only event at Pace University led by New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, addresses alarming fact that while the top 25 hedge fund managers make more annually than all of America's kindergarten teachers combined, those same hedge fund managers are also taxed at a lower tax rate. Mayor de Blasio and Greenwald find the loophole appalling and are calling on all 2016 presidential candidates to pledge to end it within their first 100 days in office.

"It is unacceptable that the uber-wealthy hedge fund managers have been able to influence the law to work in their favor," said director of the film and Brave New Films President Robert Greenwald. "While teachers around the nation are struggling to make ends meet, doing one of the most noble professions out there, billionaire hedge fund managers – who make money off of things like the housing crisis and for-profit prisons - are claiming they deserve massive tax breaks.”

“We have seen the crisis of inequality in this nation grow to critical mass, and now is time to act. It is downright reprehensible that U.S. pre-K teachers – the men and women who teach our kids the colors of the rainbow and the building blocks of language – are collectively earning the same wage as the top 25 hedge funder managers, and foot a heavier bill on tax day to boot. This film imparts an important message; that in America, our policies and tax codes should reflect our values, and reward hard work, not wealth,” said Mayor Bill de Blasio.

The film will have its premiere screening on Thursday, September 10th, 2015 in the Schimmel Theatre at Pace University. On hand to give remarks will be both the Honorable Mayor Bill de Blasio, as well as filmmaker Robert Greenwald. The event begins at 4:30 pm EST. The premiere is open to press, but in order to attend, members of the media must RSVP to vanessa@bravenewfilms.org and arrive to Pace University's Schimmel Theatre no later than 4:10 PM EST.

Brave New Films is a non-partisan, non-profit, 501(c)(3) organization that carries out the Brave New Films mission by creating and distributing educational films. Its mission is to champion social justice issues by using a model of media, education, and grassroots volunteer involvement that inspires, empowers, motivates and teaches civic participation and makes a difference.

Subject: Inside City Hall Prep
Date: Thursday, September 10, 2015 1:26:04 PM

Mr. Mayor –Peter and I will review with you the following topics for Inside City Hall prep at 2 pm. I have vetted these topics with Michael Kurtz, the producer. They are interested in all the topics, but specifically added the West Indian Day parade, the Blake incident, and crime.

EDUCATION

Q-Give us an update on pre-K and the first day of school. Are you doing enough to move the needle on education?

- As you know, some predicted we would fail.
- Yesterday more than 65,000 kids stepped into pre-K classrooms and has access to a life-changing opportunity
- Our focus is lifting up all kids, in all neighborhoods
- And struggling schools finally have resources and accountability they need
- We've given 130 community schools the support to help kids overcome barriers to learning

HOUSING

Q-What is the status with affordable housing? Are you doing enough?

- We've had a big first year: 20,350 unit of affordable housing -- most new units in 40 years
- Doubling the capital budget -- up to $600 million a year
- Rent freeze that affects millions of NYers
- 421a policy that will help create more affordable apartments and cut down on benefits for luxury condos
- Mandatory inclusionary zoning that requires at least one in four apartments in new buildings in rezoned areas to be kept affordable

HOMELESSNESS

- Decades old problem --- up more than 100% over last 20 years
- We have a strong plan in place to fight homelessness
- Why we are emphasizing affordable housing
- $1 billion invested over next four years, new mental health counseling and services, and strengthened rental assistance program
- Huge jumps in number of homeless in previous administrations (40% Guiliani/52%Bloomberg)
(Would only do if asked.)

WEST INDIAN DAY PARADE VIOLENCE (Errol called for preventative measures or cancelling Jouvert celebrations)

Q-Should the festivals around West Indian Day Parade be shut down? Do you feel the need to address violence surrounding the parade?

- More than 1 million people attend the parade and it is a great event for Brooklyn, NY, and our residents of West Indian heritage
- But we don't tolerate any kind of violence in our City and Monday morning's shooting sends a clear message that our cities, states, and nation must do more to end the plague of gun violence

-Police Commissioner and Chief of Department has been in touch with BP Adams and the organizers to work on ways to ways to preserve the festival while ensuring safety

CRIME/CHRISTIE/KELLY

- Numbers don't lie -- safest summer in 20 years
- Murders lower this summer than summer 2014; the rate is trending down
- The NYPD has done a remarkable job keeping crime at historic lows and I couldn't be prouder of their work
- Critics should be commending NYPD's work not attacking it

RUDY (Giuliani said that you made things personal between you both instead of cleaning up the City)

- We've seen the tale of two Rudy Giulianis lately
- He seems to have forgotten that he cut permanent housing for families, arrested homeless adults and cycled them in and out of Rikers
- He chased the homeless across NYC and tried to deny emergency assistance and food stamps
- Fact: not only did Rudy Giuliani vilify the homeless, and the numbers went up more than 40% on his watch
- Unlike his approach of vilifying people in need of help, we have a smart and humane approach to solving this issue

JAMES BLAKE (Was tackled by NYPD officers after being misidentified as part of a stolen credit card operation)

- Regret the incident and myself and Bratton have reached out to James Blake to extend apology
- One officer has already been placed on modified assignment and the Commissioner is conducting an internal investigation to get to the bottom of exactly what happened
- NOTE: You apologized to Garner family

MINIMUM WAGE

- Thrilled the governor is recommitting to raising minimum wage
- Single most important thing we can do right now to pull NYers out of poverty and a key part of our OneNYC commitment to pulling 800K NYers out of poverty
- That's why we've pushed so hard for it.

IF PRESSED WITH: WHY IS HE DOING IT? ABOUT POLITICS OR OPTICS?

- MY priority is helping NYers, and this is a good thing for New Yorkers

HRC

- Excited to see HRC discuss the critical issues facing the country -- progressive priorities like paid family leave, closing carried interest, something that even Republican candidates agree with me on.
- Have been clear that I would like to see the full vision laid out

NOTE ON CARRIED INTEREST

- Trump and Bush have also called for closing the loophole, but Jeb wants to simultaneously lower corporate tax rates dramatically, cut rates on capital gains, and lower the tax rate for the highest earners

BIDEN

Q-Do you think Biden should consider joining the field?

-Great deal of respect for VP, think we have enough great candidates in the field

SANDERS

-Have a lot of respect for Bernie Sanders

-Still waiting to see a full vision from the candidates

VATICAN PUSHING FOR LESS SECURITY (Vatican official says Pope would not want a barrier between him and worshippers)

-Security decisions are being determined in consultation with Secret Service, NYPD and the Vatican

-No final decisions have been made and everything is being done to provide the safest possible visit while providing attendees with as much access to the Pope as possible

30 seconds on Bob and Brigid wedding wishes:

- Congratulations to Bill and Brigid on your wedding day!
- Remember my wedding day fondly – one of best days of my life
- Sorry I can't be there to provide dancing lessons but I'll get you a copy of my wedding video
- Can't wait to see photos from the big day
- Excited for you both to start the rest of your lives together

30 seconds on Papal Visit:

Proud to welcome one of world's most powerful voices to our City

Feel deep connection to this Pope because he is a leading voice on critical issues like income inequality and climate change

This Pope in particular is eager to personally connect with New Yorkers

Central Park Procession will give 80,000 more New Yorkers an opportunity to come face to face with Pope

Grateful to archdiocese for cooperation

Looking forward to this historic visit

Regina, I'm so sorry for not responding las night! Is it too late to add additional text to the slide?

If possible, I think we should add BNF and TPA's twitter handles to the slide:

@bravenewfilms
@TheP2Agenda

and the hashtag that we use every day: #p2Agenda

Thoughts on creating a specific hashtag just for today's event?

Anyone have any particular feelings on these listed below?

#billionairesVSteachers
#WhoseSide
#closethe loophole

Hi all -

I was just informed that there was a group call today about the event tomorrow that I was unaware of.

Seems like there is some confusion regarding:

1. How the film is being played.

- Both Pace and the live streamers have the link.
- And Robert has a USB drive with it on it, as a back-up

2. The background slide image

- The current one that we previously sent is here: https://www.dropbox.com/s/bhaiqqi898hwos9/BNS_HedgefundManagersVsTeachers_Slide.jpg?dl=0
- Pace and the live streamer also have this asset
- If you want it updated with hashtags, we are happy to do that. If we can get the info today, we will get you an updated version to use at the event by tomorrow AM.

I hope this clears things up!

If there is any other confusion or questions that need answering, please don't hesitate to contact me by email or on my cell at 818-239-2070.

EVENT: Screening of short film, "Hedge Fund Billionaires vs. Kindergarten Teachers: Whose Side Are You On?"

MISSION/GOAL: Explain how NYC is doing everything in its power to combat income inequality, but that we need Washington's help. Push two pieces of The Progressive Agenda – closing the carried interest loophole, and investing in education.

DAY/DATE: Thursday, September 10, 2015
EVENT TIME: 4:30-5:30 PM
MBDB TIME: 4:30-5:15PM

LOCATION: Pace University, Michael Schimmel Center for the Arts, 3 Spruce Street, Manhattan

CONTACT: JDC

STAFF ASSIGNED TO MBDB: Marti Adams

EVENT SET-UP/PROGRAM: YOU will be introduced by moderator Lynn Parramore

After she introduces YOU, you'll speak for 5-7 minutes on the issue of progressive taxation and investing in education, TPA. Then YOU will introduce Robert Greenwald, who will introduce the film.

Then a panel of YOU, Greenwald, NYC Kindergarten teacher Lena Lombardi, and Lynn Parramore (who studies the intersection of culture and economics) will take pre-screened questions from the audience of 300 or so, with Parramore also moderating.

RUN OF SHOW:

4:15pm Program participants arrive and are escorted to green room
4:30pm Welcome and Intro of Mayor: Parramore
4:33pm Intro of overall issue and of Robert Greenwald: Mayor de Blasio
4:40pm Intro Film: Robert Greenwald
4:43pm Film Screening
4:55pm Panel begins -- Parramore as moderator begins with two questions for panelists
5:05pm Questions are collected from audience and sorted to avoid duplication and ensure resonance
5:25pm Program Ends

Topics:

- TPA, income inequality, carried interest loophole, tax fairness, education.

Background:

Shortly after TPA was launched on May 12th, we got a call from Robert Greenwald, progressive filmmaker and TPA signer.

He had an idea on how to use the power of film to highlight the great disparity between the incomes of hedge fund managers and Kindergarten teachers – and highlight the inequity in the fact that the former pays a lower tax rate than the latter.

The film is being debuted on Thursday in NYC, and will also be live-streamed on HuffingtonPost.com.

We will be using new media tools – Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Periscope – to urge that the video be shared online to a massive audience.

A couple of years ago, very few aspiring elected officials were talking about income inequality. Throughout 2015, we've seen more and more elected officials and candidates from BOTH political parties discussing the problem.

Recently, we've heard a number of excellent proposals for combatting inequality – including, just in the past several days – Donald Trump and Jeb Bush calling for an end to the carried interest loophole.

We're using every tool at our disposal to combat inequality in NYC (UPK – just this week). But we need Washington to be our partner if we want to tackle this problem at its core.

It's time for Americans from all walks of life to come together and pressure Washington to make this change so that we can make the tax code more fair, and invest more in our schools.

We don't do this to punish success. Rather, we do it to create more success stories.

FYI: Katrina vanden Heuvel is a board member of Brave New Films. She will be in attendance.

BACKGROUND ON Robert Greenwald:

Robert Greenwald, founder and president of Brave New Films (BNF), is an award-winning television, feature film and documentary filmmaker. He has produced and/or directed more than 50 TV movies and miniseries, including The Burning Bed (1984), starring Farrah Fawcett and A Woman of Independent Means (1995), starring Sally Field; as well as the feature films Steal This Movie (2000), starring Vincent D'Onofrio as 60's radical Abbie Hoffman, and Breaking Up (1997), starring Russell Crowe and Salma Hayek.

Greenwald turned to documentary filmmaking in 2002, inspired by pervasive voter rights abuses in the 2000 U.S. presidential election. He found audiences eager for substantive investigations of social issues, told through personal stories, and chose to bypass the usual gatekeepers by devising creative means of distribution, first through house parties, and ultimately through the Internet and social media. The documentaries produced by Brave New Films have been streamed across all seven continents and have been viewed over 70 million times and counting.

At BNF, Greenwald has produced and directed eight full-length documentaries and over a dozen short videos, uncovering corporate abuse, the military industrial complex, the unbridled political influence of billionaires, and the unfair and unbalanced tactics of Fox News. His full-length features include; Uncovered: The War on Iraq (2004); Outfoxed: Rupert Murdoch's War on Journalism (2004); Wal-Mart: The High Cost of Low Price (2005); Iraq for Sale: The War Profiteers (2006); Rethink Afghanistan (2009); Koch Brothers Exposed (2012); and War on Whistleblowers: Free Press and the National Security State (2013). Unmanned: America's Drone Wars (2013) is BNF's latest feature-length documentary.

Greenwald is the recipient of many awards and accolades, including a Maggie Award from the Planned Parenthood Federation, the Peacemaker Award from the Physicians for Social Responsibility, the City of Justice award from LAANE, the 2007 Norman Felton and Denise Aubuchon Humanitarian Award, and Liberty Hill Foundation's Upton Sinclair Award. Greenwald was honored in 2013 by the ACLU Foundation of Southern California for his activism and also received the 2001 Peabody Award and the 2002 American Film Institute Producer of the Year award. His films have garnered 25 Emmy nominations.

BACKGROUND ON Lynn Parramore:

Lynn Parramore is an author and cultural theorist. She is Contributing Editor at AlterNet and writes for Reuters, Al Jazeera, and other outlets. She holds a doctorate in English and cultural theory from New York University.

BACKGROUND ON Lena Lombardi:

Lena Lombardi has been a Gifted Education teacher at P.S. 132 for six years, and has taught Gifted and Talented Kindergarten for five of those years. She graduated from Hofstra University's Honors College with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Public Relations and worked briefly as a publicist out of college before deciding to follow her heart and pursue her lifelong dream of becoming a teacher. She completed her certification through a career-change program at St. John's University, and she currently holds a Master of Science degree from SJU in both Childhood Education (Grades 1-6) and Gifted Education (Grades K-12.) She was born and raised in Williamsburg, Brooklyn and attended the elementary school at which she currently teaches. She and her husband (John) currently live in Middle Village, Queens.

MAIN POINTS TO LAND:

- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we're doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
- But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington's help.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.

- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities (60,000 people) across this country for a $15 dollar minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.
- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

Transitions

- There's no reason that a billionaire hedge fund manager sitting by the pool at his beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the guy who pilots his private jet.

Key Stats/ Examples

- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things: 1) more investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and 2) more revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, close CEO pay loophole, Buffett Rule, end tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas).
- President Obama pointed out that the top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the money earned by the women and men teaching our four and five year olds - COMBINED.

- In NYC, 46 percent of the people are at or near the poverty level. That is based on a statistic from the Bloomberg Administration. It came out first in 2013. It's essentially the same today, 46 percent of people at or near the poverty level, one paycheck away.
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that I think indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. The grassroots is demanding it.
- A typical American family, in real income terms, is making less today than they were a quarter century ago.
- The wealthiest one percent captured 91% of all the income gains since the Great Recession ended.
- And now we have the greatest income disparity since the 1920s – and it's getting worse.
- The two issues that we're highlighting today are closing the carried interest loophole, and investing more in education. We don't advocate that to punish success, but to create more success stories.

The Progressive Agenda:

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails-- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.
- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit and protect and expand Social Security.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.

- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the “Buffett Rule” so millionaires pay their fair share.

Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of “performance pay” write-offs.

Jeb Bush Tax Plan Makes Forays Into Populism

NEW YORK TIMES - Alan Rapperport and Matt Flegenheimer - September 9, 2015

WASHINGTON — Former Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida challenged some long-held tenets of conservative tax policy on Wednesday by proposing to curtail valuable deductions that benefit businesses and the wealthy and eliminate a loophole that has benefited hedge fund and private equity managers for years.

That an establishment Republican candidate has embraced such changes not only highlights how income inequality has altered the tenor of the presidential debate for the party, but also indicates the ideological pull Donald J. Trump's candidacy is having on the Republican field after he made similar proposals.

Mr. Bush's proposals nevertheless drew a harsh rebuke from Democrats who are unhappy that he is seeking to lower taxes across all income brackets and slash the corporate tax rate. At the same time, conservative anti-tax activists were worried by his suggestion that "carried interest" — the profits fund managers receive from investing other people's money — should be taxed at a higher rate, like ordinary income.

"No Republican should be for higher taxes on capital gains," said Ryan Ellis, the tax policy director at Americans for Tax Reform, which opposes all tax increases. "This tax hike idea is supported by Barack Obama, Hillary Clinton, Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren. The Democratic left deeply wishes to tax all capital gains as ordinary income.”

The debate over how to tax carried interest has become central to a wider battle over income inequality, which Mr. Bush has been highlighting along with rivals like Mr. Trump and Mike Huckabee as they seek to undercut Democrats on an issue that polls show has increasing resonance with voters.

Mitt Romney’s 2012 presidential bid was dogged by the issue when he revealed that he paid an effective tax rate of about 15 percent, largely on his compensation from Bain Capital.

But the effect of Mr. Bush’s proposals on the wealthy would be muted by his proposal to cut the number of individual tax brackets from seven to three, taxing income at 28 percent, 25 percent and 10 percent. Currently, the top marginal income tax rate is 39.6 percent.

His proposals would double the standard tax deduction that most filers take, end what Republicans call the “death tax” on estates of the deceased and seek to make marriage more beneficial for tax purposes.

Mr. Bush also proposed cutting the corporate tax rate to 20 percent from 35 percent and giving incentives to invest domestically as he seeks to spur economic growth to 4 percent annually, an objective that has been met with skepticism by economists.

Speaking from the factory floor of a poultry-chilling-equipment company just south of Raleigh, N.C., Mr. Bush struck a series of populist notes.

“The new normal is a comfortable ride for the affluent people that live off their portfolios,” he told a crowd of supporters and workers with protective goggles resting on their foreheads.

“My plan will help those who live on their paychecks, who haven’t seen a raise in a while.”

Continue reading the main story

Other Republican candidates have struck similar themes, with Mr. Huckabee railing against calls to curtail Social Security and Medicare, and Gov. John Kasich of Ohio accepting a Medicaid expansion for his state while speaking of the need to “reach out to the people who live in the shadows, the people who don’t seem to ever think that they get a fair deal.”

Mr. Bush also said he wanted to discourage “corporate inversions” in which American companies use cross-border mergers to take advantage of lower tax rates abroad; he would do so by ending the practice of taxing the corporations’ international profits. He would also assess a one-time tax on corporate money stashed overseas and eliminate the interest deductions companies take when they borrow, in addition to setting his sights on the issue of carried interest.

The current system “punishes people for doing things we should encourage and rewards people for doing things that may not be so good,” he said in his appearance in North Carolina on Wednesday.

Mr. Bush’s idea of taxing carried interest at his highest proposed rate of 28 percent, rather than at the lower capital gains rate of 23.8 percent, could draw the most consternation from Republicans, making the overhaul difficult to pass through Congress without bipartisan support.

Wall Street donors and lobbyists have fought President Obama’s effort to make such changes, and they were vocal in their opposition on Wednesday.

“Increasing taxes on carried interest would discourage growth and investment and would make our tax code more complex and less fair,” said James Maloney, a spokesman for Private Equity Growth Capital Council, which lobbies for the industry. “Instead of increasing taxes on private equity, venture capital and real estate investment, it is our hope that as the debate over tax reform unfolds, presidential candidates will utilize the opportunity to encourage, not undermine, long-term investment in the United States.”

While Mr. Bush’s plan embraces some of Mr. Trump’s populist language, he also took a subtle jab at his rival, suggesting that the billionaire tycoon has not come forward with a specific proposal to overhaul taxes.

“You have to be willing to take a chance,” he said. “This political environment we’re in now where the louder voices just turn up the volume — that’s a sign of strength and leadership. It isn’t.”

Democrats pounced on Mr. Bush’s proposals on Wednesday as a strategy that would most benefit the rich and impose new costs on the middle class, and they compared his tax cuts to those enacted by his brother former President George W. Bush.

“More massive tax cuts for the wealthy and corporations, all while exploding the deficit or shifting the burden onto the middle class — an even more extreme plan than his brother’s,” said Holly Shulman, a spokeswoman for the Democratic National Committee.

American Bridge, a Democratic “super PAC,” pointed out that Mr. Bush’s proposals would pose little hardship for hedge fund managers because they would be facing a lower personal income rate anyway.

The effect Mr. Bush’s proposals would have on the deficit remains unclear, although a group of conservative economists who reviewed the plan estimated it could mean $1.2 trillion to $3.4 trillion in lost revenue over the next decade.

A Bush spokeswoman would not say how long Mr. Bush projected it would take to achieve 4 percent economic growth, or how the lost tax revenue will be accounted for in the short term. Robertson Williams, a senior fellow at the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center, said that Mr. Bush’s proposal was similar to Mr. Romney’s plan in 2012, and that it would be a struggle to make such deep cuts pay for themselves through faster growth.

Cutting the top income rate paid by the richest Americans by nearly a third while ratcheting up standard deductions, he said, will dwarf the effect of closing some loopholes. “The one thing that seems pretty obvious is that this has to be a big revenue loser,” Mr. Williams said.

Correction: September 9, 2015

An earlier version of this article misstated the surname of a senior fellow at the Tax Policy Center. It is Robertson Williams, not Robertson Morton.

Right, not sure. We had more than 200 RSVPs-- all people who had responded in the last week, after inviting thousands of people among blasts from TPA, MOSPCE, Pace, Hedgeclippers, and Greenwald's inequality folks in NYC.

But clearly even those couple of hundred did not turn out.

I think you and I are (oddly) on the same page on this one just written differently. But I can tell you Hayley was under water on this one and we were at a loss on where to turn.

You are right- it takes a lot of time to build a crowd and I don't know we had a turnout plan- together- on this. so maybe that's the conversation in terms of solution, that from the start you, me (and now that i'm on board will be from the start) are determining: should we do it, if so who's on point for each, running all the traps and moving.

To be clear- I'm all about a debrief and I just wanted to make sure that Hayley wasn't going to feel like it was on her which I should know you wouldn't do.

I can move around next week and can be up there at the beginning for this, others and the legal talk the lawyers want to have.

On Thu, Sep 10, 2015 at 6:20 PM, Snyder, Thomas <TSnyder@cityhall.nyc.gov> wrote:

The simple fact is that I really don't know who was responsible for building the event. That's on me. I actually thought it was Carla more than Hayley. As an organizer Geri I know you know what it takes to build a crowd. Only an organizer should ever be charged with building a crowd for the Mayor. I'm not on a witch hunt; I just want to debrief so that we are certain not to have this problem again. If you don't want Hayley on a call, that's fine. But I do want to understand what happened.

Dropping except you two. From afar, the biggest issue seemed to be who owned this event. It was something that was in the Mayor's wheelhouse and it seemed that we were going to do together since it benefited City Hall but Hayley ended up doing most on her own which is impossible. Until Karen answered the way she did in the press (which we should talk about offline) it became TPA on our own. I wasn't here at the very beginning of this, but it highlights how TPA and CH need to work better together from the start. Hayley busted her butt on this and I don't think putting people in a room to duke throw each other under the bus is a good thing. I realize that's not your intent but I think it will end that way. I know it doesn't help that I'm not able to be there this week or last but this was always to be a two organization (CH and TPA event) and in the debrief it seems all TPA unless Carla oversees press and special events which I don't know.

Subject: TPA needs of Mayor
Date: Thursday, September 10, 2015 7:03:11 PM

Good evening Mayor:

I will be coming in early next week and would like to request time to sit down with you and discuss a few important items. Below I've outlined several time sensitive things to get TPA moving. Some, co-chairs, we've started the conversation on and I believe we need to discuss. I will work with Prisca and Tom on scheduling. In the meantime, here are quick points and I look forward to your thoughts and the discussion.

LEADERSHIP of the c4- In addition to the Mayor, TPA needs large, influential members of important movements to sign on bolster the organization. Commitments for becoming a co-chair/leader would be to help in ALL ways and to serve as a lead surrogate and spokesperson as needed as well as organize other influential signers.

SCHEDULING- TPA needs scheduled time in advance to plan for press, political events. Therefore we need sign off by you for future events for the front office to work on. Lead time and planning is crucial to TPAs organizing success. We understand there maybe exceptions of crises where schedules change. And if there are changes, there needs to be communications process from CH to TPA. The political capital and time necessary to prepare for each one of these items needs to be understood so that last minute cancellations (w/exceptions on crises) are discussed in advance among staff before pulling down time.

CHECK IN TIME WITH ME (GERI)- There needs to be regular check in between me and the Mayor to get sign off, feedback in order to move programs forward and share ideas. In absence of this and time (see above) consistently (while not necessarily the same time weekly), TPA is not moving forward. Even if not regularly scheduled, checking in is important. I will also do a better job of reaching out for important sign off items.

Re-upping the Steyer conversation. Need to discuss moving forward with you.

On Thu, Sep 3, 2015 at 8:00 PM, Geri Prado <geri@progressiveagenda.us> wrote:
Hi Sir:

I spoke with Steyer's staff (Sky Gallegos who oversees his politics and campaigns for NextGen Climate) and she had said a few things based on her conversation with Tom:

- They're definitely interested in a real partnership. The suggestion is focusing on their largest initiative- 50% clean economy jobs by 30% they are focusing on nationally but digging in key states (IA, NH, FL, OH). They are putting a lot of money into paid and online media for this
- They're working with a cross section of groups: progressives, unions on various issues: income inequality, education, justice equality (this last piece was hard to hear as she was on a plane)
- They're working on a mayor's initiative with Bloomberg to organize mayors around the country on the issues around climate change

It sounded like there was money on the table if a partnership was reached first then a discussion would be had, but I'm not sure if we are on the same page with the $1 million amount that would be written to TPA versus put towards program with the 50-30 in it. We didn't get into those specifics as the plane doors were closing.

IF we are in agreement on incorporating the 50-30 into our messaging/agenda, I can push on how to partner but since it is a policy change for us, it was not something I felt I could come to on my own.

Please let me know when you'd like to discuss.

Sir:

I am lifting up the potential co-chairs initial list we discussed. I realize that some are not on TPA yet, but that would be part of adding to the political gravitas and cross movement appeal. With you as the founding leader and chair I believe this is a strong place to start. I look forward to your thoughts.

Business leader- Nick Hanauer, Warren Buffett (other NYC leader that could be an additionally good fit?)

Faith community- Reverend William Barber

Working People- Maria Elena Durazo, Rich Trumka (Liz Shuler)

Policy experts- Robert Reich, OR Roosevelt Institute leader

Online grassroots- Senator Elizabeth Warren, Katrina Vanden heuven

Civil Rights- Congressman John Lewis, Dolores Huerta

And tomorrow, my current (and hopefully final) girlfriend and I are having dinner with my cousin and her husband, who just sold his business for $45 million. They're both progressives, and I am gonna feel them out on TPA. My cousin and I are very close.

Basically, I'm telling you I know a lot of rich people!

Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake to announce she won't seek re-election

Elected Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, Freddie Gray
Baltimore, Md.

Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake will not seek re-election in 2016.

Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, beleaguered by the death of Freddie Gray and the protests and rioting that followed, will announce at 10 a.m. Friday that she won't seek re-election, her spokesman confirmed.

Rawlings-Blake, 45, wants to focus on preparing the city for the upcoming trials facing the six officers involved in Gray's arrest and death, sources close to the mayor say. She briefed her Cabinet and staff this morning, and has no plans to seek another office.

Freddie Gray trials likely to cost the city millions

The mayor abandons her re-election campaign amid a growing field of Democratic challengers in the April primary, including former Mayor Sheila Dixon, state Sen. Catherine Pugh and City Councilman Carl Stokes.

She spent recent months ramping up her campaign by building a field presence in the city, hosting fundraisers and courting voters with events, such as "Mondays with the Mayor" at local bars and restaurants.

Rawlings-Blake wants to spend the next 15 months on the city's recovery effort, according to the sources familiar with her decision. They said she felt it would be inappropriate to ask donors for money while the city has been facing the aftermath of the rioting.

The first trial in the Gray case is scheduled for Oct. 13. The officers involved face charges ranging from second-degree murder to assault and misconduct in office.

Her decision comes just days after her administration agreed to pay Gray's family $6.4 million in a settlement accepting all civil liability in his death but not acknowledging any wrongdoing by police.

City Councilman Nick Mosby, who is considering a run for mayor, thanked Rawlings-Blake for her service.

"Baltimore needs to move in new direction, past the scandals, the unrest, and the persistent poverty that has held us back," he said. "We need new leadership and new energy that can grow our economy, bring peace to our neighborhoods, and fix our broken government."

While Rawlings-Blake has been heralded as a fiscal hawk, she's faced frequent criticism that she's aloof. Her leadership was challenged during the rioting, and some political observers questioned whether she could recover.

Rawlings-Blake ascended to the city's highest elected office in February 2010 when Dixon resigned amid a corruption scandal. She's been a political fixture in the city since 1995 when she became the youngest person ever elected to the City Council.

She served on the council for 15 years, including three as the president.

During her tenure, unemployment has dropped from 12.1 percent to 8.1 percent and the city's added about 12,000 jobs. She shepherded a plan to secure $1 billion for new school construction and opened the city's first new recreation center in a decade.

Sources say she's also leaving office to spend more time with her 11-year-old daughter, Sophia, in the years before she heads to high school. Rawlings-Blake lives in the city's Coldspring neighborhood in North Baltimore with her husband, Kent.

By the time she exits City Hall in 2016, Rawlings-Blake will have served seven years in the job, about the same amount of time as Martin O'Malley. He had been at the helm for less than eight years when he left the city to become governor.

Rawlings-Blake is expected to also spend the coming months pushing her plan to finance the construction of more recreation centers by selling some of the city's parking garages, among other initiatives.

THE CITY OF NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
NEW YORK, NY 10007

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: September 10, 2015

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT PREMIER OF "HEDGE FUNDERS VS. KINDERGARTEN TEACHERS: WHOSE SIDE ARE YOU ON?"

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you. Thank you so much, Lynn. Lynn, thank you for calling me honorable – that meant a lot to me. Thank you, everyone. Lynn, thanks for leading us today. I want to thank everyone for being here and being a part of this discussion today, and it literally, as Lynn said, could not be on a more important topic. I want to thank Pace University for hosting us. I want to thank the wonderful folks at Brave New Films – you’ll see their handiwork in a moment, but they do extraordinary work illuminating the issues of the day.

We have some members of my team here today, including our Commissioner for the Mayor’s Office for People with Disabilities Victor Calise, Pauline Toole, our commissioner for the DORIS office, and Lori Sutton, our commissioner of the Mayor’s Office of Veterans Affairs. And I want you to thank all of them for being here – and Council Member Corey Johnson, a great progressive in the City Council. Let’s thank all of them for what they do.

[Applause]

Brave New Films does amazing work. They have a board member who I think the world of because she helps to foster some of the most important progressive coverage and discussion in this country. I am speaking of Katrina vanden Heuvel, the editor of The Nation magazine – 150 years The Nation has been illuminating key issues, including inequality – and let’s thank Katrina for the great work that she does.

[Applause]

We are going to hear from Robert Greenwald in a moment, the director of this film who has an amazing career. And we’re also going to hear from someone who can speak with real authority on the topic before you – a New York City kindergarten teacher, Lena Lombardi, who just started school yesterday. And you’re going to hear why this stark contrast between 25 hedge fund managers and 150,000-plus kindergarten teachers around our nation really should tell us all we need to know about the challenge of inequality in our times.

And the solution we're talking about today is one that is straightforward and gaining currency more and more literally, it seems, every day.

But let me just ground this for a moment in the experience we're having here in New York City. Look, I ran on the pledge of addressing income inequality. And I talked about the Tale of Two Cities that New York City has experienced for years and this country has increasingly experienced, where we see growing inequality and the corrosive impact of it.

And you know, when you talk about inequality, it's not an abstraction. It's not a matter of philosophy to say wouldn't we like more equality versus less. No, it's something much more tangible.

Growing inequality undermines our cohesion as a nation. It literally takes away the opportunities and the possibilities of our people.

This nation has been strongest and most unified when there was opportunity for more and more people. We've seen that possibility narrow in recent years – the exact opposite of what should be happening.

You know, I like to quote different folks across the spectrum on these issues because it's not just progressives talking about it. One of the most powerful statements I heard in the last year on income inequality was by Lloyd Blankfein, the CEO of Goldman Sachs – not a leftist by any measure – and he said growing income inequality was destabilizing the United States of America – a very powerful choice of words, but a very apt one.

So we said here in this city we have to use every tool possible to address it. And I'll tell you, I think we're making some headway, but I always said any one city can only go so far. The real big solutions are to some extent in our state capitals, but most especially in Washington D.C.. The biggest, most high-impact actions can only be taken by our federal government.

And that's why this film, putting this into such stark contrasts, is a wonderful call to arms to people all around the country to recognize we have to change federal policies fundamentally.

Now, in the city – look, again, everything we could find to help fight inequality, we are using.

We got paid sick leave to a half-million more people.

We, for the first time ever, had a rent freeze for over a million New Yorkers who were living in rent-regulated units, and had seen their rents go up unfairly over the years – they finally got some relief from that.

We are creating an affordable housing plan – 200,000 units preserved and built over the next ten years, enough for half-a-million people.

You think about things like that, you think about this wonderful step forward we made yesterday – pre-k – universal pre-k, full-day, for every child in our city – 65,000 kids started pre-k in New York City yesterday – full-day pre-k.

[Applause]

So you think about these very big investments, these very big changes, and you say, well, wow, that's – that's a lot, that's going to add up. It does help. It helps a lot. It helps that we have an aggressive living wage executive order and we're expanding it to more and more people – all of these things help, but the big holistic solutions come from changing federal policies, from making investments in our people, from progressive taxation that would actually give government the resources it needs to address these problems on a much greater level.

So I'm proud of what we're doing here, but the real challenge for all of us is to take all the great examples from cities and states around the country and use them to create pressure on Washington for change, and to bind together so many kindred voices who believe in fairness.

That's why I joined with others back in May to create the Progressive Agenda.

The Progressive Agenda is a gathering of leaders of all stripes from around the country who believe in things like closing the carried interest loophole or making $15 dollars the national minimum wage or pre-k for all, all over this country – core concepts that really would get to the heart of the matter when it comes to income inequality.

I will just take a moment for a plug – if you're interested in the Progressive Agenda, try progressiveagenda.us and you'll get all the facts. [Laughs] You can clap for that.

[Applause]

But let me tell you, at this moment, where New York City has embarked on something absolutely wonderful – and our pre-k effort is every neighborhood, it's every kind of person, every walk of life, and I've heard from parents what it means for them – it's a reminder that when you have the resources, we can do things that change peoples' lives.

Pre-k is an example. Pre-k would cost $10,000 dollars, $15,000 dollars for a parent to get if they had to go out and get a seat at a local nonprofit or a local school. How many parents in this city have $10,000 dollars or $15,000 dollars to spare when so many people are having trouble making ends meet? So that's something the public sector should cover. That's something the city should cover. That's something that should be covered all over the nation as a fundamental need of the people. Pre-k should be the norm, but how do you pay for it? Well, this film's about to give you a simple suggestion that could pay for something like pre-k for all, or could pay for some of the other crucial investments we need to make as a nation.

It's very simple. When we say “close the carried interest loophole” – now I must admit, this film is going to make it as sexy as it gets, because it is not the sexiest topic – but Robert did a great job with his team breaking it down and making it straightforward, and basically explaining that, unshockingly, some very, very privileged people got themselves a special tax consideration that meant they spent less in tax dollars, they'd have to pay less in taxes than other people who should, bluntly, be held to the same standard. So what happened is some very privileged people paid a lower tax rate – and pay today a lower tax rate than all the rest of us who work, because they make their money through hedge funds.

Now, I think the American sense of fairness is that however you make your money, you should pay a fair level of taxes so we can support all the work we have to do on behalf of our whole society and all of our people. And Lord knows, there shouldn't be special breaks for those who have the most.

You know, I invoked Lloyd Blankfein before. Let me talk about Warren Buffet, who said, when he talked about the Buffet Rule, that no millionaire should pay less in taxes than his own secretary – shouldn't pay a lower tax rate than his own secretary.

Well, here's another example of that – why should there be a special loophole allowing hedge fund managers to pay a lower tax rate than working people? It makes no sense. And what it means is resources that could go to making this a better country simply aren't available, because these folks, who have done fabulously well, aren't paying their fair share.

I'll do the Warren Buffet equivalent here – you're going to see some examples of these well-known hedge fund managers in this film, and I will say it this way – they pay a lower tax rate than the woman who cleans their summer house or the guy who flies their private jet. That's what's going on here, and it doesn't make sense, and it doesn't conform to our values as Americans, and it has to change.

Now, we have a moment where this discussion has suddenly gotten very ripe and very powerful, because the public can understand – if you had billions of dollars you could invest in pre-k or kindergarten or so many other good causes, good powerful things that our people need, well, who wouldn't want to see both the fairness and those resources brought to bear to help working people and their families?

So there's something going on here that's causing people to pay a lot more attention. And all over this country, the discussion about income inequality is getting more and more powerful, and it's being brought forward to candidates for office and the people in office. The demand is being put on them to address income inequality, to talk about tax fairness and say what they would do.

Now, you might say, well, wait – sure, there are some progressives who might respond to that, but a lot of other people, a lot of other candidates – maybe more conservative folks – would turn away and not even want to talk about the issue.

Well, just when you thought things were really black and white, very interesting few developments in our nation the last couple of weeks.

I must admit I did a double take when I saw Donald Trump speaking out for closing the carried interest loophole. That was not in the Donald Trump lexicon I was used to. But he did it – I'll give him credit, he did it with passion, and he pointed out that it just didn't make sense that this small group of individuals paid a lower tax rate.

Well, okay, you could say Donald Trump, you know, he's known to be a bit controversial. We're glad it was good controversy in this case.

But then you wake up today and you see Jeb Bush calling for an end to the carried interest loophole.

So once in a while, it might be possible to imagine that fairness breaks through – that the light breaks through and a basic matter of what’s right comes to the fore.

And maybe another way to think of it is the demands that the people make actually break through, because all over this country you hear people demanding more fairness. You hear them demanding more economic equality. You see it in the actions of local governments all over the country. You see it in referenda, even in red states – referenda for higher wages and benefits.

So maybe Donald Trump and Jeb Bush and a lot of other people are finally realizing the people are speaking and they’re speaking loudly on this issue.

So the call to action in this wonderful film is that every presidential candidate should have to speak up on this issue, and every candidate should take a simple pledge that in their first 100 days in office they will close the carried interest loophole once and for all.

[Applause]

But this film will say it much more eloquently than I could, and I want to introduce to you the man who brought it to us.

Robert Greenwald is the founder and the president of Brave New Films. He has won more awards and more different kind of awards for his work in film and TV, for his documentaries than I could possibly name.

And what’s powerful about Robert is he had a thriving career in the film and TV industry, but he felt called more and more to make documentaries that would shed light on the issues we’re facing. He was particularly moved by the 2000 presidential election and the fact that the will of the people was not heard – and he made a great documentary then and he’s continued since.

He has been many times awarded for his work. It’s been seen all over the globe. It’s been influential for its power, its clarity. He’s earned 25 Emmy nominations for all that he has done. A great artist, a great thinker, a great progressive – very proud to say one of the inaugural signatories of our progressive agenda – and someone who really sheds light in a nation that could use some more – ladies and gentlemen, Robert Greenwald.

Moderator: So, the question I have for you Mayor de Blasio – a lot of people argue about what drives income inequality. Liberals say well, maybe it’s because of low wages or weakened unions or CEO pay. Conservatives tend to point to things like technological change and a perceived lack of skills on the part of workers. Why is this particular driver something that people across the political spectrum, as we’ve heard, find so unjustified and unfair?

Mayor: Very powerful question –because it’s interesting, I’ve heard that fault line. And I think it’s important to look it in the eye. No one that I know – I certainly don’t believe that technological change has nothing to do with this; or globalization has nothing to do with this.

I think – I believe the mature approach is to say, look, a lot of different things have come together. But the fact that technological change or globalization are contributing factors does not, in a sense, excuse the other realities. Globalization and technological change emanated in many cases from governmental policies that were not necessarily just to begin with. And we certainly see a lot of that playing in the debate over trade right now. Are we going to have policies that encourage further globalization and further dumbing down of wages and benefits; and less power in the hands of the people, and more power in the hands of corporation. So, I think even if you see there's something analytically important to acknowledge about historical trends that does not for a moment take away the fact that a lot of them are grounded in policies that favored those that already had power. And the other side of your question is crucial here. We, in this country, once taxed the wealthy at a much higher level. And it had great impact on our society as a whole. During the Eisenhower administration – so just to ground this we're not talking about Che Guevara here – during the Eisenhower administration wealthy people were taxed at a much higher rate. It was one of the realities that allowed us to invest in infrastructure, invest in research, invest in education. There's a cause and effect here. The union movement was much stronger, obviously, for most of a half century – say from the '30s through the '70s and '80s. And that kept bring up the middle class, bringing up wages and benefits. There was an assumption, through much of government that government actually had to constantly reinforce the standard living of our people and open up more opportunity for working people and for people who had been historically left out of the economy. So, what's so interesting in this discussion is, we have a body of evidence of what worked. I'm not saying it was a perfect, gauzy time – as my wife Chirlane always reminds me, the “good old days” were not the “good old days” for a lot of people. But there were some real, specific better elements of our society, including the level of investment our government made; the way we asked those who had done very well to pay their fair share; and a fundamental belief that government was supposed to work to improve wages and benefits across the board. Those are the things we have to get back to.

Moderator: Thank you very much. And I'll just ask you one final question, because I know your time is limited. What do we stand to lose as a society if we're not able to change these policies, like carried interest? What – how is it going to change us?

Mayor: I appreciate that question deeply. One, I point to the destabilization point again – the quote from Lloyd Blankfein. Again, this is – we're not going to succeed as a nation, as a people, if there is not opportunity. In fact, if you can see before your eyes opportunity shrinking, and more and more people unable to make ends meet – and Robert, I give you such credit for the stories you told, even so briefly, in the film – but these teachers who are giving their all, and particularly the one who said, you know, at the end of the month, she was in debt $5 dollars, $10 dollars – that's the thin margin that so many Americans are living on. So you look at that, and you say, how could that be a strong and stable country? How could that be the right direction? And honestly, even the most recent economic data proves, unfortunately, working people continue to go backwards in real economic terms. It's not like, you know, the recovery quote-unquote “recovery” has suddenly righted the ship, and prosperity is being shared. Even years after the Great Recession, so many working people continue to go in the wrong direction economically. So I think we have to think, on the hand, about the destabilization element. The second part of the equation is what we're losing because we're not investing. So, go all around the country, go all around our city – we're not investing in infrastructure because the resources aren't there. There resources aren't there, in part because we're not asking those who have done so well to pay their fair share. If we're not investing in infrastructure, we're actually stymieing our economic possibilities and our future growth possibilities. We're also not providing a lot of jobs that would be provided if we were building. And that's what we did for decades, and a lot of people were able to feed their families because they had those jobs. We're not investing the way we could in education. We're thrilled that we got to full-day pre-k for all in New York City, but let's face it – we're a rarity. In many, many cities and states, full-day pre-k, even part-day – you know, half-day pre-k is not available. So kids aren't getting the education they need to be competitive in the world and have the futures they could have. So you look at what's been lost because the dynamic in Washington has devolved down to, how could we avoid spending money, and how could we avoid asking people to give their fair share for the good of all? It's stymieing us as a country. And if you, as a New Yorker, or anywhere you come from, you feel quality of life, in terms of things like infrastructure, getting worse, there's a literal cause and effect. And Robert's pointed out in the film, there's a literal cause and effect between the wrong kind of taxation policies and what we're not able to do for the good of all.

With that, I want to thank the panel. Forgive me that I have to move on, but I just want to ask one thing, if I may. I really think it's important that we not only thank all the panel, but thank everyone at Brave New Films, because this is a powerful work of art. Thank you so much, Robert. Let's give them another round of applause.

Yet another liberal praises Donald Trump

WASHINGTON POST - Amber Phillips

<http://www.washingtonpost.com/news/the-fix/wp/2015/09/11/yet-another-liberal-is-a-fan-of-donald-trump/>

Donald Trump's tax platform has won the support of yet another liberal Democrat.

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D), arguably one of the most liberal elected officials in America, told Seth Meyers in an interview Thursday that he likes the GOP front-runner's willingness to raise taxes on the very wealthy.

That "millionaire and billionaire hedge-fund managers should have to pay the same tax rate as the rest of us," de Blasio said. "And I was pleasantly surprised."

De Blasio said he's pushing to change the carried interest loophole, a 50-year-plus law that allows investors like hedge-fund managers and venture capitalists to pay a lower tax rate than the average American -- the idea being that investment carries inherent risk and should be taxed lower as a result.

De Blasio went on to say he thinks Trump's comments prove that income inequality is becoming a hot topic even among those on the right. (The Fix has documented that as well).

As my colleague Dave Weigel has pointed out, de Blasio is the latest progressive leader to praise Trump's plan. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) said this week: "Don't call us liberal. It is a pretty right position."

Maybe Trump has bipartisan appeal after all?

RUSH TRANSCRIPT: MAYOR DE BLASIO DELIVERS REMARKS AT PREMIER OF “HEDGE FUNDERS VS. KINDERGARTEN TEACHERS: WHOSE SIDE ARE YOU ON?”

Mayor Bill de Blasio: Thank you. Thank you so much, Lynn. Lynn, thank you for calling me honorable – that meant a lot to me. Thank you, everyone. Lynn, thanks for leading us today. I want to thank everyone for being here and being a part of this discussion today, and it literally, as Lynn said, could not be on a more important topic. I want to thank Pace University for hosting us. I want to thank the wonderful folks at Brave New Films – you’ll see their handiwork in a moment, but they do extraordinary work illuminating the issues of the day.

We have some members of my team here today, including our Commissioner for the Mayor’s Office for People with Disabilities Victor Calise, Pauline Toole, our commissioner for the DORIS office, and Lori Sutton, our commissioner of the Mayor’s Office of Veterans Affairs. And I want you to thank all of them for being here – and Council Member Corey Johnson, a great progressive in the City Council. Let’s thank all of them for what they do.

[Applause]

Brave New Films does amazing work. They have a board member who I think the world of because she helps to foster some of the most important progressive coverage and discussion in this country. I am speaking of Katrina vanden Heuvel, the editor of The Nation magazine – 150 years The Nation has been illuminating key issues, including inequality – and let’s thank Katrina for the great work that she does.

[Applause]

We are going to hear from Robert Greenwald in a moment, the director of this film who has an amazing career. And we’re also going to hear from someone who can speak with real authority on the topic before you – a New York City kindergarten teacher, Lena Lombardi, who just started school yesterday. And you’re going to hear why this stark contrast between 25 hedge fund managers and 150,000-plus kindergarten teachers around our nation really should tell us all we need to know about the challenge of inequality in our times.

And the solution we’re talking about today is one that is straightforward and gaining currency more and more literally, it seems, every day.

But let me just ground this for a moment in the experience we’re having here in New York City. Look, I ran on the pledge of addressing income inequality. And I talked about the Tale of Two Cities that New York City has experienced for years and this country has increasingly experienced, where we see growing inequality and the corrosive impact of it.

And you know, when you talk about inequality, it’s not an abstraction. It’s not a matter of philosophy to say wouldn’t we like more equality versus less. No, it’s something much more tangible.

Growing inequality undermines our cohesion as a nation. It literally takes away the opportunities and the possibilities of our people.

This nation has been strongest and most unified when there was opportunity for more and more people. We've seen that possibility narrow in recent years – the exact opposite of what should be happening.

You know, I like to quote different folks across the spectrum on these issues because it's not just progressives talking about it. One of the most powerful statements I heard in the last year on income inequality was by Lloyd Blankfein, the CEO of Goldman Sachs – not a leftist by any measure – and he said growing income inequality was destabilizing the United States of America – a very powerful choice of words, but a very apt one.

So we said here in this city we have to use every tool possible to address it. And I'll tell you, I think we're making some headway, but I always said any one city can only go so far. The real big solutions are to some extent in our state capitals, but most especially in Washington D.C.. The biggest, most high-impact actions can only be taken by our federal government.

And that's why this film, putting this into such stark contrasts, is a wonderful call to arms to people all around the country to recognize we have to change federal policies fundamentally.

Now, in the city – look, again, everything we could find to help fight inequality, we are using.

We got paid sick leave to a half-million more people.

We, for the first time ever, had a rent freeze for over a million New Yorkers who were living in rent-regulated units, and had seen their rents go up unfairly over the years – they finally got some relief from that.

We are creating an affordable housing plan – 200,000 units preserved and built over the next ten years, enough for half-a-million people.

You think about things like that, you think about this wonderful step forward we made yesterday – pre-k – universal pre-k, full-day, for every child in our city – 65,000 kids started pre-k in New York City yesterday – full-day pre-k.

[Applause]

So you think about these very big investments, these very big changes, and you say, well, wow, that's – that's a lot, that's going to add up. It does help. It helps a lot. It helps that we have an aggressive living wage executive order and we're expanding it to more and more people – all of these things help, but the big holistic solutions come from changing federal policies, from making investments in our people, from progressive taxation that would actually give government the resources it needs to address these problems on a much greater level.

So I'm proud of what we're doing here, but the real challenge for all of us is to take all the great examples from cities and states around the country and use them to create pressure on Washington for change, and to bind together so many kindred voices who believe in fairness.

That's why I joined with others back in May to create the Progressive Agenda.

The Progressive Agenda is a gathering of leaders of all stripes from around the country who believe in things like closing the carried interest loophole or making $15 dollars the national minimum wage or pre-k for all, all over this country – core concepts that really would get to the heart of the matter when it comes to income inequality.

I will just take a moment for a plug – if you're interested in the Progressive Agenda, try progressiveagenda.us and you'll get all the facts. [Laughs] You can clap for that.

[Applause]

But let me tell you, at this moment, where New York City has embarked on something absolutely wonderful – and our pre-k effort is every neighborhood, it's every kind of person, every walk of life, and I've heard from parents what it means for them – it's a reminder that when you have the resources, we can do things that change peoples' lives.

Pre-k is an example. Pre-k would cost $10,000 dollars, $15,000 dollars for a parent to get if they had to go out and get a seat at a local nonprofit or a local school. How many parents in this city have $10,000 dollars or $15,000 dollars to spare when so many people are having trouble making ends meet? So that's something the public sector should cover. That's something the city should cover. That's something that should be covered all over the nation as a fundamental need of the people. Pre-k should be the norm, but how do you pay for it? Well, this film's about to give you a simple suggestion that could pay for something like pre-k for all, or could pay for some of the other crucial investments we need to make as a nation.

It's very simple. When we say “close the carried interest loophole” – now I must admit, this film is going to make it as sexy as it gets, because it is not the sexiest topic – but Robert did a great job with his team breaking it down and making it straightforward, and basically explaining that, unshockingly, some very, very privileged people got themselves a special tax consideration that meant they spent less in tax dollars, they'd have to pay less in taxes than other people who should, bluntly, be held to the same standard. So what happened is some very privileged people paid a lower tax rate – and pay today a lower tax rate than all the rest of us who work, because they make their money through hedge funds.

Now, I think the American sense of fairness is that however you make your money, you should pay a fair level of taxes so we can support all the work we have to do on behalf of our whole society and all of our people. And Lord knows, there shouldn't be special breaks for those who have the most.

You know, I invoked Lloyd Blankfein before. Let me talk about Warren Buffet, who said, when he talked about the Buffet Rule, that no millionaire should pay less in taxes than his own secretary – shouldn't pay a lower tax rate than his own secretary.

Well, here's another example of that – why should there be a special loophole allowing hedge fund managers to pay a lower tax rate than working people? It makes no sense. And what it means is resources that could go to making this a better country simply aren't available, because these folks, who have done fabulously well, aren't paying their fair share.

I'll do the Warren Buffet equivalent here – you're going to see some examples of these well-known hedge fund managers in this film, and I will say it this way – they pay a lower tax rate than the woman who cleans their summer house or the guy who flies their private jet. That's what's going on here, and it doesn't make sense, and it doesn't conform to our values as Americans, and it has to change.

Now, we have a moment where this discussion has suddenly gotten very ripe and very powerful, because the public can understand – if you had billions of dollars you could invest in pre-k or kindergarten or so many other good causes, good powerful things that our people need, well, who wouldn't want to see both the fairness and those resources brought to bear to help working people and their families?

So there's something going on here that's causing people to pay a lot more attention. And all over this country, the discussion about income inequality is getting more and more powerful, and it's being brought forward to candidates for office and the people in office. The demand is being put on them to address income inequality, to talk about tax fairness and say what they would do.

Now, you might say, well, wait – sure, there are some progressives who might respond to that, but a lot of other people, a lot of other candidates – maybe more conservative folks – would turn away and not even want to talk about the issue.

Well, just when you thought things were really black and white, very interesting few developments in our nation the last couple of weeks.

I must admit I did a double take when I saw Donald Trump speaking out for closing the carried interest loophole. That was not in the Donald Trump lexicon I was used to. But he did it – I'll give him credit, he did it with passion, and he pointed out that it just didn't make sense that this small group of individuals paid a lower tax rate.

Well, okay, you could say Donald Trump, you know, he's known to be a bit controversial. We're glad it was good controversy in this case.

But then you wake up today and you see Jeb Bush calling for an end to the carried interest loophole.

So once in a while, it might be possible to imagine that fairness breaks through – that the light breaks through and a basic matter of what's right comes to the fore.

And maybe another way to think of it is the demands that the people make actually break through, because all over this country you hear people demanding more fairness. You hear them demanding more economic equality. You see it in the actions of local governments all over the country. You see it in referenda, even in red states – referenda for higher wages and benefits.

So maybe Donald Trump and Jeb Bush and a lot of other people are finally realizing the people are speaking and they're speaking loudly on this issue.

So the call to action in this wonderful film is that every presidential candidate should have to speak up on this issue, and every candidate should take a simple pledge that in their first 100 days in office they will close the carried interest loophole once and for all.

[Applause]

But this film will say it much more eloquently than I could, and I want to introduce to you the man who brought it to us.

Robert Greenwald is the founder and the president of Brave New Films. He has won more awards and more different kind of awards for his work in film and TV, for his documentaries than I could possibly name.

And what's powerful about Robert is he had a thriving career in the film and TV industry, but he felt called more and more to make documentaries that would shed light on the issues we're facing. He was particularly moved by the 2000 presidential election and the fact that the will of the people was not heard – and he made a great documentary then and he's continued since.

He has been many times awarded for his work. It's been seen all over the globe. It's been influential for its power, its clarity. He's earned 25 Emmy nominations for all that he has done. A great artist, a great thinker, a great progressive – very proud to say one of the inaugural signatories of our progressive agenda – and someone who really sheds light in a nation that could use some more – ladies and gentlemen, Robert Greenwald.

Moderator: So, the question I have for you Mayor de Blasio – a lot of people argue about what drives income inequality. Liberals say well, maybe it's because of low wages or weakened unions or CEO pay. Conservatives tend to point to things like technological change and a perceived lack of skills on the part of workers. Why is this particular driver something that people across the political spectrum, as we've heard, find so unjustified and unfair?

Mayor: Very powerful question –because it's interesting, I've heard that fault line. And I think it's important to look it in the eye. No one that I know – I certainly don't believe that technological change has nothing to do with this; or globalization has nothing to do with this. I think – I believe the mature approach is to say, look, a lot of different things have come together. But the fact that technological change or globalization are contributing factors does not, in a sense, excuse the other realities. Globalization and technological change emanated in many cases from governmental policies that were not necessarily just to begin with. And we certainly see a lot of that playing in the debate over trade right now. Are we going to have policies that encourage further globalization and further dumbing down of wages and benefits; and less power in the hands of the people, and more power in the hands of corporation. So, I think even if you see there's something analytically important to acknowledge about historical trends that does not for a moment take away the fact that a lot of them are grounded in policies that favored those that already had power. And the other side of your question is crucial here. We, in this country, once taxed the wealthy at a much higher level. And it had great impact on our society as a whole. During the Eisenhower administration – so just to ground this we're not talking about Che Guevara here – during the Eisenhower administration wealthy people were taxed at a much higher rate. It was one of the realities that allowed us to invest in infrastructure, invest in research, invest in education. There's a cause and effect here. The union movement was much stronger, obviously, for most of a half century – say from the '30s through the '70s and '80s. And that kept bringing up the middle class, bringing up wages and benefits. There was an assumption, through much of government that government actually had to constantly reinforce the standard living of our people and open up more opportunity for working people and for people who had been historically left out of the economy. So, what's so interesting in this discussion is, we have a body of evidence of what worked. I'm not saying it was a perfect, gauzy time – as my wife Chirlane always reminds me, the “good old days” were not the “good old days” for a lot of people. But there were some real, specific better elements of our society, including the level of investment our government made; the way we asked those who had done very well to pay their fair share; and a fundamental belief that government was supposed to work to improve wages and benefits across the board. Those are the things we have to get back to.

Moderator: Thank you very much. And I'll just ask you one final question, because I know your time is limited. What do we stand to lose as a society if we're not able to change these policies, like carried interest? What – how is it going to change us?

Mayor: I appreciate that question deeply. One, I point to the destabilization point again – the quote from Lloyd Blankfein. Again, this is – we're not going to succeed as a nation, as a people, if there is not opportunity. In fact, if you can see before your eyes opportunity shrinking, and more and more people unable to make ends meet – and Robert, I give you such credit for the stories you told, even so briefly, in the film – but these teachers who are giving their all, and particularly the one who said, you know, at the end of the month, she was in debt $5 dollars, $10 dollars – that's the thin margin that so many Americans are living on. So you look at that, and you say, how could that be a strong and stable country? How could that be the right direction? And honestly, even the most recent economic data proves, unfortunately, working people continue to go backwards in real economic terms. It's not like, you know, the recovery quote-unquote “recovery” has suddenly righted the ship, and prosperity is being shared. Even years after the Great Recession, so many working people continue to go in the wrong direction economically. So I think we have to think, on the hand, about the destabilization element. The second part of the equation is what we're losing because we're not investing. So, go all around the country, go all around our city – we're not investing in infrastructure because the resources aren't there. There resources aren't there, in part because we're not asking those who have done so well to pay their fair share. If we're not investing in infrastructure, we're actually stymieing our economic possibilities and our future growth possibilities. We're also not providing a lot of jobs that would be provided if we were building. And that's what we did for decades, and a lot of people were able to feed their families because they had those jobs. We're not investing the way we could in education. We're thrilled that we got to full-day pre-k for all in New York City, but let's face it – we're a rarity. In many, many cities and states, full-day pre-k, even part-day – you know, half-day pre-k is not available. So kids aren't getting the education they need to be competitive in the world and have the futures they could have. So you look at what's been lost because the dynamic in Washington has devolved down to, how could we avoid spending money, and how could we avoid asking people to give their fair share for the good of all? It's stymieing us as a country. And if you, as a New Yorker, or anywhere you come from, you feel quality of life, in terms of things like infrastructure, getting worse, there's a literal cause and effect. And Robert's pointed out in the film, there's a literal cause and effect between the wrong kind of taxation policies and what we're not able to do for the good of all.

With that, I want to thank the panel. Forgive me that I have to move on, but I just want to ask one thing, if I may. I really think it's important that we not only thank all the panel, but thank everyone at Brave New Films, because this is a powerful work of art. Thank you so much, Robert. Let's give them another round of applause.

Geri, John-

Great speaking with you! I've been in touch with a senior colleague at the US Embassy to the Holy See and he will share any talking points we share on inequality in the US to be included in the Pope's briefing materials. I'll share these now but if you have more, please send before Monday.

Cheers,
Penny

Hi Commissioner:

Here are a few bullet points on how we're talking about income inequality. If you would like more specifics please let me know. Thank you and hope this helps:

We need to invest in kids and education and fair income, wages and benefits to pull people out of poverty and into the middle class. People who work should be able to provide for their families, not live in poverty.

As a country we can do this if those such as heads of corporations, hedge fund managers don't pay lower tax rates than everyday people as they do now. We need to raise the minimum wage, allow for working people to collectively negotiate and bargain with their employers for a livable wage and benefits.

The Progressive Agenda is an organization started by Mayor Bill de Blasio and other leaders from around the country dedicated to pushing solutions for income inequality. Together, they are working to ask government to make changes and invest in people, solve the inequality crisis and ensure that people have a better life for themselves and their families.

Again - topics will include tpa - national and local focus on inequality, including pre-k (he's game for Mayor asking about that), min wage increase, he's going to ask about cuomo's move this week - and maybe dig in on that a bit - would also be prepared to talk about arrest of Blake (they didn't mention this, but i think it will be of interest to him and mayor can speak to it directly).

And trump/ carried loophole, documentary, etc.

Would also prepare for Biden follow up.

This should have all of my suggested changes.

Not sure what you want to do with the SEP part of computer science, I would pare that way way back so it's just a mention of it—there will already be a story on the how so not sure we need to spend speech minutes on the how so much as the what of computer science.

Have you:

Sent to mahen so he can start fact checking?

Sent comp sci section to Gabrielle so she can align with what they've said to funders/which funders need the shout out?

I am going to turn my attention to the "why 80% is a good grad goal" question and comb through for all the "need more DOE info" flags.

Education Vision 2015: Updated September 12, 2015; 8pm

INSERT SOMEWHERE: No Bad Schools. Take back the term “College Prep”

Equity and Excellence: Every Student, Every Day

Thank you, [INTRODUCER].

It’s an honor to be here at Bronx Latin, among some of the best educators and brightest students in this entire city. I want to thank PRINCIPAL, SOMEONE ELSE, AND SOMEONE ELSE.

The 600 kids who strode through the doors here at Bronx Latin are among 1.1 million children who put another New York City summer behind them, and started the year in our public schools last Wednesday.

Could you feel that tidal wave of emotion ~~crash-wash~~ over the whole City, as it always does the first day of school? So much joy, excitement, trepidation flooding sidewalks, school hallways, the cars, buses and trains ferrying families to school in neighborhoods from the South Bronx to the South Shore.

My wife Chirlane and I know those emotions well. Actually, this September is the first in 17 years we haven’t been among the public school parents waving goodbye at the entrance. . .swallowing an ocean of feelings as Dante or Chiara walked away into the school year.

We know that families of every kind, in all our city's neighborhoods, share these first-day feelings. But, for many, the common experience of education stops there.

You may not see it from looking at the building roofs, or the books in the library, or the science labs. But if you look deeper, the differences come into focus.

Maybe, once all the parents finally left, a teacher in one school asked the first math question of the day, and a dozen hands shot up across a full classroom.

Maybe a few miles away, another teacher at another school asked the same question, and no hands went up at all.

One classroom has students who have gotten what they need to compete—to answer the question, but also to get into college, to have a rich and satisfying experience there, and to eventually acquire a good job they can support a family with.

The other classroom's students are, through no fault of their own, behind in the common quest for a comfortable and productive future. They have not been given the tools they need to set them on the path to success.

This amounts to a Tale of Two Cities in our schools—and it is not acceptable. Each child in every classroom is owed the opportunity to have their future determined by hard work and unique talents, as it should be.

PLAY WITH: The stark reality today is that some children have been prepared and supported to be successful in the classroom/college and career, but far too many children have not had the opportunity to achieve all that they are capable of.;

Formatted: Space Before: 0 pt

Formatted: Font: 14 pt, Font color: Auto

Each is owed the chance to achieve the excellence that characterizes so much of the history of New York City public education.

~~This tradition of excellence stretches back decades. In the 1930s and '40s, as the economy underwent a seismic shift, schools began to educate more and more New Yorkers for jobs that required high school diplomas. For the first time, female students were afforded the same chance at learning as their male classmates, and spending on education skyrocketed. This generation of learners turned out to be Nobel laureates, Pulitzer winners, people who shaped the future of the city and the nation. Jacob Javits. Ruth Bader Ginsburg. Clive Davis.—FINESSE THIS LIST~~

~~Decades progressed, and graduation rates across the country peaked in the late 1960s. New Yorkers educated in our public schools were again the bedrock of a new generation of national political, academic, and scientific leaders, this time James Baldwin. Richard Rodgers. [ONE OR TWO MORE HERE]~~

~~The number of schools continued to grow. More leaders were born and educated in NYC, and did great things all over the world.~~

~~But while this is a tremendous story, it is by no means the full story.~~

~~It's another instance where if you look closer, the distinctions and differences appear.~~

~~Because the good old days of education were governed by a wholly different set of expectations than today. The public school educated luminaries of the early 20th century were among the relative few who actually graduated: In 1940, just 23% of New Yorkers across the state over the age of 25 had a high school diploma. And back then, you could still live a middle class life without one.~~

~~And those record numbers of graduates in the 1960s were largely white men [WAITING ON FACT CHECK]. The student body became increasingly diverse in the years that followed, and as that continued, graduation rates declined.~~

Let me be crystal clear: diversity itself is not the problem. Diversity is the very backbone of our city. It's what makes New York extraordinary, and unlike any other place on the face of the Earth.

It is why today we serve students who speak hundreds of languages, we accommodate all kinds of learners, and welcome families no matter where they come from, what they do, and how much they have to get by.

We celebrate this diversity in our school system, and there's much work to be done to make individual schools more diverse [REWORD?]. But this alone is not the sole solution to the challenges we face.

What truly threatens us—and our children—is the poverty and inequity blanketing many of our communities, foreclosing too many futures far too early. This status quo is unacceptable, un-American, and unfaithful to the legacy and to the promise of New York City. WORK IN "TRAGICALLY COMMON?"

We all have a stake in its change. As taxpayers, we all pay for public school. As Americans, its value is entrenched in our moral DNA. We've inherited a belief so strong it's almost biological: that this land's richness and riches derive from the success of its people—and this success is available to anyone who puts in the time and the sweat to earn it.

Success is not the privilege of a few, but the right of all.

Excellence cannot and should not discriminate.

And so: our schools must run on the twin engines of equity and excellence.

All across the City, there are so many schools and so many kids who express this commitment to equity and excellence each day. I feel like the proud parent of hundreds of thousands when I think about the fact that we literally have some of the best students, and the best schools, in the country. U.S. News and World Report recently found that New York City had 11 of the top 500 schools anywhere in the country-- more than any other city.

And the nation's gold standard for measuring "what America's students know and can do," the National Assessment of Educational Progress, or NAEP, tells us just how extraordinary our students are. In 2013, students in 7 of the 10 largest U.S. cities took NAEP's exam. Only San Diego – a district the tenth of the size of New York City – scored higher than us in English and Math.

And New York City's low-income students are among the highest performing when compared to low-income students in other large cities. [NEED MORE DETAIL HERE FROM KARIN/DOE]

[This would be an achievement worth celebrating under any circumstances, but it's particularly extraordinary because of how ambitious our academic standards are compared with the rest of the nation.]

[Aiming high is one of our core principles—and simply part of who we are. New York has the most rigorous curriculum standards and administers the toughest tests in the country. We expect everyone to embrace this aim for excellence, translate it into specific ambitions, and transform those ambitions into achievement.]

It's happening at Washington Heights Expeditionary Learning School, where I .
|[GET DETAILS OF BDB EXPERIENCE]|

To fully appreciate the achievements of today's educators and students, we must take a moment to see how far we've come, and applaud some of the hard work of our predecessors. The Bloomberg Administration finally won the fight for Mayoral Control of the Schools, a fight that stretched all the way back to the Koch Administration.

They fought for Mayoral Control because it's a model that is recognized as just plain smart governance by so many across political lines (even by our good friend Rudy Giuliani, but then again we see eye to eye on so much). Graduation rates have gone up since the start of mayoral control, paving the way for the record-breaking graduating class of 2014—the last class we have final numbers for as we eagerly await 2015 data in the coming months.

More than 51,000 students graduated high school in 2014, reflecting the highest graduation rate in the city's history—and 17,000 more students walking across the stage than a decade ago. The class of 2014 also had the fewest dropouts than any other since NYC started keeping records—fully 9,000 less than ten years ago.

It's no surprise that this kind of academic success exists in parallel with an equally important kind of success—most New Yorkers feel great about their schools. In a survey of nearly half a million public school parents, the overwhelming majority told us they like their schools and the education they deliver, trust their principals, and would recommend their school to ~~any~~ other families.

Clearly, the city is blessed with smart, hardworking, dedicated and determined children, parents, and educators. Together, they write success stories that transform lives, lift up communities, and make their mark on the country and even on the world.

But: there simply have not been enough of those success stories. And too often, the success stories emanate from the same neighborhoods. That's not equality. That's not justice. That's why our challenge, and our mission, is to make sure that kids in East New York have the same chance to excel as kids on the Upper East Side.

The Tale of Two Cities in our schools is unacceptable. But we believe it is NOT inevitable.

We won't choose among our children who will succeed and who will not.

Much of our past has been illustrious—but it hasn't been enough. We demand more.

We demand all our kids learn more than history has ever asked them to, so they can succeed to in a 21st century global economy.

We demand all our schools deliver the best possible education to create the best possible chances for each and every student.

And that means we demand all our children have the chance to go to college.

We came to City Hall to make it happen. Our history, our values, and the simple facts of how far we have come show us we can.

I often say that education determines economic destiny more now than at any point in human history. Nowhere is that clearer than when looking at the way a life veers towards success when a person completes college. An adult with only a HS diploma is almost three times as likely to be in poverty in NYC as someone with a bachelor's degree or higher, and earns $1.1 million less over the course of a lifetime. [Source: CEO]

And our success as a 21st century global city depends on readying students for success in higher education. Our children are counting on us, but and we are counting on THEM to keep New York the most competitive city in the world.

In just five years, almost two-thirds of NYC jobs are projected to require some college. [Source: CEO]. Right now, the ~~boasts~~ brightest minds from all over the world are magnetically drawn to live and work in the greatest city on earth. That attraction shows no sign of letting up, nor do we want it to, in order to keep the innovative and international flavor that makes us great. But we need more talent, and we need to grow it right here at home.

So: we have set two connected goals around higher education to lift up more of our children and meet the needs of a growing, thriving city.

First, more of our students will graduate.

Right now, 20,000 students who begin high school in New York City each year do not finish. We refuse accept that status quo, which relegates some students to an economic underclass for the rest of their lives.

So: we pledge that over the next ten years, we will raise our high school graduation rate to 80%.

This is not an arbitrary goal. The U.S. national average is 81%. Surpassing 80% was a moment that U.S. Secretary of Education Arne Duncan called “a profound milestone.”

The national average takes into account every type of district. When you separate out big cities from affluent suburban districts and all the other areas, the picture looks very different.

The graduation rate of most big cities is in the 60 percent range. Some cities only graduated half their kids.

In New York City, we're at 68.4% today. But, even in an era of much tougher standards, we know we can do better—and we will.

Second, we will make more of those diplomas lead to college. Right now, fewer than half [48%] of our high school graduates overall are college-ready— meaning they truly have the skills to absorb the material taught in a university course.

Think about that for a moment. Think about all those kids graduating who, if they enter college, will find it frustrating, alienating, and probably “not for them” simply because they can’t understand what they are being taught. Their only university path would include remedial work, which adds time and expense that make completing college that much more difficult.

And in a day and age when a college degree is the true ticket to a good job, a pathway to the middle class and the most important determining factor to lifelong economic security, we absolutely cannot allow this status quo to continue.

So our college readiness goal is two-fold. First of all, we will increase the number of public high school graduates who are ready for college from fewer than half [48%; 25,735] to at least two-thirds (66%) by 2026.

And we will make sure that every single high school in New York City graduates more college-ready students.

For every student, graduation must be more than a reflection on the hard work and achievement during the past 15 years. It must be a true promise for the future.

[BUILD OUT: It could have changed a long time ago. For too long, NYC hasn’t been serious about getting our kids to college. Now we are here.]

Excellence will not be apportioned out for the lucky few. All our schools will be equitably served to lift up all our children.

Today I’ll describe our vision of how we get there.

We are of course already hard at work, and in 20 months we’ve created initiatives that are powerful instruments of equity and excellence, for our schools and for our students. We’ve planned, funded, and rolled out full-day, high-quality, universal pre-k, as well as an unprecedented expansion of after-school programming for middle schoolers. Test scores are up for the second consecutive year, and the first full year on our watch.

CHARTER SECTION PENDING POLICY: CREATING UNIFIED DYNAMIC, HIGHLIGHT SUCCESS WORKING WITH CHARTERS, SHARING SPACE, AFTERSCHOOL, PRE-K, CARMEN'S VISITS, MAYOR'S VISIT ON FDOS

Comment [GK2]: I want to move the charter section way back so it's not the first thing people hear

CF 09/10: "We need to take these conflicting views and find where the commonalities are"

More efforts are underway than what's covered in the news, and we'll shine a light on them today. Still others you will hear about for the very first time. And as I share the work we are doing, so too will I illustrate the ideas that animate it—the ideas that underpin an equitable and excellent school system for every child.

We will start from a fundamental place: how the City works with those who teach our children. We have redefined this relationship, premised on the belief that we must work with educators, not against them. We must value their expertise and show respect for the work they do every day. We must work harder to retain our teaching talent. And, crucially, we must grow that talent by giving all our educators the training and development they need to deepen their skills.

This professional development is a cornerstone of our reforms in every grade, and something the Chancellor—who started as a rookie teacher 50 years ago and has held nearly every level of job in our public education system since—speaks about with particular passion. She believes that the best way to deepen teachers' skills is to spread what works—connecting the whole education system so educators can lift each other up, with veteran educators spreading the practices that spur success to fellow teachers and principals. Every single school is engaging in this professional development work.

Our goal is to make sure there ARE more veteran educators to do this in the years ahead. So we have established X00 master, model, and lead teacher positions to reward and retain our best teachers. They are on the front lines of cultivating more expert teachers for the future, who will in turn pay forward the wisdom and skills they acquired from those who taught them.

Certainly, the vast majority of our educators are talented, passionate, and deeply dedicated to their students and schools. There are, however, some teachers who have shown that they shouldn't be in the profession. Last year alone, we helped 660 educators find their way out of the New York City school system. This is the highest number since the City started keeping track, and shows our commitment to making the change that's necessary. Where it's necessary, we will replace school leadership or transform a school itself if they cannot improve with our tailored and targeted support.

And working with our teachers, we have created 126 PROSE Schools—schools that are not confined to labor work rules, and therefore have an unprecedented, widespread freedom. Educators are using this freedom to think differently about teaching and teach differently to help kids think better. We will take the most successful elements of these experiments in school administration and teaching and look hard at ways to bring them to other schools. ~~...allowing more educators to break through formerly impenetrable boundaries in the service of stronger education.~~

We've embarked on pioneering efforts like PROSE schools because we consider ourselves responsible for our students' journeys and their eventual destination of college or a living-wage career. Schools are accountable to us not just for test scores and graduation rates, but for all the elements that are proven to get those results.

ILLUSTRATE FRAMEWORK: rigorous instruction, collaborative teachers, supportive environments, strong family-community ties, effective school leaders, and a sense of school trust.

And any school must be judged on all of these interconnected – where they need help, what that help looks like.

And each child will travel his or her own academic, social, and emotional journey. We can't, in the interest of wholesale success, sell education wholesale to all students. They're not our customers. They're our children.

These are the elements that make up our Framework for Great Schools, and what parents will see evaluated in the updated School Quality Snapshots, which will be released in October. We have already replaced the old system of school report cards and the single letter grade, which misled families and oversimplified what it meant to be a strong school.

A word here about how those tests fit into the broader picture. Yes, they are tough, and yes, tests matter. But we treat tests as an important thing, not THE only important thing. Tests only tell you that you need to improve and where that improvement is needed—not how to get it done.

It takes a lot more than test scores to understand what's going on in a school and how it's doing for its kids. We believe that multiple measures intertwine to lead to success are the best way to know what's really going on in a school. And we believe no two schools and no two children need the same amount of support in the classroom, and in their communities in order to excel.

That's why we have committed to address the full range of issues that affect a child's ability to learn. The cornerstone of this is our Community Schools initiative – 130 schools across the city that support the needs of the whole child. Community Schools might provide counseling services so students have a safe place to share their struggles and successes. They offer free vision exams and glasses so kids can see the smartboard. They might have a food pantry so hunger doesn't distract from learning. They might offer English classes for families so parents can help kids with their homework.

In addition, we will pilot a program to give the children and families who need it most their own strong, supportive hand—to guide them over the long term through the landscape of teachers and tests, to help clear the tough hurdles and celebrate strong successes, and—most of all—to chart and clarify a path to high school graduation and on to college.

Starting next year, every single 6th through 12th grader in two of our most struggling communities—the South Bronx's District 7, and Central Brooklyn's District 23, will have their first meeting with their Single Shepherd [College and Career Coach? Navigator?]. This will be the first of dozens of encounters between students, parents, and Shepherds along the journey. The Shepherd won't simply implore students to keep their eyes on the prize, but actually show them how to get there, following a student and their family through the years to high school graduation and actually enrolling in college.

The best way to make this all come to life, is to imagine a few moments in the a few points on the entire educational journey for some of our children, across the city, over the course of their day.

We'll start first thing in the morning. It's 8am, and a four year-old is intently focused on building a tower of blocks, stacking carefully as her classmates play behind her – some singing with a teacher, some drawing early masterpieces, some gazing at beginner books. It's a lively and alive place, filled with the sounds and colors that awaken young children to the world.

This is the critical moment where success begins. We fundamentally believe all children must start their education earlier so they are poised to reap the benefits of Kindergarten – and everything that comes after.

I'll repeat what I've said before: we cannot get education right if we do not get it right from the beginning. I'm very proud that last week, we started getting it right for more than 65,000 of our kids, who began our free, universal, high-quality pre-K. At this very moment, ~~Block~~ towers are rising all across this great city.

Comment [GK3]: Double negative phrasing (and negative phrasing)

Around the same time, across town, a second grader rides the bus to school with ~~a parent~~ her mother, proudly showing off the book the class has been reading— explaining what it's about and which character she played in a class activity-read aloud yesterday. Her ~~parent-mom~~ smiles knowingly because yesterday, ~~the~~ teacher called for a few minutes just to share a positive update on her reading progress.

It's nearly impossible to overemphasize the value of these kinds of interactions— both the simple phone call from teacher to parent, and that moment of sharing between child and parent. Parents are the first and last teachers of children, and must be our partners in everything we do.

That's why we knocked on the doors of 35,000 parents this summer to make sure families knew what to expect in the year ahead. It's why we instituted an unprecedented 40 minutes of teacher time dedicated solely to connecting with parents. Maybe this is the time during which our teacher made her phone call to share this news. . .this news which is so prized not just by the family, but to all of us and all our educators.

One second grader's proud emergence as a reader reflects a milestone of epic proportion in that child's life. Reading is the very baseline of lifelong success. It is the foundation of learning in all subjects. Reading is how our kids explore the world and learn to think about it. It makes them engaged with society and equips them with the tools to change it. Reading is the key.

And so we are introducing Reach to Reading for All. By 2018, every elementary school in the city will have access to a reading specialist, focused primarily on helping struggling second-graders get on track and stay on track.

This initiative will be of particular benefit to students who struggle to learn to read. For some students with disabilities, and for many English Language Learners, working directly with a highly skilled reading teacher could well be the difference between thriving and struggling.

The conventional standard is to measure literacy at the end of 3rd grade, but our goal is to have every single second-grader reading. Waiting till the third-grade year may be too late for some kids, and that is a risk we are not willing to take. It's too important and the stakes are too high. We want as many children as possible to walk into their third grade classroom, pick a book off the shelf, and go to town.

The research is in: students who are not reading proficiently by the end of third grade are four times more likely to drop out of high school than proficient readers. Conversely, students above grade level for reading in third grade graduate and enroll in college at higher rates than students at or below grade level.

FIX TRANSITION That's where committed and talented teachers are necessary for success—where teachers like the one our second grader has makes all the difference.

Let's turn back to a day in the life of our students. A few hours later, it's noon, and an eighth grader is hunched over an algebra book in the library. She finally grasps $A^2 + B^2 = C^2$, sits back in wonder, and glances up at the clock to see how many minutes are left till her advisory session, when she can tell her adviser how hard it was—and how it feels to finally get it.

Middle school is a deeply important time. It's when an actual vision of success as an adult—college, a career—can come into focus. . .if we show it to our students. We are going to show them, and we are going to prepare them so that every middle school student is socially, emotionally, and academically ready for high school.

But we won't relegate ANY of our kids to simply dreaming about aiming and achieving high—we'll show them. We will seed our children's dreams of college by the time they enter 9th grade.

Comment [GK4]: Stoppin here, middle of 17
More in the morning

We are introducing College Access for All. The “All” here ~~actually~~ includes students AND families, for whom we are making college real, tangible, and accessible by equipping their schools with the resources they need to create a truly “college-going culture.”

By 2020, every middle school student will have the opportunity to visit a college campus. And by 2020, all high schools will have the robust college planning supports that can make all the difference for first generation college students. Schools will provide each student—and his or her family—with the information and guidance they need to navigate the transition to college: opportunities to visit a college campus, get help completing applications, , or guidance through the financial aid process. truly will be making college feel real—and feel achievable—for all students. Schools will provide each student with the opportunity to visit a college campus, get help completing applications, be paired with a college student who can serve as a mentor, or get help planning on how they will afford college.

Second, we have zeroed in on one of the key skills that students need to stay on pace to get to college: algebra. ~~Research shows Students~~ We know that students who successfully pass Algebra no later than 9th grade are more likely to graduate from high school, go on to college, and graduate from college. And for years, many students who were ready for algebra did not have access to the class. But no more. Starting now, the future for our kids and our city is Algebra for All. ~~[Source: ?] but students at lower performing schools have been locked out of this because they are not ready, or because there aren't enough classes to serve everyone. But that's in the past. The future for our kids and our city is Algebra for All.~~

Beginning in 2016, we will expand algebra across middle and high schools so that every student completes algebra by the end of 9th grade, and can move on to the more advanced high school math that will ready them for college. We will expand access to Algebra courses ~~earlier in 8th grade~~, and put academic supports in place in the earlier middle school grades to ensure more students are ready to succeed in Algebra in 8th grade.

~~MAKE A NEW EMOTIONAL HEALTH VIGNETTE: Another student been struggling with a lot of anger, frustration, and sadness this year, and that same adviser's office has been her sanctuary. . . . They talk for half an hour. . .~~

~~These middle years can be tremendously hard for many kids, and for their families—to this day I often say I’m a Recovering Middle School Parent. All this ambition, all these skills, will take root if and only if our kids are socially and emotionally ready for these experiences, and what’s to come with the rigors of high school. And that’s not easy for a lot of our kids, who are battling tough situations at home, or among their friends, or just with the difficulties of growing up.~~

~~My wife, Chirlane, has been deeply focused on the mental health needs of our kids. She’s working with the Administration to revolutionize how we deal with mental health in this city, especially for those with the greatest need and the fewest options. You’ll hear a lot more about that in the near future.~~

~~These battles can interfere with learning. And we are determined, as a City, to break down all barriers to learning so children come to school ready to succeed. We must fulfill our children’s basic prerequisites to learning, accounting for mental and physical health, family stability and support, financial hurdles, and more. Community Schools are the bedrock of these efforts, and this month marks the moment when every last one of the 130 schools we have targeted completes its transformation into a Community School.~~

~~Back to the school day. it’s 3:30pm, and a tenth grader answers a series of questions about Maya Angelou’s I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings. English Language Arts workbook. As a recent immigrant, she needs to pass the English Regents to graduate—so her English teacher has provided tailored support to help her engage grade level text. The questions are specially designed to help English Language Learners engage with grade-level material. And the school has created an extended learning period for her and the 15 other English Language Learners in the class.~~

Extended learning time—an extra hour of instruction each day—is a hallmark of our 94 Renewal Schools. These 94 schools are those that have struggled the most to serve their students and families and provide a solid education to our children. So we are rolling out sweeping reforms that touch every part of those schools—transforming the classrooms and the culture to turn the tables of history for the school and its community.

In addition to extra class time, Renewal School students are seeing more academic and social and emotional supports. Educators are receiving extra professional development, especially in how to teach writing across the curriculum. We have a dynamite team, led by Aimee Horowitz, that is dedicated to implementing these changes and lifting up these schools.

~~In addition to extra class time, Renewal School students are seeing bigger, better libraries. New writing programs. Educators are receiving extra professional development, especially around that new writing curricula and STEM teaching. We have a dynamite team, led by Aimee Horowitz, that is dedicated to implementing these changes and lifting up these schools.~~

And less than a year in, ~~it's already the early signs are positive, working.~~ Attendance—a leading indicator for academic improvements—went up at 72 of the 94 Renewal Schools, and suspensions are dramatically down. [DANGEROUS INCIDENTS REDUCTION] Test scores overall are up in 2015 (0.6% in Math, 1.2% in English), And when graduation data comes in this fall, we expect to see that it's gone up.

Comment [GK6]: Are we sure grad rates will go up?

Teachers are more confident in the direction of their schools—fully two-thirds say they wouldn't want to work in any other school, a jump from last year. And Renewal School parents are engaging with their child's school: almost 7 out of 10 families communicated with their child's teacher at least once a month, with more than half meeting in person at a parent-teacher conference on a monthly basis.

And—this is a big one—more than a quarter of Renewal School parents volunteered to support their child's school at least once a month last year. This is time out a life likely filled to the brim with work, childcare, or schooling of their own. It shows that parents are understanding the impact only they can have in a school community, and how that lifts up everyone—including their own child—higher than they ever thought.

For too long, we haven't even given students the chance to aim high in high school, because they haven't been offered the chance to do advanced work—a chance that we know, when taken, correlates with success. You can't shoot for the moon if there's no rocket to take you there.

That ends today. Today we offer every high schooler the chance to aim and achieve high. We are introducing AP for All: giving every high school student access to a range of Advanced Placement classes by 2022.

AP classes conjure excellence, and for good reason. It's been shown that overall, students who take AP classes were twice as likely to graduate college in 5 year as compared to their peers who did not. Among students of color and low-income populations, they were X times as likely. Simple exposure to the material can have a lasting impact; students who sat for an AP exam and only received a score of 1 or 2 (of 5) graduated college at a higher rate than their peers who did not take AP exams at all.

And by creating AP for All, we further close the 25% gap between the number of Black and Hispanic students who take an AP in high school and White and Asian students who do. The prior administration began this work with the AP Expansion program, which brought new courses to over 70 high schools in NYC. Now we will extend it citywide.

MAKE NEW COMP SCI VIGNETTE: One student feels a little tap on her back, and our student turns to find a small folded-up piece of paper on the floor right next to her chair. (Some things never change. . .like passing notes in class.) She catches out of the corner of her eye a friend and fellow student grinning. She unfolds the note and reads: "Computer Lab before 2nd period tomorrow?"

Both computer equipment and Computer Science training is a novelty for many students and teachers, including those at nearly all of our Renewal Schools. Fewer than 5% of all NYC public school students currently have an opportunity to learn Computer Science, and those that do are clustered in just a few high-performing schools. While the schools that offer computer science are exemplars of excellence, we need our other engine—equity—to drive us forward here.

~~This is not sustainable for students or for our city, which increasingly needs more people with the computer proficiency to power all kinds of companies, from tech to finance to health to fashion. Hundreds of thousands of good jobs will be accessible to those with computer science skills, and beyond the reach of those without them.~~

We've started to address it. . .

The Software Engineering Pilot (SEP) is a comprehensive, standards-aligned computer science and software engineering education program for grades 6 to 12. The goals of the program are: (1) to increase the number of high school graduates, particularly from traditionally under-represented groups, who are ready to enter new and emerging high-tech fields, and (2) to develop students' computational thinking and problem solving skills in real-world contexts.

Program Details

The program currently offers core curriculum in the following areas: computer programming, robotics, web design and development, physical computing, and mobile computing. As it scales, the program provides schools with structured full-year course pathways including core computer science curriculum and elective topics designed to develop students' technical and creative skill. SEP students will participate in work-based experiences with major industry leaders and partners.

In 2014-15, the SEP program served 42 teachers and more than 2700 students in grades 6, 7, 9, and 10th across nine high schools and nine middle schools. In 2015-16, SEP plans to expand into new grade levels, serving students in 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11th grade.

That is why we are immensely proud to announce today the launch of Computer Science for All, which will provide a computer science education to every single public school student within ten years through an $81 million, -public-private partnership between the City of New York, CSNYC, the Robin Hood Foundation, and OTHER PARTNERS who have committed to a historic 1:1 match ~~of~~ with city funds to bring this to life.

This is the largest effort to expand computer science in the country. It will make New York the largest school district in the nation to provide computer science to every student—and the first City to invest in the future of its students and its economy in this pioneering way.

Comment [GK7]: SF has CS for students, can't say first city...or need to differentiate from SF

Through Computer Science for All, we will train 4700 teachers, bringing X00 schools into the program each year across all grade levels—elementary, middle, and high schools. If your child is in a NYC public school, he or she will learn computer science by the time she graduates. This is equity and excellence.

I would like to thank Fred Wilson, David Saltzman, and (Gabrielle to provide) for their trailblazing support for this initiative.

CONNECT TO: We have already committed to getting 100,000 kids internships, mentorships, and summer jobs by 2025—including our most vulnerable children in foster homes and shelter

Comment [GK8]: I recommend moving up to after AP for all and before Comp Sci

The night ends, the sun rises behind the skyline, and it's 8 a.m. the next day. A high school senior grabs her buzzing phone off the kitchen table. It's lighting up with text messages from her mother, her Single Shepherd, the manager at the internship she just finished – and all the messages are variations on “Go get ‘em!”

She smiles and puts the phone in her purse, then turns to face her reflection in a mirror. She smooths her lapels, takes a deep breath, and catches the elevator right before the doors close. She's on the way out the door for a college interview.

That isn't, of course, where the story ends. We hope that our student gets into that college. But we know if she doesn't, she's got the resilience and fortitude to go on another interview, and another after that. We've done right by her by instilling not just the knowledge she needs, but the tools, confidence and belief in herself to share that knowledge with the world, seize opportunities, and achieve success. That's how education in New York City has to work.

In other words: we must, and we will, show each of our kids we believe in their ability to excel. . .

And we will give them all of them ~~the~~ opportunity to show us that we are right. ~~we're right~~.

This should have all of my suggested changes.

Not sure what you want to do with the SEP part of computer science, I would pare that way way back so it's just a mention of it—there will already be a story on the how so not sure we need to spend speech minutes on the how so much as the what of computer science.

Have you:

Sent to mahen so he can start fact checking?

Sent comp sci section to Gabrielle so she can align with what they've said to funders/which funders need the shout out?

I am going to fturn my attention to the "why 80% is a good grad goal" question and comb through for all the "need more DOE info" flags.

EVENT: INTERVIEW WITH CHRIS HAYES, ALL IN WITH CHRIS HAYES

RATIONALE: Four months after TPA was launched at the Capitol, YOU will be going on “All in with Chris Hayes” to have a real conversation about your time in office, the city as a model for progressive solutions, and the momentum across the country for real action to combat the crisis of inequality.

DAY/DATE: Monday, September 14

EVENT TIME: Will be on at 8 PM Monday night.

MBDB TIME: 6:10 – 6:30 (Two blocks for the show; he’s hoping to start early and do a “walk and talk” outside).

LOCATION: City Hall

LOCAL/ONSITE CONTACT: N/A

STAFF ASSIGNED TO MBDB:

PRESS: Open

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION FOR INTERVIEW:

WHAT TO WATCH FOR

Chris has been following your mayoralty closely and is a strong ally when it comes to your big, bold work on progressive issues. We gave them some footage from your first day of school video and the Greenwald film.

As we have seen in previous interviews, he does try to ask one question where you do not agree, as he did with you on Israel. He does not seem to share your position on broken windows (which may come up) and metzitzah b'peh (which likely won't).

TOPICS

City as a model for progressive solutions around the country:

- Minimum Wage (he may ding Cuomo here)
- Pre-K (time to talk about HIS experience as a pre-k dad)
- Housing

Chris has also shown interest in your work on Rikers and criminal justice reform (his review is mixed here). We expect there to be a question on this – most likely in the form of a question on James Blake.

TPA Momentum

In just the last few months we have seen:

- NYS Minimum Wage Announcement
- National Expansion of Overtime Threshold
- HRC announcing support of debt free college
- Pittsburgh passing paid sick leave
- House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi coming out for $15/hour national minimum wage
- NY Wage Board passing $15 for Fast Food Workers
- Kansas City raising minimum wage
- Oregon Governor Kate Brown passing The Fair Shot Agenda, which includes Paid Sick Leave
- Atlanta passing Paid Family Leave
- LA Minimum wage increase
- Congressional Progressive Caucus endorsing TPA
- Presidential forum in November

In NYC, we have addressed these key principles by:

- Launching a mayoral task force to bring together mayors from across the country to develop an action plan to challenge the growing inequality crisis in America

- Delivering on promise of universal, full-day pre-K and afterschool for all New York City children for the first time in the city's history
- Taking a historic step toward ending the overuse and abuse of stop-and-frisk, while also keeping crime down
- Signing into law major expansion of paid sick leave, extending rights to more than 500,000 New Yorkers

MAIN POINTS TO LAND:

- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we're doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
- But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington's help.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.
- There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- The Progressive Agenda is a movement from the grassroots. It's an urgent call for change. We're hearing the voices of people every day – people all over this country. Recently, we saw demonstrations in 200 cities (60,000 people) across this country for a $15 minimum wage.
 - Something is changing in America. It's time to take that energy and crystalize it into an agenda that will make a difference. It's time to put people ahead of profits – value work over wealth. It's as simple as that.

- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

Inequality Points

- Nearly half of NYC residents are living at or near the poverty level.
- According to OxFam, by next year, the top one percent in the world will possess more than the bottom 99 percent.
- In the US, since the Great Recession ended, the incomes of the top one percent grew by 37%, while the incomes of the bottom 99 percent fell.
- New York State (along with CT) has the greatest income inequality in the nation.
- In America, the wealthiest 160,000 families own as much wealth as the poorest 145 million families
- Between 2009 and 2012 overall income per family grew 6.9 percent. The gains weren't shared evenly, however. The top 1 percent saw their real income grow by 34.7 percent while the bottom 99 percent only saw a 0.8 percent gain, meaning that the 1 percent captured 91 percent of all real income.
- If you're going to reduce the income gap, you need two things: 1) more investment in programs and policies that lift the floor for working people (paid sick leave, $15 min wage, child care) and 2) more revenue from those at the very top – millionaires, billionaires, and wealthy corporations (close carried interest loophole, close CEO pay loophole, Buffett Rule, end tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas).
- Minimum Wage - In 2014, four states passed minimum wage increases by referenda. They were all red states. Something bigger is going on here that indicates people are more and more demanding some solutions. The grassroots is demanding it.
- A typical American family, in real income terms, is making less today than they were a quarter century ago.
- The wealthiest one percent captured 91% of all the income gains since the Great Recession ended.

- And now we have the greatest income disparity since the 1920s – and it’s getting worse.
- The two issues that we’re highlighting today are closing the carried interest loophole, and investing more in education. We don’t advocate that to punish success, but to create more success stories.

Q AND A:

Q: Last week, one million NYC children went back to school, including 65,000 pre-k students. This is a significant achievement and one that we noticed in my own household (NOTE: YOU CAN ASK HIM ABOUT IT). Why don’t you think more elites give you credit for this?

A:

Background:

Christopher Hayes added: Also amazing how bizarrely dismissive of this the NYC chattering class seems to be.

Anthony Weiner @anthonyweiner Pretty amazing how smooth the UPreK expansion has been. Basically the equivalent of launching a school system.

Q: You’ve gotten criticized for focusing so much of your work on national issues, including a recent screening about 25 hedge funders making more than all the kindergarten teachers in this country. Why is this such a persistent focus?

A: The top 25 hedge fund titans in America earn more than every kindergarten teacher in America. Think about that. $12 billion for 25 people – more than all the money earned by the women and men teaching our four and five year olds - COMBINED.

There’s no reason that a billionaire hedge fund manager sitting by the pool at his beach house should be paying a lower rate of taxes than the guy who pilots his private jet.

Recently, we’ve heard a number of excellent proposals for combatting inequality – including, just in the past several days – Donald Trump and Jeb Bush calling for an end to the carried interest loophole.

Q: Governor Cuomo recently made a pretty shocking announcement. After months of telling you that the state could not raise the minimum wage to even $13 an hour, he raised to $15. Do you think he has ulterior motives?

A: I can't answer to his motives. I'm just happy about where he's landed. As you've noted, we've been fighting for a $15 minimum wage in New York City for months. And I'm very hopeful that now having the Governor on board will mean we can actually bring this to fruition.

In many ways, this is what the national progressive effort in which we've been engaged is all about – tapping into the grassroots' desire for change – and big, bold policies to tackle income inequality. We're using every tool at our disposal to attack the wealth gap – from PreK to after-school to paid sick leave to a rent freeze – but we need help from Albany and Washington. And sometimes, the best way to get their attention is to lift the voices of likeminded people across the country – and applying pressure from the bottom-up. It's changing our politics.

The same is true with closing tax loopholes for hedge fund managers on Wall Street. It's something that can't really happen by a mayor snapping his fingers. But The Progressive Agenda has brought together progressive leaders and activists from all walks of life, shining a light on this inequity. Now, the pressure is such that even Republicans like Donald Trump and Jeb Bush are on board. The country is moving – and it's the grassroots that's doing it. We're going to keep pressing to make these changes however we can.

Q: Do you regret endorsing him in the primary? Would you support a primary challenge? Would you use the same criteria you are using to judge presidential candidates in the primary?

A: I try not to spend a lot of time looking in the rearview mirror. And I try not to think of every day as Election Day. Instead, I'm focused on what we can do right now to tackle income inequality and lift up struggling families in New York.

Q: That doesn't sound like you're ready for Cuomo in 2018!

A: I'm not thinking about 2018. I'm focused on how we can tackle income inequality in 2015 and 2016.

Q: What's up with your forum?

A: It's happening. It will be bipartisan and it will be this November. We're still working out all of the details, but it will be the first forum of its kind – a discussion focused solely on income inequality and how to combat it.

Q: Why did you say you wouldn't want Biden to join? You haven't endorsed a candidate yet, but you think field is good?

A: Joe Biden has been an extraordinary Vice President, and he's a good man. All I've said is that I think we have a good field of candidates right now.

Q: How will you harness that Sanders energy for TPA? Is his surge a sign that progressives are winning, and establishment candidates like Hillary Clinton are losing?

A: I wouldn't put it that way at all. Both Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders have laid out very progressive visions for the nation – and very specific solutions to income inequality. I think Bernie is doing very well as a result of his speaking to these issues, and the media has been more focused on side issue than on what Hillary has been laying out from a policy perspective. But if you're judging these candidates based on where they stand on income inequality, there's a whole lot to like.

Q: It seems that this vision is most aligned with Bernie Sanders. Will you endorse him?

A: I haven't made an endorsement in the presidential race. But I'm looking for a Democrat who represents the core values of our party, and who can make that vision a reality.

Q: Is this a rebuke of Hillary?

A: No, this isn't about an individual. We're here to send a message to ALL elected officials and candidates for every office, up and down the ballot, in both parties: to tackle income inequality, we must implement bold progressive policies.

Q: We've seen the Republican field going more and more to the right. Do you think we can get anything done in Washington?

A: They're moving to the right on some issues – but they're finding that income inequality is an issue that they cannot ignore. That's why Donald Trump and Jeb Bush are for closing some tax loopholes, once thought to be heresy in a Republican primary. Fox News is asking Republican presidential candidates about inequality. Candidates like Marco Rubio and Rand Paul are talking about it. This is an issue whose time has come.

The Progressive Agenda:

- Raise the federal minimum wage, so that it reaches $15/hour, while indexing it to inflation.
- Reform the National Labor Relations Act, to enhance workers' right to organize and rebuild the middle class.
- Pass comprehensive immigration reform to grow the economy and protect against exploitation of low-wage workers.
- Oppose trade deals that hand more power to corporations at the expense of American jobs, workers' rights, and the environment.
- Invest in schools, not jails-- and give a second chance to those coming home from prison.
- Pass national paid sick leave.
- Pass national paid family leave.
- Make Pre-K, after-school programs and childcare universal.
- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit and protect and expand Social Security.
- Allow students to refinance student loan debt to take advantage of lower interest rates, and support debt-free college.
- Close the carried interest loophole.
- End tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas.
- Implement the "Buffett Rule" so millionaires pay their fair share.

Close the CEO tax loophole that allows corporations to take advantage of "performance pay" write-offs.

BIO INFORMATION ON CHRIS HAYES:

Chris Hayes hosts “All In with Chris Hayes” at 8 p.m. ET Monday through Friday on MSNBC. Hayes is also editor-at-large of The Nation.

Previously, Hayes hosted the weekend program “Up w/ Chris Hayes,” which premiered in 2011. Prior to joining MSNBC as an anchor, Chris had previously served as a frequent substitute host for “The Rachel Maddow Show” and “The Last Word with Lawrence O’Donnell.” Chris became an MSNBC contributor in 2010 and has been with The Nation since 2007.

He is a former fellow at Harvard University’s Edmond J. Safra Foundation Center for Ethics. From 2008-2010, he was a Bernard Schwartz Fellow at the New America Foundation. From 2005 to 2006, Chris was a Schumann Center Writing Fellow at In These Times.

Since 2002, Hayes has written on a wide variety of political and social issues, from union organizing and economic democracy to the intersection of politics and technology. His essays, articles, and reviews have appeared in New York Times Magazine, TIME, Nation, American Prospect, New Republic, Washington Monthly, The Guardian, and Chicago Reader.

His first book, “Twilight of the Elites: America After Meritocracy,” which is about the crisis of authority in American life, was published in June 2012. Chris grew up in the Bronx and graduated from Brown University in 2001 with a Bachelor of Arts in philosophy.

The length and air time will in part depend on the length of the interview today. We would like to edit it (e.g. add video /illustrative visuals) and since we are shooting so close to our air time will likely air tomorrow night.

As discussed, Tina Cone our Senior Producer, Christian Alicea our director and I will stop by today at 1pm just to see where you recommend that we conduct the interview. Again, we could do a walk and talk segment with the Mayor outside and then also shoot part in a more formal sit-down fashion.

Our crew will arrive to set up between 3 and 4 pm We plan on meeting the Mayor at 6:10-6:30pm However, if his schedule permits his arrival earlier- 6pm perhaps – that would be great. More time affords more creativity and adjustment for our camera folks.

Thank you so much for facilitating this interview. Chris is so looking forward to this important discussion.

Respectfully,
Diane

Loved the PreK discussion. On crime and Blake, resolute on numbers. Got housing and progressive taxation in there, as well as TPA and min wage. Strong but not haughty on management. Didn't attack media when given the bait.

Only tips for future - 1. While giving the facts on crime, we should move past numbers and talk about lives saved - and also say that while we're making great progress, even on murder is one tragic loss too many - something like that. 2. Where appropriate, smile more. Much of the interview didn't warrant it, and maybe you did during walk and talk, but I like it when you project that you're enjoying the job.

NY mayor proposes computer science classes for all public schools

The Hill - David McCabe

<http://thehill.com/policy/technology/253796-new-york-mayor-proposes-offering-computer-science-in-all-public-schools>

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio (D) will announce Wednesday a plan to require all city public schools to offer computer science within 10 years, the New York Times reported Tuesday night.

The plan will mandate the schools offer the subject, but not that they make it a graduation requirement. The Times reported that bringing the plan to fruition will require training nearly 5,000 teachers.

The proposal is expected to cost $81 million, which will include contributions from donors, over the next decade. Fred Wilson, a venture capitalist, is reportedly supporting the plan, as is AOL's foundation and the Robin Hood Foundation.

Currently, 1 percent of students in the public school system receive instruction in computer science.

The move to incorporate computer science into the educations of the 1.1 million students served by the public school system reflects the growing value of programming skills and concerns about a lack of diversity in the booming tech economy.

"I think there is acknowledgment that we need our students better prepared for these jobs and to address equity and diversity within the sector, as well," Gabrielle Fialkoff, the city's director of strategic partnerships, told the Times.

Many of the nation's most prominent tech companies have largely male workforces, with tiny percentages of black and latino workers. That imbalance is particularly pronounced when it comes to technical jobs.

Just one percent of tech employees are black and two percent are Hispanic at Google, according to the company's most recent data. Around the world, women make up 16 percent of Facebook's technical workforce.

The companies have moved to improve those numbers with moderate success. New York is also following in the footsteps of other cities, like Chicago and San Francisco, that have taken steps to expand access to computer science education.

Chris Hayes, here. For the record, I feel like you mischaracterized my role in recording a robocall for Universal Pre-K. It was not to "promote a signature DeBlasio achievement." It was to inform parents who literally live in my neighborhood that there were available slots. I viewed it as a civic undertaking and that's how I presented it to Standards, who approved it. But you've now made it appear that I was, essentially, campaigning for the mayor, which is both inaccurate and not something I'd ever do, given my current job.

Sincerely,

Chris

Hello everyone,

I traded on a personal friendship to ask this favor of Chris Hayes. He recorded the robo-call at my request because his child is enrolled at the [REDACTED] and because he wanted to support DOE's efforts to boost enrollment in pre-K for All.

He was extremely clear with me that he does not want any publicity pushed out from the Mayor's Office for having recorded the robo-call.

Not sure what is being contemplated here, but I would ask everyone on this thread to please respect his request.

Let me know if I can help with anything else.

Team TPA is talking to Poppy Harlow about having BDB & RR do a joint appearance... Maybe we'll even have hats made up that say "Make America Fair Again" as a way to get some attention, Trump-style.. Not kidding! We could have BDB give it to Poppy as a fun little way to draw attention to inequality... We'll see...

Goal --- drumbeat on larger issues Pope raises (Income Inequality); Show Mayor's global presence
Use visit to discuss housing, homelessness, etc

Timeline: Sunday --- Saturday

Opportunities on the table for Pope Week (these are ones that have been proposed to us or kicked around)

- CNN oped on Pope and Income Inequality and what his visit means—they requested one/ Erin White received the request
- CNN with Chris Cuomo (Tuesday)—Mayor wanted us to provide a recommendation to him for discussion. Was not initially on board after FDOS issues
- Spanish language – we should get a Spanish language sit down hit.
- GMA, Today or other morning show – Would need to be pitched
- This Week with George – still in discussion with producer
- America Magazine wants to interview Mayor (national Jesuit weekly)

Opportunities CONFIRMED—Note, Mayor does not have ANY formal speaking role at Pope events

- WED: Cardinal/Housing event
- THURSDAY: Image of Mayor/Cardinal greeting Pope on Steps of St. Patrick’s Cathedral
- FRIDAY: IDNYC being given to Pope on Friday (CONFIDENTIAL)

Hi Andrea,

Just got a call from CNN, following up on the First Lady's recent op-ed. They'd like to the Mayor to contribute something in advance of the Pope visit. I told them it would likely deal with theme of income inequality/where Pope and Mayor overlap, but they are open to other ideas.

Specs:

- ~600 words
- They would need final by mid-day Sept. 23
- They can help polish, as needed
- Will feature on CNN opinion vertical, homepage and push out on main CNN Twitter account and Facebook account (at least per this conversation. Will reiterate that in writing if we agree).

I recommend we do it. Let me know if you disagree and if not, how I can help.

Criticized by Trump, Carried Interest Tax Loophole Is Vulnerable

Photo

Give Donald Trump credit for this: The Republican presidential candidate has done more to put a stake in the heart of the carried interest tax loophole in the last month than the Obama administration has in the last six and a half years.

That's not for want of trying by the White House. President Obama has proposed closing the loophole in his budget proposals. He has tried to get rid of it as part of bargains on tax reform and budgets. There have also been efforts to kill it in Congress.

Yet it lives on, lining the pockets of billionaire financiers and hedge fund and private equity managers by giving them preferential tax treatment on a large portion of their compensation.

It's not just Republicans who have kept it alive. Senator Chuck Schumer, Democrat of New York, long opposed any overhaul that singled out his wealthy Wall Street constituents and donors when other types of investment partnerships — oil and gas, real estate, timber — also benefit from the lower “carried interest” tax.

Then came the Trump phenomenon. Last month, he said he would close the carried interest loophole. “The hedge fund guys didn't build this country,” Mr. Trump told John Dickerson on CBS's “Face the Nation.” “These are guys that shift paper around and they get lucky.” He continued: “The hedge fund guys are getting away with murder.”

And at Wednesday night’s debate, Mr. Trump raised the issue again. “The hedge fund guys won’t like me as much as they like me right now — I know ‘em all,” he said. “But they’ll pay more.”

Earlier Wednesday, in a speech to the Business Roundtable, President Obama again called for carried interest to be treated like ordinary income rather than at the lower capital gains rate. He put some teeth into the proposal by linking it to a resolution of the looming budget negotiations and threat of a government shutdown.

Even Mr. Schumer threw his support behind this latest idea on Wednesday, saying that treating carried interest like ordinary income “would find a wealth of bipartisan support” and could pave the way to a budget deal this fall.

Continue reading the main story

Other presidential candidates have piled on. All the Democratic candidates are on record against it. Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont introduced legislation in July to get rid of beneficial “carried interest” tax treatment, and has argued that President Obama has the authority to unilaterally abolish it. Last week Jeb Bush, no populist maverick, jumped on the anti-carried interest bandwagon.

With the emergence of what seems a rare bipartisan consensus, the arguments against closing the loophole — both political and economic — seem to be crumbling.

“A year ago no one was talking about this,” said Victor Fleischer, a law professor at the University of San Diego, who has been crusading against the carried interest loophole since 2004 and told me it is the issue that has defined his career. “It’s fascinating that there’s been this resurgence of interest.” (Professor Fleischer is a contributor to The New York Times’s DealBook.)

Eric Toder, co-director of the Urban-Brookings Tax Policy Center in Washington, said that Mr. Trump really put carried interest back in play. “It’s a good populist talking point,” Mr. Toder said.

Carried interest is the percentage of investment gains that hedge fund managers, private equity executives and venture capital partners take as compensation, usually in addition to a management fee. (“Two and twenty” has become Wall Street jargon for these funds’ typical compensation scheme, meaning 2 percent of assets under management and 20 percent of any gains.) Because the “carry” is tied to performance, it is treated like an investment and subjected to the lower capital gains tax rate, rather than as ordinary income, even though most managers don’t put any of their own money at risk.

The loophole taps into the public’s insecurities over the fairness of the tax system, and whether it unfairly benefits the wealthiest Americans.

“It symbolizes how the 1 percent, or the one-tenth of 1 percent, can exploit the tax and legal system to their own benefit in ways ordinary people cannot,” Professor Fleischer said. “If you’re a teacher or a firefighter or a journalist, you can’t transform your labor income into capital gains.”

The issue has especially resonated with Mr. Trump’s supporters, because it demonstrates that he isn’t beholden to big-money interests because he can finance his campaign with his own money.

And for other Republican candidates, there’s the specter of the Mitt Romney campaign. Exactly how much Mr. Romney benefited from the carried interest loophole could not be determined, since he refused to release his tax returns before 2010. But as a former Bain Capital partner, he received substantial carried interest— 31 percent of his 2010 and 2011 income, The Boston Globe reported. President Obama pilloried Mr. Romney over the issue during the 2008 campaign.

While distinguishing between ordinary income and capital gains can be complex, “this one looks especially ugly to people,” said Mr. Toder, who favors repealing the loophole. “Look at salesmen who work on commission. Their compensation is at risk, too, but they don’t get to treat their income like a capital gain.”

And the people who benefit are among the richest in the country. Even though most hedge funds haven’t had a very good year, last year the top 25 hedge fund managers earned a combined \$11.62 billion, according to Institutional Investor, or an average of $467 million each. The latest data from the Internal Revenue Service for the top 400 earners, a list studded with hedge fund and private equity managers, show that in 2012 they paid the second lowest average federal tax rate since the data has been collected, a mere 16.7 percent, in large part because much of their income (an average of 57 percent) is taxed at the lower capital gains rate.

That’s one reason the loophole has survived as long as it has. “The group that benefits may be small, but they’re rich and they give a lot of money” to politicians, said Daniel Shaviro, a specialist in tax policy and law professor at New York University School of Law. “To everyone else it can seem a vague talking point. It’s classic interest group politics.”

Estimates of how much revenue closing the loophole would raise vary widely, in part because it’s hard to know if hedge fund managers and others who benefit would alter their behavior by holding assets for longer periods, in that way deferring taxes. The Treasury estimates it would raise $18 billion over 10 years; Professor Fleischer contends it would be 10 times larger, or $180 billion.

In Washington, carried interest has become a bargaining chip in contentious negotiations between the White House and Congress. Most politicians would give it up in the right circumstances, and it has always been on the short list of what should be repealed if there were a bipartisan deal.

“What’s frustrating is that carried interest is always held hostage to negotiations over tax reform,” said Professor Fleischer. “And tax reform is always coming tomorrow.”

In May, Representative Paul Ryan, Republican of Wisconsin and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, blocked an effort to link the carried interest issue to corporate tax reform, arguing it was an individual tax issue and should be negotiated in that context, perhaps in 2017. But many Republicans have indicated they are not against repealing the loophole, as long as they get something from Democrats in return. (A spokesman for Mr. Ryan said he was not available for comment.)

Republican opposition to reform may be harder to sustain now that Mr. Trump and Mr. Bush have gone rogue on the carried interest issue while also taking populist stances on other economic issues.

“If closing the carried interest loophole, ending subsidies for oil and gas, and tackling inversions are good enough for Donald Trump and Jeb Bush, it ought to be good enough for Republicans in Congress,” Mr. Schumer said this week.

Although the political stars seem to be aligning in their favor at last, opponents of the carried interest tax break aren’t declaring premature victory.

“I’m glad it’s on people’s radar,” Professor Fleischer said. “But I’ve learned not to bet on it.” After 11 years fighting the issue, he said, “I’m wiser than I was as a young pup.”

Sir,

We're finalizing the full communications plan for next week, but wanted to put following on your radar given tight timeframe

Erin White generated the following opportunity for the admin

CNN would like for you to contribute an op-ed, tied to the Pope's visit, on your shared vision of ending income inequality.

Specs on piece:

- ~600 words
- They would need final by mid-day, Wednesday Sept. 23 (we should submit to them on Monday)
- They can help polish, as needed
- Will feature on CNN opinion vertical, homepage and push out on main CNN Twitter account and Facebook account.

Recommendation: Pursue. This is a strong opportunity to a) push national conversation around income inequality/TPA and b) tie you thematically with Pope. Additionally, CNN has huge reach – 19 million followers on Twitter, 45 million unique visitors monthly to the homepage. It also fits with our broader strategy of leveraging national media to induce a drumbeat around TPA.

Flags: Given time, it will be a scramble to complete. It will require your time for brainstorming and review.

Please let us know if you agree with pursuing.

Thanks,
Andrea

Just spoke with Pastor Bernard of CCC. Although he won't be there on Sunday, he welcomes me and he is VERY positive about our education plan. Perhaps we can get an advance statement from him to share with the media. He wants our team to work out my appearance directly with him, not his staff. Prisca or Marco, pls follow up with him. Subject: Sunday/ George Stephanopoulos

Sir,

Following up on our series of discussions last week and have been closing working with the front office and IGA team.

George Stephanopoulos would like to have you on the show this Sunday. It would be a 5-6 minute segment (the standard for any headliner interview) I've confirmed that they will discuss with you the following topics:

- Pope and income inequality message
- Pope and security/logistics
- Presidential politics and democratic candidates
- Presidential politics/ TPA and progressive politics (Trump/bush on closing carried interest loop hole, minimum wage push)

I understand that there is now a great message opportunity for you to speak to CCC on Sunday morning to amplify the education speech. I've worked with the ABC producer and we can film the interview Sunday morning in-studio and get you out the door in time (by 10am) to deliver remarks at CCC on your education vision.

So current line-up for Sunday would be:

9-10 am – George Stephanopoulos (includes arrival, prep and interview)

10:45 am – CCC

Let me know if you have any concerns. Would like to confirm logistics with George's team.

Thanks!

This Week - George Stephanopoulos

November 23 – Questions from Interview with President Obama

George Stephanopoulos: So you had a friendly crowd out there but a pretty fierce Republican reaction in Washington. The Speaker this morning says your acting like an emperor and you're damaging the presidency. Your response?

Stephanopoulos: But you have done more than you used to think you can do. You know several times over the last couple of years you were asked can you do more and you said nope, I am out of administrative flexibility, what changed?

President Barack Obama: Well, that's not true, if you look George, I often times was asked: 'Can you just halt deportations?' And I said, 'No I can't do that.'

Stephanopoulos: No, but I have it right here–

President Obama: Go ahead–

Stephanopoulos: On a Google Hangout, you were asked specifically, “‘What can you do to prevent families from being broken apart’ and you said, ‘I’m not an emperor, I am out of administrative flexibility.’”

Stephanopoulos: How do you respond to the argument, a future president comes in, wants lower taxes. Doesn't happen. Congress won't do it – he says I'm not going to prosecute those who don't pay capital gains tax.

Stephanopoulos: So you don't think it'd be legitimate for a future president to make that argument?

Stephanopoulos: Ted Cruz says that now Republicans should block every nomination going forward. Your friend Senator Tom Coburn is wondering about possible violence. What do you think about those reactions?

Stephanopoulos: How much has your view of executive power changed over the years? I remember when you were a senator you used to warn about presidents over-reaching, yet a lot of your critics now say you're doing it more than anyone else. Has your view of executive power changed?

Stephanopoulos: Let's talk about Ferguson. Everyone's waiting for the grand jury to hear, what the final word from the grand jury is. Your FBI has warned about possible violence in the wake of that decision. What is your message to the people of Ferguson and others who are looking to protest?

Stephanopoulos: Are you worried here?

Stephanopoulos: One of your heroes, John Lewis, has suggested that if there's no indictment in this case, it would be a miscarriage of justice, and another turning point like Selma. Do you agree with that?

Stephanopoulos: Do you think it would make sense for you to go to Ferguson after this decision?

Stephanopoulos: What about the broader issues of race? I was struck by a poll I saw recently that said since 2009 the number of African Americans who think that race relations are getting better has actually gone down.

Stephanopoulos: Big deadline coming up on the Iranian nuclear negotiations – on Monday. Is there gonna be a deal?

Stephanopoulos: The deal would require rollback, wouldn't it?

Stephanopoulos: One final question on that. You know both you and President Rouhani have some constraints. He's got the Ayatollah: you have Congress. Are you confident that if you reach a deal, Congress will back it?

Stephanopoulos: Secretary Clinton tweeted out for support for your executive action last night and it just made me think of it. How– how's this gonna work over the next– couple years, your relationship with the secretary, as it certainly appears she's planning on running for president. Will you coordinate? Does she have your blessing to kind of separate when she needs to?

Stephanopoulos: You still talk pretty regularly?

President Obama: You know, I think– I think the American people, you know, they're gonna want– you know, that new car smell. (LAUGHTER) You know, their own– they– they wanna drive somethin' off the lot that– that doesn't have as– as much mileage as me.

Stephanopoulos: I wonder how that's gonna make you feel, though, as this campaign's going on? You think you'll be itchin' to get back out there or glad to let someone else?

November 23 – Questions from Interview with Israeli Prime Minister

Benjamin Netanyahu

Stephanopoulos: We're joined now by the Israeli prime minister, Benjamin Netanyahu. Mr. Prime Minister, thank you for joining us this morning. I know you've been in contact with Secretary Kerry through the weekend. Do you think there will be a deal?

Stephanopoulos: So what options does Israel have if that kind of a deal is reached?

Stephanopoulos: Do you agree with President Obama that this interim deal has been a success, and therefore, if you can't get a big deal over this weekend, would you go along with extending the current terms?

Stephanopoulos: Mr. Prime Minister, we all saw that horrific murder in the Jerusalem synagogue this week. Is Israel facing a new kind of intifadah?

November 9 – Questions from Roundtable with Various Guests

Stephanopoulos: All of this happening as President Obama heads to Asia this week, leaving behind a capital shaken up by that mid-term election earthquake. The GOP now in solid control of congress, the president's team scrambling to salvage its final two years. And we're going to analyze all the fallout this morning beginning with Jon Karl at the White House. Good morning, Jon.

Stephanopoulos: Let me turn to the broader issues facing the president and congress in these next couple of years. The president is making it very clear he's going to act on immigration on his own before the end of the year. What are the consequences?

Issa: Well, the consequences are lost opportunities. In the last congress, I authored the skills visa act that not only would have allowed and promoted the best and the brightest being allowed to remain here and add to our economy, these STEM, if you will, graduates, but it scored $100 billion of new revenue to the government that can be paired with other immigration reforms. And if the president is willing to work with us in the House and the Senate we could make that happen.

Stephanopoulos: If not, shutting down the government?

Stephanopoulos: And, Congressman, you know, the federal government has also studied these threats to the power grid and showing the vulnerability of our power grid, attacks on a small number of transmission stations could create a coast-to-coast blackout, larger scale attacks could cause the whole power grid to collapse.

Severino: I think the challenge here is that the law is very clear. Sure, maybe Congress members didn't realize that states weren't going to play ball. They thought dangling this carrot was going to be enough to get all the states to get on board.

But this law's a mess. The American people have rejected it. I think that's why the states didn't want to get involved. And I think you'll see the court is going to want to hold Congress to the words that it signed and that it passed and the president signed the text of the law is very clearly what it is.

Stephanopoulos: So you think the court is going to strike you down, Jonathan Cohn, 15 seconds, do you agree?

Stephanopoulos: And that is the new Republican senator from Colorado, Cory Gardner, riding a big smile and skillful campaign to a big win in that battleground state that President Obama won twice. Senator-elect joins us from Colorado this morning. Senator, thank you for joining us this morning. So give me a headline sentence. What was the message the voters were sending Tuesday night?

Stephanopoulos: Does that include repealing Obamacare or going for something the president can sign first?

Stephanopoulos: And does that mean taking things like shutting down the government off the table?

Stephanopoulos: And we saw the president -- we know there's going to be a showdown coming on immigration as well. The president reiterating that he's prepared to go it alone to provide more protections for undocumented immigrants now in the country. What does that mean for cooperation and how will Republicans in the Senate and the House respond?

Stephanopoulos: So you don't believe him when he says he's going to issue that executive order?

Stephanopoulos: Finally, Senator, you won in a state, as I said, President Obama won twice. What is the memo you're going to write to the Republican candidate in 2016 to say this is how you win in Colorado?

Goal --- drumbeat on larger issues Pope raises (Income Inequality); Show Mayor's global presence
Use visit to discuss housing, homelessness, etc

Timeline: Sunday --- Saturday

Opportunities on the table for Pope Week (these are ones that have been proposed to us or kicked around)

- CNN oped on Pope and Income Inequality and what his visit means—they requested one/ Erin White received the request
- CNN with Chris Cuomo (Tuesday)—Mayor wanted us to provide a recommendation to him for discussion. Was not initially on board after FDOS issues
- Spanish language – we should get a Spanish language sit down hit.
- GMA, Today or other morning show – Would need to be pitched
- This Week with George – still in discussion with producer
- America Magazine wants to interview Mayor (national Jesuit weekly)

Opportunities CONFIRMED—Note, Mayor does not have ANY formal speaking role at Pope events

- WED: Cardinal/Housing event
- THURSDAY: Image of Mayor/Cardinal greeting Pope on Steps of St. Patrick's Cathedral
- FRIDAY: IDNYC being given to Pope on Friday (CONFIDENTIAL)

Carried-Interest Tax Break Divides Again, After Trump Revives the Issue

By JACKIE CALMESSEPT. 18, 2015 • Photo

At first, the capitalists' lobby dismissed the billionaire Donald J. Trump's call to end the so-called carried-interest tax break for "hedge fund guys" as an eccentric idea from one of their own.

Then Jeb Bush, Mr. Trump's rival for the Republican nomination, embraced it. Some of Wall Street's heaviest hitters approved. And predictably, Democrats led by President Obama and the party's presidential candidates piled on, since the tax-the-rich idea had been theirs to begin with.

But far from defeated, the proponents of the carried-interest tax break are rallying to its defense — and counting on the Republican-controlled Congress to have their back.

"It's been a while since people on the right have had to think about this," said Ryan Ellis, tax policy director for Americans for Tax Reform, the group founded by Grover Norquist, the self-appointed arbiter of Republicans' anti-tax purity. Recently, both men wrote columns supporting lower taxes for carried interest: Mr. Ellis in Forbes magazine (its Trump-like lead paragraph: "Taxing carried interest as ordinary income is a really dumb idea") and Mr. Norquist in USA Today.

"Trump started it," Mr. Ellis said in an interview. "And then what really got it going was the unfortunate decision of the Bush campaign to include it" in Mr. Bush's new tax plan. "Then it wasn't just a kooky Trump idea."

Mr. Ellis's group is not alone. About a dozen lobbyists for the Private Equity Growth Capital Council, the industry trade group, have been busy trying to inform members of Congress about the economic benefits of private equity firms' investments, said James Maloney, a spokesman for the group. When Mr. Bush came out in favor of eliminating the carried-interest loophole, the council issued a warning that such a change could spell the end of "decades of America's commitment to fostering entrepreneurial risk-taking."

"Our concern is that there is a lot of misinformation out there," Mr. Maloney said.

For both Mr. Trump, the real estate mogul, and Mr. Bush, who briefly had a career in private equity, their opposition to the tax break for a niche of the wealthiest Americans is perhaps a politically advantageous position in this populist moment, despite its departure from Republican orthodoxy. Many voters are frustrated by years of stagnant wages and growing income inequality, which has been exacerbated by the tax code's preferences.

For Mr. Bush, in particular, media attention to the populism of his attack on the carried-interest break obscured an important fact: His proposal to eliminate the break is one provision in a broader tax plan that, overall, would cut individual and corporate taxes so deeply that it is uncertain whether people involved in private equity would pay more taxes, or less.

At issue with carried interest is the tax code's longstanding favorable treatment of the generous compensation given to hedge fund managers, private equity partners and venture capitalists as their share of the gains on money they invest for others — institutions as well as wealthy partnerships. That compensation, typically 20 percent of any investment gains (with an additional fee of 2 percent of the sum under management), is taxed as capital gains rather than ordinary income. That means a tax of 23.8 percent — instead of the up to 39.6 percent for ordinary income — even though these money managers generally have not put their own money in play. The traditional justification for low capital gains taxes is to reward risk-taking investors.

Congressional Democrats have tried in past years to make that compensation taxable at the higher "ordinary income" rates paid by wage earners; Mr. Obama has also proposed as much in his budgets. The carried-interest break was an issue in the 2012 election, given its benefit to the Republican nominee Mitt Romney, a founder of the private equity firm Bain Capital. Mr.

Romney's campaign, on the defensive, suggested that as president he would end the break as part of a rewrite of the tax code.

Postelection, the issue faded again. Then in late August, Mr. Trump, on the CBS Sunday morning program "Face the Nation," said, "The hedge fund guys are getting away with murder," tax-wise. Defying Republican political gravity, after his heresy of proposing a tax increase, Mr. Trump's popularity among Republicans rose.

Two weeks later on the same program, Mr. Trump doubled down. He claimed the hedge fund industry "totally controlled" both Mr. Bush and the Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Rodham Clinton (who opposes the carried-interest break), and added that, under him, hedge fund managers are "going to be paying up."

With their counterattack gearing up this week, carried-interest defenders were resting easier. On Wednesday, Mr. Ellis said that his intelligence gathering suggested that Mr. Trump's tax proposal would not be as troublesome as the candidate's rhetoric suggested. Mr. Ellis also predicted that, given Democrats' rush to join Mr. Trump's opposition to the tax break, "we've seen the last Republican presidential campaign that's for ending it."

But hours later, remarks at the Republican presidential debate on CNN suggested that Mr. Ellis's information was faulty. Before a vast television audience, Mr. Trump said that when he releases a comprehensive tax-overhaul plan in two weeks, "the hedge fund guys won't like me as much as they like me right now."

"I know people that are making a tremendous amount of money and paying virtually no tax," Mr. Trump continued. "And I think it's unfair."

Also contrary to Mr. Ellis's prediction, George Pataki, former governor of New York, joined Mr. Trump's side. "I would not give a special tax break to the Wall Street fat cats," Mr. Pataki said, adding, "It's hard for me to say I'm with Donald Trump on anything, but on this issue, I agree with him."

Disagreeing with Mr. Trump were Republican presidential candidates Gov. John Kasich of Ohio, who said he opposed "changing the incentives for investment and risk-taking," and Ben Carson, who suggested Mr. Trump's proposal smacked of socialism.

The same day as the debate, Mr. Obama approvingly cited the opposition of Mr. Trump and Mr. Bush to the carried-interest loophole in his remarks to an audience of corporate executives at a Business Roundtable meeting. “Keeping this tax loophole, which leads to folks who are doing very well paying lower rates than their secretaries, is not in any demonstrable way improving our economy,” he said, echoing a theme of the billionaire Warren Buffett.

On Thursday, Senate Democrats including Senator Charles Schumer of New York, once a behind-the-scenes protector of the tax break, and Senator Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts called on Republicans to support ending it as part of a budget compromise that would allow caps on military and domestic spending to be lifted.

Mr. Ellis said the real goal of Democrats was to end tax breaks for capital gains altogether. “This is the tip of the spear, the camel’s nose under the tent, whatever metaphor you want to use,” he said. “So that’s a huge problem for conservatives,” many of whom want no taxes on investors’ capital gains.

Such defenders of the break, however, could take heart that the Republican chairmen of Congress’s tax-writing committees have no intention of taking up carried interest anytime soon.

“This is an issue that should be considered only in the context of comprehensive tax reform, and until then, nothing is ruled in or out,” said Brendan Buck, spokesman for Representative Paul D. Ryan of Wisconsin at the House Ways and Means Committee.

Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is also holding out for a broad overhaul of the tax code that would end myriad tax breaks so ordinary income tax rates could be lowered. Doing that, he said, “would be a simpler and more effective way to alleviate concerns that some might have.”

This is another invite for October 2nd in addition to the Mike Lux invite in DC on the second.

SiX has many influential organizations in the progressive community we'd want to partner with who are both on the board and in the room.

Both would need to know fairly soon to make decisions on their programs.

Please let me know when there is a decision made on USCM so we can respond either way.

Thank you.

Geri - here is formal invite for the Mayor. Thanks!

STATE INNOVATION EXCHANGE

September 18, 2015

Mayor Bill de Blasio
City Hall
New York, NY 10007

Dear Mayor de Blasio,

The State Innovation Exchange (SiX) invites you to be a Keynote Speaker at the upcoming 2015 National Legislator Conference on October 1-3 in Washington, DC. We would be honored if you delivered a keynote address on Friday, October 2, at our morning plenary session or evening cocktail reception. We are happy to slate your address around your availability.

Your live streamed keynote message at last year's conference truly inspired and moved our audience and they would be very excited to hear you speak in person this year. We hope you will be able to join us.

The State Innovation Exchange (SiX) is a resource and strategy center that supports state legislators to advance progressive policies across the country. We have a long-term vision of building progressive power and infrastructure at the state level. SiX came from the merger of four organizations which combined forces to ensure that state legislators are empowered with research, training, policy expertise, communications support, political strategy and a space to network and share ideas. Together, we work to advance and defend policies that support working families, protect the environment, promote civil rights and strengthen our democracy.

As you know, our main event each year is the National Legislator Conference. We anticipate this year's conference to bring together over 250 progressive state legislators from around the country, a range of national advocates, unions, members of Congress, and administration officials to discuss the role that states can play in advancing progressive policies. We believe you would be the perfect match to address this audience.

As Mayor of the largest city in the nation, you can speak to how cities and states are at the forefront of innovative policymaking and the importance of building out progressive infrastructure in the cities and states. As a keynote speaker at our conference, you will have the opportunity to influence and inspire lawmakers across every state, and validate their difficult, sometimes overlooked, but undoubtedly, important work.

We hope that you may find some time in your busy schedule to be a part of this exciting event. Please let me know if you have any questions and we look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Nick Rathod', with a stylized flourish at the end.

Here you go

Pope:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->What does the Pope's visit mean for NYC?

Chance to hear from biggest voice on inc inq, show him what we're doing on housing/education/pulling people out of poverty

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

He is in unique position to talk about how these aren't partisan issues – but human issues

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

There's nothing political about tackling income inequality & climate change.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Well, when Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

Apples and oranges. I thought GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political. The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global religious leader.

HRC:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Some would say the Clinton's helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on?

I've always said she has unequalled experience & has a great progressive track record – but I wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->It seems you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

For me personally, the test is whether she has big, bold solutions to income inequality – and I’ve liked what I’ve heard on many issues. She’s speaking big and tackling the big stuff.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

You’d have to ask him. I can only speak for myself.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

I don’t want to get into the details of private conversations, but I talk with her from time to time.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->I’ve talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: “Look – she’s endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio’s agenda.” (LISTS ISSUES) How is it that she STILL hasn’t earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

Have a few more questions about trade and min wage, but she’s unveiled a really impressive progressive vision on everything from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don’t trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness vis a vis Wall Street – like closing carried interest loophole – which she has. Her positions are what’s important.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->You managed Hillary’s Senate race in 2000. You’ve seen how she’s handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

I’m out of the campaign manager business. But as a voter, I just listen to what she’s saying on income inequality and the big issues of our time. When she talks about those things, she’s very persuasive.

Biden:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

He's been a great VP. We've got a number of excellent candidates right now. I don't hear many of my fellow Democrats looking for more candidates – especially this late in the process.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying. Forceful voice on income inequality. I'm not going to read tea leaves, but I'm confident that Democrats will have a strong nominee who will win in 2016.

Sanders

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

I've already said what I'm looking for – detailed solutions to income inequality. So I'm still listening for what the candidates are saying there.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are?

Many of the Democrats have been talking about income inequality and offering big, bold solutions – and that's good for America.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Have you talked to Sanders and if so did he ask you for your endorsement? What was your response?

Again, I don't get into private conversations.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Can you see Bernie Sanders winning a general election?

All I know is that Democrats are going to win in 2016. They'll do it on the basis of solutions to income inequality.

Could Bernie Sanders be an effective president?

I think all of the Democrats running have what it takes to be effective as president.

POTUS race

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->What is your endorsement timeline?

I don't have a hard and fast timeline.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->What are you looking for to make a decision?

Detailed vision on income inequality solutions.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

I don't pretend that my endorsement is worth any more or less than other endorsements. I'm just a mayor, a Democrat, and a progressive.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

I appreciated what he said about taxing the rich, but his views on immigration and women show he should NEVER be our president.

CUOMO

- You and Cuomo have been feuding lately. Some of have they've never seen a relationship so poisoned. Can you see yourself supporting Cuomo for re-election? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

The only thing I'm running for is re-election as mayor.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->But what about endorsing a candidate against Cuomo?

I haven't thought for a minute about 2018. I'm focused on 2015 and 2016.

TPA

- You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues, and not doing enough back home. How do you respond to that?

We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on inc inequ. Need partners in Albany AND Washington to tax the rich, invest in education, protect workers, pull people out of poverty.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->You talk about issues like the carried interest loophole, paid family leave. If those issues are so important to you, why not try to tackle them at the city level?

For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->A profile in Vanity Fair quoted you as saying that the people didn't elect you to attend parades. In some ways, it sounds like you're bored with the day-to-day aspects of the job. Shouldn't mayors focus on local events in the city?

Of course. And I wasn't dismissing that. This is the greatest job in the world, and I cherish it and am honored every day to serve. I was just trying to point out that what people are most concerned about is their economic situation – and I'm intent on doing what I can on that.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->That same profile pointed to mayors like Rahm Emanuel and Eric Garcetti – two fairly non-ideological big city mayors. Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

I'm a progressive. But I don't think that should be confused with being too partisan. There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

Sanders

- You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

I've already said what I'm looking for – detailed solutions to income inequality. So I'm still listening for what the candidates are saying there.

- How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are?

Many of the Democrats have been talking about income inequality and offering big, bold solutions – and that's good for America.

- Have you talked to Sanders and if so did he ask you for your endorsement? What was your response?

Again, I don't get into private conversations.

- Can you see Bernie Sanders winning a general election?

All I know is that Democrats are going to win in 2016. They'll do it on the basis of solutions to income inequality.

Could Bernie Sanders be an effective president?

I think all of the Democrats running have what it takes to be effective as president.

POTUS race

- What is your endorsement timeline?

I don't have a hard and fast timeline.

- What are you looking for to make a decision?

Detailed vision on income inequality solutions.

- Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

I don't pretend that my endorsement is worth any more or less than other endorsements. I'm just a mayor, a Democrat, and a progressive.

- You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

I appreciated what he said about taxing the rich, but his views on immigration and women show he should NEVER be our president.

CUOMO

- You and Cuomo have been feuding lately. Some of have they've never seen a relationship so poisoned. Can you see yourself supporting Cuomo for re-election? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

The only thing I'm running for is re-election as mayor.

- But what about endorsing a candidate against Cuomo?

I haven't thought for a minute about 2018. I'm focused on 2015 and 2016.

TPA

- You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues, and not doing enough back home. How do you respond to that?

We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on inc inequ. Need partners in Albany AND Washington to tax the rich, invest in education, protect workers, pull people out of poverty.

- You talk about issues like the carried interest loophole, paid family leave. If those issues are so important to you, why not try to tackle them at the city level?

For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

- A profile in Vanity Fair quoted you as saying that the people didn't elect you to attend parades. In some ways, it sounds like you're bored with the day-to-day aspects of the job. Shouldn't mayors focus on local events in the city?

Of course. And I wasn't dismissing that. This is the greatest job in the world, and I cherish it and am honored every day to serve. I was just trying to point out that what people are most concerned about is their economic situation – and I'm intent on doing what I can on that.

- That same profile pointed to mayors like Rahm Emanuel and Eric Garcetti – two fairly non-ideological big city mayors. Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

I'm a progressive. But I don't think that should be confused with being too partisan. There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

Subject: Sunday/ George Stephanopoulos

Sir,

Following up on our series of discussions last week and have been closing working with the front office and IGA team.

George Stephanopoulos would like to have you on the show this Sunday. It would be a 5-6 minute segment (the standard for any headliner interview) I've confirmed that they will discuss with you the following topics:

- Pope and income inequality message
- Pope and security/logistics
- Presidential politics and democratic candidates
- Presidential politics/ TPA and progressive politics (Trump/bush on closing carried interest loop hole, minimum wage push)

I understand that there is now a great message opportunity for you to speak to CCC on Sunday morning to amplify the education speech. I've worked with the ABC producer and we can film the interview Sunday morning in-studio and get you out the door in time (by 10am) to deliver remarks at CCC on your education vision.

So current line-up for Sunday would be:

9-10 am – George Stephanopoulos (includes arrival, prep and interview)
10:45 am – CCC

Let me know if you have any concerns. Would like to confirm logistics with George's team.

Thanks!

Pope:

- What does the Pope's visit mean for NYC?
Chance to hear from biggest voice on inc inq, show him what we're doing on housing/education/pulling people out of poverty
- What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?
He is in unique position to talk about how these aren't partisan issues – but human issues
- Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?
There's nothing political about tackling income inequality & climate change.
- Well, when Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?
Apples and oranges. I thought GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political. The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global religious leader.

HRC:

- Some would say the Clinton's helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on?
I've always said she has unequalled experience & has a great progressive track record – but I wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.
- It seems you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?
For me personally, the test is whether she has big, bold solutions to income inequality – and I've liked what I've heard on many issues. She's speaking big and tackling the big stuff.
- Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?
You'd have to ask him. I can only speak for myself.
- How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

I don't want to get into the details of private conversations, but I talk with her from time to time.

- I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." (LISTS ISSUES) How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?
Have a few more questions about trade and min wage, but she's unveiled a really impressive progressive vision on everything from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.
- A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?
No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness vis a vis Wall Street – like closing carried interest loophole – which she has. Her positions are what's important.
- You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?
I'm out of the campaign manager business. But as a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality and the big issues of our time. When she talks about those things, she's very persuasive.

Biden:

- Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?
He's been a great VP. We've got a number of excellent candidates right now. I don't hear many of my fellow Democrats looking for more candidates – especially this late in the process.
- Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?
I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying. Forceful voice on income inequality. I'm not going to read tea leaves, but I'm confident that Democrats will have a strong nominee who will win in 2016.

Subject: Sunday/ George Stephanopoulos

Sir,

Following up on our series of discussions last week and have been closing working with the front office and IGA team.

George Stephanopoulos would like to have you on the show this Sunday. It would be a 5-6 minute segment (the standard for any headliner interview) I've confirmed that they will discuss with you the following topics:

- Pope and income inequality message
- Pope and security/logistics
- Presidential politics and democratic candidates
- Presidential politics/ TPA and progressive politics (Trump/bush on closing carried interest loop hole, minimum wage push)

I understand that there is now a great message opportunity for you to speak to CCC on Sunday morning to amplify the education speech. I've worked with the ABC producer and we can film the interview Sunday morning in-studio and get you out the door in time (by 10am) to deliver remarks at CCC on your education vision.

So current line-up for Sunday would be:

9-10 am – George Stephanopoulos (includes arrival, prep and interview)

10:45 am – CCC

Let me know if you have any concerns. Would like to confirm logistics with George's team.

Thanks!

Here you go

Pope:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->What does the Pope's visit mean for NYC?

Chance to hear from biggest voice on inc inq, show him what we're doing on housing/education/pulling people out of poverty

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

He is in unique position to talk about how these aren't partisan issues – but human issues

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

There's nothing political about tackling income inequality & climate change.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Well, when Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

Apples and oranges. I thought GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political. The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global religious leader.

HRC:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Some would say the Clinton's helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on?

I've always said she has unequaled experience & has a great progressive track record – but I wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->It seems you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

For me personally, the test is whether she has big, bold solutions to income inequality – and I’ve liked what I’ve heard on many issues. She’s speaking big and tackling the big stuff.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

You’d have to ask him. I can only speak for myself.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

I don’t want to get into the details of private conversations, but I talk with her from time to time.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->I’ve talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: “Look – she’s endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio’s agenda.” (LISTS ISSUES) How is it that she STILL hasn’t earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

Have a few more questions about trade and min wage, but she’s unveiled a really impressive progressive vision on everything from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don’t trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness vis a vis Wall Street – like closing carried interest loophole – which she has. Her positions are what's important.

I'm out of the campaign manager business. But as a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality and the big issues of our time. When she talks about those things, she's very persuasive.

Biden:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race?
Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

He's been a great VP. We've got a number of excellent candidates right now. I don't hear many of my fellow Democrats looking for more candidates – especially this late in the process.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying. Forceful voice on income inequality. I'm not going to read tea leaves, but I'm confident that Democrats will have a strong nominee who will win in 2016.

Sanders

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?
I've already said what I'm looking for – detailed solutions to income inequality. So I'm still listening for what the candidates are saying there.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are?
Many of the Democrats have been talking about income inequality and offering big, bold solutions – and that's good for America.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Have you talked to Sanders and if so did he ask you for your endorsement? What was your response?
Again, I don't get into private conversations.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Can you see Bernie Sanders winning a general election?
All I know is that Democrats are going to win in 2016. They'll do it on the basis of solutions to income inequality.

Could Bernie Sanders be an effective president?
I think all of the Democrats running have what it takes to be effective as president.

POTUS race

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->What is your endorsement timeline?

I don't have a hard and fast timeline.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->What are you looking for to make a decision?

Detailed vision on income inequality solutions.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

I don't pretend that my endorsement is worth any more or less than other endorsements. I'm just a mayor, a Democrat, and a progressive.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

I appreciated what he said about taxing the rich, but his views on immigration and women show he should NEVER be our president.

CUOMO

- You and Cuomo have been feuding lately. Some of have they've never seen a relationship so poisoned. Can you see yourself supporting Cuomo for re-election? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

The only thing I'm running for is re-election as mayor.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->But what about endorsing a candidate against Cuomo?

I haven't thought for a minute about 2018. I'm focused on 2015 and 2016.

TPA

- You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues, and not doing enough back home. How do you respond to that?

We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on inc inequ. Need partners in Albany AND Washington to tax the rich, invest in education, protect workers, pull people out of poverty.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->You talk about issues like the carried interest loophole, paid family leave. If those issues are so important to you, why not try to tackle them at the city level?
For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->A profile in Vanity Fair quoted you as saying that the people didn't elect you to attend parades. In some ways, it sounds like you're bored with the day-to-day aspects of the job. Shouldn't mayors focus on local events in the city?

Of course. And I wasn't dismissing that. This is the greatest job in the world, and I cherish it and am honored every day to serve. I was just trying to point out that what people are most concerned about is their economic situation – and I'm intent on doing what I can on that.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->- <!--[endif]-->That same profile pointed to mayors like Rahm Emanuel and Eric Garcetti – two fairly non-ideological big city mayors. Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

I'm a progressive. But I don't think that should be confused with being too partisan. There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

From Geri & me. Let us know if you'd like me to offer up answers as well - or if we just do that over the phone.

Pope:

- What does the pope's visit mean for NYC?
- What do you think about this pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?
- Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?
- Well, when Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

HRC:

- Some would say the Clinton's helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on?
- It seems you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?
- Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?
- How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?
- I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." (LISTS ISSUES) How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

- A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?
- You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

Biden:

- Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?
- Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

Sanders

- You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?
- How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are?
- Have you talked to Sanders and if so did he ask you for your endorsement? What was your response?
- Can you see Bernie Sanders winning a general election?

POTUS race

- What is your endorsement timeline?
- What are you looking for to make a decision?
- Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?
- You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

CUOMO

- You and Cuomo have been feuding lately. Some of have they've never seen a relationship so poisoned.

Can you see yourself supporting Cuomo for re-election? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

TPA

- You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues, and not doing enough back home. How do you respond to that?

- You talk about issues like the carried interest loophole, paid family leave. If those issues are so important to you, why not try to tackle them at the city level?

- A profile in Vanity Fair quoted you as saying that the people didn't elect you to attend parades. In some ways, it sounds like you're bored with the day-to-day aspects of the job. Shouldn't mayors focus on local events in the city?

Thanks, Andrea. I've outlined the logistics below. Please let me know if you need anything else.

I will connect your team with our head of security at ABC to arrange a walk through prior to the interview.

Date: Sunday 9/20

Time: The Mayor will be seated at 9:32a and will be able to leave the set by 9:40a. There will be a short intro piece that will include some of the Bratton interview we discussed yesterday. We go to break directly following the Mayor's interview.

Arrival: Arrival by 9am or slightly after would be best. We will need a minimum of 15 minutes for makeup, microphone, etc.

Location: ABC News NY
47 W 66th St
New York, NY 10023
rd

Studio on the 3 floor

On Site POC: Jessica Puckett: [REDACTED] (cell)

Jessica will meet your team in the lobby of ABC and take you to the studio. We will have a separate green room space for the Mayor and staff.

Anchor: George Stephanopoulos

Topics:

- Pope's message/income inequality
- Pope/logistics/security
- Presidential election and progressive politics

Other In-Studio Guests:

- Cokie Roberts
- Matthew Dowd
- Donna Brazile
- Bill Kristol

Thank you again,
Anja

Attached is what Peter Monica and I are emailing to mayor shortly for this week. Just need to plug in home bases for pope.

Send any thoughts soonest if u have. Would like to send to mayor by 130 or 2.

Peter also is going to write a consolidated one page cheat sheet since this is three pages and mayor always wants shorter. We will use the cheat sheet for day of .

Pope:

Home Bases

Q+A

What does the Pope's visit mean for NYC?

- Biggest voice on income inequality
- Many of the initiatives we have put in place in NYC highlights the Pope's focus to pull people out of poverty
- Housing, education, services to help individuals exit homelessness

What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

- He's in unique position to talk about how these aren't partisan issues – but critical human issues

Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

- Would be a shame if they boycott his speech and I hope everyone plans to listen to his message

When Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

- Apples/oranges.
- GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political.
- The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global leader and the world's conscious

HRC:

Home Bases

- Excited to see her discussing critical issues facing the Country
- Focused on many progressive priorities like paid family leave and closing carried interest
- I've been clear that I want to see the full vision of what is a strong platform

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

- Always said she has unequaled experience & great progressive track record
- Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race
- No hard and fast timeline

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

- Don't pretend my endorsement is worth any more or less than other endorsements.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

- No test. Waiting to see full and bold solutions to income inequality
- Liked what I've heard.
- She is speaking big & tackling important issues

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

- Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

- Not going to get into details of private conversations, but I talk with her and her team from time to time.

I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." (LISTS ISSUES) How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

- Few more questions about trade & min wage, but she's unveiled impressive progressive vision from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

-No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness– like closing carried interest loophole.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

-I'm out of the campaign manager business.

-As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time.

-When she talks about those things, she's very persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP, but the field has excellent candidates right now.

Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

-I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying.

-Forceful voice on income inequality.

-I'm not going to read tea leaves, but confident Dems will have strong nominee who will win

SANDERS

You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

Still listening for the full vision of the candidates on income inequality

How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are? Have you talked to him? Can he win?

-Many Dems talking about income inequality & offering bold solutions – and that’s good for America.

-Don’t get into private conversations.

-All I know is that Dems will win on solutions to income inequality

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

-Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole

-His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election? Endorse his opponent? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I’m focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world

TPA

You’ve been criticized for spending too much time on national issues. You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We’re doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

-Need partners in Albany AND Washington

-For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

-There’s nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

LOW POLLS

How do you respond to dipping poll numbers and voters saying your feud with the Governor hurts NY?

-Here is what matters: NYC just had the safest summer in 20 years, we’ve built more affordable housing than at any point in the last 40 years, added 177,000 new jobs, and provided full day pre-K for more than 60,000 four-year-olds

-If there is a way to work productively with this Governor, we will. But New Yorkers need to get their fair share from our State and I'll continue to say that

JAMES BLAKE

Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

-Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake

-Focused now on resolving these issues

-Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world

Subject: Sunday/ George Stephanopoulos

Sir,

Following up on our series of discussions last week and have been closing working with the front office and IGA team.

George Stephanopoulos would like to have you on the show this Sunday. It would be a 5-6 minute segment (the standard for any headliner interview) I've confirmed that they will discuss with you the following topics:

- Pope and income inequality message
- Pope and security/logistics
- Presidential politics and democratic candidates
- Presidential politics/ TPA and progressive politics (Trump/bush on closing carried interest loop hole, minimum wage push)

I understand that there is now a great message opportunity for you to speak to CCC on Sunday morning to amplify the education speech. I've worked with the ABC producer and we can film the interview Sunday morning in-studio and get you out the door in time (by 10am) to deliver remarks at CCC on your education vision.

So current line-up for Sunday would be:

9-10 am – George Stephanopoulos (includes arrival, prep and interview)

10:45 am – CCC

Let me know if you have any concerns. Would like to confirm logistics with George's team.

Thanks!

Subject: Sunday/ George Stephanopoulos

Sir,

Following up on our series of discussions last week and have been closing working with the front office and IGA team.

George Stephanopoulos would like to have you on the show this Sunday. It would be a 5-6 minute segment (the standard for any headliner interview) I've confirmed that they will discuss with you the following topics:

- Pope and income inequality message
- Pope and security/logistics
- Presidential politics and democratic candidates
- Presidential politics/ TPA and progressive politics (Trump/bush on closing carried interest loop hole, minimum wage push)

I understand that there is now a great message opportunity for you to speak to CCC on Sunday morning to amplify the education speech. I've worked with the ABC producer and we can film the interview Sunday morning in-studio and get you out the door in time (by 10am) to deliver remarks at CCC on your education vision.

So current line-up for Sunday would be:

9-10 am – George Stephanopoulos (includes arrival, prep and interview)

10:45 am – CCC

Let me know if you have any concerns. Would like to confirm logistics with George's team.

Thanks!

I flagged these after reviewing the brief and team agreed I can just send them to you; my two cents. Know there's a lot of work going into tomorrow and I don't want to step out of my lane too much here. Fwiw I think:

1. Gov -- The Cuomo TP here is better than the previous talking points about "calling him out" -- this sounds more mayoral and empowered, less personal. We also have successfully worked with state in past to deliver for NYers and we need to be clear about those achievements. Important to emphasize the difference.
2. Biden -- I appreciate there was a rationale when we said what we said and we made news re Biden, but trap is we verge on messianic when we are dictating who should and shouldn't be running while not supporting anyone. I support pure respectful tone and not falling for any bait on him.
3. HRC - "wait and see" is where we were months ago; if they're not going to say much more then we r setting ourselves up with that literal phrasing. I defer to the TPA minds, just flagging the optics of that specific phrasing.

Cuomo - agree. Need to be champion for NYC and not let any personal animus infect that.

Biden - I would stay consistent. It's what he really thinks.

HRC - maybe we need to show even more leg here. But boss knows best on how to handle.

I am ready and eager to work with the governor any way we can to solve problems and move forward. Name some issues , MTA homelssness, etc. However if there are moments when we feel the state isnt doing right by NYC, we are going to stand up for our people. But I do think there is alot of common ground here to work on w the governor productivly on Biden - i thought the answer was dismissive and ungracious and also out of step w reality .. but he has to maintain consistency somehow

Would be ok to say - Alotta respect for Biden, he has a proecss to go through, which we respect but I do think we have a real great field of candidates in the race right now

HRC - tough one....this is a tough box to be in but not lot of options.....

Agree with Karen.

We knew we were walking into the same questions and answers with this interview about HRC. Not much else we can say that is different other than offering an endorsement.

I would have preferred on Biden: "Any and all runners are welcome." That is what we have said about NYC, but it is too late for that now.

I don't know where "calling out" came from in reference to Cuomo. I think it was used in MTA points, but they didn't from me.

Talk to you at 3:30 pm today. John, Andrea, Peter, Phil, Monica and I will be on call.

Pope:

Home Bases

--Inequality not just economic crisis, but moral crisis. Significant a spiritual leader say it.

--Our leaders shouldn't choke on the word poverty. It's real & needs to be tackled.

--Pope has criticized trickle-down economics - and he's right - it doesn't work - those at the top have to pay fair share so we can rebuild middle class.

Q+A

What does the Pope's visit mean for NYC?

- Biggest voice on income inequality.
- Many of the initiatives we have put in place in NYC highlights the Pope's focus to pull people out of poverty.
- Housing, education, services to help individuals exit homelessness.

What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

- He's in unique position to talk about how these aren't partisan issues – but critical human issues.

Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

- Would be a shame if they boycott is speech and I hope everyone plans to listen to his message.
- (Sep. of church/state) Spiritual leaders have First Amendment rights, too.
- (Should public fund security?) Protect heads of state; protect NYorkers seeing Pope.

When Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

- Apples/oranges.

- GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political.
- The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global leader and the world's conscious

HRC:

Home Bases

- Excited to see her discussing critical issues facing the Country.
- Focused on many progressive priorities like paid family leave and closing carried interest.
- I've been clear that I want to see the full vision of what is a strong platform.

Q+A

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

- Always said she has unequaled experience & great progressive track record.
- Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.
- No hard and fast timeline.

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

- Don't pretend my endorsement is worth any more or less than other endorsements.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

- No test. Waiting to see full and bold solutions to income inequality.
- Liked what I've heard.
- She is speaking big & tackling important issues.

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

- Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton?

What kinds of things do you ask her?

- Not going to get into details of private conversations, but I talk with her and her team from time to time.

I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement?

What are you holding out for?

- Few more questions about trade & min wage, but she's unveiled impressive progressive vision from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

- No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness– like closing carried interest loophole.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000.

You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

-I'm out of the campaign manager business.

-As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time.

-When she talks about those things, she's very persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP, but the field has excellent candidates right now.

Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

-I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying.

-Forceful voice on income inequality.

-I'm not going to read tea leaves, but confident Dems will have strong nominee who will win.

SANDERS

You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

Still listening for the full vision of the candidates on income inequality.

How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are? Have you talked to him? Can he win?

-Many Dems talking about income inequality & offering bold solutions – and that's good for America.

-Don't get into private conversations.

-All I know is that Dems will win on solutions to income inequality.

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

-Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole.

-His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President.

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election? Endorse his opponent? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I'm focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world.

TPA

You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues. You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

-Need partners in Albany AND Washington.

-For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

-There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

LOW POLLS

How do you respond to dipping poll numbers and voters saying your feud with the Governor hurts NY?

-Here is what matters: NYC just had the safest summer in 20 years, we've built more affordable housing than at any point in the last 40 years, added 177,000 new jobs, and provided full day pre-K for more than 60,000 four-year-olds.

-If there is a way to work productively with this Governor, we will. But New Yorkers need to get their fair share from our State and I'll continue to say that.

JAMES BLAKE

Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

-Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake.

-Focused now on resolving these issues.

-Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world.

I'm not going to speak to the specifics of any one candidate, but let me say this about the Democratic field. We're going to produce a nominee who is both qualified and ready to be president, and ALSO committed to combatting income inequality.

And when you compare the Dem field to the GOP, it's not even close.

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

-Always said she has unequaled experience & great progressive track record.

-Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.

-No hard and fast timeline.

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

-Don't pretend my endorsement is worth any more or less than other endorsements.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

- No test. Waiting to see full and bold solutions to income inequality.
- Liked what I've heard.
- She is speaking big & tackling important issues.

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

- Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

- Not going to get into details of private conversations, but I talk with her and her team from time to time.

I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

- Few more questions about trade & min wage, but she's unveiled impressive progressive vision from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

- No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness– like closing carried interest loophole.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

- I'm out of the campaign manager business.
- As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time.

-When she talks about those things, she's very persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP, but the field has excellent candidates right now.

Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

-I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying.

-Forceful voice on income inequality.

-I'm not going to read tea leaves, but confident Dems will have strong nominee who will win.

SANDERS

You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

Still listening for the full vision of the candidates on income inequality.

How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are? Have you talked to him? Can he win?

-Many Dems talking about income inequality & offering bold solutions – and that's good for America.

-Don't get into private conversations.

-All I know is that Dems will win on solutions to income inequality.

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

- Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole.
- His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President.

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election? Endorse his opponent?

Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I'm focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world.

TPA

You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues. You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

-Need partners in Albany AND Washington.

-For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

-There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

LOW POLLS

How do you respond to dipping poll numbers and voters saying your feud with the Governor hurts NY?

-Here is what matters: NYC just had the safest summer in 20 years, we've built more affordable housing than at any point in the last 40 years, added 177,000 new jobs, and provided full day pre-K for more than 60,000 four-year-olds.

-If there is a way to work productively with this Governor, we will. But New Yorkers need to get their fair share from our State and I'll continue to say that.

JAMES BLAKE

Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

-Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake.

-Focused now on resolving these issues.

-Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world.

Subject: This Week Brief

Mr. Mayor — QA/home bases revised for This Week. Trump and Rubio on This Week as well. They will be on BEFORE you. Producer says no plans to ask them about you. Commissioner Bratton also precedes your interview. He is talking about security — Peter Donald said no surprises, just basic security. Your questions will be on Pope's visit and presidential politics.

In-studio guests are Cokie Roberts, Matthew Dowd, Donna Brazile and Ana Navarro.

Arrive at 9-9:15 am for makeup and microphone and greeted by Jessica Puckett. Seated at 9:32 am and finished by 9:40 am. Peter and I will see at the studio in the morning.

Pope:

Home Bases

--Inequality not just economic crisis, but moral crisis. Significant a spiritual leader say it.

--Our leaders shouldn't choke on the word inequality. It's real & needs to be tackled.

--Pope has criticized trickle-down economics - and he's right - it doesn't work - those at the top have to pay fair share so we can rebuild middle class.

Citation: “Some people continue to defend trickle-down theories which assume that economic growth, encouraged by a free market, will inevitably succeed in bringing about greater justice and inclusiveness in the world,” Francis wrote in the papal statement. “This opinion, which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and in the sacra–lized workings of the prevailing economic system.”

Q+A

What does the Pope’s visit mean for NYC?

-Biggest voice on income inequality.

-Many of the initiatives we have put in place in NYC highlights the Pope’s focus to pull people out of poverty.

-Housing, education, services to help individuals exit homelessness.

What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

-He’s in unique position to talk about how these aren’t partisan issues – but critical human issues.

Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

--Would be a shame if they boycott is speech and I hope everyone plans to listen to his message.

—(Sep. of church/state) Spiritual leaders have First Amendment rights, too.

—(Should public fund security?) Protect heads of state; protect NYorkers seeing Pope.

When Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

-Apples/oranges.

-GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political.

-The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global leader and the world's conscious.

HRC & SANDERS

Home Bases

-HRC bringing so many progressive issues to the table; tremendously capable; her vision stronger everyday, better for country. Speaking about big issues that matter.

-Sanders moving issues to the front of the line ignored for decades; heart & soul in right place; making it OK to talk about IE.

-Contrast Clinton/Sanders to the spectacle of the GOP debate. No comparison.

Sanders tweet:

It's over. Not one word about economic inequality, climate change, Citizens United or student debt. That's why the Rs are so out of touch.

PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Home Bases

-Heartened by all Dems candidates. GOP still talking about trickle down.

-Dems united on progressive priorities like paid family leave, student debt, closing carried interest (tax loopholes for rich).

-Striking contrast between Dems & GOP. Bell weather that GOP candidates want to end carried interest. IE time has come.

CBS/NY Times poll: (have a card)

- * 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- * 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- * 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- * 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- * 85 percent back paid sick leave.

Q+A

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

-Always said she has unequalled experience & great progressive track record.
-Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.
-No hard and fast timeline.

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

-Elected to represent NYorkers. Do the best I can to represent their interest.
Jump to TPA.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

-No test. Like what I've heard.
-All Dems are tuned into American public. Jump to TPA.

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

-Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

-I'm out of the campaign manager business but generally don't buy the conventional media analysis.

-She's devoted to bold messages.

-As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time. She's persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP.

- All I know is Dems bringing more to table; in stark contrast to GOP; will win on solutions to income inequality.

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

- Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole.
- His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President.

RUBIO:

What do you think of Rubio's performance in debate and his standing in race?

- Made an important point that we are a country of immigrants.
- Unfortunately, GOP has been unwilling to address issue.
- We need immigration reform. Again, not a political issue. A human issue.

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election? Endorse his opponent? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I'm focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world.

TPA

You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues. You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

-Need partners in Albany AND Washington.

-For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Mr. Mayor — QA for This Week. Trump and Rubio on This Week as well. They will be on BEFORE you. In-studio guests are Cokie Roberts, Matthew Dowd, Donna Brazile and Ana Navarro.

Arrive at 9-9:15 am for makeup and microphone and greeted by Jessica Puckett. Seated at 9:32 am and finished by 9:40 am. Commissioner Bratton precedes your interview. He is talking about security. Your questions will be on Pope's visit and presidential politics.

Talk to you at 3:30 pm today. John, Andrea, Peter, Phil, Monica and I will be on call.

Pope:

Home Bases

--Inequality not just economic crisis, but moral crisis. Significant a spiritual leader say it.

--Our leaders shouldn't choke on the word inequality. It's real & needs to be tackled.

--Pope has criticized trickle-down economics - and he's right - it doesn't work - those at the top have to pay fair share so we can rebuild middle class.

Citation: “Some people continue to defend trickle-down theories which assume that economic growth, encouraged by a free market, will inevitably succeed in bringing about greater justice and inclusiveness in the world,” Francis wrote in the papal statement. “This opinion, which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and in the sacra–lized workings of the prevailing economic system.”

http://www.washingtonpost.com/business/economy/pope-francis-denounces-trickle-down-economic-theories-in-critique-of-inequality/2013/11/26/e17ffe4e-56b6-11e3-8304-caf30787c0a9_story.html

Q+A

What does the Pope’s visit mean for NYC?

- Biggest voice on income inequality.
- Many of the initiatives we have put in place in NYC highlights the Pope’s focus to pull people out of poverty.
- Housing, education, services to help individuals exit homelessness.

What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

-He's in unique position to talk about how these aren't partisan issues – but critical human issues.

Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

--Would be a shame if they boycott is speech and I hope everyone plans to listen to his message.

—(Sep. of church/state) Spiritual leaders have First Amendment rights, too.

—(Should public fund security?) Protect heads of state; protect NYorkers seeing Pope.

When Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

-Apples/oranges.

-GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political.

-The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global leader and the world's conscious.

HRC & SANDERS

Home Bases

-HRC bringing so many progressive issues to the table; tremendously capable; her vision stronger everyday, better for country. Speaking about big issues that matter.

- Sanders moving issues to the front of the line ignored for decades; heart & soul in right place; making it OK to talk about IE.
- Contrast Clinton/Sanders to the spectacle of the GOP debate. No comparison.

Sanders tweet:

It's over. Not one word about economic inequality, climate change, Citizens United or student debt. That's why the Rs are so out of touch.

PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Home Bases

- Heartened by all Dems candidates. GOP still talking about trickle down.
- Dems united on progressive priorities like paid family leave, student debt, closing carried interest (tax loopholes for rich).
- Striking contrast between Dems & GOP. Bell weather that GOP candidates want to end carried interest. IE time has come.

CBS/NY Times poll: (have a card)

- * 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- * 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- * 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- * 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- * 85 percent back paid sick leave.

Q+A

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

- Always said she has unequalled experience & great progressive track record.
- Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.
- No hard and fast timeline.

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

- Elected to represent NYorkers. Do the best I can to represent their interest. Jump to TPA.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

- No test. Like what I've heard.
- All Dems are tuned into American public. Jump to TPA.

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

- Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

- Not going to get into details of private conversations, but I talk with her and her team from time to time.

I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

-Few more questions about trade & min wage, but she's unveiled impressive progressive vision from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

-No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness– like closing carried interest loophole.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

-I'm out of the campaign manager business but generally don't buy the conventional media analysis.

-She's devoted to bold messages.

-As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time.

She's persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP.

-We also have a compelling field of candidates right now.

-I'm not going to read tea leaves, but confident Dems will have strong nominee who will win.

Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

-I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying.

-Forceful voice on income inequality.

SANDERS

You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

-All Dems bringing great values & skill to table.

-Still listening for the full vision of the candidates on income inequality.

-One thing is certain: Dems will be much better for country than GOP.

How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are? Have you talked to him? Can he win?

-Many Dems talking about income inequality & offering bold solutions – and that's good for America.

-Don't get into private conversations.

-All I know is Dems bringing more to table; in stark contrast to GOP; will win on solutions to income inequality.

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

-Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole.

-His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President.

RUBIO:

What do you think of Rubio's performance in debate and his standing in race?

-Made an important point that we are a country of immigrants.

-Unfortunately, GOP has been unwilling to address issue.

-We need immigration reform. Again, not a political issue. A human issue.

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election? Endorse his opponent? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I'm focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world.

TPA

You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues. You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

- Need partners in Albany AND Washington.
- For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

- There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

LOW POLLS

How do you respond to dipping poll numbers and voters saying your feud with the Governor hurts NY?

- Here is what matters: NYC just had the safest summer in 20 years, we've built more affordable housing than at any point in the last 40 years, added 177,000 new jobs, and provided full day pre-K for more than 60,000 four-year-olds.
- If there is a way to work productively with this Governor, we will. But New Yorkers need to get their fair share from our State and I'll continue to say that.

JAMES BLAKE

Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

- Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake.
- Focused now on resolving these issues.
- Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world.

Mr. Mayor — QA for This Week. Trump and Rubio on This Week as well. They will be on BEFORE you. In-studio guests are Cokie Roberts, Matthew Dowd, Donna Brazile and Ana Navarro.

Arrive at 9-9:15 am for makeup and microphone and greeted by Jessica Puckett. Seated at 9:32 am and finished by 9:40 am. Commissioner Bratton precedes your interview. He is talking about security. Your questions will be on Pope's visit and presidential politics.

Talk to you at 3:30 pm today. John, Andrea, Peter, Phil, Monica and I will be on call.

Pope:

Home Bases

--Inequality not just economic crisis, but moral crisis. Significant a spiritual leader say it.

--Our leaders shouldn't choke on the word inequality. It's real & needs to be tackled.

--Pope has criticized trickle-down economics - and he's right - it doesn't work - those at the top have to pay fair share so we can rebuild middle class.

Citation: "Some people continue to defend trickle-down theories which assume that economic growth, encouraged by a free market, will inevitably succeed in bringing about greater justice and inclusiveness in the world," Francis wrote in the papal statement. "This opinion, which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and in the sacralized workings of the prevailing economic system.”

Q+A

What does the Pope’s visit mean for NYC?

- Biggest voice on income inequality.
- Many of the initiatives we have put in place in NYC highlights the Pope’s focus to pull people out of poverty.
- Housing, education, services to help individuals exit homelessness.

What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

- He’s in unique position to talk about how these aren’t partisan issues – but critical human issues.

Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope’s speech, saying that he’s gotten too political. You’re outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don’t they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

- Would be a shame if they boycott is speech and I hope everyone plans to listen to his message.

- (Sep. of church/state) Spiritual leaders have First Amendment rights, too.
- (Should public fund security?) Protect heads of state; protect NYorkers seeing Pope.

When Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a “mistake.” Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

- Apples/oranges.
- GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political.
- The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global leader and the world's conscious.

HRC & SANDERS

Home Bases

- HRC bringing so many progressive issues to the table; tremendously capable; her vision stronger everyday, better for country. Speaking about big issues that matter.
- Sanders moving issues to the front of the line ignored for decades; heart & soul in right place; making it OK to talk about IE.
- Contrast Clinton/Sanders to the spectacle of the GOP debate. No comparison.

Sanders tweet:

It's over. Not one word about economic inequality, climate change, Citizens United or student debt. That's why the Rs are so out of touch.

PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Home Bases

- Heartened by all Dems candidates. GOP still talking about trickle down.
- Dems united on progressive priorities like paid family leave, student debt, closing carried interest (tax loopholes for rich).
- Striking contrast between Dems & GOP. Bell weather that GOP candidates want to end carried interest. IE time has come.

CBS/NY Times poll: (have a card)

- * 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- * 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- * 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- * 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- * 85 percent back paid sick leave.

Q+A

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

- Always said she has unequalled experience & great progressive track record.
- Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.
- No hard and fast timeline.

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

-Elected to represent NYorkers. Do the best I can to represent their interest. Jump to TPA.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

-No test. Like what I've heard.

-All Dems are tuned into American public. Jump to TPA.

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

-Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton?

What kinds of things do you ask her?

-Not going to get into details of private conversations, but I talk with her and her team from time to time.

I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement?

What are you holding out for?

-Few more questions about trade & min wage, but she's unveiled impressive progressive vision from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

-No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness— like closing carried interest loophole.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

-I'm out of the campaign manager business but generally don't buy the conventional media analysis.

-She's devoted to bold messages.

-As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time.

She's persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP.

-We also have a compelling field of candidates right now.

-I'm not going to read tea leaves, but confident Dems will have strong nominee who will win.

Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

-I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying.

-Forceful voice on income inequality.

SANDERS

You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

- All Dems bringing great values & skill to table.
- Still listening for the full vision of the candidates on income inequality.
- One thing is certain: Dems will be much better for country than GOP.

How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are? Have you talked to him? Can he win?

- Many Dems talking about income inequality & offering bold solutions – and that's good for America.
- Don't get into private conversations.
- All I know is Dems bringing more to table; in stark contrast to GOP; will win on solutions to income inequality.

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

- Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole.
- His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President.

RUBIO:

What do you think of Rubio's performance in debate and his standing in race?

-Made an important point that we are a country of immigrants.

-Unfortunately, GOP has been unwilling to address issue.

-We need immigration reform. Again, not a political issue. A human issue.

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election?

Endorse his opponent? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I'm focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world.

TPA

You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues. You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

-Need partners in Albany AND Washington.

-For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

-There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

LOW POLLS

How do you respond to dipping poll numbers and voters saying your feud with the Governor hurts NY?

-Here is what matters: NYC just had the safest summer in 20 years, we've built more affordable housing than at any point in the last 40 years, added 177,000 new jobs, and provided full day pre-K for more than 60,000 four-year-olds.

-If there is a way to work productively with this Governor, we will. But New Yorkers need to get their fair share from our State and I'll continue to say that.

JAMES BLAKE

Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

-Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake.

-Focused now on resolving these issues.

-Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world.

What does the Pope’s visit mean for NYC?

- Biggest voice on income inequality.
- Many of the initiatives we have put in place in NYC highlights the Pope’s focus to pull people out of poverty.
- Housing, education, services to help individuals exit homelessness.

What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

- He’s in unique position to talk about how these aren’t partisan issues – but critical human issues.

Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

--Would be a shame if they boycott is speech and I hope everyone plans to listen to his message.

—(Sep. of church/state) Spiritual leaders have First Amendment rights, too.

—(Should public fund security?)
Protect heads of state; protect NYorkers seeing Pope.

When Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a "mistake." Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

-Apples/oranges.

-GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political.

-The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global leader and the world's conscious.

HRC & SANDERS

Home Bases

-HRC bringing so many progressive issues to the table; tremendously capable; her vision stronger everyday, better for country. Speaking about big issues that matter.

-Sanders moving issues to the front of the line ignored for decades; heart & soul in right place; making it OK to talk about IE.

-Contrast Clinton/Sanders to the spectacle of the GOP debate. No comparison.

Sanders tweet:

It's over. Not one word about economic inequality, climate change, Citizens United or student debt. That's why the Rs are so out of touch.

PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Home Bases

-Heartened by all Dems candidates. GOP still talking about trickle down.

-Dems united on progressive priorities like paid family leave, student debt, closing carried interest (tax loopholes for rich).

-Striking contrast between Dems & GOP. Bell weather that GOP candidates want to end carried interest. IE time has come.

CBS/NY Times poll: (have a card)

- * 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.
- * 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.
- * 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.
- * 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- * 85 percent back paid sick leave.

Q+A

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

-Always said she has unequalled experience & great progressive track record.

-Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.

-No hard and fast timeline.

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

-Elected to represent NYorkers. Do the best I can to represent their interest. Jump to TPA.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

-No test. Like what I've heard.

-All Dems are tuned into American public. Jump to TPA.

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

-Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

-Not going to get into details of private conversations, but I talk with her and her team from time to time.

I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

-Few more questions about trade & min wage, but she's unveiled impressive progressive vision from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

-No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness– like closing carried interest loophole.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

-I'm out of the campaign manager business but generally don't buy the conventional media analysis.

-She's devoted to bold messages.

-As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time. She's persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP.

-We also have a compelling field of candidates right now.

-I'm not going to read tea leaves, but confident Dems will have strong nominee who will win.

Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

-I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying.

-Forceful voice on income inequality.

SANDERS

You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

-All Dems bringing great values & skill to table.

-Still listening for the full vision of the candidates on income inequality.

-One thing is certain: Dems will be much better for country than GOP.

How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are? Have you talked to him? Can he win?

-Many Dems talking about income inequality & offering bold solutions – and that's good for America.

-Don't get into private conversations.

-All I know is Dems bringing more to table; in stark contrast to GOP; will win on solutions to income inequality.

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

-Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole.

-His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President.

RUBIO:

What do you think of Rubio's performance in debate and his standing in race?

-Made an important point that we are a country of immigrants.

-Unfortunately, GOP has been unwilling to address issue.

-We need immigration reform. Again, not a political issue. A human issue.

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election? Endorse his opponent? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I'm focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world.

TPA

You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues.

You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

-Need partners in Albany AND Washington.

-For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

-There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

LOW POLLS

How do you respond to dipping poll numbers and voters saying your feud with the Governor hurts NY?

-Here is what matters: NYC just had the safest summer in 20 years, we've built more affordable housing than at any point in the last 40 years, added 177,000 new jobs, and provided full day pre-K for more than 60,000 four-year-olds.

-If there is a way to work productively with this Governor, we will. But New Yorkers need to get their fair share from our State and I'll continue to say that.

JAMES BLAKE

Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

-Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake.

-Focused now on resolving these issues.

-Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world.

- Housing, education, services to help individuals exit homelessness.

What do you think about this Pope and his mandate around climate change and poverty?

-He's in unique position to talk about how these aren't partisan issues – but critical human issues.

Some Republicans have threatened to boycott the Pope's speech, saying that he's gotten too political. You're outspoken on the separation of church and state. Don't they have a legitimate argument on those grounds?

--Would be a shame if they boycott his speech and I hope everyone plans to listen to his message.

—(Sep. of church/state) Spiritual leaders have First Amendment rights, too.

—(Should public fund security?) Protect heads of state; protect NYorkers seeing Pope.

When Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was invited by Congress to speak out on a controversial issue, you called that a “mistake.” Is the Pope speaking out on issues that have become so partisan also a mistake?

-Apples/oranges.

-GOP inviting BN so close to an election was blatantly political.

-The Pope isn't a candidate; he's a global leader and the world's conscious.

HRC & SANDERS

Home Bases

-HRC bringing so many progressive issues to the table; tremendously capable; her vision stronger everyday, better for country. Speaking about big issues that matter.

-Sanders moving issues to the front of the line ignored for decades; heart & soul in right place; making it OK to talk about IE.

-Contrast Clinton/Sanders to the spectacle of the GOP debate. No comparison.

Sanders tweet:

It's over. Not one word about economic inequality, climate change, Citizens United or student debt. That's why the Rs are so out of touch.

PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Home Bases

-Heartened by all Dems candidates. GOP still talking about trickle down.

-Dems united on progressive priorities like paid family leave, student debt, closing carried interest (tax loopholes for rich).

-Striking contrast between Dems & GOP. Bell weather that GOP candidates want to end carried interest. IE time has come.

CBS/NY Times poll: (have a card)

* 66 percent of all Americans believe that money and wealth should be distributed more evenly.

* 65 percent believe the income gap must be addressed now.

* 68 percent support higher taxes on millionaires.

- * 80 percent favor paid family leave.
- * 85 percent back paid sick leave.

Q+A

Some would say the Clintons helped your career in the various roles you worked for them. So I have to ask, why not endorse Hillary early on? When will you endorse?

- Always said she has unequalled experience & great progressive track record.
- Wanted to wait until hearing her vision on income inequality in THIS race.
- No hard and fast timeline.

Your poll numbers aren't strong now. Do you think your endorsement would actually be helpful to Hillary Clinton or another candidate right now?

- Elected to represent NYorkers. Do the best I can to represent their interest. Jump to TPA.

Do you have a litmus test for HRC to endorse her- what is it and what have those discussions been like?

- No test. Like what I've heard.
- All Dems are tuned into American public. Jump to TPA.

Cuomo and you took a different tact on endorsements. Why is that?

- Have to ask him. Only speak for myself.

How often do you talk to Hillary Clinton? What kinds of things do you ask her?

- Not going to get into details of private conversations, but I talk with her and her team from time to time.

I've talked to some Clinton allies, and they say: "Look – she's endorsed almost every issue on de Blasio's agenda." How is it that she STILL hasn't earned your endorsement? What are you holding out for?

-Few more questions about trade & min wage, but she's unveiled impressive progressive vision from PreK to student debt to progressive taxation.

A lot of Democrats have argued privately that despite taking these positions, they just don't trust Hillary Clinton on some issues – Wall Street, for one. Is Hillary Clinton too close to Wall Street?

-No. If she were, she would not have come out on important issues of fairness– like closing carried interest loophole.

You managed Hillary's Senate race in 2000. You've seen how she's handled issues like the email controversy and such. What kind of advice would campaign manager Bill de Blasio give Hillary right now?

-I'm out of the campaign manager business but generally don't buy the conventional media analysis.

-She's devoted to bold messages.

-As a voter, I just listen to what she's saying on income inequality & big issues of our time. She's persuasive.

BIDEN

Biden is polling better than other candidates in some polls. Why don't you think he should enter the race? Particularly since you haven't formally endorsed a candidate yet?

-He's been a great VP.

-We also have a compelling field of candidates right now.

-I'm not going to read tea leaves, but confident Dems will have strong nominee who will win.

Are you saying you don't think Biden should get in because Sanders is a good choice if Hillary doesn't get the nomination?

-I like what Bernie Sanders has been saying.

-Forceful voice on income inequality.

SANDERS

You started an organization dedicated to income inequality. Bernie Sanders couldn't be more in line with you on this. Are you contemplating endorsing him and is that why you haven't endorsed Hillary?

-All Dems bringing great values & skill to table.

-Still listening for the full vision of the candidates on income inequality.

-One thing is certain: Dems will be much better for country than GOP.

How can you not endorse Bernie Sanders when he's saying everything you are? Have you talked to him? Can he win?

-Many Dems talking about income inequality & offering bold solutions – and that's good for America.

-Don't get into private conversations.

-All I know is Dems bringing more to table; in stark contrast to GOP; will win on solutions to income inequality.

TRUMP

You said some nice things about Donald Trump and his pledge to raise taxes on the rich. Does he have what it takes to be President?

-Agree on closing such unfair practices like the carried interest loophole.

-His views on just about everything else show he is not qualified to be our President.

RUBIO:

What do you think of Rubio's performance in debate and his standing in race?

-Made an important point that we are a country of immigrants.

-Unfortunately, GOP has been unwilling to address issue.

-We need immigration reform. Again, not a political issue. A human issue.

CUOMO

Will you support Cuomo for re-election? Endorse his opponent? Would you ever run against him in a gubernatorial primary?

-I'm focused on my job as Mayor of the greatest city in the world.

TPA

You've been criticized for spending too much time on national issues. You support ending carried interest loophole and paid family leave yet no action locally.

-We're doing everything in our power here in NYC on income inequality.

-Need partners in Albany AND Washington.

-For regional competitive reasons, you need this to happen at the national level.

Are you too partisan for a position like mayor?

-There's nothing partisan about PreK, affordable housing, bringing crime to record lows.

LOW POLLS

How do you respond to dipping poll numbers and voters saying your feud with the Governor hurts NY?

-Here is what matters: NYC just had the safest summer in 20 years, we've built more affordable housing than at any point in the last 40 years, added 177,000 new jobs, and provided full day pre-K for more than 60,000 four-year-olds.

-If there is a way to work productively with this Governor, we will. But New Yorkers need to get their fair share from our State and I'll continue to say that.

JAMES BLAKE

Have you talked with James Blake yet? Do you think the officer should still be on the force? Would this have happened to a white man? Would any other black man have gotten an apology?

-Commissioner Bratton and I have both extended our apologies to Mr. Blake.

- Focused now on resolving these issues.
- Going to continue to implement reforms to build trust between police and community while keeping NYC one of the safest big cities in the world.

On the question of "making news" the consensus is:

Use opportunity to talk about pope and presidential to elevate income inequality agenda nationally. Not to make news. This interview is about continuing drumbeat, particularly given absence of income inequality from GOP debates (sanders tweet) even as most Americans clamor for it to be addressed (the cbs/nyt poll).

Still gathering thoughts on forum.

Mr. Mayor — QA/home bases revised for This Week. Trump and Rubio on This Week as well. They will be on BEFORE you. Producer says no plans to ask them about you. Commissioner Bratton also precedes your interview. He is talking about security — Peter Donald said no surprises, just basic security. Your questions will be on Pope’s visit and presidential politics.

In-studio guests are Cokie Roberts, Matthew Dowd, Donna Brazile and Ana Navarro.

Arrive at 9-9:15 am for makeup and microphone and greeted by Jessica Puckett. Seated at 9:32 am and finished by 9:40 am. Peter and I will see at the studio in the morning.

Pope:

Home Bases

--Inequality not just economic crisis, but moral crisis. Significant a spiritual leader say it.

--Our leaders shouldn't choke on the word inequality. It's real & needs to be tackled.

--Pope has criticized trickle-down economics - and he's right - it doesn't work - those at the top have to pay fair share so we can rebuild middle class.

Citation: “Some people continue to defend trickle-down theories which assume that economic growth, encouraged by a free market, will inevitably succeed in bringing about greater justice and inclusiveness in the world,” Francis wrote in the papal statement. “This opinion, which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and in the sacra–lized workings of the prevailing economic system.”

Hello all,

Attached and pasted below is an op-ed draft for the mayor on the Pope's arrival to NYC. Please review and let me know of any redflags you have COB TODAY.

Overall goal is to underline progressive agenda and use Pope as a moral validator for our goals.

This goes to the mayor tomorrow morning.

Thanks so much!

Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

This week, we prepare to welcome Pope Francis, the world's most powerful voice for the millions across the globe whose have been drowned out by the relentless pursuit of profit. In this moment, history rushes toward us, and I, along with millions of New Yorkers of many faiths, am exhilarated to meet it.

His Holiness has over and over again shared a vision of a new world order that is inclusive and rooted in fairness, including economic fairness. He has excoriated an economic system with "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families have had their knees cut out from underneath them, even as the overall economy improves.

He has even reminded us of the story of Zacchaeus – a wealthy and likely corrupt tax collector. After meeting Jesus on the road through Jericho, Zacchaeus, overcome, announces he will give half of his possessions to the poor and pay back anyone he cheated times four.

It is an incredible transformation – from greed and gain to justice and fairness. The spirit of Zacchaeus, Pope Francis has said, should be at the beginning and end of all political and economic activity. I, and millions of New Yorkers, agree.

This spirit underpins our blueprint for NYC's future, One New York – a Plan for a Strong and Just

City, which has within it ambitious goals for both climate change and poverty. New York City, in that spirit of fairness, has committed to reducing our emission levels by 40 percent by 2030 and 80 percent by 2050.

And it is the very heart of The Progressive Agenda that I created with other leaders committed to ending income inequality.

We have already begun this work, enrolling more than 65,000 children in free, full-day pre-K, providing paid sick leave for millions of New York City workers and launching IDNYC to allow nearly a million New Yorkers to participate more fully in their city.

These policies have lifted up millions of our citizens, who thanks to the clear desire of the Archdiocese and His Holiness to connect personally with people of every background, will have the opportunity to come face to face with the Pope.

His Holiness will meet New Yorkers in our shelters, speak directly to our city's immigrants and visit schoolchildren. Not to mention the thousands of everyday citizens he'll meet face to face in Central Park, one of our city's most equally accessible spaces. Perhaps His Holiness can spur more commitments for fairness.

He will certainly remind us we must do more because there is still far too little fairness.

Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. Nearly one-third of the families in shelter are employed, and a quarter have a college education but still can't afford housing. New York is not unique.

As Pope Francis has reminded us – by providing sleeping bags, inviting those without homes into the Vatican for meals and even sneaking out late at night for visits – the homeless are human beings, not burdens. And they are trapped by systemic economic factors that make it ever more difficult to escape the Tale of Two Cities dynamic this administration has worked so hard to reverse.

These New Yorkers, many of whom work hard or diligently look for work, are evidence of the Pope's frank talk about the foolishness of pretending an economic system based on avarice will prosperity for all. "This theory (of trickle down economics), which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and the sacralized workings of the prevailing economic system. Meanwhile the excluded are still waiting."

We must end that waiting.

We can increase affordable housing and raise the minimum wage. We can acknowledge the contributions of the immigrants who built New York City – and many other cities – by passing comprehensive immigration reform. And we can stop allowing millionaires to take advantage of the tax code at the expense of middle class families by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

His Holiness paints us picture of a more equitable society: one where every child's education sets them on a path to success, no matter their zip code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where those who work hard can lift themselves out of poverty. A society where access to health care doesn't depend on the size of your paycheck, and where we treat the Earth as if we depend on it for survival.

These are the historic strides worthy of historic leader like Pope Francis. This week, when His Holiness stands before the U.S. Congress, he will issue a call that could change the trajectory of this nation. My fervent hope is that we look back on this call and say this was a moment when American society, and politics, started the change.

His electrifying voice has issued a burning demand that we do all within our power to protect our people and our planet. It's time for all of us to act – and act boldly – to make that vision a reality.

His Holiness paints us picture of a more equitable society: one where every child's education sets them on a path to success, no matter their zip code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where those who work hard can lift themselves out of poverty. A society where access to health care doesn't depend on the size of your paycheck, and where we treat the Earth as if we depend on it for survival.

These are the historic strides worthy of historic leader like Pope Francis. This week, when His Holiness stands before the U.S. Congress, he will issue a call that could change the trajectory of this nation. My fervent hope is that we look back on this call and say this was a moment when American society, and politics, started the change.

His electrifying voice has issued a burning demand that we do all within our power to protect our people and our planet. It's time for all of us to act – and act boldly – to make that vision a reality.

In this moment, history rushes toward us, and I, along with millions of New Yorkers of many faiths, am exhilarated to meet it.

His Holiness has over and over again shared a vision of a new world order that is inclusive and rooted in fairness, including economic fairness. He has excoriated an economic system with “the mentality of profit at any price,” blind to how working families have had their knees cut out from underneath them, even as the overall economy improves.

He has even reminded us of the story of Zacchaeus – a wealthy and likely corrupt tax collector. After meeting Jesus on the road through Jericho, Zacchaeus, overcome, announces he will give half of his possessions to the poor and pay back anyone he cheated times four.

It is an incredible transformation – from greed and gain to justice and fairness. The spirit of Zacchaeus, Pope Francis has said, should be at the beginning and end of all political and economic activity. I, and millions of New Yorkers, agree.

This spirit underpins our blueprint for NYC’s future, One New York – a Plan for a Strong and Just City, which has within it ambitious goals for both climate change and poverty. And it is the very heart of The Progressive Agenda that I created with other leaders committed to ending income inequality.

We have already begun this work, enrolling more than 65,000 children in free, full-day pre-K, providing paid sick leave for millions of New York City workers and launching IDNYC to allow nearly a million New Yorkers to participate more fully in their city.

These policies have lifted up millions of our citizens, who thanks to the clear desire of the Archdiocese and His Holiness to connect personally with people of every background, will have the opportunity to come face to face with the Pope.

His Holiness will meet New Yorkers in our shelters, speak directly to our city’s immigrants and visit schoolchildren. Not to mention the thousands of everyday citizens he’ll meet face to face in Central Park, one of our city’s most equally accessible spaces. Perhaps His Holiness can spur more commitments for fairness.

He will certainly remind us we must do more because there is still far too little fairness.

Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. Nearly one-third of the families in shelter are employed, and a quarter have a college education but still can’t afford housing. New York is not unique.

As Pope Francis has reminded us – by providing sleeping bags, inviting those without homes into the Vatican for meals and even sneaking out late at night for visits – the homeless are human beings, not burdens. And they are trapped by systemic economic factors that make it ever more difficult to escape the Tale of Two Cities dynamic this administration has worked so hard to reverse.

These New Yorkers, many of whom work hard or diligently look for work, are evidence of the Pope's frank talk about the foolishness of pretending an economic system based on avarice will prosperity for all. "This theory (of trickle down economics), which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and the sacralized workings of the prevailing economic system. Meanwhile the excluded are still waiting."

We must end that waiting.

We can increase affordable housing and raise the minimum wage. We can acknowledge the contributions of the immigrants who built New York City – and many other cities – by passing comprehensive immigration reform. And we can stop allowing millionaires to take advantage of the tax code at the expense of middle class families by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

I'm ok with just 80x50.

Here's suggested edits to this graph:

This spirit underpins our blueprint for NYC's future, One New York – a Plan for a Strong and Just City, which understands that a strong, sustainable, and resilient city must also be an equitable one. New York City, in that spirit of fairness, has set forth ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050, lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, and much more.

Definitely need to get the TPA Signers call on the book. Need MBDB to touch them for a bunch of reasons - getting their buy-in/help on the forum; introducing them to Geri in a way that gives her real authority to activate them (thus taking a whole bunch of work off mayor's plate); making sure they understand that we're moving & building & that THEY are critical partners in this...

The call itself will require Geri & Hayley & the gang to do a lot of phone calls/prep work - but won't require much MBDB time...

Hi folks- as you (may) know Robert Reich is coming to NYC and is holding an event with the Mayor on September 29th, 12-2.

Andrea and I discussed this Thursday, but pitch RKK made was Poppy Harlow, inequality with Reich. Pushing talking about the issue, what the Mayor is doing about it and then what TPA hopes to accomplish, etc, etc.

It will be in studio then CNN wants to be out of studio and the pitch was made about him riding the train from one affluent part of town to another part that is feeling the brunt of inequality. Andrea, you had mentioned that maybe the latter was where he's focused on affordable housing to tie together the rent freeze going into effect. I believe the 2 train is what was thrown out.

Moving forward:

Press point- Andrea, you had mentioned Marti (?) as someone who could take point. Could RKK connect her with CNN to work on logistics under this message framework? Maybe you and I could talk about what is best?

Political point- we can connect Reich but Hayley will take lead on working with his people and briefing them, etc but loop in Marti or who you make press point.

Briefing- written and in person- we will take lead on both but loop in unless you think this should happen differently.

On the in-studio portion we pitched the Reich folks on walking in with red hats mimicking Trump's that read, "Make America Fair Again". They will give one to Poppy Harlow.

This is my first from soup to nuts with you guys so bear with me and let me know what you want to do. I think it might be easier for me to call you.

Thank you

Hi All,

Thanks for sharing. Law and Counsel have discussed, and we agree that the removal of the story is helpful. We also agree that the text as written is legally permissible. However, there are a couple places where it is possible to achieve a more inclusive tone, and more clearly delineate between the fact that people have benefitted from work of the city in this administration and that this work is also consistent with the message of the Pope and others. Please consider these relatively small changes and let us know if you have questions. Thanks to Ian, CCed here, for most of the language.

Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

This week, we prepare to welcome Pope Francis, the world's most leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics and a powerful voice for the millions across the globe whose have been drowned out by the relentless pursuit of profit. In this moment, history rushes toward us, and I, along with millions of New Yorkers of many faiths, am exhilarated to meet it.

His Holiness has over and over again shared a vision of a new world order that is inclusive and rooted in fairness, including economic fairness. He has excoriated an economic system with "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families have had their knees cut out from underneath them, even as the overall economy improves.

He has even reminded us of the story of Zacchaeus – a wealthy and likely corrupt tax collector. After meeting Jesus on the road through Jericho, Zacchaeus, overcome, announces he will give half of his possessions to the poor and pay back anyone he cheated times four.

It is an incredible transformation – from greed and gain to justice and fairness. The spirit of Zacchaeus, Pope Francis has said, should be at the beginning and end of all political and economic activity. I, and millions of New Yorkers, agree.

Comment [KR1]: We agree best to remove

This spirit underpins oOur blueprint for NYC's future, One New York, rests on similar ideals. It is—a Plan for a Strong and Just City, which has within it ambitious goals for both climate change and poverty. New York City, in that spirit of fairness, has committed to reducing our emission levels by 40 percent by 2030 and 80 percent by 2050.

And it isThese ideals are also at the very heart of The Progressive Agenda that I created with other leaders committed to ending income inequality.

We have already begun this work, enrolling more than 65,000 children in free, full-day pre-K, providing paid sick leave for millions of New York City workers and launching IDNYC to allow nearly a million New Yorkers to participate more fully in their city.

These policies have lifted up millions of our citizens.

, who tThanks to the clear desire of the Archdiocese and His Holiness to connect personally with people of every background, and the planning efforts of the City and the Archdiocese, hundreds of thousands of people will have the opportunity to come face to face with the Pope.

His Holiness will meet New Yorkers in our shelters, speak directly to our city's immigrants and visit schoolchildren. Not to mention the thousands of everyday citizens he'll meet face to face in Central Park, one of our city's most equally accessible spaces. Perhaps His Holiness can spur more commitments for fairness.

He will certainly remind us we must do more because there is still far too little fairness.

Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. Nearly one-third of the families in shelter are employed, and a quarter have a college education but still can't afford housing. New York is not unique.

As Pope Francis has reminded us – by providing sleeping bags, inviting those without homes into the Vatican for meals and even sneaking out late at night for visits – the homeless are human beings, not burdens. And they are trapped by systemic economic factors that make it ever more difficult to escape the Tale of Two Cities dynamic this administration ~~has worked~~ is working so hard to reverse.

These New Yorkers, many of whom work hard or diligently look for work, are evidence of the Pope's frank talk about the foolishness of pretending an economic system based on avarice will lead to prosperity for all As the Pope has said, "This theory (of trickle down economics), which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and the sacralized workings of the prevailing economic system. Meanwhile the excluded are still waiting."

Comment [KR2]: Or bring, etc.

Comment [KR3]: Assuming this is the Pope's quote, which we think it is from the text.

We must end that waiting.

We can increase affordable housing and raise the minimum wage. We can acknowledge the contributions of the immigrants who built New York City – and many other cities – by passing comprehensive immigration reform. And we can stop allowing millionaires to take advantage of the tax code at the expense of middle class families by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

His Holiness paints us a picture of a more equitable society: one where every child's education sets them on a path to success, no matter their zip code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where those who work hard can lift themselves out of poverty. A society where access to health care doesn't depend on the size of your paycheck, and where we treat the Earth as if we depend on it for survival.

These are the historic strides worthy of an historic leader like Pope Francis. But he is not alone. We have heard these calls growing from leaders of other religions, and from non-religious leaders alike. This week, when His Holiness stands before the U.S. Congress, he will issue a call that could change the trajectory of this nation Taken together, they mark a moment of profound unity among all of our peoples to confront with courage and boldness the challenges that face us. My fervent hope is that we look back on this call-time and say this was a moment when American society, and politics, started the change.

~~His~~ The Pope's electrifying ~~has lent his~~ voice to growing ~~has issued a burning~~ demands that we do all within our power to protect our people and our planet. It's time for all of us to act – and act boldly – to make that vision a reality.

Hi All,

Thanks for sharing. Law and Counsel have discussed, and we agree that the removal of the story is helpful. We also agree that the text as written is legally permissible. However, there are a couple places where it is possible to achieve a more inclusive tone, and more clearly delineate between the fact that people have benefitted from work of the city in this administration and that this work is also consistent with the message of the Pope and others. Please consider these relatively small changes and let us know if you have questions. Thanks to Ian, CCed here, for most of the language.

Couple of quick flags:

Sentence fragment:

Not to mention the thousands of everyday citizens he'll meet face to face in Central Park, one of our city's most equally accessible spaces.

Story of Zacchaeus - not sure if that reference will be interpreted as intended by all NYC communities.

FYI - climate change really isn't a part of The Progressive Agenda as written (although Pre-K, progressive taxation, college costs are.) Check out the 14 points here:
<https://progressiveagenda.us/agenda>

I love having a plug for TPA - just would place it elsewhere.

Also FYI - I might focus on 80x50 & omit the 2030 goal, as Steyer & his folks are pushing for 50x30 - might make us sound less aggressive in combatting climate change?

Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

This week, we prepare to welcome Pope Francis, the leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics and a powerful voice for the millions across the globe who for decades felt left out or left behind. In this moment, history rushes toward us, and I, along with millions of New Yorkers of many faiths, am exhilarated to meet it.

His Holiness has shared a powerful vision of a new world order that is inclusive and rooted in fairness, including economic fairness. He has excoriated an economic system with "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families struggle every day, even as those at that top get even wealthier. And he has called upon us all to protect the world we've inherited by forcefully addressing climate change.

Our blueprint for NYC's future, One New York – a Plan for a Strong and Just City, rests on similar ideals. We understand that a strong, sustainable, and resilient city must also be an equitable one. The plan sets ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050, lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, and much more.

These ideals are also at the heart of The Progressive Agenda, the 14-point plan that I introduced in May with progressive leaders from across the country committed to combatting income inequality.

And as we call for change at the federal level, this administration is delivering on its promise of taking dead weight off the inequality crisis that His Holiness illumines. That has meant, enrolling more than 65,000 children in free, full-day pre-K. It's the most ambitious affordable housing plan in New York City's history – 200,000 units created or preserved. It's meant providing paid sick leave for millions of New York City workers and launching IDNYC to allow nearly a million New Yorkers to participate more fully in their city.

These policies have lifted up millions.

Thanks to the clear desire of His Holiness to connect personally with people of every background, and the planning efforts of the City and Archdiocese, hundreds of thousands will have the opportunity to come face to face with the Pope.

His Holiness will meet New Yorkers in our shelters, speak directly to our city's immigrants and visit schoolchildren. Not to mention the thousands of everyday citizens he'll meet face to face in Central Park.

Pope Francis's visit will surely inspire millions. But it will also be a reminder that, while we have made significant progress towards combatting inequality, we have much more work to do.

Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. Nearly one-third of the families in shelter are employed, and a quarter have a college education but still can't afford housing. New York is not unique.

As Pope Francis has reminded us – by providing sleeping bags, inviting those without homes into the Vatican for meals and even sneaking out late at night for visits – those without a home are human beings, not burdens. And they are trapped by economic factors that make it ever more difficult to escape the Tale of Two Cities dynamic this administration is working so hard to reverse.

These New Yorkers, many who work hard or diligently look for work, are evidence of the Pope's frank talk about the urgent need for a fairer economy. As His Holiness puts it: "This theory (of trickle down economics), which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and the sacralized workings of the prevailing economic system. Meanwhile the excluded are still waiting."

We must end that waiting.

That's why we're working to build more affordable housing, and fighting to raise the minimum wage. . It's why we're calling on Congress to pass comprehensive immigration reform. And it's why we're demanding millionaires and billionaires to pay their fair share in taxes by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

His Holiness paints us picture of a more equitable society: one where every child's education sets them on a path to success, no matter their zip code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where those who work hard can lift themselves out of poverty. A society where access to health care doesn't depend on the size of your paycheck, and where we treat the Earth as if we depend on it for survival.

These are the historic strides worthy of a historic leader like Pope Francis. But he is not alone. MTA suggests it might apply cuts in city only

POLITICO NY – Dana Rubinstein

<http://www.capitalnewyork.com/article/albany/2015/09/8577423/mta-suggests-it-might-apply-cuts-city-only>

On Monday afternoon, the chairman of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority — an appointee of Gov. Andrew Cuomo — suggested that if Mayor Bill de Blasio failed to meet his demands for more financial support, he might apply cuts to just the city, rather than to services across the entire metropolitan region.

"I've directed the staff in finance and capital programs to incorporate all of the revisions that were part of the discussions with stakeholders, as well as to align with the current commitment of the city, at $657 million," said Tom Prendergast during the MTA's monthly finance meeting.

"I just want to clarify Mr. Chairman, a little more detail about what you are asking the staff to do here," interjected Polly Trottenberg, de Blasio's transportation commissioner and an MTA board member.

The overall size of the capital plan "would have to come down in cost and scope to align with the difference between the $3.2 billion and the $657 million," said Prendergast, referring to the difference between what the state wants and what the city has offered.

Trottenberg asked for just a little bit more clarity.

"We're looking at the urban portion of it, New York City Transit," said Prendergast, referring to the MTA subdivision that operates New York City subways and buses.

“But only within one jurisdiction?” asked Trottenberg.

“Yes, the urban portion,” said Prendergast.

That’s “punitive and pretty divisive,” said Trottenberg.

She called for Prendergast to adopt a regional approach instead, since the MTA is a regional organization.

Prendergast, apparently backing away, said he’d direct his staff to do that, too.

As if to make sure, several board members sprang to Trottenberg’s defense, including Mitchell Pally, who is from Long Island.

“I want to support Commissioner Trottenberg’s request,” he said. “While many of us represent outlying counties proudly, we also represent all of the riders of the system, regardless of where they came from or where they end up.”

Every five years, the MTA formulates a plan to keep the region’s mass transit system, including its subways and buses, in a state of good repair and expand it where needed.

Though the MTA board approved its plan last September, the state has yet to approve it.

In the meantime, the rhetoric surrounding the program has grown unusually bitter, and even spilled into normally feel-good events, like the ribbon-cutting for the city's first new subway station in 26 years.

Recent historical precedent had the city has contributing about $100 million a year for five years, but the MTA last year asked the city to up its modest contribution to an also-modest $125 million.

After a good deal of suspense, de Blasio surprised transit advocates by agreeing to the MTA’s demands.

The MTA, which the governor controls, responded by immediately upping the ante, from $657 million over the five years ($125 million a year plus some additional funding) to $3.2 billion.

The mayor has, so far, declined to meet the state's new request.

The capital program would put money towards things like replacing the Metrocard with a modern fare payment system, launching the second phase of the Second Avenue Subway up to 125th Street, and replacing the system's ancient signaling systems to allow trains to run more reliably and closer together.

But the increasingly nasty funding dispute between de Blasio and Cuomo has thrown the plan’s future into question.

“My sense of frustration and concern about not having a program — because it is a year, this is the longest we’ve ever gone without a capital program — weighs on me very heavily,” Prendergast said on Monday. “There are critical projects out there that need to go forward.”

The governor's office had no comment.

1. Yes -- We are strategizing per your directive yesterday --- want to bring you a solid plan and not more seat of the pants ad hoc tactical plans.
2. We mobilized a lot of voices today to lay out for us. Council transpo committee did letter which will get press soon, other voices from state electeds to advocates out throughout day.
3. Still have elephant in room problem of too many strong potential allies needing to know what we believe is the best play for city and what we are willing to do / not do. Too many potential coalition/allies need this. (Back to #1).
4. Fyi: Getting all these potential validators in to city hall to listen and invest them this week to get to a bigger place. But that's part of the work in #1 as well.
5. Additional research operations in full effect.

MTA suggests it might apply cuts in city only
POLITICO NY – Dana Rubinstein

On Monday afternoon, the chairman of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority — an appointee of Gov. Andrew Cuomo — suggested that if Mayor Bill de Blasio failed to meet his demands for more financial support, he might apply cuts to just the city, rather than to services across the entire metropolitan region.

"I've directed the staff in finance and capital programs to incorporate all of the revisions that were part of the discussions with stakeholders, as well as to align with the current commitment of the city, at $657 million," said Tom Prendergast during the

September 18, 2015

Mayor Bill de Blasio
City Hall
New York, NY 10007

Dear Mayor de Blasio,

The State Innovation Exchange (SiX) invites you to be a Keynote Speaker at the upcoming 2015 National Legislator Conference on October 1-3 in Washington, DC. We would be honored if you delivered a keynote address on Friday, October 2, at our morning plenary session or evening cocktail reception. We are happy to slate your address around your availability.

Your live streamed keynote message at last year's conference truly inspired and moved our audience and they would be very excited to hear you speak in person this year. We hope you will be able to join us.

The State Innovation Exchange (SiX) is a resource and strategy center that supports state legislators to advance progressive policies across the country. We have a long-term vision of building progressive power and infrastructure at the state level. SiX came from the merger of four organizations which combined forces to ensure that state legislators are empowered with research, training, policy expertise, communications support, political strategy and a space to network and share ideas. Together, we work to advance and defend policies that support working families, protect the environment, promote civil rights and strengthen our democracy.

As you know, our main event each year is the National Legislator Conference. We anticipate this year's conference to bring together over 250 progressive state legislators from around the country, a range of national advocates, unions, members of Congress, and administration officials to discuss the role that states can play in advancing progressive policies. We believe you would be the perfect match to address this audience.

As Mayor of the largest city in the nation, you can speak to how cities and states are at the forefront of innovative policymaking and the importance of building out progressive infrastructure in the cities and states. As a keynote speaker at our conference, you will have the opportunity to influence and inspire lawmakers across every state, and validate their difficult, sometimes overlooked, but undoubtedly, important work.

We hope that you may find some time in your busy schedule to be a part of this exciting event. Please let me know if you have any questions and we look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Nick Rathod', is positioned above the printed name.

yes I think this is whole discussion that I think was contingent upon when the meetings he needed to attend for USCM were. We really need to get him to DC. I was hoping to build this into it so I didn't have to ask for a separate trip that I likely won't get.

The problem is I need help with him asking principles to help. I can't do that on my own at that level.

Definitely need to get the TPA Signers call on the book. Need MBDB to touch them for a bunch of reasons - getting their buy-in/help on the forum; introducing them to Geri in a way that gives her real authority to activate them (thus taking a whole bunch of work off mayor's plate); making sure they understand that we're moving & building & that THEY are critical partners in this...

The call itself will require Geri & Hayley & the gang to do a lot of phone calls/prep work - but won't require much MBDB time...

Please let me know if we may move forward with Tom and Prisca to schedule. Thank you

ASKS OF TPA SIGNERS- PURPOSE OF CALL

- o Organize around the forum- push all constituencies to watch, tweet, talk about in the press we line up for it, etc
- o Be a speaker/surrogate for us to get into every story on income inequality
- o Engage their constituencies and base and coordinate around specific key dates
- o Organize online through twitter, online forums TPA organizes post forum to keep up momentum

FULL DETAILS

As we move into the forum and kicking off the goals, organization of TPA, it's crucial for YOU to re-engage people who signed up in May. While we have communicated with them on issues lately, we need to have a large re-introduction call where we go over the following:

- Formal kickoff for our work- The Forum
 - o Specifics and logistics
 - o Our asks of them around the forum
- Our plans for this cycle

- o Inserting them (supporters), ourselves into the public debate through earned media (traditional and digital)
 - o Putting pressure on candidates to commit to pushing solutions on income inequality
 - o Being THE organization to coordinate and highlight work being done by mayors and organizations everywhere
- Introducing them to staff, points of contact
 - Having staff explain what resources we will provide
 - o Digital
 - o Earned media
 - o Regular coordinating calls

It's right near the time of USCM in Baltimore. They will schedule around MBDB. But need action fast.

If approved - we can get a number of other helpful DC meetings in the mix.

Hi folks- as you (may) know Robert Reich is coming to NYC and is holding an event with the Mayor on September 29th, 12-2.

Andrea and I discussed this Thursday, but pitch RKK made was Poppy Harlow, inequality with Reich. Pushing talking about the issue, what the Mayor is doing about it and then what TPA hopes to accomplish, etc, etc.

It will be in studio then CNN wants to be out of studio and the pitch was made about him riding the train from one affluent part of town to another part that is feeling the brunt of inequality. Andrea, you had mentioned that maybe the latter was where he's focused on affordable housing to tie together the rent freeze going into effect. I believe the 2 train is what was thrown out.

Moving forward:

Press point- Andrea, you had mentioned Marti (?) as someone who could take point. Could RKK connect her with CNN to work on logistics under this message framework? Maybe you and I could talk about what is best?

Political point- we can connect Reich but Hayley will take lead on working with his people and briefing them, etc but loop in Marti or who you make press point.

Briefing- written and in person- we will take lead on both but loop in unless you think this should happen differently.

On the in-studio portion we pitched the Reich folks on walking in with red hats mimicking Trump's that read, "Make America Fair Again". They will give one to Poppy Harlow.

This is my first from soup to nuts with you guys so bear with me and let me know what you want to do. I think it might be easier for me to call you.

Political point- we can connect Reich but Hayley will take lead on working with his people and briefing them, etc but loop in Marti or who you make press point.

Briefing- written and in person- we will take lead on both but loop in unless you think this should happen differently.

On the in-studio portion we pitched the Reich folks on walking in with red hats mimicking Trump's that read, "Make America Fair Again". They will give one to Poppy Harlow.

This is my first from soup to nuts with you guys so bear with me and let me know what you want to do. I think it might be easier for me to call you.

Thank you

We would like it to start at 12 in studio so

- Drive to studio time not included
- Noon start time (or if it's 12:30, tell us)
- Two hour time which would include in studio and on the subway and time after

FLAG- a documentary crew will be following Reich that day we just learned. Prisca let me know if you want me to call you.

Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

This week, we prepare to welcome Pope Francis, the leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics and a powerful voice for the millions across the globe who for decades felt left out or left behind. In this moment, history rushes toward us, and I, along with millions of New Yorkers of many faiths, am exhilarated to meet it.

His Holiness has shared a powerful vision of a new world order that is inclusive and rooted in fairness, including economic fairness. He has excoriated an economic system with "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families struggle every day, even as those at that top get even wealthier.

Those ideals are at the heart of The Progressive Agenda, the 14-point plan to combat income inequality that I proudly joined with national progressive leaders to unveil in May.

The Pope has also called upon us all to protect the world we've inherited by forcefully addressing climate change.

Our blueprint for NYC's future, One New York: The Plan for a Strong and Just City, rests on similar ideals. We understand that a strong, sustainable, and resilient city must also be an equitable one. The plan sets ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050, lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, and much more.

And as we call for change at the federal level, this administration is delivering on its promise of taking dead aim at the inequality crisis that His Holiness has highlighted. That has meant enrolling more than 65,000 children in free, full-day pre-K. It's meant the most ambitious affordable housing plan in New York City's history – 200,000 units created or preserved. It's meant providing paid sick leave to half a million more New York City workers, and launching IDNYC to allow more than 500,000 New Yorkers to participate more fully.

These policies are lifting up millions.

Thanks to the clear desire of His Holiness to connect personally with people of every background, and the planning efforts of the City and Archdiocese, hundreds of thousands will have the opportunity to come face to face with the Pope.

His Holiness will meet New Yorkers in our shelters, speak directly to our city's immigrants, and visit our schoolchildren. Not to mention the thousands of everyday citizens he'll meet face to face in Central Park.

Pope Francis's visit will surely inspire millions. But it will also be a reminder that, while we have made significant progress towards combatting inequality, we have much more work to do.

Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. Nearly one-third of families with children in shelter are employed. And New York is not alone in facing this crisis.

As Pope Francis has reminded us – by providing sleeping bags, inviting those without homes into the Vatican for meals, and even sneaking out late at night for visits – those without a home are human beings, not burdens. And they are trapped by economic factors that make it ever more difficult to end the Tale of Two Cities that this administration is working so hard to reverse.

These New Yorkers, many who work hard or diligently look for work, are evidence of the Pope’s frank talk about the urgent need for a fairer economy. As His Holiness puts it: “This theory (of trickle down economics), which has never been confirmed by the facts, expresses a crude and naive trust in the goodness of those wielding economic power and the sacralized workings of the prevailing economic system. Meanwhile the excluded are still waiting.”

We must end that waiting.

That’s why we’re working to build more affordable housing, and fighting to raise the minimum wage. It’s why we’re calling on Congress to pass comprehensive immigration reform. And it’s why we’re demanding millionaires and billionaires to pay their fair share in taxes by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

His Holiness paints us picture of a more equitable society: one where every child’s education sets them on a path to success, no matter their zip code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where our most vulnerable are given a chance to escape poverty. A society where access to health care doesn’t depend on the size of your paycheck, and where we treat the Earth as if we depend on it for survival.

These are the historic strides worthy of a historic leader like Pope Francis. But he is not alone. We have heard these calls growing from leaders of other religions, and from non-religious leaders alike. Taken together, they mark a moment of profound unity among all of our people to confront with courage and boldness the challenges that face us. My fervent hope is that we look back on this time and say this was a moment when American society, and politics, started the change.

The Pope’s has lent his voice to growing demands that we do all within our power to protect our people and our planet. It’s time for all of us to act – and act boldly – to make that vision a reality.

Looks like the line has been attributed to Barney Frank - unconfirmed whether he actually said it or not...

In this worldview, the government is just the natural expression of our national community, and the place where we all join hands to pursue the common good. Or to borrow a line attributed to Representative Barney Frank, “Government is simply the name we give to the things we choose to do together.”

http://www.nytimes.com/2012/01/29/opinion/sunday/douthat-government-and-its-rivals.html?_r=0

But the broader point is the the Pope offers guidance on what is moral and immoral... Economic justice isn't just about strengthening the economy (which is a good argument for it)... It's about doing what is right...

Here's a quote from the Pope:

“Working for a just distribution of the fruits of the earth and human labor is not mere philanthropy. It is a moral obligation. For Christians, the responsibility is even greater: it is a commandment.”

Hi folks- as you (may) know Robert Reich is coming to NYC and is holding an event with the Mayor on September 29th, 12-2.

Andrea and I discussed this Thursday, but pitch RKK made was Poppy Harlow, inequality with Reich. Pushing talking about the issue, what the Mayor is doing about it and then what TPA hopes to accomplish, etc, etc.

It will be in studio then CNN wants to be out of studio and the pitch was made about him riding the train from one affluent part of town to another part that is feeling the brunt of inequality. Andrea, you had mentioned that maybe the latter was where he's focused on affordable housing to tie together the rent freeze going into effect. I believe the 2 train is what was thrown out.

Moving forward:

Press point- Andrea, you had mentioned Marti (?) as someone who could take point. Could RKK connect her with CNN to work on logistics under this message framework? Maybe you and I could talk about what is best?

Political point- we can connect Reich but Hayley will take lead on working with his people and briefing them, etc but loop in Marti or who you make press point.

Briefing- written and in person- we will take lead on both but loop in unless you think this should happen differently.

On the in-studio portion we pitched the Reich folks on walking in with red hats mimicking Trump's that read, "Make America Fair Again". They will give one to Poppy Harlow.

This is my first from soup to nuts with you guys so bear with me and let me know what you want to do. I think it might be easier for me to call you.

Thank you

Sorry guys but I did a full rework. Cut down by ~150 words. Substance is the same though.

Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

I'm just one of the millions of New Yorkers eagerly anticipating the arrival of Pope Francis tomorrow, which is sure to be one of the most extraordinary, and extraordinarily joyous, moments in the history of our city.

His Holiness is more than just the leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics—he's the Earth's most formidable voice for the millions of all faiths who for decades have been left out or left behind.

Pope Francis has excoriated an economic system that operates on "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families struggle every day—even as the wealthiest among us grow wealthier still. And he has envisioned a radical shift in the way the whole world does business to forcefully address the existential threat of climate change.

He has a powerful vision of a different kind of world—an inclusive world, rooted in fairness and respectful of our common humanity. And he's not simply commenting on the state of affairs—he is calling on all of us, from heads of state to the average citizen, to take action.

He's urging us to make the changes we need to protect our earth, and to treat all people with compassion and dignity. To put into action his belief that "Money must serve – not rule."

This is how Pope Francis has become the world's most powerful critic of the inequality that undermines societies across the globe.

And we are working to heed his call.

In the United States, a coalition of progressive leaders introduced The Progressive Agenda in May, a 14-point plan that calls for change at the federal level to even the playing field for all Americans. We can do this by raising the minimum wage, passing comprehensive immigration reform, and demanding millionaires and billionaires pay their fair share in taxes by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

In New York City, we are bringing as much of The Progressive Agenda to life as we can, and our families are feeling the floor lift beneath them. More than 65,000 four year-olds are now enrolled in free, full-day pre-K, and half a million more New York City workers can now take a day off to care for themselves or a sick family member without fearing they'll lose their job.

And our efforts to fight inequality go deeper and farther—to building 200,000 affordable apartments, enough to house for half a million New Yorkers; launching IDNYC to bring more than half a million people out of the shadows; and much more.

Our long-term blueprint for NYC's future, One New York: The Plan for a Strong and Just City, also reflects the belief that a strong, sustainable, and resilient city must also be an equitable one. The plan sets ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050^[KB1], and lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, among others.

There is no time to spare or to accept incremental changes. Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. XXX families with children are living on the street or in shelter, and fully a third of those adults are employed.

They are fighting with all their might against the economic factors that have created the Tale of Two Cities that my administration is working so hard to reverse.

And, as Pope Francis has reminded us – by providing sleeping bags to those spending the night on the street; meals at the Vatican for those who go hungry; and personal, unannounced visits to those who are desperate – these and all people without a home are human beings, not faceless burdens.

We work to honor the Pope's universal recognition of the humanity in all of us, and bring to life in New York City the kind of equitable society His Holiness envisions.

It's a society where every child's education sets them on a path to success, no matter their zip code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where our most vulnerable are given a chance to escape poverty. A society where access to health care doesn't depend on the size of your paycheck, and where we treat the Earth as if we depend on it for survival.

We can't wait for Pope Francis to share that vision firsthand with millions of New Yorkers of every background, faith, religion and income.

And we hope the occasion sparks a moment of profound unity among us all, a moment of boldly and courageously confronting the challenges that face us.

We know history is on its way to New York City. Let's use it to push forward real change in American society, and politics—for all of the great people of this city and this nation, not just the lucky few.

Not unlawful but I think this version has a bunch of places in tension with First Amend principals. Think we should avoid Govt leader saying Pope is “Earth’s most formidable voice for the millions of all faiths” or suggesting people of other faiths listen to him or unite because of him. We also tried to remove in prior version notion that government is following Pope’s lead or “heading his call” in order to avoid notion that religious leader dictates govt action (think JFK quote on Pope). Sorry guys but I did a full rework. Cut down by ~150 words. Substance is the same though.

Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it’s coming.

I’m just one of the millions of New Yorkers eagerly anticipating the arrival of Pope Francis tomorrow, which is sure to be one of the most extraordinary, and extraordinarily joyous, moments in the history of our city.

His Holiness is more than just the leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics—he's a formidable voice for the millions of people who for decades have been left out or left behind.

Pope Francis has excoriated an economic system that operates on “the mentality of profit at any price,” blind to how working families struggle every day—even as the wealthiest among us grow wealthier still. And he has envisioned a radical shift in the way the whole world does business to forcefully address the existential threat of climate change.

He has a powerful vision of a different kind of world—an inclusive world, rooted in fairness and respectful of our common humanity. And he's not simply commenting on the state of affairs—he is calling on all of us, from heads of state to the average citizen, to take action.

He's urging us to make the changes we need to protect our earth, and to treat all people with compassion and dignity. To put into action his belief that “Money must serve – not rule.”

This is how Pope Francis has become the world's most powerful critic of the inequality that undermines societies across the globe.

[These are causes we also are tackling. \[or: And this is in keeping with the work we are doing. – just avoid saying we're following his lead or his call\]](#)

In the United States, a coalition of progressive leaders introduced The Progressive Agenda in May, a 14-point plan that calls for change at the federal level to even the playing field for all Americans. We can do this by raising the minimum wage, passing comprehensive immigration reform, and demanding millionaires and billionaires pay their fair share in taxes by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

In New York City, we are bringing as much of The Progressive Agenda to life as we can, and our families are feeling the floor lift beneath them. Our long-term blueprint for NYC's future, One New York: The Plan for a Strong and Just City, also reflects the belief that a strong, sustainable, and resilient city must also be an equitable one. The plan sets ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050^[KB1], and lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, among others.

There is no time to spare or to accept incremental changes. Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. XXX families with children are living on the street or in shelter, and fully a third of those adults are employed.

They are fighting with all their might against the economic factors that have created the Tale of Two Cities that my administration is working so hard to reverse.

And, as Pope Francis has reminded us – by providing sleeping bags to those spending the night on the street; meals at the Vatican for those who go hungry; and personal, unannounced visits to those who are desperate – these and all people without a home are human beings, not faceless burdens.

We work to honor the Pope's universal recognition of the humanity in all of us, and bring to life in New York City the kind of equitable society worthy of our highest ideals.

It's a society where every child's education sets them on a path to success, no matter their zip code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where our most vulnerable are given a chance to escape poverty. A society where access to health care doesn't depend on the size of your paycheck, and where we treat the Earth as if we depend on it for survival.

We can't wait for Pope Francis to share that vision firsthand with millions of New Yorkers.

We are at a moment of profound unity among us all, a moment of boldly and courageously confronting the challenges that face us.

Sorry guys but I did a full rework. Cut down by ~150 words. Substance is the same though.

Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

I'm just one of the millions of New Yorkers eagerly anticipating the arrival of Pope Francis tomorrow, which is sure to be one of the most extraordinary, and extraordinarily joyous, moments in the history of our city.

His Holiness is more than just the leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics—he's the Earth's most formidable voice for the millions of all faiths who for decades have been left out or left behind.

Pope Francis has excoriated an economic system that operates on "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families struggle every day—even as the wealthiest among us grow wealthier still. And he has envisioned a radical shift in the way the whole world does business to forcefully address the existential threat of climate change.

He has a powerful vision of a different kind of world—an inclusive world, rooted in fairness and respectful of our common humanity. And he's not simply commenting on the state of affairs—he is calling on all of us, from heads of state to the average citizen, to take action.

He's urging us to make the changes we need to protect our earth, and to treat all people with compassion and dignity. To put into action his belief that “Money must serve – not rule.”

This is how Pope Francis has become the world's most powerful critic of the inequality that undermines societies across the globe.

And we are working to heed his call.

In the United States, a coalition of progressive leaders introduced The Progressive Agenda in May, a 14-point plan that calls for change at the federal level to even the playing field for all Americans. We can do this by raising the minimum wage, passing comprehensive immigration reform, and demanding millionaires and billionaires pay their fair share in taxes by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

In New York City, we are bringing as much of The Progressive Agenda to life as we can, and our families are feeling the floor lift beneath them. More than 65,000 four year-olds are now enrolled in free, full-day pre-K, and half a million more New York City workers can now take a day off to care for themselves or a sick family member without fearing they'll lose their job.

And our efforts to fight inequality go deeper and farther—to building 200,000 affordable apartments, enough to house for half a million New Yorkers; launching IDNYC to bring more than half a million people out of the shadows; and much more.

Our long-term blueprint for NYC's future, One New York: The Plan for a Strong and Just City, also reflects the belief that a strong, sustainable, and resilient city must also be an equitable one. The plan sets ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050, and lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, among others.

There is no time to spare or to accept incremental changes. Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. XXX families with children are living on the street or in shelter, and fully a third of those adults are employed.

They are fighting with all their might against the economic factors that have created the Tale of Two Cities that my administration is working so hard to reverse.

And, as Pope Francis has reminded us – by providing sleeping bags to those spending the night on the street; meals at the Vatican for those who go hungry; and personal, unannounced visits to those who are desperate – these and all people without a home are human beings, not faceless burdens.

We work to honor the Pope’s universal recognition of the humanity in all of us, and bring to life in New York City the kind of equitable society His Holiness envisions.

It’s a society where every child’s education sets them on a path to success, no matter their zip code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where our most vulnerable are given a chance to escape poverty. A society where access to health care doesn’t depend on the size of your paycheck, and where we treat the Earth as if we depend on it for survival.

We can’t wait for Pope Francis to share that vision firsthand with millions of New Yorkers of every background, faith, religion and income.

And we hope the occasion sparks a moment of profound unity among us all, a moment of boldly and courageously confronting the challenges that face us.

We know history is on its way to New York City. Let’s use it to push forward real change in American society, and politics—for all of the great people of this city and this nation, not just the lucky few.

Hi Rebecca,

We're really looking forward to the interview with Mayor de Blasio and Robert Reich next Tuesday, Sept. 29th at 12 noon.

I am looping in Chris Welch and Haley Draznin who will be producing the interview.

I am out of town this Thursday through Monday morning – anchoring my show live in Philadelphia this weekend during the Pope's visit.

Chris and Haley will coordinate all of the logistics with you.

They will send you their cellphone numbers so you have them for when you guys arrive on Tuesday.

The plan is to begin the interview seated in an interview room here at CNN right at 12pm.

If they would like makeup, they can arrive a few minutes before that.

Then we will get on the 2 train and head uptown, filming along the way.

Let us know if there is a specific stop the Mayor would like to get off at to walk around the neighborhood.

Question – do we need to get any permission from the MTA to film on the subway or is your office taking care of that?

My cell is [REDACTED] so you have it.

Wiley is going to work with DOE and HPD to identify a neighborhood they can visit where the Mayor can point to a new pre-k center and an affordable housing project (ideally within a few blocks from each other). Something to show action the admin is taking or will take to address income inequality.

He and I agree that they should do a walk and talk on the ground and the Mayor can hopefully point out the actual pre-k center and affordable housing site.

That second city isn't a world away from the first. Indeed, as an article in the New Yorker recently reported, you only need to take a ride on the subway to see how closely situated those two cities are.

Hop on the 2 train at Chambers Street, home to many Wall Street bankers, and head North, one stop, to 14th Street. The average income at your destination is less than half of what it was from where you boarded. Go five more stops to 110th Street, and average income is less than 20% of what it was at Chambers Street. Four more stops to 149th Street in the Bronx, and that figure slips to 8%.

On a weekday afternoon, that whole trip takes about 27 minutes. Not on an airplane, or in a time machine. On the 2-train.

Yes we had been discussing with Tom and Prisca. I had told Raj we would get back to him.

There is a request in from a partner, Mike Lux during the same time. If we go that should be the priority but we're discussing the USCM schedule to see what works.

I will let Raj know again we will let him know.

I think we wanted to move around Emma and her team so it depends on what that plan is. Is there a proposed schedule? The events we're talking about are on the 2nd which is a Friday. One key note is at 10am downtown DC. I could try to get a few meetings afterwards and see if he could stop by SiX then head to Baltimore but I'm not sure if that is possible or conflicts with what Emma is planning.

It would also be good to see a USCM agenda to see who is speaking, going to be there because outside of mayors we might have some ability to talk to key operatives or heads of organizations if they plan on being there. Could you send the agenda for the conference and then Emma, Stephanie can tell me what his obligation is and how we can work around it?

To be clear- I'm only focused on SiX which is a separate meeting from USCM and focused on state innovation/legislation which is on the 2nd. The RSVP is contingent upon us getting the Mayor to DC on October 2nd which I still have not heard about. Will share you on this one. SiX is the State Innovation Exchange. You might already know that but just in case.

I think I got pulled in from the IGA side because I just took over the USCM leadership meeting rec for October 3rd and at that event, mayors are setting their USCM 2016 presidential agenda – overlap in timing and some substance.

- What other electeds are invited and who is attending?
- Other big names engaged or attending?

- Who else is speaking?
- Press planned for around the event?
- Should we participate? What is there to gain?

Hi all: Ariel is in a meeting so I'm passing this along. Marti, you're talking to CNN correct? They looped back with RKK so I want to make sure they get that they're working with you now on this. We can loop you in directly and drop RKK from string.

Can you confirm please? Thank you

Hi Rebecca and Erinn,

I am out of the office Thursday and Friday – then anchoring in Philly this weekend.

When you know what time both the Mayor and Robert Reich are available on Tuesday, just let us know.

Also – are we cleared to film on the subway or do we need to clear that with the MTA first?

Thanks again – really looking forward to it.

It should – just need to confirm with our camera crews since we are strapped that week with the UNGA, etc.

By the way, is there any formal announcement being made or partnership being unveiled between the two men around income inequality? I just want to make sure I am aware of it ahead of time, if so.

Hi Rebecca,

We're really looking forward to the interview with Mayor de Blasio and Robert Reich next Tuesday, Sept. 29th at 12 noon.

I am looping in Chris Welch and Haley Draznin who will be producing the interview.

I am out of town this Thursday through Monday morning – anchoring my show live in Philadelphia this weekend during the Pope’s visit.

Chris and Haley will coordinate all of the logistics with you.

They will send you their cellphone numbers so you have them for when you guys arrive on Tuesday.

The plan is to begin the interview seated in an interview room here at CNN right at 12pm.

If they would like makeup, they can arrive a few minutes before that.

Then we will get on the 2 train and head uptown, filming along the way.

Let us know if there is a specific stop the Mayor would like to get off at to walk around the neighborhood.

Question – do we need to get any permission from the MTA to film on the subway or is your office taking care of that?

Good morning, Sir:

The op-ed is live on CNN.com (final pasted below), and they'll be sharing on their digital channels. Strong opportunity that let us lead with our values and lift up the need for a moral economy.

A few stats on CNN:

- Homepage has more than 46 million unique visitors per month
- CNN Twitter has 19 million followers
- CNN Facebook 18 million followers

That kind of reach solidly positions us in a noisy Pope narrative. Also worth noting: News anchor Carol Costello used the quote below in her opinion piece about the Pope, further connecting the Pope's values and ours.

As New York Mayor Bill de Blasio told me, "I don't think he (Pope Francis) thinks about his work in terms of favorability. I think he thinks about telling the truth. It's quite clear if you read his encyclical, he's saying the status quo is unsustainable and we have to get on a new path. And he's obviously just not speaking to the Catholics of the world. He's speaking to people well beyond the church. And it's interesting, a lot of people are moved by him, of all different backgrounds."

Thank you!

Bill de Blasio is the mayor of New York City. The opinions expressed in this commentary are solely those of the author.

(CNN)Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

I'm just one of the millions of New Yorkers eagerly anticipating Thursday's arrival of Pope Francis, which is sure to be one of the most extraordinary, and extraordinarily joyous, moments in the history of our city.

His holiness is more than just the leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics -- he's a formidable voice for the millions of people who for decades have been left out or left behind.

 Pope Francis has excoriated an economic system that operates on "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families struggle every day -- even as the wealthiest among us grow wealthier still. And he has envisioned a radical shift in the way the whole world does business to address forcefully the existential threat of climate change. He has a powerful vision of a different kind of world -- an inclusive world, rooted in fairness and respectful of our common humanity. And he's not simply commenting on the state of affairs -- he is calling on all of us, from heads of state to the average citizen, to take action.

He's urging us to make the changes we need to protect our earth, and to treat all people with compassion and dignity -- putting into action his belief that "money must serve -- not rule."

This is how Pope Francis has become the world's most powerful critic of the inequality that undermines societies across the globe.

And this is also the spirit that is driving us to action.

In the United States, a coalition of progressive leaders introduced in May the Progressive Agenda, a 14-point plan that calls for change at the federal level to even the playing field for all Americans. We can do this by raising the minimum wage, passing comprehensive immigration reform and demanding millionaires and billionaires pay their fair share in taxes by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

In New York, we are bringing the Progressive Agenda to life as we can, and our families are feeling the floor lift beneath them. More than 65,000 4-year-olds are now enrolled in free, full-day pre-K, and half a million more New York workers can now take a day off to care for themselves or a sick family member without fearing they'll lose their jobs.

And our efforts to fight inequality go deeper and further -- to building 200,000 affordable apartments, enough to house half a million New Yorkers, and launching IDNYC to bring more than half a million undocumented residents out of the shadows.

Our long-term blueprint for the future, One New York: The Plan for a Strong and Just City, also reflects the belief that a strong, sustainable and resilient city must also be an equitable one. The plan includes ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80% by 2050, and lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, among others.

There is no time to spare or to accept incremental changes. Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. Almost 12,000 of our families with children are living in shelter -- and in 30% of those families, one adult has a job.

They, and so many other New Yorkers, are fighting with all their might against the economic factors that have created the tale of two cities that my administration is working every day to break down.

And, as Pope Francis has reminded us -- by providing sleeping bags to those spending the night on the street, meals at the Vatican for those who go hungry, and personal, unannounced visits to those who are desperate -- these and all people without a home are human beings, not faceless burdens.

We work to honor the Pope's universal recognition of the humanity in all of us, and bring to life in New York the kind of equitable society that expresses our highest ideals.

It's a society where every child receives an education that sets him or her on a path to success, no matter the ZIP code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where our most vulnerable are given a chance to escape poverty and access to health care doesn't depend on the size of one's paycheck. A society where we treat the Earth as though our survival depends on it.

We can't wait for Pope Francis to share that vision firsthand with millions of New Yorkers of every background, faith, religion and income. And we hope for a moment of profound unity among us all, a moment of boldly and courageously confronting the challenges that face us.

We know history is on its way to New York City. Let's use it to push forward real change, in American society, and politics -- for all of the great people of this city and this nation, not just the lucky few.

We are developing a plan for which train line and stop we should take – just need to finalize the length of the interview so we can determine what time they'll be clear and how much time we have for Subway travel and a short walk and talk in the neighborhood upon arrival.

And to answer Poppy's question about the MTA, we'll connect with them to get any necessary permissions to tape on the Subway.

Hi folks: I'm at an event with the Mayor at the moment -- will be in touch about next Tuesday just as soon as I'm back at my desk.

Have a few things to discuss re logistics and substance.

Many thanks,

Hi all,

I am looping in Chris Welch and Haley Draznin who will be producing the interview. They will send you their cellphone numbers so you have them for when you guys arrive on Tuesday.

I am out of town this Thursday through Monday morning – anchoring my show live in Philadelphia this weekend during the Pope's visit.

Haley will coordinate all of the logistics with you. She is out today for the Jewish holiday but will be in touch tomorrow morning. Perhaps you can jump on a call together.

The plan is to begin the interview seated in an interview room here at CNN right at 12pm. If they would like makeup, they can arrive a few minutes before that.

Then we will get on the 2 train and head uptown, filming along the way.

Let us know if there is a specific stop the Mayor would like to get off at to walk around the neighborhood.

Question – do we need to get any permission from the MTA to film on the subway or is your office taking care of that?

My cell is [REDACTED] so you have it.

Feel free to send anything along we should see in advance of the interview.
Thanks again – we’re really looking forward to it.

Hi Rebecca and Erinn,

I am out of the office Thursday and Friday – then anchoring in Philly this weekend.

When you know what time both the Mayor and Robert Reich are available on Tuesday, just let us know.

Also – are we cleared to film on the subway or do we need to clear that with the MTA first?

Thanks again – really looking forward to it.

Hi Rebecca,

It should – just need to confirm with our camera crews since we are strapped that week with the UNGA, etc.

What time are you thinking?

Erinn – very nice to meet you! I got the book in the mail today – thanks very much for sending.

By the way, is there any formal announcement being made or partnership being unveiled between the two men around income inequality? I just want to make sure I am aware of it ahead of time, if so.

Thanks very much and talk soon.

Is there a reason they don't want RR there? It's also a slight deterrent from asking a million endorsement questions if RR is with him.

Good morning, Sir:

The op-ed is live on CNN.com (final pasted below), and they'll be sharing on their digital channels. Strong opportunity that let us lead with our values and lift up the need for a moral economy.

A few stats on CNN:

- Homepage has more than 46 million unique visitors per month
- CNN Twitter has 19 million followers
- CNN Facebook 18 million followers

That kind of reach solidly positions us in a noisy Pope narrative. Also worth noting: News anchor Carol Costello used the quote below in her opinion piece about the Pope, further connecting the Pope's values and ours.

As New York Mayor Bill de Blasio told me, "I don't think he (Pope Francis) thinks about his work in terms of favorability. I think he thinks about telling the truth. It's quite clear if you read his encyclical, he's saying the status quo is unsustainable and we have to get on a new path. And he's obviously just not speaking to the Catholics of the world. He's speaking to people well beyond the church. And it's interesting, a lot of people are moved by him, of all different backgrounds."

Thank you!

Bill de Blasio is the mayor of New York City. The opinions expressed in this commentary are solely those of the author.

(CNN)Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

I'm just one of the millions of New Yorkers eagerly anticipating Thursday's arrival of Pope Francis, which is sure to be one of the most extraordinary, and extraordinarily joyous, moments in the history of our city.

His holiness is more than just the leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics -- he's a formidable voice for the millions of people who for decades have been left out or left behind.

 Pope Francis has excoriated an economic system that operates on "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families struggle every day -- even as the wealthiest among us grow wealthier still. And he has envisioned a radical shift in the way the whole world does business to address forcefully the existential threat of climate change. He has a powerful vision of a different kind of world -- an inclusive world, rooted in fairness and respectful of our common humanity. And he's not simply commenting on the state of affairs -- he is calling on all of us, from heads of state to the average citizen, to take action.

He's urging us to make the changes we need to protect our earth, and to treat all people with compassion and dignity -- putting into action his belief that "money must serve -- not rule."

This is how Pope Francis has become the world's most powerful critic of the inequality that undermines societies across the globe.

And this is also the spirit that is driving us to action.

In the United States, a coalition of progressive leaders introduced in May the Progressive Agenda, a 14-point plan that calls for change at the federal level to even the playing field for all Americans. We can do this by raising the minimum wage, passing comprehensive immigration reform and demanding millionaires and billionaires pay their fair share in taxes by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

In New York, we are bringing the Progressive Agenda to life as we can, and our families are feeling the floor lift beneath them. More than 65,000 4-year-olds are now enrolled in free, full-day pre-K, and half a million more New York workers can now take a day off to care for themselves or a sick family member without fearing they'll lose their jobs.

And our efforts to fight inequality go deeper and further -- to building 200,000 affordable apartments, enough to house half a million New Yorkers, and launching IDNYC to bring more than half a million undocumented residents out of the shadows.

Our long-term blueprint for the future, One New York: The Plan for a Strong and Just City, also reflects the belief that a strong, sustainable and resilient city must also be an equitable one. The plan includes ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80% by 2050, and lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, among others.

There is no time to spare or to accept incremental changes. Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. Almost 12,000 of our families with children are living in shelter -- and in 30% of those families, one adult has a job.

They, and so many other New Yorkers, are fighting with all their might against the economic factors that have created the tale of two cities that my administration is working every day to break down.

And, as Pope Francis has reminded us -- by providing sleeping bags to those spending the night on the street, meals at the Vatican for those who go hungry, and personal, unannounced visits to those who are desperate -- these and all people without a home are human beings, not faceless burdens.

We work to honor the Pope's universal recognition of the humanity in all of us, and bring to life in New York the kind of equitable society that expresses our highest ideals.

It's a society where every child receives an education that sets him or her on a path to success, no matter the ZIP code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where our most vulnerable are given a chance to escape poverty and access to health care doesn't depend on the size of one's paycheck. A society where we treat the Earth as though our survival depends on it.

We can't wait for Pope Francis to share that vision firsthand with millions of New Yorkers of every background, faith, religion and income. And we hope for a moment of profound unity among us all, a moment of boldly and courageously confronting the challenges that face us.

We know history is on its way to New York City. Let's use it to push forward real change, in American society, and politics -- for all of the great people of this city and this nation, not just the lucky few.

Want to make sure everyone is comfortable with our plan for the Subway ride and neighborhood walk and talk.

Wiley and I would like for Mayor, Poppy and Reich to ride the 1/2 from Columbus Circle to 149th St/Grand Concourse. IGA has approved this location, and the logistics are pretty simple – it's a 20 minute ride and they'll transfer from the 1 to the 2 at Lincoln Center.

What I'm hoping we can do is pull together a snapshot of the various investments we've made in that neighborhood or zip code so the mayor can talk about them on camera. We are also looking to identify a good pre-k center that we've opened/expanded; a community school we've launched recently; an affordable housing site underway; and a NYCHA development that we've invested in so they can walk to one or two of those sites. Will also attempt to track down crime stats for the 40 and 44 precincts with the hope that we can tell a good story there.

The only flag with this neighborhood is that it was the site of legionnaires outbreak, but I don't think that's a disqualifier.

Please let me know ASAP if there are any concerns with us moving forward with 149th St/Grand Concourse.

Thanks!

Subject: CNN op-ed live

Good morning, Sir:

The op-ed is live on CNN.com (final pasted below), and they'll be sharing on their digital channels. Strong opportunity that let us lead with our values and lift up the need for a moral economy.

A few stats on CNN:

- Homepage has more than 46 million unique visitors per month
- CNN Twitter has 19 million followers
- CNN Facebook 18 million followers

That kind of reach solidly positions us in a noisy Pope narrative. Also worth noting: News anchor Carol Costello used the quote below in her opinion piece about the Pope, further connecting the Pope's values and ours.

As New York Mayor Bill de Blasio told me, "I don't think he (Pope Francis) thinks about his work in terms of favorability. I think he thinks about telling the truth. It's quite clear if you read his encyclical, he's saying the status quo is unsustainable and we have to get on a new path. And he's obviously just not speaking to the Catholics of the world. He's speaking to people well beyond the church. And it's interesting, a lot of people are moved by him, of all different backgrounds."

Thank you!

Bill de Blasio is the mayor of New York City. The opinions expressed in this commentary are solely those of the author.

(CNN)Sometimes, history sneaks up on you. And sometimes you know it's coming.

I'm just one of the millions of New Yorkers eagerly anticipating Thursday's arrival of Pope Francis, which is sure to be one of the most extraordinary, and extraordinarily joyous, moments in the history of our city.

His holiness is more than just the leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics -- he's a formidable voice for the millions of people who for decades have been left out or left behind.

 Pope Francis has excoriated an economic system that operates on "the mentality of profit at any price," blind to how working families struggle every day -- even as the wealthiest among us grow wealthier still. And he has envisioned a radical shift in the way the whole world does business to address forcefully the existential threat of climate change. He has a powerful vision of a different kind of world -- an inclusive world, rooted in fairness and respectful of our common humanity. And he's not simply commenting on the state of affairs -- he is calling on all of us, from heads of state to the average citizen, to take action.

He's urging us to make the changes we need to protect our earth, and to treat all people with compassion and dignity -- putting into action his belief that "money must serve -- not rule."

This is how Pope Francis has become the world's most powerful critic of the inequality that undermines societies across the globe.

And this is also the spirit that is driving us to action.

In the United States, a coalition of progressive leaders introduced in May the Progressive Agenda, a 14-point plan that calls for change at the federal level to even the playing field for all Americans. We can do this by raising the minimum wage, passing comprehensive immigration reform and demanding millionaires and billionaires pay their fair share in taxes by closing the carried interest loophole and the CEO tax loophole.

In New York, we are bringing the Progressive Agenda to life as we can, and our families are feeling the floor lift beneath them. More than 65,000 4-year-olds are now enrolled in free, full-day pre-K, and half a million more New York workers can now take a day off to care for themselves or a sick family member without fearing they'll lose their jobs.

And our efforts to fight inequality go deeper and further -- to building 200,000 affordable apartments, enough to house half a million New Yorkers, and launching IDNYC to bring more than half a million undocumented residents out of the shadows.

Our long-term blueprint for the future, One New York: The Plan for a Strong and Just City, also reflects the belief that a strong, sustainable and resilient city must also be an equitable one. The plan includes ambitious goals: reducing greenhouse gas emissions 80% by 2050, and lifting 800,000 New Yorkers out of poverty by 2025, among others.

There is no time to spare or to accept incremental changes. Today, almost half of New Yorkers live near or below the poverty line. Almost 12,000 of our families with children are living in shelter -- and in 30% of those families, one adult has a job.

They, and so many other New Yorkers, are fighting with all their might against the economic factors that have created the tale of two cities that my administration is working every day to break down.

And, as Pope Francis has reminded us -- by providing sleeping bags to those spending the night on the street, meals at the Vatican for those who go hungry, and personal, unannounced visits to those who are desperate -- these and all people without a home are human beings, not faceless burdens.

We work to honor the Pope's universal recognition of the humanity in all of us, and bring to life in New York the kind of equitable society that expresses our highest ideals.

It's a society where every child receives an education that sets him or her on a path to success, no matter the ZIP code. Where immigrants are welcomed and recognized for their contributions to our society. Where our most vulnerable are given a chance to escape poverty and access to health care doesn't depend on the size of one's paycheck. A society where we treat the Earth as though our survival depends on it.

We can't wait for Pope Francis to share that vision firsthand with millions of New Yorkers of every background, faith, religion and income. And we hope for a moment of profound unity among us all, a moment of boldly and courageously confronting the challenges that face us.

We know history is on its way to New York City. Let's use it to push forward real change, in American society, and politics -- for all of the great people of this city and this nation, not just the lucky few.

Opinión: Bill de Blasio: Un llamado moral por la igualdad

CNN - Bill de Blasio

<http://www.cnn.com/2015/09/24/opinions/bill-de-blasio-pope-francis/index.html>

A veces, la historia nos sorprende. Y a veces es bastante predecible.

Soy uno más de los millones de neoyorquinos que esperamos con ansias la llegada del Papa Francisco este jueves, seguramente uno de los momentos más extraordinarios —y extraordinariamente felices— en la historia de nuestra ciudad.

Su Santidad es más que el líder de los 1,200 millones de católicos en el mundo: es también un formidable mensajero de millones de personas a quienes, por décadas, la historia ha dejado atrás.

El Papa Francisco ha criticado el sistema económico basado en la “mentalidad de obtener ganancias a cualquier precio”, un sistema ciego y sordo a las adversidades de la clase obrera —incluso mientras los más adinerados ven crecer sus riquezas. El Papa ha concebido un cambio radical en la manera en que trabaja nuestro mundo con el fin de enfrentar enérgicamente la amenaza que presenta el cambio climático a nuestra existencia.

El Papa tiene la convincente visión de un mundo distinto —un mundo inclusivo, basado en la justicia y el respeto por la humanidad que compartimos. Y no hace simples comentarios de la situación actual, sino que nos llama a todos, desde jefes de estado hasta ciudadanos comunes, a la acción.

El Sumo Pontífice nos exhorta a hacer cambios necesarios para proteger a nuestro planeta, y a tratar a todas las personas con compasión y dignidad. Y está activamente encarnando su creencia de que "el dinero debe servir —no regir".

Con esta labor, el Papa Francisco se ha convertido en una de las voces más fuertes en criticar la desigualdad que socava a sociedades de todo el planeta.

Y ese mensaje, ese espíritu, está guiando nuestro trabajo.

En Estados Unidos, una coalición de líderes introdujo en mayo la Agenda Progresista, un plan de 14 puntos que llama a realizar cambios a nivel federal, estatal y local que ayudarán a corregir la desigualdad de clases y a darles más oportunidades a todas personas que viven en este país. Podemos hacer esto aumentando el sueldo mínimo, aprobando una reforma migratoria integral, y cerrando brechas en el código tributario para que los millonarios y billonarios paguen lo que les corresponde de impuestos.

En Nueva York, estamos haciendo todo lo posible para poner la Agenda Progresista en acción, y nuestras familias están viendo surgir sus posibilidades. Más de 65,000 niños de 4 años están inscritos en programas de prekínder gratis y de día completo, y medio millón de trabajadores más tienen derecho a días de enfermedad para cuidar su salud o la de un pariente enfermo sin temor a perder sus trabajos.

Nuestro esfuerzo para combatir la desigualdad incluye la construcción de 200,000 unidades de vivienda asequible —suficiente para darle techo a medio millón de neoyorquinos— y el lanzamiento de IDNYC, un programa para darle identificación municipal a más de medio millón de residentes indocumentados.

A largo plazo, hemos trazado el plan OneNYC para construir una Nueva York más fuerte y más justa. OneNYC también refleja la creencia de que una ciudad con más fuerza, sustentabilidad y capacidad para resistir desastres humanos o naturales, debe ser también una ciudad más equitativa. Nuestro plan tiene metas ambiciosas, incluyendo reducir en 80% las emisiones de gases invernadero para el año 2050 y sacar a 800,000 neoyorquinos de la pobreza para el 2025.

No tenemos tiempo que perder o para aceptar cambios paulatinos. En la actualidad, casi la mitad de los neoyorquinos viven cerca o por debajo del nivel de pobreza. Casi 12,000 familias con niños en nuestra ciudad están viviendo en albergues para desamparados, y en 30% de esas familias sólo un adulto tiene empleo.

Ellos, como muchos otros neoyorquinos, están luchando con todas sus fuerzas para superar los factores económicos que han creado una Nueva York de dos caras —un contraste que mi administración trata de corregir todos los días.

Como nos recuerda el Papa Francisco al proveer bolsas de dormir para aquellos que pasan la noche en las calles, comidas en el Vaticano para los que tienen hambre y visitas personales espontáneas a los que necesitan consuelo, todas estas personas son seres humanos, no cargas anónimas.

Trabajamos para honrar el reconocimiento que el Papa Francisco le ha dado a la humanidad que existe en todos nosotros, y para crear en Nueva York una sociedad equitativa que exprese nuestros más elevados ideales.

Es una sociedad donde cada niño pueda recibir una educación que lo encamine hacia el éxito sin importar su código postal; donde los inmigrantes sean bienvenidos y reconocidos por sus aportes a nuestra sociedad; donde nuestros ciudadanos más vulnerables tengan una oportunidad de salir de la pobreza; y donde el acceso a cuidado de salud no dependa del monto de su salario. Una sociedad que trata a nuestro planeta entendiendo que nuestra supervivencia depende de él.

Estamos ansiosos de recibir al Papa Francisco para compartir esa visión directamente con millones de neoyorquinos de toda procedencia, credo, religión e ingreso. Y esperamos que sea un momento de profunda unidad entre todos nosotros, un momento para que confrontemos valientemente los retos que nos acechan.

Sabemos que esta visita hará historia en la Ciudad de Nueva York. Aprovechemos este momento para impulsar un verdadero cambio en la sociedad y la política de Estados Unidos —por toda la gente de esta gran ciudad y esta gran nación, no sólo por unos cuantos afortunados.

Hi all:

Information about Robert Reich's book attached here and below. Happy to send copies to any/all as you'd like, just let me know. All about inequality so nice dovetail here.

About the documentary: The same team of filmmakers behind Inequality for All, a documentary Reich did a few years ago, will be following him around for a second documentary called Saving Capitalism. They would like to film him at CNN/with the Mayor.

Crew would consist of the director (Jake Kornbluth), one DP (either Jesse Dana or Andy Black), and one sound and field producer (Yael Bridge) in attendance. They would like to shadow Reich entering building, greeting people, in the green room, etc. It will be a run-and-gun type of operation so not lots of equipment or lights or anything, just one camera and a sound guy.

NOTE: for this we would restrict the crew to film Reich entering CNN and in the greenroom/getting ready for the interview (but not the interview/in the studio itself); then they will NOT film on/accompany on subway but would have option to meet us at the stand-up interview site in the Bronx and film some of that so long as they aren't in way of CNN crew.

Producer: Eden Wurmfeld, [REDACTED] – she can handle signing any releases/paperwork needed.

ABOUT SAVING CAPITALISM (the book):

Reich's most important book to date—a myth-shattering breakdown of how the economic system that helped make America so strong is now failing us, and what it will take to fix it.

Perhaps no one is better acquainted with the intersection of economics and politics than Robert B. Reich, and now he reveals how power and influence have created a new American oligarchy, a shrinking middle class, and the greatest income inequality and wealth disparity in eighty years. He makes clear how centrally problematic our veneration of the "free market" is, and how it has masked the power of moneyed interests to tilt the market to their benefit.

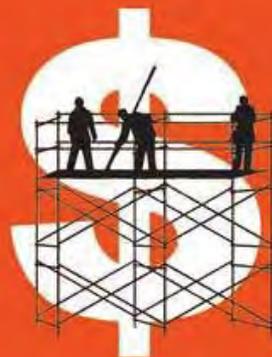

Reich exposes the falsehoods that have been bolstered by the corruption of our democracy by huge corporations and the revolving door between Washington and Wall Street: that all workers are paid what they're "worth," that a higher minimum wage equals fewer jobs, and that corporations must serve shareholders before employees. He shows that the critical choices ahead are not about the size of government but about who government is for: that we must choose not between a free market and "big" government but between a market organized for broadly based prosperity and one designed to deliver the most gains to the top. Ever the pragmatist, ever the optimist, Reich sees hope for reversing our slide toward inequality and diminished opportunity when we shore up the countervailing power of everyone else.

Passionate yet practical, sweeping yet exactly argued, Saving Capitalism is a revelatory indictment of our economic status quo and an empowering call to civic action.

Dear Editor/Producer,

“Few ideas have more profoundly poisoned the minds of more people than the notion of a ‘free market’ existing somewhere in the universe, into which government ‘intrudes,’” writes Robert Reich in SAVING CAPITALISM: For the Many, Not the Few (Knopf, 9/29). This “free market”, he argues, isn’t free—it’s man made and subject to the parameters we set. “A market—any market—requires that government make enforce the rules of the game.” And, as Reich shows us, that game is rigged.

In SAVING CAPITALISM, Reich, who has been sounding the alarm about inequality in America for 25 years now, reveals the cycles of power and influence that have created the new American oligarchy, shrunk the middle class, and driven the United States to the greatest income inequality and wealth disparity in eighty years. As the rules by which the “free” market operates have changed over the past decades, they’ve evolved to serve the needs of those with the most political influence—moneyed interest groups with lobbyists and big donations to make themselves heard. As a result, large corporations can declare bankruptcy and wipe the slate clean, but homeowners and student debtors can’t. Wall Street bankers get bailed out when they gamble excessively, while millions of Americans lose their jobs, homes, and savings. Big companies monopolize industries and collude on prices, causing us to pay more. Trade treaties (like the much-debated TPP) protect corporate intellectual property and financial assets but not the jobs and wages of average Americans. And on it goes.

As Reich notes, these pre-distributions upward are far greater than any re-distributions downward, but they’re hidden from view. And while the rules by which the market operates are increasingly skewed against everyday Americans, discussion of them is obscured by the notion that government should be smaller and the market should be “free.” As Reich shows, this is a false debate, and the real issue facing us is making sure that our capitalism and our government works for all Americans, not just those who have power and means to influence the rules. SAVING CAPITALISM is an indictment of our economic status quo and a revelatory look at how our system really functions. Says Larry Summers, “Everyone concerned with our economic future will need to grapple with Reich’s arguments in 2016 and beyond.”

Reich is available for interviews; let us know if you would like to speak with him.

All best,

A conversation with

ROBERT B. REICH

author of

SAVING CAPITALISM

For the Many, Not the Few

Q: You've called the book SAVING CAPITALISM... but the market has been up, and we keep hearing about the recovery from the Great Recession. What about our capitalism needs saving?

A: American wages have been stuck in neutral for thirty years, almost all the gains have gone to the top 1 percent, most people are less economically secure than in living memory, and the two fastest-growing groups are the working poor and non-working rich. These trends aren't sustainable.

Q: Why has the public's confidence in the American economy declined?

A: Because they know the system is rigged. Look at the polls: In 2001 a Gallup poll found 77 percent of Americans satisfied with opportunities to get ahead by working hard and 22 percent dissatisfied. By 2014, only 54 percent were satisfied and 45 percent dissatisfied. And most people don't think their kids will live as well as they do.

Q: You say that the corporate and financial elite have been steadily increasing their political power – why is this a problem?

A: Because the so-called "free market" depends on rules, and those rules are made by politicians, agency heads, and judges – who are all now far more dependent on the moneyed interests for everything from campaign contributions to future jobs. Here again, most Americans get it: In 1964, according to polls, Americans agreed by 64 percent to 29 percent that government was run for the benefit of all the people. By 2012, the response had reversed, with voters saying by 79 percent to 19 percent that government was "run by a few big interests looking after themselves."

K N O P F Q & A

Q: So is the game is rigged? How does this impact those of us who aren't in the corporate and financial elite?

A: The evidence of rigging is all around us. As consumers we pay more: 80 percent of Internet users have no choice of Internet Service Provider – and as a result have the slowest and highest-priced Internet service among all advanced nations. Pharmaceuticals cost more in the U.S. as well because Big Pharma has been able to extend its patent protections and also prevent Medicare from using its bargaining power to reduce drug prices. Airline tickets cost more than they did 10 years ago even though fuel prices have plummeted, because we've gone from 9 major carriers ten years ago to 4 now – and they collude over prices and routes. Health insurance premiums are skyrocketing because health insurers are combining into mammoth firms that can set prices. Wall Street's five biggest banks accounted for 10% of total bank deposits in 1990; now they account for 45% – meaning less competition and higher prices, and more “too-big-to-fail” bailouts. Food prices are high because there's less and less competition in Big Agriculture.

The rules have been altered to favor big corporations and Wall Street. Corporations get huge amounts of corporate welfare in the form of subsidies and special tax breaks (Big Pharma, Big Ag, Wall Street, Big Oil, military contractors). Large corporations can use bankruptcy to avoid paying their bills (e.g. Donald Trump) and abrogate union contracts; yet people over burdened with student debts can't use bankruptcy; nor can people unable to meet their mortgage payments. Wall Street got bailed out but “underwater” homeowners didn't. Wealthy individuals now pay a marginal tax rate that's half what they paid between 1946 and 1980. And so on.

Q: What's this you say about there not really being a free market?

A: A market depends on rules (what's property? What can be traded? What happens when you debtors can't pay their bills? What's a valid contract? What's fraud or coercion?) and government makes those rules. The real question is who benefits from the rules – the vast majority or a wealthy and powerful elite? Fifty years ago it was the former; now it's the latter.

Q: What type of rhetoric do those in power use to justify a free market?

A: The language itself – “free market,” “free enterprise,” “freedom of contract,” the government “intruding” on the “free market,” even “free speech” (the Supreme Court believes corporations are people under the First Amendment) – all conjure up a fantasy world that has nothing to do with the reality of power. Yet talking about freedom without talking about power is profoundly misleading. Those with the power to organize the market to their own advantage would rather we keep debating the relative merits of the “free market” versus the “government” because the debate hides what's really going on.

Q: We hear so much about the redistributions of wealth down towards the poor from many of those on the right. But you also talk about how many companies and others at the top of the economic spectrum get a lot of help from what you call pre-distributions up... how so? Why is this a problem?

A: The “pre-distributions” upward are occurring inside the market, mostly well-hidden from view – inside property (interminable patents, for example), monopoly (vast market power is now permitted), bankruptcy (see above), contract (it's no longer considered fraudulent to trade on insider information, for example, or coercive to demand mandatory arbitration of all claims), and how all this is enforced (often in favor of large corporations and Wall Street, with few enforcement resources, low penalties if they break the law, and no jail for bankers).

K N O P F Q & A

Q: You write about how the idea that America is a meritocracy is largely a myth – what is some of the evidence you've found for this?

A: CEOs of big companies now earn 300 times the typical wage whereas they earned 20 times the median wage 40 years ago yet research shows the higher their pay they worse their companies perform. Hedge-fund partners and managers make hundreds of millions off insider information unavailable to average investors. The middle class no longer has any bargaining power to get higher wages (a third of private-sector workers were unionized in the 1950s, now fewer than 7 percent are). And two groups have emerged -- the working poor and non-working rich – who directly contradict the meritocratic ideal.

Q: You explain the dichotomy of the “rise of the working poor” and the “rise of the nonworking rich?” What does this mean for our country?

A: It used to be that poverty was caused by a lack of work. Now, a large and growing cohort of people are working full time – many in more one job, 50 or 60 hours a week – who are nonetheless poor. Meanwhile, heirs to rich fortunes constitute a larger and larger share of total wealth (the five Walmart heirs alone have more wealth than the bottom 40 percent of the U.S. population combined). The implicit moral bargain in America was that full-time work was rewarded with a middle-class income. That's less and less the case.

Q: And where does the middle class fit in?

A: That's the problem. It doesn't. It's shrinking. In addition, more and more work demands uncertain hours – on call and on demand 24/7 – causing havoc with family life and inordinate stress. We're rapidly moving from full employment to uncertain work – temp, contract, self-employment – providing no social insurance (Social Security, unemployment, worker's comp) and no social protection (minimum wage, worker safety). The middle class used to be the heart of American capitalism, and American democracy. But it's rapidly disintegrating.

Q: How do you propose we go about saving capitalism?

A: The economic problem we face is really a political problem. And that political problem is a lack of countervailing power relative to the moneyed interests that now dominate our political-economic system. Fifty years ago we had countervailing power in the form of labor unions, farm cooperatives, small retailers, local banks, and political parties based at the local and state level. But all these sources of countervailing power have withered. Unions have shrunk; Big Ag has taken over; small retailers have succumbed to Walmart and Amazon; local banks have given way to Wall Street; and the two national political parties have morphed into national fund-raising machines. The only way back to an economy that works for everyone and a democracy that's accountable to the majority is through a new countervailing power.

The public is ready. The emergence of Donald Trump on the right and Bernie Sanders on the left signals a profound rejection of the establishment – a revolt against the ruling class. The two are very different, of course: Trump is a wrecking-ball, and Sanders is a rebuildier. But they're both belligerent, say what they mean, won't condone business or politics as usual, and both make big business, Wall Street, and Washington insiders deeply uncomfortable. Both may be washed out by the riptides of the primaries, but the anger that fuels both insurgencies will continue to rise until countervailing power is re-established in America.

Hi Marti:

Sorry to bug you so late – this can wait, but I just wanted it to be in your in-box first thing tomorrow.

I'm writing a preview of the Clinton Global Initiative meeting in New York and I understand that the Mayor turned down an invitation from President Clinton to appear as a panelist.

I was wondering if he has previously participated in Clinton Foundation events and why he turned down this particular invitation.

Thanks.

Dear Chirlane,

I hope this email finds you well. Exciting times in the city between the Pope’s visit and U.N. week. I know most of our communication has been around education and in particular, East Harlem Tutorial Program and Academies and I am writing today about a program Blackstone is creating in several New York universities. As you may know, the Blackstone Charitable Foundation has a substantial initiative to support student entrepreneurs across the country. We are about to bring this program, Blackstone LaunchPad, to five schools in New York (SUNY Albany, Buffalo, NYU, Cornell and Syracuse) with a $4.5M grant. We are announcing the gift and program expansion on October 23rd at 9:30 am at the Skirball Center at NYU.

We would very much like to have you and Bill join as part of the announcement of this exciting program for students across the city and state. We have confirmation that Senator Schumer will be attending. Tony James, President of Blackstone, has reached out to Bill's office and we would like for him to have a speaking role though we have not heard back at this time. I can provide more detailed information if helpful. I look forward to hearing from you.

Critics call new charter school ad 'racist'

POLITICO NY - Eliza Shapiro

<http://www.capitalnewyork.com/article/city-hall/2015/09/8577871/critics-call-new-charter-school-ad-racist>

A coalition of elected officials, community organizations and union-allied groups criticized a new Families for Excellent Schools ad Friday, accusing the pro-charter group of "race-baiting" in order to advance its political agenda.

The ad, first reported by POLITICO New York, is called "Tale of Two Boys" and argues that Mayor Bill de Blasio is forcing minority students into failing schools. It began running Friday, though it was not publicly promoted by FES.

The ad buy will cost FES about half a million dollars this week and will become a multimillion-dollar ad buy over the next few weeks, according to a source.

The ad contrasted the educations of a young white boy and a black boy in New York City, saying the white child would attend a good school and go to college while the black child would be trapped in a struggling school and never make it to college.

Bertha Lewis, the president of the Black Institute, called it "the most racist ad I've seen in my life."

"They found a way to make money and profit off little black boys and girls," she said. "They act as if they are here to save us."

Zakiyah Ansari, the advocacy director of the Alliance for Quality Education, made a similar argument. AQE is partially funded by city and state teachers' unions.

"They are using a black face to push their political agenda, and they make the assumption that all black people are poor," she said. "They used our children in a race-baiting commercial."

Some called on FES to remove the ad on Friday.

Brooklyn Assemblyman N. Nick Perry called on FES to "do the right thing" and pull the ad. Perry — who is also the chairman of the New York State Black, Puerto Rican, Hispanic and Asian Legislative Caucus — said he was "incensed over the use of blatant race baiting tactics to advance the agenda of FES."

Other elected officials also took issue with the ad.

Manhattan Borough President Gale Brewer accused FES in a statement of helping to "divert money, resources and space from our public schools ... into increasingly unaccountable private empires. The rhetoric of this ad, and the people and money behind it, are part of the problem."

New York City Council education committee chair Danny Dromm called the ad "highly divisive and harmful."

Representatives for three of New York's largest charter networks — KIPP, Uncommon, and Achievement First — did not respond to requests for comment about the ad.

A spokesperson for FES declined to comment.

Thanks for forwarding Raj.

Geri- its great to connect. Here are answers to your questions:

1. Agenda: You can find the agenda here: http://sixconference.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/08/2015-SiX-Conference-Agenda_9.14.15.pdf.
2. Press: Yes. The Mayor's remarks will be open press—unless you want them closed but with backdrop of government shutdown, who is in the room etc I think would be good for him to keep open.
3. Elected Officials in Attendance: There will be nearly 300 state legislators in the audience representing all 50 states. The first day we are doing a meeting with the POTUS and some key state leaders. The second day, will be a broader briefing for the conference at the White House with cabinet secretaries and senior administration and WH staff. Congresswomen Sinema and Bass will attend. The third day will be a series of briefings and conversations with and for state legislators. The last day, will be closed door trainings for the legislators.

4. Audience: Will be just over 300 people. The vast majority (nearly all) will be state legislators. Others in the audience will be donors, organizational heads and staff and media.

Let me know if you have any other questions. Fingers crossed! We are really hoping that this can work out. I know the legislators would be thrilled to hear from him and I think its a great audience for him to be in front of and build an identity with.

Thanks again!

The Honorable Bill de Blasio
City Hall Park
New York, NY 10007

Dear Mayor de Blasio:

American Family Voices, along with progressive leaders and the business community, will be convening a conference on October 2nd, 2015 at Hyatt Regency in Washington, DC to advance our shared goal of forging a strong and lasting alliance between the progressive movement and the socially conscious business community.

We would like to invite you to attend as our keynote speaker.

The gathering will serve to convene representatives of the business community and leaders in the national progressive movement, with the goal of creating a shared agenda an overall strategic framework that will help to solidify our alliance and to focus our future efforts together.

Sessions of the conference will explore shared policy priorities and how we may work together to collaborate on a legislative agenda, support businesses with progressive values, and build state level infrastructure.

As you know, American Family Voices has been at the strategic center of every major economic battle in the recent past—from helping get Obamacare, Dodd-Frank, and the CFPB passed and running hard edged ads against opponents of immigration reform to breaking the news stories about the Koch brothers secret conference last year—and your participation in this event will help us advance our goal to work effectively with those in the business community who share our values.

Ultimately, the conference will help us to further our mission to grow a strong, thriving middle class and fight for a progressive economy with good jobs, good pay, and good benefits for all working families. Your work and long-standing commitment to these issues make you an ideal keynote speaker for this conference.

Thank you in advance for your consideration.

Best regards,

Mike Lux

Audiences are going to combine- 1 speech, if he can be there for an hour.

Breakdown:

- 20 minute speech
- 15 min Q/A (unless you are a no)
- 20-25 mins for pull aside with business leaders in sep room (small groups for prospecting potential) and possibly NY state leg delegation IF YOU AND EMMA WANT THE LATTER

Thanks for forwarding Raj.

Geri- its great to connect. Here are answers to your questions:

1. Agenda: You can find the agenda here: http://sixconference.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/08/2015-SiX-Conference-Agenda_9.14.15.pdf.
2. Press: Yes. The Mayor's remarks will be open press—unless you want them closed but with backdrop of government shutdown, who is in the room etc I think would be good for him to keep open.

3. Elected Officials in Attendance: There will be nearly 300 state legislators in the audience representing all 50 states. The first day we are doing a meeting with the POTUS and some key state leaders. The second day, will be a broader briefing for the conference at the White House with cabinet secretaries and senior administration and WH staff. Congresswomen Sinema and Bass will attend. The third day will be a series of briefings and conversations with and for state legislators. The last day, will be closed door trainings for the legislators.

4. Audience: Will be just over 300 people. The vast majority (nearly all) will be state legislators. Others in the audience will be donors, organizational heads and staff and media.

Let me know if you have any other questions. Fingers crossed! We are really hoping that this can work out. I know the legislators would be thrilled to hear from him and I think its a great audience for him to be in front of and build an identity with.

Thanks again!

Hi Raj:

We still don't have confirmation that the 2nd will work. But in the meantime I have a few questions:

- Do you have an agenda with speakers?

- Is it open press?
- Who are the other electeds coming?
- How many people are you expecting and are they principles, staff or both?

Ether myself or a key staffer from TPA will be there.

Thank you

Subject: progressive economic agenda video

I wanted to share the close to finished rough cut of a video AFV has been working on that we plan to release on Monday, September 28th. (It is embargoed until then, so pls don't forward this along.) The idea for the video came from a series of emails I was having with Elizabeth Warren earlier this year, where we were bemoaning the absurdity of those people in both parties who claim that progressives don't care about growth, jobs, or a strong economy, only about redistributing wealth. The idea of the video was to teach people about how progressive economic policy really builds a more prosperous economy for all.

The idea for the video was further fueled by the incredible work so many of you have been doing to push a progressive economic agenda: Moveon's 10 Ideas video series with Bob Reich; the conferences put on and plans put out by so many of the groups we work with: the AFL-CIO, the Roosevelt Institute, the CPC, Progressive Congress, Moveon, CCC, CPD, WFP, LCCHR, USAction, CAF, NPA, the Alliance for a Just Society; the Mayor de Blasio-led coalition around The Progressive Agenda; the new book by Joe Stiglitz. So much great work has been done in 2015 to build a movement for a new progressive agenda that we decided to turn the video in part into a celebration of all this great work.

Our plan is to release the video after the Pope's visit raises issues of the economy next week, to promote it heavily through social media and PR, and to show it at an important conference involving progressive movement leadership and enlightened businesspeople at the end of the week. We are also hoping that all of you organizational and opinion leaders will help us promote it with your social media and lists.

We also want to thank those of you who helped us with this video by being in it, or contributing ideas to it. We hope we did you justice.

Let us know if you have any final suggestions as we head into the last round of edits and sound mixing. This is a meaty subject, and we wanted our video to reflect the depth and diversity of the progressive movement, so it is a little longer than your average web video, but hopefully it tells the progressive economic story in a way you like.

Geri-

Looping you in here on that USCM meeting we discussed late last week where the bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. Some of our current suggestions for MBdB's priorities include elevating elements of The Progressive Agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive.

I'll be refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA aspects.

Will you please take a look at the current recs (in the attached document) and give feedback on which TPA pieces you think we should prioritize, and note if anything I've suggested initially should be stripped out? I'm around on my cell. 347-497-1740.

Here you go. This document includes a list of who will attend the meeting and outline of the issues on the table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities (DRAFT). It also includes recommendations of what MBdB should influence based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing around COO and TPA. For each of these recs, we have begun to identify mayors who would be in that core group of supporters referenced below. I'm also sending along an updated schedule – Jerry Abramson from the White House IGA office will be speaking to mayors following their presser on Saturday afternoon. I don't rec. that he stay for that presentation.

Gina – here is your email with the asks for this document:

For prep Georgia is gathering who exactly will attend the meeting and the issues on table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities.

Once we have this list we will draft out which of these he will likely want to influence based on NYC needs, experience, beliefs and what components he may want to add. We will then need to get his buy in.

Next we will work at a staff level to make sure we have the support of a core group of mayors in leadership on what the mayor will likely propose.

We should hold some call time at the end of this week and early next week for him to shore up some of the members to be sure he will have support for from key members, as well as some prep time.

Additionally, we will send the mayor our proposal for the future of COO so that he has it ready at this meeting though it may not come up.

USCM Leadership Meeting – 2016 Presidential Priorities

USCM is using this upcoming Baltimore leadership meeting to set mayor's priorities for the 2016 presidential campaign, establishing a national mayors agenda. As a progressive leader who has been engaged in pressing for a national urban agenda and a new member of USCM leadership, Mayor de Blasio should be in the room to shape the agenda to reflect his progressive priorities. The forty attending mayors will be presented with a list of ten issues, including affordable housing; transportation; expanding access to the internet/broadband; investing; promoting workforce development; and supporting community policing. Mayors will engage in a large roundtable discussion the morning of Saturday, October 3rd to flesh out and qualify priorities, issue-by-issue. Each mayor will be able to comment, offer ideas, suggest additions and subtractions, etc. Following that discussion, they will announce the headlines in a press conference.

Mayor de Blasio will want to influence a number of the components based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing efforts through COO, TPA, and CUIA as well as press for components to be added to the agenda. The draft outline of currently considered priorities is below – each broad category will include bulleted clarifications. MBdB will not oppose any of the issues, but should fight to ensure that his core priority issues remain or are added to the 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda for the nation's mayors.

Recommendation: Ensure the following MBdB priorities are included in the USCM 2016 Presidential Priorities

- Transportation infrastructure investment increase
- Education: Universal Pre-Kindergarten and college affordability/student loan forgiveness
- Comprehensive Immigration Reform - CUIA
- Community Policing
- Climate Change and resiliency
- Affordable housing, including support for public housing
- Access to affordable broadband
- Federal minimum wage increase ($10.10 or $15 per hour TBD)
- National paid leave (sick and family) leave
- Human rights/Civil Rights – possibly add another overarching item to the list of 2016 priorities

USCM Draft 2016 Presidential Priorities Outline with MBdB priority recommendations

- 1. Rebuild our Nation's Transportation and Water Infrastructure, Investing in Strategic Expansions and Targeting More Resources to Cities and Metro Areas
 - a. Increase transportation investment. MBdB should ensure that USCM aims high to press for a significant increase in investment in a transportation reauthorization.
 - i. Supporters: Worked at a staff level to include in initial draft, passed a USCM resolution to make this emphasis reflect USCM policy, and we have a bipartisan group of mayors on board with this message through MBdB organizing. Staff will ensure mayors, like Cornett and Soglin will back.
- 2. Educate and Train a 21st Century Competitive Workforce
 - a. Item 2 refers to education broadly and workforce development. MBdB should at a minimum ensure that the mayor's 2016 presidential priorities include federal support for UPK and college affordability/student loan forgiveness and debt-free college.

- i. Supporters: Cornett on UPK, Gonzales, Segarra – staff will do initial outreach and additional research
- 3. Strengthen the Federal-Local Partnership on Homeland Security and Public Safety, and Reform our Broken Immigration System
 - a. Comprehensive Immigration Reform: CUIA to inform with specific components to be included, if any additions
 - i. Supporters: CUIA TBD mayors outreach plan.
 - b. Community Policing: Item 3 references public safety. This should include community policing.
 - i. Supporters: Freeman-Wilson
- 4. Craft Collaborative Water, Wastewater and Clean Air Policies to Maximize Health, Safety and Affordability
- 5. Expand Clean Energy Use to Grow the Economy and Protect the Environment, Using Cities as the Deployment Platform
 - a. Climate Change: USCM as a bipartisan organization should acknowledge climate change is real and a core issue challenging our cities. Mayors on the ground, Rs and Ds, get it - Congress makes it partisan.
 - i. Supporters: Brainard, TBD. This may need to be a MBdB – level conversation
 - b. Resiliency should be included as a priority under any environment/climate change issue item as something the next President needs to prioritize.
- 6. Spark Equitable and Sustainable Growth, Community Development and Affordable Housing Investments
 - a. Affordable housing should remain a priority, and should include specific mention of public housing as well as HOME and other federal housing supports.
 - i. Supporters: Warren, Bowser, Nutter
- 7. Encourage Pathways for Access, Entrepreneurship, Technology, and Innovation in Cities

Best Practice Forum: A Bridge to Reconnection - Developing Pathways to Postsecondary Education and/or Employment Programs for Disconnected Youth

Sponsor: USA Funds

Between 5-6 million young adults, ages 16-24, are not in school or working, and the aggregate social cost of these "opportunity youth" is alarmingly high. The commitment mayors have shown to addressing the unique challenges facing these underrepresented youth is a critical first step. This forum will highlight groundbreaking work, best practices and success factors to reconnect opportunity youth, help them access and succeed in higher education, and connect them to productive employment and meaningful lives.

COMMUNITY SERVICE EVENT - PARKS & PEOPLE

Mayor Rawlings-Blake and the Parks & People Foundation have arranged an opportunity for all meeting attendees to help prepare a blighted, inner block space in West Baltimore for revitalization. Participants will paint a graffiti covered wall; assist with invasive removal; and help clean up adjacent vacant lots.

The site is known as Inner Block D-87, selected specifically due to its location adjacent to Harlem Park Elementary/Middle School, the local Baltimore City Fire Station 8, and a group of driven residents who continue to tackle the daily vacancy and litter issues in the neighborhood. Impervious surface removal will begin this fall. The project is part of an ongoing effort undertaken by Parks & People, City and State government partners and the Harlem Park community to convert five inner block areas currently covered in asphalt to vibrant, green spaces. The efforts are augmented by street tree plantings and other, community-driven project, vacant lot improvement projects through City of Baltimore mayoral initiative, Power in Dirt.

Attire and Materials: Please come dressed to volunteer. Comfortable shoes with closed toes and long pants or jeans are required. Parks & People will lend you safety vests, gloves and all tools and supplies needed to accomplish the project.

Hey John and Ariel- Georgia is looking for our input on presidential priorities for the bi partisan mayors council.

I think we should consider the CEO pay loophole in addition to livable- not just minimum wage

Can you let her know what else you think? She's hoping to get this done fairly soon.

Thank you.

Geri-

Looping you in here on that USCM meeting we discussed late last week where the bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. Some of our current suggestions for MBdB's priorities include elevating elements of The Progressive Agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive.

I'll be refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA aspects.

Will you please take a look at the current recs (in the attached document) and give feedback on which TPA pieces you think we should prioritize, and note if anything I've suggested initially should be stripped out? I'm around on my cell. 347-497-1740.

Here you go. This document includes a list of who will attend the meeting and outline of the issues on the table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities (DRAFT). It also includes recommendations of what MBdB should influence based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing around COO and TPA. For each of these recs, we have begun to identify mayors who would be in that core group of supporters referenced below. I'm also sending along an updated schedule – Jerry Abramson from the White House IGA office will be speaking to mayors following their presser on Saturday afternoon. I don't rec. that he stay for that presentation.

Gina – here is your email with the asks for this document:

For prep Georgia is gathering who exactly will attend the meeting and the issues on table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities.

Once we have this list we will draft out which of these he will likely want to influence based on NYC needs, experience, beliefs and what components he may want to add.

We will then need to get his buy in.

Next we will work at a staff level to make sure we have the support of a core group of mayors in leadership on what the mayor will likely propose.

We should hold some call time at the end of this week and early next week for him to shore up some of the members to be sure he will have support for from key members, as well as some prep time.

Additionally, we will send the mayor our proposal for the future of COO so that he has it ready at this meeting though it may not come up.

+ Steph and Rich for the CUIA/immigration reform overlap.

Geri, John, Ariel, and Rich + Steph/CUIA –

Thank you for taking a look the draft Mayors Compact and giving feedback/recommendations about MBdB pressing to include additional priorities from TPA or CUIA in this bipartisan USCM Mayor's 2016 Presidential Priorities list. Please see below for background and then the "Mayors Compact Draft" for the current USCM working draft. The TPA and CUIA overlap includes:

- Minimum wage increase (to $10.10, not TPA's $15)
- Student loan forgiveness
- Support high standard 21st Century Trans-Pacific and Transatlantic trade deals with enforceable labor and environmental standards
- Immigration does not include comprehensive immigration reform, but aspects

I've talked to Geri and Rich about pulling in TPA and CUIA on this. Geri was going to pull in John and Rich, CUIA/steph. In short, this Saturday at the USCM leadership meeting bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive. I am leading refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA and immigration aspects.

There's also a space for MBdB to bring in NYC best practices to highlight local action/accomps. Does MOIA want to include any on immigration?

I'm around on my cell. [REDACTED]

Background: MBdB is scheduled to attend the United States Conference of Mayors (USCM) leadership meeting in Baltimore this weekend. USCM is using this leadership meeting to draft and ratify the USCM bipartisan priorities for the 2016 presidential campaign, establishing a national mayor's agenda. USCM will take this multipoint plan to candidates of both parties and their primaries.

The forty attending mayors will be presented with a list of ten issues (see outline below). Mayors will engage in a large roundtable discussion the morning of Saturday, October 3rd to flesh out and qualify priorities, issue-by-issue. Each mayor will be able to comment, offer ideas, suggest additions and subtractions, etc. As a progressive leader who has been engaged in pressing for a national urban agenda and a new member of USCM leadership, this will be an opportunity to shape document to reflect MBdB progressive priorities. Following that discussion, USCM will announce the headlines in a press conference. MBdB may want to want to influence a number of the components based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing efforts through your leadership in Cities of Opportunity, The Progressive Agenda, Cities United for Immigration Action.

Best,

Georiga

TO: The Mayor

FROM: Tom Cochran, CEO and Executive Director

On behalf of Conference of Mayors President Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, I am pleased to provide you with a draft of The Mayors' Compact for a Better America: A 2016 Call to Action. Once finalized, this document will provide our membership with guidance on priorities to share with all candidates for President and Congress over the course of the coming election year.

The 10 priority areas contained in this document were agreed upon by our top three officers—President Rawlings-Blake, Vice President Mick Cornett, and Second Vice President Mitch Landrieu—during a conference call. Following that conversation, I charged our staff to develop details under each area based on our adopted policies and mayoral discussions that have taken place in our standing committees, task forces, and working groups.

At our Fall Leadership Meeting in Baltimore on October 2-4, mayors will discuss and refine this document, as well as the steps we will take to advocate for these priorities.

Local Action Request—We Need to Know What You Are Doing

Mayor Rawlings-Blake has said that mayors cannot wait for Washington to act. So to supplement these national priorities, we ask that you share with us specific local actions that you are taking to advance any of the 10 priorities. We would like to include these actions in our final published document.

ACTION NEEDED: When you come to Baltimore, please bring a short written summary (about one paragraph) of any local best practices you have developed to advance the 10 priorities contained in The Mayors' Compact for a Better America. These actions can be actions you have already taken, actions that are ongoing, or actions you plan to take. Or, you can email this information prior to the meeting to Paul Leroux at pleroux@usmayors.org. If you have any questions, you can contact Paul at 202-861-6722.

Best Practice Forum: A Bridge to Reconnection - Developing Pathways to Postsecondary Education and/or Employment Programs for Disconnected Youth

Sponsor: USA Funds

Between 5-6 million young adults, ages 16-24, are not in school or working, and the aggregate social cost of these "opportunity youth" is alarmingly high. The commitment mayors have shown to addressing the unique challenges facing these underrepresented youth is a critical first step. This forum will highlight groundbreaking work, best practices and success factors to reconnect opportunity youth, help them access and succeed in higher education, and connect them to productive employment and meaningful lives.

COMMUNITY SERVICE EVENT - PARKS & PEOPLE

Mayor Rawlings-Blake and the Parks & People Foundation have arranged an opportunity for all meeting attendees to help prepare a blighted, inner block space in West Baltimore for revitalization. Participants will paint a graffiti covered wall; assist with invasive removal; and help clean up adjacent vacant lots.

The site is known as Inner Block D-87, selected specifically due to its location adjacent to Harlem Park Elementary/Middle School, the local Baltimore City Fire Station 8, and a group of driven residents who continue to tackle the daily vacancy and litter issues in the neighborhood. Impervious surface removal will begin this fall. The project is part of an ongoing effort undertaken by Parks & People, City and State government partners and the Harlem Park community to convert five inner block areas currently covered in asphalt to vibrant, green spaces. The efforts are augmented by street tree plantings and other, community-driven project, vacant lot improvement projects through City of Baltimore mayoral initiative, Power in Dirt.

Attire and Materials: Please come dressed to volunteer. Comfortable shoes with closed toes and long pants or jeans are required. Parks & People will lend you safety vests, gloves and all tools and supplies needed to accomplish the project.

THE MAYORS' COMPACT FOR A BETTER AMERICA: A 2016 Call to Action

[INTRODUCTION]

As the 2016 Election puts our nation's priorities into focus, mayors will push Presidential and Congressional candidates to recognize the important role cities play in shaping America's future.

The nation's prosperity depends on thriving cities and strong federal-city collaboration, characterized by accountability, transparency, and smart investments. It is important that candidates address their vision of this partnership and outline their plans to strengthen it.

Strengthening the federal-city partnership is critical because cities and Metro Areas are the engines of the U.S. economy, accounting for over 90% of GDP and wage income, and 87% of jobs. Looking ahead, 92% of U.S. economic growth will be generated in cities and Metro Areas.

U.S. Metro Areas are also players on the global scene, accounting for 36 of the world's largest 100 economies and a vast array of world-class institutions. Local leaders are major sources of innovation, creativity and new ideas in a fast-changing world.

At the same time, the stark reality is that many people still lack opportunity, fear for their safety, and feel disconnected from their broader community. These concerns extend to middle class families who feel their economic security threatened. The question before many Americans is, "Will my children have a better quality of life than I did?"

In cities and suburbs all across the country, too many people miss out on growth, and many areas have not recovered jobs lost during the Great Recession. Overall, the jobs that were regained during the recovery have lower wages than those lost during the recession, and those going back to work had lost over $93 billion in wages by mid 2014 (U.S. Metro Economies Report: Income and Wage Gaps, USCM/IHS, August 2014). In the same report, economic forecasters projected that income inequality will remain a long-term problem that will worsen unless addressed through national policies. Shortfalls in opportunity, equity, jobs, community development, and education combine to pose major challenges that can impact public safety and only compound these disparities further.

As we combat these interlocked challenges, our partnership with the federal government is further threatened by the dysfunction in Washington that no serious candidate can or should allow to continue. Washington has failed to produce a comprehensive transportation bill as streets, highway, bridges, and transit systems crumble. Washington imposes unfunded mandates and casts doubt on municipal tax-exempt financing of schools, hospitals, transportation, and water systems.

Washington inadequately funds workforce training and dramatically cuts back on programs meant to stabilize distressed neighborhoods. Gridlock strangles Washington's ability to pass budgets and address global issues that impact cities like climate protection, immigration reform, and security.

In view of this gridlock, mayors are not simply waiting for Washington to act. As highlighted in this document, mayors are working with business leaders, foundations, major education institutions, non-profit organizations, small business entrepreneurs, and local innovators to spur job creation, foster investment, increase opportunity, improve public schools, and so much more. Mayors balance budgets, work with people regardless of political ideology, and help find consensus among diverse opinions.

This is not about government helping government. This is about Federal inaction hurting real people in our cities each and every day. Mayors have a responsibility to our residents to hold Washington accountable on the issues that matter most to them. People need to hear how all candidates are going to end this gridlock and dysfunction. We need to hear about strengthening the relationship between national leaders and the level of government closest to the people – the cities, suburbs, and towns where people live their daily lives. How will the next President and Congress work together to strengthen the economic recovery, rebuild our crumbling infrastructure, help foster job creation, train workers, provide educational opportunity, and bring fairness back to our economy? America's cities are ready for serious proposals. We'll start the conversation by proposing The Mayors' Compact for A Better America.

[THE DETAILS]

I. Rebuild our Nation's Transportation and Water Infrastructure, Investing in Strategic Expansions and Targeting More Resources to Cities and Metro Areas

Surface Transportation

The condition of the nation's surface transportation infrastructure, including highways, bridges and public transit, continues to deteriorate as the United States falls further behind other nations in the share of gross national product committed to maintaining and expanding these conduits of growth and prosperity. Various report cards and grading systems track this decline, some of which can be traced to waning state and federal commitments. For nearly a generation, local governments have been the outliers, continuing their efforts to direct local resources to surface transportation challenges. Mayors and others, including taxpayers, know that local efforts cannot account for all of the investment needed to accelerate economic growth and support the nearly 60 million new people expected to make Metro Areas their home over the next 30 years. We must see increased federal (as well as state) commitments to surface transportation infrastructure. Therefore, the next President and Congress must:

- Increase their commitments to the nation's surface transportation networks, providing sustainable revenue streams to grow annual investment to help maintain existing facilities and add new capacities to support population and economic growth.
- Direct available resources to local and regional transportation decision-makers, such as cities, counties, and regional transportation agencies, who are leading and innovating with new technologies and other measures to enhance the performance of existing assets at a lower cost, while adding new facilities that are so crucial to future economic growth and mobility.

Water and Wastewater Infrastructure

Localities spend over $100 billion per year on water and sewer operations and infrastructure, but the challenges have become too great. Leaking pipes, water shortages, impacts from climate change, and unfunded mandates have all contributed to the infrastructure challenge facing communities. Therefore, the next President and Congress must invest in water and wastewater infrastructure, specifically:

- Provide resources in the form of grants, no interest or low interest loans, tax incentives, and permit flexibility, that promote investments to make local governments financially sustainable so they can continue to provide services in an affordable manner as well as comply with water quality laws. These investments include acquiring digital platforms, automating meters, detecting leaks, increasing energy efficiency, and utilizing renewable energy.

II. Educate and Train a 21st Century Competitive Workforce

Universal Pre-K Education

Especially on the heels of one of the largest economic crises in our country's history, the imperative to invest in education has never been greater. High-quality preschool provides the foundation for success in school and helps mitigate educational gaps that exist between children from high and low income families before they enter kindergarten. America's mayors have been strong advocates for high-quality early learning, and many of our cities have demonstrated that universal early learning has a proven, powerful impact for our children and profound impacts on later learning and success. Investments in preschool and other early childhood education also make economic sense – every dollar invested in high-quality early childhood education saves taxpayers on average $7 down the road, according to a report by economists Heckman and Masterov entitled "The Productivity Argument for Investing in Young Children." In particular, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Enact federal legislation that provides access for all 3- and 4-year olds from families with incomes at or below 200 percent of the federal poverty line to a high-quality, full-day early childhood education.
- Expand access to high-quality early childhood education for all of our nation's children.

K-12 Education Excellence

More than 25 percent of American students fail to graduate from high school in four years; for African-American and Hispanic students, this number is approaching 40 percent. The failure of many schools to properly educate students leaves them unprepared to compete in the global economy. Together, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Reform K-12 education to attract and retain the most talented educators and ensure their efficacy.
- Expand customized learning, matching instructional tasks to skill levels, interests, and abilities.
- Enhance choice and competition among schools.
- Reintroduce modern skills training and promote science, technology, engineering and math (STEM).
- Establish a coordinated, national effort to assess whether students are equipped to safeguard America's future prosperity.

Higher Education Access

In 2013, The U.S. Conference of Mayors endorsed a goal for the nation to achieve the highest proportion of students graduating from college in the world by 2020, and the goal that all Americans should be prepared to enroll in at least one year of higher education or job training to secure America as a world leader in the proportion of citizens completing college. Our college completion agenda must embrace every student, and we must increase our efforts to open the door to higher education access to more Americans. Therefore, mayors call on the next President and Congress to:

- Make two years of community college free for responsible students.
- Increase college affordability by raising the maximum Pell Grant and assure its continued growth, restructure tuition and financial aid policies to meet the needs of low-income students, and implement incentives to improve measurement and lower costs using advanced technology.
- Expand and enhance community college infrastructure to reflect changes in technology, advanced manufacturing and workplace needs.
- Establish an industry-led task force, co-chaired by top-level administration policymakers, to coordinate federal efforts and ensure the private sector is poised to support leverage federal training and education investments.

A Skilled and Adaptable Workforce

Investing in American workers is one of the most important things we can do to restore our economy. This helps employers find the skilled workers they need and moves workers into post-secondary educational pipelines and career pathways to prepare them for good jobs in high-growth and emerging occupations. In the coming years, the next President and Congress must:

- Increase funding for workforce innovation.
- Offer grants that provide quality employment and training services to address the needs of individuals requiring training, retraining, and skill upgrades.
- Coordinate agencies and departments to support Career Pathways programs in cities that link education and training services with the aim of increasing career advancement in given industries.
- Adopt immigration policies which help American companies attract and retain the best and brightest workers. Provide green cards for advanced degree graduates of American universities, create a new green card category for entrepreneurs, and reform current H-1B visa programs.

III. Strengthen the Federal-Local Partnership on Homeland Security and Public Safety, and Reform our Broken Immigration System

Crime and Violence Reduction

After years of decline, some cities are currently seeing an uptick in homicides and other violent crimes. Cities that had a record low number of homicides in 2014 are experiencing spikes in 2015, even with the same strategies in place. While the exact causes are unclear, officials have identified some common threads, including an increase in the number of guns, particularly those with large-capacity magazines, which are on the streets; involvement of people under supervision in these crimes; and the increased use of synthetic drugs. To reduce violence, the next President and Congress must do the following:

- Provide continued and increased funding for COPS hiring grants and other federal programs that enhance the ability of local police departments to do their jobs.
- Strengthen the gun background check system, including coverage of potentially dangerous mentally ill persons. Require the FBI to immediately notify local authorities when an individual fails a background check.
- Develop and support technology to help solve cases. This includes providing real-time surveillance and body-worn cameras, license plate readers, and facial recognition software. It also includes greater assistance by federal crime labs in evidence analysis and providing up-to-date field testing for synthetic drugs.
- Supplement local police with federal agents for cases involving high value targets, instruct U.S. Attorneys to partner with local prosecutors to strengthen prosecutions when suspects can be charged with federal crimes, and establish minimum expectations for federal prosecutions, particularly relating to illegal gun possession and illegal trafficking in the secondary gun market.
- Provide guidance to improve pretrial practices so that persons charged with gun-related and other violent crimes are not inappropriately released. When such suspects are released to the streets they should be closely monitored, potentially through the use of ankle bracelets or other practices.
- Revise sentencing laws to reduce incarceration rates among low level drug offenders and increase funding for Second Chance programs so that when prisoners are released to the community they have a greater likelihood of successful reentry. At the same time, enhance penalties for persons who have committed repeated violent crimes, particularly those involving guns.
- Provide assistance to local authorities to combat the use and sale of illegal drugs in our cities, since the federal government has not been effective in interdicting illegal drugs at our borders.

Community Policing

The events that began in Ferguson, Missouri on August 9, 2014 have brought to the forefront serious social issues that must be addressed – issues of race, class, prejudice, poverty, and inequality. These issues also underscore the complex nature of policing in communities across the country. Ensuring police protection is primarily a local responsibility in the United States. In 2012, municipalities spent $56 billion on on police protection. Cities account for 47 percent of the nation’s expenditures on police protection and employ 48 percent of the nation’s police personnel. National action is important, however, to ensure that mayors and police chiefs are able to work together to solve common problems, share promising approaches, and influence policy development. The next President and Congress should support these efforts through the following steps:

- Increase financial assistance to local police departments that can be used for hiring officers, providing them needed training and equipment, and improving practices.
- Aid local efforts to build and maintain trust between the police and the community. This could include providing sensitivity, cultural, and ethnicity training, as well as training in how to defuse incidents, through the Justice Department’s Community Relations Service and other agencies.

Homeland Security

The current threat environment is serious and law enforcement officers are critical to the nation’s ability to reduce violent extremism, prevent terrorist acts within the United States, and respond quickly if incidents do occur. To strengthen our preparedness and response, the next President and Congress must:

- Maintain and strengthen homeland security grant programs, with funding increased and provided directly to local governments so that local officials are equipped to prevent and respond to terrorist acts and reduce violent extremism.
- Increase support for police officers through both Homeland Security and Justice Department programs, including COPS hiring grants.
- Share intelligence with local authorities in a continuous, timely, and reciprocal manner.

Immigration Reform

There are immediate economic and moral imperatives to fix our broken immigration system. We call on the next President and Congress to:

- Strengthen border security by improving interior enforcement to enhance our ability to identify and remove visa overstays and provide a uniform system of employment verification. State and local law enforcement must be able to remain focused on community policing and not be required to enforce federal immigration laws.
- Establish a less bureaucratic and more time-sensitive system that allows workers of all types to lawfully come to America, either temporarily or permanently, and contribute to our economy.
- Provide an employment verification system that is uniform, accurate, and timely.
- Enable people to come out of the shadows and pursue the American Dream for themselves and their families. This is essential to our efforts to combat crime and provide effective police protection.

IV. Craft Collaborative Water, Wastewater and Environmental Policies to Maximize Health, Safety and Affordability

Local governments have long been significant stewards of the environment and public health by investing in core city services – providing clean drinking water and wastewater as well as implementing comprehensive solid waste management services. In fact, American cities now provide the safest public drinking water in the world. The funds used to provide these benefits are raised through constituent user fees and taxes. Unfortunately, due to numerous unfunded rules and regulations, this money is being diverted to fund other priorities away from local government’s core purpose of protecting the public health of its citizens. To mitigate this, we call upon the next President and Congress to:

- Partner with cities and work together to develop a realistic capital improvement plan, and create the right policy and financial assistance programs to upgrade utility infrastructure first with technology that will increase long term financial sustainability.
- Coordinate regulatory silos by priority and cost. EPA must collaborate with local governments on environmental and public health needs in a comprehensive manner that sets priorities and develops affordable timelines. This can be done by codifying and expanding EPA’s Integrated Planning to include all environmental rules, regulations and priorities. This would allow communities to work with EPA to develop comprehensive plans that flexibly address pressing environmental and health needs.

V. Expand Clean Energy Use to Grow the Economy and Protect the Climate and Environment, Using Cities as the Deployment Platform

In recent years, mayors have taken on national and global leadership on energy and climate protection. The energy choices our cities make in the future will impact our health, climate, and economy.

Clean energy options such as energy efficiency and renewable energy – wind, solar, geothermal, hydroelectric, and biomass – not only provide substantial societal benefits by strengthening our economy in a healthy and clean way, but also save cities millions in ancillary costs such as health care, infrastructure decay, and climate change mitigation and adaptation.

The U.S. Energy Information Administration projects the use of renewable energy to continue to grow in the next 25 years. Renewable resources like wind and solar have reached record production and consumption levels since 2014. According to The Conference’s “Clean Energy Solutions for America’s Cities” report, one-quarter of U.S. cities have set specific targets for increasing their use of renewable energy. As mayors, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Continue investment in energy efficiency and renewable energy in order to increase America’s competitiveness in the global economy and energy independence, build livable and sustainable communities, drive investment in new, clean energy solutions and create local jobs.
- Promote a stronger partnership between the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) and local governments and provide sufficient funding through an energy block grant structure or other structures at DOE to incentivize local energy programs.
- Empower cities to improve and enforce building codes, foster community-scale renewable energy, and create other programs and incentives to increase efficiency and reduce energy use in commercial and residential buildings.
- Adopt an aggressive national renewable energy portfolio standard and extend the renewable electricity production tax credit and the solar investment tax credit to accelerate the deployment of clean energy technologies in cities.

VI. Spark Equitable and Sustainable Growth, Community Development and Affordable Housing Investments

Community Development Block Grant and HOME Investment Partnerships Programs

Investment in the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) and HOME Program has not kept pace with need over the last several years. In fact, both partnerships have been severely cut since 2010.

CDBG responds to current and emerging community development needs. The program assists businesses in creating and retaining jobs in low and moderate income areas, improves the existing housing stock, funds public improvements such as senior centers and homeless facilities, and provides vital public services, such as day care for low-income working families, health care for children, and meals to the elderly.

CDBG has been cut by nearly $1 billion since FY 2010, from $3.9 billion to $3.0 billion in FY 2015. A total of 594 grantees were eligible to receive CDBG formula grants in 1975; today that number has grown to nearly 1,200 grantees receiving direct allocations, while the overall outlay to CDBG has not increased proportionally. The program has never been adjusted for inflation, but the associated costs, such as construction, labor, leasing, and maintenance of facilities, increase annually.

Serving as a resource to expand affordable housing through state and local public-private partnerships, HOME has completed nearly 493,000 units for new homebuyers, over 230,000 units for owner-occupied rehabilitation, and over 464,000 rental housing units. It has also provided direct rental assistance to over 228,000 households. Yet the HOME program has been cut over 50%, or $925 million, since FY 2010 and is now funded at the lowest level of its existence. Need continues to increase, with 300 more communities now participating in the program than at its start in 1993.

With respect to these two vital programs, we believe the next President and Congress must:

- Fund CDBG at no less than $3.3 billion and raise the public service cap from 15 percent to 25 percent for all entitlement communities to address public service needs. Allow cities with high percentages of blighted structures to use CDBG for economic redevelopment projects in partnership with private developers.
- Fund the HOME program at no less than $1.2 billion.

Blighted Neighborhood Restoration

During the Great Recession, thousands of residential and commercial properties were foreclosed, leaving blighted neighborhoods and communities throughout the country. From 2008 to 2010, the Neighborhood Stabilization Program distributed nearly $7 billion, supported an estimated 88,000 jobs, completed rehabilitation of nearly 50,000 units of affordable housing, and demolished nearly 25,000 blighted properties. But the work is not yet done, and the next President and Congress must take action to:

- Create a new program designed to purchase, rehabilitate, and redevelop foreclosed, abandoned, demolished, or vacant properties on both commercial and residential lots.

Rental Housing Supply

There is an increased need for rental housing. According to the National Apartment Association, renters make up one-half of the housing market. The nation needs to create and pursue policies to develop more rental housing, and specifically the next President and Congress must:

- Create a new rental housing production program to serve the needs of working families.
- Support the National Housing Trust Fund.
- Increase funding for the HOME Investment Partnerships program.
- Maintain one of the nation's largest infrastructure investments – public housing – through significant funding increases geared toward capital improvements.

VII. Encourage Pathways for Access, Entrepreneurship, Technology, and Innovation in Cities

Quality High Speed Internet Access

Our networks are the “spinal cord” of our cities and are crucial for innovation. Our cities require open and accessible broadband infrastructure. Government and the private sector must collaborate to build the information technology and communications infrastructure necessary to innovation, be it wired or wireless. We support a full build out of high-speed access, striving for gigabit internet for all residents and competition among multiple private and public IP service providers, which can increase quality of access and its value. Federal leadership in each of these areas is crucial to increasing access for all Americans, and we call on the next Administration and Congress to:

- Enforce strong open internet rules.
- Support cities in building municipal-owned fiber services.
- Pursue a national broadband strategy.

Digital Strategy and Open Data

Cities have pioneered digital strategies and embraced open data standards. Enabling data liberation at all levels of government and the private sector can spur entrepreneurship, foster economic growth, and create jobs. Open data in government creates a common language and provides accessibility, allowing developers to harness information in cities and solve common problems as a team; inside and outside of government. Open data leads to citizen-powered and citizen-developed apps, bolstering the thriving and rapidly growing “App Economy”, a sector which has since been responsible for almost half a million jobs in the U.S. since 2007. To support this growing sector, we urge the next President and Congress to:

- Sustain endeavors like the Presidential Innovation Fellows or the General Services Administration’s 18F, in order to improve service delivery through powerful digital tools.
- Collaborate with cities to accelerate and reduce costs of service delivery.

Smart Cities Investment

Smart Cities are maturing as technology and connectivity have improved. The Internet of Things (IoT) and sensors are key to transforming day-to-day life for government and its citizens.. We call on the next President and Congress to:

- Embrace the power of smart cities by investing to accelerate growth in this space.

VIII. Spur Innovation for Improved Access to Healthcare and the Development of Local Healthy Food Economies

Healthcare Accessibility

Mayors recognize that a strong federal and local partnership is necessary to ensure that everyone has the services they need to live healthy and productive lives. Cities and mayors across the nation are working to redefine and redesign what it is to live and work in a city by focusing on access to healthy food and high-quality and affordable health care.

In 2014, U.S. adults could buy a private health insurance plan through the Health Insurance Marketplace or state-based exchanges established as part of the Affordable Care Act (ACA). The ACA helped expand coverage to millions of currently uninsured people through the expansion of Medicaid eligibility and establishment of Health Insurance Marketplaces. Census data show that the percentage of people who are uninsured fell from 13.1 percent in 2013 to 10.4 percent in 2014.

However, more work is needed in the areas of prevention and cost containment. Today seven in ten deaths in the U.S. are related to chronic diseases such as high blood pressure, heart disease, and cancer, which are largely preventable. Additionally, 75 percent of health care dollars are spent treating such diseases. However, only three cents of each healthcare dollar spent in the U.S. (PDF) go toward prevention. Therefore, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Strengthen local and federal partnerships by investing in public health and prevention programs, working with states to expand Medicaid eligibility and by supporting research and tracking on key health measures.

Local and Healthy Food Economies

In the United States, obesity and diet-related chronic disease are major contributors to preventable mortality and morbidity. Today more than 1 in 3 children and adolescents, as well as two-thirds of adults, are overweight or obese. Food and food access have established themselves as important considerations for local governments. Food systems are fundamentally linked to issues such as health, equity, environmental sustainability and economic development.

The federal nutrition and emergency assistance programs offer a vital safety net, while other important programs are increasing access to healthy foods, stimulating new economic activity, creating links between cities and rural communities, and ensuring environmental stewardship.

The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), for example, lifted 3.9 million Americans above the poverty line in 2011, including 1.7 million children and 280,000 seniors. Extensive research also shows that SNAP improves dietary intake and health, especially among children, and with lasting effects. Because SNAP benefits are so urgently needed, they are spent quickly – 97 percent of benefits are redeemed by the end of the month of issuance. Moody's Analytics and USDA estimate that the economic growth impact of SNAP ranges from $1.73 to $1.79 per $1 of SNAP benefits. In light of these trends, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Develop a comprehensive national food policy that feeds the hungry, supports small farmers in urban and rural areas, and promotes access to healthy and affordable food for all residents. This includes strengthening incentives and infrastructure for local food production and distribution, as well as environmentally sustainable farming practices. It also includes providing better access to fresh foods, investment in programs providing healthy food, expansion of programs that help communities invest in retail markets or food-based businesses, increased access to farmers markets, and the expansion of farm-to-cafeteria programs that bring the freshest, locally grown food into school lunch programs, hospitals and other institutions.
- Increase federal reimbursement for in-school and out of school meal programs and create more flexibility around where children are able to eat Summer Meals, by allowing them to pick up meals from sites and eat them at home, or allowing states the option to provide low-income families with additional funds for groceries during the summer. To provide maximum flexibility, USDA must remove restrictions to the number and type of meals that may be served.
- Strengthen the food safety-net by maintaining current benefit levels for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) and strengthening the Emergency Food Assistance Program (TEFAP).
- Improve access to farm-fresh foods by expanding food stamp use at farmers markets, including increased use of Electronic Benefits Transfer (EBT) transactions. Expand the Senior Farmer's Market Nutrition Program, farm-to-cafeteria programs, and the Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Snack Program.
- Strengthen and expand agriculture conservation programs as a strategic investment in our country's agricultural infrastructure, including improving air and water quality and the protection of urban watersheds, and requiring conservation compliance for land covered by crop insurance.
- Support local and regional food system infrastructure.

IX. Re-Direct Tax Policy to Promote Investment in Cities, Advance Middle Class Growth, and Reduce Income Inequality

Tax-Exempt Municipal Bonds

For more than 100 years, tax-exempt municipal bonds have been the principal means used by state and local governments to finance critical infrastructure: schools, hospitals, water and sewer facilities, roads, mass transit systems and public power projects. Together, state and local governments are responsible for building and maintaining 75 percent of the nation's infrastructure, which is mostly financed by tax-exempt municipal bonds.

This federal, state, and local partnership represents a fair allocation of the cost between the different levels of governments for infrastructure used by the general public. For several years the President and Congress have introduced proposals to cap or eliminate the tax deduction on interest earnings from tax-exempt bonds. These proposals could significantly drive up the borrowing cost of state and local governments on critical infrastructure projects.

According to a 2013 joint study released by The U.S. Conference of Mayors and other intergovernmental organizations, if a 28% cap had been in place on the deduction between 2003 and 2012, it would have cost state and local governments $173 billion; and if the exemption had been had been eliminated during the same period, it would have cost $495 billion. Mayors call for the next President and Congress to:

- Maintain the current tax-exempt status of municipal bonds and oppose all efforts to cap, limit, eliminate, or replace tax-exempt municipal bonds.
- Make Permanent the Build America Bonds Program not as replacement but as a supplement to tax-exempt municipal bonds. State and local governments that issued these taxable bonds were paid a direct federal subsidy under the 2009 stimulus bill equal to 35 percent of the interest cost, which enabled them to save more than $12 billion in borrowing cost.

Main Street Competitiveness

Under current law (the Supreme Court's 1992 decision in Quill Corp. v. North Dakota), state and local governments are prohibited from requiring remote sellers to collect their sales taxes. This loophole has given remote sellers an unfair competitive advantage over local merchants on Main Street. According to the University of Tennessee, state and local governments lose an estimated $26 billion annually due to taxes that go uncollected on remote sales.

Therefore, we call for the next President and Congress to:

- Enact legislation that enables state and local governments to level the playing field between merchants on Main Street and remote sellers by allowing these jurisdictions to require the collection of sales taxes.

Community Revitalization Incentives

As local communities continue to recover from the Great Recession, our cities need more support to stimulate investment in underserved distressed communities. Low-income urban neighborhoods and rural communities do not have access capital needed to support and grow businesses, create jobs and sustain a healthy local economy. Mayors call for the next President and Congress to:

- Pass legislation to raise the federal minimum wage from $7.25 per hour to $10.10 per hour to increase the buying power of low-income working families.
- Enact a permanent extension of the New Market Tax Credit, which has a proven track record of stimulating economic growth. Between 2003 and 2012, the program generated $31 billion in direct investments to businesses, leveraged another $60 billion in total capital investment in distressed neighborhoods, and created 750,000 jobs.
- Enact legislation to make permanent the Child Tax Credit to support working families.

Wage Gap Reduction

The nation's mayors believe the economic security of their residents is essential to the future prosperity and stability of their cities. Unfortunately the wealth gap between high income and low income households continues to grow. Between 2007 and 2013 the wealth gap for the top ten percent of households by income increased from 127 to 183 times the median net worth of the bottom twenty percent of households by income. Further, the net worth for the bottom twenty percent of households in terms of income has declined forty percent from $9,000 in 2007 to $6200 in 2013. Mayors call for the next President and Congress to:

- Pass legislation increasing the Earned Income Tax credit to existing recipients.
- Reduce student debt through a mixture of scholarship, repayment, and debt forgiveness programs.
- Provide incentives to increase homeownership by increasing assistance for downpayment and closing costs through increased funding of the Community Development Block Grant program.

X. Increase the Economic Strength of Metro Economies Through the Promotion of Trade and Exports, and Attraction of International Tourism

Increased exports will contribute nearly one-quarter of future U.S. economic growth and represent a key component of the economic recovery. Competitive domestic energy resources, technology innovation, and a skilled workforce make the resurgence of U.S. manufactured goods one of the bright spots of the U.S. economy, despite recent the export challenges of a strong U.S. dollar and weak global demand.

U.S. Metro Areas play a critical role in this sector, accounting for nearly 90% of U.S. exports and providing key infrastructure such as ports and intermodal facilities to efficiently move goods. Global competition in the areas of port modernization and transportation systems, however, could threaten US ability to advance export growth; and failure to develop global trade deals, which would provide a “level playing” field for U.S. businesses, could put American businesses and workers at a disadvantage. Congressional failure to reauthorize the Export Import Bank, which helps U.S. businesses sell goods overseas, could also deal a blow to our efforts to expand exports.

Port and export related jobs have a 15-18% higher wage level, and therefore contribute to building a sound middle class. The ability to sell American-made products and services to a dramatically expanding global middle class, particularly in Asia, could significantly expand this job sector.

Meanwhile, international travelers stay longer and spend more than domestic travelers – an average of 17.5 nights and nearly $4,700 per person per trip. For every additional 34 overseas travelers who come to visit the U.S., an American job is created. In 2014, alone, more than 20.3 million travelers arrived through the Visa Waiver Program (VWP) generating $190 billion in economic output and supporting nearly one million jobs. Therefore, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Support high standard 21st Century Trans-Pacific and Transatlantic trade deals with enforceable labor and environmental standards.
- Expedite U.S port dredging and modernization to accommodate a new global fleet of PANAMAX ships by spending accumulated balances in the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund (HMTF); and expand the Inland Waterways Trust Fund (IWTF) to modernize the nation’s system of locks and inland waterways.
- Establish a new freight program as part of U.S. federal surface transportation law providing dedicated and flexible funding for intermodal freight facilities and connections, and port modernization to expedite movement of goods.
- Immediately reauthorize the Export Import Bank of the United States, which has expired.
- Expand national programs to help small and medium-sized businesses export goods overseas.
- Support expanding the Visa Waiver Program to facilitate travel and trade.

[NOT WAITING ON WASHINGTON - MAYORAL ACTIONS]

Note to USCM Leadership: We Need to Know What You Are Doing

Mayor Rawlings-Blake has said that mayors cannot wait for Washington to act. So to supplement these national priorities, we ask that you share with us specific local actions that you are taking to advance any of the 10 priorities. We would like to include these actions in our final published document.

ACTION NEEDED: When you come to Baltimore, please bring a short written summary (a paragraph) of any local best practices you have developed to advance the 10 priorities contained in The Mayors' Compact for a Better America. These actions can be actions you have already taken, actions that are ongoing, or actions you plan to take. Or, you can email this information prior to the meeting to Paul Leroux at pleroux@usmayors.org. If you have any questions, you can contact Paul at 202-861-6722.

Well, it seems as though in this initial draft USCM failed to include any principles around immigration and still got to a round 10 priorities.

Is there an opportunity to impact this?

What is the desired outcome?

Which mayors are championing it inside the conference?

Was there discussion of immigration at all? How was it excluded

Also, I do not know MBdB proposed press plan around this or who is handling that.

Who is making these decisions re: MBdB involvement in USCM/ Mayors organizing/ National agenda.

If there doesn't seem to be much to gain from this, I'd rather not engage except to bring it up that our mayoral coalition on immigration is active and has nearly 100 members so not sure how a body consisting of top mayors fails to mention immigration as a national priority.

Hi Georgia:

We have a draft version of CUIA principals that we are currently workshopping with our mayors offices- however it is NOT final.

See below points to discuss broadly or try to influence inclusion of some basic immigration reform principles in the USCM agenda.

Here is an overview:

- Pathway to citizenship for undocumented
- Family reunification through eliminating visa backlogs
- Increase in temporary worker programs that uphold labor standards for all workers
- Reduce obstacles to increase protections for refugee and asylum seekers + allocate necessary resources to ensure successful resettlement into local communities
- Support president's executive action on immigration
- Reduce financial and language barriers to citizenship

Also, please include Omar and not Rich on these emails going forward. Thanks for including CUIA!

+ Steph and Rich for the CUIA/immigration reform overlap.

Geri, John, Ariel, and Rich + Steph/CUIA –

Thank you for taking a look the draft Mayors Compact and giving feedback/recommendations about MBdB pressing to include additional priorities from TPA or CUIA in this bipartisan USCM Mayor's 2016 Presidential Priorities list. Please see below for background and then the "Mayors Compact Draft" for the current USCM working draft. The TPA and CUIA overlap includes:

- Minimum wage increase (to $10.10, not TPA's $15)
- Student loan forgiveness

- Support high standard 21st Century Trans-Pacific and Transatlantic trade deals with enforceable labor and environmental standards

- Immigration does not include comprehensive immigration reform, but aspects

I've talked to Geri and Rich about pulling in TPA and CUIA on this. Geri was going to pull in John and Rich, CUIA/steph. In short, this Saturday at the USCM leadership meeting bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive. I am leading refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA and immigration aspects.

There's also a space for MBdB to bring in NYC best practices to highlight local action/accomps. Does MOIA want to include any on immigration?

I'm around on my cell. 347-497-1740.

Background: MBdB is scheduled to attend the United States Conference of Mayors (USCM) leadership meeting in Baltimore this weekend. USCM is using this leadership meeting to draft and ratify the USCM bipartisan priorities for the 2016 presidential campaign, establishing a national mayor's agenda. USCM will take this multipoint plan to candidates of both parties and their primaries.

The forty attending mayors will be presented with a list of ten issues (see outline below). Mayors will engage in a large roundtable discussion the morning of Saturday, October 3rd to flesh out and qualify priorities, issue-by-issue. Each mayor will be able to comment, offer ideas, suggest additions and subtractions, etc. As a progressive leader who has been engaged in pressing for a national urban agenda and a new member of USCM leadership, this will be an opportunity to shape document to reflect MBdB progressive priorities. Following that discussion, USCM will announce the headlines in a press conference. MBdB may want to want to influence a number of the components based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing efforts through your leadership in Cities of Opportunity, The Progressive Agenda, Cities United for Immigration Action.

Best,

Georiga

On behalf of Conference of Mayors President Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, I am pleased to provide you with a draft of The Mayors' Compact for a Better America: A 2016 Call to Action. Once finalized, this document will provide our membership with guidance on priorities to share with all candidates for President and Congress over the course of the coming election year.

The 10 priority areas contained in this document were agreed upon by our top three officers—

President Rawlings-Blake, Vice President Mick Cornett, and Second Vice President Mitch Landrieu —during a conference call. Following that conversation, I charged our staff to develop details under each area based on our adopted policies and mayoral discussions that have taken place in our standing committees, task forces, and working groups.

At our Fall Leadership Meeting in Baltimore on October 2-4, mayors will discuss and refine this document, as well as the steps we will take to advocate for these priorities.

Here you go. This document includes a list of who will attend the meeting and outline of the issues on the table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities (DRAFT). It also includes recommendations of what MBdB should influence based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing around COO and TPA. For each of these recs, we have begun to identify mayors who would be in that core group of supporters referenced below. I'm also sending along an updated schedule – Jerry Abramson from the White House IGA office will be speaking to mayors following their presser on Saturday afternoon. I don't rec. that he stay for that presentation.

discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities.

Once we have this list we will draft out which of these he will likely want to influence based on NYC needs, experience, beliefs and what components he may want to add. We will then need to get his buy in.

Next we will work at a staff level to make sure we have the support of a core group of mayors in leadership on what the mayor will likely propose.

We should hold some call time at the end of this week and early next week for him to shore up some of the members to be sure he will have support for from key members, as well as some prep time.

Additionally, we will send the mayor our proposal for the future of COO so that he has it ready at this meeting though it may not come up.

Well, it seems as though in this initial draft USCM failed to include any principles around immigration and still got to a round 10 priorities.

Is there an opportunity to impact this?

- Yes, mayors can come to the table with edits at the leadership meeting. The idea here is to identify top items MBdB wants to edit and a strategy to get buy in from other attending mayors.

What is the desired outcome?

- This is a q for CUIA – is there value for CUIA in USCM’s bipartisan agenda including CUIA priorities?

Which mayors are championing it inside the conference?

- Leadership – Rawlings-Blake, Cornett, Landrieu are top three.
- Background on draft from USCM: The 10 priority areas contained in this document were agreed upon by our top three officers—President Rawlings-Blake, Vice President Mick Cornett, and Second Vice President Mitch Landrieu—during a conference call. Who is making these decisions re: MBdB involvement in USCM/ Mayors organizing/ National agenda.

- GBG is leading the USCM leadership meeting as of last week. All of it is going through Gina (and then EW).

For prep Georgia is gathering who exactly will attend the meeting and the issues on table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities.

Once we have this list we will draft out which of these he will likely want to influence based on NYC needs, experience, beliefs and what components he may want to add. We will then need to get his buy in.

Next we will work at a staff level to make sure we have the support of a core group of mayors in leadership on what the mayor will likely propose.

We should hold some call time at the end of this week and early next week for him to shore up some of the members to be sure he will have support for from key members, as well as some prep time.

Additionally, we will send the mayor our proposal for the future of COO so that he has it ready at this meeting though it may not come up.

CUIA works on immigration reforms -
+CNA and AS for input as to how to handle the immigration piece both for substance and optics

Subject: RE: National Mayors Agenda

Well, it seems as though in this initial draft USCM failed to include any principles around immigration and still got to a round 10 priorities.

Is there an opportunity to impact this?

- Yes, mayors can come to the table with edits at the leadership meeting. The idea here is to identify top items MBdB wants to edit and a strategy to get buy in from other attending mayors.

What is the desired outcome?

- This is a q for CUIA – is there value for CUIA in USCM’s bipartisan agenda including CUIA priorities?

Which mayors are championing it inside the conference?

- Leadership – Rawlings-Blake, Cornett, Landrieu are top three.
- Background on draft from USCM: The 10 priority areas contained in this document were agreed upon by our top three officers—President Rawlings-Blake, Vice President Mick Cornett, and Second Vice President Mitch Landrieu—during a conference call. Following that conversation, USCM CEO and Executive Director charged staff to develop details under each area based on our adopted policies and mayoral discussions that have taken place in our standing committees, task forces, and working groups.

At our Fall Leadership Meeting in Baltimore on October 2-4, mayors will discuss and refine this document, as well as the steps we will take to advocate for these priorities.

Was there discussion of immigration at all? How was it excluded

- Immigration is in there – see Priority III, page 2 and 5 - 8

Also, I do not know MBdB proposed press plan around this or who is handling that.

- Gina?

Who is making these decisions re: MBdB involvement in USCM/ Mayors organizing/ National agenda.

- GBG is leading the USCM leadership meeting as of last week. All of it is going through Gina

(and then EW).

If there doesn't seem to be much to gain from this, I'd rather not engage except to bring it up that our mayoral coalition on immigration is active and has nearly 100 members so not sure how a body consisting of top mayors fails to mention immigration as a national priority

Hi Georgia:

We have a draft version of CUIA principals that we are currently workshopping with our mayors offices- however it is NOT final.
See below points to discuss broadly or try to influence inclusion of some basic immigration reform principles in the USCM agenda.
Here is an overview:

- Pathway to citizenship for undocumented
- Family reunification through eliminating visa backlogs
- Increase in temporary worker programs that uphold labor standards for all workers
- Reduce obstacles to increase protections for refugee and asylum seekers + allocate necessary resources to ensure successful resettlement into local communities
- Support president's executive action on immigration
- Reduce financial and language barriers to citizenship

Also, please include Omar and not Rich on these emails going forward. Thanks for including CUIA!

+ Steph and Rich for the CUIA/immigration reform overlap.

Geri, John, Ariel, and Rich + Steph/CUIA –

Thank you for taking a look the draft Mayors Compact and giving feedback/recommendations about MBdB pressing to include additional priorities from TPA or CUIA in this bipartisan USCM Mayor's 2016 Presidential Priorities list. Please see below for background and then the "Mayors Compact Draft" for the current USCM working draft. The TPA and CUIA overlap includes:

- Minimum wage increase (to $10.10, not TPA's $15)
- Student loan forgiveness
- Support high standard 21st Century Trans-Pacific and Transatlantic trade deals with enforceable labor and environmental standards
- Immigration does not include comprehensive immigration reform, but aspects

I've talked to Geri and Rich about pulling in TPA and CUIA on this. Geri was going to pull in John and Rich, CUIA/steph. In short, this Saturday at the USCM leadership meeting bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive. I am leading refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA and immigration aspects.

There's also a space for MBdB to bring in NYC best practices to highlight local action/accomps. Does MOIA want to include any on immigration?

I'm around on my cell [REDACTED].

Background: MBdB is scheduled to attend the United States Conference of Mayors (USCM) leadership meeting in Baltimore this weekend. USCM is using this leadership meeting to draft and ratify the USCM bipartisan priorities for the 2016 presidential campaign, establishing a national mayor's agenda. USCM will take this multipoint plan to candidates of both parties and their primaries.

The forty attending mayors will be presented with a list of ten issues (see outline below). Mayors will engage in a large roundtable discussion the morning of Saturday, October 3rd to flesh out and qualify priorities, issue-by-issue. Each mayor will be able to comment, offer ideas, suggest additions and subtractions, etc. As a progressive leader who has been engaged in pressing for a national urban agenda and a new member of USCM leadership, this will be an opportunity to shape document to reflect MBdB progressive priorities. Following that discussion, USCM will announce the headlines in a press conference. MBdB may want to want to influence a number of the components based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing efforts through your leadership in Cities of Opportunity, The Progressive Agenda, Cities United for Immigration Action.

Best,

Georiga

TO: The Mayor

FROM: Tom Cochran, CEO and Executive Director

On behalf of Conference of Mayors President Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, I am pleased to provide you with a draft of The Mayors' Compact for a Better America: A 2016 Call to Action. Once finalized, this document will provide our membership with guidance on priorities to share with all candidates for President and Congress over the course of the coming election year.

The 10 priority areas contained in this document were agreed upon by our top three officers—President Rawlings-Blake, Vice President Mick Cornett, and Second Vice President Mitch Landrieu—during a conference call. Following that conversation, I charged our staff to develop details under each area based on our adopted policies and mayoral discussions that have taken place in our standing committees, task forces, and working groups.

Local Action Request—We Need to Know What You Are Doing

Mayor Rawlings-Blake has said that mayors cannot wait for Washington to act. So to supplement these national priorities, we ask that you share with us specific local actions that you are taking to advance any of the 10 priorities. We would like to include these actions in our final published document.

ACTION NEEDED: When you come to Baltimore, please bring a short written summary (about one paragraph) of any local best practices you have developed to advance the 10 priorities contained in The Mayors' Compact for a Better America. These actions can be actions you have already taken, actions that are ongoing, or actions you plan to take. Or, you can email this information prior to the meeting to Paul Leroux at pleroux@usmayors.org. If you have any questions, you can contact Paul at 202-861-6722.

Geri-

Looping you in here on that USCM meeting we discussed late last week where the bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. Some of our current suggestions for MBdB's priorities include elevating elements of The Progressive Agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive.

I'll be refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA aspects.

Will you please take a look at the current recs (in the attached document) and give feedback on which TPA pieces you think we should prioritize, and note if anything I've suggested initially should be stripped out? I'm around on my cell. [REDACTED]

Here you go. This document includes a list of who will attend the meeting and outline of the issues on the table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities (DRAFT). It also includes recommendations of what MBdB should influence based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing around COO and TPA. For each of these recs, we have begun to identify mayors who would be in that core group of supporters referenced below. I'm also sending along an updated schedule – Jerry Abramson from the White House IGA office will be speaking to mayors following their presser on Saturday afternoon. I don't rec. that he stay for that presentation.

Mayor Rawlings-Blake and the Parks & People Foundation have arranged an opportunity for all meeting attendees to help prepare a blighted, inner block space in West Baltimore for revitalization. Participants will paint a graffiti covered wall; assist with invasive removal; and help clean up adjacent vacant lots.

The site is known as Inner Block D-87, selected specifically due to its location adjacent to Harlem Park Elementary/Middle School, the local Baltimore City Fire Station 8, and a group of driven residents who continue to tackle the daily vacancy and litter issues in the neighborhood. Impervious surface removal will begin this fall. The project is part of an ongoing effort undertaken by Parks & People, City and State government partners and the Harlem Park community to convert five inner block areas currently covered in asphalt to vibrant, green spaces. The efforts are augmented by street tree plantings and other, community-driven project, vacant lot improvement projects through City of Baltimore mayoral initiative, Power in Dirt.

Attire and Materials: Please come dressed to volunteer. Comfortable shoes with closed toes and long pants or jeans are required. Parks & People will lend you safety vests, gloves and all tools and supplies needed to accomplish the project.

THE MAYORS' COMPACT FOR A BETTER AMERICA: A 2016 Call to Action

[INTRODUCTION]

As the 2016 Election puts our nation's priorities into focus, mayors will push Presidential and Congressional candidates to recognize the important role cities play in shaping America's future.

The nation's prosperity depends on thriving cities and strong federal-city collaboration, characterized by accountability, transparency, and smart investments. It is important that candidates address their vision of this partnership and outline their plans to strengthen it.

Strengthening the federal-city partnership is critical because cities and Metro Areas are the engines of the U.S. economy, accounting for over 90% of GDP and wage income, and 87% of jobs. Looking ahead, 92% of U.S. economic growth will be generated in cities and Metro Areas.

U.S. Metro Areas are also players on the global scene, accounting for 36 of the world's largest 100 economies and a vast array of world-class institutions. Local leaders are major sources of innovation, creativity and new ideas in a fast-changing world.

At the same time, the stark reality is that many people still lack opportunity, fear for their safety, and feel disconnected from their broader community. These concerns extend to middle class families who feel their economic security threatened. The question before many Americans is, "Will my children have a better quality of life than I did?"

In cities and suburbs all across the country, too many people miss out on growth, and many areas have not recovered jobs lost during the Great Recession. Overall, the jobs that were regained during the recovery have lower wages than those lost during the recession, and those going back to work had lost over $93 billion in wages by mid 2014 (U.S. Metro Economies Report: Income and Wage Gaps, USCM/IHS, August 2014). In the same report, economic forecasters projected that income inequality will remain a long-term problem that will worsen unless addressed through national policies. Shortfalls in opportunity, equity, jobs, community development, and education combine to pose major challenges that can impact public safety and only compound these disparities further.

As we combat these interlocked challenges, our partnership with the federal government is further threatened by the dysfunction in Washington that no serious candidate can or should allow to continue. Washington has failed to produce a comprehensive transportation bill as streets, highway, bridges, and transit systems crumble. Washington imposes unfunded mandates and casts doubt on municipal tax-exempt financing of schools, hospitals, transportation, and water systems.

Washington inadequately funds workforce training and dramatically cuts back on programs meant to stabilize distressed neighborhoods. Gridlock strangles Washington's ability to pass budgets and address global issues that impact cities like climate protection, immigration reform, and security.

In view of this gridlock, mayors are not simply waiting for Washington to act. As highlighted in this document, mayors are working with business leaders, foundations, major education institutions, non-profit organizations, small business entrepreneurs, and local innovators to spur job creation, foster investment, increase opportunity, improve public schools, and so much more. Mayors balance budgets, work with people regardless of political ideology, and help find consensus among diverse opinions.

This is not about government helping government. This is about Federal inaction hurting real people in our cities each and every day. Mayors have a responsibility to our residents to hold Washington accountable on the issues that matter most to them. People need to hear how all candidates are going to end this gridlock and dysfunction. We need to hear about strengthening the relationship between national leaders and the level of government closest to the people – the cities, suburbs, and towns where people live their daily lives. How will the next President and Congress work together to strengthen the economic recovery, rebuild our crumbling infrastructure, help foster job creation, train workers, provide educational opportunity, and bring fairness back to our economy? America's cities are ready for serious proposals. We'll start the conversation by proposing The Mayors' Compact for A Better America.

[THE DETAILS]

I. Rebuild our Nation's Transportation and Water Infrastructure, Investing in Strategic Expansions and Targeting More Resources to Cities and Metro Areas

Surface Transportation

The condition of the nation's surface transportation infrastructure, including highways, bridges and public transit, continues to deteriorate as the United States falls further behind other nations in the share of gross national product committed to maintaining and expanding these conduits of growth and prosperity. Various report cards and grading systems track this decline, some of which can be traced to waning state and federal commitments. For nearly a generation, local governments have been the outliers, continuing their efforts to direct local resources to surface transportation challenges. Mayors and others, including taxpayers, know that local efforts cannot account for all of the investment needed to accelerate economic growth and support the nearly 60 million new people expected to make Metro Areas their home over the next 30 years. We must see increased federal (as well as state) commitments to surface transportation infrastructure. Therefore, the next President and Congress must:

- Increase their commitments to the nation's surface transportation networks, providing sustainable revenue streams to grow annual investment to help maintain existing facilities and add new capacities to support population and economic growth.
- Direct available resources to local and regional transportation decision-makers, such as cities, counties, and regional transportation agencies, who are leading and innovating with new technologies and other measures to enhance the performance of existing assets at a lower cost, while adding new facilities that are so crucial to future economic growth and mobility.

Water and Wastewater Infrastructure

Localities spend over $100 billion per year on water and sewer operations and infrastructure, but the challenges have become too great. Leaking pipes, water shortages, impacts from climate change, and unfunded mandates have all contributed to the infrastructure challenge facing communities. Therefore, the next President and Congress must invest in water and wastewater infrastructure, specifically:

- Provide resources in the form of grants, no interest or low interest loans, tax incentives, and permit flexibility, that promote investments to make local governments financially sustainable so they can continue to provide services in an affordable manner as well as comply with water quality laws. These investments include acquiring digital platforms, automating meters, detecting leaks, increasing energy efficiency, and utilizing renewable energy.

II. Educate and Train a 21st Century Competitive Workforce

Universal Pre-K Education

Especially on the heels of one of the largest economic crises in our country's history, the imperative to invest in education has never been greater. High-quality preschool provides the foundation for success in school and helps mitigate educational gaps that exist between children from high and low income families before they enter kindergarten. America's mayors have been strong advocates for high-quality early learning, and many of our cities have demonstrated that universal early learning has a proven, powerful impact for our children and profound impacts on later learning and success. Investments in preschool and other early childhood education also make economic sense – every dollar invested in high-quality early childhood education saves taxpayers on average $7 down the road, according to a report by economists Heckman and Masterov entitled "The Productivity Argument for Investing in Young Children." In particular, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Enact federal legislation that provides access for all 3- and 4-year olds from families with incomes at or below 200 percent of the federal poverty line to a high-quality, full-day early childhood education.
- Expand access to high-quality early childhood education for all of our nation's children.

K-12 Education Excellence

More than 25 percent of American students fail to graduate from high school in four years; for African-American and Hispanic students, this number is approaching 40 percent. The failure of many schools to properly educate students leaves them unprepared to compete in the global economy. Together, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Reform K-12 education to attract and retain the most talented educators and ensure their efficacy.
- Expand customized learning, matching instructional tasks to skill levels, interests, and abilities.
- Enhance choice and competition among schools.
- Reintroduce modern skills training and promote science, technology, engineering and math (STEM).
- Establish a coordinated, national effort to assess whether students are equipped to safeguard America's future prosperity.

Higher Education Access

In 2013, The U.S. Conference of Mayors endorsed a goal for the nation to achieve the highest proportion of students graduating from college in the world by 2020, and the goal that all Americans should be prepared to enroll in at least one year of higher education or job training to secure America as a world leader in the proportion of citizens completing college. Our college completion agenda must embrace every student, and we must increase our efforts to open the door to higher education access to more Americans. Therefore, mayors call on the next President and Congress to:

- Make two years of community college free for responsible students.
- Increase college affordability by raising the maximum Pell Grant and assure its continued growth, restructure tuition and financial aid policies to meet the needs of low-income students, and implement incentives to improve measurement and lower costs using advanced technology.
- Expand and enhance community college infrastructure to reflect changes in technology, advanced manufacturing and workplace needs.
- Establish an industry-led task force, co-chaired by top-level administration policymakers, to coordinate federal efforts and ensure the private sector is poised to support leverage federal training and education investments.

A Skilled and Adaptable Workforce

Investing in American workers is one of the most important things we can do to restore our economy. This helps employers find the skilled workers they need and moves workers into post-secondary educational pipelines and career pathways to prepare them for good jobs in high-growth and emerging occupations. In the coming years, the next President and Congress must:

- Increase funding for workforce innovation.
- Offer grants that provide quality employment and training services to address the needs of individuals requiring training, retraining, and skill upgrades.
- Coordinate agencies and departments to support Career Pathways programs in cities that link education and training services with the aim of increasing career advancement in given industries.
- Adopt immigration policies which help American companies attract and retain the best and brightest workers. Provide green cards for advanced degree graduates of American universities, create a new green card category for entrepreneurs, and reform current H-1B visa programs.

III. Strengthen the Federal-Local Partnership on Homeland Security and Public Safety, and Reform our Broken Immigration System

Crime and Violence Reduction

After years of decline, some cities are currently seeing an uptick in homicides and other violent crimes. Cities that had a record low number of homicides in 2014 are experiencing spikes in 2015, even with the same strategies in place. While the exact causes are unclear, officials have identified some common threads, including an increase in the number of guns, particularly those with large-capacity magazines, which are on the streets; involvement of people under supervision in these crimes; and the increased use of synthetic drugs. To reduce violence, the next President and Congress must do the following:

- Provide continued and increased funding for COPS hiring grants and other federal programs that enhance the ability of local police departments to do their jobs.
- Strengthen the gun background check system, including coverage of potentially dangerous mentally ill persons. Require the FBI to immediately notify local authorities when an individual fails a background check.
- Develop and support technology to help solve cases. This includes providing real-time surveillance and body-worn cameras, license plate readers, and facial recognition software. It also includes greater assistance by federal crime labs in evidence analysis and providing up-to-date field testing for synthetic drugs.
- Supplement local police with federal agents for cases involving high value targets, instruct U.S. Attorneys to partner with local prosecutors to strengthen prosecutions when suspects can be charged with federal crimes, and establish minimum expectations for federal prosecutions, particularly relating to illegal gun possession and illegal trafficking in the secondary gun market.
- Provide guidance to improve pretrial practices so that persons charged with gun-related and other violent crimes are not inappropriately released. When such suspects are released to the streets they should be closely monitored, potentially through the use of ankle bracelets or other practices.
- Revise sentencing laws to reduce incarceration rates among low level drug offenders and increase funding for Second Chance programs so that when prisoners are released to the community they have a greater likelihood of successful reentry. At the same time, enhance penalties for persons who have committed repeated violent crimes, particularly those involving guns.
- Provide assistance to local authorities to combat the use and sale of illegal drugs in our cities, since the federal government has not been effective in interdicting illegal drugs at our borders.

Community Policing

The events that began in Ferguson, Missouri on August 9, 2014 have brought to the forefront serious social issues that must be addressed – issues of race, class, prejudice, poverty, and inequality. These issues also underscore the complex nature of policing in communities across the country. Ensuring police protection is primarily a local responsibility in the United States. In 2012, municipalities spent $56 billion on on police protection. Cities account for 47 percent of the nation’s expenditures on police protection and employ 48 percent of the nation’s police personnel. National action is important, however, to ensure that mayors and police chiefs are able to work together to solve common problems, share promising approaches, and influence policy development. The next President and Congress should support these efforts through the following steps:

- Increase financial assistance to local police departments that can be used for hiring officers, providing them needed training and equipment, and improving practices.
- Aid local efforts to build and maintain trust between the police and the community. This could include providing sensitivity, cultural, and ethnicity training, as well as training in how to defuse incidents, through the Justice Department’s Community Relations Service and other agencies.

Homeland Security

The current threat environment is serious and law enforcement officers are critical to the nation’s ability to reduce violent extremism, prevent terrorist acts within the United States, and respond quickly if incidents do occur. To strengthen our preparedness and response, the next President and Congress must:

- Maintain and strengthen homeland security grant programs, with funding increased and provided directly to local governments so that local officials are equipped to prevent and respond to terrorist acts and reduce violent extremism.
- Increase support for police officers through both Homeland Security and Justice Department programs, including COPS hiring grants.
- Share intelligence with local authorities in a continuous, timely, and reciprocal manner.

Immigration Reform

There are immediate economic and moral imperatives to fix our broken immigration system. We call on the next President and Congress to:

- Strengthen border security by improving interior enforcement to enhance our ability to identify and remove visa overstays and provide a uniform system of employment verification. State and local law enforcement must be able to remain focused on community policing and not be required to enforce federal immigration laws.
- Establish a less bureaucratic and more time-sensitive system that allows workers of all types to lawfully come to America, either temporarily or permanently, and contribute to our economy.
- Provide an employment verification system that is uniform, accurate, and timely.
- Enable people to come out of the shadows and pursue the American Dream for themselves and their families. This is essential to our efforts to combat crime and provide effective police protection.

IV. Craft Collaborative Water, Wastewater and Environmental Policies to Maximize Health, Safety and Affordability

Local governments have long been significant stewards of the environment and public health by investing in core city services – providing clean drinking water and wastewater as well as implementing comprehensive solid waste management services. In fact, American cities now provide the safest public drinking water in the world. The funds used to provide these benefits are raised through constituent user fees and taxes. Unfortunately, due to numerous unfunded rules and regulations, this money is being diverted to fund other priorities away from local government’s core purpose of protecting the public health of its citizens. To mitigate this, we call upon the next President and Congress to:

- Partner with cities and work together to develop a realistic capital improvement plan, and create the right policy and financial assistance programs to upgrade utility infrastructure first with technology that will increase long term financial sustainability.
- Coordinate regulatory silos by priority and cost. EPA must collaborate with local governments on environmental and public health needs in a comprehensive manner that sets priorities and develops affordable timelines. This can be done by codifying and expanding EPA’s Integrated Planning to include all environmental rules, regulations and priorities. This would allow communities to work with EPA to develop comprehensive plans that flexibly address pressing environmental and health needs.

V. Expand Clean Energy Use to Grow the Economy and Protect the Climate and Environment, Using Cities as the Deployment Platform

In recent years, mayors have taken on national and global leadership on energy and climate protection. The energy choices our cities make in the future will impact our health, climate, and economy.

Clean energy options such as energy efficiency and renewable energy – wind, solar, geothermal, hydroelectric, and biomass – not only provide substantial societal benefits by strengthening our economy in a healthy and clean way, but also save cities millions in ancillary costs such as health care, infrastructure decay, and climate change mitigation and adaptation.

The U.S. Energy Information Administration projects the use of renewable energy to continue to grow in the next 25 years. Renewable resources like wind and solar have reached record production and consumption levels since 2014. According to The Conference’s “Clean Energy Solutions for America’s Cities” report, one-quarter of U.S. cities have set specific targets for increasing their use of renewable energy. As mayors, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Continue investment in energy efficiency and renewable energy in order to increase America’s competitiveness in the global economy and energy independence, build livable and sustainable communities, drive investment in new, clean energy solutions and create local jobs.
- Promote a stronger partnership between the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) and local governments and provide sufficient funding through an energy block grant structure or other structures at DOE to incentivize local energy programs.
- Empower cities to improve and enforce building codes, foster community-scale renewable energy, and create other programs and incentives to increase efficiency and reduce energy use in commercial and residential buildings.
- Adopt an aggressive national renewable energy portfolio standard and extend the renewable electricity production tax credit and the solar investment tax credit to accelerate the deployment of clean energy technologies in cities.

VI. Spark Equitable and Sustainable Growth, Community Development and Affordable Housing Investments

Community Development Block Grant and HOME Investment Partnerships Programs

Investment in the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) and HOME Program has not kept pace with need over the last several years. In fact, both partnerships have been severely cut since 2010.

CDBG responds to current and emerging community development needs. The program assists businesses in creating and retaining jobs in low and moderate income areas, improves the existing housing stock, funds public improvements such as senior centers and homeless facilities, and provides vital public services, such as day care for low-income working families, health care for children, and meals to the elderly.

CDBG has been cut by nearly $1 billion since FY 2010, from $3.9 billion to $3.0 billion in FY 2015. A total of 594 grantees were eligible to receive CDBG formula grants in 1975; today that number has grown to nearly 1,200 grantees receiving direct allocations, while the overall outlay to CDBG has not increased proportionally. The program has never been adjusted for inflation, but the associated costs, such as construction, labor, leasing, and maintenance of facilities, increase annually.

Serving as a resource to expand affordable housing through state and local public-private partnerships, HOME has completed nearly 493,000 units for new homebuyers, over 230,000 units for owner-occupied rehabilitation, and over 464,000 rental housing units. It has also provided direct rental assistance to over 228,000 households. Yet the HOME program has been cut over 50%, or $925 million, since FY 2010 and is now funded at the lowest level of its existence. Need continues to increase, with 300 more communities now participating in the program than at its start in 1993.

With respect to these two vital programs, we believe the next President and Congress must:

- Fund CDBG at no less than $3.3 billion and raise the public service cap from 15 percent to 25 percent for all entitlement communities to address public service needs. Allow cities with high percentages of blighted structures to use CDBG for economic redevelopment projects in partnership with private developers.
- Fund the HOME program at no less than $1.2 billion.

Blighted Neighborhood Restoration

During the Great Recession, thousands of residential and commercial properties were foreclosed, leaving blighted neighborhoods and communities throughout the country. From 2008 to 2010, the Neighborhood Stabilization Program distributed nearly $7 billion, supported an estimated 88,000 jobs, completed rehabilitation of nearly 50,000 units of affordable housing, and demolished nearly 25,000 blighted properties. But the work is not yet done, and the next President and Congress must take action to:

- Create a new program designed to purchase, rehabilitate, and redevelop foreclosed, abandoned, demolished, or vacant properties on both commercial and residential lots.

Rental Housing Supply

There is an increased need for rental housing. According to the National Apartment Association, renters make up one-half of the housing market. The nation needs to create and pursue policies to develop more rental housing, and specifically the next President and Congress must:

- Create a new rental housing production program to serve the needs of working families.
- Support the National Housing Trust Fund.
- Increase funding for the HOME Investment Partnerships program.
- Maintain one of the nation's largest infrastructure investments – public housing – through significant funding increases geared toward capital improvements.

VII. Encourage Pathways for Access, Entrepreneurship, Technology, and Innovation in Cities

Quality High Speed Internet Access

Our networks are the “spinal cord” of our cities and are crucial for innovation. Our cities require open and accessible broadband infrastructure. Government and the private sector must collaborate to build the information technology and communications infrastructure necessary to innovation, be it wired or wireless. We support a full build out of high-speed access, striving for gigabit internet for all residents and competition among multiple private and public IP service providers, which can increase quality of access and its value. Federal leadership in each of these areas is crucial to increasing access for all Americans, and we call on the next Administration and Congress to:

- Enforce strong open internet rules.
- Support cities in building municipal-owned fiber services.
- Pursue a national broadband strategy.

Digital Strategy and Open Data

Cities have pioneered digital strategies and embraced open data standards. Enabling data liberation at all levels of government and the private sector can spur entrepreneurship, foster economic growth, and create jobs. Open data in government creates a common language and provides accessibility, allowing developers to harness information in cities and solve common problems as a team; inside and outside of government. Open data leads to citizen-powered and citizen-developed apps, bolstering the thriving and rapidly growing “App Economy”, a sector which has since been responsible for almost half a million jobs in the U.S. since 2007. To support this growing sector, we urge the next President and Congress to:

- Sustain endeavors like the Presidential Innovation Fellows or the General Services Administration’s 18F, in order to improve service delivery through powerful digital tools.
- Collaborate with cities to accelerate and reduce costs of service delivery.

Smart Cities Investment

Smart Cities are maturing as technology and connectivity have improved. The Internet of Things (IoT) and sensors are key to transforming day-to-day life for government and its citizens.. We call on the next President and Congress to:

- Embrace the power of smart cities by investing to accelerate growth in this space.

VIII. Spur Innovation for Improved Access to Healthcare and the Development of Local Healthy Food Economies

Healthcare Accessibility

Mayors recognize that a strong federal and local partnership is necessary to ensure that everyone has the services they need to live healthy and productive lives. Cities and mayors across the nation are working to redefine and redesign what it is to live and work in a city by focusing on access to healthy food and high-quality and affordable health care.

In 2014, U.S. adults could buy a private health insurance plan through the Health Insurance Marketplace or state-based exchanges established as part of the Affordable Care Act (ACA). The ACA helped expand coverage to millions of currently uninsured people through the expansion of Medicaid eligibility and establishment of Health Insurance Marketplaces. Census data show that the percentage of people who are uninsured fell from 13.1 percent in 2013 to 10.4 percent in 2014.

However, more work is needed in the areas of prevention and cost containment. Today seven in ten deaths in the U.S. are related to chronic diseases such as high blood pressure, heart disease, and cancer, which are largely preventable. Additionally, 75 percent of health care dollars are spent treating such diseases. However, only three cents of each healthcare dollar spent in the U.S. (PDF) go toward prevention. Therefore, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Strengthen local and federal partnerships by investing in public health and prevention programs, working with states to expand Medicaid eligibility and by supporting research and tracking on key health measures.

Local and Healthy Food Economies

In the United States, obesity and diet-related chronic disease are major contributors to preventable mortality and morbidity. Today more than 1 in 3 children and adolescents, as well as two-thirds of adults, are overweight or obese. Food and food access have established themselves as important considerations for local governments. Food systems are fundamentally linked to issues such as health, equity, environmental sustainability and economic development.

The federal nutrition and emergency assistance programs offer a vital safety net, while other important programs are increasing access to healthy foods, stimulating new economic activity, creating links between cities and rural communities, and ensuring environmental stewardship.

The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), for example, lifted 3.9 million Americans above the poverty line in 2011, including 1.7 million children and 280,000 seniors. Extensive research also shows that SNAP improves dietary intake and health, especially among children, and with lasting effects. Because SNAP benefits are so urgently needed, they are spent quickly – 97 percent of benefits are redeemed by the end of the month of issuance. Moody's Analytics and USDA estimate that the economic growth impact of SNAP ranges from $1.73 to $1.79 per $1 of SNAP benefits. In light of these trends, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Develop a comprehensive national food policy that feeds the hungry, supports small farmers in urban and rural areas, and promotes access to healthy and affordable food for all residents. This includes strengthening incentives and infrastructure for local food production and distribution, as well as environmentally sustainable farming practices. It also includes providing better access to fresh foods, investment in programs providing healthy food, expansion of programs that help communities invest in retail markets or food-based businesses, increased access to farmers markets, and the expansion of farm-to-cafeteria programs that bring the freshest, locally grown food into school lunch programs, hospitals and other institutions.
- Increase federal reimbursement for in-school and out of school meal programs and create more flexibility around where children are able to eat Summer Meals, by allowing them to pick up meals from sites and eat them at home, or allowing states the option to provide low-income families with additional funds for groceries during the summer. To provide maximum flexibility, USDA must remove restrictions to the number and type of meals that may be served.
- Strengthen the food safety-net by maintaining current benefit levels for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) and strengthening the Emergency Food Assistance Program (TEFAP).
- Improve access to farm-fresh foods by expanding food stamp use at farmers markets, including increased use of Electronic Benefits Transfer (EBT) transactions. Expand the Senior Farmer's Market Nutrition Program, farm-to-cafeteria programs, and the Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Snack Program.
- Strengthen and expand agriculture conservation programs as a strategic investment in our country's agricultural infrastructure, including improving air and water quality and the protection of urban watersheds, and requiring conservation compliance for land covered by crop insurance.
- Support local and regional food system infrastructure.

IX. Re-Direct Tax Policy to Promote Investment in Cities, Advance Middle Class Growth, and Reduce Income Inequality

Tax-Exempt Municipal Bonds

For more than 100 years, tax-exempt municipal bonds have been the principal means used by state and local governments to finance critical infrastructure: schools, hospitals, water and sewer facilities, roads, mass transit systems and public power projects. Together, state and local governments are responsible for building and maintaining 75 percent of the nation's infrastructure, which is mostly financed by tax-exempt municipal bonds.

This federal, state, and local partnership represents a fair allocation of the cost between the different levels of governments for infrastructure used by the general public. For several years the President and Congress have introduced proposals to cap or eliminate the tax deduction on interest earnings from tax-exempt bonds. These proposals could significantly drive up the borrowing cost of state and local governments on critical infrastructure projects.

According to a 2013 joint study released by The U.S. Conference of Mayors and other intergovernmental organizations, if a 28% cap had been in place on the deduction between 2003 and 2012, it would have cost state and local governments $173 billion; and if the exemption had been had been eliminated during the same period, it would have cost $495 billion. Mayors call for the next President and Congress to:

- Maintain the current tax-exempt status of municipal bonds and oppose all efforts to cap, limit, eliminate, or replace tax-exempt municipal bonds.
- Make Permanent the Build America Bonds Program not as replacement but as a supplement to tax-exempt municipal bonds. State and local governments that issued these taxable bonds were paid a direct federal subsidy under the 2009 stimulus bill equal to 35 percent of the interest cost, which enabled them to save more than $12 billion in borrowing cost.

Main Street Competitiveness

Under current law (the Supreme Court's 1992 decision in Quill Corp. v. North Dakota), state and local governments are prohibited from requiring remote sellers to collect their sales taxes. This loophole has given remote sellers an unfair competitive advantage over local merchants on Main Street. According to the University of Tennessee, state and local governments lose an estimated $26 billion annually due to taxes that go uncollected on remote sales.

Therefore, we call for the next President and Congress to:

- Enact legislation that enables state and local governments to level the playing field between merchants on Main Street and remote sellers by allowing these jurisdictions to require the collection of sales taxes.

Community Revitalization Incentives

As local communities continue to recover from the Great Recession, our cities need more support to stimulate investment in underserved distressed communities. Low-income urban neighborhoods and rural communities do not have access capital needed to support and grow businesses, create jobs and sustain a healthy local economy. Mayors call for the next President and Congress to:

- Pass legislation to raise the federal minimum wage from $7.25 per hour to $10.10 per hour to increase the buying power of low-income working families.
- Enact a permanent extension of the New Market Tax Credit, which has a proven track record of stimulating economic growth. Between 2003 and 2012, the program generated $31 billion in direct investments to businesses, leveraged another $60 billion in total capital investment in distressed neighborhoods, and created 750,000 jobs.
- Enact legislation to make permanent the Child Tax Credit to support working families.

Wage Gap Reduction

The nation's mayors believe the economic security of their residents is essential to the future prosperity and stability of their cities. Unfortunately the wealth gap between high income and low income households continues to grow. Between 2007 and 2013 the wealth gap for the top ten percent of households by income increased from 127 to 183 times the median net worth of the bottom twenty percent of households by income. Further, the net worth for the bottom twenty percent of households in terms of income has declined forty percent from $9,000 in 2007 to $6200 in 2013. Mayors call for the next President and Congress to:

- Pass legislation increasing the Earned Income Tax credit to existing recipients.
- Reduce student debt through a mixture of scholarship, repayment, and debt forgiveness programs.
- Provide incentives to increase homeownership by increasing assistance for downpayment and closing costs through increased funding of the Community Development Block Grant program.

X. Increase the Economic Strength of Metro Economies Through the Promotion of Trade and Exports, and Attraction of International Tourism

Increased exports will contribute nearly one-quarter of future U.S. economic growth and represent a key component of the economic recovery. Competitive domestic energy resources, technology innovation, and a skilled workforce make the resurgence of U.S. manufactured goods one of the bright spots of the U.S. economy, despite recent the export challenges of a strong U.S. dollar and weak global demand.

U.S. Metro Areas play a critical role in this sector, accounting for nearly 90% of U.S. exports and providing key infrastructure such as ports and intermodal facilities to efficiently move goods. Global competition in the areas of port modernization and transportation systems, however, could threaten US ability to advance export growth; and failure to develop global trade deals, which would provide a “level playing” field for U.S. businesses, could put American businesses and workers at a disadvantage. Congressional failure to reauthorize the Export Import Bank, which helps U.S. businesses sell goods overseas, could also deal a blow to our efforts to expand exports.

Port and export related jobs have a 15-18% higher wage level, and therefore contribute to building a sound middle class. The ability to sell American-made products and services to a dramatically expanding global middle class, particularly in Asia, could significantly expand this job sector.

Meanwhile, international travelers stay longer and spend more than domestic travelers – an average of 17.5 nights and nearly $4,700 per person per trip. For every additional 34 overseas travelers who come to visit the U.S., an American job is created. In 2014, alone, more than 20.3 million travelers arrived through the Visa Waiver Program (VWP) generating $190 billion in economic output and supporting nearly one million jobs. Therefore, we call on the next President and Congress to:

- Support high standard 21st Century Trans-Pacific and Transatlantic trade deals with enforceable labor and environmental standards.
- Expedite U.S port dredging and modernization to accommodate a new global fleet of PANAMAX ships by spending accumulated balances in the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund (HMTF); and expand the Inland Waterways Trust Fund (IWTF) to modernize the nation’s system of locks and inland waterways.
- Establish a new freight program as part of U.S. federal surface transportation law providing dedicated and flexible funding for intermodal freight facilities and connections, and port modernization to expedite movement of goods.
- Immediately reauthorize the Export Import Bank of the United States, which has expired.
- Expand national programs to help small and medium-sized businesses export goods overseas.
- Support expanding the Visa Waiver Program to facilitate travel and trade.

[NOT WAITING ON WASHINGTON - MAYORAL ACTIONS]

Note to USCM Leadership: We Need to Know What You Are Doing

Mayor Rawlings-Blake has said that mayors cannot wait for Washington to act. So to supplement these national priorities, we ask that you share with us specific local actions that you are taking to advance any of the 10 priorities. We would like to include these actions in our final published document.

ACTION NEEDED: When you come to Baltimore, please bring a short written summary (a paragraph) of any local best practices you have developed to advance the 10 priorities contained in The Mayors' Compact for a Better America. These actions can be actions you have already taken, actions that are ongoing, or actions you plan to take. Or, you can email this information prior to the meeting to Paul Leroux at pleroux@usmayors.org. If you have any questions, you can contact Paul at 202-861-6722.

I'll include some of that framing as I pull together TPs and loop you to overview.

I think it makes sense to include ending sequestration and something more specific on paid leave or something else that is a TPA priority. Geri – does it work for you to connect over the phone later today as you're coming back from the City?

On specifics, I am so far recommending that he press for specific changes to address comprehensive immigration reform (TPA overlap), 9/11 health care (non-TPA), and resiliency/climate change.

I think he should talk broadly about The Progressive Agenda - that we, as a bipartisan group of mayors, have something in common. We all understand that the country is moving back to cities, and that raises important questions for municipal government - namely: how do we build a bigger middle class in our cities?

One thing we need is federal action — specifically, a more progressive federal tax code. We can do that by closing tax loopholes that benefit the super-wealthy and big corporations, and using that money to invest in cities.

Invest in what? Well, The Progressive Agenda calls for investing in better wages and benefits (child care, Pre-K, a living wage, paid sick leave). But different cities have different needs. In NYC, for example, we need more affordable housing, a greater investment in transportation, and comprehensive immigration reform that brings our people out of the shadows.

Your city may have different priorities. But I think we can all agree that we need more federal support.

And to do that, we'll need additional revenue - which can and should come from those who aren't paying their fair share right now, namely those at the very top. That money should go to our cities.

Hey John and Ariel- Georgia is looking for our input on presidential priorities for the bi partisan mayors council.

I think we should consider the CEO pay loophole in addition to livable- not just minimum wage

Can you let her know what else you think? She's hoping to get this done fairly soon.

Thank you.

Geri-

Looping you in here on that USCM meeting we discussed late last week where the bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. Some of our current suggestions for MBdB's priorities include elevating elements of The Progressive Agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive.

I'll be refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA aspects.

Will you please take a look at the current recs (in the attached document) and give feedback on which TPA pieces you think we should prioritize, and note if anything I've suggested initially should be stripped out? I'm around on my cell. [REDACTED].

Here you go. This document includes a list of who will attend the meeting and outline of the issues on the table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities (DRAFT). It also includes recommendations of what MBdB should influence based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing around COO and TPA. For each of these recs, we have begun to identify mayors who would be in that core group of supporters referenced below. I'm also sending along an updated schedule – Jerry Abramson from the White House IGA office will be speaking to mayors following their presser on Saturday afternoon. I don't rec. that he stay for that presentation.

Gina – here is your email with the asks for this document:

For prep Georgia is gathering who exactly will attend the meeting and the issues on table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities.

Once we have this list we will draft out which of these he will likely want to influence based on NYC needs, experience, beliefs and what components he may want to add. We will then need to get his buy in.

Next we will work at a staff level to make sure we have the support of a core group of mayors in leadership on what the mayor will likely propose.

We should hold some call time at the end of this week and early next week for him to shore up some of the members to be sure he will have support for from key members, as well as some prep time.

Additionally, we will send the mayor our proposal for the future of COO so that he has it ready at this meeting though it may not come up.

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: Marti Adams Baker and John Del Cecato

EVENT: Taped television interview, Subway ride and walk-and-talk with Poppy Harlow of CNN, and Former Labor Secretary Robert Reich

NOTE: CNN Money writer Tammy Lubhi will shadow for a print piece.

MISSION/GOAL: The purpose of this interview is to reach a broad national audience and discuss The Progressive Agenda and the work YOU are doing as Mayor of New York City to tackle the income inequality crisis locally and nationally, and urge Washington to act.

Travel to Melrose neighborhood in the Bronx – one of the city’s poorest – to demonstrate the severity of the problem in NYC. In 20 minutes on the subway, will travel from a community with median income of $179K to just $21K.

HOME BASES:

- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we’re doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
- But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington’s help.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.
- There’s no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.

- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

DAY/DATE: Tuesday, September 29

MBDB TIME: 11:30 AM – 2:00 PM

LOCATIONS: CNN Studios: Time Warner Center
Morris Avenue Apartments: Morris Ave & E. 153rd St

PRESS: TAPED interview. Segments will air Thursday morning on New Day and Newsroom, and a longer segment will air Saturday on CNN Newsroom Weekend. They'll also publish a print story on CNN.com and CNNMoney.

EVENT SET-UP:

- Seated, taped in-studio interview (30 minutes) – YOU, Robert and Poppy
- Subway ride (20 minutes) – CNN will have two cameras shadowing YOU, Robert and Poppy riding the Subway. B-roll only.
- Walk and talk and affordable housing project visit in the Bronx (20 – 30 minutes) – CNN will get audio of YOUR conversations during the walk and talk

SEQUENCE OF EVENTS:

- 11:30 AM YOU arrive at CNN, proceed to makeup on 7th floor
- 12:00 PM Begin taped interview, 8th floor
- 12:30 PM Wrap taped interview, head outside to 59th St/Columbus Circle Subway station with Robert, Poppy and camera crew
- 1:00 PM Travel via Subway from 59th St/Columbus Circle to 149th St/Grand Concourse
 - Transfer from 1 train to 2 train at Lincoln Center
- 1:20 PM Arrive 149th St/Grand Concourse, walk to Morris Avenue Apartments

- YOU lead Poppy and Robert to the Morris Avenue Apartments at the corner of Morris Avenue and East 153rd Street (7 minute walk and talk on camera) – greet New Yorkers along the way
 - Head East on 149th Street
 - Turn Left at Morris Avenue and walk North three blocks (NOTE: YOU will pass Lincoln Hospital)
 - 1:30 PM Arrive at Morris Avenue Apartments
 - YOU participate in short stand-up interview with Poppy Harlow
 - YOU depart

TALKING POINTS

Inequality and Wages Quick Facts:

- The United States is one of the most unequal countries in terms of wealth distribution, only ranking behind Russia, Ukraine and Lebanon.
- Over the last 30 years, wage inequality in the United States has increased substantially, with the overall level of inequality now approaching the extreme level that prevailed prior to the Great Depression.
- The top 1% of Americans control nearly a quarter of all the country's income, the highest share controlled by the top 1% since 1928.
- The neighborhood you will travel to on the 2 train (149th Street) has a median family income of $16,580. Yet the Economic Policy Institute estimates that to live comfortably (paying for market rate housing, food, and other essentials) a family would need to earn $98,722 – or more than $80,00 above the median family income.
- This isn't a problem that is unique to New York City. In Robert Reich's town of Berkeley, California the median household income is $63,312 a year, which sounds good until you look at the same calculations for living comfortably, which total $81,621 – still a significant gap.
- Wages are falling in the U.S. Altogether, from 2000–2014, the median income for non-elderly households fell from $68,941 to $60,462, a decline of $8,479, or 12.3 percent.
- Many have said that the U.S. is still recovering from the recession and financial collapse of 2008, but new research (from EPI) shows that nearly every state has more people living in poverty than before 2007.
- The argument that we can't pay workers more is flawed. While wages have been stagnant or declining since the late 1970s, productivity has increased by 64% and CEO pay is at an all time high.

- We are not making the right investments at the national level. A new report out last week shows that U.S. has a higher proportion of children living in poverty than most other high-income countries, and it spends just 0.7 percent of its GDP on benefits for families—a fraction of what other middle- and high-income countries spend.
- 20 percent of American children live in households that earn less than half of the median household income. In Canada, that figure is 14. In Germany and Ireland, it's 10. In the U.K., a country that invests heavily in daycare subsidies and cash payments to moms, it's only 9.
- We have also not made needed progress in closing racial income gaps. In 2014, a white male working full year, full time earned an average of $74,108 while his African American counterpart earned $52,236 – more than $20,000 less.

TPA Momentum

In just the last few months we have seen:

- NYS Minimum Wage Announcement
- National Expansion of Overtime Threshold
- HRC announcing support of debt free college
- Pittsburgh passing paid sick leave
- House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi coming out for $15/hour national minimum wage
- NY Wage Board passing $15 for Fast Food Workers
- Kansas City raising minimum wage
- Saint Louis raising minimum wage
- Oregon Governor Kate Brown passing The Fair Shot Agenda, which includes Paid Sick Leave
- Atlanta passing Paid Family Leave
- LA Minimum wage increase
- Congressional Progressive Caucus endorsing TPA
- Presidential forum in November

In NYC, we have addressed these key principles by:

- Launching a mayoral task force to bring together mayors from across the country to develop an action plan to challenge the growing inequality crisis in America
- Delivering on promise of universal, full-day pre-K and afterschool for all New York City children for the first time in the city's history
- Taking a historic step toward ending the overuse and abuse of stop-and-frisk, while also keeping crime down

- Signing into law major expansion of paid sick leave, extending rights to more than 500,000 New Yorkers

Bronx-Specific Facts and Figures

Wanted to bring you to South Bronx to show what we're doing to lift up residents of the poorest congressional district in the Nation.

Affordable Housing

- Unveiled Affordable Housing plan in Concourse Village in May 2014
- Under my plan, the City has financed 8,543 affordable units in the Bronx, including 7,798 in the South Bronx
- 475 new affordable apartments under construction in this neighborhood
- More than 1,000 currently affordable apartments preserved or rehabilitated right in this very area
- Ex: Morris Avenue Apartments—15 stories, 175 new apartments, 36 for formerly homeless—100% affordable, opens next summer

Pre-K

- In this neighborhood alone, 555 kids now enrolled in full-day Pre-K, up from 150 two years ago, nearly 4X increase
 - Borough-wide – we have 13,480 pre-k students enrolled this year compared to 4,250 two years ago
- There are 7 new Pre-K programs within just a few blocks of here

Homeless

- Since the beginning of this administration, Bronx outreach workers have placed 181 street homeless people into housing (152 in transitional housing and 29 in permanent housing).
- There are now 3 Safe Havens in the borough. We added a Safe Haven with 125 beds in January 2015.

NYCHA/Broadband

- Committed $70 million in capital investment over the next 10 years for free or low-cost wireless services for low-income communities.
- Mott Haven Houses is one of five NYCHA developments that will get broadband access. The wireless networks will provide internet service of at least 25 Mbps for all residents.

Time Spent in South Bronx

- Spent considerable amount of time here. Visited nearly 20 times, including:
 - Unveiled Affordable Housing plan in Concourse Village in May 2014
 - Announced record-breaking 20,325 affordable apartments and homes financed in FY 2015 – enough for 50,000 New Yorkers: Highbridge in July 2015
- Announced $52 million investment to launch 40 new community schools in high-need neighborhoods: Highbridge in June 2014

- Signed Executive Order to increase living wage and expand it to thousands more workers: Mott Haven in September 2014
- Announced \$10 million investment in free broadband service for five NYCHA developments including Mott Haven: Mott Haven Houses in July 2015

BACKGROUND ON MORRIS AVENUE APARTMENTS

When completed, Morris Avenue Apartments (655 Morris Avenue) will be a 15-story new construction mixed-use development providing 176 affordable housing units for low and moderate-income families. Thirty six of these units will be reserved for formerly homeless individuals. The project will also include approximately 10,000 SF of ground floor retail and community space for the Melrose neighborhood of the Bronx. The project closed in June 2014 and is expected to be completed in June 2016.

Since the start of Housing New York, through 8/31/2015, the City has financed 8,543 affordable units in the Bronx, including 7,798 in the South Bronx (CD 1-6), and 1,086 in BX1, where the reporter will be. City-wide, the total financed under HNY is 29,847.

BACKGROUND ON ROBERT REICH’S BOOK, “SAVING CAPITALISM: FOR THE MANY, NOT THE FEW”

In SAVING CAPITALISM, Reich, who has been sounding the alarm about inequality in America for 25 years now, reveals the cycles of power and influence that have created the new American oligarchy, shrunk the middle class, and driven the United States to the greatest income inequality and wealth disparity in eighty years. As the rules by which the “free” market operates have changed over the past decades, they’ve evolved to serve the needs of those with the most political influence—moneyed interest groups with lobbyists and big donations to make themselves heard. As a result, large corporations can declare bankruptcy and wipe the slate clean, but homeowners and student debtors can’t. Wall Street bankers get bailed out when they gamble excessively, while millions of Americans lose their jobs, homes, and savings. Big companies monopolize industries and collude on prices, causing us to pay more. Trade treaties (like the much-debated TPP) protect corporate intellectual property and financial assets but not the jobs and wages of average Americans. And on it goes.

As Reich notes, these pre-distributions upward are far greater than any re-distributions downward, but they’re hidden from view. And while the rules by which the market operates are increasingly skewed against everyday Americans, discussion of them is obscured by the notion that government should be smaller and the market should be “free.” As Reich shows, this is a false debate, and the real issue facing us is making sure that our capitalism and our government works for all Americans, not just those who have power and means to influence the rules. SAVING CAPITALISM is an indictment of our economic status quo and a revelatory look at how our system really functions.

ROBERT B. REICH is Chancellor’s Professor of Public Policy at the Richard and Rhoda Goldman School of Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley, and senior fellow at the Blum Center for Developing Economies. He has served in three national administrations and has written fourteen books, including The Work of Nations, which has been translated into twenty-two languages, and the best sellers Supercapitalism and Locked in the Cabinet. He lives in Berkeley.

BACKGROUND ON POPPY HARLOW

Poppy Harlow is the anchor of CNN Newsroom Weekend on Saturdays from 3-6pm ET and 7-8pm ET, and Sundays from 5-8pm ET. With her weekly series “American Opportunity,” Poppy covers income inequality regularly. Based in New York City, Harlow is also a correspondent for CNN covering breaking news, as well as reporting features and investigative stories.

As a result, large corporations can declare bankruptcy and wipe the slate clean, but homeowners and student debtors can’t. Wall Street bankers get bailed out when they gamble excessively, while millions of Americans lose their jobs, homes, and savings. Big companies monopolize industries and collude on prices, causing us to pay more. Trade treaties (like the much-debated TPP) protect corporate intellectual property and financial assets but not the jobs and wages of average Americans. And on it goes.

As Reich notes, these pre-distributions upward are far greater than any re-distributions downward, but they’re hidden from view. And while the rules by which the market operates are increasingly skewed against everyday Americans, discussion of them is obscured by the notion that government should be smaller and the market should be “free.” As Reich shows, this is a false debate, and the real issue facing us is making sure that our capitalism and our government works for all Americans, not just those who have power and means to influence the rules. SAVING CAPITALISM is an indictment of our economic status quo and a revelatory look at how our system really functions.

REICH is Chancellor’s Professor of Public Policy at the Richard and Rhoda Goldman School of Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley, and senior fellow at the Blum Center for Developing Economies. He has served in three national administrations and has written fourteen books, including The Work of Nations, which has been translated into twenty-two languages, and the best sellers Supercapitalism and Locked in the Cabinet. Event/Meeting Briefing Information

- EVENT: Taped television interview, Subway ride and walk-and-talk with Poppy Harlow of CNN, and Former Labor Secretary Robert Reich
- NOTE: CNN Money writer Tammy Lubhi will shadow for a print piece.*
- MISSION/GOAL: The purpose of this interview is to reach a broad national audience and discuss The Progressive Agenda and the work YOU are doing as Mayor of New York City to tackle the income inequality crisis locally and nationally, and urge Washington to act.
- Travel to Melrose neighborhood in the Bronx – one of the city’s poorest – to demonstrate the severity of the problem in NYC. In 20 minutes on the subway, will travel from a community with median income of $179K to just $21K.
- HOME BASES:
- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we’re doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
 - But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington’s help.
 - The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again.

We need to reward work, not wealth – work.

As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.

There's no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.

- We'll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

DAY/DATE: Tuesday, September 29
MBDB TIME: 11:30 AM – 2:00 PM

LOCATIONS: CNN Studios: Time Warner Center
Morris Avenue Apartments: Morris Ave & E. 153rd St

PRESS: TAPED interview. Segments will air Thursday morning on New Day and Newsroom, and a longer segment will air Saturday on CNN Newsroom Weekend. They'll also publish a print story on CNN.com and CNNMoney.

EVENT SET-UP:

- Seated, taped in-studio interview (30 minutes) – YOU, Robert and Poppy
- Subway ride (20 minutes) – CNN will have two cameras shadowing YOU, Robert and Poppy riding the Subway. B-roll only.
- Walk and talk and affordable housing project visit in the Bronx (20 – 30 minutes) – CNN will get audio of YOUR conversations during the walk and talk

SEQUENCE OF EVENTS:

- 11:30 AM YOU arrive at CNN, proceed to makeup on 7th floor

- 12:00 PM Begin taped interview, 8th floor
 - 12:30 PM Wrap taped interview, head outside to 59th St/Columbus Circle Subway station with Robert, Popppy and camera crew
 - 1:00 PM Travel via Subway from 59th St/Columbus Circle to 149th St/Grand Concourse
 - Transfer from 1 train to 2 train at Lincoln Center
 - 1:20 PM Arrive 149th St/Grand Concourse, walk to Morris Avenue Apartments
 - YOU lead Poppy and Robert to the Morris Avenue Apartments at the corner of Morris Avenue and East 153rd Street (7 minute walk and talk on camera) – greet New Yorkers along the way
 - Head East on 149th Street
 - Turn Left at Morris Avenue and walk North three blocks (NOTE: YOU will pass Lincoln Hospital)
 - 1:30 PM Arrive at Morris Avenue Apartments
 - YOU participate in short stand-up interview with Poppy Harlow
 - YOU depart

TALKING POINTS

Inequality and Wages Quick Facts:

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->The United States is one of the most unequal countries in terms of wealth distribution, only ranking behind Russia, Ukraine and Lebanon.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->Over the last 30 years, wage inequality in the United States has increased substantially, with the overall level of inequality now approaching the extreme level that prevailed prior to the Great Depression.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->The top 1% of Americans control nearly a quarter of all the country's income, the highest share controlled by the top 1% since 1928.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->The neighborhood you will travel to on the 2 train (149th Street) has a median family income of $16,580. Yet the Economic Policy Institute estimates that to live comfortably (paying for market rate housing, food, and other essentials) a family would need to earn $98,722 – or more than $80,00 above the median family income.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->This isn't a problem that is unique to New York City. In Robert Reich's town of Berkeley, California the median household income is $63,312 a year, which sounds good until you look at the same calculations for living comfortably, which total $81,621 – still a significant gap.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->Wages are falling in the U.S. Altogether, from 2000–2014, the median income for non-elderly households fell from $68,941 to $60,462, a decline of $8,479, or 12.3 percent.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->Many have said that the U.S. is still recovering from the recession and financial collapse of 2008, but new research (from EPI) shows that nearly every state has more people living in poverty than before 2007.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->The argument that we can't pay workers more is flawed. While wages have been stagnant or declining since the late 1970s, productivity has increased by 64% and CEO pay is at an all time high.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->We are not making the right investments at the national level. A new report out last week shows that U.S. has a higher proportion of children living in poverty than most other high-income countries, and it spends just 0.7 percent of its GDP on benefits for families—a fraction of what other middle- and high-income countries spend.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->20 percent of American children live in households that earn less than half of the median household income. In Canada, that figure is 14. In Germany and Ireland, it's 10. In the U.K., a country that invests heavily in daycare subsidies and cash payments to moms, it's only 9.

<!--[if !supportLists]--> · <!--[endif]-->We have also not made needed progress in closing racial income gaps. In 2014, a white male working full year, full time earned an average of $74,108 while his African American counterpart earned $52,236 – more than $20,000 less.

TPA Momentum

In just the last few months we have seen:

- NYS Minimum Wage Announcement
- National Expansion of Overtime Threshold
- HRC announcing support of debt free college
- Pittsburgh passing paid sick leave
- House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi coming out for $15/hour national minimum wage
- NY Wage Board passing $15 for Fast Food Workers
- Kansas City raising minimum wage
- Saint Louis raising minimum wage
- Oregon Governor Kate Brown passing The Fair Shot Agenda, which includes Paid Sick Leave
- Atlanta passing Paid Family Leave
- LA Minimum wage increase
- Congressional Progressive Caucus endorsing TPA
- Presidential forum in November

In NYC, we have addressed these key principles by:

- Launching a mayoral task force to bring together mayors from across the country to develop an action plan to challenge the growing inequality crisis in America
- Delivering on promise of universal, full-day pre-K and afterschool for all New York City children for the first time in the city’s history
- Taking a historic step toward ending the overuse and abuse of stop-and-frisk, while also keeping crime down
- Signing into law major expansion of paid sick leave, extending rights to more than 500,000 New Yorkers

Bronx-Specific Facts and Figures

Wanted to bring you to South Bronx to show what we’re doing to lift up residents of the poorest congressional district in the Nation.

Affordable Housing

- Unveiled Affordable Housing plan in Concourse Village in May 2014
- Under my plan, the City has financed 8,543 affordable units in the Bronx, including 7,798 in the South Bronx
- 475 new affordable apartments under construction in this neighborhood
- More than 1,000 currently affordable apartments preserved or rehabilitated right in this very area
- Ex: Morris Avenue Apartments—15 stories, 175 new apartments, 36 for formerly homeless—100% affordable, opens next summer

Pre-K

- In this neighborhood alone, 555 kids now enrolled in full-day Pre-K, up from 150 two years ago, nearly 4X increase
 - Borough-wide – we have 13,480 pre-k students enrolled this year compared to 4,250 two years ago
- There are 7 new Pre-K programs within just a few blocks of here

Homeless

- Since the beginning of this administration, Bronx outreach workers have placed 181 street homeless people into housing (152 in transitional housing and 29 in permanent housing).
- There are now 3 Safe Havens in the borough. We added a Safe Haven with 125 beds in January 2015.

NYCHA/Broadband

- Committed $70 million in capital investment over the next 10 years for free or low-cost wireless services for low-income communities.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Mott Haven Houses is one of five NYCHA developments that will get broadband access. The wireless networks will provide internet service of at least 25 Mbps for all residents.

Time Spent in South Bronx

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Spent considerable amount of time here.

BACKGROUND ON MORRIS AVENUE APARTMENTS

When completed, Morris Avenue Apartments (655 Morris Avenue) will be a 15-story new construction mixed-use development providing 176 affordable housing units for low and moderate-income families. Thirty six of these units will be reserved for formerly homeless individuals. The project will also include approximately 10,000 SF of ground floor retail and community space for the Melrose neighborhood of the Bronx. The project closed in June 2014 and is expected to be completed in June 2016.

Since the start of Housing New York, through 8/31/2015, the City has financed 8,543 affordable units in the Bronx, including 7,798 in the South Bronx (CD 1-6), and 1,086 in BX1, where the reporter will be. City-wide, the total financed under HNY is 29,847.

BACKGROUND ON ROBERT REICH’S BOOK, “SAVING CAPITALISM: FOR THE MANY, NOT THE FEW”

In SAVING CAPITALISM, Reich, who has been sounding the alarm about inequality in America for 25 years now, reveals the cycles of power and influence that have created the new American oligarchy, shrunk the middle class, and driven the United States to the greatest income inequality and wealth disparity in eighty years. As the rules by which the “free” market operates have changed over the past decades, they’ve evolved to serve the needs of those with the most political influence—moneyed interest groups with lobbyists and big donations to make themselves heard. As a result, large corporations can declare bankruptcy and wipe the slate clean, but homeowners and student debtors can’t. Wall Street bankers get bailed out when they gamble excessively, while millions of Americans lose their jobs, homes, and savings. Big companies monopolize industries and collude on prices, causing us to pay more. MAJOR POINTS TO LAND:

- 1. In New York City, we're doing everything we can to tackle income inequality. But we need the state and federal government to be our partners – particularly in advancing a more progressive federal tax code, so we can invest in our ever-growing cities.
- 2. There is no secret pot of money. If we're going to build a strong middle class and lift people out of poverty, we need millionaires and billionaires and big corporations to pay their fair share of taxes.
- 3. Just a couple of years ago, Bob Reich was a pretty lonely voice in talking about income inequality. Now it seems like politicians everywhere, on both sides of the aisle, are doing so. That's progress – but we now need specific policies to combat inequality. That's what The Progressive Agenda – www.ProgressiveAgenda.us is all about.

4. Donald Trump talks about making America great again. We're here to say that the way to do that is to make America FAIR again. Fair taxes. Fair trade laws. Fair wages and benefits for working people. A fair system for criminal justice, retirement, immigration – all the things that rewrite the rules to help regular people, not the One Percent.

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: Marti Adams Baker and John Del Cecato

EVENT: Taped television interview, Subway ride and walk-and-talk with Poppy Harlow of CNN, and Former Labor Secretary Robert Reich

NOTE: CNN Money writer Tammy Lubhi will shadow for a print piece.

MISSION/GOAL: The purpose of this interview is to reach a broad national audience and discuss The Progressive Agenda and the work YOU are doing as Mayor of New York City to tackle the income inequality crisis locally and nationally, and urge Washington to act.

Travel to Melrose neighborhood in the Bronx – one of the city’s poorest – to demonstrate the severity of the problem in NYC. In 20 minutes on the subway, will travel from a community with median income of $179K to just $21K.

HOME BASES:

- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we’re doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
- But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington’s help.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
 - As a society, as a nation, as a government, we reward wealth more and more every day, which is just concentrating wealth into fewer and fewer hands. It's not just smart, clever people in the financial industry. It's a set of government policies that continually allow them to concentrate the wealth.
- There’s no two ways about it: we have an economic crisis in this country. The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- We’ll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

DAY/DATE: Tuesday, September 29
MBDB TIME: 11:30 AM – 2:00 PM

LOCATIONS: CNN Studios: Time Warner Center
Morris Avenue Apartments: Morris Ave & E.
153rd St

PRESS: TAPED interview. Segments will air Thursday morning on New Day and Newsroom, and a longer segment will air Saturday on CNN Newsroom Weekend. They'll also publish a print story on CNN.com and CNNMoney.

EVENT SET-UP:

- Seated, taped in-studio interview (30 minutes) – YOU, Robert and Poppy
- Subway ride (20 minutes) – CNN will have two cameras shadowing YOU, Robert and Poppy riding the Subway. B-roll only.
- Walk and talk and affordable housing project visit in the Bronx (20 – 30 minutes) – CNN will get audio of YOUR conversations during the walk and talk

SEQUENCE OF EVENTS:

- 11:30 AM YOU arrive at CNN, proceed to makeup on 7th floor
- 12:00 PM Begin taped interview, 8th floor
- 12:30 PM Wrap taped interview, head outside to 59th St/Columbus Circle Subway station with Robert, Poppy and camera crew
- 1:00 PM Travel via Subway from 59th St/Columbus Circle to 149th St/Grand Concourse
 - Transfer from 1 train to 2 train at Lincoln Center
- 1:20 PM Arrive 149th St/Grand Concourse, walk to Morris Avenue Apartments
- YOU lead Poppy and Robert to the Morris Avenue Apartments at the corner of Morris Avenue and East 153rd Street (7 minute walk and talk on camera) – greet New Yorkers along the way
 - Head East on 149th Street

- Turn Left at Morris Avenue and walk North three blocks (NOTE: YOU will pass Lincoln Hospital)
 - 1:30 PM Arrive at Morris Avenue Apartments
 - YOU participate in short stand-up interview with Poppy Harlow
 - YOU depart

TALKING POINTS

Inequality and Wages Quick Facts:

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->The United States is one of the most unequal countries in terms of wealth distribution, only ranking behind Russia, Ukraine and Lebanon.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Over the last 30 years, wage inequality in the United States has increased substantially, with the overall level of inequality now approaching the extreme level that prevailed prior to the Great Depression.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->The top 1% of Americans control nearly a quarter of all the country's income, the highest share controlled by the top 1% since 1928.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->The neighborhood you will travel to on the 2 train (149th Street) has a median family income of $16,580. Yet the Economic Policy Institute estimates that to live comfortably (paying for market rate housing, food, and other essentials) a family would need to earn $98,722 – or more than $80,00 above the median family income.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->This isn't a problem that is unique to New York City. In Robert Reich's town of Berkeley, California the median household income is $63,312 a year, which sounds good until you look at the same calculations for living comfortably, which total $81,621 – still a significant gap.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Wages are falling in the U.S. Altogether, from 2000–2014, the median income for non-elderly households fell from $68,941 to $60,462, a decline of $8,479, or 12.3 percent.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->Many have said that the U.S. is still recovering from the recession and financial collapse of 2008, but new research (from EPI) shows that nearly every state has more people living in poverty than before 2007.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->The argument that we can't pay workers more is flawed. While wages have been stagnant or declining since the late 1970s, productivity has increased by 64% and CEO pay is at an all time high.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->We are not making the right investments at the national level. A new report out last week shows that U.S. has a higher proportion of children living in poverty than most other high-income countries, and it spends just 0.7 percent of its GDP on benefits for families—a fraction of what other middle- and high-income countries spend.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->20 percent of American children live in households that earn less than half of the median household income. In Canada, that figure is 14. In Germany and Ireland, it's 10. In the U.K., a country that invests heavily in daycare subsidies and cash payments to moms, it's only 9.

<!--[if !supportLists]-->· <!--[endif]-->We have also not made needed progress in closing racial income gaps. In 2014, a white male working full year, full time earned an average of $74,108 while his African American counterpart earned $52,236 – more than $20,000 less.

TPA Momentum

In just the last few months we have seen:

- NYS Minimum Wage Announcement
- National Expansion of Overtime Threshold
- HRC announcing support of debt free college
- Pittsburgh passing paid sick leave
- House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi coming out for $15/hour national minimum wage
- NY Wage Board passing $15 for Fast Food Workers
- Kansas City raising minimum wage
- Saint Louis raising minimum wage
- Oregon Governor Kate Brown passing The Fair Shot Agenda, which includes Paid Sick Leave
- Atlanta passing Paid Family Leave
- LA Minimum wage increase
- Congressional Progressive Caucus endorsing TPA
- Presidential forum in November

In NYC, we have addressed these key principles by:

- Launching a mayoral task force to bring together mayors from across the country to develop an action plan to challenge the growing inequality crisis in America

- Delivering on promise of universal, full-day pre-K and afterschool for all New York City children for the first time in the city’s history
- Taking a historic step toward ending the overuse and abuse of stop-and-frisk, while also keeping crime down
- Signing into law major expansion of paid sick leave, extending rights to more than 500,000 New Yorkers

Bronx-Specific Facts and Figures

Wanted to bring you to South Bronx to show what we’re doing to lift up residents of the poorest congressional district in the Nation.

Affordable Housing

- Unveiled Affordable Housing plan in Concourse Village in May 2014
- Under my plan, the City has financed 8,543 affordable units in the Bronx, including 7,798 in the South Bronx
- 475 new affordable apartments under construction in this neighborhood
- More than 1,000 currently affordable apartments preserved or rehabilitated right in this very area
- Ex: Morris Avenue Apartments—15 stories, 175 new apartments, 36 for formerly homeless—100% affordable, opens next summer

Pre-K

- In this neighborhood alone, 555 kids now enrolled in full-day Pre-K, up from 150 two years ago, nearly 4X increase
 - Borough-wide – we have 13,480 pre-k students enrolled this year compared to 4,250 two years ago
- There are 7 new Pre-K programs within just a few blocks of here

Homeless

- Since the beginning of this administration, Bronx outreach workers have placed 181 street homeless people into housing (152 in transitional housing and 29 in permanent housing).
- There are now 3 Safe Havens in the borough. We added a Safe Haven with 125 beds in January 2015.

NYCHA/Broadband

- Committed $70 million in capital investment over the next 10 years for free or low-cost wireless services for low-income communities.

· Mott Haven Houses is one of five NYCHA developments that will get broadband access. The wireless networks will provide internet service of at least 25 Mbps for all residents.

Time Spent in South Bronx

· Spent considerable amount of time here. Visited nearly 20 times, including:

BACKGROUND ON MORRIS AVENUE APARTMENTS

When completed, Morris Avenue Apartments (655 Morris Avenue) will be a 15-story new construction mixed-use development providing 176 affordable housing units for low and moderate-income families. Thirty six of these units will be reserved for formerly homeless individuals. The project will also include approximately 10,000 SF of ground floor retail and community space for the Melrose neighborhood of the Bronx. The project closed in June 2014 and is expected to be completed in June 2016.

Since the start of Housing New York, through 8/31/2015, the City has financed 8,543 affordable units in the Bronx, including 7,798 in the South Bronx (CD 1-6), and 1,086 in BX1, where the reporter will be. City-wide, the total financed under HNY is 29,847.

BACKGROUND ON ROBERT REICH’S BOOK, “SAVING CAPITALISM: FOR THE MANY, NOT THE FEW”

In SAVING CAPITALISM, Reich, who has been sounding the alarm about inequality in America for 25 years now, reveals the cycles of power and influence that have created the new American oligarchy, shrunk the middle class, and driven the United States to the greatest income inequality and wealth disparity in eighty years. As the rules by which the “free” market operates have changed over the past decades, they’ve evolved to serve the needs of those with the most political influence—moneyed interest groups with lobbyists and big donations to make themselves heard. As a result, large corporations can declare bankruptcy and wipe the slate clean, but homeowners and student debtors can't. Wall Street bankers get bailed out when they gamble excessively, while millions of Americans lose their jobs, homes, and savings. Big companies monopolize industries and collude on prices, causing us to pay more. Trade treaties (like the much-debated TPP) protect corporate intellectual property and financial assets but not the jobs and wages of average Americans. And on it goes.

As Reich notes, these pre-distributions upward are far greater than any re-distributions downward, but they're hidden from view. And while the rules by which the market operates are increasingly skewed against everyday Americans, discussion of them is obscured by the notion that government should be smaller and the market should be "free." As Reich shows, this is a false debate, and the real issue facing us is making sure that our capitalism and our government works for all Americans, not just those who have power and means to influence the rules. SAVING CAPITALISM is an indictment of our economic status quo and a revelatory look at how our system really functions.

ROBERT B. REICH is Chancellor's Professor of Public Policy at the Richard and Rhoda Goldman School of Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley, and senior fellow at the Blum Center for Developing Economies. He has served in three national administrations and has written fourteen books, including The Work of Nations, which has been translated into twenty-two languages, and the best sellers Supercapitalism and Locked in the Cabinet. He lives in Berkeley.

MAJOR POINTS TO LAND:

- 1. In New York City, we're doing everything we can to tackle income inequality. But we need the state and federal government to be our partners – particularly in advancing a more progressive federal tax code, so we can invest in our ever-growing cities.
- 2. There is no secret pot of money. If we're going to build a strong middle class and lift people out of poverty, we need millionaires and billionaires and big corporations to pay their fair share of taxes.
- 3. Just a couple of years ago, Bob Reich was a pretty lonely voice in talking about income inequality. Now it seems like politicians everywhere, on both sides of the aisle, are doing so. That's progress – but we now need specific policies to combat inequality. That's what The Progressive Agenda – www.ProgressiveAgenda.us is all about.

4. Donald Trump talks about making America great again. We're here to say that the way to do that is to make America FAIR again. Fair taxes. Fair trade laws. Fair wages and benefits for working people. A fair system for criminal justice, retirement, immigration – all the things that rewrite the rules to help regular people, not the One Percent.

Subject: TPA internal coordination and logistics w CH press

Hey all -

So as we all know we had a little left hand/right hand on some outbound TPA stuff, and as a result we were caught a lil flat footed by the video announcement today
Not end of world but it got the TPA travel out in front of the govt USCM stuff, which we would have liked to have done together

Since this stuff is only going to ramp up, I think this provides opportunity for us to really tighten and improve communications and planning between Team TPA and City Hall

To that end, moving fwd on all comms/press stuff for TPA – events, outbound emails/videos/etc, press bookings – should go from Team TPA to Marti Adams-Baker, part of our comms planning team...Marti can then calendar it against the rest of the stuff we have going out and goin on, assign and inform ppl here as necessary, and in essence be our point of contact. Team TPA will continue to identify and lobby for media/comms opportunities to drive TPA, and Marti will be the liaison between TPA and CH comms/press to make them happen.

This should help us stay more organized, more synced, and more coordinated.

Thanks much!

De Blasio heading to Washington again for progressive conference

By Laura Nahmias

12:45 p.m. | Sep. 28, 2015

Mayor Bill de Blasio is making another trip to Washington, D.C., to push his progressive agenda.

The mayor, who has traveled to the capital before to push his national political agenda, is heading there again Friday to address a conference of business and labor leaders and other progressive politicians aimed at promoting national changes in economic policy, according to an invite sent out Monday by the conference's organizer.

Later Friday and Saturday, de Blasio will attend a meeting of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, de Blasio spokeswoman Karen Hinton said.

The conference where de Blasio will speak Friday morning — called “Forging a New Alliance: the Progressive Movement and the Socially Conscious Business Community” — costs $150 per person to attend and is sponsored by American Family Voices, a well-known 501(c)4 that supports Democratic and liberal causes. That political action committee's founder Mike Lux has close ties to Sen. Elizabeth Warren, a leading figure in the Democratic party's progressive wing.

The conference aims to “bring together representatives of the business community and leaders in the national progressive movement,” and participants will “explore shared policy priorities and how we may work together to collaborate on a legislative agenda, support businesses with progressive values, and build state level infrastructure,” according to an invitation to the conference posted online.

De Blasio's trip comes after he traveled to Washington last spring to launch a national campaign called the Progressive Agenda to push for changes in national economic policy, including a $15 minimum wage, closing the carried-interest tax loophole and national paid sick leave and paid family leave.

A video promoting the Friday event was released Monday, featuring de Blasio along with Sen. Warren, Sen. Sherrod Brown of Ohio and Rep. Raul Grijalva of Arizona.

The more than seven-minute video, called “Fairness AND Growth,” opens with an image of Pope Francis and a quote from him: “While the income of a minority is increasing exponentially, that of the majority is crumbling. This imbalance results from ideologies which uphold the absolute autonomy of markets and financial speculation.”

Then de Blasio appears, leaning on a podium, as he talks about the economic parts of his agenda.

“The Progressive Agenda works from the concept that we need to reward work, not just wealth, in this country, and basically is a set of ideas about how we raise wages and benefits, how we help working families and how we create progressive taxation in this country,” de Blasio says in the video.

“The reason I think this is the kind of coalition effort that will make a difference, is we're already seeing leaders from all over the country, elected officials, labor leaders, activists, cultural figures, signing on to this effort because they realize that this is a moment where progressive change is possible,” he continues.

As he talks, a list of his agenda's supporters flashes on the screen. Among its listed backers are several actors and figures who have been major supporters of de Blasio's mayoralty — like actors Susan Sarandon, Cynthia Nixon and Steve Buscemi, as well as left-leaning political magazine The Nation's editor and publisher Katrina vanden Heuvel.

My first crack at Q&A for briefing this evening... Let me know what I'm missing

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS POPPY HARLOW EVENT

Q: Why is income inequality such a big problem in your mind – as opposed to, say, climate change or protecting women’s health care?

A: Climate change and women’s health care are incredibly important. And they’re very much a part of what we’re talking about. For example, we want trade deals that protect – rather than undermine – environmental regulations. That’s why I believe TPP is a bad deal. We need to invest not only in women’s health care, but establish equal pay for equal work. The Progressive Agenda isn’t a comprehensive list of what must be done to tackle inequality, but it’s a start.

Q: What about racial justice? Elizabeth Warren gave a speech that separated racial injustice from income inequality. Is she right?

A: She’s absolutely right. We need to tackle institutional bias in our criminal justice system. The Progressive Agenda points out that we need to invest in schools, not jails – and give those returning from prison a second chance. In New York City, we’ve dramatically reformed Stop and Frisk, and are reforming Rikers. We need to bridge a divide between police and communities of color. It’s not enough for our hearts to break at the news of an unarmed man being killed. We need to change our policies to PROVE that Black Lives Matter.

Q: Talk about Donald Trump for a minute. He’s pointed out that hedge fund guys are getting away with murder, as it relates to the tax code. Do you agree with him?

A: Well, when he first uttered those words, I was amazed – and had to admit that Donald Trump and I finally agreed on something! But then I saw the details of his tax plan, which couples the closing of one loophole with new proposals to dramatically LOWER taxes on millionaires and billionaires. That’s going to put the country in a deep hole. And since there’s no secret pot of money, guess where Donald Trump or the Republicans are going to make it up? They’re going to have to slash funding for education, affordable housing, transportation – all the things that help lift up people who are struggling. That’s a non-starter. It’s not just about making America great again. It’s about making America FAIR again.

Q: You’re going to Washington later this week to speak to progressives about your agenda. With Republicans controlling Congress, what makes you think there’s ANY ability to get any of this done?

A: There’s no question that it’s going to be tough. But we’re already seeing something pretty remarkable. A couple of years ago, Bob Reich was a pretty lonely voice in discussing income inequality. Today, both progressive AND conservative politicians are talking about income inequality. I don’t agree with the overall tax plans that Jeb Bush and Donald Trump have put out. But they’ve both shined a light on how unfair the carried interest loophole is – the loophole that allows billionaire hedge fund managers to pay a lower tax rate than the guy who pilots their private jet. That genie is now out of the bottle. It’s going to be very hard for the next Congress and President to NOT close that loophole, because the people will demand it.

Q: But even fellow progressives aren't united, right? I mean, President Obama is pushing a trade deal that you and your labor friends oppose. Hillary Clinton has not backed a $15 federal minimum wage. Don't you have more work to do with your own party?

A: I don't pretend that this is a partisan issue. We need BOTH parties to embrace these changes – and so many others – to get where we need to go. But if you look at the conversation on the presidential level, we've never seen such bold proposals before. The time to address income inequality is now, and I'm hopeful that we'll continue seeing candidates and elected officials move further and further in addressing it.

Q: The Pope was just here talking about inequality. Do you think he's an ally in this fight?

A: Of course. He's the most powerful voice in the country on this issue. And with his leadership, we'll see more and more of our leaders find the backbone to embrace progressive solutions to building a stronger middle class and lifting people out of poverty.

Q: What about breaking up the big banks. Mr. Mayor, this is a hometown industry for you. Do you fear killing the goose that lays the golden egg?

A: I'm not an expert on how banks should be structured. I'll let Bob speak to that. But I will say that even the biggest names on Wall Street have talked about how income inequality must be addressed. Lloyd Blankfein, the CEO of Goldman-Sachs, said it was destabilizing to our economy. And just this week, Carl Ichan said that those at the top weren't paying their fair share. I don't think they're coming around on this because they're renouncing capitalism. I think they're worried that massive income inequality is a real threat to economic growth.

Q: One of the planks in your agenda is closing the CEO Pay Loophole. Can you talk about that?

A: Again, Bob can probably speak more eloquently than I can on this subject, but here's a layman's perspective. Companies right now can deduct CEO pay from their taxes if it's deemed to be "performance-based." Now, that provision wasn't originally intended to be a tax loophole that benefitted big corporations at the expense of regular people – but that's exactly what it's become. And that's why it needs to end.

Q: You've talked a lot about Pre-K for all. But I've seen reports that a lot of those who are accessing it are actually better-off families. How does that really work as an anti-poverty program?

A: It works on a number of levels. First, it's truly universal. It doesn't matter what neighborhood you come from, what you look like, or how much money you have. You know that you have access to quality, full-day Pre-K. We have something of a happy problem right now, which is making sure as many people as possible know that they're eligible to access Pre-K. But the advantage in making it universal is this: just like Social Security, or public education generally – we're making it next to impossible for future politicians to eliminate Pre-K. It has such widespread support, that no one will be able to say it's something that only helps "some people" and can therefore be cut. On a real life level, study after study shows that Pre-K makes a monumental difference in a child's chance of getting through high school equipped for college or career. It will literally transform thousands of young lives.

Q: You have also spoken about 200,000 units of affordable housing. Are you actually going to be able to reach that goal? And a quick follow-up, in a city of 8.5 million people – and growing – will that really put a dent in the problem?

A: It's the most ambitious affordable housing plan in our city's history. And we're already meeting our annual goals. So yes, we will get there. As far as its impact goes, we always want to do more – and this won't solve the affordability crisis in our city overnight – but it sure as heck will be a step in the right direction for hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers.

Q: Right now in New York, there's at least a perception of an explosion in homelessness. Some allies of yours said you were a little late to the dance on this one. What specifically are you doing to tackle that problem?

A: First of all, this is a crisis that has been decades in the making. Homelessness exploded under my predecessors. But I know this is still an incredibly serious problem, and we're going all-out to address it. (EXAMPLES: Encampments, Shelter Quality, etc.) And we're going to keep pressing ahead until we get these folks into quality shelters or permanent housing. It won't happen overnight, but we're going to fight to get these folks off the streets and into housing or mental health facilities that meet their needs.

CUIA team – suggestions or strategy for outreach to get other attending mayors on board with this change? I’m happy to hop on the phone with anyone to talk through. To start, some overlap I saw from mayors attending and CUIA are: Segarra, Whaley, Coleman, Rawlings-Blake, and Nutter.

I’ve pasted the draft recommendations on immigration below. This is a USCM (bipartisan) document, but, like the USCM 2015 meeting was an opportunity for NYC to push USCM to go further on immigration, this is also an opportunity. I don’t see a mention of comprehensive immigration reform here. TPA mentions comprehensive immigration reform and CUIA calls out in this draft Steph sent below a pathway to citizenship. What about the changes below in red to add in “comprehensive immigration reform” and “pathway to citizenship”? This is also consistent with past USCM policy, so it makes sense for MBdB to press for inclusion as a priority.

Immigration Reform

There are immediate economic and moral imperatives to fix our broken immigration system. We call on the next President and Congress to adopt comprehensive immigration reform with a pathway to citizenship and:

- Strengthen border security by improving interior enforcement to enhance our ability to identify and remove visa overstays and provide a uniform system of employment verification. State and local law enforcement must be able to remain focused on community policing and not be required to enforce federal immigration laws.
- Establish a less bureaucratic and more time-sensitive system that allows workers of all types to lawfully come to America, either temporarily or permanently, and contribute to our economy.
- Provide an employment verification system that is uniform, accurate, and timely.
- Enable people to come out of the shadows and pursue the American Dream for themselves and their families. This is essential to our efforts to combat crime and provide effective police protection.

The only thing I will add here is that the NYT was probing before on why MBdB doesn't mention/include immigration issues along with other progressive priorities. Don't want to re-open that line of criticism or feed into it. Would be great if NYC could advocate for immigration to be included in some way in USCM priorities – if it doesn't get picked up, at least we tried.

Well, it seems as though in this initial draft USCM failed to include any principles around immigration and still got to a round 10 priorities.

Is there an opportunity to impact this?

- Yes, mayors can come to the table with edits at the leadership meeting. The idea here is to identify top items MBdB wants to edit and a strategy to get buy in from other attending mayors.

What is the desired outcome?

- This is a q for CUIA – is there value for CUIA in USCM's bipartisan agenda including CUIA priorities?

Which mayors are championing it inside the conference?

- Leadership – Rawlings-Blake, Cornett, Landrieu are top three.

- Background on draft from USCM: The 10 priority areas contained in this document were agreed upon by our top three officers—President Rawlings-Blake, Vice President Mick Cornett, and Second Vice President Mitch Landrieu—during a conference call. Following that conversation, USCM CEO and Executive Director charged staff to develop details under each area based on our adopted policies and mayoral discussions that have taken place in our standing committees, task forces, and working groups.

At our Fall Leadership Meeting in Baltimore on October 2-4, mayors will discuss and refine this document, as well as the steps we will take to advocate for these priorities.

Was there discussion of immigration at all? How was it excluded

- Immigration is in there – see Priority III, page 2 and 5 - 8

Also, I do not know MBdB proposed press plan around this or who is handling that.

- Gina?

Who is making these decisions re: MBdB involvement in USCM/ Mayors organizing/ National agenda.

- GBG is leading the USCM leadership meeting as of last week. All of it is going through Gina (and then EW).

If there doesn't seem to be much to gain from this, I'd rather not engage except to bring it up that our mayoral coalition on immigration is active and has nearly 100 members so not sure how a body consisting of top mayors fails to mention immigration as a national priority

Hi Georgia:

We have a draft version of CUIA principals that we are currently workshopping with our mayors offices- however it is NOT final.

See below points to discuss broadly or try to influence inclusion of some basic immigration reform principles in the USCM agenda.

Here is an overview:

- Pathway to citizenship for undocumented
- Family reunification through eliminating visa backlogs
- Increase in temporary worker programs that uphold labor standards for all workers
- Reduce obstacles to increase protections for refugee and asylum seekers + allocate necessary resources to ensure successful resettlement into local communities
- Support president's executive action on immigration
- Reduce financial and language barriers to citizenship

Also, please include Omar and not Rich on these emails going forward. Thanks for including CUIA!

+ Steph and Rich for the CUIA/immigration reform overlap.

Geri, John, Ariel, and Rich + Steph/CUIA –

Thank you for taking a look the draft Mayors Compact and giving feedback/recommendations about MBdB pressing to include additional priorities from TPA or CUIA in this bipartisan USCM Mayor's 2016 Presidential Priorities list. Please see below for background and then the "Mayors Compact Draft" for the current USCM working draft. The TPA and CUIA overlap includes:

- Minimum wage increase (to $10.10, not TPA's $15)
- Student loan forgiveness
- Support high standard 21st Century Trans-Pacific and Transatlantic trade deals with enforceable labor and environmental standards
- Immigration does not include comprehensive immigration reform, but aspects

I've talked to Geri and Rich about pulling in TPA and CUIA on this. Geri was going to pull in John and Rich, CUIA/steph. In short, this Saturday at the USCM leadership meeting bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive. I am leading refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA and immigration aspects.

There's also a space for MBdB to bring in NYC best practices to highlight local action/accomps. Does MOIA want to include any on immigration?

I'm around on my cell [REDACTED]

Background: MBdB is scheduled to attend the United States Conference of Mayors (USCM) leadership meeting in Baltimore this weekend. USCM is using this leadership meeting to draft and ratify the USCM bipartisan priorities for the 2016 presidential campaign, establishing a national mayor's agenda. USCM will take this multipoint plan to candidates of both parties and their primaries.

The forty attending mayors will be presented with a list of ten issues (see outline below). Mayors will engage in a large roundtable discussion the morning of Saturday, October 3rd to flesh out and qualify priorities, issue-by-issue. Each mayor will be able to comment, offer ideas, suggest additions and subtractions, etc. As a progressive leader who has been engaged in pressing for a national urban agenda and a new member of USCM leadership, this will be an opportunity to shape document to reflect MBdB progressive priorities. Following that discussion, USCM will announce the headlines in a press conference. MBdB may want to influence a number of the components based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing efforts through your leadership in Cities of Opportunity, The Progressive Agenda, Cities United for Immigration Action.

Best,

Georiga

On behalf of Conference of Mayors President Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, I am pleased to provide you with a draft of The Mayors' Compact for a Better America: A 2016 Call to Action. Once finalized, this document will provide our membership with guidance on priorities to share with all candidates for President and Congress over the course of the coming election year.

Local Action Request—We Need to Know What You Are Doing

Mayor Rawlings-Blake has said that mayors cannot wait for Washington to act. So to supplement these national priorities, we ask that you share with us specific local actions that you are taking to advance any of the 10 priorities. We would like to include these actions in our final published document.

ACTION NEEDED: When you come to Baltimore, please bring a short written summary (about one paragraph) of any local best practices you have developed to advance the 10 priorities contained in The Mayors' Compact for a Better America. These actions can be actions you have already taken, actions that are ongoing, or actions you plan to take. Or, you can email this information prior to the meeting to Paul Leroux at pleroux@usmayors.org. If you have any questions, you can contact Paul at 202-861-6722.

Looping you in here on that USCM meeting we discussed late last week where the bipartisan group of mayors are developing their 2016 Presidential Priorities agenda. Some of our current suggestions for MBdB's priorities include elevating elements of The Progressive Agenda. MBdB can play a role in pressing the bipartisan group to be more progressive.

I'll be refining the strategy here for recs for MBdB priorities to bring to the table and should include your feedback on TPA aspects.

Here you go. This document includes a list of who will attend the meeting and outline of the issues on the table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities (DRAFT). It also includes recommendations of what MBdB should influence based on NYC needs, beliefs, and organizing around COO and TPA. For each of these recs, we have begun to identify mayors who would be in that core group of supporters referenced below. I'm also sending along an updated schedule – Jerry Abramson from the White House IGA office will be speaking to mayors following their presser on Saturday afternoon. I don't rec. that he stay for that presentation.

Gina – here is your email with the asks for this document:

For prep Georgia is gathering who exactly will attend the meeting and the issues on table to be discussed as 2016 Presidential Priorities.

Once we have this list we will draft out which of these he will likely want to influence based on NYC needs, experience, beliefs and what components he may want to add. We will then need to get his buy in.

Next we will work at a staff level to make sure we have the support of a core group of mayors in leadership on what the mayor will likely propose.

We should hold some call time at the end of this week and early next week for him to shore up some of the members to be sure he will have support for from key members, as well as some prep time.

Additionally, we will send the mayor our proposal for the future of COO so that he has it ready at this meeting though it may not come up.

Subject: Q&A

My first crack at Q&A for briefing this evening... Let me know what I'm missing

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS POPPY HARLOW EVENT

Q: Why income inequality & not climate change/women's health care?

A: Those are important too...TPP and environmental protection...Women's health & equal pay important...TPA is a start, but not comprehensive.

- NYT poll: 66 percent of all Americans believe money/wealth should be distributed more evenly. $100M apartment sold this year just a few blocks from here. Hotel on UES renting for $75,000 PER NIGHT.

Q: What about racial justice/Elizabeth Warren speech?

A: She's right...Institutional bias in criminal justice system...SQF reform/Rikers reform/body cameras/pot reform...Invest in schools not jails...Black Lives Matter.

- AfAm men are six times more likely to be incarcerated than white men.

Q: Donald Trump/hedge fund guys getting away with murder?

A: Thought I agreed – until details of Trump plan – lowers tax rates for billionaires. No secret pot of money so comes from initiatives that help middle class/poor. Make America FAIR again.

- Top 25 hedge fund managers made more money last year than all K-teachers COMBINED.

Q: How get anything done with GOP controlling Congress?

A: Change happening already...Used to be just Bob Reich – now everyone talking inequality. Now we need shift to solutions. Will be impossible for GOP to defend carried interest loophole now. Need to reward work and not just wealth.

- Since Great Recession ended, 91% of real income gains went to top One Percent.

Q: Progressives not united. Obama on TPP. HRC on $15 min wage. Focus on Dems?

A: Not partisan issue – both parties need to do more...But boldest proposals ever from presidentials...Hopeful that all will move further and further on solutions/people demand it.

- 60,000 in 200 cities rallied for $15 min wage.

Q: Pope and inequality – good ally?

A: Most powerful voice. He'll push leaders to have backbone.

- Pew poll earlier this year found 90% of US Catholics approve of Pope.

Q: Break up big banks/killing goose laying golden egg?

A: Not an expert of bank structure – pass to Reich. Blankfein – de-stabilizing. Icahn says wealthy should pay more. Peasants with Pitchforks/bad for economic growth.

- KRUGMAN: Circa 1960 the top 0.01 percent of Americans paid an effective federal tax rate of more than 70 percent, twice what they pay today.

Q: CEO pay loophole?

A: Reich can speak more eloquently – but companies deduct “performance pay.” Wasn’t intended to be exploited like it is today, but that’s been result.

- EPI: The CEO-to-worker compensation ratio was 20-to-1 in 1965. Now it’s 303-to-1 in 2014.

Q: Pre-K not helping poor enough – how does it work?

A: Truly universal – makes it hard for future politicians to cut (like Soc Sec). More important, studies all show much improved chances of getting to college or career.

- Nearly 70K kids in NYC now in Pre-K – truly universal.

Q: 200K of affordable housing enough for 8.5 million people?

A: Most ambitious ever. Won’t solve affordability crisis overnight but will make big dent in it.

- Enough to house 500K New Yorkers.

Q: Late to the dance on homelessness?

A: Exploded under Rudy & Mike. We’re doing encampments, shelter quality, mental health, fighting bad landlords.

- Homelessness up 40% on Rudy’s watch.

Q: What can you do as Mayor to tackle income inequality?

A: Pre-K, after-school, paid sick, living wage, affordable housing, RENT FREEZE – first ever. Doing what we can but need federal help.

- 500,000 more people with paid sick leave.

Q: What else do you need to hear from candidates?

A: Very enthusiastic on student debt, Pre-K, paid sick and family leave, tax fairness. Need to hear a little more on trade and min wage.

Q: Endorsing HRC?

A: Still talking about a few issues, but very enthusiastic about what she’s laid out – very bold and progressive vision.

Q: What about jobs? How fixing unemployment in South Bronx?

A: Bronx unemployment 7.3%, highest in NYC

What we need: Raise the minimum wage

What we’ve done: Raised and expanded NYC’s Living Wage and Paid Sick Leave

What we’ve done: Overhauled our $500 million/year workforce training to equip ppl with skills for good, in-demand jobs, not just low-wage employment.

My first crack at Q&A for briefing this evening... Let me know what I'm missing

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: Marti Adams Baker and John Del Cecato

EVENT: Taped television interview, Subway ride and walk-and-talk with Poppy Harlow of CNN, and Former Labor Secretary Robert Reich

NOTE: CNN Money writer Tammy Lubhi will shadow for a print piece.

MISSION/GOAL: The purpose of this interview is to reach a broad national audience and discuss The Progressive Agenda and the work YOU are doing as Mayor of New York City to tackle the income inequality crisis locally and nationally, and urge Washington to act.

Travel to Melrose neighborhood in the Bronx – one of the city’s poorest – to demonstrate the severity of the problem in NYC. In 20 minutes on the subway, will travel from a community with median income of $179K to just $21K.

HOME BASES:

- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we’re doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
- But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington’s help.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
- The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- We’ll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

DAY/DATE: Tuesday, September 29

MBDB TIME: 11:30 AM – 2:00 PM

LOCATIONS: CNN Studios: Time Warner Center
Morris Avenue Apartments: Morris Ave & E. 153rd St

PRESS: TAPED interview. Segments will air Thursday morning on New Day and Newsroom, and a longer segment will air Saturday on CNN Newsroom Weekend. They'll also publish a print story on CNN.com and CNNMoney.

EVENT SET-UP:

- Seated, taped in-studio interview (30 minutes) – YOU, Robert and Poppy
- Subway ride (20 minutes) – CNN will have two cameras shadowing YOU, Robert and Poppy riding the Subway. B-roll only.
- Walk and talk and affordable housing project visit in the Bronx (20 – 30 minutes) – CNN will get audio of YOUR conversations during the walk and talk

SEQUENCE OF EVENTS:

- 11:30 AM YOU arrive at CNN, proceed to makeup on 7th floor
- 12:00 PM Begin taped interview, 8th floor
- 12:30 PM Wrap taped interview, head outside to 59th St/Columbus Circle Subway station with Robert, Poppy and camera crew
- 1:00 PM Travel via Subway from 59th St/Columbus Circle to 149th St/Grand Concourse
 - Transfer from 1 train to 2 train at Lincoln Center
- 1:20 PM Arrive 149th St/Grand Concourse, walk to Morris Avenue Apartments
- YOU lead Poppy and Robert to the Morris

Avenue Apartments at the corner of Morris Avenue and East 153rd Street (7 minute walk and talk on camera) – greet New Yorkers along the way

- Head East on 149th Street
 - Turn Left at Morris Avenue and walk North three blocks (NOTE: YOU will pass Lincoln Hospital)
 - 1:30 PM Arrive at Morris Avenue Apartments
 - YOU participate in short stand-up interview with Poppy Harlow
 - YOU depart

MAJOR POINTS TO LAND:

1. In New York City, we're doing everything we can to tackle income inequality. But we need the state and federal government to be our partners – particularly in advancing a more progressive federal tax code, so we can invest in our ever-growing cities.
2. There is no secret pot of money. If we're going to build a strong middle class and lift people out of poverty, we need millionaires and billionaires and big corporations to pay their fair share of taxes.
3. Just a couple of years ago, Bob Reich was a pretty lonely voice in talking about income inequality. Now it seems like politicians everywhere, on both sides of the aisle, are doing so. That's progress – but we now need specific policies to combat inequality. That's what The Progressive Agenda – www.ProgressiveAgenda.us is all about.
4. Donald Trump talks about making America great again. We're here to say that the way to do that is to make America FAIR again. Fair taxes. Fair trade laws. Fair wages and benefits for working people. A fair system for criminal justice, retirement, immigration – all the things that rewrite the rules to help regular people, not the One Percent.

TALKING POINTS

Inequality and Wages Quick Facts:

- The United States is one of the most unequal countries in terms of wealth distribution, only ranking behind Russia, Ukraine and Lebanon.
- Over the last 30 years, wage inequality in the United States has increased substantially, with the overall level of inequality now approaching the extreme level that prevailed prior to the Great Depression.
- The top 1% of Americans control nearly a quarter of all the country's income, the highest share controlled by the top 1% since 1928.
- The neighborhood you will travel to on the 2 train (149th Street) has a median family income of $16,580. Yet the Economic Policy Institute estimates that to live comfortably (paying for market rate housing, food, and other essentials) a family would need to earn $98,722 – or more than $80,000 above the median family income.
- This isn't a problem that is unique to New York City. In Robert Reich's town of Berkeley, California the median household income is $63,312 a year, which sounds good until you look at the same calculations for living comfortably, which total $81,621 – still a significant gap.
- Wages are falling in the U.S. Altogether, from 2000–2014, the median income for non-elderly households fell from $68,941 to $60,462, a decline of $8,479, or 12.3 percent.
- Many have said that the U.S. is still recovering from the recession and financial collapse of 2008, but new research (from EPI) shows that nearly every state has more people living in poverty than before 2007.
- The argument that we can't pay workers more is flawed. While wages have been stagnant or declining since the late 1970s, productivity has increased by 64% and CEO pay is at an all time high.
- We are not making the right investments at the national level. A new report out last week shows that U.S. has a higher proportion of children living in poverty than most other high-income countries, and it spends just 0.7 percent of its GDP on benefits for families—a fraction of what other middle- and high-income countries spend.

- 20 percent of American children live in households that earn less than half of the median household income. In Canada, that figure is 14. In Germany and Ireland, it's 10. In the U.K., a country that invests heavily in daycare subsidies and cash payments to moms, it's only 9.
- We have also not made needed progress in closing racial income gaps. In 2014, a white male working full year, full time earned an average of $74,108 while his African American counterpart earned $52,236 – more than $20,000 less.

TPA Momentum

In just the last few months we have seen:

- NYS Minimum Wage Announcement
- National Expansion of Overtime Threshold
- Presidential candidates announcing support of debt-free college
- Pittsburgh passing paid sick leave
- House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi coming out for $15/hour national minimum wage
- NY Wage Board passing $15 for Fast Food Workers
- Kansas City raising minimum wage
- Saint Louis raising minimum wage
- Oregon Governor Kate Brown passing The Fair Shot Agenda, which includes Paid Sick Leave
- Atlanta passing Paid Family Leave
- LA Minimum wage increase
- Congressional Progressive Caucus endorsing TPA
- Presidential candidates talking about carried interest loophole
- Presidential forum later this year

In NYC, we have addressed these key principles by:

- Launching a mayoral task force to bring together mayors from across the country to develop an action plan to challenge the growing inequality crisis in America
- Delivering on promise of universal, full-day pre-K for all New York City children for the first time in the city's history, and a massive expansion of after-school programs.
- Taking a historic step toward ending the overuse and abuse of stop-and-frisk, while also keeping crime down
- Signing into law major expansion of paid sick leave, extending rights to more than 500,000 New Yorkers

Bronx-Specific Facts and Figures

Affordable Housing

- Unveiled Affordable Housing plan in Concourse Village in May 2014
- City has financed 8,543 affordable units in the Bronx, including 7,798 in the South Bronx
- 475 new affordable apartments under construction in this neighborhood
- More than 1,000 currently affordable apartments preserved or rehabilitated right in this very area
- Ex: Morris Avenue Apartments—15 stories, 176 new apartments, 36 for formerly homeless—100% affordable, opens next summer

BACKGROUND ON MORRIS AVENUE APARTMENTS

When completed, Morris Avenue Apartments (655 Morris Avenue) will be a 15-story new construction mixed-use development providing 176 affordable housing units for low and moderate-income families. Thirty six of these units will be reserved for formerly homeless individuals. The project will also include approximately 10,000 SF of ground floor retail and community space for the Melrose neighborhood of the Bronx. The project closed in June 2014 and is expected to be completed in June 2016.

Since the start of Housing New York, through 8/31/2015, the City has financed 8,543 affordable units in the Bronx, including 7,798 in the South Bronx (CD 1-6), and 1,086 in BX1, where the reporter will be. City-wide, the total financed under HNY is 29,847.

BACKGROUND ON ROBERT REICH’S BOOK, “SAVING CAPITALISM: FOR THE MANY, NOT THE FEW”

In SAVING CAPITALISM, Reich, who has been sounding the alarm about inequality in America for 25 years now, reveals the cycles of power and influence that have created the new American oligarchy, shrunk the middle class, and driven the United States to the greatest income inequality and wealth disparity in eighty years. As the rules by which the “free” market operates have changed over the past decades, they’ve evolved to serve the needs of those with the most political influence—moneyed interest groups with lobbyists and big donations to make themselves heard. As a result, large corporations can declare bankruptcy and wipe the slate clean, but homeowners and student debtors can’t. Wall Street bankers get bailed out when they gamble excessively, while millions of Americans lose their jobs, homes, and savings. Big companies monopolize industries and collude on prices, causing us to pay more. Trade treaties (like the much-debated TPP) protect corporate intellectual property and financial assets but not the jobs and wages of average Americans. And on it goes.

As Reich notes, these pre-distributions upward are far greater than any re-distributions downward, but they’re hidden from view. And while the rules by which the market operates are increasingly skewed against everyday Americans, discussion of them is obscured by the notion that government should be smaller and the market should be “free.” As Reich shows, this is a false debate, and the real issue facing us is making sure that our capitalism and our government works for all Americans, not just those who have power and means to influence the rules. SAVING CAPITALISM is an indictment of our economic status quo and a revelatory look at how our system really functions.

ROBERT B. REICH is Chancellor’s Professor of Public Policy at the Richard and Rhoda Goldman School of Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley, and senior fellow at the Blum Center for Developing Economies. He has served in three national administrations and has written fourteen books, including The Work of Nations, which has been translated into twenty-two languages, and the best sellers Supercapitalism and Locked in the Cabinet. He lives in Berkeley.

Can add these too:

Q. What about jobs? How are you fixing unemployment in the South Bronx?
+Bronx unemployment 7.3%, highest in NYC
+What we need: Raise the minimum wage
+What we've done: Raised and expanded NYC's Living Wage and Paid Sick Leave
+What we've done: Overhauled our $500 million/year workforce training to equip ppl with skills for good, in-demand jobs, not just low-wage employment.

Q. If you're doing so much as a City, why do you need more investment from the federal government?
+Scale: our affordable housing plan—enough for ½ million people, whole population of Atlanta—is biggest in nation's history, but not enough to reach every NYer. Need feds at the table.

+Challenges like infrastructure cannot be achieved without fed transportation bill, federal money.

Q. Don't people in South Bronx care more about things like crime than inequality?

+Bringing police and community closure together

+Overall crime down, NYPD focused on hotspots

Event/Meeting Briefing Information

Staff Contact/Planning Lead: Marti Adams Baker and John Del Cecato

EVENT: Taped television interview, Subway ride and walk-and-talk with Poppy Harlow of CNN, and Former Labor Secretary Robert Reich

NOTE: CNN Money writer Tammy Lubhi will shadow for a print piece.

MISSION/GOAL: The purpose of this interview is to reach a broad national audience and discuss The Progressive Agenda and the work YOU are doing as Mayor of New York City to tackle the income inequality crisis locally and nationally, and urge Washington to act.

Travel to Melrose neighborhood in the Bronx – one of the city’s poorest – to demonstrate the severity of the problem in NYC. In 20 minutes on the subway, will travel from a community with median income of $179K to just $21K.

HOME BASES:

- Income inequality is the crisis of our time. Here in NYC, we’re doing everything in our power to combat it – UPK, after-school, paid sick leave, building affordable housing, fighting for a higher minimum wage, demanding more from developers.
- But to really get at the root of the problem, we need Washington’s help.
- The Progressive Agenda comes down to a very simple concept – we need to reward work again. We need to reward work, not wealth – work.
- The issue of income inequality is a profound threat to this country and its future – that we are experiencing growing divisions that must be addressed.
- We’ll be calling on leaders and candidates to address these issues, to stiffen their backbones, to be clear, and to champion these progressive policies.

DAY/DATE: Tuesday, September 29

MBDB TIME: 11:30 AM – 2:00 PM

LOCATIONS: CNN Studios: Time Warner Center
Morris Avenue Apartments: Morris Ave & E. 153rd St

PRESS: TAPED interview. Segments will air Thursday morning on New Day and Newsroom, and a longer segment will air Saturday on CNN Newsroom Weekend. They'll also publish a print story on CNN.com and CNNMoney.

EVENT SET-UP:

- Seated, taped in-studio interview (30 minutes) – YOU, Robert and Poppy
- Subway ride (20 minutes) – CNN will have two cameras shadowing YOU, Robert and Poppy riding the Subway. B-roll only.
- Walk and talk and affordable housing project visit in the Bronx (20 – 30 minutes) – CNN will get audio of YOUR conversations during the walk and talk

SEQUENCE OF EVENTS:

- 11:30 AM YOU arrive at CNN, proceed to makeup on 7th floor
- 12:00 PM Begin taped interview, 8th floor
- 12:30 PM Wrap taped interview, head outside to 59th St/Columbus Circle Subway station with Robert, Poppy and camera crew
- 1:00 PM Travel via Subway from 59th St/Columbus Circle to 149th St/Grand Concourse
 - Transfer from 1 train to 2 train at Lincoln Center
- 1:20 PM Arrive 149th St/Grand Concourse, walk to Morris Avenue Apartments
- YOU lead Poppy and Robert to the Morris

Avenue Apartments at the corner of Morris Avenue and East 153rd Street (7 minute walk and talk on camera) – greet New Yorkers along the way

- Head East on 149th Street
 - Turn Left at Morris Avenue and walk North three blocks (NOTE: YOU will pass Lincoln Hospital)
 - 1:30 PM Arrive at Morris Avenue Apartments
 - YOU participate in short stand-up interview with Poppy Harlow
 - YOU depart

MAJOR POINTS TO LAND:

1. In New York City, we're doing everything we can to tackle income inequality. But we need the state and federal government to be our partners – particularly in advancing a more progressive federal tax code, so we can invest in our ever-growing cities.
2. There is no secret pot of money. If we're going to build a strong middle class and lift people out of poverty, we need millionaires and billionaires and big corporations to pay their fair share of taxes.
3. Just a couple of years ago, Bob Reich was a pretty lonely voice in talking about income inequality. Now it seems like politicians everywhere, on both sides of the aisle, are doing so. That's progress – but we now need specific policies to combat inequality. That's what The Progressive Agenda – www.ProgressiveAgenda.us is all about.
4. Donald Trump talks about making America great again. We're here to say that the way to do that is to make America FAIR again. Fair taxes. Fair trade laws. Fair wages and benefits for working people. A fair system for criminal justice, retirement, immigration – all the things that rewrite the rules to help regular people, not the One Percent.

TALKING POINTS

Inequality and Wages Quick Facts:

- The United States is one of the most unequal countries in terms of wealth distribution, only ranking behind Russia, Ukraine and Lebanon.
- Over the last 30 years, wage inequality in the United States has increased substantially, with the overall level of inequality now approaching the extreme level that prevailed prior to the Great Depression.
- The top 1% of Americans control nearly a quarter of all the country's income, the highest share controlled by the top 1% since 1928.
- The neighborhood you will travel to on the 2 train (149th Street) has a median family income of just $21,000. Yet the Economic Policy Institute estimates that to live comfortably (paying for market rate housing, food, and other essentials) a family would need to earn $98,722 – or more than $80,000 above the median family income.
- This isn't a problem that is unique to New York City. In Robert Reich's town of Berkeley, California the median household income is $63,312 a year, which sounds good until you look at the same calculations for living comfortably, which total $81,621 – still a significant gap.
- Wages are falling in the U.S. Altogether, from 2000–2014, the median income for non-elderly households fell from $68,941 to $60,462, a decline of $8,479, or 12.3 percent.
- Many have said that the U.S. is still recovering from the recession and financial collapse of 2008, but new research (from EPI) shows that nearly every state has more people living in poverty than before 2007.
- The argument that we can't pay workers more is flawed. While wages have been stagnant or declining since the late 1970s, productivity has increased by 64% and CEO pay is at an all time high.
- We are not making the right investments at the national level. A new report out last week shows that U.S. has a higher proportion of children living in poverty than most other high-income countries, and it spends just 0.7 percent of its GDP on benefits for families—a fraction of what other middle- and high-income countries spend.

- 20 percent of American children live in households that earn less than half of the median household income. In Canada, that figure is 14. In Germany and Ireland, it's 10. In the U.K., a country that invests heavily in daycare subsidies and cash payments to moms, it's only 9.
- We have also not made needed progress in closing racial income gaps. In 2014, a white male working full year, full time earned an average of $74,108 while his African American counterpart earned $52,236 – more than $20,000 less.

TPA Momentum

In just the last few months we have seen:

- NYS Minimum Wage Announcement
- National Expansion of Overtime Threshold
- Presidential candidates announcing support of debt-free college
- Pittsburgh passing paid sick leave
- House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi coming out for $15/hour national minimum wage
- NY Wage Board passing $15 for Fast Food Workers
- Kansas City raising minimum wage
- Saint Louis raising minimum wage
- Oregon Governor Kate Brown passing The Fair Shot Agenda, which includes Paid Sick Leave
- Atlanta passing Paid Family Leave
- LA Minimum wage increase
- Congressional Progressive Caucus endorsing TPA
- Presidential candidates talking about carried interest loophole
- Presidential forum later this year

In NYC, we have addressed these key principles by:

- Launching a mayoral task force to bring together mayors from across the country to develop an action plan to challenge the growing inequality crisis in America
- Delivering on promise of universal, full-day pre-K for all New York City children for the first time in the city's history, and a massive expansion of after-school programs.
- Taking a historic step toward ending the overuse and abuse of stop-and-frisk, while also keeping crime down
- Signing into law major expansion of paid sick leave, extending rights to more than 500,000 New Yorkers
